START

Microfilmed By:

NORTHEAST DOCUMENT
CONSERVATION CENTER
Andover, MA 01810

June 1994

Camera Operator:
John Sullivan

MASTER NEGATIVE NUMBER:
BSO-56-036

MICROFILMED
August 1993 - April 1994

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCRAPBOOK MICROFILMING PROJECT

Funded in part by

THE NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE HUMANITIES

Grant No. PS-20709-93

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MICROFILMING PROJECT

A Cooperative Project Between the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives and the Boston Public Library (August 1993 - April 1994)

The Microfilming Project incorporates two collections of scrapbooks housed in two separate repositories. The first set of scrapbooks (80 volumes) resides within the Allen A. Brown Collection of the Boston Public Library (BPL) Music Department. Their call number is M.125.5. The second set of scrapbooks (132 volumes) resides within the Press Clippings collection of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (BSO) Archives. They have the designation Pres 56.

The BPL scrapbooks begin with the founding of the BSO in 1881 and continue, through 79 seasons, to 1960. Articles consist mainly of reviews and feature stories from Boston and New York newspapers. Occasionally, magazine articles and press releases are also included. The scrapbooks cover most aspects of the BSO.

The BSO scrapbooks run from 1889, the Orchestra's 9th season, to 1973. In addition to local reviews and features, the volumes contain articles culled from national and international publications. The scrapbooks document, in detail, all aspects of the BSO: The Symphony Orchestra (including subscription concerts, tours, and trips), the Boston Pops, the Tanglewood Festival, the Tanglewood Music Center, and Symphony Hall.

The two sets of scrapbooks have been filmed as two separate entities. Researchers wanting to look at specific seasons or subjects must examine both sets of films to ensure full coverage.

The scrapbooks do not represent the complete holdings of either location on the subject of the BSO.

Requests for positive microfilm copies of individual rolls, or of film sets, should be directed to the respective repository:

Music Department
Boston Public Library
Post Office Box 286
Boston, MA 02117

Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives
Symphony Hall
Boston, MA 02115

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCRAPBOOKS

1889 - 1973

132 VOLUMES

Source: Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives

FINDING AID

Boston Symphony Orchestra Scrapbooks
(Series 56, Sub-Series 1)

Source: Press Office (Office of the Public Relations Director)

The BSO scrapbooks comprise part of one series in the BSO Archives. Series 56, Press Clippings, is divided by format into 3 sub-series: 1) Scrapbooks, 1889-1973 (132 volumes); 2) Loose Clippings, 1931-1991 (9 record cartons); and 3) Oversize Newspapers and Journals, 1919-1979 (1 oversize box). Each sub-series is arranged chronologically.

The scrapbooks contain concert notices and reviews, record reviews, and feature articles. Early scrapbooks may also contain programs, tickets, and subscription orders. Materials are organized by concert season into the following categories: BSO (including tours); Kneisel Quartet (and later Boston Symphony Chamber Players); Boston Pops (referred to in early years as Promenade concerts); and Tanglewood (including the Tanglewood Music Center, the Tanglewood Festival, Tanglewood-on-Parade, and the Fromm Festival of Contemporary Music).

Reviews and articles cover a wide range of subjects: Founder H.L. Higginson; BSO conductors, players, trustees, and other personnel; guest artists and composers; BSO and Pops performances and recordings; U.S. and overseas tours; BSO/Cecilia Society joint performances; open rehearsals; and special events connected to anniversary celebrations and fundraising.

Feature stories document changes in the size, composition, and location of the orchestra. Topics include the hiring of women and minorities; the unionization of players; controversies (such as the internment of conductor Karl Muck during World War II); the sale of the old Music Hall; and the construction of Symphony Hall and other structures (such as the Koussevitsky Music Shed at Tanglewood).

Reproductions of the materials in the collection may not be made without permission from the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives.

GUIDE TO CONTENTS

Institution: BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Series Name: PRESS CLIPPINGS
Series Number: 56
Series Dates: 1889-1991

Sub-series Name: SCRAPBOOKS
Sub-series Number: 1
Sub-series Dates: 1889-1973

VOLUME LISTING

VOL	TITLE	DATES
1	BSO	1889-1890
2	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1890-1891
3	BSO	1891-1892
4	Promenade (Pops)	1892
5	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1892-1893
6	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1893-1894
7	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1894-1895
8	BSO	1895-1896
9	Promenade (Pops)	1895-1896
10	BSO	1896-1897
11	BSO	1897-1898
12	Promenade (Pops)	1897-1898
13	BSO	1898-1899
14	BSO	1899-1900
15	Pops	1899-1900
16	BSO	1900-1901
17	BSO	1901-1902
18	Pops	1901-1903
19	BSO	1902-1903
20	BSO	1903-1904
21	BSO	1904-1905
22	Pops	1904-1905
23	BSO	1905-1906
24	BSO	1906-1907
25	BSO	1907-1908
26	BSO	1908-1909
27	BSO Pops	1909-1910
28	BSO Pops	1910-1911
29	BSO Advertisements	1910-1911
30	BSO Pops	1911-1912
31	BSO Pops	1912-1913
32	BSO Pops	1913-1914
33	BSO Pops	1914-1915
34	BSO Pops	1915-1916

VOL	TITLE	DATES
35	BSO Pops	1916-1917
36	BSO Pops	1917-1918
37	Karl Muck	1918
38	BSO Pops	1918-1919
39	BSO Pops	1919-1920
40	BSO Advertisements	1919-1920
41	BSO Pops	1920-1921
42	BSO Pops	1921-1922
43	BSO BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1922-1923
44	BSO Pops	1922-1924
45	BSO Pops	1924
46	BSO BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1924-1926
47	BSO Pops	1925-1926
48	BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1926-1927
49	BSO Pops	1926-1928
50	BSO	1928
51	BSO Pops	1928-1929
52	BSO Pops U.S. Tour	1929-1930
53	BSO	1930-1931
54	BSO Pops	1931-1932
55	BSO Pops	1932-1933
56	BSO	1933-1934
57	BSO	1934-1935
58	BSO	1935-1936
59	BSO	1936-1937

VOL	TITLE	DATES
60	Pops
	Tanglewood	1936-1937
61	BSO	1937
62	BSO	1937-1938
63	Pops
	Tanglewood	1938
64	BSO	1938-1939
65	Pops
	Tanglewood	1939
66	BSO	1939-1940
67	Tanglewood	1939-1941
68	BSO
	Pops	1940
69	BSO	1940-1941
70	Tanglewood	1940-1944
71	BSO	1941-1942
72	BSO	1942-1943
73	BSO	1943-1944
74	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1944-1945
75	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1945-1946
76	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1946-1947
77	Tanglewood	1947-1948
78	BSO	1947-1949
79	Tanglewood	1949-1950
80	BSO	1949-1951
81	Tanglewood	1950-1951
82	BSO
	Pops	1951-1952
83	BSO
	Pops	1952-1953
84	Tanglewood	1952-1953
85	BSO	1953-1955
86	Tanglewood	1953-1954
87	Tanglewood	1954-1955
88	BSO
	Pops	1955-1956
89	Tanglewood	1955-1956
90	Tanglewood	1955-1956
91	European Tour	1956
92	European Tour	1956-1957
93	BSO
	Pops	1956-1957
94	Tanglewood	1957
95	BSO	1957-1958
96	BSO
	Pops	1958-1959

VOL	TITLE	DATES
97	BSO	1958-1959
98	Tanglewood	1958-1959
99	Tanglewood	1959
100	BSO
	Pops	1959-1960
101	Tanglewood	1959-1960
102	Far Eastern Tour	1959-1960
103	BSO
	Pops	1960-1961
104	Tanglewood	1961
105	BSO
	Pops	1961-1962
106	Tanglewood	1962
107	BSO
	Pops	1962-1963
108	Tanglewood	1963
109	BSO
	Pops	1963-1964
110	Tanglewood	1963-1964
111	BSO
	Pops	1964-1966
112	Tanglewood	1965
113	BSO 85th Anniversary	1965
114	BSO
	Pops	1965-1966
115	Tanglewood	1966
116	BSO
	Pops	1966-1967
117	Tanglewood	1967
118	BSO
	Pops	1967-1968
119	Tanglewood	1968-1969
120	BSO
	Pops	1968-1969
121	Tanglewood	1969
122	BSO
	Pops	1969-1970
123	Tanglewood	1970
124	BSO
	Pops	1970-1971
125	Tanglewood	1971
126	BSO
	Pops	1971-1972
127	European Tour	1970-1971
128	European Tour	1971
129	Tanglewood	1972
130	BSO
	Pops	1972-1973
131	Tanglewood	1973
132	BSO
	Pops	1973-1974

MATERIALS NOT FILMED

SUB-SERIES NUMBER	SUB-SERIES NAME	SUB-SERIES DATES
2	Loose Clippings	1931-1991
3	Oversize Newspapers and Journals	1919-1979

COPYRIGHT STATEMENT

The copyright law of the Unites States - Title 17, United States Code - concerns the making of photocopies or other reproductions of copyrighted material.

Under certain conditions specified in the law, libraries and archives are authorized to furnish a photocopy or other reproduction. One of these specified conditions is that the photocopy or other reproduction is not to be "used for any purpose other than private study, scholarship, or research." If a user makes a request for, or later uses, a photocopy or reproduction for purposes in excess of "fair use," that user may be liable for copyright infringement.

This institution reserves the right to refuse to accept a copy order if, in its judgment, fulfillment of the order would involve violation of the copy-right law.

TECHNICAL DATA

IMAGE PLACEMENT: [✓ IA] IB IIA IIB

REDUCTION RATIO: 14X

FILM STOCK:

Kodak
IMAGELINK™ HQ
MICROFILM
35 mm x 30.5 m · 100 ft
Sp 425
DEVELOP BEFORE 01/1996
1461-0334-024-07
CAT 840 3594
29-10

REEL 36

Volumes 65-66

Pops, Tanglewood 1939 to BSO
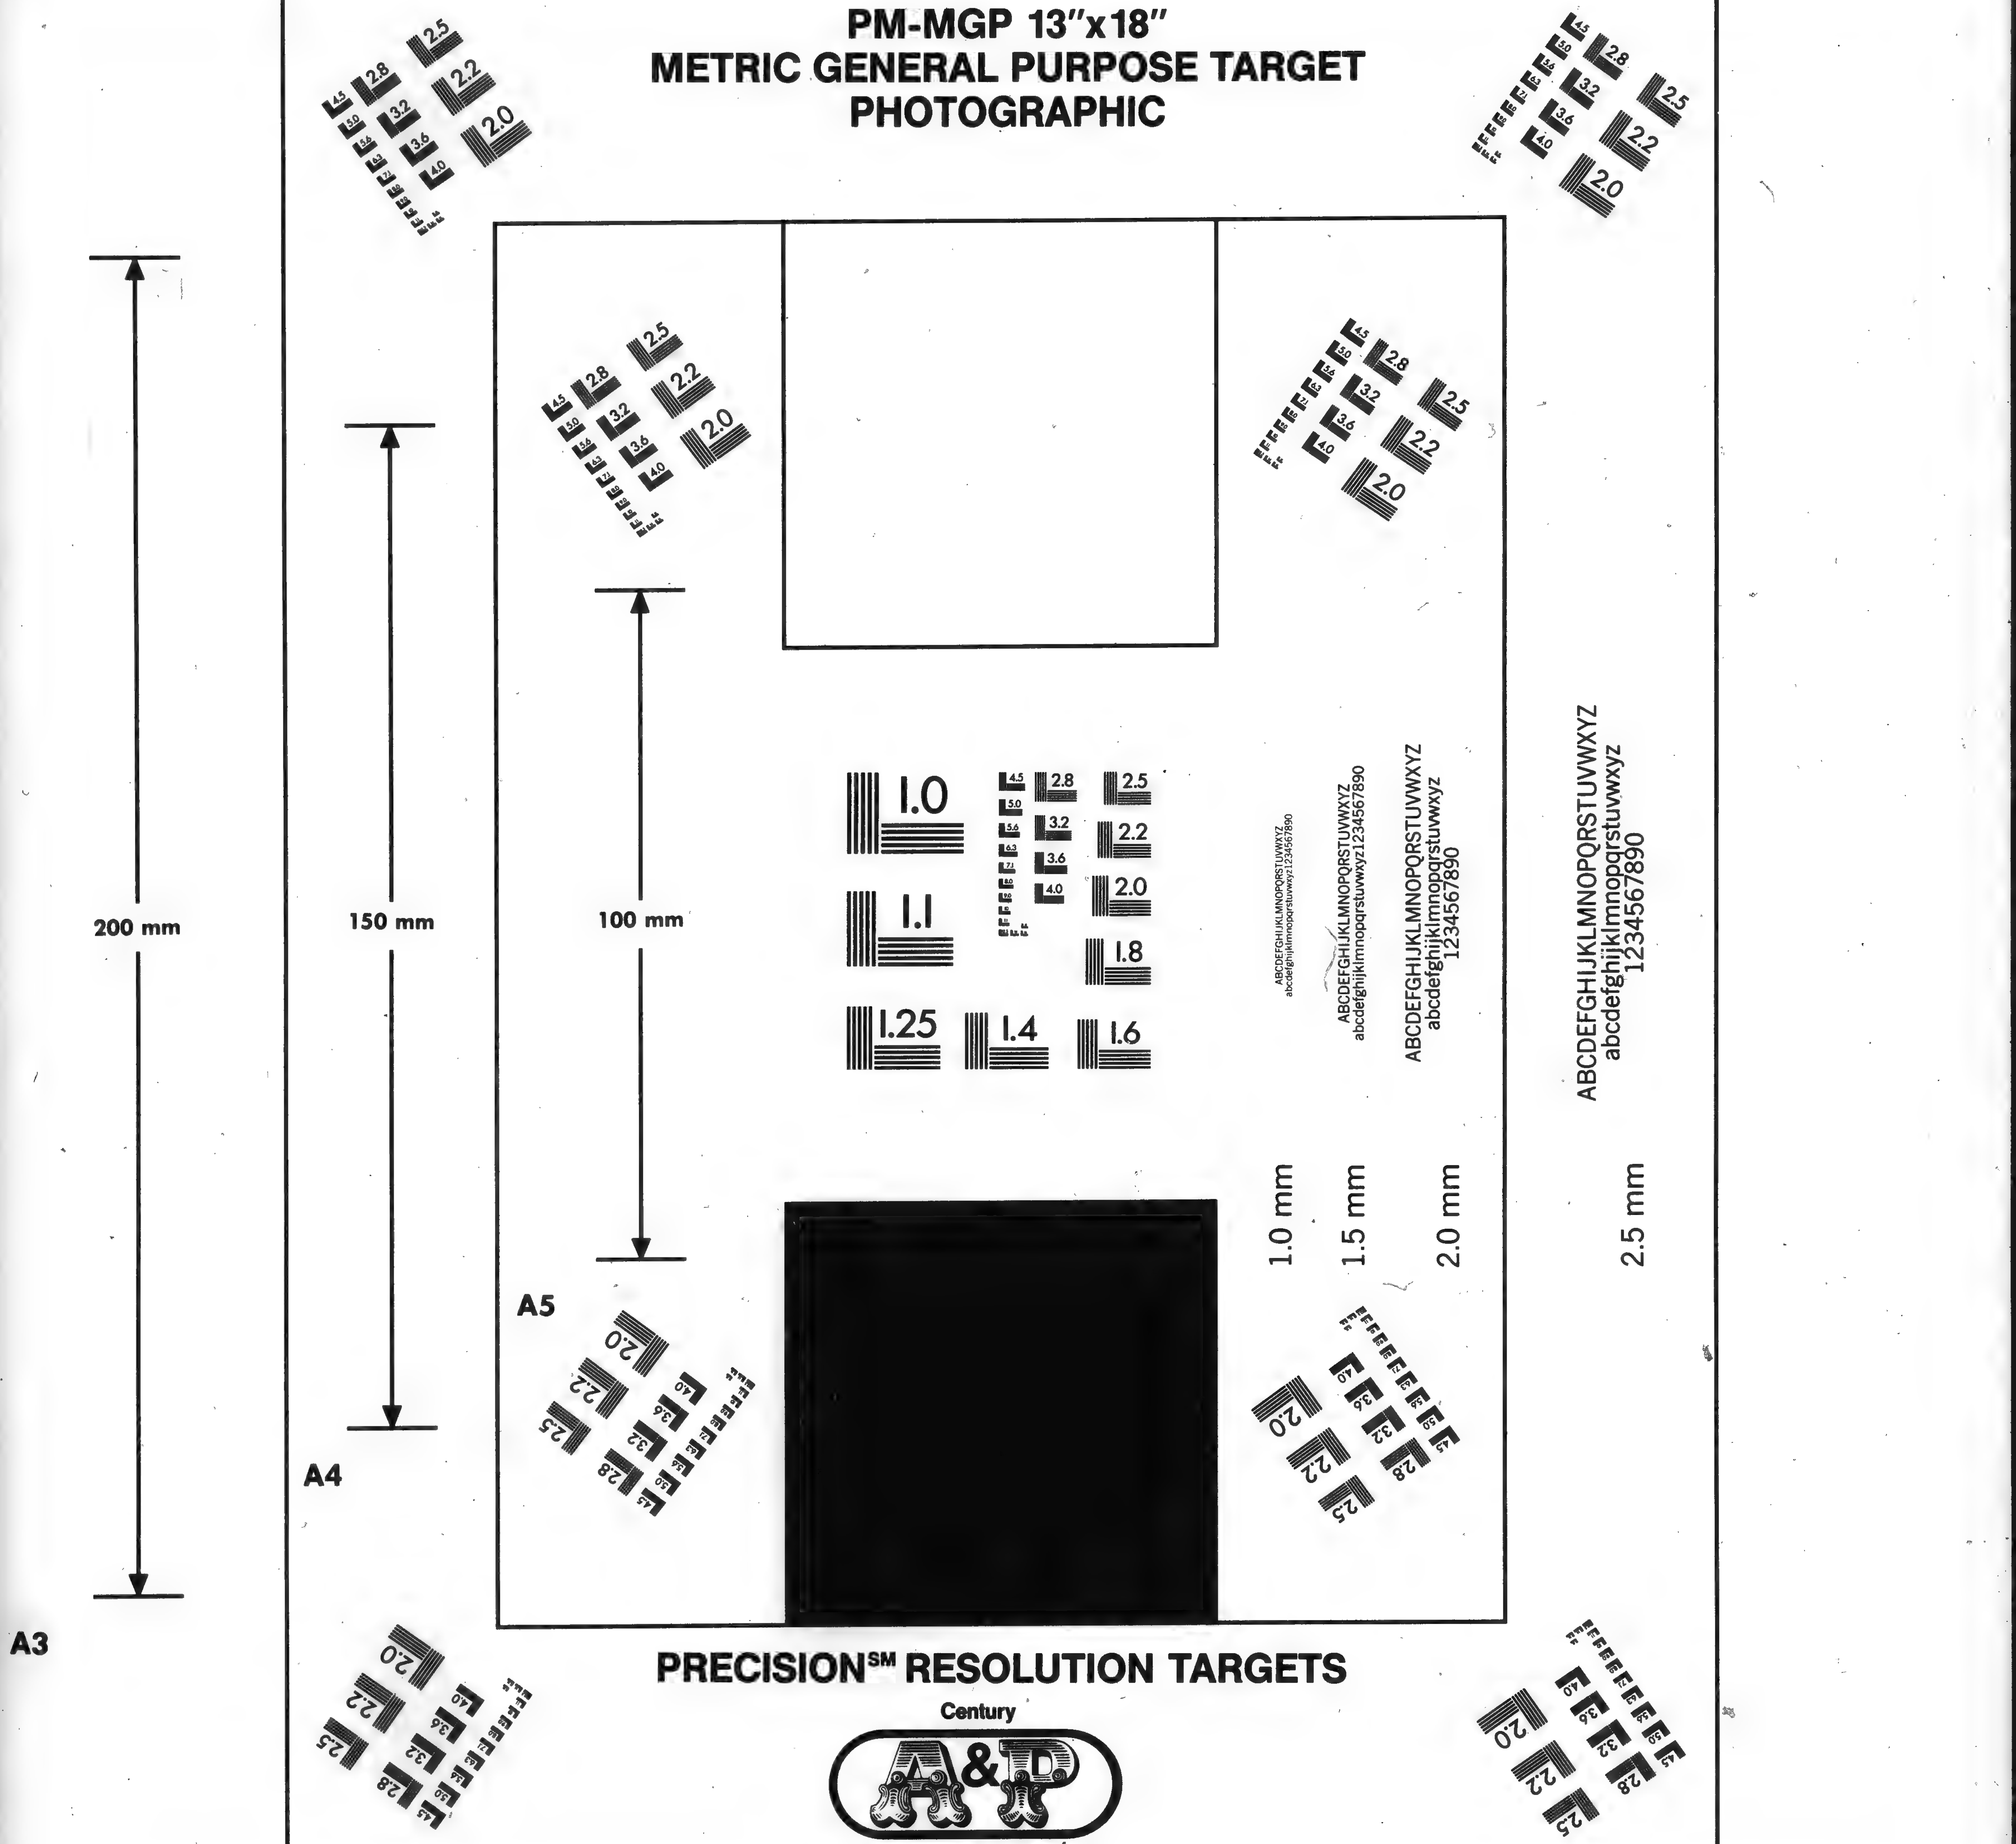
1939-40

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



200 mm
150 mm
100 mm
A3
A4
A5
1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
2.0
2.2
2.5
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6
6.3
7.1
8.0
9.0
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
1.0 mm
1.5 mm
2.0 mm
2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

MULTIPLE EXPOSURES DUE TO COLOR VARIATIONS AND OVERLAPPING MATERIAL

VOLUME 65

Pops
Tanglewood

1939

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

Pops and Berkshire Season
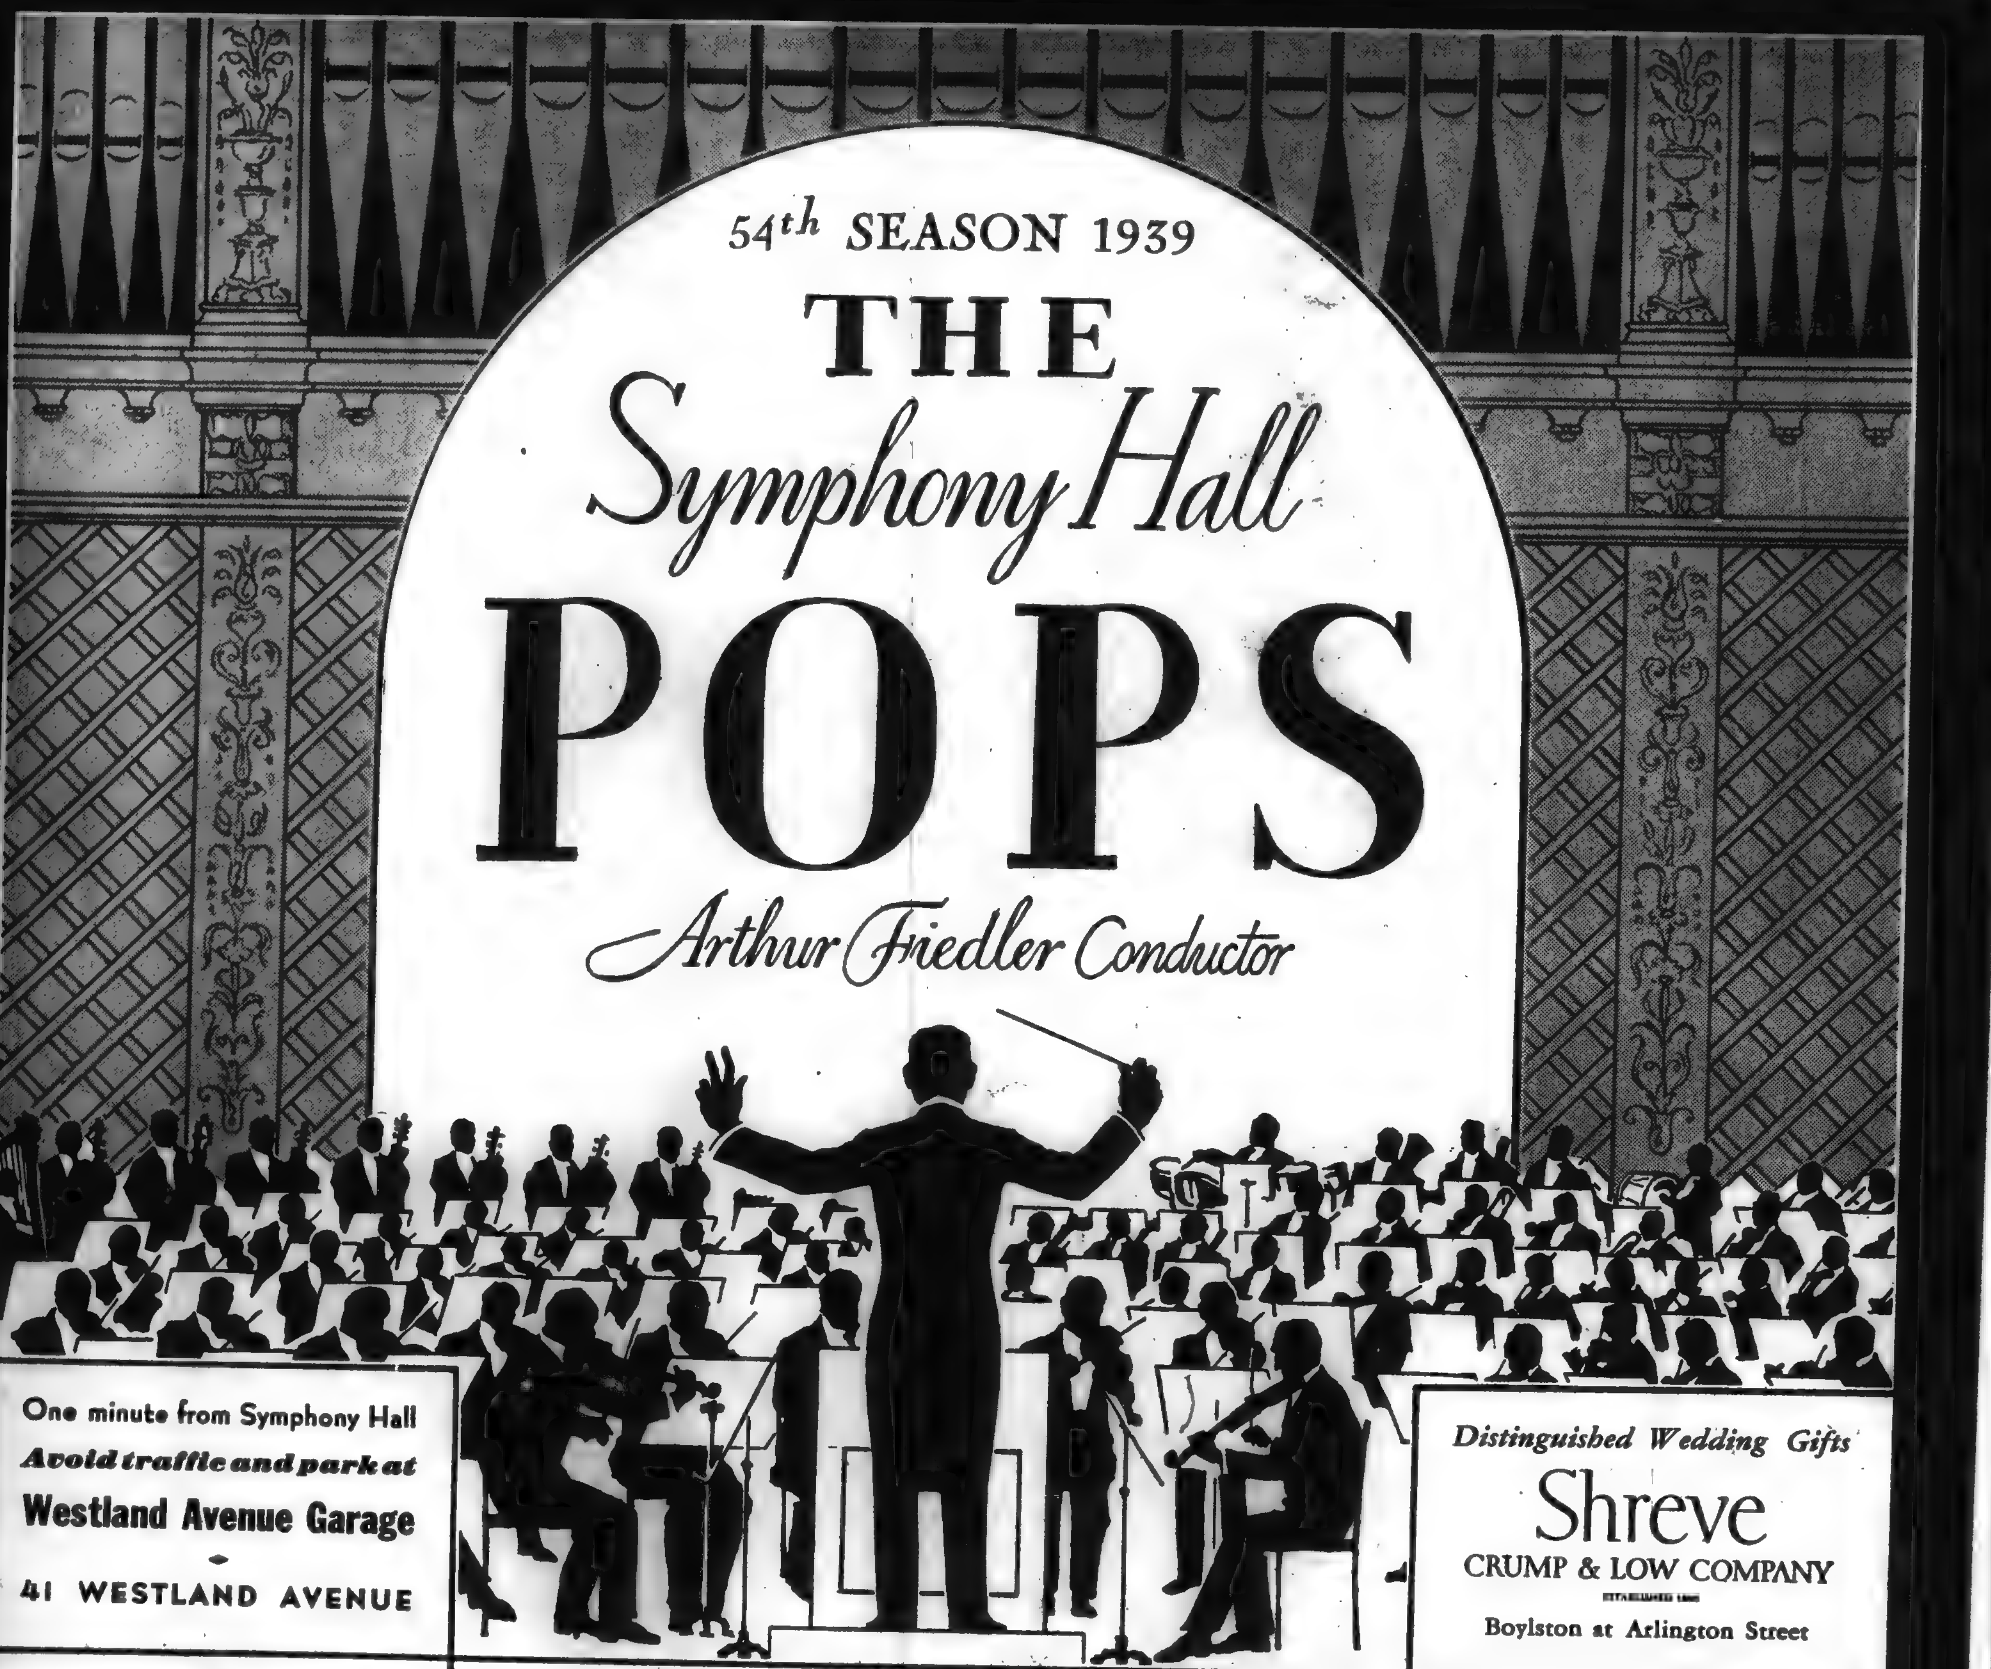
1939

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES



54th SEASON 1939

THE Symphony Hall POPS

Arthur Fiedler Conductor

One minute from Symphony Hall
Avoid traffic and park at
Westland Avenue Garage
41 WESTLAND AVENUE

Distinguished Wedding Gifts
Shreve
CRUMP & LOW COMPANY
Boylston at Arlington Street

The BAPTISTE SCHOOL OF BALLROOM DANCING
14 NEWBURY STREET - Com. 1630

The COPLEY-PLAZA
MERRY-GO-ROUND
The gathering place of smartest Boston
All Dining Rooms are Air-Conditioned

LUGGAGE and LEATHER GOODS
Distinctive merchandise at the price of ordinary
London Harness Company
Sixty Franklin Street

HERRICK'S, INC.
Phone Kenmore 4760-61-62
Theatres, Sporting Events
Boxes reserved at Suffolk Downs
Always the best seats at all prices

LALIME & PARTRIDGE, INC.
Ford
1255 BOYLSTON STREET - BOSTON
AT THE FENWAY

The BACK BAY
Buys its Books at the
VENDOME BOOK SHOP
261 Dartmouth St., at Boylston
Boston, Mass.

W. V. SLOCUM
Fine Furs
Cold Storage
647 BOYLSTON ST., BOSTON
Telephone KENmore 1340

join the institute of modern art 270 dartmouth street boston
exhibitions lectures library

Delicious and interesting Scandinavian foods follow the famous Smorgasbord. American cuisine, Steak, Chicken, Lobster. American Lounge Bar Air-Conditioned
Open Daily, Sundays, Holidays, 11 a.m.-1 a.m.
The VIKING 442 Stuart St.

GLEN GARRY
BLENDED SCOTCH WHISKY
A favorite of New England
8 years old. 86.8 proof
FOR 50 YEARS IMPORTED BY
S. S. PIERCE CO.
BOSTON

Call STAdium 1400
Howes
BONDED CLEANSING
and Fine Laundry
"YOU PAY NOTHING UNLESS YOU'RE SATISFIED"

Seiler's
CATERERS Since 1873
Weddings · Debutantes · Dinners
110 NORWAY STREET, BOSTON
Telephone, Commonwealth 2422

Pop Concerts Open This Wednesday at Symphony Hall

Next Wednesday, May 3, will bring the opening night of the 54th season of the Pop concerts at Symphony Hall. This will be the 10th consecutive season of Arthur Fiedler as the conductor who has led the Pops into their unprecedented popularity. Mr. Fiedler has now controlled the fortunes of the Pops for a longer period than any previous conductor. He has extended the public by extending the repertory and suiting it to diversified tastes.

The orchestra will number about 90. Refreshments served at the tables will as usual lend the Pops their special festive and sociable character. Ossy Renardy, violinist, is announced as the soloist for the first Sunday night concert. This will be the first appearance of Mr. Renardy in Boston.

The programs for the opening nights are listed below:

Wednesday evening, May 3, at 8:30

Hungarian march, "Rakoczy" .... Berlioz
Overture to "Oberon" .... Weber
Miniature Suite .... Hari McDonald
(A free transscription of three harpsichord pieces by John Christopher Smith, 1770)
(First performance in Boston)
"By the Beautiful Blue Danube," waltzes .... Strauss
Prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg" .... Wagner
"Pop Goes the Weasel" .... Caillet
Roumanian Rhapsody No. 1 .... Enesco
Austrian Peasant Dances (second series) .... Schonherr
(First performance in Boston
"Bach Goes to Town" (a figure in swing) .... Templeton
Sailors' dance from "Red Poppy" .... Gliere

Thursday evening, May 4

"Pomp and Circumstance," march .... Elgar
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor" .... Nicolai
Minute for Strings .... Bolzoni
"Madama Butterfly," fantasia .... Puccini
Prelude to "Lohengrin" .... Wagner
Hora Staccato (Roumanian) .Dinicu-Heifetz
Second Hungarian Rhapsody .... Liszt
Gershwin melodies
Virginia Reel .... Coffey
"Knightsbridge" (march from London Suite .... Eric Coates

Friday evening, May 5

Introduction to act III, "Lohengrin" .... Wagner
Overture to "The Roman Carnical" .. Berlioz
Fugue a la Gigue .... Bach-Holst
Fantasia, "Carmen" .... Bizet
Bacchanale, "Samson and Delilah" .... Saint-Saens
Prayer of Thanksgiving, old Dutch hymn .... Valerius
Finale, Fourth Symphony .... Tchaikovsky
Selection, Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" .... Churchill
Malaguena .... Lecuona
"Semper Fidelis," march .... Sousa

Saturday evening, May 6

"El Capitan," march .... Sousa
Prelude to "Hansel and Gretel" .... Humperdinck
"Panis Angelicus" .... Franck
"Espana," rhapsody .... Chabrier
"The Animals' Carnival," grand zoological fantasia .... Saint-Saens
Pianos: J. M. Sanroma—L. Litwin
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812" .. Tchaikovsky
Victor Herbert favorites .. Arr. by Sanford
"Strike Up the Band" .... Gershwin

Sunday evening, May 7

Wedding march from "Le Coq d'Or" .... Rimsky-Korsakov
Symphony in C major, No. 1 .... Bizet
Overture to Goethe's "Egmont," op. 84 .... Beethoven
Concerto for violin and orchestra .. Paganini
Soloist: Ossy Renardy
Tales from the Vienna Woods, waltzes .... Strauss
"Pavane" from "Sinfonietta" .... Gould
Procession of the Sardar, from the Caucasion Sketches .... Ippolitov-Ivanov

---

B Post LEADER April 30/39

Arthur Fiedler, who will again lead the orchestra at the Pops concerts, which begin Wednesday.

CAPACITY THRONG AT POPS OPENING

Fiedler Conducts as 54th Season Starts

B Globe May 4/39

If anything will drive away the cold weather, it is the coming of Pops. Boston's unique musical entertainment has long signified the arrival of May and its theoretically attendant warmth. The 54th season of these enjoyable concerts and informal surroundings began at Symphony Hall last night. Arthur Fiedler, embarking upon his 10th season as conductor, led an orchestra of about 90 Boston Symphony men through a program varied with new music and old Pops favorites.

Symphony Hall again is blooming in its green-and-gold decorations of Spring, the big chandelier suspended over the orchestra and soft gray curtains breaking the severity of the proscenium arch at the sides of the stage.

What appeared to be a capacity audience filled the hall. Once more the popping of corks and the clinking of glasses was to be heard at the tables on the floor, as the staff of waitresses was kept busily engaged in bringing refreshments offered by the generously stocked Pops list. And not long after the concert had begun, those sitting at the tables had created a friendly haze of tobacco smoke.

If inveterate attendants were to analyze why they enjoy the Pops so much, they would probably arrive at the conclusion it is because the Pops change and are yet always the same. The programs do change, with new music and old assembled to fit the mood of passing time. But the essential atmosphere of the Pops, their easy informality and discreet gayety are important reasons why these concerts have for years been so much in favor. These things, praise be! do not change.

During Mr. Fiedler's regime of nearly a decade—which has seen the passing of the sternly non-alcoholic menu and the return of wines and beers—the Pops have reached successive peaks of popularity. As a maker of programs, Mr. Fiedler has been particularly astute; he has managed that miraculous feat of pleasing all sections of the Pops public, from those who are partial to music of the past, to the younger segment who like a bit of swing mixed with light classics. As conductor, Mr. Fiedler has continued to grow, both in technic and—where more exacting music is concerned—as interpreter. The Pops were originally designed to be entertaining; under Mr. Fiedler they have always been so.

The conductor was warmly greeted as he made his first bow from the conductor's stand ringed with vases of gladioli. Throughout the evening hearty applause prevailed. The opening number of the 54th season was Berlioz' stirring—and stirring is just the word—"Rakoczy" March. For "first time in Boston" there were two numbers, the first a free transcription by Harl MacDonald of three harpsichord pieces by John Christopher Smith, a Bavarian originally of the name of Schmidt, born in Ansbach, Ger., and reared in London. Handel was his teacher and friend, and Smith flourished from 1712 to 1795. These pieces, neatly transcribed for orchestra, are a welcome addition to the Pops repertory. The other new piece was new in its present form only, for Alec Templeton's "Bach Goes to Town," a fugue in the style of Bach with overtones of swing, has for some time been well-liked. The present version for large orchestra was made this year by Henry Brant, who also did the earlier jazz band version. The Prelude to Wagner's "The Meistersingers of Nuremberg," Weber's "Oberon" Overture, Johann Strauss' imperishable waltz, "By the Beautiful Blue Danube," Cailliet's "Pop Goes the Weasel," Enesco's First Rumanian Rhapsody, a fantasy on tunes by George Gershwin, and the "Sailors' Dance" from "The Red Poppy," by Gliere, were the other numbers of the list. To these were added numerous encores. C. W. D.

LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER - CITIZEN
MAY 3 - 1939

MOMENTS MUSICAL

By SIDNEY R. FLEET

To Whom Announcements and Communications on Musical Matters May Be Addressed at This Office.

Boston Programs.

Relieved from the formalities of the more serious concerts of the season, the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Arthur Fiedler's direction assemble for the opening of the Pop concert series in Symphony hall this evening. As usual, there will be opportunity to enjoy light music and light refreshments in combination. Features of tonight's program will be a performance of Hari McDonald's "Miniature Suite" and Alec Templeton's "Bach Goes to Town." Composer McDonald, by the way, was recently appointed as manager of the Philadelphia Symphony orchestra. From which one judges that he must have business as well as musical ability.

Music News

B. Trans. 1939

The opening program of the 54th season of Pops, in Symphony Hall next Wednesday evening, will contain Harl McDonald's Miniature Suite, consisting of a free transcription of three harpsichord pieces by John Christopher Smith. There will also be a performance of Alec Templeton's "Bach Goes to Town." On Saturday evening Saint Saens' "Animals' Carnival" will be presented, with Jesus Maria Sanroma and Leo Litwin as the two pianists. The first Sunday evening program on May 7 will include, among other items, Bizet's Symphony in C major and a Paganini violin concerto, with Ossy Renardy as soloist.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

54th SEASON 1939

THE Symphony Hall POPS

Arthur Fiedler Conductor

One minute from Symphony Hall
Avoid traffic and park at
Westland Avenue Garage
41 WESTLAND AVENUE

Distinguished Wedding Gifts
Shreve
CRUMP & LOW COMPANY
ESTABLISHED 1800
Boylston at Arlington Street

The BAPTISTE SCHOOL OF BALLROOM DANCING
14 NEWBURY STREET - Com. 1630

The COPLEY-PLAZA
MERRY-GO-ROUND
The gathering place of smartest Boston
All Dining Rooms are Air-Conditioned

LUGGAGE and LEATHER GOODS
Distinctive merchandise at the price of ordinary
London Harness Company
Sixty Franklin Street

HERRICK'S, INC.
Phone Kenmore 4760-61-62
Theatres, Sporting Events
Boxes reserved at Suffolk Downs
Always the best seats at all prices

LALIME & PARTRIDGE, INC.
Ford
1255 BOYLSTON STREET - BOSTON
AT THE FENWAY

The BACK BAY Buys its Books at the
VENDOME BOOK SHOP
261 Dartmouth St., at Boylston
Boston, Mass.

W. V. SLOCUM
Fine Furs
Cold Storage
647 BOYLSTON ST., BOSTON
Telephone KENmore 1340

join the institute of modern art 270 dartmouth street boston
exhibitions lectures library

Delicious and interesting Scandinavian foods follow the famous Smorgasbord. American cuisine, Steak, Chicken, Lobster. American Lounge Bar Air-Conditioned
Open Daily, Sundays, Holidays, 11 a.m.-1 a.m.
The VIKING 442 Stuart St.

GLEN GARRY
BLENDED SCOTCH WHISKY
A favorite of New England
8 years old. 86.8 proof
FOR 50 YEARS IMPORTED BY
S. S. PIERCE CO.
BOSTON

Call STAdium 1400
Howes
BONDED CLEANSING
and Fine Laundry
"YOU PAY NOTHING UNLESS YOU'RE SATISFIED"

Seiler's
CATERERS
Since 1873
Weddings · Debutantes · Dinners
110 NORWAY STREET, BOSTON
Telephone, Commonwealth 2422

Pop Concerts Open This Wednesday at Symphony Hall

Next Wednesday, May 3, will bring the opening night of the 54th season of the Pop concerts at Symphony Hall. This will be the 10th consecutive season of Arthur Fiedler as the conductor who has led the Pops into their unprecedented popularity. Mr. Fiedler has now controlled the fortunes of the Pops for a longer period than any previous conductor. He has extended the public by extending the repertory and suiting it to diversified tastes.

The orchestra will number about 90. Refreshments served at the tables will as usual lend the Pops their special festive and sociable character. Ossy Renardy, violinist, is announced as the soloist for the first Sunday night concert. This will be the first appearance of Mr. Renardy in Boston.

The programs for the opening nights are listed below:

Wednesday evening, May 3, at 8:30

Hungarian march, ",Rakoczy" ..... Berlioz
Overture to "Oberon" .... Weber
Miniature Suite .... Hari McDonald
(A free transscription of three harpsichord pieces by John Christopher Smith, 1770)
(First performance in Boston)
"By the Beautiful Blue Danube," waltzes .... Strauss
Prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg" .... Wagner
"Pop Goes the Weasel" .... Cailliet
Roumanian Rhapsody No. 1 .... Enesco
Austrian Peasant Dances (second series) Schonherr
(First performance in Boston
"Bach Goes to Town" (a figure in swing) Templeton
Sailors' dance from "Red Poppy" ... Gliere

Thursday evening, May 4

"Pomp and Circumstance," march .... Elgar
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor" .... Nicolai
Minute for Strings .... Bolzoni
"Madama Butterfly," fantasia .... Puccini
Prelude to "Lohengrin" .... Wagner
Hora Staccato (Roumanian). Dinicu-Heifetz
Second Hungarian Rhapsody .... Liszt
Gershwin melodies
Virginia Reel .... Coffey
"Knightsbridge" (march' from London Suite .... Eric Coates

Friday evening, May 5

Introduction to act III, "Lohengrin" Wagner
Overture to "The Roman Carnical" .. Berlioz
Fugue a la Gigue .... Bach-Holst
Fantasia, "Carmen" .... Bizet
Bacchanale, "Samson and Delilah" Saint-Saens
Prayer of Thanksgiving, old Dutch hymn .... Valerius
Finale, Fourth Symphony ..... Tchaikovsky
Selection, Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" .... Churchill
Malaguena .... Lecuona
"Semper Fidelis," march .... Sousa

Saturday evening, May 6

"El Capitan," march .... Sousa
Prelude to "Hansel and Gretel" Humperdinck
"Panis Angelicus" .... Franck
"Espana," rhapsody .... Chabrier
"The Animals' Carnival," grand zoological fantasia .... Saint-Saens
Pianos: J. M. Sanroma—L. Litwin
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812" .. Tchaikovsky
Victor Herbert favorites .. Arr. by Sanford
"Strike Up the Band" .... Gershwin

Sunday evening, May 7

Wedding march from "Le Coq d'Or" Rimsky-Korsakov
Symphony in C major, No. 1 .... Bizet
Overture to Goethe's "Egmont," op. 84 Beethoven
Concerto for violin and orchestra .. Paganini
Soloist: Ossy Renardy
Tales from the Vienna Woods, waltzes Strauss
"Pavane" from "Sinfonietta" .... Gould
Procession of the Sardar, from the Caucasion Sketches .... Ippolitov-Ivanov

---

B. Post LEADER April 30/39

Arthur Fiedler, who will again lead the orchestra at the Pops concerts, which begin Wednesday.

CAPACITY THRONG AT POPS OPENING

Fiedler Conducts as 54th Season Starts

B. Globe May 4/39

If anything will drive away the cold weather, it is the coming of Pops. Boston's unique musical entertainment has long signified the arrival of May and its theoretically attendant warmth. The 54th season of these enjoyable concerts and informal surroundings began at Symphony Hall last night. Arthur Fiedler, embarking upon his 10th season as conductor, led an orchestra of about 90 Boston Symphony men through a program varied with new music and old Pops favorites.

Symphony Hall again is blooming in its green-and-gold decorations of Spring, the big chandelier suspended over the orchestra and soft gray curtains breaking the severity of the proscenium arch at the sides of the stage.

What appeared to be a capacity audience filled the hall. Once more the popping of corks and the clinking of glasses was to be heard at the tables on the floor, as the staff of waitresses was kept busily engaged in bringing refreshments offered by the generously stocked Pops list. And not long after the concert had begun, those sitting at the tables had created a friendly haze of tobacco smoke.

If inveterate attendants were to analyze why they enjoy the Pops so much, they would probably arrive at the conclusion it is because the Pops change and are yet always the same. The programs do change, with new music and old assembled to fit the mood of passing time. But the essential atmosphere of the Pops, their easy informality and discreet gayety are important reasons why these concerts have for years been so much in favor. These things, praise be! do not change.

During Mr. Fiedler's regime of nearly a decade—which has seen the passing of the sternly non-alcoholic menu and the return of wines and beers—the Pops have reached successive peaks of popularity. As a maker of programs, Mr. Fiedler has been particularly astute; he has managed that miraculous feat of pleasing all sections of the Pops public, from those who are partial to music of the past, to the younger segment who like a bit of swing mixed with light classics. As conductor, Mr. Fiedler has continued to grow, both in technic and—where more exacting music is concerned—as interpreter. The Pops were originally designed to be entertaining; under Mr. Fiedler they have always been so.

The conductor was warmly greeted as he made his first bow from the conductor's stand ringed with vases of gladioli. Throughout the evening hearty applause prevailed. The opening number of the 54th season was Berlioz' stirring—and stirring is just the word—"Rakoczy" March. For "first time in Boston" there were two numbers, the first a free transcription by Harl MacDonald of three harpsichord pieces by John Christopher Smith, a Bavarian originally of the name of Schmidt, born in Ansbach, Ger., and reared in London. Handel was his teacher and friend, and Smith flourished from 1712 to 1795. These pieces, neatly transcribed for orchestra, are a welcome addition to the Pops repertory. The other new piece was new in its present form only, for Alec Templeton's "Bach Goes to Town," a fugue in the style of Bach with overtones of swing, has for some time been well-liked. The present version for large orchestra was made this year by Henry Brant, who also did the earlier jazz band version. The Prelude to Wagner's "The Meistersingers of Nuremberg," Weber's "Oberon" Overture, Johann Strauss' imperishable waltz, "By the Beautiful Blue Danube," Cailliet's "Pop Goes the Weasel," Enesco's First Rumanian Rhapsody, a fantasy on tunes by George Gershwin, and the "Sailors' Dance" from "The Red Poppy," by Gliere, were the other numbers of the list. To these were added numerous encores. C. W. D.

LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER - CITIZEN

MAY 3 - 1939

MO Gehri

To Whom
M

Boston Programs.

Relieved from the formalities of the more serious concerts of the season, the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Arthur Fiedler's direction assemble for the opening of the Pop concert series in Symphony hall this evening. As usual, there will be opportunity to enjoy light music and light refreshments in combination. Features of tonight's program will be a performance of Hari McDonald's "Miniature Suite" and Alec Templeton's "Bach Goes to Town." Composer McDonald, by the way, was recently appointed as manager of the Philadelphia Symphony orchestra. From which one judges that he must have business as well as musical ability.

Music News

B. Trans. 1939

The opening program of the 54th season of Pops, in Symphony Hall next Wednesday evening, will contain Hari McDonald's Miniature Suite, consisting of a free transcription of three harpsichord pieces by John Christopher Smith. There will also be a performance of Alec Templeton's "Bach Goes to Town." On Saturday evening Saint Saens' "Animals' Carnival" will be presented, with Jesus Maria Sanroma and Leo Litwin as the two pianists. The first Sunday evening program on May 7 will include, among other items, Bizet's Symphony in C major and a Paganini violin concerto, with Ossy Renardy as soloist.

(2)

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, BOSTON, MONDAY, MAY 1, 1939

oice of Out-of-Town Critics—Dis

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

The Pops—In Full Swing

Arthur Fiedler conducting in the series of light concerts at Symphony Hall which mark the transition from spring to summer. The fifty-fourth season opens Wednesday evening.

Preparation in Symphony Hall

POPS OPEN 54TH SEASON

Fiedler's Music Pleases All Classes of Patrons

B. Post — May 4/39

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

It's an ill wind, etc: Had the Symphony Orchestra accomplished its much discussed spring trip to Europe the Pop Concerts could not have opened last evening—as they did open—in accordance with their usual schedule. Europe will have to wait until it is in a better mood for such visits. In the meantime, the 54th season of Pops and Arthur Fiedler's 10th as their conductor, has opened most auspiciously.

Distinctly it was a cheerful audience, but its cheerfulness waited always upon the music. Even whispered conversation was rare, while the orchestra discoursed; and beverages, during the playing time, were consumed discreetly.

To come at last to the music, Mr. Fiedler's programme, with its sprinkling of extras, was typical of the Pops in their present estate. Other familiar pieces beside the March of Berlioz were Weber's Overture to "Oberon," Strauss' "Blue Danube" Waltz, the "Meistersinger" Prelude to Wagner, Enesco's First Rumanian Rhapsody and that favorite of recent Pops seasons, the "Sailor's Dance" from Gliere's "The Red Poppy."

An absolute novelty was a set of three transcriptions of harpischord pieces by John Christopher Smith, 18th century German-English composer, skilfully made by Harl McDonald. A semi-novelty was an orchestral version of Alec Templeton's clever conceit, "Bach Goes to Town."

Also on the lighter side were Lucien Cailliet's witty arrangement of "Pop Goes the Weasel" and a Fantasy on melodies by George Gershwin. Incidentally, Mr. Fiedler and his more than fourscore Symphony men put on a virtuoso performance of everything they essayed.

EVENING TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY, APRIL 29/39

ARTHUR FIEDLER

Beginning his tenth season as conductor of the Pops concerts at Symphony Hall next Wednesday evening.

Pops Again

B. Trans., April 29/39

Familiar Institution Reopens Its Doors

The 54th season of Pop Concerts will begin in Symphony Hall next Wednesday evening. Arthur Fiedler will be beginning his tenth consecutive season—a longer run than that of any other conductor in the history of Pops. He will have the services of about 90 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the programs that will be given nightly, including Sunday, through the end of May and nightly, except Sunday, in June.

The Pops will have their familiar aspect and appurtenances: chairs and tables on the floor, where one may eat and drink and smoke and indulge in discreet conversation to the accompaniment of music; or the the balconies where one may sit to hear it as at any other concert. The programs, as will be seen below, will again be prevailingly light and largely familiar. There will presumaby be the usual emphasis on "special" nights.

The most significant features of the opening night will be the first Boston performance of Harl McDonald's "Miniature Suite" and Alec Templeton's "Bach Goes to Town." On Saturday evening Jesus Maria Sanroma, familiar and well-liked appendage to Pops in recent seasons, will make his first appearance of the season, not as soloist in "Rhapsody in Blue" but as one of the two pianists for the Saint-Saens "Animals' Carnival." On the next evening, Ossy Renardy will be the soloist in a violin concerto by Paganini.

The programs through the first Sunday concert follow in detail:

Wednesday Evening

Hungarian March, "Rakoczy"	Berlioz
Overture to "Oberon"	Weber
Miniature Suite (A Free Transcrption of Three Harpsichord Pieces by John Christopher Smith, 1770)	Harl McDonald
"Blue Danube" Waltzes	Strauss
Prelude to "The Mastersingers"	Wagner
Pop Goes the Weasel	Cailliet
Roumanian Rhapsody No. 1	Enesco
Austrian Peasant Dances (Second Series)	Schoenherr
Bach Goes to Town	Templeton
Sailors' Dance from "Red Poppy"	Gliere

Thursday Evening

"Pomp and Circumstance" March	Elgar
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor"	Nicolai
Minuet for Strings	Bolzoni
"Madama Butterfly" Fantasia	Puccini
Prelude to "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Hora Staccato (Roumanian)	Dinicu-Heifetz
Second Hungarian Rhapsody	Liszt
Gershwin Melodies.
Virginia Reel	Coffey
"Knightsbridge" from London Suite	Eric Coates

Friday Evening

Introduction to Act III "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Overture to "The Roman Carnival"	Berlioz
Fugue a la Gigue	Bach-Holst
Fantasia, "Carmen"	Bizet
Bacchanale, "Samson and Delilah"	Saint-Saens
Prayer of Thanksgiving	Valerius
Finale, Fourth Symphony	Tchaikovsky
Selection, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs"	Churchill
Malaguena	Lecuona
"Semper Fidelis," March	Sousa

Saturday Evening

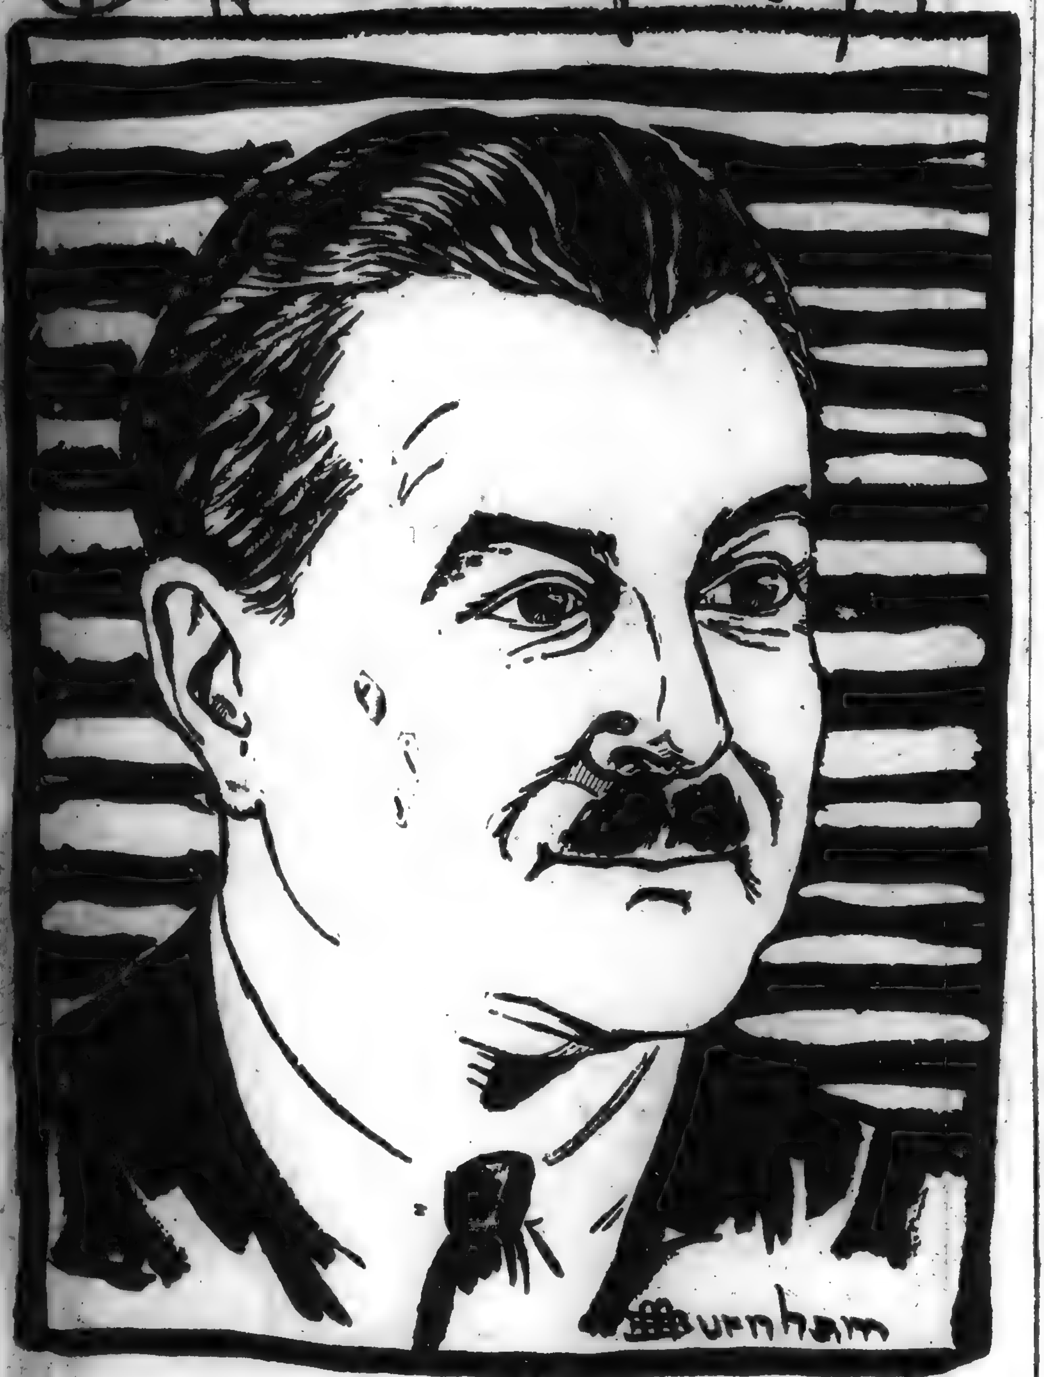
"El Capitan," March	Sousa
Prelude to "Haensel and Gretel"	Humperdinck
Panis Angelicus	Franck
Espana," Rhapsody	Chabrier
The Animals' Carnival Pianos: J. M. Sanroma—L. Litwin	Saint-Saens
Overture Solennelle, "1812"	Tchaikovsky
Victor Herbert Favorites	Arr. by Sanford
Strike Up the Band	Gershwin

Sunday Evening, May 7

Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or"	Rimsky-Korsakov
Symphony in C major, No. 1	Bizet
Ovrture to Goethe's "Egmont," Op. 84	Beethoven
Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, Soloist: Ossy Renardy	Paganini
Tales from the Vienna Woods, Waltzes	Strauss
"Pavane" from "Sinfonietta"	Gould
Procession of the Sardar	Ippolitov-Ivanov

Pops Opening Wednesday

B. Herald - April 30/39



Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Pops, which begin their 54th season at Symphony Hall tomorrow night. This marks Mr. Fiedler's 10th consecutive season as conductor of these concerts, a longer period than can be claimed by any other previous incumbent.

Symphony Season in Review; Americans Take the Field

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

The 58th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, now concluded, was not especially out of the ordinary except for the number of American compositions presented. There were 19 works new to these concerts that Dr. Koussevitzky brought forward, and of these 10 were by Americans. It must be remembered that one has to include under this nationality composers who were not born here but who have done most of their creative work in this country, such as Nicolai Berezowsky and Vladimir Dukelsky. Even so the record is interesting.

There were some 30 works by living composers, which would be more impressive if we did not recall that four of these were by Sibelius, three by Stravinsky, and one an early symphony of Enesco. We have not included Ravel or Strauss in this total, but we do include the late Albert Roussel's Flemish Rhapsody. All this may seem a bit arbitrary, but then so is death. For example, the living Enesco's music is very much less contemporaneous than the deceased Roussel's. The solid fact that emerges from these sketchy statistics is that Dr. Koussevitzky has clearly not turned his back upon the modern composer.

What of the American composers who adorned this season? We can not own to any great enthusiasm for the bulk of them. Nothing quite as good as Mr. Piston's or Mr. Randall Thompson's symphonies appeared. The nearest were Mr. Roy Harris's Symphony No. 3 and Mr. Berezowsky's Toccata, Variations and Finale. Both of these were able, serious and interesting works. We had not previously joined the vociferous knot of Mr. Harris's admirers, so that the occasion of the new symphony's first performance marked some more or less graceful backing-down. Vladimir Dukelsky's Dedicaces also seemed to us a very stimulating music, and Aaron Copland's El Salon Mexico was a clever and delightful piece of unbending by a formerly austere modernist.

The two new violin concertos by Mr. Hill and Mr. Carpenter proved disappointing. Mr. Carpenter's had a technical and superficial charm, but was not without a vitiating strain of vulgarity. Mr. Hill's had none of that fault, but neither did it have the composer's customary flair for effective writing. To be summarily dismissed as not worth the trouble of being played at all were Gardner Read's Suite, David Stanley Smith's and William Schuman's symphonies.

Along with these dismissals we should like to lump two foreign works, namely Krenek's Second Piano Concerto and Shostakovitch's 5th Symphony. Fairly conventional, but none the less good, music, in one way or another, were Goossen's Two Nature Poems, Enesco's Second Rumanian Rhapsody and Lipatti's Chef cu lautari. By far the most arresting score of the season was Hindemith's Symphonic Dances, music of power, originality and ingenuity.

So much for the unfamiliar music. The best revival was Stravinsky's Symphony of Psalms, the most disappointing Bloch's America. A remarkable performance of Stravinsky's Sacre should also be mentioned, as well as one of Schmitt's Salome. The revival of Bruckner's 8th Symphony was distinctly worth while, that of Tchaikovsky's Manfred Symphony was on the whole unwarranted.

Beethoven was the most played composer, with the 2nd and 7th Symphonies, the violin and 3rd piano concertos and the Missa Solemnis. Hard on his heels was Ernest Bloch, with two performances of Solomon, Macbeth, Three Jewish Poems and America at the regular concerts and Helvetia at the Monday-Tuesday series. The Sibelius boom continues, for his 2nd, 3rd, 5th and 7th Symphonies were heard and the Violin Concerto at the Monday-Tuesday series. Brahms was also thoroughly represented.

The most extraordinary thing about the season was a phenomenon that has been somewhat overdue—only one Strauss tone poem! A few years ago at our concerts Strauss was certainly overplayed, so that a touch of neglect will do his scores no harm. The Sibelius No. 2 and the Tchaikovsky Nos. 4 and 5 could stand a little of the same treatment to their ultimate benefit.

Something will have to be done in the future about the orchestra's pension fund concerts. The "surprise-divertimento" concerts may well go stale if the notion is repeated too often; and performances of great choral masterpieces of the 19th century simply do not attract the public. The Brahms Requiem this past week, even with a number of rows taken out to make room for the enlarged stage, did not command anything like a full house. The only choral music that might succeed is Bach's, and even then something in the nature of a festival is required to draw the crowd. It has been suggested that a concert performance of either Strauss's "Salome" or "Elektra" would do the trick. The out is the expense of first rate singers, but the idea is well worth considering.

Second performances are still a rarity, while premieres are showered upon us. A conceivable way out of this dilemma and one that could also be applied to older neglected works is to play a symphonic movement or two that could stand alone. We are no longer in any need of instruction on established symphonic form, so that if a movement of a symphony is weak there is no reason on earth why it should not be left off altogether. Application of this principle to modern works is less to be commended, but if the permission of the composer is obtained it could perhaps be put into practice. There is also a quantity of operatic overtures that are largely untouched here and that would season and vary the repertoire. With these reflections, we may call it a day as far as the 58th season is concerned.

3

MUSIC

B Herald May 4/39

THE POPS

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

There is so little of change at the Pops, which is one of the charms of this odd institution, that a reporter is hard put to it to find something with which to startle his public. And a critic is even harder put to it on the opening night of the 54th season and Mr. Fiedler's 10th, for he must be surly indeed to find cause for captiousness on such an occasion.

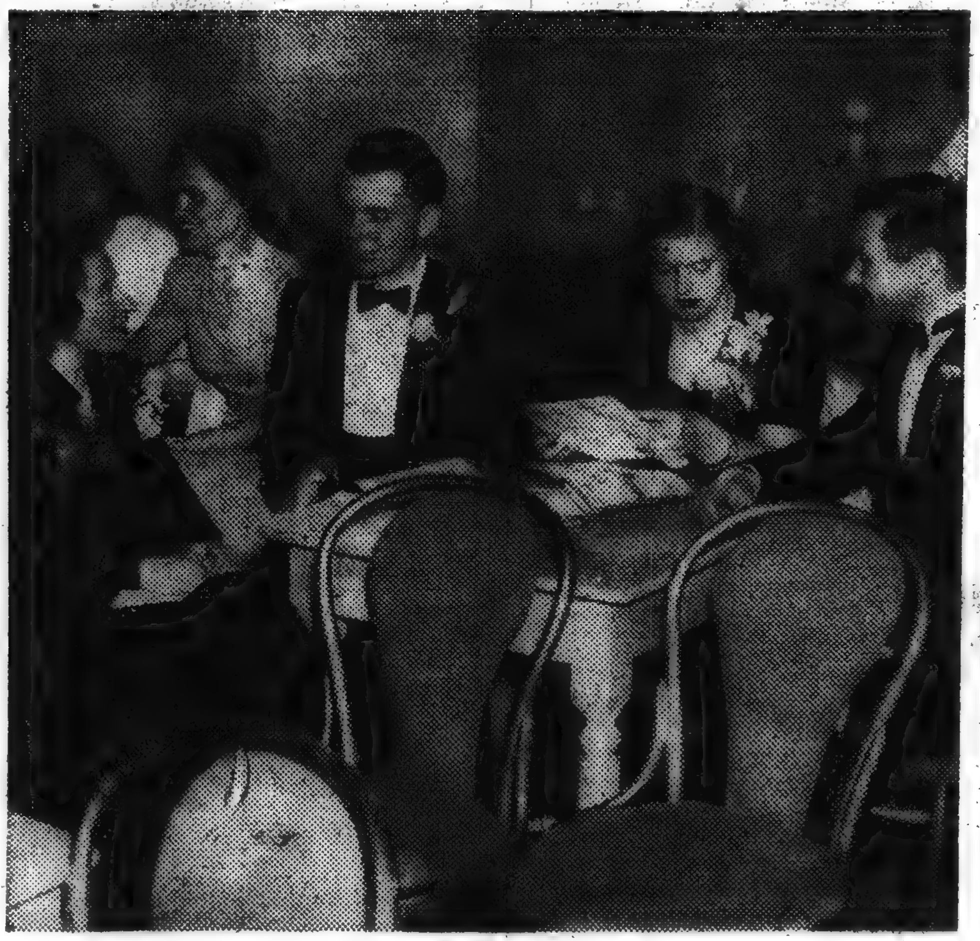
Possibly the brief history of the Pops printed in the program could furnish a theme for discussion; and the cue might well exist for an editorial on social conditions in the remark: "When prohibition came there was naturally more serious attention to the program side." A lot of side-light could be let into that categorical statement! There are still serious concerts on Sundays, and the amount of jazz in the program and synthetic amiability in the audience constitute no very alarming problem. In brief, the Pops, are the same; and the changes are chiefly changes in what is popular in music. If Gershwin is more appealing to a contemporary audience than Victor Herbert, that is not a very hideous discovery.

Mr. Fiedler, who can justly look back with pride on his direction of the Pops over 10 successful years, did not present us with anything very remarkable in the way of novelties for this first concert. Mr. Harl McDonald's arrangement of three harpsichord pieces by John Christopher Smith are agreeable enough, but they have not got anything like the verve of Casella's transcription of some Scarlatti Sonatas. Mr. Alec Templeton's "Bach Goes To Town" is a legitimate parody as he plays it on the piano; but Mr. Henry Brant's orchestration of the fugue emphasizes the "swing" side of it at the expense of the Bach angle. The result is, of course, neither particularly witty nor especially stimulating in the sense that this type of music in its essence strives to suggest. The point is that Mr. Templeton's talent and sense of humor have been lost in the orchestration.

A Fantasy on Gershwin Melodies proved an effective piece that is well suited to the Pops repertoire. Performances were carried out vigorously and precisely, a bit too noisy and with too much string tone in some works near the front of the hall. But "the rough with the smooth" is a part of the listener's technique at a Pop concert, since he has the genial din of the audience and the service to contend with.

THURSDAY, MAY 4, 1939 - B. Globe

Party at First Pop Concert



PHOTOGRAPHED AT SYMPHONY HALL

In the group are Mary Porter Wardwell, her fiance, James E. Simonds, Elizabeth Ware and Herbert Gould.

MR. FIEDLER TO DIRECT THE POPS

B. Post May 1/39

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

TIME flies. It seems not long ago that everyone was saying that the logical successor to Alfredo Casella, as conductor of the Pops Concerts, was Arthur Fiedler, who had made such a success of his concerts on the Esplanade. On Wednesday evening Mr. Fiedler begins his tenth season as Pops conductor. The story of the preceding nine is best summed up in the familiar phrase, "local boy makes good."

In large measure the popularity of the Pops under Mr. Fiedler's direction has been due to the conductor's adroit programme, which pleasantly mix the novel and the familiar, the frankly light and the reasonably serious. The novelties on Wednesday's programme are a Miniature Suite by the newly appointed manager of the Philadelphia Orchestra, Harl McDonald; a second series of Austrian Peasant Dances by Schoenherr and a transcription of Alec Templeton's "Bach Goes to Town."

* * * *

The other day the ruler of Germany was celebrating his 50th birthday. On the 11th of June next his most distinguished subject, one Richard Strauss, will have achieved his 75th. Somewhat prematurely Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra took notice of this important anniversary with an all Strauss programme at their final concerts of the season. No doubt Mr. Fiedler will do something about it at the Pops, when the time comes, although a whole Pop concert devoted to Strauss would be a bit steep. The Viennese branch of the family is more in order there.

As it happens Dr. Koussevitzky was less kind than usual to Strauss during the Symphony season just ended. "Thus Spake Zarathustra" was the only one of the tone poems played, though it had been announced that Piatigorsky would once more be the solo 'Cellist in "Don Quixote." Every dog has his day and every composer his season, and Dr. Koussevitzky's favorites among living composers in this 58th year of our orchestra were Sibelius and Stravinsky. Nor was there any reason to complain on that score. The only thing one might ask is that he let us hear next season not the Sibelius Second and Fifth Symphonies, both overworked here of late, but the relatively neglected Fourth and Sixth. The recent revival of the Third was much to the point. And we might have Stravinsky's "Persephone" as a substitute for the "Symphony of Psalms."

There were protests this season that Dr. Koussevitzky, while giving us plenty of novelties, was permitting the standard repertory to grow a bit stale. In the last two concerts, however, he made amends by performing four French pieces, from the hands of Faure, Schmitt, Rabaud and Debussy, that are anything but hackneyed. Many of the novelties were the work of composers of American birth or present American residence, and no one is going to object to that. Nevertheless we might have been spared both puerility and senility—and we were not.

It is this writer's conviction that the great need of the Symphony-going public is for an even wider acquaintance with the music of established composers. Suggestions have been made above in the case of Sibelius and Stravinsky. To these might be added the "Alpine" Symphony of Strauss, the first and second Symphonies of D'Indy and his "Summer Day on the Mountain," the Second Symphony of Elgar and the "London" and "Pastoral" Symphonies of Vaughan Williams.

* * * *

This afternoon at Symphony Hall Alan Reed Tokman, 7-year-old violinist, will be heard in recital, accompanied by Carl Lamson.

AT THE POPS

WEDNESDAY EVENING

Hungarian march, "Rakoczy"	Berlioz
Overture to "Oberon"	Weber
Miniature Suite	Harl McDonald
"By the Beautiful Danube," waltzes	Strauss
Prelude to "The Meistinsingers of Nuremberg"	Wagner
"Pop Goes the Weasel"	Cailliet
Roumanian Rhapsody No. 1	Enesco
Austrian Peasant Dances (second series)	Schonherr
"Bach Goes to Town" (a fugue in swing)	Templeton
Sailors' Dance from "Red Poppy"	Gliere

THURSDAY EVENING

French Military March	Saint-Saens
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor"	Nicolai
Minuet for Strings	Bolzoni
"Madame Butterfly," fantasia	Puccini
Prelude to "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Hora Staccato (Roumanian)	Dinicu-Heifetz
Second Hungarian Rhapsody	Liszt
Gershwin Melodies
Virginia Reel	Coffey
"Knightsbridge" (march) from London Suite	Eric Coates

FRIDAY EVENING

Introduction to Act III., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Overture, "The Roman Carnival"	Berlioz
Fugue a la Gigue	Bach-Holst
Fantasia, "Carmen"	Bizet
Bacchanale, "Samson and Delilah,"	Saint-Saens
Prayer for Thanksgiving (old Dutch hymn)	Valerius
Finale, Fourth Symphony	Tchaikovsky
Selection, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs"	Churchill
Malaguena	Lecuona

SATURDAY EVENING

"El Capitan," march	Sousa
Prelude to "Hansel and Gretel"	Humperdinck
"Panis Angelicus"	Franck
"Espana," rhapsody	Chabrier
"The Animals' Carnival," Grand Zoological Fantasia	Saint-Saens
Overture Solennelle, "1812"	Tchaikovsky
Victor Herbert favorites	arranged by Sanford
"Strike Up the Band"	Gershwin

54th Season of Pops Begins At Symphony Hall, May 3

The 54th season of Pop concerts played by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin at Symphony Hall Wednesday evening, May 3. This will be the 10th consecutive season of Arthur Fiedler as conductor, the longest term of any leader in the history of these concerts. The orchestra this year will number about 90 men.

ARTHUR FIEDLER

As usual, refreshments will be served at the tables on the floor of the hall, a feature which lends to the Pops a special festive atmosphere. The concerts begin at 8:30 p. m.

Sunday evening concerts are to prevail during May. The first, a week from tonight, will bring the first Boston appearance of Ossy Renardy as soloist in a Paganini violin concerto.

The programs of the week follow in detail:

Wednesday, Opening Night—Hungarian March, "Rakoczy", Berlioz; Overture to "Oberon," Weber; Miniature Suite, Harl McDonald. (A Free Transcription of Three Harpsichord Pieces by John Christopher Smith, 1770), (first performance in Boston); "By the Beautiful Blue Danube," Waltzes, Strauss; Prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg," Wagner; "Pop Goes the Weasel," Cailliet; Roumanian Rhapsody No. 1, Enesco; Austrian Peasant Dances (second series), Schonherr (first performance in Boston); "Bach Goes to Town" (A Fugue in Swing), Templeton; Sailors' Dance from "Red Poppy," Gliere.

Thursday—"Pomp and Circumstance," March, Elgar; Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai; Minuet for Strings, Bolzoni; "Madama Butterfly," Fantasia, Puccini; Prelude to "Lohengrin," Wagner; Hora Staccato (Roumanian), Dinicu-Heifetz; Second Hungarian Rhapsody, Liszt; Gershwin Melodies, Virginia Reel, Coffey; "Knightsbridge" (March) from London Suite, Eric Coates.

Friday—Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin," Wagner; Overture to "The Roman Carnival," Berlioz; Fugue a la Gigue, Bach-Holst; Fantasia, "Carmen," Bizet; Bacchanale, "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saens; Prayer of Thanksgiving, Old Dutch Hymn, Valerius; Finale, Fourth Symphony, Tchaikovsky; Selection, Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," Churchill; Malaguena, Lecuona; "Semper Fidelis," March, Sousa.

Saturday — "El Capitan," March, Sousa; Prelude to "Hansel and Gretel," Humperdinck; "Panis Angelicus," Franck; "Espana," Rhapsody, Chabrier; "The Animals' Carnival," Grand Zoological Fantasia, Saint-Saens; pianos, J. M. Sanroma, L. Litwin; Overture Solennelle, "1812," Tchaikovsky; Victor Herbert Favorites, arranged by Sanford; "Strike Up the Band," Gershwin.

Sunday, May 7—Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or," Rimsky-Korsakov; Symphony in C major, No. 1, Bizet; Overture to Goethe's "Egmont," Op. 84, Beethoven; Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, Paganini; soloist, Ossy Renardy; Tales From the Vienna Woods, Waltzes, Strauss; "Pavane," from Sinfonietta," Gould; Procession of the Sardar, from the Caucasian Sketches, Ippolitov-Ivanov.

B. Globe - May 30/39

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

The Boston Symphony Season

Another Boston Symphony season, the 58th to be specific, is over. The world has been troubled these past seven months, yet Boston, praise be! has continued to enjoy one of her most enviable possessions. At the conclusion of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's 15th year as conductor he remains at the summit of his interpretive powers. To put it candidly, he is 15 years older than when he first stepped out on the stage of Symphony Hall in October, 1924. No one would realize it so far as the energy which he puts into his work is concerned. He is just as much an untiring leader today as he was then.

Not long ago he spoke with justifiable pride, in a private conversation with this writer, of the "artistic discipline" of the Boston Symphony. That artistic discipline, coupled with his own great powers of musical re-creation, has resulted in the development of one of the greatest orchestras ever known. Dr. Koussevitzky continues to exact from the players as much hard work as he does from himself. Thus it is that the season ended last night has seen the Boston Symphony consistently at the peak of tonal magnificence and technical perfection.

No less conspicuous has been Dr. Koussevitzky's extraordinary and far-famed talent for combining disparate music upon a single program so that unusual contrast and variety are obtained. Yet during these last few months this writer somehow formed an impression that the base of the Boston Symphony repertory had become narrowed, that too many thrice-familiar "standard" items were being repeated year after year.

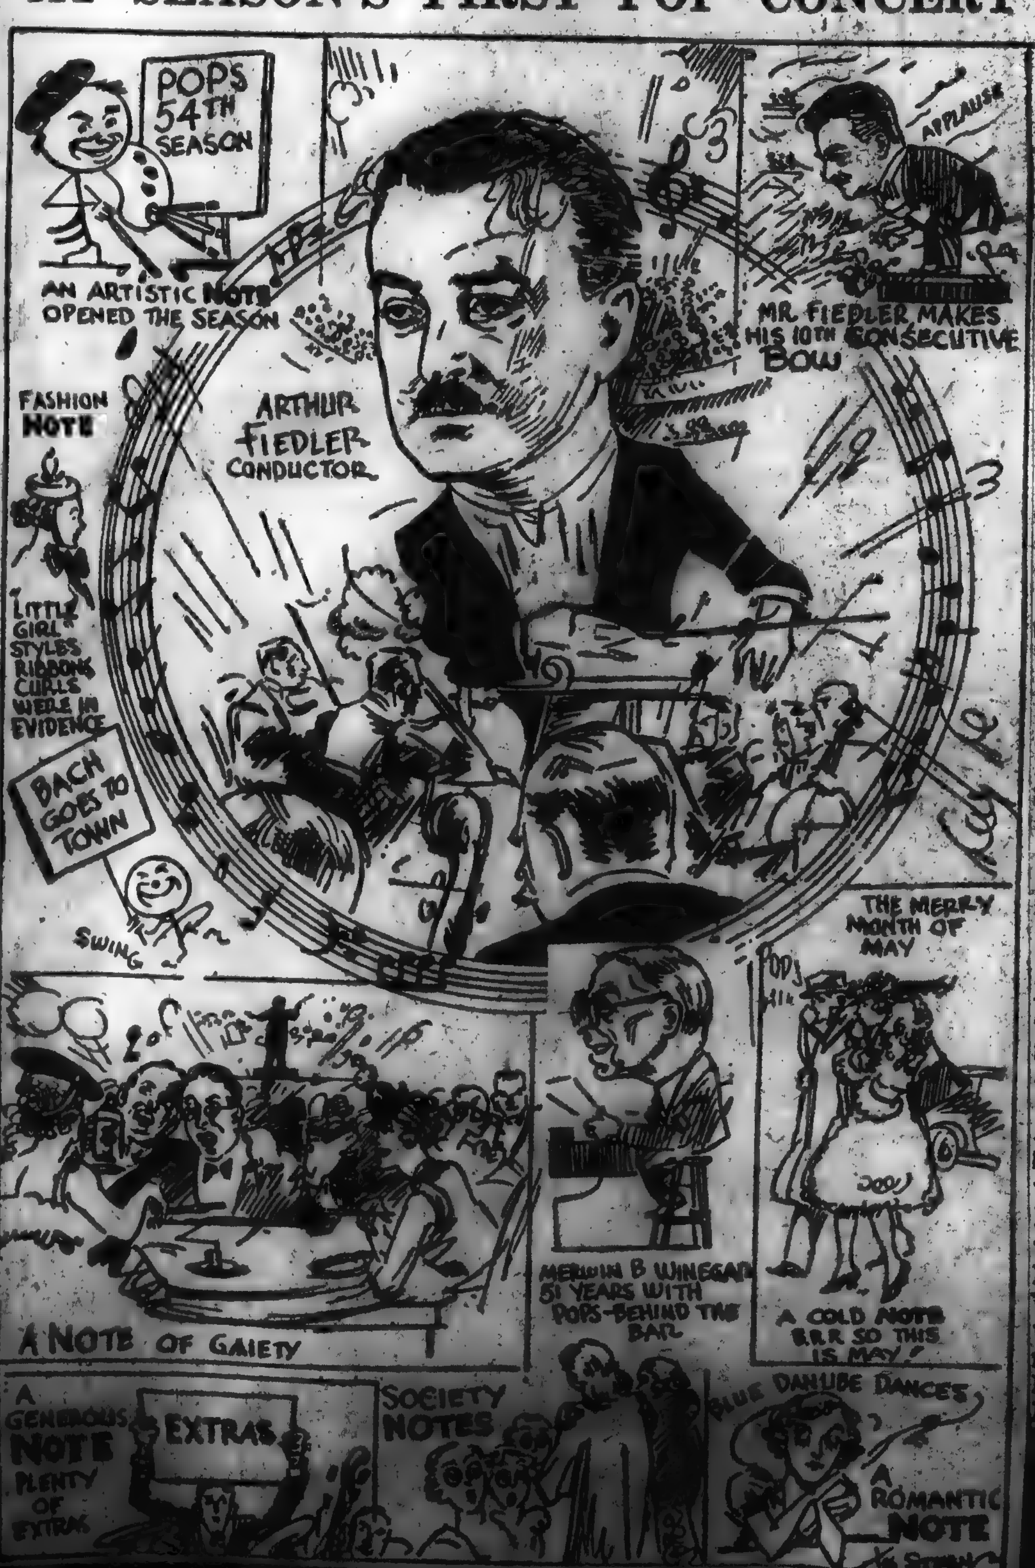
Examination of the complete repertory for the season does not fully confirm that impression. We have had lots of Beethoven, Brahms, Haydn, Mozart and others, but the programs for three seasons past show that few works by these composers have actually been repeated in consecutive years.

Schumann is a notable exception. His D minor Symphony has been heard in 1936-37, 1937-38 and 1938-39. And in the meantime his Third Symphony has not been played at all. Now program-making is very difficult; familiar old music, novelties of recent years that deserve repetition, and new scores must all be crowded into 24 programs. We have not been denied new works this season, and if only Roy Harris' Third Symphony, Hindemith's "Symphonic Dances," the Toccata, Variations and Finale of Nicolai Berezowsky and Aaron Copland's "El Salon Mexico" seemed worthy to be heard again, that is not the fault of the conductor. Exceptional new music is scarce these days.

But we could have more of Mahler and Bruckner, for example, and some of Strauss' less familiar pieces such as the "Alpine Symphony," the "Domestic Symphony," the long-overdue Fourth and Sixth Symphonies by Sibelius. The Brahms and Tchaikovsky symphonies, great though they are, would sound fresher for a season's rest, and so would the Second and Fifth of Sibelius. And why not a taste of older music of less than first rank, the type represented, say, by Carl Goldmark's "Rustic Wedding" Symphony? The subject of programs is, however, one that could be discussed at great length. Enough for today.

THE BOSTON HERALD, THURSDAY, MAY 4, 1939

AT SEASON'S FIRST POP CONCERT



POPS 54TH SEASON
AN ARTISTIC NOTE OPENED THE SEASON
APPLAUSE
MR. FIEDLER MAKES HIS 10TH CONSECUTIVE BOW
ARTHUR FIEDLER CONDUCTOR
FASHION NOTE
"LITTLE GIRL" STYLES RIBBONS CURLS WERE IN EVIDENCE
BACH GOES TO TOWN SWING
THE MERRY MONTH OF MAY A NOTE OF GAIETY
MERWIN B WINEGAR 51 YEARS WITH POPS-BEHIND THE BAR A COLD NOTE BRR SO THIS IS MAY!
A GENEROUS NOTE PLENTY OF EXTRAS EXTRAS
SOCIETY NOTES
BLUE DANUBE DANCES
A ROMANTIC NOTE
Vic STERN

Pop Concerts Open Season

B. Trav. May 4/39

Suave Arthur Fiedler mounted the conductor's platform in Symphony Hall promptly at 8:30 o'clock last night. A sudden hush fell over the capacity throng of music lovers waiting expectantly in every floor and balcony seat. Fiedler's baton cut the air sharply and 90 symphony players responded with the stirring, provocative strains of Berlioz' Hungarian march, Rakoczy. Thus was launched the 54th season of Pop concerts, one of Boston's oldest and finest traditions.

As in all Pop programs, the selections played last night catered to a variety of tastes. From opera to nursery songs ran the gamut. The audience had hardly relaxed from the heavy concentration demanded of Wagner's "Meistersingers" before the weasel began popping. What with other objects popping at the tables, the atmosphere was decidedly merry at this point in the program.

However, the Fantasy on Gershwin Melodies introduced a sad note, possibly because Gershwin is dead but probably because his tunes, while modern and "jazz," if you wish, always conjure nostalgic memories. The selections, played with the delicate tone shade and striking emphasis which Fiedler so skillfully delineates, paid a fitting tribute to one of the greatest of "tune" composers.

From modern music the orchestra jumped to the ultra-modern with the playing of "Bach Goes to Town," a fugue in swing by Alec Templeton, the blind English pianist who recently gave a concert here.

TONIGHT AT POPS

The Pop concerts which opened their 54th season last night in Symphony Hall will give their second concert tonight at 8:30. Arthur Fiedler presents the following program:

French Military March	Saint-Saens
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor"	Nicolai
Minuet (for strings)	Bolzoni
Madama Butterfly, fantasia	Puccini
Prelude to "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Hora Staccato (Roumanian)	Dinicu-Heifetz
Second Hungarian Rhapsody	Liszt
Fantasy on Gershwin melodies
Virginia Reel	Coffey
Knightsbridge (march), from London Suite	Eric Coates

MUSEUM, LIBRARY TO GET BEQUESTS

The will of Samuel Sigilman, one-time newsboy who became one of Boston's leading lawyers, left the bulk of his $200,000 estate to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Boston Museum of Fine Arts and the Boston public library in equal shares, it was revealed yesterday.

The will, filed with Arthur W. Sullivan, register of probate, also contained a bequest of $15,000 to Sigilman's secretary, Miss Rhoda C. Brickett, $5000 to Atty. Charles H. Dow, for many years an office associate, and several gifts of $2500 each to other friends and relatives.

The Rationalist Press Association, Ltd., of London, was left $1000 for general purposes.

Capacity Throng Fills Symphony Hall As Concert Begins 54th Pops Season

The opening of the 54th season of the Pops at Symphony Hall drew a capacity throng last evening, especially since two sections of the floor were taken over by the May School and the Faulkner Hospital. The program proved especially interesting to the younger group present as it included many popular favorites such as "Begin the Beguine," "A Fantasy on Gedshwin Melodies," Strauss waltzes, and Alec Templeton's "Bach Goes to Town."

The May School was well represented in the audience. Miss Elizabeth Lowell Ware was at a table with Miss Mary Porter Wardwell and her fiance, Mr. James Simonds. Miss Ware wore a corsage of orchids on the shoulder of her black velvet gown, and Miss Wardwell also wore orchids with her dinner gown of black lace that had a sash of red. At a nearby table were Mrs. Harold Scholl, Jr., the former Betty Palmer, with Mr. Scholl and Miss Louise English, who wore a black velvet wrap with her violet crepe gown. Mrs. Scholl was in chartreuse crepe. Wearing a gown of printed satin was Miss Olive Perry and in a black net gown embroidered in pink was Miss Rosamond Emerson. Miss Frances Seaver wore blue satin and in gold satin was Mrs. Wallace L. Pierce, in a party with Mr. Pierce, and Mr. Charles Curran and Miss Mary Hastings, who wore an orchid on her mink cape.

Miss Sally Scudder wore a gown of black organdy with her velvet wrap and white angora mittens, and her sister, Miss Bettie Scudder, who was with her fiance, Mr. Gordon McKissock, wore robin's egg blue chiffon. Miss Betty Prescott was in white, and wearing a pale blue wrap with her gown was Miss Marjorie Kimpton. Miss Mary O'Day wore a street length frock of black and chartreuse print with a chartreuse jacket, and in emerald green was Mrs. Paul Walton, the former Frances Cove, who attended with Mr. Walton. Mr. and Mrs. Francis Jackson were others noted, the former Jane Matthews in a gown of slate blue georgette.

Miss Betty Allen, chatting with Mr. Edmund Wheelwright and Mr. James Lewis, wore a black gown with a white bodice and a red sash; and still others noted were Mr. and Mrs. Robert H. Stevenson, the latter in brown crepe with a mink cape, Miss Polly Keppler, in white crepe, Mr. T. Edmund Skinner, Mr. Kenneth Chase, and Mr. Jack Drumm.

B. Trans. MUSIC May 4/39

Maytime Is Pop-Time

Opening of New Season Under Arthur Fiedler In the Customary Setting at Symphony Hall

By MOSES SMITH

After a while it becomes practically impossible even to pretend to disguise what is only the repetition of an annual custom, namely a review of the opening night of the Pops concerts. In fifteen years I think I have exhausted my resources in that direction, and so I shall stick to straight reporting for a description of the festivities in Symphony Hall last night, when the 54th season of the institution began under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, who was beginning his own tenth season in the capacity of Pops conductor.

For the sake of the record it may be set down that the auditorium was filled apparently to its capacity with a typical Pops audience that liked everything on the program, some things more than others. The tables and chairs were in their accustomed array, the spring re-furbishings were again apparent, and the enjoyment of the music was enhanced by the usual amenities—eating, drinking and smoking.

Serious and Light Vein

The program, no better and no worse than the average at such an event, contained a certain amount of repertory symphonic material—the "Rakoczy" March of Berlioz, the Overture to "Oberon," the Prelude to "Die Meistersinger" and Enesco's First "Roumanian" Rhapsody—which were played for the most part with the characteristic vigor and precision that the Boston Symphony Orchestra displays during its winter season, and with that relaxation from intensity which naturally accompanies the spring season.

On the lighter side there were such favorites, of old or recent vintage, as the "Blue Danube" Waltz, Cailliet's barnyard variations on "Pop Goes the Weasel" and the Sailors' Dance from "Red Poppy" by Gliere. More or less familiar were the encores, which are a settled part of the Pops tradition. One of them, Cole Porter's "Begin the Beguine," in an arrangement that was voluptuously full-voiced, was itself repeated.

New to Boston was Harl McDonald's "Miniature Suite," based freely on three harpsichord pieces by one John Christopher Smith, a name to which the program appended the date 1770. The form and intrinsic content of the pieces recalled the period in which they were written, and they were engaging enough. But they were put to a severe and really unfair test by McDonald's swollen instrumentation and efforts toward orchestral "effects."

Templeton and Gershwin

The two other numbers on the set program I enjoyed the most. One was Alec Templeton's ingenious and highly musical "Bach Goes to Town." Here is witty, stimulating stuff, the scholarly humor not pedantic, the tunes themselves and the rhythmic vitality very much of our time. I liked the piece again in spite of, not because of, Henry Brant's orchestration, which almost drowned out the musical lines.

Similarly it was the Gershwin melodies rather than what the anonymous arranger did with them that I found so exhilarating. How alert and of their time were such tunes as "I Got Rhythm," "Wintergreen for President" and the bluer or more sentimental ones like "The Man I Love" and "Summertime." What a master of melody and rhythm Gershwin was, and what style he had!

But this is beginning to become far too serious for a Pops review. Let us take leave on the ever-refreshng note of Gershwin.

News of Music

The Wellesley College Choir, led by Edward B. Green, will sing a group of numbers, to augment the program previously announced for the Pops concert of next Sunday evening. On Thursday evening of next week Heinrich Gebhard and Paul Bregor will be the soloists for Bach's Concerto in C major for two pianos and orchestra. And on the following Sunday evening the almost solidly symphonic program will have for principal features the Second "Brandenburg" Concerto of Bach and the Paderewski Piano Concerto in A minor. Jesus Maria Sanroma will be the soloist in the performance of the latter work.

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS

APR 30 1939

Right on the Record

By Rudolph Nelson

"Alborada del Gracioso," by Ravel—Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist (Victor record 4425).

Sanroma, whom you may know for his flashing performances with the Boston "Pops" orchestra, now comes to us solo with a brilliant performance of a highly engaging work of Ravel. Sanroma has given more first performances of Ravel's music than any other pianist in America, and has invariably won marked success with them. You may recall the orchestral version of this piece by the Minneapolis Orchestra, which is available in recorded form. Here you may hear the original form of the composition.

Tonight at the Pops

Opening Night

Hungarian March, "Rakoczy"	Berlioz
Overture to "Oberon"	Weber
Miniature Suite	Harl McDonald
(First performance in Boston)
"By the Beautiful Blue Danube," Waltzes	Strauss
Prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg"	Wagner
"Pop Goes the Weasel"	Cailliet
Roumanian Rhapsody No. 1	Enesco
Austrian Peasant Dances (Second Series)	Schönherr
(First perfomance in Boston)
"Bach Goes to Town" (A Fugue in Swing)	Templeton
Sailors' Dance from "Red Poppy"	Glière

(5)

PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS

MAY 1 4 1939

* * *

Under the leadership of Arthur Fiedler the famous Boston Symphony "Pop" concerts will get under way for their 54th season on Wednesday night of this week at Symphony Hall, Boston.

Townsman
Andover Mass.

APR 20 1939

Boston Symphony Members To Give Concert Here For Christ Church On April 28th

There is an increasing interest in the concert of lighter and popular music to be given under the auspices of Christ Church on Friday evening, April 28, at half past eight o'clock in the Andover Memorial Auditorium.

The program committee have selected a program that they feel very sure will mean an interesting and delightful evening for everyone attending the concert. Because the orchestra is composed of members of the Boston Symphony and conducted by so well-known and prominent a member of the orchestra as Arthur Fiedler, the success of the concert as to performance and fine feeling is assured.

Added to the list of patrons and patronesses are the names of Dr. and Mrs. Claude Moore Fuess, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest N. Young, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Boutwell, Mrs. Robert Maxwell, and Miss Paddock.

The committees: general chairman, Mrs. E. Deon Walen; tickets, chairmen, Mrs. Wallace E. Brimer, Mrs. Sarah Bartlett Mercer; Mrs Harold E. Abbott, Mrs. John S Barss, Mrs. Harry Emmons, Mrs M. Phillips Graham, Mrs. William S. Hughes, Mrs. Benjamin Jaques, Mrs. Edwin F. Lewis, 2d, Mrs. John D. Newall, Mrs. Arthur Sweeney, Mrs. Emery E. Trott, Mrs. Lloyd J. Thayer, Mrs. Henry G. Tyer, Mrs. Charles F. Warden, Mrs. Charles P. Gabeler, Miss Ethel Hilton, Mrs. F. W. H. Stott; advertising: chairman, Mrs. Walter Howe; Mrs. George F. Sawyer, Mrs. C. Carleton Kimball, Mrs. Stafford Lindsay, Mrs. George McCollum, Miss Ruth Saunders; hospitality: Mrs. Harold E. Abbott, Mrs. J. Edson Andrews, Mrs. Arthur Sweeney; printing: Mrs. Scott Paradise; correspondence: Mrs. Ernest Young; treasurer: Mr. Charles S. Cook; cafeteria service: chairman, Mrs. Ralph T. Berry; Mrs. Lester Connor, Mrs. Howard Young, Mrs. Charles F. Warden, Ralph T. Berry, Mr. and Mrs. Homer Judge; flowers, Mrs. Roy E. Spencer; patrons and patronesses: chairman, Mrs. Julius Rockwell; Miss Ethel Brown, Mrs. Harold A. Rutter, Mrs. E. F. Leland, Jr.; publicity: Mrs. John Stewart, Mrs. Charles Gabeler, Mrs. Nathaniel E. Bartlett; ushers and vendors: chairman, Mrs. George H. Musk; Mrs. William S. Hughes, Mrs. John Newall, Mrs. Benjamin Jaques; ushers: Mrs. Roger Lewis, Mrs. Wilfred H. Holt, Mrs. William Nicoll, Mrs. Alex Ritchie, Jr., Mrs. J. D. Newall, Mrs. Peter Dantos, Mrs. Leo Shiebler, Mrs. Paul L'Antigua, Elizabeth Hilton, Bertha Hilton, Thelma Beck, Minnie Valentine, Gertrude Taylor, Betty Deyermond, Anne Jamieson, Barbara Bruorton, Arlene Kelley, Frieda Peterson, Annetta Anderson, Helen Smith, Marjorie White; vendors: Evelyn Porter, Dorothy Davis, Eleanor Dwyer, Doris Gillespie, Gladys Martenson, Gladys Monroe, Nancy Rice, Constance Swenson, Kathleen Valentine; table arrangement: Mrs. W. Rodney Hill; aides: John Collins, Jock Reading, Edward Valentine, John McGrath, Hugh MacNeil; piano: Mrs. Frederick Smith.

Andover has been most fortunate in having, through Phillips and Abbot Academies, the privilege of hearing, through the winter, some of the finest music performed by world famous artists. In giving the concert the committee wished it to be a pleasure, not a duty, and although more "popular" in its program, the selections will be played as only so fine an orchestra as this one can play them.

Tickets are on sale at Lowe's Drug Store daily, from ten until twelve and from three until five o'clock.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

MAY 4 - 1939

Festival Gets Publicity in Magazines

An article "Boston Symphony in the Hills" appears in more than 30 current magazines of Chamber of Commerce in larger cities of the country, as the result of collaborative efforts by George W. Edman, Berkshire Symphonic Festival publicity director and Russell W. Frey, Pittsfield Chamber executive. The article is part of the material furnished for these magazines by the Community Service Corporation, as general articles to supplement local ones prepared at the various points of publication. It includes two large photographs showing portions of the huge crowd attending a Festival concert.

The Chamber also has applied four Pittsfield photos from its booklet, submitted by members of the Berkshire Museum Camera Club, for post cards soon to make their appearance on local news stands.

The First Week of the Pops

C. S. Monitor - May 3/39

Following are the programs for the first week of the fifty-fourth season of Symphony Hall Pop Concerts, Arthur Fiedler, conductor:

Thursday, May 4

"Pomp and Circumstance," March	Elgar
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor"	Nicolai
Minuet for Strings	Bolzoni
"Madam Butterfly," Fantasia	Puccini
Prelude to "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Hora Staccato (Rumanian)	Dinicu-Heifetz
Second Hungarian Rhapsody	Liszt
Gershwin melodies
Virginia Reel	Coffey
"Knightsbridge" (March) from London Suite	Eric Coates

Friday, May 5

Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Overture, "The Roman Carnival"	Berlioz
Fugue à la Gigue	Bach-Holst
Fantasia, "Carmen"	Bizet
Bacchanale, "Samson and Delilah"	Saint-Saëns
Prayer of Thanksgiving, Old Dutch Hymn	Valerius
Finale, Fourth Symphony	Tchaikovsky
Selection, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs"	Churchill
Malagueña	Lecuona
"Semper Fidelis," March	Sousa

Saturday, May 6

"El Capitan," March	Sousa
Prelude to "Hänsel and Gretel"	Humperdinck
"Panis Angelicus"	Franck
"España," Rhapsody	Chabrier
"The Animals' Carnival," Grand Zoölogical Fantasia	Saint-Saëns
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"	Tchaikovsky
Victor Herbert Favorites	Arranged by Sanford
"Strike Up the Band"	Gershwin

Sunday, May 7

Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or"	Rimsky-Korsakov
Symphony in C major, No. 1	Bizet
Overture to Goethe's "Egmont," Op. 84	Beethoven
Concerto for Violin and Orchestra	Paganini
Soloist: Alfredo de San Malo
Tales from the Vienna Woods, Waltzes	Strauss
"Pavane" from "Sinfonietta"	Gould
Procession of the Sardar, from the Caucasian Sketches	Ippolitov-Ivanov

Monday, May 8

Entrance of the Boyards	Halvorsen
Scherzo from the "New World" Symphony	Dvořák
Andante Cantabile for Strings	Tchaikovsky
Overture to "William Tell"	Rossini
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker"	Tchaikovsky
"Liebestraum"	Liszt-Herbert
"The Ride of the Valkyries"	Wagner
"Voice of Spring," Waltzes	Strauss
The Toy Trumpet	Scott
First Hungarian Dance	Brahms

Tuesday, May 9

Marche Militaire	Schubert
Overture to "Mignon"	Thomas
Entrance of the Little Fauns	Pierné
Ballet Music, "Faust"	Gounod
Dances of Galanta	Kodaly
Meditation from "Thaïs"	Massenet
"Finlandia,"	Sibelius
"Estudiantina," Waltzes	Waldteufel
Turkey in the Straw	Guion
Torch Dance from "Henry VIII"	German

Wednesday, May 10

Prelude to "Carmen"	Bizet
Overture to "Der Freischütz"	Weber
Air for Strings	Bach
Fantasia, "Aïda"	Verdi
"The Prince and the Princess," from "Schéhérazade"	Rimsky-Korsakov
Ave Maria	Schubert-Wilhelmj
"Bolero"	Ravel
"The Fortune Teller," Selection	Herbert
"Jealousy," Gypsy Tango	Gade
"Thunder and Lightning," Polka	Strauss

Outdoor Films Planned For Arlen and Devine

Among Universal's feature films for the new season will be a series of seven outdoor action pictures co-starring Richard Arlen and Andy Devine. "In Old California" will be the first of the group.

The series also includes "Raging Rivers," "Way of the West," "Man From Montreal," "Steel," and "Sea Patrol."

INDIANAPOLS, IND.
STAR

MAY 7 - 1939

Victor Herbert Melodies Presented on New Discs

By CORBIN PATRICK.

"Bolero" Recorded.

Another great favorite offered by Victor this month is the recording of Ravel's "Bolero" by the Boston "Pops" orchestra under Arthur Fiedler. The "Bolero," with its insistent rhythmic appeal, is possibly the most popular of all orchestral works currently played in the concert halls. That, at least, would be the impression taken from the reaction of the audience at the last "pop" concert of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, which called for the "Bolero" from all parts of the house when Mr. Sevitzky asked what it would have for an encore. The "Bolero," of course, is more than an encore piece. The finest precision and balance of instruments is required to present it with full, fascinating effect. The Boston "Pops" orchestra gives it all of that in a performance of vivid power. It comes on three sides, with Halversen's colorful "March of the Boyards" on the fourth side.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

MAY 9 - 1939

For Your Information

About Local Entertainment

By M. Oakley Christoph

More about music: Augusta Stowe, who sells discs, rates the following five as tops—"And the Angels Sing" (the Goodman not Ziggy Elman arrangement)"; "Moonlight Serenade," Glen Miller's; "Three Little Fishes" Kay Kyser's; An Album of "El Salon Mexico" played by Aaron Copeland (piano) and the Boston Symphony directed by Koussevitsky and lastly, "None but the Lonely Heart" and "Hara Staccato" by Boston "Pops" Orchestra.

MUSIC

Concertos They Come Doubly To Pops Concert

B. Trans. May 8/39

The program provided by Arthur Fiedler and the Pops Orchestra to the Sunday evening audience at Symphony Hall was for the most part constructed along symphonic lines. It was, of course, longer than mid-season symphony programs, because Pop-concert-goers seem to have a greater appetite for music. The lightest part of it was at the end, which included "Finlandia," "Valse triste" and the March from the "Karelia" Suite by Sibelius. At the beginning came Beethoven's Overture, "The Dedication of the House," which has in the past done for the Boston Symphony Orchestra the occasional service implied in the title. For the rest, the program contained "The Ride of the Valkyries" and two concertos—Bach's "Brandenburg" in F major (No. 2) and the Paderewski A minor for piano and orchestra.

The finest music of the evening, of course, was in the "Brandenburg" Concerto, the performance of which went well enough except that the high trumpet part gave Roger Voisin rather more than he (or perhaps any trumpeter extant) could negotiate smoothly. But the main interest was naturally in the Paderewski Concerto, because its news week, not ause able e-ad-
not pas-
y fa-
more than his usual share of virtuoso bravura and sentiment. The performance in general seemed to be as good on the part of both soloist and conductor as Paderewski had indicated the other day after a rehearsal—and he ought to know. The composition is a curious affair, which says almost nothing in a manner that vacillates between German Romanticism of the late-nineteenth-century and the brooding Slavicism of a Rachmaninov. The last movement is presumably more Polish. But even here the principal thematic material is undistinguished. Yet somehow the Concerto has an original face of its own, perhaps because the subsidiary themes and "bridge" material usually have their own flavor. M. S.

At Pops Tonight

The annual "Harvard Night" will take place in Symphony Hall this evening, when there will be three guest conductors of the Pops Orchestra. The Harvard Glee Club will assist in the presentation of the following program:

Monday Evening
HARVARD NIGHT

Malcolm Holmes, '28, guest conductor

.Elgar
gor'' Borodin
d. '22
Brahms

onio harosa

demith

Choruses from "The Birds" of Aristophanes	John Knowles Paine
Finale from Suite for Orchestra	Piston
Choruses from "Iolanthe"	Sullivan

The Harvard Glee Club

Leroy Anderson, '29, guest conductor

Overture to "Die Fledermaus"	Strauss
Harvard Sketches	Leroy Anderson
"Up the Street" March	Morse, '96
Fair Harvard

Boston Symphony Not to Play at Fair

From a source which, as the saying goes, is unimpeachable, this department learns that the negotiations tending to lead to appearances by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky at the World's Fair have collapsed. It is unlikely that they will be resumed.

B. Trans. May 6/39

POP-FARE

Next Week's Menu At Symphony Hall

Several distinguished soloists will adorn the Pops concerts in the second week of the current season in Symphony Hall under the direction of Arthur Fiedler. Alfredo de San Malo will play the solo violin part of Lalo's "Spanish" Symphony tomorrow evening. Heinrich Gebhard and Paul Bregor will play the Bach Concerto in C major for two pianos on Thursday evening. And Jesus Maria Sanroma will make his first major appearance of the season in the Paderewski A minor Piano Concerto.

The complete programs, through Sunday evening, May 14, including that for tonight, follow:

Saturday Evening

"El Capitan," March	Sousa
Prelude to "Haensel and Gretel"	Humperdinck
Panis Angelicus	Franck
"Espana," Rhapsody	Chabrier
The Animals' Carnival	Saint-Saens
Pianos: J. M. Sanroma—L. Litwin
Overture Solennelle, "1812"	Tchaikovsky
Victor Herbert Favorites	Arr. by Sanford
Strike Up the Band	Gershwin

Sunday Evening

Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or"	Rimsky-Korsakov
Symphony in C major	Bizet
Symphonie Espagnole	Lalo
Soloist, Alfredo de San Malo
Songs by the Wellesley College Choir
Tales from the Vienna Woods	Strauss
Pavane from Sinfonietta	Gould
Procession of the Sardar	Ippolitov-Ivanov

Monday Evening

Entrance of the Boyards	Halvorsen
Scherzo from the "New World" Symphony	Dvorak
Andante Cantabile for Strings	Tchaikovsky
Overture to "William Tell"	Rossini
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker"	Tchaikovsky
Liebestraum	Liszt-Herbert
The Ride of the Valkyries	Wagner
Voices of Spring	Strauss
The Toy Trumpet	Scott
First Hungarian Dance	Brahms

Tuesday Evening

Marche Militaire	Schubert
Overture to "Mignon"	Thomas
Entrance of the Little Fauns	Pierne
Ballet Music, "Faust"	Gounod
Dances of Galanta	Kodaly
Meditation from "Thais"	Massenet
Violin solo, J. Theodorowicz
Finlandia	Sibelius
"Estudiantina," Waltzes	Waldteufel
Turkey in the Straw	Arr. by Guion
Torch Dance from "Henry VIII"	German

Wednesday Evening

Prelude to "Carmen"	Bizet
Overture to "Der Freischuetz"	Weber
Air for Strings	Bach
Fantasia, "Aida"	Verdi
"The Prince and the Princess," from "Scheherezade"	Rimsky-Korsakov
Ave Maria	Schubert-Wilhelmj
Bolero	Ravel
"The Fortune Teller," selection	Herbert
"Jealousy," Gypsy Tango	Gade
"Thunder and Lightning," polka	Strauss

Thursday Evening

"Tannhaeuser": Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg	Wagner
Overture to "The Barber of Seville"	Rossini
Fugato on a well-known Theme	McBride
Austrian Peasant Dances	Schonherr
Concerto for Two Pianos in C Major	Bach
Soloists, Heinrich Gebhard, Paul Bregor
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"	Tchaikovsky
Selection, "Mlle. Modiste"	Herbert
Bach Goes to Town	Templeton
Tumbler's Dance from "Snow Maiden"	Rimsky-Korsakov

Friday Evening

Triumphal March from "Aida"	Verdi
Overture to "Sakuntala"	Goldmark
Scherzo from the "Eroica" Symphony	Beethoven
"Triana" from "Iberia"	Albeniz
Seventh Slavonic Dance	Dvorak
Overture to "Rienzi"	Wagner
Orphean Club of Lasell Junior College
George Sawyer Dunham, Conductor
Fantasy on Gershwin Melodies
The Flight of the Bumble Bee	Rimsky-Korsakov
Stars and Stripes Forever	Sousa

Saturday Evening

Polonaise	Chopin-Glazounov
Overture to "Poet and Peasant"	Suppe
Minuet for Strings	Bolzoni
Procession of Bacchus from "Sylvia"	Delibes
"Peer Gynt" Suite	Grieg
Largo	Handel
Third Movement from the "Pathetic" Symphony	Tchaikovsky
By the Beautiful Blue Danube	Strauss
The Music Box	Liadov
Songs of the Old Days

Sunday Evening, May 14

Overture, "The Dedication of the House"	Beethoven
Brandenburg Concerto in F major	Bach
The Ride of the Valkyries	Wagner
Pianoforte Concerto in A minor	Paderewski
Soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma
"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem	Sibelius
Valse Triste	Sibelius
Alla Marcia from "Karelia"	Sibelius

INFORMATION OBSCURED

6

Tonight at the Pops

Opening Night

Hungarian March, "Rakoczy"	Berlioz
Overture to "Oberon"	Weber
Miniature Suite	Harl McDonald
(First performance in Boston)
"By the Beautiful Blue Danube," Waltzes	Strauss
Prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg"	Wagner
"Pop Goes the Weasel"	Cailliet
Roumanian Rhapsody No. 1	Enesco
Austrian Peasant Dances (Second Series)	Schönherr
(First perfomance in Boston)
"Bach Goes to Town" (A Fugue in Swing)	Templeton
Sailors' Dance from "Red Poppy"	Glière

PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS

MAY 14 1939

* * *

Under the leadership of Arthur Fiedler the famous Boston Symphony "Pop" concerts will get under way for their 54th season on Wednesday night of this week at Symphony Hall, Boston.

Townsman
Andover, Mass.

APR 20 1939

Boston Symphony Members To Give Concert Here For Christ Church On April 28th

There is an increasing interest in the concert of lighter and popular music to be given under the auspices of Christ Church on Friday evening, April 28, at half past eight o'clock in the Andover Memorial Auditorium.

The program committee have selected a program that they feel very sure will mean an interesting and delightful evening for everyone attending the concert. Because the orchestra is composed of members of the Boston Symphony and conducted by so well-known and prominent a member of the orchestra as Arthur Fiedler, the success of the concert as to performance and fine feeling is assured.

Added to the list of patrons and patronesses are the names of Dr. and Mrs. Claude Moore Fuess, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest N. Young, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Boutwell, Mrs. Robert Maxwell, and Miss Paddock.

The committees: general chairman, Mrs. E. Dean Walen; tickets, chairmen, Mrs. Wallace E. Brimer, Mrs. Sarah Bartlett Mercer; Mrs. Harold E. Abbott, Mrs. John S. Barss, Mrs. Harry Emmons, Mrs. M. Phillips Graham, Mrs. William S. Hughes, Mrs. Benjamin Jaques, Mrs. Edwin F. Lewis, 2d, Mrs. John D. Newall, Mrs. Arthur Sweeney, Mrs. Emery E. Trott, Mrs. Lloyd J. Thayer, Mrs. Henry G. Tyer, Mrs. Charles F. Warden, Mrs. Charles P. Gabeler, Miss Ethel Hilton, Mrs. F. W. H. Stott; advertising: chairman, Mrs. Walter Howe; Mrs. George F. Sawyer, Mrs. C. Carleton Kimball, Mrs. Stafford Lindsay, Mrs. George McCollum, Miss Ruth Saunders; hospitality: Mrs. Harold E. Abbott, Mrs. J. Edson Andrews, Mrs. Arthur Sweeney; printing: Mrs. Scott Paradise; correspondence: Mrs. Ernest Young; treasurer: Mr. Charles S. Cook; cafeteria service: chairman, Mrs. Ralph T. Berry; Mrs. Lester Connor, Mrs. Howard Young, Mrs. Charles F. Warden, Ralph T. Berry, Mr. and Mrs. Homer Judge; flowers, Mrs. Roy E. Spencer; patrons and patronesses: chairman, Mrs. Julius Rockwell; Miss Ethel Brown, Mrs. Harold A. Rutter, Mrs. E. F. Leland, Jr.; publicity: Mrs. John Stewart, Mrs. Charles Gabeler, Mrs. Nathaniel E. Bartlett; ushers and vendors: chairman, Mrs. George H. Musk; Mrs. William S. Hughes, Mrs. John Newall, Mrs. Benjamin Jaques; ushers: Mrs. Roger Lewis, Mrs. Wilfred H. Holt, Mrs. William Nicoll, Mrs. Alex Ritchie, Jr., Mrs. J. D. Newall, Mrs. Peter Dantos, Mrs. Leo Shiebler, Mrs. Paul L'Antigua, Elizabeth Hilton, Bertha Hilton, Thelma Beck, Minnie Valentine, Gertrude Taylor, Betty Deyermond, Anne Jamieson, Barbara Bruorton, Arlene Kelley, Frieda Peterson, Annetta Anderson, Helen Smith, Marjorie White; vendors: Evelyn Porter, Dorothy Davis, Eleanor Dwyer, Doris Gillespie, Gladys Martenson, Gladys Monroe, Nancy Rice, Constance Swenson, Kathleen Valentine; table arrangement: Mrs. W. Rodney Hill; aides: John Collins, Jock Reading, Edward Valentine, John McGrath, Hugh MacNeil; piano: Mrs. Frederick Smith.

Andover has been most fortunate in having, through Phillips and Abbot Academies, the privilege of hearing, through the winter, some of the finest music performed by world famous artists. In giving the concert the committee wished it to be a pleasure, not a duty, and although more "popular" in its program, the selections will be played as only so fine an orchestra as this one can play them.

Tickets are on sale at Lowe's Drug Store daily, from ten until twelve and from three until five o'clock.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

MAY 4 - 1939

Festival Gets Publicity in Magazines

An article "Boston Symphony in the Hills" appears in more than 30 current magazines of Chamber of Commerce in larger cities of the country, as the result of collaborative efforts by George W. Edman, Berkshire Symphonic Festival publicity director and Russell W. Frey, Pittsfield Chamber executive. The article is part of the material furnished for these magazines by the Community Service Corporation, as general articles to supplement local ones prepared at the various points of publication. It includes two large photographs showing portions of the huge crowd attending a Festival concert.

The Chamber also has applied four Pittsfield photos from its booklet, submitted by members of the Berkshire Museum Camera Club, for post cards soon to make their appearance on local news stands.

The First Week of the Pops

C. S. Monitor — May 3/39

Following are the programs for the first week of the fifty-fourth season of Symphony Hall Pop Concerts, Arthur Fiedler, conductor:

Thursday, May 4

"Pomp and Circumstance," March	Elgar
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor"	Nicolai
Minuet for Strings	Bolzoni
"Madam Butterfly," Fantasia	Puccini
Prelude to "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Hora Staccato (Rumanian)	Dinicu-Heifetz
Second Hungarian Rhapsody	Liszt
Gershwin melodies
Virginia Reel	Coffey
"Knightsbridge" (March) from London Suite	Eric Coates

Friday, May 5

Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Overture, "The Roman Carnival"	Berlioz
Fugue à la Gigue	Bach-Holst
Fantasia, "Carmen"	Bizet
Bacchanale, "Samson and Delilah"	Saint-Saëns
Prayer of Thanksgiving, Old Dutch Hymn	Valerius
Finale, Fourth Symphony	Tchaikovsky
Selection, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs"	Churchill
Malagueña	Lecuona
"Semper Fidelis," March	Sousa

Saturday, May 6

"El Capitan," March	Sousa
Prelude to "Hänsel and Gretel"	Humperdinck
"Panis Angelicus"	Franck
"España," Rhapsody	Chabrier
"The Animals' Carnival," Grand Zoölogical Fantasia	Saint-Saëns
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"	Tchaikovsky
Victor Herbert Favorites	Arranged by Sanford
"Strike Up the Band"	Gershwin

Sunday, May 7

Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or"	Rimsky-Korsakov
Symphony in C major, No. 1	Bizet
Overture to Goethe's "Egmont," Op. 84	Beethoven
Concerto for Violin and Orchestra	Paganini
Soloist: Alfredo de San Malo
Tales from the Vienna Woods, Waltzes	Strauss
"Pavane" from "Sinfonietta"	Gould
Procession of the Sardar, from the Caucasian Sketches	Ippolitov-Ivanov

Monday, May 8

Entrance of the Boyards	Halvorsen
Scherzo from the "New World" Symphony	Dvořák
Andante Cantabile for Strings	Tchaikovsky
Overture to "William Tell"	Rossini
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker"	Tchaikovsky
"Liebestraum"	Liszt-Herbert
"The Ride of the Valkyries"	Wagner
"Voice of Spring," Waltzes	Strauss
The Toy Trumpet	Scott
First Hungarian Dance	Brahms

Tuesday, May 9

Marche Militaire	Schubert
Overture to "Mignon"	Thomas
Entrance of the Little Fauns	Pierné
Ballet Music, "Faust"	Gounod
Dances of Galanta	Kodaly
Meditation from "Thais"	Massenet
"Finlandia,"	Sibelius
"Estudiantina," Waltzes	Waldteufel
Turkey in the Straw	Guion
Torch Dance from "Henry VIII"	German

Wednesday, May 10

Prelude to "Carmen"	Bizet
Overture to "Der Freischütz"	Weber
Air for Strings	Bach
Fantasia, "Aida"	Verdi
"The Prince and the Princess," from "Schéhérazade"	Rimsky-Korsakov
Ave Maria	Schubert-Wilhelmj
"Bolero"	Ravel
"The Fortune Teller," Selection	Herbert
"Jealousy," Gypsy Tango	Gade
"Thunder and Lightning," Polka	Strauss

Outdoor Films Planned For Arlen and Devine

Among Universal's feature films for the new season will be a series of seven outdoor action pictures co-starring Richard Arlen and Andy Devine. "In Old California" will be the first of the group.

The series also includes "Raging Rivers," "Way of the West," "Man From Montreal," "Steel," and "Sea Patrol."

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

MAY 7 - 1939

Des Moines.

Vic
P
A R

"Bolero" Recorded.

Another great favorite offered by Victor this month is the recording of Ravel's "Bolero" by the Boston "Pops" orchestra under Arthur Fiedler. The "Bolero," with its insistent rhythmic appeal, is possibly the most popular of all orchestral works currently played in the concert halls. That, at least, would be the impression taken from the reaction of the audience at the last "pop" concert of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, which called for the "Bolero" from all parts of the house when Mr. Sevitzky asked what it would have for an encore. The "Bolero," of course, is more than an encore piece. The finest precision and balance of instruments is required to present it with full, fascinating effect. The Boston "Pops" orchestra gives it all of that in a performance of vivid power. It comes on three sides, with Halversen's colorful "March of the Boyards" on the fourth side.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

MAY 9 - 1939

For Y

Personal

More about musi who sells discs, ra five as tops—"And ngels Sing" (the Goodman not Ziggy Elman arrangement)"; "Moonlight Serenade," Glen Miller's; "Three Little Fishes" Kay Kyser's; An Album of "El Salon Mexico" played by Aaron Copeland (piano) and the Boston Symphony directed by Koussevitsky and lastly, "None but the Lonely Heart" and "Hara Staccato" by Boston "Pops" Orchestra.

MUSIC

Concertos

B. Trans — May 8/39

They Come Doubly To Pops Concert

The program provided by Arthur Fiedler and the Pops Orchestra to the Sunday evening audience at Symphony Hall was for the most part constructed along symphonic lines. It was, of course, longer than mid-season symphony programs, because Pop-concert-goers seem to have a greater appetite for music. The lightest part of it was at the end, which included "Finlandia," "Valse triste" and the March from the "Karelia" Suite by Sibelius. At the beginning came Beethoven's Overture, "The Dedication of the House," which has in the past done for the Boston Symphony Orchestra the occasional service implied in the title. For the rest, the program contained "The Ride of the Valkyries" and two concertos—Bach's "Brandenburg" in F major (No. 2) and the Paderewski A minor for piano and orchestra.

The finest music of the evening, of course, was in the "Brandenburg" Concerto, the performance of which went well enough except that the high trumpet part gave Roger Voisin rather more than he (or perhaps any trumpeter extant) could negotiate smoothly. But the main interest was naturally in the Paderewski Concerto, because its composer has been in the news hereabouts within the past week, because the piece itself is not frequently played and because the soloist was the admirable Jesus Maria Sanroma.

Mr. Sanroma was thrice-admirable last night, when he not only disposed of the difficult passage-work with his customary facility but also contributed more than his usual share of virtuoso bravura and sentiment. The performance in general seemed to be as good on the part of both soloist and conductor as Paderewski had indicated the other day after a rehearsal—and he ought to know. The composition is a curious affair, which says almost nothing in a manner that vacillates between German Romanticism of the late-nineteenth-century and the brooding Slavicism of a Rachmaninov. The last movement is presumably more Polish. But even here the principal thematic material is undistinguished. Yet somehow the Concerto has an original face of its own, perhaps because the subsidiary themes and "bridge" material usually have their own flavor. M. S.

At Pops Tonight

The annual "Harvard Night" will take place in Symphony Hall this evening, when there will be three guest conductors of the Pops Orchestra. The Harvard Glee Club will assist in the presentation of the following program:

Monday Evening
HARVARD NIGHT

alcolm Holmes, '26, guest conductor

p and Circumstance	Elgar
vetzkian Dances from "Prince Igor"	Borodin
a	Clair Leonard, '22
emic Festival Overture	Brahms

Wallace Woodworth, '24, guest conductor

ir Choruses from "Il Matrimonio greto"	Cimarosa
Oh che gioja, che piacere
Per imbrogliar la testa
nsolied	Hindemith
Choruses from "The Birds" of Aristophanes	John Knowles Paine
Finale from Suite for Orchestra	Piston
Choruses from "Iolanthe"	Sullivan

The Harvard Glee Club

Leroy Anderson, '29, guest conductor

Overture to "Die Fledermaus"	Strauss
Harvard Sketches	Leroy Anderson
"Up the Street" March	Morse, '96
Fair Harvard

Boston Symphony Not to Play at Fair

From a source which, as the saying goes, is unimpeachable, this department learns that the negotiations tending to lead to appearances by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky at the World's Fair have collapsed. It is unlikely that they will be resumed.

B. Trans. May 6/39

POP-FARE

Next Week's Menu At Symphony Hall

Several distinguished soloists will adorn the Pops concerts in the second week of the current season in Symphony Hall under the direction of Arthur Fiedler. Alfredo de San Malo will play the solo violin part of Lalo's "Spanish" Symphony tomorrow evening. Heinrich Gebhard and Paul Bregor will play the Bach Concerto in C major for two pianos on Thursday evening. And Jesus Maria Sanroma will make his first major appearance of the season in the Paderewski A minor Piano Concerto.

The complete programs, through Sunday evening, May 14, including that for tonight, follow:

Saturday Evening

"El Capitan," March	Sousa
Prelude to "Haensel and Gretel"	Humperdinck
Panis Angelicus	Franck
"Espana," Rhapsody	Chabrier
The Animals' Carnival	Saint-Saens
Pianos: J. M. Sanroma—L. Litwin
Overture Solennelle, "1812"	Tchaikovsky
Victor Herbert Favorites	Arr. by Sanford
Strike Up the Band	Gershwin

Sunday Evening

Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or"	Rimsky-Korsakov
Symphony in C major	Bizet
Symphonie Espagnole	Lalo
Soloist, Alfredo de San Malo
Songs by the Wellesley College Choir
Tales from the Vienna Woods	Strauss
Pavane from Sinfonietta	Gould
Procession of the Sardar	Ippolitov-Ivanov

Monday Evening

Entrance of the Boyards	Halvorsen
Scherzo from the "New World" Symphony	Dvorak
Andante Cantabile for Strings	Tchaikovsky
Overture to "William Tell"	Rossini
Ballet Suite, "Nutcracker"	Tchaikovsky
Liebestraum	Liszt-Herbert
The Ride of the Valkyries	Wagner
Voices of Spring	Strauss
The Toy Trumpet	Scott
First Hungarian Dance	Brahms

Tuesday Evening

Marche Militaire	Schubert
Overture to "Mignon"	Thomas
Entrance of the Little Fauns	Pierne
Ballet Music, "Faust"	Gounod
Dances of Galanta	Kodaly
Meditation from "Thais"	Massenet
Violin solo, J. Theodorowicz
Finlandia	Sibelius
"Estudiantina," Waltzes	Waldteufel
Turkey in the Straw	Arr. by Guion
Torch Dance from "Henry VIII"	German

Wednesday Evening

Prelude to "Carmen"	Bizet
Overture to "Der Freischuetz"	Weber
Air for Strings	Bach
Fantasia, "Aida"	Verdi
"The Prince and the Princess," from "Scheherezade"	Rimsky-Korsakov
Ave Maria	Schubert-Wilhelmj
Bolero	Ravel
"The Fortune Teller," selection	Herbert
"Jealousy," Gypsy Tango	Gade
"Thunder and Lightning," polka	Strauss

Thursday Evening

"Tannhaeuser": Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg	Wagner
Overture to "The Barber of Seville"	Rossini
Fugato on a well-known Theme	McBride
Austrian Peasant Dances	Schonherr
Concerto for Two Pianos in C Major	Bach
Soloists, Heinrich Gebhard, Paul Bregor
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"	Tchaikovsky
Selection, "Mlle. Modiste"	Herbert
Bach Goes to Town	Templeton
Tumbler's Dance from "Snow Maiden"	Rimsky-Korsakov

Friday Evening

Triumphal March from "Aida"	Verdi
Overture to "Sakuntala"	Goldmark
Scherzo from the "Eroica" Symphony	Beethoven
"Triana" from "Iberia"	Albeniz
Seventh Slavonic Dance	Dvorak
Overture to "Rienzi"	Wagner
Orphean Club of Lasell Junior College
George Sawyer Dunham, Conductor
Fantasy on Gershwin Melodies
The Flight of the Bumble Bee	Rimsky-Korsakov
Stars and Stripes Forever	Sousa

Saturday Evening

Polonaise	Chopin-Glazounov
Overture to "Poet and Peasant"	Suppe
Minuet for Strings	Bolzoni
Procession of Bacchus from "Sylvia"	Delibes
"Peer Gynt" Suite	Grieg
Largo	Handel
Third Movement from the "Pathetic" Symphony	Tchaikovsky
By the Beautiful Blue Danube	Strauss
The Music Box	Liadov
Songs of the Old Days

Sunday Evening, May 14

Overture, "The Dedication of the House"	Beethoven
Brandenburg Concerto in F major	Bach
The Ride of the Valkyries	Wagner
Pianoforte Concerto in A minor	Paderewski
Soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma
"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem	Sibelius
Valse Triste	Sibelius
Alla Marcia from "Karelia"	Sibelius

6

2d Week of Pop Concerts; Violin Soloist Today

B. Post – May 6/39

Alfredo de Saint-Malo, the violinist, will be the soloist at the first Sunday Pop Concert of the season in Symphony hall tonight. A native of the Republic of Panama, De Saint-Malo is a first prize graduate of the Paris conservatory. He has toured South America several times, and has given recitals in New York, Boston and other cities of this continent.

Arthur Fiedler announces the following programs to be presented by the Pops orchestra through the coming week:

Sunday Evening, May 7

Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or".. Rimsky-Korsakov
Symphony in C major, No. 1........Bizet
Symphonie Espagnole, for violin and orchestra, Op. 21................Lalo
Soloist, Alfredo de Saint-Malo.
Songs by the Wellesley College choir.
Tales from the Vienna Woods, waltzes Strauss
Pavane from "Sinfonietta"........Gould
Procession of the Sardar from the Caucasian Sketches.....Ippolitov-Ivanov

Monday Evening, May 8

Entrance of the Boyards........Halvorsen
Scherzo from the "New World" Symphony ....Dvorak
Andante Cantabile, for strings.Tchaikovsky
Overture to "William Tell"........Rossini
Ballet suite, "Nutcracker"....Tchaikovsky
Liebestraum ....Liszt-Herbert
The Ride of the Valkyries.........Wagner
Voices of Spring, waltzes..........Strauss
The Toy Trumpet.....................Scott
First Hungarian Dance............Brahms

Tuesday Evening, May 9

Marche Militaire..................Schubert
Overture to "Mignon"............Thomas
Entrance of the Little Fauns........Pierne
Ballet music, "Faust"..............Gounod
Dances of Galanta..................Kodaly
Meditation from "Thais"........Massenet
Violin solo, J. Theodorowicz.
"Finlandia," symphonic poem......Sibelius
"Estudiantina," waltzs.........Waldteufel
Turkey in the Straw........Arr. by Guion
Torch dance from "Henry VIII"...German

Wednesday Evening, May 10

Prelude to "Carmen"................Bizet
Overture to "Der Freischutz".......Weber
Air for Strings.....................Bacn
Fantasia, "Aida"....................Verdi
"The Prince and the Princess," from "Scheherezade" ....Rimsky-Korsakov
Ave Maria.............Schubert-Wilhelmj
Bolero ....Ravel
"The Fortune Teller," selection....Herbert
"Jealousy," Gypsy tango............Gade
"Thunder and Lightning," polka. Strauss

Thursday Evening, May 11

"Tannhauser": Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg.............Wagner
Overture to "The Barber of Seville," Rossini
Fugato on a Well-known Theme...McBride
Austrian Peasant Dances........Schonherr
Concerto for Two Pianos in C major...Bach
Soloists: Heinrich Gebhard-Paul Bregor
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"..Tchaikovsky
Selection "Mlle. Modiste"..........Herbert
"Bach Goes to Town," a fugue in swing, Templeton
Orchestration by Henry Brant
Tumbler's Dance from "Snow Maiden," Rimsky-Korsakov

Friday Evening, May 12

Triumphal March from "Aida"......Verdi
Overture to "Sakuutala".......Goldmark
Scherzo from the "Eroica" Symphony, No. 3......................Beethoven
"Triana," from "Iberia"..........Albeniz
Seventh Slavonic Dance............Dvorak
Overture to "Rienzi"..............Wagner
Orphean Club of Lasell Junior College
George Sawyer Dunham, Conductor
Harold Schwab, Accompanist
Fantasy on Gershwin Melodies.
"The Flight of the Bumble Bee," Rimsky-Korsakov
"Stars and Stripes Forever," march..Sousa

Saturday Evening, May 13

Polonaise ....Chopin-Glazounov
Overture to "Poet and Peasant".....Suppe
Minuet for Strings.................Bolzoni
Procession of Bacchus from "Sylvia." Delibes
"Peer Gynt" Suite...................Grieg
Largo ....Handel
Third Movement from the "Pathetic" Symphony ....Tchaikovsky
"By the Beautiful Blue Danube," waltzes ....Strauss
"The Music Box"...................Liadov
Songs of the Old Days.

Sunday Evening, May 14

Overture, "The Dedication of the House," Beethoven
Brandenburg Concerto No. 2, in F major, Bach
(Solo violin, Julius Theodorowicz; flute, James Pappoutsakis; oboe, Louis Speyer; trumpet, Roger Voisin.)
The Ride of the Valkyries........Wagner
Pianoforte Concerto in A minor, op. 17, Paderewski
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
"Finlandia," symphonic poem; "Valse Triste," "Alla Marcia" from "Karelia" ....Sibelius

SYMPHONY HALL
TONIGHT 8:30
1st SUNDAY POPS
Alfredo de Saint-Malo, Violin
POPS
ARTHUR FIEDLER
Conductor
THURS., MAY 11, at 8:30
Bach—Concerto for 2 Pianos
Soloists—H. GEBHARD—P. BREGOR
Tickets 25c, 50c, 75c, $1. No Tax
On Sale 3 Weeks in Advance

PLAINSFIELD, N. J.
COURIER-NEWS ✓

MAY 3 - 1939

Critics Praise Work of Plainfield Artist on Exhibit in Boston

Critic acclaim and liberal accolades of praise are being showered on Donald Carlisle Greason, son of Mr. and Mrs. John R. Greason, 940 Central Ave., who recently has been exhibiting a new line of wash and pen drawings and of oil paintings centering about the Boston Symphony Orchestra, showing musision's moods during the concert presentations.

Though Mr. Greason's work cannot be compared to any one trend in painting today, as art enthusiasts state, they almost all agree he attempts to bring together on canvass the feeling and expression of two arts, painting and music.

Paints Impressions

He attempts to present with the painter's media his impression of the orchestra's offering of its musical impression of the works of great composers.

In Boston, where Artist Greason is exhibiting his unique orchestral paintings in Symphony Hall, critics are hailing the work as indicative of "peculiar sensitiveness," holding that the artist has "come into full stride." He is described in the Christian Science Monitor as "one of the most distinguished artists in New England."

The paintings show the moods of the symphony conductor and his men as accentuated by their postures and the pecular angle of their heads.

He has embodied in his portrait paintings and drawings, critics say, moods characteristic of his portrait subjects including Dr. Koussevitsky, orchestra conductor, Georges Enesco, Block and Goossens.

Mr. Greason, who has been living in Plainfield on and off since he was 10 years old, was a student in the old Leal School, forerunner of the Wardlaw School, and during the World War, he served with the Essex Troop. From 1920 through 1923 and from 1925 through 1932, the artist painted abroad. During the three-year interlude between his trips to Europe for painting there, he was director of an art gallery in New York City.

He was an instructor in 1933 in the Addison Gallery of American Art, Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass. He is residing at present in Rockport on Cape Ann, Mass. Many of his paintings use scenes about Rockport as their theme.

Exhibition Sold Out

Mr. Greason's current exhibition in Symphony Hall was sold out on the opening day, it is said, and scores of art-lovers since have been scrutinizing the work during its stay in the Boston symphony orchestral headquarters, the place in which most of them have been developed.

When he terminates his display there, it is believed it will be taken on a tour of the art and music centers of the country. His exhibition has resulted in a number of requests to depict similarly the moods of other more prominent orchestras of the country, it is understood.

CONCORD, N. H.
Monitor & N. H. Patriot

MAY 10 1939

Granite Chips

H. C. P.

A list of what the Boston papers call "distinguished sponsors" for the MacDowell Colony benefit pop concert in Symphony hall at the Hub on the evening of May 31 includes the names of Governor and Mrs. Francis P. Murphy, Governor and Mrs. Saltonstall, Dr. and Mrs. Serge Koussevitsky, Robert Frost, Mrs. William H. Schofield, Miss Fanny P. Mason, Mr. and Mrs. Gluyas Williams and Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hillyer.

Pops Concerts B

C. S. Monitor – May 4/39

Fiedler Takes Up Baton For His Tenth Season

Tonight at the Pops

"Pomp and Circumstance," March Elgar
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor" .... Nicolai
Minuet for Strings"..............Bolzoni
"Madam Butterfly," Fantasia......Puccini
Prelude to "Lohengrin"...........Wagner
Hora Staccato (Rumanian) Dinicu-Heifetz
Second Hungarian Rhapsody ....Liszt
Gershwin melodies
Virginia Reel ....Coffey
"Knightsbridge" (March) from London Suite .... Eric Coates

The annual spring metamorphosis has taken place at Symphony Hall. The formal, somewhat austere auditorium has burst its winter chrysalis and now emerges as fresh and green as the newest bud on an apple tree . . . all of which connotes that the fifty-fourth season of the Pops has opened. Beginning with the program last night, the hall for the next two months will be given over to music calculated to catch the popular fancy. Not that Conductor Arthur Fiedler intends to diminish the standard which for a decade he has stoutly maintained. The announced programs for the coming week attest to that. Yet a judicious mixture of Gershwin, Richard Wagner, Enesco, and Berlioz makes a musical melange in keeping with the season.

The program in detail last night ran from lively syncopation to waltzes, a spirited performance of the "Rakoczy" March by Berlioz, followed by Weber's Overture to "Oberon" and thence to a Miniature Suite in a free transcription of Three Harpsichord Pieces by John Christopher Smith (1770) made by Harl McDonald. The suite comprises a Prelude, Air and Allemande and was given its first performance in Boston last night. The orchestration is not too radical to obscure entirely the period flavor of the originals and the fact that Mr. Fiedler sees fit to offer this type of music at a Pops concert is a fair indication of his own catholicity of taste as well as an invitation to savor these musical trifles.

Further items of interest on the program included the "Blue Danube" by Strauss, a well co-ordinated performance of the Prelude to "The Meistersingers" by Wagner, Cailliet's amusing "Pop Goes the Weasel" with a few variations in performance which we do not recall having heard before, the Enesco Rumanian Rhapsody No. 1, and the Gliere "Sailor's Dance" from "The Red Poppy." A place upon the program was likewise found for Templeton's "Bach Goes to Town" in an orchestration by Henry Brant. With all respect to Mr. Brant's efforts, the piece seemed another bit of syncopated rhythm, and a disappointment. The pianoforte version, as Mr. Templeton originally wrote it, is more witty and to the point . . . and, with Mr. Templeton himself playing, there is an additional piquancy which no orchestra can reconstruct.

This is an anniversary year for Mr. Fiedler, who now enters his tenth season as conductor of the Pops, a term of service equaled by no previous conductor. Under his leadership these concerts have prospered. It may be confidently expected that the present season will be a success. Certainly, the sold-out house last night points in that direction.

G. M. S.

MUSIC

B. Trans. – May 8/39

San Malo Soloist At Sunday Pops

A visiting violin soloist and a performance of the recently unearthed First Symphony of Bizet enlivened the first Sunday Pops of the season in Symphony Hall. For further special interest and diversion the Wellesley College Choir, led by Edward B. Green, sang numbers, original and arranged, by Purcell, Marcelle de Manziarly, Palmgren and Robert Delaney. The rest of the orchestral program included music by Rimsky-Korsakov, Strauss, Gould and Ippolitov-Ivanov.

The violinist was Alfredo de San Malo, whom this reviewer seems to remember pleasantly from a recital in Symphony Hall perhaps 10 or 12 years ago. The impression last night, when Mr. San Malo played three movements of the Lalo "Spanish" Symphony with the orchestra, was unfortunately not so pleasant. He seemed to have a plausible notion of how the music ought to go. But last night, at least, his left-hand technic was not quite up to the music, and his curiously light, frequently almost inaudible tone, was certainly not. The charitable and probably correct explanation is to charge the inadequacies of the presentation up to nervousness. Also, perhaps, to an accompaniment that was not exactly faultless.

The large audience, in disagreement with this writer, applauded the violinist enthusiastically. By the same token the audience disagreed on the subject of the Bizet Symphony, which was so warmly applauded as almost to guarantee its frequent reappearance on future Pops programs. The Symphony had, it is true, for redeeming qualities a degree of freshness and of rhythmic spirit, particularly in the last movement. But more often the freshness was the naivette of a student, and the rhythm was a series of strongly punctuated cadences. The cadences themselves were of the most hackneyed, early-nineteenth-century variety. And the themes, when they were not trite, were without saliency or anything resembling an original turn. Only once or twice was it possible to discern in this early symphony a prevision of the composer of "Carmen" or "L'Arlesienne." The performance under Arthur Fiedler had routine competence.

M. S.

B. Post

MUSIC

May 8/39

SYMPHONY HALL

Pops Concert

This year's first Sunday Pops concert was given last night in Symphony Hall. In addition to Mr. Fiedler's usual entertaining assortment of pieces, the program brought forth Alfredo de Saint-Malo as violin soloist and the Wellesley College Choir, directed by Edward B. Green. Mary Randall, Wellesley '39, sang a leading vocal part.

Another item of interest was Bizet's First Symphony, recently heard here for the first time when Mr. Fiedler conducted the MacDowell Club Orchestra. This Symphony's vivacious and rhythmic style make it an excellent Pops number. Mr. de Saint-Malo, who is a native of Panama and a recent prize-winning graduate of the Paris Conservatory, played Lalo's "Symphonie Espagnole." He is temperamentally suited to interpret this concerto, in which he displayed a warm and expressive if at times light tone. The Wellesley Choir sang five pieces and one encore, a repetition of the last number—an arrangement of "The Arkansas Traveler."

The usual Pops atmosphere of informality prevailed amongst the capacity audience. The usual enthusiasm for Johann Strauss and the "Tales from the Vienna Woods" was evident. Hearty applause and good nature was the rule. Thus another season of Pops concerts is well on its way.

B. Herald

MUSIC

May 8/39

THE POPS

The first Sunday concert in the Pops series was given last night in Symphony Hall. Arthur Fiedler conducted, and the soloist was Alfredo de Saint-Malo, violinist. The Wellesley College choir, Edward Green, conductor, sang a group of songs during the concert. The program, apart from the choral selections, was as follows:

Rimsky-Korsakov, Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or"
Bizet..........Symphony in C major No. 1
Lalo......Symphony Espagnole Op. 21 for violin and orchestra
J. Strauss, Tales from the Vienna Woods, Waltzes
Gould ....Pavane from Sinfonietta
Ippolitov-Ivanov..Procession of the Sardar

Musically the interest in last night's concert was concerned with the Bizet Symphony and Mr. de Saint-Malo's performance of Lalo's Symphonie spagnole. The latter is a well-known and deservedly popular work, a great favorite of violinists at their recitals, but actually much more impressive as heard last night with orchestral accompaniment. Mr. de Saint-Malo gave a sensitive and expert account of this music. At first there might have been some demur as to the consistent delicacy of his tone, but the Pops orchestra must often cast subtlety to the winds in the interest of fixing the attention of the audience, and that upsets the balance of listening. As a matter of fact, once under way, Mr. Fiedler's and the orchestra's interpretation was sympathetic to the soloist. The performance for its artistry and its clarity was greatly to Mr. de Saint-Malo's credit. There was cordial applause.

Bizet's Symphony was written, apparently, when he was 17 years old. It has the gaiety and tunefulness of youth, rather than the darker romantic side. Contemporaneously it is difficult to guess what even the shrewdest observer would have made of it as to the composer's talent and his future. The composer of "Carmen" is not clearly mirrored in this early work. It lacks, pretty obviously, intellectual interest, for good symphonies consist not in the repetition of a number of agreeable melodies, but in the development of themes. At the same time there is something of the charm of Schubert in this music, and one is glad of the opportunity to hear it. The adagio, in particular, has a distinct quality of its own.

A. W. W.

At the Pops Tonight

C. S. Monitor – May 11/39

(Top) Heinrich Gebhard
(Below) Paul Bregor

To be heard in Bach Two-Piano Concerto at Symphony Hall this evening.

B. A.

Complete Pops Programs for the Week

THE Pops in Symphony Hall, under the leadership of their popular conductor, Arthur Fiedler, will be heard in nightly concerts through the ensuing week.

The programs for the week:

TONIGHT

Overture, "The Dedication of the House" Beethoven
Brandenburg Concerto No. 2, in F major Bach
(Solo violin, Julius Theodorowicz; flute, James Pappoutsakis; oboe, Louis Speyer; trumpet, Roger Voisin)
The Ride of the Valkyries Wagner
Pianoforte Concerto in A minor, Op. 17 Paderewski
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem; "Valse Triste;" "Alla Marcia," from "Karelia" Sibelius

HARVARD NIGHT, MONDAY

Malcolm Holmes, '28, Guest Conductor
"Pomp and Circumstance," March Elgar
Polovetzkian Dances from "Prince Igor" Borodin
Rumba Clair Leonard, '22
Academic Festival Overture Brahms
G. Wallace Woodworth, '24, Guest Conductor
Two Choruses from "Il Matrimonio Segreto" Cimarosa
1—Oh che gioja, che piacere
2—Per imbrogliar la testa
Martinslied Hindemith
Choruses from "The Birds" of Aristophanes John Knowles Paine
(Written for the Harvard Classical Club, 1901) (1839-1906)
Finale from Suite for Orchestra Sullivan
Choruses from "Iolanthe" Sullivan
The Harvard Glee Club
Leroy Anderson, '29, Guest Conductor
Overture to "Die Fledermaus" Strauss
Harvard Sketches Leroy Anderson
Lowell House Bells—Freshman in Harvard Square—Widener Reading Room—Class Day Confetti Battle
"Up the Street," March Morse, '96
Fair Harvard

TUESDAY

March from "The Queen of Sheba" Gounod
Overture to "Egmont" Beethoven
"Bach Goes to Town," A Fugue in Swing Templeton
Orchestration by Henry Brant
"Tales from the Vienna Woods," Waltzes Strauss
Concerto for Pianoforte No. 4 in D minor, Op. 70 Rubinstein
Soloist: Selma Pelonsky
Songs by "Smiff en Poofs"
Mine
Spring is Here
Lindy Lou
Summertime
Oh Miss Hannah
Fantasy on Gershwin Melodies
Prayer of Thanksgiving, Old Dutch Hymn Valerius-Kremser

WEDNESDAY

March, "Lorraine" Ganne
Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" Mozart
Tijuca, Brazilian Dance Milhaud
"Les Preludes," Symphonic Poem Liszt
Ballet Suite from "Aida" Verdi
"Pop Goes the Weasel" Cailliet
"Rhapsody in Blue" Gershwin
Soloist: Leo Litwin
"Lagunen," Waltzes Strauss
Pavane Gould
Aragonaise from "The Cid" Massenet

THURSDAY

Entrance of the Gladiators Fucik
Overture, "Fingal's Cave" ("The Hebrides") Mendelssohn
"Spring," for String Orchestra Grieg
Soviet Iron Foundry Mossolov
Prelude to "Hansel and Gretel" Humperdinck
Capriccio Espagnol Rimsky-Korsakov
Songs by the Framingham State Teachers College Glee Club, Edward F. Gilday, Jr., director
Fantasy, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" Churchill-Bodge
The Harmonica Player Guion
Sixth Hungarian Dance Brahms

FRIDAY

March, "Washington Post" Sousa
Overture to "Orpheus in Hades" Offenbach
Hora Staccato Dinicu-Heiftez
Selection, "The Mikado" Sullivan
"Danse Macabre," Symphonic Poem Saint-Saens
Kammenoi Ostrov ("Reve Angelique") Rubinstein
Second Hungarian Rhapsody Liszt
"Wine, Woman, and Song" Waltzes Strauss
"Begin and Beguine" Porter
American Patrol Meacham

SATURDAY

March, "Second Connecticut" Reeves
Overture to "Raymond" Thomas
Song of India Rimsky-Korsakov
Ballet of the Hours from "La Gioconda" Ponchielli
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah" Saint-Saens
Largo Handel
Overture Solennelle, "1812" Tchaikovsky
"Estudiantina," Waltzes Waldteufel
"On the Trail" from the "Grand Canyon" Suite Grofe
"Wintergreen for President," from "Of Thee I Sing" Gershwin

SUNDAY

Overture to "L'Italiana in Algeri" Rossini
Symphony No. 8 in F major, Op. 93 Beethoven
Concerto for Pianoforte No. 2 in C minor, Op. 18 Rachmaninoff
Soloist: Selma Kramer
Gypsy Dance from "Carmen" Bizet
Song of the Volga Bargemen Arranged by Glazounov
Knightsbridge (March), from London Suite Eric Coates

SYMPHONY HALL—COM. 1492

TONIGHT 8:30
Paderewski—Piano Concerto
Soloist
SANROMA

POPS

ARTHUR FIEDLER, Conductor

TOMORROW 8:30
HARVARD NIGHT

WEDNESDAY 8:30
RHAPSODY IN BLUE
Soloist—LEO LITWIN

Tickets at all prices 2 Weeks in Advance 25c, 50c, 75c, $1

LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER - CITIZEN

MAY 12 1939

Catchall

BOSTON "POPS," I see, have begun. They start soon after the last of the season's regular Symphony programs has been played and run up to, or just beyond, July 4. Then comes, as a usual thing, the brief season of open-air concerts on the Esplanade—which word, I am informed, is properly pronounced to rhyme with "lemonade," "escapade," and so forth, although comparatively few say it that way. However, I am concerned to write a word or two about the Pops. I have been a Pops fan for something over 40 years, starting back in the glorious days of the old Music Hall in Hamilton Place, when the Pops were new and when high Boston society used to occupy a goodly part of the auditorium nightly. I suppose Symphony hall is a lot better, as a concert hall; but I sigh inwardly for the ancient glories, which included a great and rather hideous organ at the back end of the hall. The organ, I believe, is now in Methuen where occasional concerts are played on it.

***

"Pops" is an abbreviation for "Popular" and is not inspired by the popping of corks, as some suppose. The liquid refreshment associated with these concerts is a very minor part of their allurement. One found that out during the arid era of prohibition. People then came just as of yore, even if they couldn't get their beer and light wines, and the concerts got better and better. They are still devoted to the lighter brands of music, the supposedly more popular kinds; but to my thinking the level has been raised a good deal in recent years above what it was when I first knew the Pops. In those days we were less formal, more free and easy. Groups of us would get together at a table and chant aloud our desire for some special encore. That isn't done now—at least it never has been done when I have been there. I can't imagine a group of gay young sparks from Harvard singsonging, "We — want — Whistling Rufus." I doubt that Arthur Fiedler would countenance the playing of "Whistling Rufus," or anything as trivial as that.

***

It is Mr. Fiedler's 10th season as conductor of the Pops, and I read that his term has exceeded already that of any previous conductor. I have seen many of these, starting back in the days of Timothee Adamowski and coming down through a long string of names many of which I have forgotten, but certainly including Gustave Strube, Max Zach, and Agide Zacchia. Tim Adamowski, I think, is still living. He made an impressive figure on the podium and his insistence on decorum in his auditors before he would start a number was laudable. The Pops weren't taken as seriously then as they are now. There was a good deal of noise from the floor—so much that it was usual to append to specially good items on the program the admonition, "The audience is especially requested to preserve silence during the playing of this number"—or words to that effect. That is another thing you don't see now. One is expected to be reasonably attentive during all the numbers.

***

The waiting on tables now is all done by girls in attractive uniforms. In old Music Hall it was done by husky-voiced men who looked like prize-fighters. If you forgot to tip them you were usually bawled out. A favorite tipple was Scotch ale in heavy stone jugs. It was reputed to be potent. However, the Pops were never the scene of unseemly revelry. Just when old Music Hall was abandoned I don't remember, but I can recall being at many concerts there during the Spanish war. The shift must have come very soon after that.

***

Arthur Fiedler has done a lot for the musical taste of Boston, not only in devising the Pops programs, but also in creating the Esplanade season with standards at least as high and maybe even higher. I gather he is one of those versatile chaps who can play almost any instrument. He figures in the Symphony roster as manipulating the celesta; but aforetime he was in the viola section, and during the Great war invariably shifted to the organ bench and played that instrument during the rendition of the "Star Spangled Banner," which was performed as a sort of patriotic rite. Dark, romantic and debonair, he was the recipient of more mash notes than any other member of the band. As conductor of the Pops and Esplanade concerts, he came finally to his own. I can only regard Arthur Fiedler as an Institution.

***

I wonder how many thousand times in the past 45 years—or is it 47 or 48?—the Pops orchestra has played Handel's famous "Largo?" That overworked composition is on the bill many a night during the season, always has been, and probably always will be. Often as I have heard it, I haven't really got tired of it. Other prime favorites are the "1812 overture," a string of Strauss waltzes and many other waltzes by less prolific musicians — I remember how amused I was during prohibition to discover that one of these—wasn't it "Lustige Brueder?"—was by a man named Vollsted! Several times you are sure to be given a taste of "Scheherezade" where the "Ship Goes to Pieces against a Promontory Surmounted by a Bronze Warrior." Coyly but with good effect they are beginning to ring in some rather highbrow stuff—single movements from symphonies by Beethoven and Brahms, and so forth. To their amazement, people find they like them. Not all the great music is dull stuff. It's a good idea to give us something to offset the banal trash that jazz orchestras pour forth over the radio.

***

Long live the Pops! They fill a long-felt want and have done it for so many years that I think we may safely assume they have taken root and can no more be eradicated than could purslane in the garden, if anybody were so misguided as to want to do it. Here is an orchestra of something like 90 men, most of them, but I believe not all, regular members of the Boston Symphony orchestra and therefore the best there is. They play Offenbach rather than Johann Sebastian Bach — and that's all right by me. I confess I have never learned to like Bach, though apparently this is to my shame. I want to feed my restricted soul with food convenient for it—not with turgid classics, or frantic modernities, but the agreeable, the tried, the true music of great men not on self-conscious dress parade. "If it must be Richard, let it be Wagner; and if it must be Strauss, let it be Johann."

Of course it's still early and the season is late in getting settled, but I've always preferred the Pops on a good hot night, when there's an excuse for summoning the neat-handed waitress and demanding a lemonade—or something. Good music, good refreshments, a good cigar, and good company. What better entertainment is there, I ask you?

Pops Prospectus

Following are the programs for the next week at the Symphony Hall Pop concerts:

Friday, May 12

Triumphal March from "Aida" .... Verdi
Overtures to "Sakuntala" ..... Goldmark
Scherzo from "Eroica" Symphony Beethoven
"Triana" from "Ibéria" .... Albeniz
(Orchestration by E. F. Arbos)
Seventh Slavonic Dance .... Dvořák
Overture to "Rienzi" .... Wagner
Orphean Club of Lasell Junior College
George Sawyer Dunham, Conductor
Fantasy on Gershwin Melodies
"The Flight of the Bumble-Bee" Rimsky-Korsakoff
"Stars and Stripes Forever," March Sousa

⁂

Saturday May 13

Polonaise .... Chopin-Glazounoff
Overture to "Poet and Peasant" .. Suppe
Minute for Strings .... Bolzoni
Procession of Bachus from "Sylvia" Delibes
"Peer Gynt" Suite .... Grieg
Largo .... Handel
Third Movement from the "Pathetic" Symphony .... Tchaikovsky
"By the Beautiful Blue Danube," Waltzes .... Strauss
"The Music Box" .... Liadoff
Songs of the Old Days

Sunday, May 14

Overture, "The Dedication of the House" Beethoven
Brandenburg Concerto No. 2, in F major Bach
(Solo violin, J. Theodorowicz; Flute, J. Pappoutsakis; Oboe, L. Speyer; Trumpet, R. Voisin.)
The Ride of the Valkyries ...... Wagner
Pianoforte Concerto in A minor, Op. 17 Paderewski
Soloist: J. M. Sanromá
"Finlandia," Symphony Poem
"Valse Triste"
"Alla Marcia" from "Karélia" } Sibelius

⁂

Monday, May 15

Harvard Night

Malcolm Holmes '28, Guest Conductor
"Pomp and Circumstance," March .. Elgar
Polovetskian Dances from "Prince Igor Borodin
Rumba................Clair Leonard '22
"Academic Festival" Overture ...Brahms
G. Wallace Woodworth '24, Guest Conductor
Two Choruses from "Il Matrimonio Segreto" ....Cimarosa
Martinslied ....Hindemith
Choruses from "The Birds" of Aristophanes............John Knowles Paine
Finale, from Suite for Orchestra...Piston
Choruses from "Iolanthe"........Sullivan
The Harvard Glee Club
Leroy Anderson '29, Guest Conductor
Overture to "Die Fledermaus"....Strauss
Harvard Sketches ....Leroy Anderson
"Up the Street," March........Murse '96
"Fair Harvard"

Tuesday, May 16

March from "The Queen of Sheba" Gounod
Overture to "Egmont" Beethoven
"Bach Goes to Town," A Fugue in Swing Templeton
Orchestration by Henry Brant
"Tales from the Vienna Woods," Waltzes Strauss
Concerto for Pianoforte No. 4 in D Minor, Op. 70 Rubinstein
Soloist: Selma Pelonsky
Songs by "Smiff en Poofs"
Fantasy on Gershwin Melodies
Prayer of Thanksgiving, Old Dutch Hymn Valerius-Kremner

⁂

Wednesday, May 17

March, "Lorraine"..............Ganne
Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" Mozart
Tijuca, Brazihan Dance .... Milhaud
"Les Préludes," Symphonic Poem . Liszt
Ballet Suite from "Aïda"..........Verdi
"Pop Goes the Weasel"..........Cailliet
"Rhapsody in Blue"...........Gershwin
Soloist: Leo Litwin
"Lagunen," Waltzes.............Strauss
Pavane ....Gould
Aragonaise from "The Cid".....Massenet

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

MAY 13 1939

DIATONICS

To Boston.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is ever on the lookout for new compositions. On Tuesday evening he sat in rapt attention in the World's Fair Music Hall listening to Villa-Lobos' magnificent "Choros" No. 10.

TORONTO, CAN.
GLOBE & MAIL

MAY 13 1939

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Massachusetts, next summer, will include six concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky. Symphonies by Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Schumann, Brahms, Tchaikovsky, and Sibelius will be played, as well as selections by Wagner, Rimsky, Stravinsky, Debussy, Ravel, Strauss, Piston, and Prokofiev. The dates are Aug. 3-6, 10-13.

C.S. Monitor - May 12/39

Bach at the Pops

The Pops have come a long distance when audiences will sit as quietly and listen as attentively as the audience last night during the performance of a Bach double concerto for two pianos. Mr. Fiedler again showed the force of the argument that, although people go to Pops to be entertained, they are not hostile to music with considerable backbone.

The soloists last night were Heinrich Gebhard and Paul Bregor, and the performance of the familiar C major concerto found the pianists well co-ordinated. While it was not the sort of performance which might have been given under other circumstances, it was thoroughly enjoyable. The final movement especially was marked by a precision and a lively tempo which roused the greatest enthusiasm. The performers were brought back to the platform many times, and at last the persistence of the listeners was rewarded by a performance of Mr. Gebhard's "Roller Skater's Carnival."

For orchestral items, Mr. Fiedler offered a stirring performance of the music which accompanies the entrance of the guests into the Wartburg from "Tannhäuser," followed by the Overture to "The Barber of Seville" by Rossini; McBride's Fugato on a Well Known Theme, which of course everyone recognized; Schönherr's Austrian Peasant Dances, which also gave much pleasure to the listeners, the Tchaikovsky Overture Solennelle 1812, excerpts from Victor Herbert's "Mlle. Modiste," Alec Templeton's "Bach Goes to Town," and to close, the "Tumbler's Dance" from Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Snow Maiden."

Boston Symphony Orchestra men playing syncopated tunes with an informality impossible during the winter season are a considerable part of the "show." The orchestra is always meticulous in its work, and Mr. Fiedler demands the best it can give, but there are occasional tapping heels, a rhythmically moving shoulder here and there and a few grins of amusement among the players, indicating that the nightly programs are not altogether a bore. Incidently, it was once more brought to attention last night that the works of Victor Herbert are fashioned of material which will continue to make their appeal. Mr. Fiedler does well to include these melodious numbers in the Pops repertory.

G. M. S.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

MAY 15 1939

Max O. Kunze

Special to the World-Telegram.

BOSTON, May 15.—Max O. Kunze, 65, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for forty-five years and of the faculty of the New England Conservatory of Music for thirty-five years, died yesterday at his home in Jamaica Plain. Born in Germany, he studied music at the Royal Conservatory in Dresden and at Hamburg. He came to America to play at the Chicago World's Fair of 1893.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

MAY 15 1939

BOSTON MUSICIAN DEAD

BOSTON, May 15 (UP)—Max O. Kunze, 65, first double bass player of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was dead at his home today. He had been a member of the orchestra for 45 years and of the New England Conservatory of Music faculty for 35 years. He was a native of Dresden, Germany.

May 13, 1939

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIP

Symphonic Review

Backward Glance at the Repertory Of the Boston Orchestra's Season

By MOSES SMITH

The recently completed 58th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the fifteenth under direction of Serge Koussevitzky, departed in a few respects from the course outlined in the prospectus early in the fall. Beethoven, who was promised as "the predominating composer," came off technically with that title, the six works with which he was represented having surpassed by one the number representing the nearest competitor—Brahms. But half a dozen can scarcely be said to dominate 78, which was the total number of works played during the main subscription series of the orchestra.

An even lesser discrepancy appeared when Gregor Piatigorsky played the solo parts of the Saint-Saens Cello Concerto and Bloch's "Schelomo" instead of the originally announced "Don Quixote" of Strauss. But the principal disappointment was one over which the local authorities had no control. It was the failure of Igor Stravinsky to come here as guest-conductor in two weeks of concerts devoted to his works. The misadventure, however, made possible the stimulating week's visit of another eminent composer, Ernest Bloch, presenting music of his own facture.

The Repertory in Summary

The prospectus had been as reserved—one might even say reticent—a document as its predecessors from Symphony Hall. It did not therefore quite suggest the varied program, rich in new matter, that was actually unfolded before the regular subscribers during the season. The variety was indeed notable. Forty-eight composers were represented by the 78 works. From Beethoven's six and Brahms' five the list tapered down through four each for Bloch and Sibelius, three each for Stravinsky, Tchaikovsky and Wagner, and two or one for two-score others.

The eighteenth century did not fare well, with six works by Bach, Haydn, Mozart and Vivaldi. Part of the neglect was due to the smaller repertory from a period when the symphony orchestra as we know it was growing up. The rest was no doubt due to the current obsession of most virtuosos (and that includes conductors) with Romantic music. In the present instance, though, there was compensation in the notable attention given to music of our own day. Thus 31 compositions by 22 composers now living appeared in the seasonal summary. Not all of these works were contemporary in spirit (e. g., "La procession nocturne" of Rabaud, or some of the music of Sibelius). But it is a remarkable record, all the same, when almost half the repertory for the season of a leading symphony orchestra comes from composers who are not yet among the angels.

Music of Our Time

It was to be expected that not all this contemporary music, of which 18 works were played at these concerts for the first times, should be engrossing matter. No conductor, even if he were a perfectly free agent in the matter, could be expected to pick them—as the racing touts would say—so well; and besides, many of the novelties were introduced by the guest conductors. But the level was prevailingly high, and there were some exciting individual peaks.

Relying on memory rather than on reference to the detailed account of the immediate proceedings, one dismisses many of the works as of no great importance (whether or not they were pleasurable) or as failures. In one or the other of these categories go pieces like Dukelsky's "Dedicaces," David Stanley Smith's Symphony, John Alden Carpenter's Violin Concerto, "Two Nature Poems" by Goossens, "Chef cu lautari" by Lipatti, Gardner Read's Suite for string orchestra and the orchestral version of the Schumann "Carnaval."

Some of the others impressed themselves sufficiently on the memory so that one looks forward to making their acquaintance again (perhaps to be disappointed): Berezowsky's Toccata, Variations and Finale for string quartet and orchestra, E. B. Hill's Violin Concerto, the symphonic interludes from Bloch's "Macbeth," Langendoon's Improvisations, Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony and Enesco's belatedly disclosed Second "Roumanian" Rhapsody. (No attempt, it ought to be obvious by now, is being made to separate the works according to the rank of the several composers—one is applying merely a subjective standard).

Four Impressive Novelties

Four works remain to be mentioned. One, "Symphonic Dances" by Hindemith, does not seem at this distance as one of his more original compositions, but it clearly displayed the hand of a master. Ernst Krenek's Piano Concerto gave great displeasure to the overwhelming majority of listeners, but seemed to this writer a profound as well as engrossing piece. Roy Harris' Third Symphony had some faults but it was the only one of the five entirely new works to enkindle the imagination, at the same time that it displayed forward progress on the part of perhaps the most vigorous American composer.

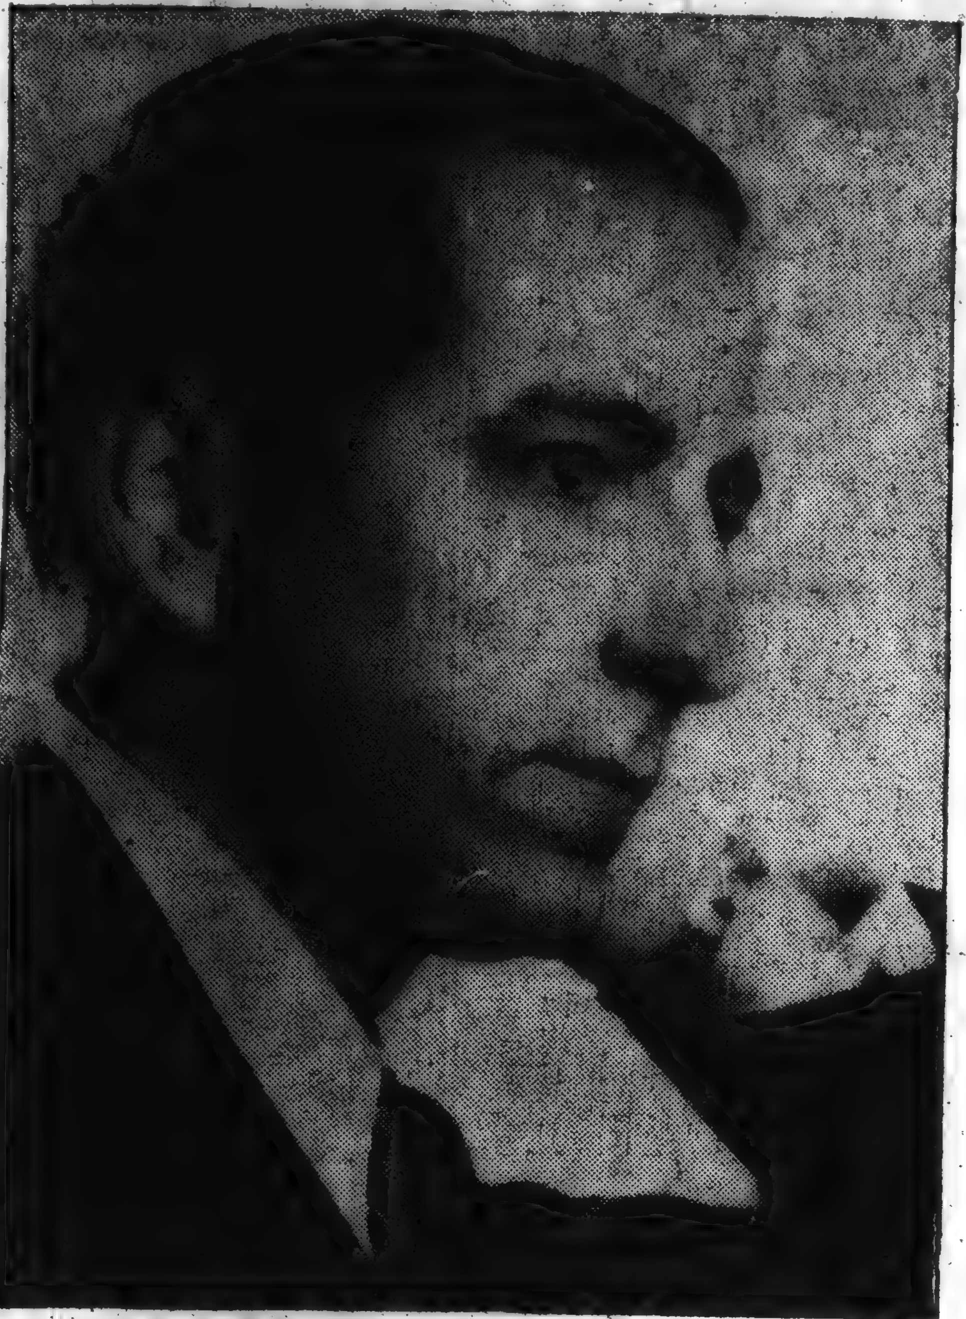
Finally there was the Second Symphony of William Schuman, young American writer practically unknown hereabouts. It was harshly received by the public, the press generally and musicians, including the men in the orchestra. In fact, about the only persons who seem to have been stirred by the music were the conductor of the Symphony Orchestra and the present attestant. Dr. Koussevitzky found in the Symphony a really fresh, new voice. And that opinion goes for this attestant, too.

B. Trans. – May 13/39

LEO LITWIN

Piano soloist for "Rhapsody in Blue" at the Pops next Wednesday evening.

MUSIC



JESUS MARIA SANROMA

Soloist in the Paderewski A Minor Piano Concerto at the Pops concert in Symphony Hall tomorrow evening.

IN THE LIGHTER VEIN

Several Soloists to Enliven the Programs at Pop Concerts in Symphony Hall Next Week

Several soloists will appear and other special events will mark the course of the next eight nights at the Pop concerts under the direction of Arthur Fiedler in Symphony Hall. The presentation of the Paderewski A minor Concerto by Jesus Maria Sanroma tomorrow evening is presumably more than a mere coincidence with the recent visit of the composer-pianist to this city. Bach's Second "Brandenburg" Concerto will be another noteworthy number on the same program. The program and the performers for "Harvard Night" on Monday will have unusual interest. Three other pianists will make solo appearances: Selma Pelonsky in the Rubinstein D minor Concerto on Tuesday, Leo Litwin in the "Rhapsody in Blue" on Wednesday and Selma Kramer in the Second Rachmaninov Concerto on Sunday evening, May 21.

The complete programs through the last-mentioned date and including that of this evening follow:

Tonight

Polonaise .... Chopin-Glazounov
Overture to "Poet and Peasant" .... Suppe
Minuet for Strings .... Bolzoni
Procession of Bacchus from "Sylvia" Delibes
"Peer Gynt" Suite .... Grieg
Largo .... Handel
Third Movement, "Pathetic" Symphony Tchaikovsky
"By the Beautiful Blue Danube" Waltzes Strauss
"The Music Box" .... Liadov
Songs of the Old Days

Sunday Evening

Overture, "The Dedication of the House" .... Beethoven
"Brandenburg Concerto" No. 2, in F major .... Bach
The Ride of the Valkyries .... Wagner
Pianoforte Concerto in A minor Paderewski
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
Finlandia
Valse Triste
"Alla Marcia" from "Karelia" } .. Sibelius

Monday Evening

HARVARD NIGHT

Malcolm Holmes, '26, guest conductor
Pomp and Circumstance .... Elgar
Polovetskian Dances from "Prince Igor" Borodin
Rumba .... Clair Leonard, '22
Academic Festival Overture ...... Brahms
G. Wallace Woodworth, '24, guest conductor
Two Choruses from "Il Matrimonio Segreto" .... Cimarosa
1. Oh che gioja, che piacere
2. Per imbrogliar la testa
Martinslied .... Hindemith
Choruses from "The Birds" of Aristophanes .... John Knowles Paine
Finale from Suite for Orchestra .... Piston
Choruses from "Iolanthe" .... Sullivan
The Harvard Glee Club
Leroy Anderson, '29, guest conductor
Overture to "Die Fledermaus" .... Strauss
Harvard Sketches .... Leroy Anderson
"Up the Street" March .... Morse, '96
Fair Harvard

Tuesday Evening

March from "The Queen of Sheba" Gounod
Overture to "Egmont" .... Beethoven
Bach Goes to Town .... Templeton
Tales from the Vienna Woods ..... Strauss
Concerto for Piano in D minor .. Rubinstein
Soloist: Selma Pelonsky
Songs by "Smiff en Poofs"
Mine
Spring Is Here
Lindy Lou
Summertime
Oh Miss Hannah
Fantasy on Gershwin Melodies
Prayer of Thanksgiving .. Valerius-Kremser

Wednesday Evening

March, "Lorraine" .... Ganne
Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" Mozart
Tijuca, Brazilian Dance .... Milhaud
Les Preludes .... Liszt
Ballet Suite from "Aida" .... Verdi
Pop Goes the Weasel .... Cailliet
Rhapsody in Blue .... Gershwin
Soloist: Leo Litwin
"Lagunen," Waltzes .... Strauss
Pavane .... Gould
Aragonaise from "The Cid" ... Massenet

Thursday Evening

Entrance of the Gladiators .... Fucik
Overture, "Fingal's Cave" ... Mendelssohn
"Spring," for String Orchestra .... Grieg
Soviet Iron Foundry .... Mossolov
Prelude to "Hansel and Gretel" Humperdinck
Capriccio Espagnol ...... Rimsky-Korsakov
Songs by the Framingham State Teachers College Glee Club
Edward F. Gilday, Jr., director
Fantasy, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" .... Churchill-Bodge
The Harmonica Player .... Guion
Sixth Hungarian Dance .... Brahms

Friday Evening

March, "Washington Post" .... Sousa
Overture to "Orpheus in Hades" .Offenbach
Hora Staccato .... Dinicul-Heifetz
Selection, "The Mikado" .... Sullivan
Danse Macabre .... Saint-Saens
Kammenoi Ostrov .... Rubinstein
Second "Hungarian" Rhapsody ..... Liszt
Wine, Woman and Song .... Strauss
Begin the Beguine .... Porter
American Patrol .... Meacham

Saturday Evening

March, "Second Connecticut" ..... Reeves
Overture to "Raymond" .... Thomas
Song of India .... Rimsky-Korsakov
Ballet of the Hours from "La Gioconda" Pinchielli
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah" Saint-Saens
Largo .... Handel
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812" Tchaikovsky
"Estudiantina," Waltzes ...... Waldteufel
"On the Trail" from the "Grand Canyon" Suite .... Grofe
Wintergreen for President ...... Gershwin

Sunday Evening

Overture to "L'Italiana in Algeri" .Rossini
Symphony No. 8 in F major, Op. 93 Beethoven
Concerto for Piano in C minor Rachmaninov
Soloist: Selma Kramer
Gypsy Dance from "Carmen" ...... Bizet
Song of the Volga Bargemen Arranged by Glazounov
"Knightsbridge" (March), from "London" Suite .... Eric Coates

---

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
MAY 13 1939

8

PADEREWSKI TAKES A 'BUSMAN'S HOLIDAY'

Boston, May 12—(AP)—Taking a "busman's holiday," Ignace Paderewski paid a surprise visit to Symphony hall today and heard a "musical grandson" play a Paderewski concerto during a shirt-sleeve rehearsal of the "pops" orchestra.

In his only public appearance here besides his Wednesday concert, the pianist applauded the rendition of his concerto, opus 17, by Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Sanroma ~~was taught~~ by one of Pederewski's pupils.

The concerto will be played at a "pops" concert Sunday night.

Paderewski left for Providence R. I. later.

Max O. Kunze

Max O. Kunze, 65, first double bass player of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and member of the faculty of the New England Conservatory of Music, died yesterday at his home, 33 Peter Parley road, Jamaica Plain.

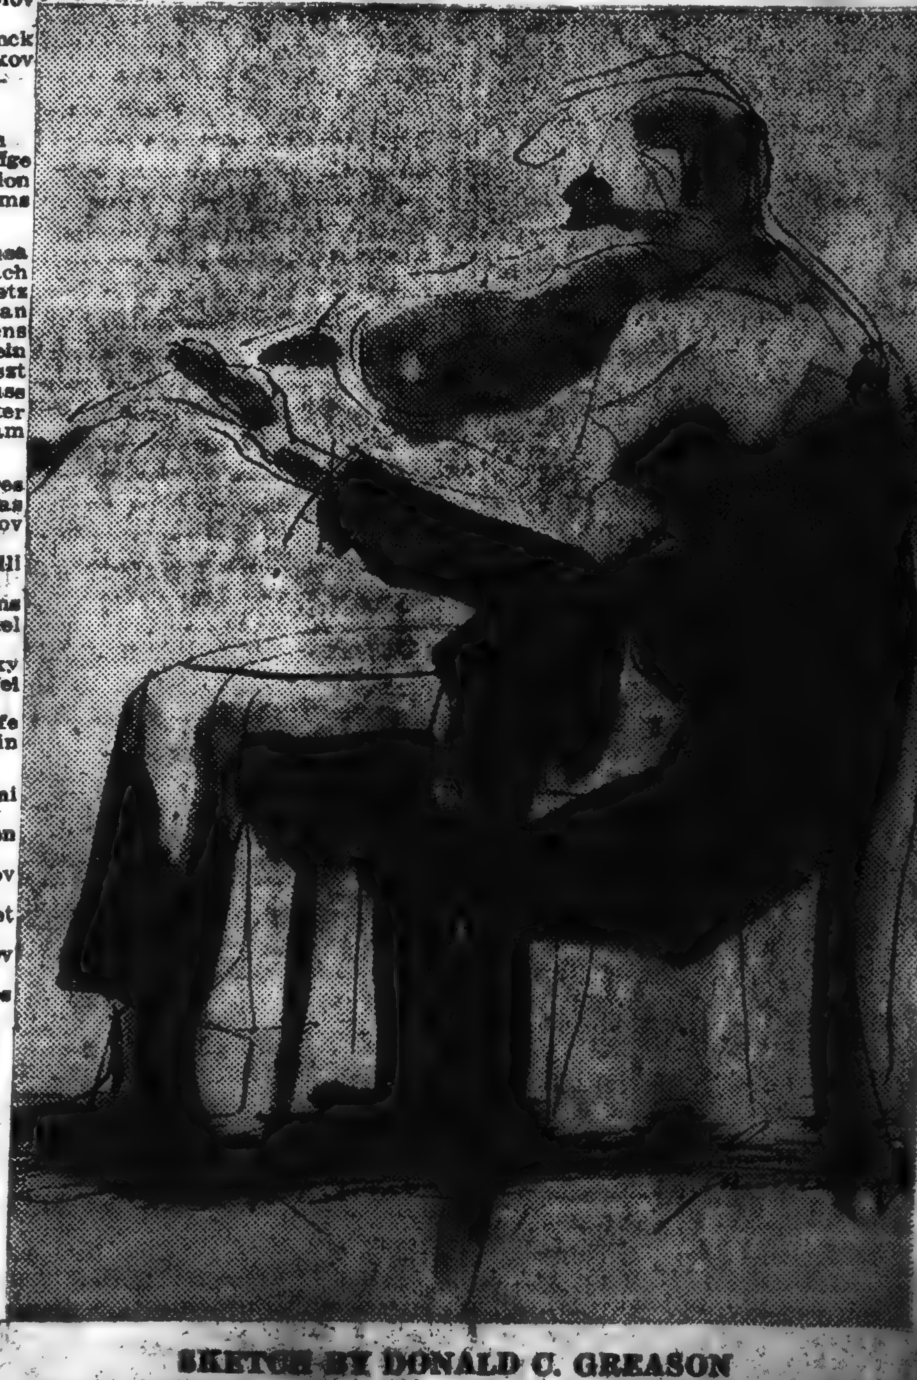
A native of Dresden, Ger., he studied at that city's Royal Conservatory of Music, and in Hamburg. He played first double bass with the Philharmonic Orchestra of Warsaw, Poland, and later with Dr. Hans von Bulow's Orchestra in Hamburg.

He came to the United States in 1893 to play at the Chicago World's Fair with Fritz Scheel's Orchestra.

MAX O. KUNZE

The following year he became a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, where he held the position of first and solo double bass player since 1910. He was well known throughout the United States for his concert appearances. He was a member of the Euclid Masonic Lodge.

He leaves a wife, the former Emma B. Crothers, and three sons, Karl Richard, M. Alfred and Paul William. Funeral services will be held next Wednesday at 11 a. m. in Waterman Chapel, Kenmore sq.



SKETCH BY DONALD C. GREASON

One from several hundreds made by the Rockport artist from observations of rehearsals and concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

9

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

MAY 13 1939

Paderewski Arrives Here On 20th American Tour

GREAT MUSICIAN'S DIGNITY IMPRESSIVE

Poses For Photographers With Mellow Smiles and Courtly Bows

By John W. Tebbel

A tired old man emerged slowly on to the rear platform of a private car at Union station yesterday and raised his black felt hat with a deliberate movement of slim fingers. No one spoke. This was Ignace Jan Paderewski.

An atmosphere of reverence surrounds the aged Polish pianist and patriot. As he slips into the dimness of tradition on this 20th American tour, almost certainly his last, he lives already in a world of memory, warmed by the affection and admiration of men and women in every country.

His train drew into the station at 4:57 p. m. but it was more than a half hour later that he made his brief appearance. Newspapermen were entertained by his secretary in the observation compartment at the rear of the private car. On one side was the small upright on which he practices, not every day now. A huge portfolio of music lay carelessly across the piano top and there was more music about the instrument.

Everyone is very affable but there is no relaxation of the old rule: "Mr. Paderewski gives no interviews." And when he appears, you realize why there are no interviews.

Before he comes out, the visitors glance expectantly at the door into the interior every time it moves, but only one of the two porters or an attendant appears. Then the secretary disappears for a moment, comes back, and announces "I think we had better go outside now."

Outside, there is another long pause while the reporters ask questions more to fill up the time than because there is anything else to be found out. An abrupt stir inside the car, the secretary discreetly retires, a publicity man holds the car door open wide, a quick hush falls on the dozen onlookers and Paderewski appears.

Continued on Page 3, Column 4

Continued from Page One.

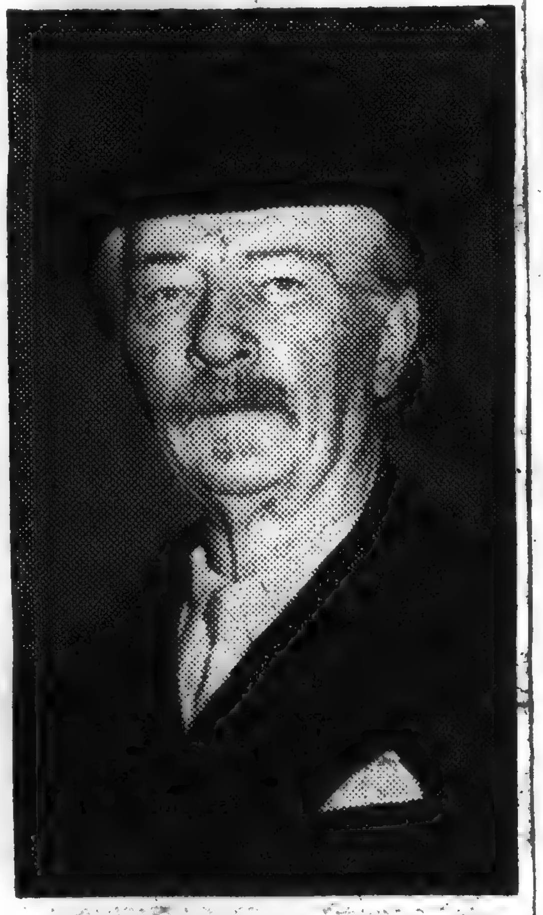
He wears a formal black coat with a white wisp of handkerchief in the lapel, a white shirt with a broad tie and the familiar black hat. But you see these things briefly—your eyes turn to the simplicity of his face, seamed lightly, the blue eyes kindly and happy, a smile twisting ever so slightly the corners of his thin lips. He lifts his hat; you see those legendary fingers, unbelievably spared by age, and the white dignity of his hair. And you know, with a sudden lump in your throat, that you are looking upon a truly great man.

Poses for Photographs

That is why there is no interview. What could you say to that grand, erect figure who stands with the happiness of a child on the platform because he is having his picture taken? What can you say to a man who has been a statesman in the world's most difficult times, a pianist whose genius is a household word?

Paderewski stands in the station twilight patiently, turning obediently at the photographers' request, but from his lips comes no word at all. He only smiles. At the end, he bows and smiles again, turns slowly and shuffles into the car, supported by his heavy cane. You realize more than ever that he is an old man and a feeble one.

There are the usual questions and answers from the secretary: yes, the concert in Metropolitan Theatre on Sunday afternoon is the 18th, on a nation-wide tour that began on March 1 in Newark and was interrupted briefly by illness. Yes, seven more concerts after this, and then he sails for home on the Normandie, June 14, to return to his villa at Morges on Lake Geneva. No, he would not return if he thought a war were imminent—but then he refuses to accept the fact that another war is possible. He agrees essentially with the stand of Foreign Minister Colonel Beck and believes Poland will never be another Czecho-Slovakia.



Ignace Jan Paderewski

Hears Sanroma Play

Yesterday morning, he heard the young Puerto Rican pianist, Jesus Maria Sanroma, rehearse the only Paderewski concerto with the Boston "Pops" Orchestra. He was pleased with the rehearsal, says his secretary. Another generation . . . another tradition of performance . . .

What does the grand old man of music think about as he sits by his car window, watching America roll by outside, mulling over the crowded 78 years of his life? Politics, certainly—he reads books on current events and follows closely the trend of affairs in Europe. Memories, too, revived by the friends he meets everywhere on his tour, recalled from his tumultuous life.

But one likes to think of those other memories: the intermittent cascading through his mind of immortal music, the grandeur of Beethoven, the sprightly Haydn, all the lyric loveliness of Chopin—remembered music as only a genius may know it.

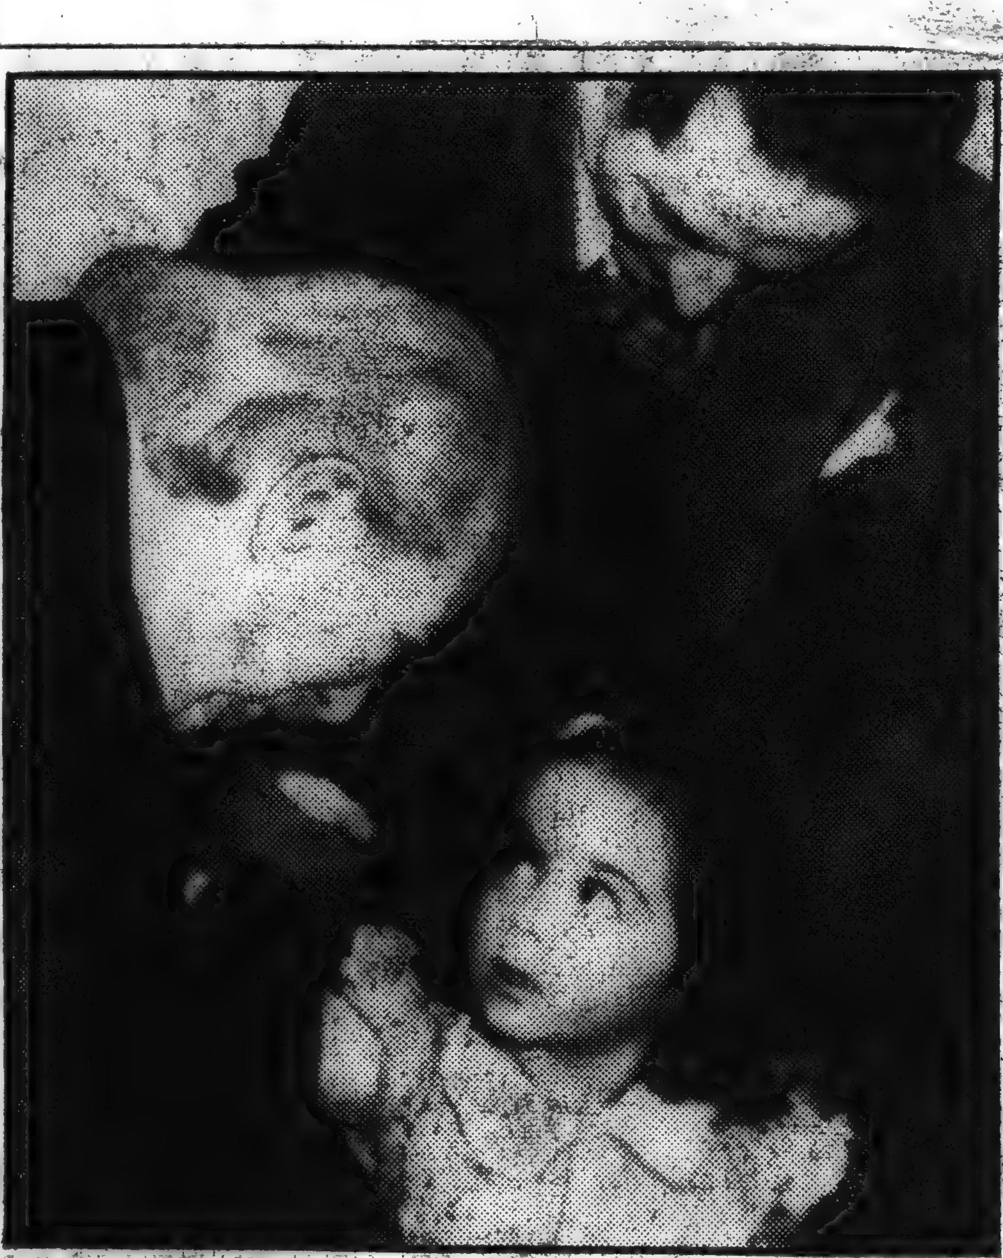
This Gives Her Something to Remember Him By

B. [illegible] – May 13/39

Marisol Sanroma, three-year-old daughter of the pianist, can paste this picture in her scrapbook and all the years of her life may recall that the great Paderewski once kissed her hand. Jesus Maria Sanroma holds his daughter, and Mrs. Sanroma is at left of Paderewski, who went to Symphony Hall yesterday to hear a Pops rehearsal.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR

MAY 15 1939



BOSTON.—PADEREWSKI AWES AN ADMIRER—Paderewski brought awe and wonder to the eyes of a little girl when, in the best continental manner, he kissed the hand of 3-year-old Marisol Sanroma. The gallant gesture occurred at rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with which Marisol's father, Jesus Maria Sanroma (right) had just played the Padereski "Concerto, Opus 17."
—A. P. Wirephoto.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
TELEGRAM

MAY 15 1939

PIANIST KISSES A LADY'S HAND

(AP Photo)

Paderewski brought awe and wonder to the eyes of a little girl when, in the best continental manner, he kissed the hand of 3-year-old Marisol Sanroma here yesterday. The gallant gesture occurred at a rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with which Marisol's father, Jesus Maria Sanroma (right), had just played the Paderewski Concerto, Opus 17.

B. Herald May 13/39

Paderewski Visits Pops Rehearsal; Hears Orchestra Play Own Work

Ignace Jan Paderewski, who played to a crowded Boston Opera House Wednesday night, yesterday took his turn at being an audience in Symphony Hall. Two hours before his private Pullman car was pulled out of the South Station for Providence yesterday afternoon, the 78-year-old pianist quietly invaded a rehearsal of the Pops orchestra.

The maestro chose the occasion to hear his own concerto, Opus 17, played by Jesus Maria Sanroma, Symphony pianist. Although his applause was restrained, befitting one who guards himself from all tiring excess, it was recognized as a tribute to Sanroma's rendition.

As Paderewski slowly entered the hall, relying a great deal on his rubber-tipped malacca stick for support, the shirt-sleeved musicians who had been in rehearsal rose to pay him silent honor. Arthur Fiedler, the conductor, greeted the visitor and saw him seated in the unlighted balcony.

Thorughout the impromptu "concert," Paderewski's face was expressionless. Those who watched him wondered about his thoughts, asked if he was thinking about a future when Opus 17 would be one of the few living souvenirs of a great artist. At the start of one passage, he raised his right hand slowly. But he said nothing.

At the end, he briefly applauded. Then he departed for his private car. Sunday he plays in Providence, and by mid-June he plans to return to Switzerland.

Ice & Refrigeration
Magazine
CHICAGO, ILL.

MAY - - 1939

Entertainment Program

In addition to the sessions of diversified program of entertainment is planned which will include special luncheons, a barbecue held at the Dewey and Almy plant, an evening at the celebrated Boston Symphony "pop concert" and a banquet at the famous New Ocean House on the seashore at Swampscott which will conclude the program of Friday. There probably will be a Saturday morning program following which ample time will be left free for the proposed organization of an association of food technologists, the general plans for which have been suggested by a group who attended the first conference at M. I. T. in 1937.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

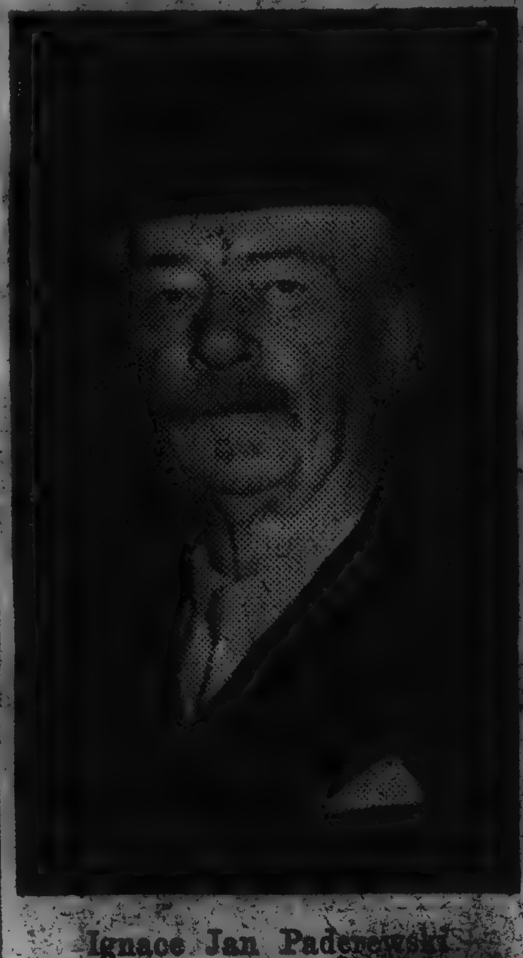
MAY 1 3 1939

Paderewski Arrives Here On 20th American Tour

GREAT MUSICIAN'S DIGNITY IMPRESSIVE

Poses For Photographers With Mellow Smiles and Courtly Bows

By John W. Tebbel



Ignace Jan Paderewski

A tired old man emerged slowly on to the rear platform of a private car at Union station yesterday and raised his black felt hat with a deliberate movement of slim fingers. No one spoke. This was Ignace Jan Paderewski.

An atmosphere of reverence surrounds the aged Polish pianist and patriot. As he slips into the dimness of tradition on this 20th American tour, almost certainly his last, he lives already in a world of memory, warmed by the affection and admiration of men and women in every country.

His train drew into the station at 4:57 p. m. but it was more than a half hour later that he made his brief appearance. Newspapermen were entertained by his secretary in the observation compartment at the rear of the private car. On one side was the small upright on which he practices, not every day now. A huge portfolio of music lay carelessly across the piano top and there was more music about the instrument.

Everyone is very affable but there is no relaxation of the old rule: "Mr. Paderewski gives no interviews." And when he appears, you realize why there are no interviews.

Before he comes out, the visitors glance expectantly at the door into the interior every time it moves, but only one of the two porters or an attendant appears. Then the secretary disappears for a moment, comes back, and announces "I think we had better go outside now."

Outside, there is another long pause while the reporters ask questions more to fill up the time than because there is anything else to be found out. An abrupt stir inside the car, the secretary discreetly retires, a publicity man holds the car door open wide, a quick hush falls on the dozen onlookers and Paderewski appears.

Continued on Page 3, Column 4

Continued from Page One.

He wears a formal black coat with a white wisp of handkerchief in the lapel, a white shirt with a broad tie and the familiar black hat. But you see these things briefly—your eyes turn to the simplicity of his face, seamed lightly, the blue eyes kindly and happy, a smile twisting ever so slightly the corners of his thin lips. He lifts his hat; you see those legendary fingers, unbelievably spared by age, and the white dignity of his hair. And you know, with a sudden lump in your throat, that you are looking upon a truly great man.

Poses for Photographs

That is why there is no interview. What could you say to that grand, erect figure who stands with the happiness of a child on the platform because he is having his picture taken? What can you say to a man who has been a statesman in the world's most difficult times, a pianist whose genius is a household word?

Paderewski stands in the station twilight patiently, turning obediently at the photographers' request, but from his lips comes no word at all. He only smiles. At the end, he bows and smiles again, turns slowly and shuffles into the car, supported by his heavy cane. You realize more than ever that he is an old man and a feeble one.

There are the usual questions and answers from the secretary: yes, the concert in Metropolitan Theatre on Sunday afternoon is the 18th, on a nation-wide tour that began on March 1 in Newark and was interrupted briefly by illness. Yes, seven more concerts after this, and then he sails for home on the Normandie, June 14, to return to his villa at Morges on Lake Geneva. No, he would not return if he thought a war were imminent—but then he refuses to accept the fact that another war is possible. He agrees essentially with the stand of Foreign Minister Colonel Beck and believes Poland will never be another Czecho-Slovakia.

Hears Sanroma Play

Yesterday morning, he heard the young Puerto Rican pianist, Jesus Maria Sanroma, rehearse the only Paderewski concerto with the Boston "Pops" Orchestra. He was pleased with the rehearsal, says his secretary. Another generation . . another tradition of performance . . .

What does the grand old man of music think about as he sits by his car window, watching America roll by outside, mulling over the crowded 78 years of his life? Politics, certainly—he reads books on current events and follows closely the trend of affairs in Europe. Memories, too, revived by the friends he meets everywhere on his tour, recalled from his tumultuous life.

But one likes to think of those other memories: the intermittent cascading through his mind of immortal music, the grandeur of Beethoven, the sprightly Haydn, all the lyric loveliness of Chopin—remembered music as only a genius may know it.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR

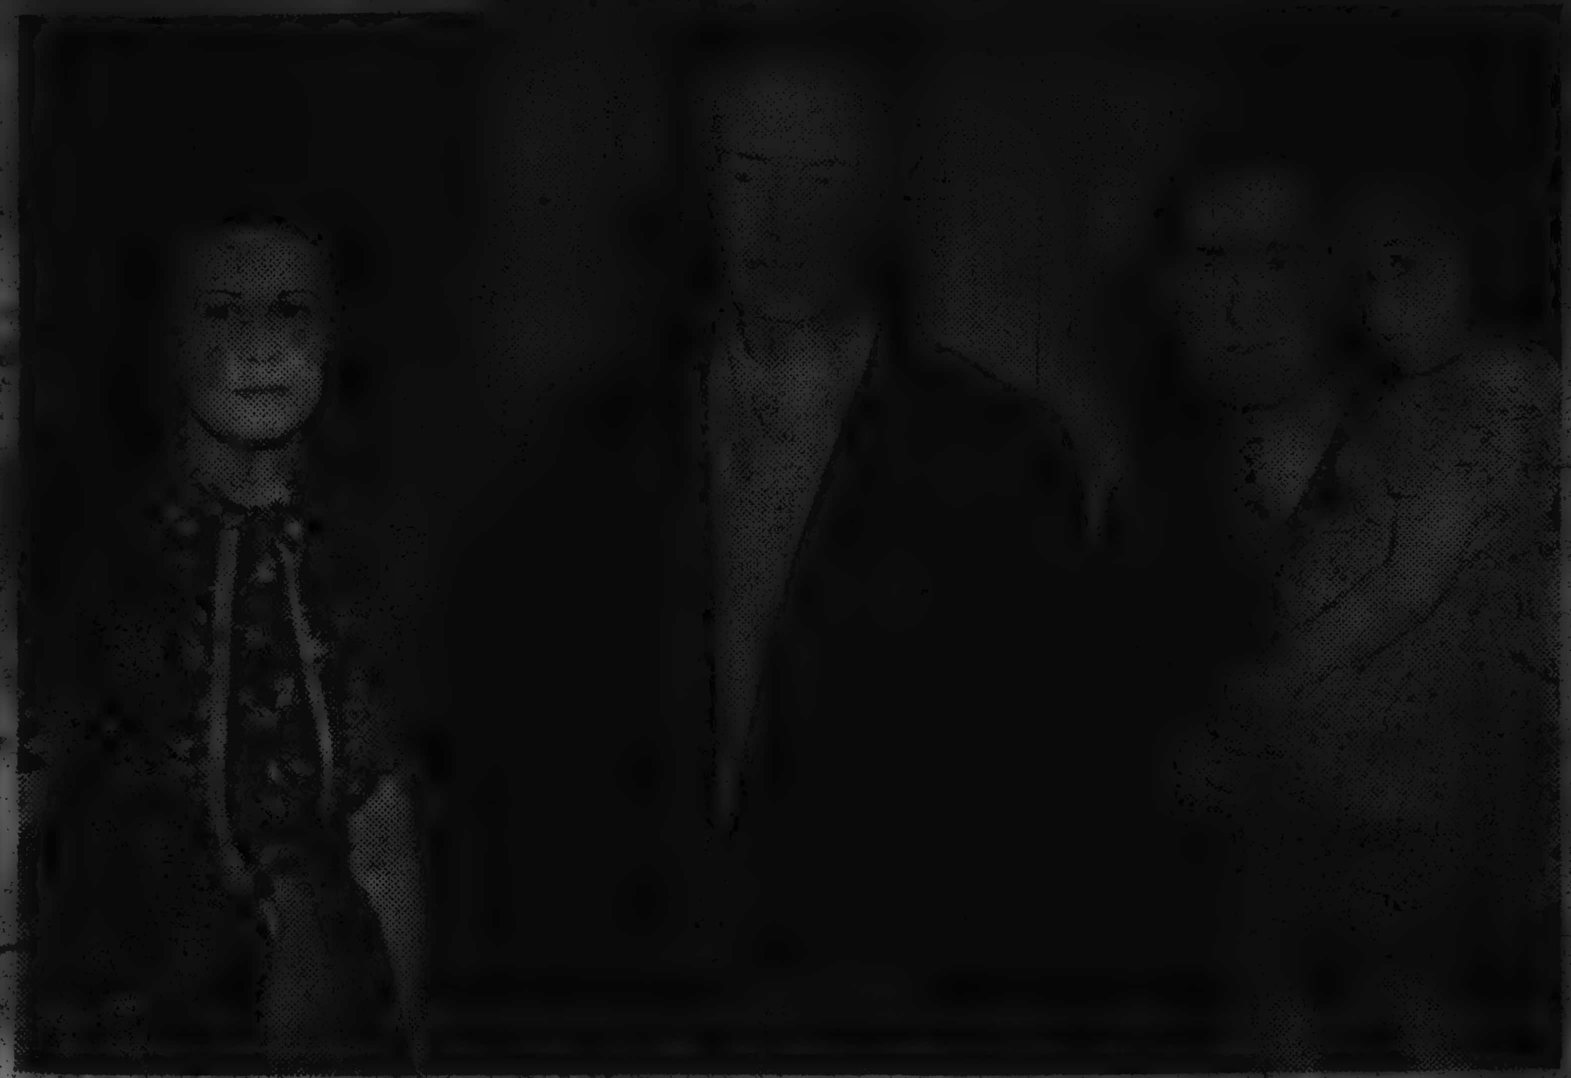
MAY 1 5 1939

BOSTON.—PADEREWSKI AWES AN ADMIRER—Paderewski brought awe and wonder to the eyes of a little girl when, in the best continental manner, he kissed the hand of 3-year-old Marisol Sanroma. The gallant gesture occurred at rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with which Marisol's father, Jesus Maria Sanroma (right) had just played the Padereski "Concerto, Opus 17." —A. P. Wirephoto.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
TELEGRAM

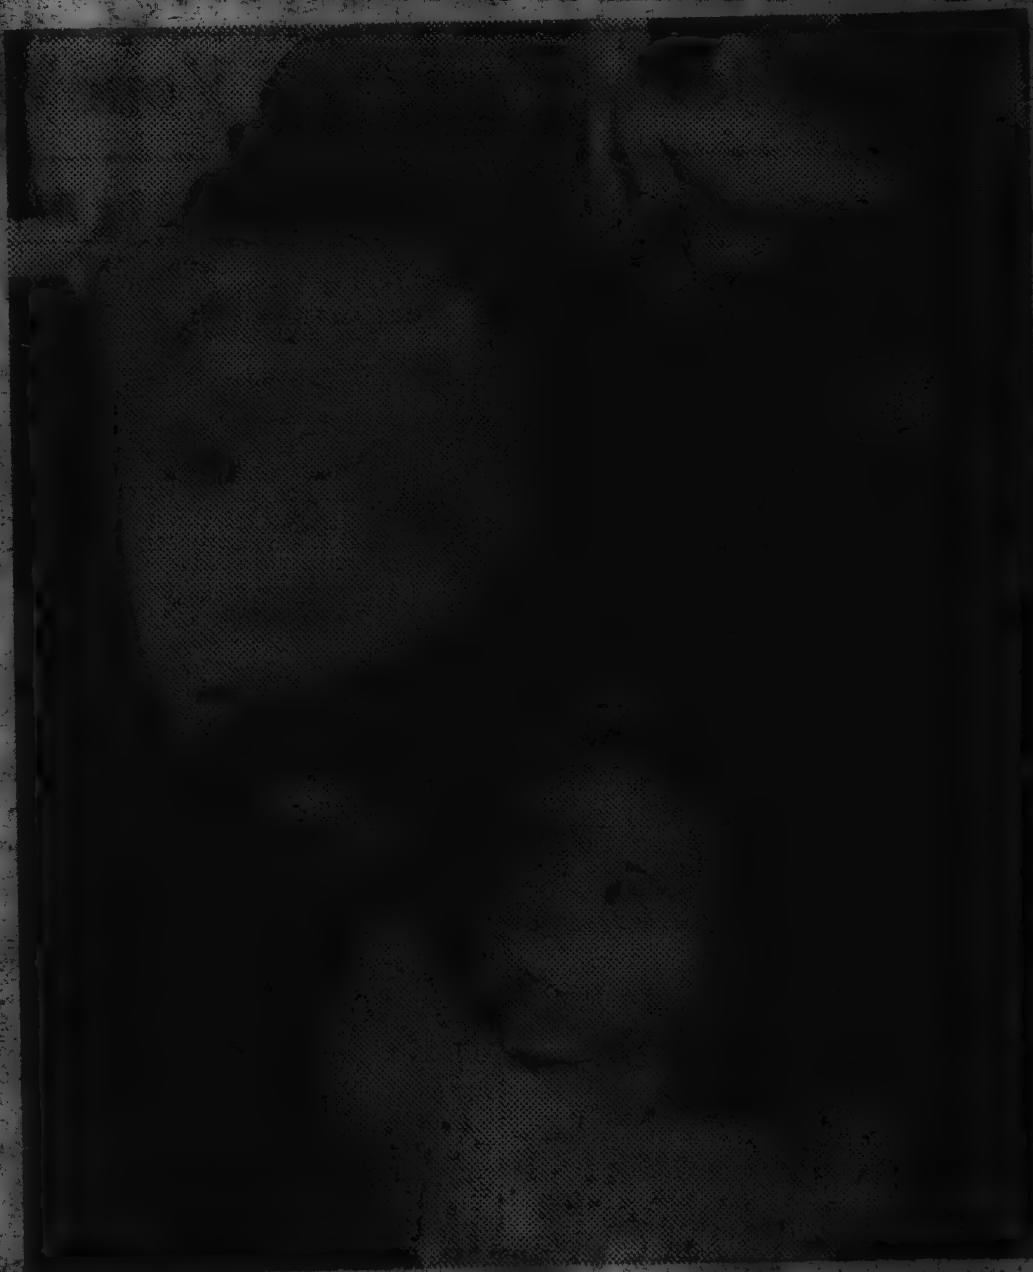
MAY 1 5 1939

This Gives Her Something [illegible]



Marisol Sanroma, three-year-old daughter of the pianist, can paste this picture in her scrapbook and all the years of her life may recall that the great Paderewski once kissed her hand. Jesus Maria Sanroma holds his daughter, and Mrs. Sanroma is at left of Paderewski, who went to Symphony Hall yesterday to hear a Pops rehearsal.

PIANIST KISSES A LADY'S HAND



(AP Photo)

Paderewski brought awe and wonder to the eyes of a little girl when, in the best continental manner, he kissed the hand of 3-year-old Marisol Sanroma here yesterday. The gallant gesture occurred at a rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with which Marisol's father, Jesus Maria Sanroma (right), had just played the Paderewski Concerto, Opus 17.

B. Herald May 13/39

Paderewski Visits Pops Rehearsal; Hears Orchestra Play Own Work

Ignace Jan Paderewski, who played to a crowded Boston Opera House Wednesday night, yesterday took his turn at being an audience in Symphony Hall. Two hours before his private Pullman car was pulled out of the South Station for Providence yesterday afternoon, the 78-year-old pianist quietly invaded a rehearsal of the Pops orchestra.

The maestro chose the occasion to hear his own concerto, Opus 17, played by Jesus Maria Sanroma, Symphony pianist. Although his applause was restrained, befitting one who guards himself from all tiring excess, it was recognized as a tribute to Sanroma's rendition.

As Paderewski slowly entered the hall, relying a great deal on his rubber-tipped malacca stick for support, the shirt-sleeved musicians who had been in rehearsal rose to pay him silent honor. Arthur Fiedler, the conductor, greeted the visitor and saw him seated in the unlighted balcony.

Thorughout the impromptu "concert," Paderewski's face was expressionless. Those who watched him wondered about his thoughts, asked if he was thinking about a future when Opus 17 would be one of the few living souvenirs of a great artist. At the start of one passage, he raised his right hand slowly. But he said nothing.

At the end, he briefly applauded. Then he departed for his private car. Sunday he plays in Providence, and by mid-June he plans to return to Switzerland.

Ice & Refrigeration
Magazine
CHICAGO, ILL.

MAY - - 1939

Entertainment Program

In addition to the sessions of diversified program of entertainment is planned which will include special luncheons, a barbecue held at the Dewey and Almy plant, an evening at the celebrated Boston Symphony "pop concert" and a banquet at the famous New Ocean House on the seashore at Swampscott which will conclude the program of Friday. There probably will be a Saturday morning program following which ample time will be left free for the proposed organization of an association of food technologists, the general plans for which have been suggested by a group who attended the first conference at M. I. T. in 1937.

10

'STOPS POPS'

B. American – May 13/39

Paderewski Hears Fiedler Play His Famous Opus 17

Discordant buzzing of fiddles and whining woodwinds suddenly died down as Jesus Maria Sanroma, Boston's famed pianist, walked on the Symphony Hall stage to rehearse the Concerto, Opus 17, by Paderewski, which he will play with the Pops orchestra tomorrow night.

Musicians lifted their instruments to commence, as Conductor Arthur Fiedler raised his baton.

At that moment, the entire orchestra came to its feet in applause, pianist and conductor alike turned around to greet a tall, white-haired man who walked majestically into the hall.

It was Ignace Jan Paderewski himself, composer of the great concerto which the musicians were about to perform in preparation for Sunday night's concert.

Conductor Fiedler rushed to the master with words of welcome and ushered him to a choice seat. The aged virtuoso bowed for the music to begin.

Paderewski once lifted his right hand as the music rose to a climax. At the close he applauded in tribute to Sanroma's interpretation.

It was probably his last visit to Boston. On Wednesday night his Opera House recital broke all concert records for receipts and attendance, when thousands greeted him on his farewell

---

Globe – May 14 1939

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Sunday Pops

Arthur Fiedler has heightened the freshness and variety of Pops programs by bringing out frequent novelties—either new scores, or compositions so rarely heard of recent years that many concert-goers are not familiar with them. Two interesting works in the second category—Beethoven's Overture, "The Dedication of the House," and Paderewski's A minor Piano Concerto—were heard by a capacity audience last night at the second Sunday Pops of the season. Jesus Maria Sanroma was soloist.

Paderewski's Concerto—which the composer heard at rehearsal in Symphony Hall last Thursday—ought to have retained a prominent place in the concerto repertory. If no great masterpiece, it is effective, rhythmically spirited, full of pleasant melody and harmony, and emotional in the 19th Century Romantic style. There could be only praise both for Mr. Fiedler's enterprise in reviving it, and for the splendid performance last evening. Mr. Sanroma played the virtuoso part for soloist with just the right gusto and feeling.

Beethoven's long, ceremonial Overture, with rolling drums and brass fanfares, was intended for the opening for a Vienna theatre in 1822. Incidentally, this Overture was the first composition performed in Symphony Hall, and the first ever played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The difficult original part for solo high trumpet, capably taken by Roger Voisin, was a feature of Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 2. Bach used to write passages for a high trumpet which fell out of use after his lifetime, and until comparatively recent years, when a special instrument was constructed, such passages could not be played as Bach intended them. The other three solos were assumed by Julius Theodorowicz, violin; James Pappoutsakis, flute, and Louis Speyer, oboe.

Wagner's "The Ride of the Valkyries," and three item by Sibelius—"Finlandia," "Valse Triste," and the march from the "Karelia"—rounded out a thoroughly enjoyable concert.
—C. W. D.

HONOR PADEREWSKI

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

B. Post – May 14/39

At last night's Pop Concert, four days after Mr. Paderewski's farewell recital at the Opera House, his Piano Concerto occupied the place of honor in a programme otherwise given over to the music of Beethoven, Bach, Wagner and Sibelius. The pianist in the Concerto was Jesus Maria Sanroma and, needless to say, Arthur Fiedler conducted.

Though Mr. Paderewski, who played in Providence yesterday, was not there, he did manage to come to rehearsal last Friday and bestowed his blessing and approval on all concerned. In his day he had played the Concerto in Symphony Hall, at a Symphony concert, and those who had the good fortune to be present are not likely to forget it. But this is not to imply that there was any lack of fire, brilliance or poetry in the performance last night. As a matter of fact, both Mr. Sanroma and Mr. Fiedler quite outdid themselves.

As for the Concerto, it remains and is likely to remain, Mr. Paderewski's most significant achievement as composer in the larger forms. With Saint-Saens, Grieg, MacDowell and Rachmaninoff, he put the best that he had into this rather artificial medium. A product of 19th century romanticism, the Concerto nevertheless avoids all excess and extravagance and though not of conspicuous originality, is a similarly well-knit and effectively written work. A strong national feeling pervades it. Here, as in his less successful B minor Symphony and the opera "Manru," Paderewski writes as a Pole and patriot.

May 13/39 You saw it in the BOSTON DAILY RECORD

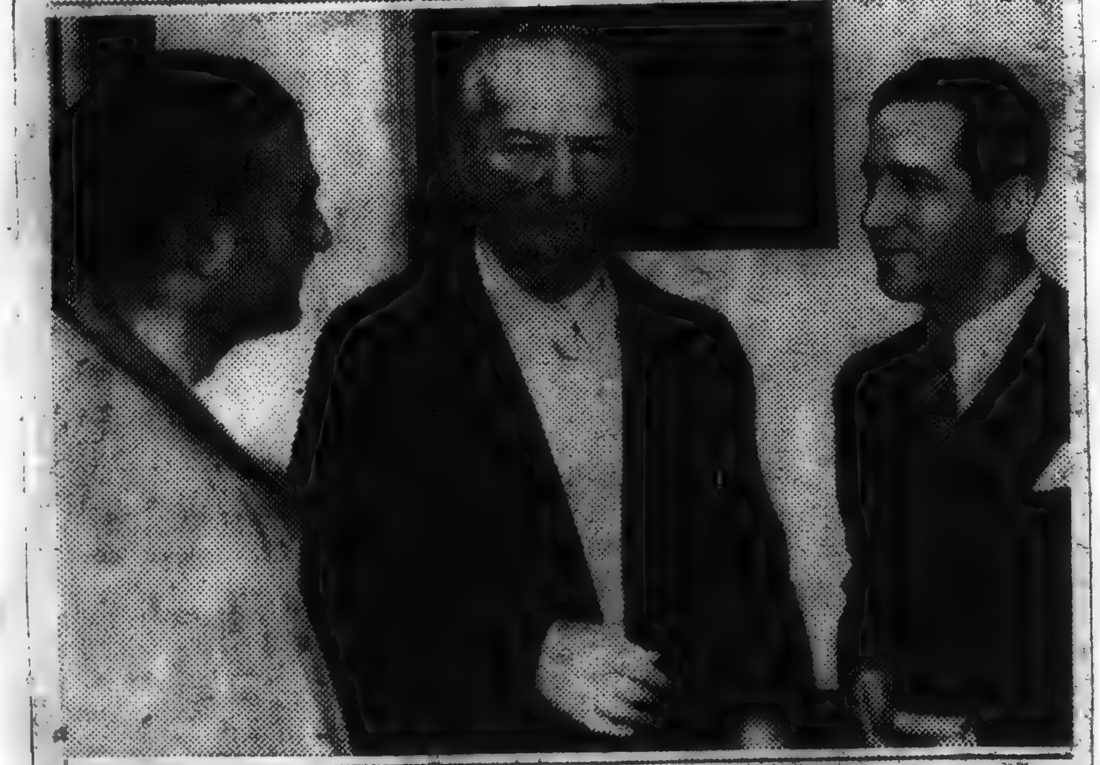
Famed Pianist as Pops Composer



Ignace Jan Paderewski, famed Polish pianist, with Conductor Arthur Fiedler, left, at a rehearsal of the Pops at Symphony Hall, with Jesus Maria Sanroma, right, after Fiedler had conducted the Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, composed by Paderewski. Sanroma was the piano soloist.

May 13/39 THE BOSTON GLOBE—S

Paderewski at Symphony Hall

CONDUCTOR, COMPOSER AND SOLOIST

Ignace Jan Paderewski, the great Polish pianist who played at the Boston Opera House Wednesday night, visited Symphony Hall yesterday noon to hear his own Concerto in A minor rehearsed. The composition will be played at the Pop concert tomorrow evening with Arthur Fiedler conducting, and Jesus Maria Sanroma playing the solo part. After the rehearsal, which greatly pleased composer-pianist Paderewski, he posed with conductor Fiedler, at left, and soloist Sanroma. They are shown looking over the score of the Concerto, which Paderewski composed in 1888.

Paderewski Hears Opus 17 Played by 'Grandson' Here

B. Trav – May 13/39

In a surprise visit to Symphony Hall at noon today, Paderewski heard his "musical grandson," Jesus Maria Sanroma, play the Paderewski Concerto, Opus 17, which will be performed for the first time on a Pops program Sunday night.

In the same row with the great Polish pianist, one of whose pupils (Szumowska-Adamowska) taught Sanroma, sat Mrs. Sanroma and their little black-eyed daughter, Marisol, aged three and a half.

When Sanroma and the orchestra concluded the playing of the spirited concerto, Paderewski clapped his gloved hands and murmured "Bravo, bravo!" Arthur Fiedler and members of the orchestra turned toward their distinguished guest who had made of a workday, shirt-sleeve rehearsal a memorable occasion—and the players ap joined the cameraman in taking pictures that followed the concert. The high point of the posing for the Sanromas came when in gallant Continental style, the 78-year-old maestro bent over and kissed the hand of the infant Marisol.

Serenades Maestro

During his rendition of the concerto, Sanroma, who is 35, frequently lifted his eyes toward the idol of pianists of two generations, as if serenading him. Now and then members of the orchestra turned their heads to view the picturesque figure in the balcony shadows.

Paderewski, who played to a packed Opera House on Wednesday night, left in his special railroad car for Providence after his visit to Symphony Hall, which was his only public appearance in the city apart from his concert.
J. K.

WILMINGTON, DEL.
EVENING JOURNAL

MAY 15 1939

MAX O. KUNZE—In Boston, Mass., 65 years old; member of Boston Symphony Orchestra for 45 years, member of faculty of New England Conservatory of Music for 35 years.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

MAY 4 - 1939

MITROPOULOS TO GIVE WORLD FAIR CONCERT

Greek Conductor Will Direct the Philharmonic on May 26

Dimitri Mitropoulos, Greek conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, has been engaged to direct the New York Philharmonic-Symphony for a concert at the World's Fair Music Hall on Friday evening, May 26, Countess Mercati, chairman of the volunteer committee arranging the concert, announced yesterday. The program, which is under the patronage of the Greek Government, will mark the New York concert debut of Mr. Mitropoulos, who has been heard here only in a broadcast with the NBC Orchestra.

The Greek conductor was introduced to American audiences largely through Serge Koussevitzky, who heard him in Europe and invited him to appear as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, BOSTON, THURSDAY, MAY 18, 1939

Paintings Exhibited—Olivier and

John B. Sanromá

In Full Swing at the Pops

As Arthur Fiedler raises his baton for the nightly concerts at Symphony Hall.

Russian Pianist Soloist at Pops

B Tran - May 16/39

As soloist at the Sunday evening Pops concert, Selma Kramer, young Russian pianist, essayed the Rachmaninov C minor Concerto. Making her Boston debut after some little New York acclaim, Miss Kramer was well received for her display of a well rounded tone, solid technique, and a gratifying refusal to sentimentalize the second movement. In the cadenza-like passages, where she did not have to compete with the orchestra, her fluent playing showed a promising talent.

It remains a question, however, whether any but the exceptional woman pianist is wise to attempt this Rachmaninov show piece. Rachmaninov himself can plunge into the midst of its sonorous chords and rapid passages of the opening movement and still retain the reserve force with which to build up the ensuing climax. Miss Kramer, though she overcame her evident early nervousness, hardly succeeded in maintaining the pace, or in producing the power and brilliance necessary to make herself heard against even a Pops orchestra.

The other principal offering of the evening was the Beethoven Eighth symphony. Mr. Fiedler gave a pleasant performance, after a somewhat wavering start that demonstrated again how essential its precision in even the "little" Beethoven. E. B. S.

At the Pops Tonight

Entrance of the Gladiators	Fucik
Overture, "Fingal's Cave ("The Hebrides")	Mendelssohn
"Spring," for String Orchestra	Grieg
Soviet Iron Foundry	Mossolov
Prelude to "Hansel and Gretel"	Humperdinck
Capriccio Espagnol	Rimsky-Korsakov
Songs by the Framingham State Teachers College Glee Club
Fantasy, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs"	Churchill-Bodge
"The Harmonica Player," from "Alley Tunes"	Guion
Sixth Hungarian Dance	Brahms

News of the Dance

On Monday evening, John Martin, dance critic of the New York Times, will bring the Boston University course in rhythmic activities to a close, with a lecture on "The Modern Dance"—an analysis of its nature, significance and prospect.

Mr. Martin was educated for the theater, in which field he has served as actor, director, playwright, critic, and teacher. Since 1927 he has been dance critic of the New York Times and has lectured extensively throughout the United States on the modern dance. He is the author of "The Modern Dance," "America Dancing," and is now preparing a new book of the dance for fall publication.

* * *

Winslow-Fitz-Simons at the Pops

On Thursday evening, May 25, Miriam Winslow and Foster Fitz-Simons will make their first Boston appearance as partners, at the Symphony Hall Pops, under the auspices of the Christopher Shop, giving a large number of selections from the program they have successfully presented on tour.

Following the Pops engagement, Miss Winslow and Mr. Fitz-Simons will dance with the Toronto Symphony Orchestra and make an additional tour of the Middle West in June.

Winslow will later head the rtment for the summer od Institute of Music in Orleans, offering courses in ballet, contemporary dance, percussion and improvisation. Her teaching assistant will be Mary Morse, a member of Miss Winslow's supplementary concert group, which also will appear in the Pops program.

* * *

Lucille Perry Hall Recital

On Friday evening, May 26, Lucille Perry Hall will present her students in a program which includes all forms of contemporary dance, character and national dances, classic ballet, and special new choregraphic arrangements for children. Authentic settings and costumes will be provided.

* * *

Hans Wiener Pops Performances

The evenings of May 29 and 31 at the Pops will bring performances repeated from last season by request of Hans Wiener's "The Incredible Flutist," danced by Mr. Wiener, his associate, Erica Thimey, and the concert and workshop groups. "The Incredible Flutist" is notable for its score by Walter Piston and costumes by Marco Montedoro of Radio City Music Hall.

On Tuesday evening, May 30, Mr. Wiener, Miss Thimey and groups will present a concert program of miscellaneous abstract pieces, to music of Milhaud, Ravel, Albeniz and Weinberger. On this program, Mr. Wiener will revive the Dimensional Fugue from his "Architectural Suite," to music by composer-accompanist, Ruth has been or-

---

ng Transcript MAY 16, 1939

MUSIC

Sons of Harvard Take Over Pops

The annual "Harvard Night" at Pops is a most enjoyable occasion as a rule, whether or not you happen to be a Harvard man. It is most representative of the lighter and also the best side of a musical institution so pre-eminently Bostonian. If, in addition, Harvard is your alma mater, your cup of joy, when you hear the massed voices of the Glee Club spiritedly traversing the football songs, is likely to be as full as the glass on your table.

The Glee Club under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth last night in Symphony Hall was a little slow as usual in getting to the good old "fight" songs. But everyone in the crowded house, sitting patiently or engrossedly through the admirable group the conductor had chosen, knew that the "last white line" would be reached in due season.

For the choral fare Mr. Woodworth had ranged widely and freshly through Italianate comedy out of Cimarosa's "Il Matrimonio Segreto," the gusty German humors of Hindemith's "Martinslied," the neat, if sometimes naive, wit of the choruses from John Knowles Paine's music for Aristophanes' "Birds" and the British flavors of choruses from "Iolanthe." For more weighty but still witty interlude there was the rousing finale from Walter Piston's Suite, containing music of a scholar, a gentleman and—as the saying goes—judge of Irish whiskey.

To begin a program that was enjoyably varied, exhibiting music that was light and frolicsome without being inane, Malcolm Holmes, another son of Harvard and conductor of the University Orchestra, led the Pops musicians through performances of the "Pomp and Circumstance" March of Elgar, the Polovetzkian Dances from "Prince Igor," a fairly "hot" and well-constructed Rumba by Clair Leonard (Class of 1922) and the appropriate "Academic" Overture of Brahms. The Pops Orchestra, evidently none the worse for shifting leadership, played according to its best standard.

Leroy Anderson ('29) completed the trio of guest conductors, presenting the Overture to "Die Fledermaus," his own "Harvard Sketches" and Morse's "Up the Street" March. The colorful audience was in exceptionally appreciative as well as convivial mood. M. S.

News of Music

Leading music librarians of the east will hold a two-day conference at the Harvard Musical Association on next Friday and Saturday to discuss the problem of increasing efficiency and reducing costs in cataloging music. On the agenda for the meetings will be a discussion of extending the Library of Congress facilities for printing duplicate cards for each piece of literature registered in American libraries to music. If this procedure is accepted, music libraries will reduce their cataloguing costs a hundredfold.

Among the music librarians who will attend the meetings are Carlton Sprague Smith of New York, Edward N. Waters of the Library of Congress, Barbara Duncan of Eastman Music School, Rochester, N. Y., Richard G. Appel of Boston, Eva O'Mera of Yale Univ. College of Music

---

Paderewski Is the Audience At Rehearsal of His Music

Monitor - May 12/39

"Here he is!" Members of the Pops Orchestra stationed at rear windows of Symphony Hall cried to the men rehearsing on the stage a little after noon today.

The orchestra laid down its instruments as one man and sprang to its feet, facing toward the shadowy corner of the balcony, where in a few moments an erect figure stepped inside the door and took a seat in the deepest shadow. It was Ignace Jan Paderewski, who on Wednesday had thrilled an audience crowding into every corner of the Boston Opera House.

That was expected to be his farewell appearance in Boston as an artist—after long decades of supremacy at the piano keyboard. Today he came as a composer to hear his own music played by young Jesús María Sanromá, Boston concert pianist.

With the dim emptiness of the hall hidden by the dull red rehearsal curtain—except for three rows of the green tables and gilt chairs of the "Pops" and with just a handful of orchestra officials sitting near him in the balcony, Paderewski sat motionless in the twilight of the unlighted balcony, in rapt attention as Mr. Sanromá entered upon his Concerto.

His face was expressionless—as if all his thought was carried back to the brilliant days in which he had expressed himself through his own interpretation of this music—with perhaps a wonder as to the message it would carry to the future through other fingers such as those now fleeting over the keys.

Once he raised a finger in anticipation of an apparently specially loved passage. That was his only movement except for brief clapping at the conclusion.

When Paderewski listened: Page 9.

12

Pianist at the Pops

C. S. Monitor - May 22/39

The Boston debut of a talented young Russian pianist was a feature of the Pops concert last night in Symphony Hall, when Selma Kramer was heard in the Rachmaninoff Concerto No. 2 in C minor, Op. 18, for Pianoforte and Orchestra. For the rest of the program, Arthur Fiedler had arranged the Overture to "L'Italiana in Algeri," by Rossini, the Beethoven Symphony No. 8 in F major, Op. 93, the Gypsy Dance from Bizet's "Carmen," Glazounov's arrangement of the Song of the Volga Boatmen, and the Knightsbridge March from the London Suite by Eric Coates.

Miss Kramer brought to her task a well developed technique and considerable poise. Her rhythmic sense is sure and she is obviously a musical person. The passages in which brilliance plus strength are demanded were not entirely successful, pianistically, since Miss Kramer has not at present developed sufficient strength to overcome the volume of tone which emerges from an orchestra playing fortissimi. This difficulty is not to Miss Kramer's discredit, however, since she is not alone in her inability to be heard. The composer himself has been known to arrive second best in the friendly combat he has staged between the solo instrument and the accompanying musicians.

In the solo and cadenza passages, especially those demanding discrimination in nuance, Miss Kramer summoned a tone which was firm without becoming hard, and in those passages she revealed her musicianship. She was enthusiastically applauded and returned to the stage many times in acknowledgment of an ovation.

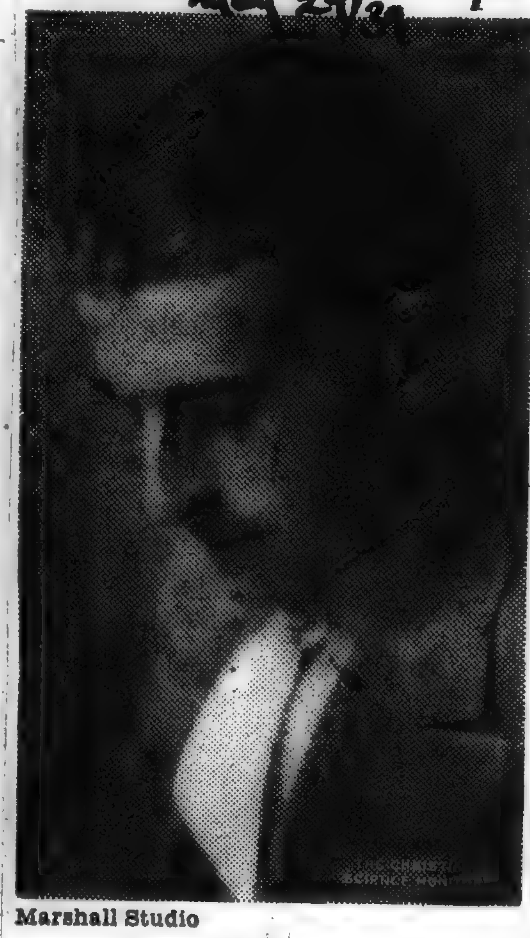
Mr. Fiedler is continuing his policy of placing orchestral music of robust proportions on his programs. Within easy memory, an entire symphony upon a Pops program was extraordinary. Pops audiences of today are taking serious music as a matter of course . . . and enjoying it, if attentiveness and subsequent applause be any criterion. Mr. Fiedler does not linger over the finer points of performance, but the essence of the symphony was there last night and the success of it should encourage him to further effort in this direction.

Although encores are the exception rather than the rule at these Sunday evening concerts, one may not justly conclude remarks on the proceedings last night without a brief mention of the excellent performance of Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Flight of the Bumblebee." It revealed the orchestra in top form and Mr. Pappoutsakis, flutist, as a master in delineating the wanderings of the insect.

G. M. S.

C. S. Monitor May 2[illegible]/39

To Conduct at Pops



Marshall Studio

Yves Chardon

He will lead the Pops Orchestra at Longy Night, Thursday evening, June 1.

HANOVER, PA.
SUN
MAY 20 1939

A KISS FOR HER MEMORIES (when she grows up) was received by three-year-old Marisol Sanroma, when Ignace Paderewski, famed pianist, kissed her hand. She is plainly awed by such gallantry. She is the daughter of Jesus Maria Sanroma (right), pianist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who had just played the Paderewski Concerto. The day before Mr. Paderewski gave a recital in the Boston Opera House which was crowded to capacity. Next Thursday in Madison Square Garden, New York, Mr. Paderewski is expected to play before an audience of fifteen thousand near the end of his farewell tour.

LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE
MAY 26 1939

FOREIGN CONDUCTOR PAYS HIGH TRIBUTE TO AMERICAN ORCHESTRAS

After spending the past six months in this country, Werner Wolff, noted European conductor, unhesitatingly says that American orchestras now lead the world. Mr. Wolff says in part: "Obviously it is unnecessary to point out that the quality of musical performance here is extremely high. New York has become one of the—if not the—music centers of the world. It is a sign of the times that today outstanding European musicians come to the United States less for financial reward than for the purpose of building up their reputations. What has impressed me most of all is the surprisingly high technical standard of musical performance. The technical perfection of the maor orchestras is amazing. Perhaps the best explanation is the one made to me some years ago by a great European conductor, who came to this country frequently. He attributed the high qualities of such orchestras as the New York Philharmonic and Boston Symphony to the fact that they had been able to obtain the services of the best strings of Austria and Czecho-Slovakia, the trumpets and trombones of Germany, and the woodwinds of France."

B. Herald -

MUSIC

May 22/39

THE POPS

The Pop concert last night in Symphony Hall, conducted by Arthur Fiedler, had for soloist Selma Kramer, pianist. The program was as follows:

Overture to "L'Italiana in Algeri"	Rossini
Symphony No. 8 in F major, op. 93	Beethoven
Piano Concerto No. 2 in C minor	Rachmaninoff
Gypsy Dance from "Carmen"	Bizet
Song of the Volge Bargemen	Glazounov
Knightsbridge	Eric Coates

As one of the more serious concerts of the Pops, this was a particularly successful example. Beethoven's gayest symphony can never fail to win its way, even with those intellectual snobs who cannot believe that cheerful music can be as good as tragic. The fact that this was Beethoven in full maturity, as it were, makes the case fool-proof. And that case is the better stated in this instance because of the Rossini overture. To modern ears it is doubtless full of cliches, but it is also easy and wise to sink such prejudice in the knowledge that it is really brilliant music. In that spirit it was played last night by the orchestra under Mr. Fiedler.

Possibly the Rachmaninoff Concerto will be slated in time for triteness; still, while the piano occupies the place it now does, no such effective work can be passed over. Miss Kramer was a highly efficient soloist. Her performance took the legitimate advantages of the virtuoso, as the composer clearly intended. It was a musical and poetic interpretation as well. In the atmosphere of the Pops, even a Sunday concert, is it hard to secure the special nostalgia, the contemplativeness, that the slow movement requires. It was obvious, however, that Miss Kramer had the will and the capacity where circumstances were inevitably a shade beyond control. Mr. Fiedler and the orchestra provided the right accompaniment, and the Concerto was enthusiastically applauded.

A. W. W.

TONIGHT AT THE POPS

The following program will be heard at the Pop concert under Arthur Fiedler's direction at Symphony Hall tonight:

Coronation March from "The Prophet,"	Meyerbeer
Miniature Suite	Harl McDonald
"None But the Lonely Heart"	Tchaikovsky-Cailliet
Overture to "William Tell"	Rossini
"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem	Sibelius
Largo	Handel
Overture Solennelle, "1812"	Tchaikovsky
"Artists' Life," Waltzes	Strauss
"The Toy Trumpet"	Scott
"Prayer of Thanksgiving," Old Dutch Hymn	Valerius-Kremser

MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER
MAY 31 1939

Olin Downes to Return for Berkshire Festival

Olin Downes, New York newspaper music editor, will return for the third consecutive year as lecturer for the Berkshire Symphony festival, whose concerts will be given at the new Tanglewood music shed by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, August 3, 5, 6, 10, 12 and 13.

This year, Mr. Downes will give his lectures with the orchestra at the Tanglewood shed at the two Saturday morning rehearsals, extended as a privilege to members and patrons as well as public high school pupils in Berkshire county. There will be about 2,500 persons in the audience.

As an added attraction at festival time, the Junior league of Pittsfield is arranging a series of lectures to be given at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield by Charles L. Safford, director of music at Williams college. Mr. Safford, graduate of Williams and member of the faculty 15 years, is a member of the festival's advisory committee. In charge of the lectures will be Mrs. Zenas Crane Colt, chairman of the League's arts and interest committee. There will be no admission fee for the lectures. The public in invited.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN
MAY 26 1939

MORRIS CONCERTO HAS AIR PREMIERE

Prize-winning Work Is Broadcast.

By IRVING KOLODIN.

If there is a special talent in the writing of concertos, it would appear that Harold Morris, composer, teacher and pianist, has it. Several years ago his piano concerto was widely admired when it was played here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Last night his violin concerto, which won this year's award for a native work from the National Federation of Music Clubs, had an impressive world premiere in a broadcast from WJZ, with Frank Black conducting the N. B. C. Orchestra and Philip Frank playing the solo part.

Mr. Morris has apparently observed the practices of such contemporary composers as Sibelius, Prokofieff and Dohnanyi in their writing for violin and orchestra, and based his treatment of the medium on a similar independence of the two elements. Through the turbulent, strongly wrought first movement there is abundant passage work for the solo instrument, but it is always antiphonal to some effect in the orchestra, never isolated merely for its spectacular value.

The violin has more chance to sing in the slow movement, but here again it is against a closely written orchestral background, in which the thread of the discourse is consistently shared. Curiously, it is not until the last pages of the finale that the soloist gives forth the strong, if Griegian, theme with which the work opens (this is the impression of a single hearing), but then it has the valuable effect of co-ordinating the three movements. Mr. Morris has also solved the cadenza problem well, reserving it for the finale and writing his own.

Soloist Plays Well.

Though Mr. Morris's architectural skill is prominent through the work, it should not obscure one's appreciation of the pith and definition of his ideas, the individuality of the idiom he has evolved, even if both have their indebtedness to Sibelius. This is good, solid sincerely-felt music, more deserving of the recognition it received than the majority of works so honored. Mr. Frank's solo playing was both poised and temperamentally valid, with the considerable difficulties of the work squarely met. Too much of it, perhaps, is written in the instrument's high register, but it is otherwise thoroughly violinistic. Mr. Black and the orchestra collaborated with excellent results.

The broadcast climaxed the observance of National Federation of Music Clubs' Day at the World's Fair on Wednesday, and was punctuated by speeches by Mrs. Vincent Ober, president of the federation, and Lenox R. Lohr, NBC president. The music of the evening also included George Chadwick's ingratiating "Jubilee," and a "Sinfonietta" by Hans Spialek, the widely admired arranger. The latter presented some ingenious ideas most skilfully handled, but it was rudely interrupted by an extended closing talk using time that might well have accommodated another movement of the work.

MAY 26, 1939
B. Trans.

MUSIC

Winslow Dancers Appear at Pops

The dance numbers which Miriam Winslow, Foster Fitz-Simons and an ensemble of four girls presented at the end of last night's Pop concert in Symphony Hall were for the most part neither pretentious nor arty. They were rather inclined to be divided into two principal categories: character study and humor. The music, tastefully chosen, and played by the Pops Orchestra under Arthur Fiedler, was usually appropriate to the end in view.

"City Faun," to music by Morton Gould, was in the second category, and it was well presented by Mr. Fitz-Simons, a dancer with marked if superficial talent. "Frail Woman," to music of Tansman, was similarly humorous; in addition, the character-delineation by Miss Winslow was sharp and neat. Indeed, it was at times brilliant. The two dancers together were unfailingly amusing in "Chromo," a barn-dance sort of affair to music of Guion, with Miss Winslow displaying the more subtle and varied if not slicker technic.

"Caribbee" contained three little character episodes based on Milhaud's savory "Saudades de Brazil." The dances had some of the same savor, but sometimes—especially on the part of Mr. Fitz-Simons—they were a little too reminiscent of Ted Shawn. "Archangel," which Mr. Fitz-Simons presented to music of Satie, found him quite out of his best element, which is obviously rough-and-tumble Americana. Miss Winslow, on the other hand, limned a moving and beautiful portrait in "Magnificat." The influences (e. g., Angna Enters) were obvious, but they were thoroughly integrated in the study. The principal reservation was that there was a little too much and too fast movement for the kind of music involved (Bach's "Air on the G strings").

The capable ensemble presented a charming first number, "Little Women" to music of Tchaikovsky, and joined the two principal dancers in the last number, Chopin's "Polonaise Militaire," which was unfortunately a rather lame conclusion to an interesting session. The costumes were in almost every instance attractive, and the staging competent.

M. S.

A POPS CONCERT IN YOUR HOME

on Victor Records

IN OUR COMPLETE RECORD SHOP

R. H. WHITE CO.

RCA Victor Automatic

10 & 12 Inch

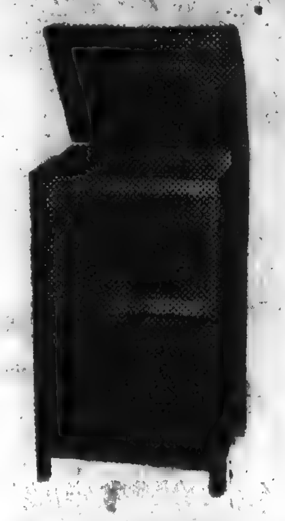
RECORD PLAYERS

AND

ALBUM CABINETS

For the first time, you can now have your 10 and 12 inch records played AUTOMATICALLY, mixed through your present radio—making it a deluxe Automatic combination Radio-Victrola.

You may use White's Convenient Payment Plan



$59.95

$4.50 in records included

Less trade-in allowance for your radio or Victrola

RADIOS AND RECORDS—WHITE'S FOURTH FLOOR

Two Pops Records Included

SUCH AS

Hungarian Dance No. 5 }
Hungarian Dance No. 6 } No. 4287

AND

Carioca .... }
Continental .... } No. 4321

with purchase of

New Low Priced

Victor Portable

Model 019

Blue and Black

Only $9.95

CHARLES W. HOMEYER CO., Inc.

498 Boylston St. Ken. 3510

Complete Stock of "POPS" VICTOR RECORDS at

M. Steinert & Sons

Jerome F. Murphy, President

162 BOYLSTON STREET

Steinert Hall HANcock 1900

ARTHUR FIEDLER

BRIGGS & BRIGGS

Presents three

VICTOR

RECORDINGS IN ALBUM FORM OF THE BOSTON "POPS" ORCH. CONDUCTED BY ARTHUR FIEDLER

THE LATEST "POPS" CONCERT ALBUM

M-554, consisting of 3—10-inch Records and 2—12-inch Records.

This new album contains such favorites as Russlan and Ludmilla-Overture; Deep River; Doctrinen Waltz; Eugen Onegin—Polonaise, etc. The "Pops" at its best.

VICTOR "POPS" ALBUM, M-358

Comprising 2—12-inch records, with George Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue" on three sides and "Strike Up the Band" on the concluding side.

VICTOR "POPS" ALBUM, M-392

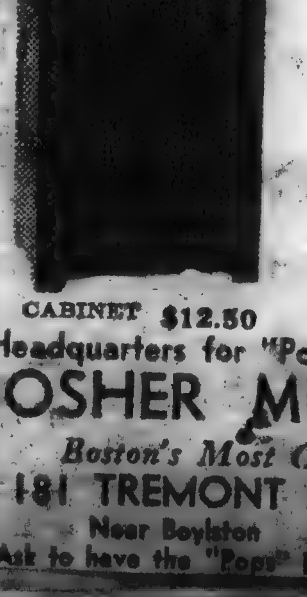
Comprising 2—12-inch records of Franz Liszt's famed "Todtentanz" (The Dance of Death). Favored by "Pops" Concert audiences.

BRIGGS & BRIGGS

1270 MASS. AVE., OPPOSITE WIDENER LIBRARY

KIR. 2007 HARVARD SQ., CAMBRIDGE KIR. 2008

RECORD CABINETS



CABINET $12.50

CABINET $14.95

Headquarters for "Pops" and All Victor Records

MOSHER MUSIC CO., INC.

Boston's Most Convenient Music Store

181 TREMONT ST., BOSTON, MASS.

Near Boylston LIberty 5063

Ask to have the "Pops" Program Mailed Free Each Week

Arthur Fiedler
Conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra

100 POPS Records to choose from

New Album Just Out!

ALBUM M554

"A BOSTON POPS CONCERT"

(A Night at the Pops in Miniature)

ARTHUR FIEDLER

Conductor

Featuring a Typical Group of Pops Selections

Russian and Ludmilla-Overture (Glinka)
Deep River (Arr. by Burleigh, Orchestrated by A. Jacchia)
Nobody Knows De Trouble I've Seen (Arr. by A. Jacchia)
(Doctrinen Waltz—Edward Strauss, Opus 79)
Goyescas—Intermezzo (Granados)
Eugen Onegin--Polonaise (Tchaikowsky, Opus 24) included in this group of 5 miniatures

Records in This Album Available Separately

4427—4428—4429, 12428—12429

Victor
Victor
Records

Pops Victor records are sold by dealers listed on this page

J. McKenna

19 Brattle Street,
Cambridge, Mass.
Kirkland 0809

◆

Complete Selection of Classical and Popular

Victor
Recordings

Modern Record Playing Equipment

Comfortable
Listening Booths
Trained Attendants

Coolidge Corner Elec. Shop

1416 Beacon St.,
Brookline, Mass.
Beacon 3300

Gilchrist's

Headquarters for Victor and Bluebird Records

Hear the New Pops Concert Album and other recordings by Boston's Famous Pops Orchestra. Full selection of musical masterpieces, Red Seal Records and RCA Victor portable phonographs.

BRAND NEW RCA VICTOR AUTOMATIC RECORD PLAYER

Walnut veneer lowboy cabinet, including $4.50 worth of famous Victor records of your own selection. $59.95

Radios, Records, Phonographs, Fourth Floor

Chickering's

New VICTOR RECORD DEPARTMENT

Here, in a smart, modernistic salon, you will enjoy hearing POPS and other classical and popular records. We invite you to visit us.

AMPICO HALL
HOME OF

Chickering's

Mason & Hamlin • Chickering • The Ampico

146 BOYLSTON STREET • Liberty 8100

BOSTON MUSIC COMPANY

For All

NEW VICTOR
RECORDS

MAIL AND TELEPHONE ORDERS FILLED

116 Boylston Street Next to Colonial Theatre

HANcock 1561

Outstanding Boston "Pops" Recordings

Dance of the Hours, Parts I & II	$1.50	Poet & Peasant Overture, Parts I & II	$1.50
Espana Rhapsody, Parts I & II	1.00	In a Persian Market, Parts I & II	1.00
Freischutz Overture, Parts I & II	1.50	Procession of the Sardar, In the Village	1.50
Jalousie Tango, Ritual Dance of Fire	1.50	Rhapsody in Blue, with Sanroma	3.50

Todtentanz with Sanroma 3.50

WE HAVE A COMPLETE STOCK OF THE RECORDS BY THE BOSTON "POPS" ORCHESTRA

Complete stocks of Victor & Bluebird Records.
Catalogs furnished on request.

E. O'BYRNE DE WITT'S SONS

RCA Victor Records—Victrolas—Radios

51 Warren Street — — — Roxbury, Mass.

Highlands 8616 Open Evenings

COMPLETE . . .

The Phonograph and Record Shop, 8 Milk St., has complete facilities for the record buyer,—a stock of records comprising practically every one of the 6500 selections listed in the Victor catalog, all the customary accessories, and a wide range of Victrolas from $9.95 up. Hear your favorite selection on a modern Victrola, in a comfortable, ventilated booth.

The chances are always about 49 to 1 that you will find the record you want at The Phonograph and Record Shop, 8 Milk St. (near Washington St.), Boston.

THE PHONOGRAPH AND RECORD SHOP

8 MILK STREET

HUBBARD 2296 BOSTON

LAWRENCE, MASS.—FRIDAY, MAY 26, 1939. THE EVENING TRIBU

MacDowell's Place Still Secure in the Musical Firmament

WHEN Edward Alexander MacDowell died in 1908 he left America a musical heritage that still stands unsurpassed by any other native composer. The MacDowell night at the Boston "Pops" on next Wednesday evening, brought to mind the significance of MacDowell's music and his place among real creative composers, and a brief sketch of his life and achievements seeems particularly appropriate at this time.

America's foremost instrumental colorist, as MacDowell has been styled, was born in New York in 1861 and died there in 1908. Available records state that his family was of Scotch-Irish extraction and came to this country somewhere about 1750. His early pianistic tutelage was with Juan Buitrago, Pablo Desvernine and later with the celebrated concert pianist, Teresa Carreno. When only 15 years old he went to Paris, studying composition with Savard and piano under Marmontel at the Conservatoire. He spent three years in the French capital, following which he moved to Wiesbaden to study with Ehlert, thence to Frankfort for piano study with Heymann, and composition under Raff.

The fame of Joachim Raff may not burn very brightly today, but a few generations ago he was called the "great German romanticist." Raff's interest in MacDowell proved the turning point in his career and undoubtedly greatly influenced the musical development and style of the youthful American, For hour upon hour Raff worked with MacDowell upon the most difficult of musical problems and it was through Raff that he was given an important teaching position at the Darmstadt Conservatory in 1881. The great Franz Liszt, to whom he was introduced by Raff, took a deep interest in his obvious talent and was instrumental in securing a performance of MacDowell's own piano suite before the Universal German Musical society in 1882. Needless to say Liszt's patronage was not misplaced, as the suite was given a most cordial reception. This greatly encouraged MacDowell and he decided to remain in Germany, settling in Wiesbaden as pianist and composer.

In 1884 he returned to this country for a short visit, during which he was married to a former pupil, Miss Marion Nevins. But in 1888 he returned and took up his residence in Boston, where his piano works attracted the attention of Wilhelm Gericke, at that time head of the Boston Symphony orchestra. It was under Gericke's direction that he played his own new piano concerto in D minor in 1889. Later, under Gericke's immediate successors, Artur Nikisch and Emil Paur, all of MacDowell's orchestral works received their first hearing and it was only a matter of time when the apparition became a reality. MacDowell's fame spread rapidly throughout his native land.

When Columbia university created a music department in 1896, the trustees unanimously decided upon MacDowell as the first director. Upon assuming these new duties, he ceased his pianistic career, devoting himself exclusively to teaching and composition. These years in New York were the most fruitful of his career. He was conductor of the Mendelssohn Glee club from 1897 to 1899. A few years later his health began to fail, causing him to resign his Columbia post in 1904, when a year's leave of absence brought no improvement. His malady was diagnosed as a gradual disintegration of the brain tissues.

Regardless of his untimely death at the age of 46, MacDowell did live long enough to see his talents recognized. To Teresa Carreno is due no little credit for this timely appreciation. Except for MacDowell, himself, she was the first really distinguished artist to place his works on her programs. This gave them the prestige of high artistic approval. She did this in Europe as well as in this country on her concert tours.

Despite the fact that he died over 30 years ago, and numerous native composers have flashed into the field of composition, it is quite generally conceded that MacDowell stands as America's foremost creative musician, due primarily to his striking originality. In his mature works he developed an individual style that sets him as a distinct musical personality that cannot be confused with any other. Besides the rare gift of fertile invention MacDowell's craftsmanship—if so prosaic a term can be deemed appropriate—was stamped by a fine sense of proportion, symmetry and artistic unity. How well he knew the secret of maintaining a fundamental mood, carefully avoiding any irrelevant or disturbing elements. His harmonic scheme employed modernistic boldness, but never went beyond the limits of good taste and form.

Among the most distinguished of MacDowell's orchestral works are the "Woodland Sketches," "Indian Suites," the symphonic poems, "Hamlet," "Ophelia," "Launcelot and Elaine," and "Lania"; two piano concertos and a Romance for 'cello and orchestra. His notable piano scores include two Modern Suites; four sonatas (Tragic, Eroica, Norse, Keltic); also many concert etudes and solo pieces. His vocal compositions comprise 30 choruses and part songs, also some 40 solo songs.

Shortly after his death, the MacDowell Colony was founded in Peterborough, N. H., by his widow. The purpose was to provide a place of quiet and seclusion where creative artists could work during the summer seasons. The affairs are administered by the MacDowell Memorial association and the composer's widow, now well in her 70's, is still the prime mover in the project. It is to be hoped that sufficient funds will be forthcoming ere long to clear away the wreckage caused by the hurricane of last fall, so that this memorial to America's eminent composer will again function in a manner worthy of the musical heritage left by Edward Alexander MacDowell.

—A. L. M.

MacDOWELL NIGHT AT THE BOSTON "POPS"

The Pop concert by the members of the Boston Symphony and Arthur Fiedler on Wednesday evening,, May 31, will be given for the benefit of the MacDowell Colony at Peterborough, New Hampshire. Owing to the extreme ravages of the hurricane in the Peterborough district, the MacDowell Colony which has been such a solace to artists, musicians and writers in the summer months, will not open this year. Funds are being raised for clearing and planting in the hope that in the future, this unique endeavor may be restored to some measure of its former usefulness, and this concert is dedicated to that purpose.

Guests of honor will be Mrs. Edward MacDowell and Ernest Schelling. Jesus Maria Sanroma will play MacDowell's Second Piano Concerto. The Hans Wiener Dancers will be seen in Walter Piston's ballet, "The Incredible Flutist."

Federal Music Project Units In North Andover on June 2.

The combined concert in the auditorium of the North Andover high school planned for next Friday evening, June 2, under the sponsorship of the junior units of the American Legion,, Post 219, will bring two of the most popular units of the federal music project, the Federal Sinfoninetta and the Federal Southland Singers.

The Federal Southland Singers, which will furnish the vocal part of the concert is conducted by Lycurgus Lockman. This is a group of eight men and women negro singers who specialize in typical American negro music. They introduce to their delighted audiences a collection of spirituals seldom heard on the usual program. Plantation melodies full of the beauty that is their tradition find a faithful interpretation through the rich and expressive voices of these singers. For variety the repertoire also includes the magnificent music of Brahms, Palestrina, Bach and other great classicists.

In contrast to these vocalists, the Federal Sinfonietta conducted by Edward Rosenwald offers a program of classical symphony compositions, achieving, in spite of its small size the effect of a regular size group by the excellent choice of instrumentation. Although of recent organization the Sinfonietta has already scored a number of successes in concert appearances in different sections of the state.

Ticket committees of the junior units are conducting an intensive drive in an earnest effort to make this occasion the great success it deserves. Lewis C. Rokes of North Andover is in charge of arrangements for the Junior Units organization.

FOREIGN CONDUCTOR PAYS HIGH TRIBUTE TO AMERICAN ORCHESTRAS

After spending the past six months in this country, Werner Wolff, noted European conductor, unhesitatingly says that American orchestras now lead the world. Mr. Wolff says in part: "Obviously it is unnecessary to point out that the quality of musical performance here is extremely high. New York has become one of the—if not the—music centers of the world. It is a sign of the times that today outstanding European musicians come to the United States less for financial reward than for the purpose of building up their reputations. What has impressed me most of all is the surprisingly high technical standard of musical performance. The technical perfection of the maor orchestras is amazing. Perhaps the best explanation is the one made to me some years ago by a great European conductor, who came to this country frequently. He attributed the high qualities of such orchestras as the New York Philharmonic and Boston Symphony to the fact that they had been able to obtain the services of the best strings of Austria and Czecho-Slovakia, the trumpets and trombones of Germany, and the woodwinds of France."

PADEREWSKI STILL HOLDS COMMUNION WITH THE AGE OF ROMANTICISM

Commenting upon the recently published volume, "The Paderewski Memoirs," in his highly poetic manner, Lawrence Gilman, in the New York Herald-Tribune, waxes eloquent upon the Paderewski manner thusly: "In an epoch which has forsworn the grand style and the heroic approach, which has dedicated itself to other ends and other attachments than the spacious and magnificent idealisms of the Romantic Age, Mr. Paderewski remains a superb and imposing anachronism. He continues to walk the earth as the very sign and symbol of the grand manner, as the Romantic Age incarnate, the very tongue of nobly heroic eloquence, a master of forgotten incantations. For him, the splendors of the great tradition remain untarnished and undisplaced; the loveliness and the passion of an old enchantment still [illegible] and inspire him."

Plans for Annual Berkshire Music Festival Well Advanced.

Berkshire Symphonic Festival activities were on in earnest this week in anticipation of the concerts to be given the first two weeks in August by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Following a visit to the Berkshires, Dr. Koussevitzky announced that he had cancelled his plans to go to Europe this summer and; instead, will spend several weeks at Saratoga Springs, N. Y.. It is likely that for a period before and after the festival he will take a house in Stockbridge or Lenox.

Although hundreds of music lovers have taken out memberships and many subscriptions have been received this spring, there are plenty of seats available in the new music shed at "Tanglewood" for those who wish to hear the concerts.

Many improvements have been made to the physical property at Tanglewood. These include the laying of hundreds of feet of tile to drain the large parking area, hauling in hundreds of tons of gravel to fill in low spots in the parking field, improvements to roads, erection of a steel tower for improved lighting of the parking area, painting of the interior of the shed. The gardens, too, are receiving their share of attention to be in readiness for the many visitors who flock to Tanglewood before the concerts. Complete information about programe and other details may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

MADEMOISELLE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUN - - 1939

BY GEORGE FRAZIER

Aaron Copland is that most rare of birds, an enormously gifted composer who is also a sensitive and knowing critic of the art form wherein he works. His What to Listen for in Music (Whittlesey House) is just about the best job of music appreciation that has come along in a disturbingly long while. It is written calmly and with a decent respect for good music and, at least for anyone with a sincere desire to get the most out of what he hears, it should be practically indispensable. What it does is something that no other work that I know of does half so well: it arouses a keen desire to appreciate the best in music and, what is vastly more important, it actually makes you a more understanding and sympathetic listener to every variety of significant music than you were before you read it.

RECORDS

The other side to Mr. Copland, the side that qualifies him as one of the ablest of contemporary composers, is represented on the current Victor lists by his immensely exciting El Salon Mexico, which Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony perform with prodigious zest. El Salon Mexico, it should be explained, is the Roseland Ballroom of Mexico City. It is more of a cabaret than the B'way spot, of course, but enough of an analogy exists between them to suggest the sort of place Mr. Copland is trying to set to music. This El Salon Mexico is rich music, but it is more than that. Impressionistic all over the place, it somehow manages to avoid being just another one of those programmatic bores that do such irreparable hurt to the cause of good music. What with two such contributions as What to Listen for in Music and El Salon Mexico, Mr. Copland, at least for the time being, is my boy.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUN 2 - 1939

The Music Box

By JOHN D. DONOGHUE

When Ludwig Juht, contra bass soloist with the Boston Symphony orchestra and indefatigable recitalist, appears here on the 13th for A. I. C. graduation exercises, commencement-goers will hear some virtuoso playing, for Papa Koussevitzky started as a contra bass player, and will nothing but the best.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
Sunday
Union & Republican

MAY 28 1939

Right . . . Ludwig Juht, contra-bass soloist and member of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who will play at the graduation exercises of American International college in the Auditorium Tuesday night, June 13.

14

MacDowell's Place Still Secure in the Musical Firmament

MacDOWELL NIGHT AT THE BOSTON "POPS"

The Pop concert by the members of the Boston Symphony and Arthur Fiedler on Wednesday evening, May 31, will be given for the benefit of the MacDowell Colony at Peterborough, New Hampshire. Owing to the extreme ravages of the hurricane in the Peterborough district, the MacDowell Colony which has been such a solace to artists, musicians and writers in the summer months, will not open this year. Funds are being raised for clearing and planting in the hope that in the future, this unique endeavor may be restored to some measure of its former usefulness, and this concert is dedicated to that purpose.

Guests of honor will be Mrs. Edward MacDowell and Ernest Schelling. Jesus Maria Sanroma will play MacDowell's Second Piano Concerto. The Hans Wiener Dancers will be seen in Walter Piston's ballet, "The Incredible Flutist."

When Edward Alexander MacDowell died in 1908 he left America a musical heritage that still stands unsurpassed by any other native composer. The MacDowell night at the Boston "Pops" on next Wednesday evening, brought to mind the significance of MacDowell's music and his place among real creative composers, and a brief sketch of his life and achievements seeems particularly appropriate at this time.

America's foremost instrumental colorist, as MacDowell has been styled, was born in New York in 1861 and died there in 1908. Available records state that his family was of Scotch-Irish extraction and came to this country somewhere about 1750. His early pianistic tutelage was with Juan Buitrago, Pablo Desvernine and later with the celebrated concert pianist, Teresa Carreno. When only 15 years old he went to Paris, studying composition with Savard and piano under Marmontel at the Conservatoire. He spent three years in the French capital, following which he moved to Wiesbaden to study with Ehlert, thence to Frankfort for piano study with Heymann, and composition under Raff.

The fame of Joachim Raff may not burn very brightly today, but a few generations ago he was called the "great German romanticist." Raff's interest in MacDowell proved the turning point in his career and undoubtedly greatly influenced the musical development and style of the youthful American. For hour upon hour Raff worked with MacDowell upon the most difficult of musical problems and it was through Raff that he was given an important teaching position at the Darmstadt Conservatory in 1881. The great Franz Liszt, to whom he was introduced by Raff, took a deep interest in his obvious talent and was instrumental in securing a performance of MacDowell's own piano suite before the Universal German Musical society in 1882. Needless to say Liszt's patronage was not misplaced, as the suite was given a most cordial reception. This greatly encouraged MacDowell and he decided to remain in Germany, settling in Wiesbaden as pianist and composer.

In 1884 he returned to this country for a short visit, during which he was married to a former pupil, Miss Marion Nevins. But in 1888 he returned and took up his residence in Boston, where his piano works attracted the attention of Wilhelm Gericke, at that time head of the Boston Symphony orchestra. It was under Gericke's direction that he played his own new piano concerto in D minor in 1889. Later, under Gericke's immediate successors, Artur Nikisch and Emil Paur, all of MacDowell's orchestral works received their first hearing and it was only a matter of time when the apparition became a reality. MacDowell's fame spread rapidly throughout his native land.

When Columbia university created a music department in 1896, the trustees unanimously decided upon MacDowell as the first director. Upon assuming these new duties, he ceased his pianistic career, devoting himself exclusively to teaching and composition. These years in New York were the most fruitful of his career. He was conductor of the Mendelssohn Glee club from 1897 to 1899. A few years later his health began to fail, causing him to resign his Columbia post in 1904, when a year's leave of absence brought no improvement. His malady was diagnosed as a gradual disintegration of the brain tissues.

Regardless of his untimely death at the age of 46, MacDowell did live long enough to see his talents recognized. To Teresa Carreno is due no little credit for this timely appreciation. Except for MacDowell, himself, she was the first really distinguished artist to place his works on her programs. This gave them the prestige of high artistic approval. She did this in Europe as well as in this country on her concert tours.

Despite the fact that he died over 30 years ago, and numerous native composers have flashed into the field of composition, it is quite generally conceded that MacDowell stands as America's foremost creative musician, due primarily to his striking originality. In his mature works he developed an individual style that sets him as a distinct musical personality that cannot be confused with any other. [illegible] the rare gift of fertile inv[illegible] MacDowell's craftsmanship—if prosaic a term can be deemed appropriate—was stamped by a fine sense of proportion, symmetry and artistic unity. How well he knew the secret of maintaining a fundamental mood, carefully avoiding any irrelevant or disturbing elements. His harmonic scheme employed modernistic boldness, but never went beyond the limits of good taste and form.

Among the most distinguished of MacDowell's orchestral works are the "Woodland Sketches," "Indian Suites," the symphonic poems, "Hamlet," "Ophelia," "Launcelot and Elaine," and "Lamia"; two piano concertos and a Romance for 'cello and orchestra. His notable piano scores include two Modern Suites, four sonatas (Tragic, Eroica, Norse, Keltic); also many concert etudes and solo pieces. His vocal compositions comprise 30 choruses and part songs, also some 40 solo songs.

Shortly after his death, the MacDowell Colony was founded in Peterborough, N. H., by his widow. The purpose was to provide a place of quiet and seclusion where creative artists could work during the summer seasons. The affairs are administered by the MacDowell Memorial association and the composer's widow, now well in her 70's, is still the prime mover in the project. It is to be hoped that sufficient funds will be forthcoming ere long to clear away the wreckage caused by the hurricane of last fall, so that this memorial to America's eminent composer will again function in a manner worthy of the musical heritage left by Edward Alexander MacDowell.

—A. L. M.

Federal Music Project Units In North Andover on June 2.

The combined concert in the auditorium of the North Andover high school planned for next Friday evening, June 2, under the sponsorship of the junior units of the American Legion, Post 219, will bring two of the most popular units of the federal music project, the Federal Sinfonietta and the Federal Southland Singers.

The Federal Southland Singers, which will furnish the vocal part of the concert is conducted by Lycurgus Lockman. This is a group of eight men and women negro singers who specialize in typical American negro music. They introduce to their delighted audiences a collection of spirituals seldom heard on the usual program. Plantation melodies full of the beauty that is their tradition find a faithful interpretation through the rich and expressive voices of these singers. For variety the repertoire also includes the magnificent music of Brahms, Palestrina, Bach and other great classicists.

In contrast to these vocalists, the Federal Sinfonietta conducted by Edward Rosenwald offers a program of classical symphony compositions, achieving, in spite of its small size the effect of a regular size group by the excellent choice of instrumentation. Although of recent organization the Sinfonietta has already scored a number of successes in concert appearances in different sections of the state.

Ticket committees of the junior units are conducting an intensive drive in an earnest effort to make this occasion the great success it deserves. Lewis C. Rokes of North Andover is in charge of arrangements for the Junior Units organization.

PADEREWSKI STILL HOLDS COMMUNION WITH THE AGE OF ROMANTICISM

Commenting upon the recently published volume, "The Paderewski Memoirs," in his highly poetic manner, Lawrence Gilman, in the New York Herald-Tribune, waxes eloquent upon the Paderewski manner thusly: "In an epoch which has forsworn the grand style and the heroic approach, which has dedicated itself to other ends and other attachments than the spacious and magnificent idealisms of the Romantic Age, Mr. Paderewski remains a superb and imposing anachronism. He continues to walk the earth as the very sign and symbol of the grand manner, as the Romantic Age incarnate, the very tongue of nobly heroic eloquence, a master of forgotten incantations. For him, the splendors of the great tradition remain untarnished and undisplaced; the loveliness and the passion of an old enchantment still shake and inspire him."

[illegible] CONDUCTOR [illegible] HIGH TRIBUTE TO [illegible]ICAN ORCHESTRAS

After spending the past six months in this country, Werner Wolff, noted European conductor, unhesitatingly says that American orchestras now lead the world. Mr. Wolff says in part: "Obviously it is unnecessary to point out that the quality of musical performance here is extremely high. New York has become one of the—if not the—music centers of the world. It is a sign of the times that today outstanding European musicians come to the United States less for financial reward than for the purpose of building up their reputations. What has impressed me most of all is the surprisingly high technical standard of musical performance. The technical perfection of the maor orchestras is amazing. Perhaps the best explanation is the one made to me some years ago by a great European conductor, who came to this country frequently. He attributed the high qualities of such orchestras as the New York Philharmonic and Boston Symphony to the fact that they had been able to obtain the services of the best strings of Austria and Czecho-Slovakia, the trumpets and trombones of Germany, and the woodwinds of France."

Plans for Annual Berkshire Music Festival Well Advanced.

Berkshire Symphonic Festival activities were on in earnest this week in anticipation of the concerts to be given the first two weeks in August by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Following a visit to the Berkshires, Dr. Koussevitzky announced that he had cancelled his plans to go to Europe this summer and, instead, will spend several weeks at Saratoga Springs, N. Y.. It is likely that for a period before and after the festival he will take a house in Stockbridge or Lenox.

Although hundreds of music lovers have taken out memberships and many subscrip[illegible]ons have been received this spri[illegible], there are plenty of seats available in the new music shed at "Tanglewood" for those who wish to hear the concerts.

Many improvements have been made to the physical property at Tanglewood. These include the laying of hundreds of feet of tile to drain the large parking area, hauling in hundreds of tons of gravel to fill in low spots in the parking field, improvements to roads, erection of a steel tower for improved lighting of the parking area, painting of the interior of the shed. The gardens, too, are receiving their share of attention to be in readiness for the many visitors who flock to Ta[illegible]wood before the concerts. Comp[illegible] information about programs and other details may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

MADEMOISELLE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JUN - - 1939

BY GEORGE FRAZIER

Aaron Copland is that most rare of birds, an enormously gifted composer who is also a sensitive and knowing critic of the art form wherein he works. His What to Listen for in Music (Whittlesey House) is just about the best job of music appreciation that has come along in a disturbingly long while. It is written calmly and with a decent respect for good music and, at least for anyone with a sincere desire to get the most out of what he hears, it should be practically indispensable. What it does is something that no other work that I know of does half so well: it arouses a keen desire to appreciate the best in music and, what is vastly more important, it actually makes you a more understanding and sympathetic listener to every variety of significant music than you were before you read it.

RECORDS

The other side to Mr. Copland, the side that qualifies him as one of the ablest of contemporary composers, is represented on the current Victor lists by his immensely exciting El Salon Mexico, which Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony perform with prodigious zest. El Salon Mexico, it should be explained, is the Roseland Ballroom of Mexico City. It is more of a cabaret than the B'way spot, of course, but enough of an analogy exists between them to suggest the sort of place Mr. Copland is trying to set to music. This El Salon Mexico is rich music, but it is more than that. Impressionistic all over the place, it somehow manages to avoid being just another one of those programmatic bores that do such irreparable hurt to the cause of good music. What with two such contributions as What to Listen for in Music and El Salon Mexico, Mr. Copland, at least for the time being, is my boy.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
Sunday
Union & Republican
MAY 28 1939

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
JUN 2 - 1939

The Mu

By JOHN D.

When Ludwig Juht, contra bass soloist with the Boston Symphony orchestra and indefatigable recitalist, appears here on the 13th for A. I. C. graduation exercises, commencement-goers will hear some virtuoso playing, for Papa Koussevitzky started as a contra bass player, and will nothing but the best.

ADV

Right . . . Ludwig Juht, contra-bass soloist and member of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who will play at the graduation exercises of American International college in the Auditorium Tuesday night, June 13.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY, MAY 27, 1939

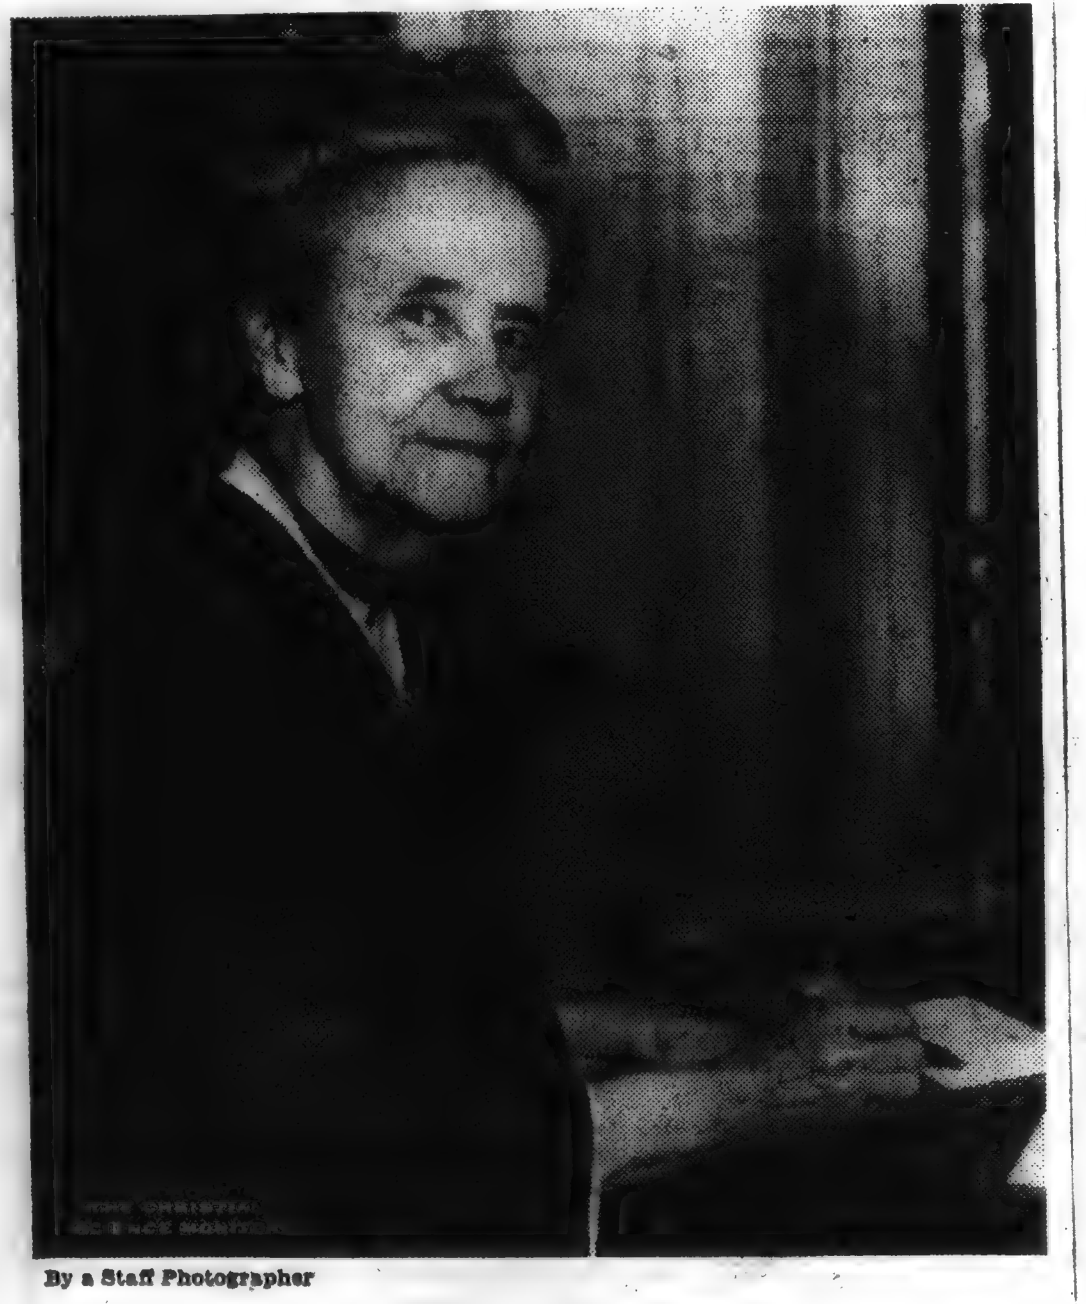
Light and Serious

On top are grouped the four persons most intimately associated with the revival of "The Incredible Flutist" at the Pop Concerts in Symphony Hall next Monday and Wednesday evenings. From left to right they are Walter Piston, who wrote the music; Arthur Fiedler, who will conduct it; Hans Wiener, who devised the choreography and will dance the name-part, and Mario Montedoro, who designed the scenery. Below, at the left, is Claude Jean Chiasson, harpsichordist, who will present a concert of old music with David Hoyt Kimball, flutist, at Gore Place, Waltham, next Thursday afternoon. At the right is Yves Chardon, who will conduct the Pop Orchestra on "Longy Night" next Thursday.

June 1/39

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

Honored for Service to the Arts



By a Staff Photographer

Mrs. Edward MacDowell

Guest at "Pops" MacDowell Night.

Pop-Fare

Americana on Tap At Symphony Hall

A series of concerts exceptionally varied and rich in special features of one sort or another will fill next week at the Symphony Hall Pops. With Arthur Fiedler conducting as usual, for the most part, there will be a guest-conductor for a single item on Wednesday, when Ernest Schelling directs the performance of his own "Victory Ball"; and for an entire evening on Thursday when Yves Chardon steps out of the orchestra to conduct his colleagues in that organization and others in the Longy School.

Hans Wiener and his dancers appear during the first three evenings of the week, on Monday and Wednesday in "The Incredible Flutist," well liked novelty of last season, on Tuesday in a group of shorter numbers. Jesus Maria Sanroma will appear as soloist in the Second Piano Concerto of MacDowell on Wednesday, in Gershwin's Concerto in F on Sunday evening, June 4. Three Longy School faculty members will join in performance of the Bach Concerto in C major on Thursday, and Leo Litwin will repeat the "Rhapsody in Blue" on Friday, when Robert McBride, talented American composer, will be clarinet soloist in one of his own pieces. And E. Power Biggs will be the soloist in two organ concertos of Handel on Sunday.

The complete program for the week, including this evening and through Sunday, June 4, follows:

Tonight

"Schechenyi Indulok" March	Fahrbach
Overture to "Der Freischuitz"	Weber
Prelude to "The Deluge"	Saint-Saens
Violin solo, Julius Theodorwicz
Dance of the Comedians from "Snow Maiden"	Rimsky-Korsakov
Divertissement	Ibert
First Hungarian Dance	Brahms
Rhapsody in Blue	Gershwin
Piano soloist, Leo Litwin
"Tales from the Vienna Woods," Waltzes	Strauss
Begin the Beguine	Porter
In the Hall of the Troll King, from "Peer Gynt"	Grieg

Monday Evening

Marche Militaire	Schubert
Overture to "Mignon"	Thomas
Molly on the Shore	Grainger
"Cavalleria Rusticana," Fantasia	Mascagni
Austrian Peasant Dances	Schoenherr
Second "Norwegian" Dance	Grieg
Italian Capriccio	Tchaikovsky
The Incredible Flutist	Piston
(Dance play by Hans Wiener) Hans Wiener and his dancers with orchestra

Tuesday Evening

Stars and Stripes Forever	Sousa
Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor"	Nicolai
Liebestraum	Liszt-Herbert
"Procession of Bacchus," from "Sylvia"	Delibes
Invitation to the Dance	Weber-Berlioz
Overture to "Tannhauser"	Wagner
American Fantasy	Herbert
Hans Wiener with Erika Thimey and dancers, with orchestra
Lyrical Suite (Saudades de Brazil)	Milhaud
Velasquerias (Triana)	Albeniz
Provincial (Alborada del Grazioso)	Ravel
Dimensional Fugue	Culbertson
Slavic Dance (Furiante)	Weinberger
Waltz, "Wine, Woman and Song"	Strauss

Wednesday Evening

Wedding March from "Le Coq d'Or	Rimsky-Korsakov
Scherzo from the Octet	Mendelssohn
Overture to "The Bartered Bride"	Smetana
A Victory Ball	Schelling
(Conducted by the Composer)
Piano Concerto in D minor	MacDowell
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
The Incredible Flutist	Piston
(Dance play by Hans Wiener) Hans Wiener and his dancers with orchestra

Thursday Evening

Ives Chardon, Conducting

"French Militaire March," from the Algerian Suite	Saint-Saens
Overture to "The Roman Carnival"	Berlioz
The Afternoon of a Faun	Debussy
Espana	Chabrier
Concerto for three pianos in C major	Bach
Soloists Margaret MacDonald, David Bacon Elmer Schoettle
Picaresque Overture	Bonvalog
La Valse	Ravel
"Artists' Life," Waltzes	Strauss
March of the Little Lead Soldiers	Pierne
Second Hungarian Rhapsody	Liszt

Friday Evening

Polonaise from "Eugen Onegin"	Tchaikovsky
Overture to "Euryanthe"	Weber
Praeludium	Jarnefelt
Finlandia	Sibelius
Valse Triste	Sibelius
Bolero	Ravel
Rhapsody in Blue	Gershwin
Soloist: Leo Litwin
Tales from the Vienna Woods	Strauss
The Toy Trumpet	Scott
Farandole from "L'Arlesienne"	Bizet

Saturday Evening

Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin"	Wagner
"Carmen," Fantasia	Bizet
Song Without Words	Tchaikovsky
"Peer Gynt" Suite	Grieg
"Emperor" Waltz	Strauss
First "Hungarian" Rhapsody	Liszt
Songs by the Mass. Institute of Technology Glee Club Henry Jackson Warren, Conductor Alva L. Herman, '39, Student Leader
Fugato on a Well-Known Theme	McBride
Swing Stuff	McBride
(Clarinet solo by the Composer)
Strike up the Band	Gershwin

Sunday Evening

Praeludium from the Violin Sonata in E major	Bach-Cailliet
Concerto for Organ and Orchestra in B flat	Handel
Concerto for Organ and Orchestra in G minor	Handel
Soloist: E. Power Biggs
Concerto for Piano and Orchestra in F	Gershwin
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
Scherzo from the Fourth Symphony; Waltz, "Briar Rose," from "Sleeping Beauty"; Marche Slave	Tchaikovsky

---

ng Transcript May 29/39

Erika Thimey with Wiener at Pops

The varicolored program presented by Hans Wiener with Erika Thimey and Dancers at the Symphony Hall Pop concert last night was the occasion for the local debut of a vivid new personality in the person of Miss Thimey. Coming from the "Continent," via Chicago, Miss Thimey displayed moods and variations no less diversified than the music so ably played by the Pops Orchestra under Arthur Fiedler.

"Velasquerias," to "Triana" by Albeniz, and adressed in the eye-compelling costumes of 17th century Spain, was executed by Mr. Wiener and Miss Thimey with effective authenticity, although the movement at times was too free for the period. There was even an under-current of contemporary emotion enhanced by the background of male dancers, without whom the dance would have been no less impressive. In contrast was the "Slavic Dance" to Weinberger's "Furiante,'" an abandoned folk-dance in which Mr. Wiener and Miss Thimey again combined talents. The former's engaging personality was overshadowed by the remarkable projection of the redoubtable Miss Thimey.

Mr. Wiener's solo, by request. was "Circus," to the familiar "Entrance of the Gladiators" by Fucik, in which much excellent miming plus a little dancing made up a one-man variety show, somewhat lacking in variety. But the audience loved it, with all its familiar foibles. And, by the same token, the musical moods of Milhaud interpreted by the Concert Group in the "Lyrical Suite" was less effective, for it should be viewed by a dance audience rather than at Pops, where it made little headway in gaining recruits for the modern dance.

The entire group danced "Provincial" to Ravel's "Alborada del Grazioso" in a gay, broadly mimed and teasing satire full of spring and spice. Marco Montedoro's costumes and Mr. Wiener's exceptional aptitude for pictorial brilliance provided a rollicking vehicle limning engaging characterizations by Wiener and Kathryn Pope, and a sharp vignette by the talented and eccentric Ken Whelan. As with the Jooss Ballet, there seemed to be some uncertainty whether to embrace the modern dance wholeheartedly or to imbue it with definite classical characteristics. Unlike the Jooss, however, there is not the superb technical performance to shield this indecision while hovering between the classical and modern schools.

The concluding "Waltz," to Strauss's "Wine, Women and Song," was an everwelcome repetition of this joyously novel and intriguing composition so gaily danced by the principals and the concert group, notably enhanced in feeling by Miss Thimey, Anita Rafey, and Dorothy Sammis. There remains the hesitant question regarding an extended repertory of contemporary American thematic substance and costuming.

W. R.

Globe MUSIC May 29/39

SYMPHONY HALL

Ballet at the Pops

"The Incredible Flutist," ballet by Hans Wiener and Walter Piston, was the highlight of the Pop concert in Symphony Hall last night. First presented last season, "The Incredible Flutist" is an ingenious piece of choregraphy which tells very well a simple and comic story. The characters are amusing and varied, and the stage is usually full of action.

Walter Piston's music for the ballet is in just the right vein—light, rippling, full of tunes that emphasize the comic business on the stage, and neatly spiced with dissonant harmony. The writing for orchestra, too, is extremely clever, with all its kaleidoscopic shades of instrumental color.

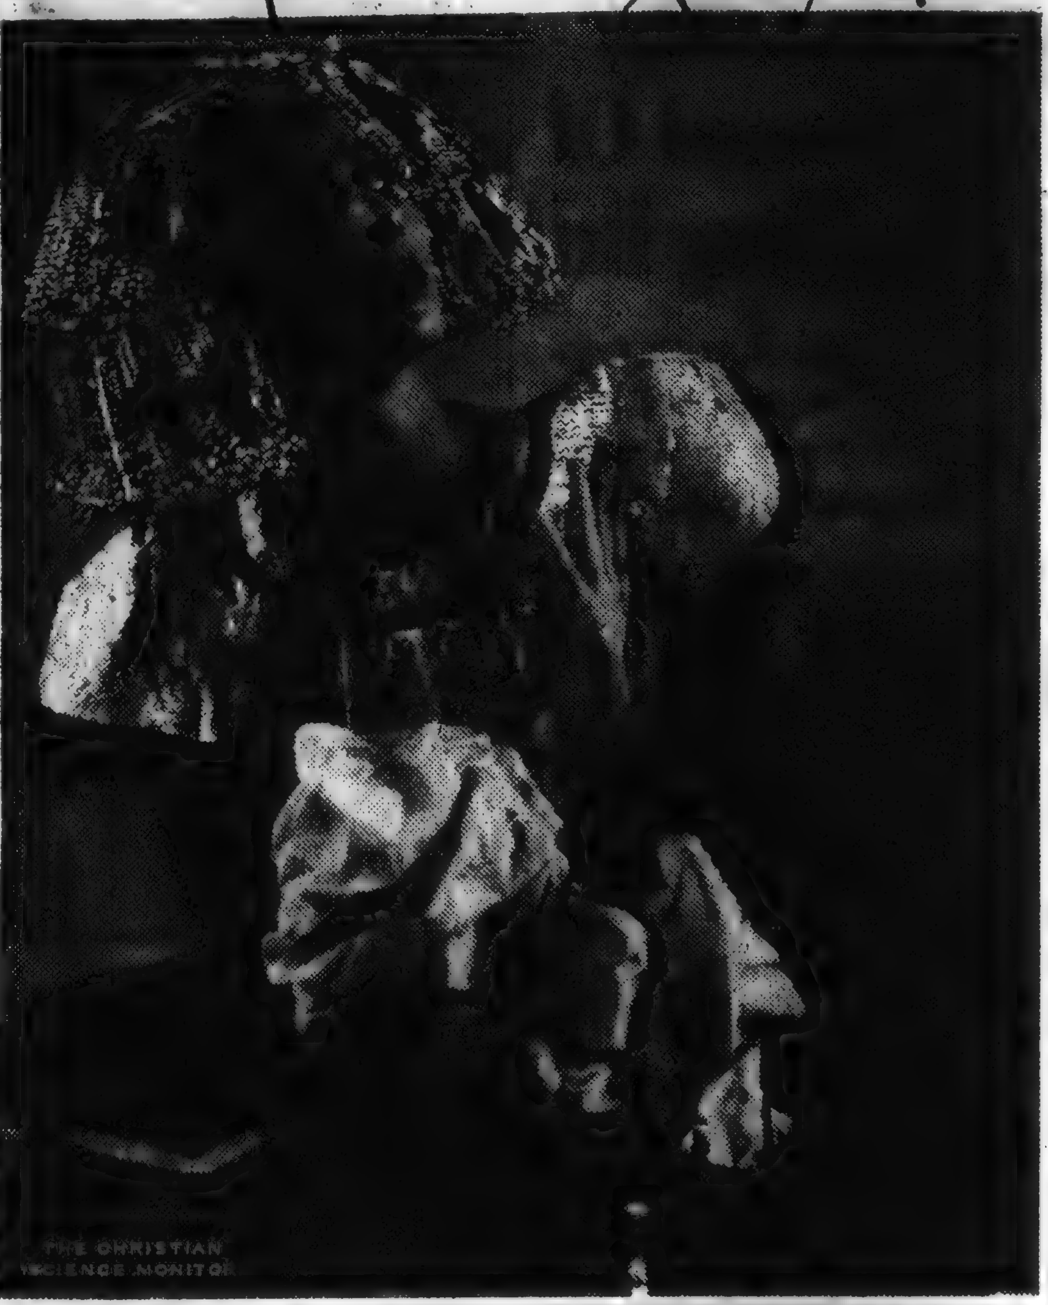
The performance was the first appearance at the Pops this season of Hans Wiener and his group of dancers. Mr. Wiener was cordially applauded for his effective dancing of the title role. Tonight Mr. Wiener and his group will appear at the Pops in a different program, and tomorrow there will be a repetition of "The Incredible Flutist."

Arthur Fiedler conducted in spirited style. The earlier part of the program consisted of Pops favorites, including Schubert's "Military March," the Overture to "Mignon," Schoenherr's vivacious "Austrian Peasant Dances," and the "Italian Caprice" by Tchaikovsky.—C. W. D.

(16)

rld' on the Scree

C. S. Monitor - May 23/39



Dancers for the Pops

Above: Erika Thimey who will be seen as Hans Wiener's partner in "Velasquerias" Tuesday evening. Below: Miriam Winslow and Foster Fitz-Simons in "American Chromo' to be danced this evening.

Hans Wiener's Pops Programs

For "The Incredible Flutist," to be presented by Hans Wiener with his Dance Group and a supporting cast of 20 members at the Symphony Hall Concerts of May 29 and 31, a brief synopsis is provided, as follows:

The scene opens at the siesta hour. Soon the little shop opens, various customers enter and the daughters of the house display the wares.

Amid much excitement, a sideshow comes to town. The Flutist airily charms first the snake, then the snake dancer, and last, one of the daughters. A tryst is made for 8 o'clock.

When the rich widow and her sons appear, more trysts are made.

Eight o'clock arrives, the daughters meet their sweethearts. And so does the widow. A practical joke takes the wrong turn. And the Flutist proves what "fluting" can do.

A jolly "hands around" ends all happily.

The musical score was written for the ballet by Walter Piston; the costumes designed by Marco Montedoro of Radio City Music Hall.

The costumes were executed in the Hans Wiener Studio under the supervision of Katrine Hooper. The painting of set and costumes was done by Dante Giglio.

Mr. Wiener's program for May 30, will introduce his new associate of this season, Erika Thimey. They will be supported by the dance group in a number of miscellaneous selections. The program follows:

1. Lyrical Suite ... Milhaud
   Carefree—Marauder—Game—Under Cover
   Hans Wiener, Estelle Kibbe, Kathryn Pope, Dorothy Sammis, Anita Rafey
2. Velasquerias (Seventeenth-Century Spain) ... Albeniz
   Hans Wiener with Erika Thimey
   Maurice Alpert, Frederick Lee, Cowden McCord, George Wells, Ken Whelan
3. Provincial ... Ravel
   (a) Betrothal
       Hans Wiener, Kathryn Pope
   (b) Mourners
       Erika Thimey, Estelle Kibbe, Dorothy Sammis, Maurice Alpert, Frederick Lee
   (c) Christening
       Betty Caplan, Anitā Rafey, Cowden McCord, Ken Whalen
   (d) Wedding
       Hans Wiener, Kathryn Pope
4. Dimensional Fugue (from "Architectural Suite") ... Culbertson
   Estelle Kibbe, Kathryn Pope, Dorothy Sammis
5. Slavic Dance ... Weinberger
   Hans Wiener with Erika Thimey
6. Waltz ... Strauss
   Hans Wiener with Erika Thimey
   Estelle Kibbe, Kathryn Pope, Dorothy Sammis, Anita Rafey, Marion Goodstein

---

Head of Peterboro Colony Pushes Drive for Reopening

C. S. Monitor By Wanda MacDowell June 1/39

Staff Writer of The Christian Science Monitor

When the audience at Symphony Hall "Pops" last night arose at the close of the performance of MacDowell's piano concerto, it was a tribute to a delicate, sweet-faced woman seated at one of the tables, who was almost eclipsed by a bunch of American Beauty roses thrust into her arms. It was Mrs. Edward MacDowell, widow of the composer, receiving a tribute to her husband's genius and to her own courage and energy in carrying on the MacDowell Colony in Peterboro, N. H., for the rehabilitation of which, after the hurricane, receipts of the concert were devoted.

Nothing, apparently, can daunt the valiant spirit of Mrs. MacDowell, who has just finished a concert tour in the South, having given recitals in Florida and at the annual MacDowell Music Festival in Atlanta.

"I always mean to stop playing in public," she said naïvely yesterday morning when interviewed at the Parker House. "But the Colony is always in need, and playing my husband's compositions seems to be the way I can help supply funds. I never ask for money. I tell my story, play my program, and earn my funds.

"I have a vital interest that keeps me young. I believe the reason most women of my age are 'old ladies' is because they lack such a stimulus to work."

For 30 years, ever since her husband passed on, Mrs. MacDowell has worked to continue and extend the usefulness of the idea that was dear to his heart. Their romance is almost too well known to repeat. After they were married in Germany and returned to America a few years later, they came to Boston to live, and then wandered up to New Hampshire in the summer and found a deserted farm with a rambling old house that seemed to offer a quiet place for a musician's work. The deep woods, the ancient trees, Indian legends and the peace of nature were the inspiration of some of MacDowell's best works.

"Because the isolation of the cabin in the woods where he worked meant so much to him," said she, "it was my husband's constant wish in his last days that the place might always continue to be useful artistically. I promised him that I would do what I could to have two or three composers or writers come up there each summer to carry on their work. Neither of us had any idea it would develop as it has.

"Immediately, so many persons saw that such a retreat, where they could work during the summer, free from interruptions, met a need, they gave the colony a great push. We never have been able to accommodate all the people who want to come. Each year there are between 400 and 500 applications. We can take 60, and I hope never more than that. My observation as well as the opinions of the colonists convince me that 60 is the ideal number.

Diverse Interests

"An extraordinary thing about the MacDowell Colony is that the usual fretfulness and petty jealousies that are apt to be apparent among workers in the arts is utterly unknown there. That is due, I believe, to the variety of interests. The poet will take criticism from the musician, and he in turn doesn't mind being torn to pieces by a painter, because they are not rival artists. Having workers in all the arts keeps them from talking too much about one subject, keeps them normal and broad-minded. Money can't buy what they get at the Colony; that is, the freedom to work without interruption, the companionship with congenial minds and the simplicity combined with comfort."

"I see little of the people who are there," Mrs. MacDowell said. "I live in my house a mile away from the cottages and never ask any of them what they are doing, as I feel no personality should creep in, but there should be a silent pilot.

"However, I am always ready to help any who are in need. They are all men and women, not young students, so they need my help only occasionally.

"The Colony is not a charitable institution in any sense of the word. I have been working for years to build up a scholarship fund for young artists, however. Now the interest from $50,000 enables a number of talented young writers and composers who seem to have a brilliant future to come here and enjoy the privilege of doing concentrated work without interruption during the summer. Several of these young workers have won prizes with the works they have written at Peterboro.

Aid From All Quarters

"The Colony never could have prospered as it has if it were not for the loyalty and generosity of the people of the United States. My feeling for the people of this country is so warm that anything I can say would sound exaggerated. Not rich people, nor famous people have been the mainstay of this project, but the simple music lovers and young people who have learned to love MacDowell's music, which in an abstract way, stands for American music."

As examples of the way support comes to the Colony, Mrs. MacDowell told of being asked to go to a very small town in Oklahoma to give a recital. The audience was made up largely of oil men in tall boots, and Indians. But never did she have one more appreciative. Since then that little club has never missed sending $100 each year to the Colony. Then just before the interview, she had received a letter from a tiny junior MacDowell Club in Texas with $11 enclosed.

"The contributions are small," she noted, "but they come from all parts of the country. Now we need $40,000 just to clean up the wreckage of the hurricane of last September which did its worst damage in Peterboro. The most beautiful trees on 200 acres of our grounds are laid flat, and fire is a constant menace. Fortunately, most of the cottages were spared, as well as the library and main buildings. Clubs and music lovers are doing nobly in helping to raise funds so the Colony may be rehabilitated by next summer and be opened again. In New York, the MacDowell Club is holding an exhibition of paintings, manuscripts, books and other works done by members of the Colony, to continue all summer for the benefit of the fund. Special programs and concerts are being given widely for us, so the rehabilitation work will soon be under way."

Hans Wiener Programs at Pops

C. S. Monitor

Last night at the Pops, Erika Thimey made a felicitous first appearance as Hans Wiener's partner, dancing with him in "Velasquerias" and a "Slavic Dance," and with him and the group in the closing Strauss waltz, "Wine, Woman and Song."

The strikingly costumed "Velasquerias" would have been more effective as a duo-dance. The figurations of five male dancers constituted an intrusion on the compactness and unity of the whole. Mr. Wiener has done a similar thing before with the Spanish theme. He is able to catch in a measure a certain stylization of Spanish rhythms, to suggest to a degree the arrogant gesture, the involved courtship play, but only succeeds in detracting from the center of interest by these unnecessary, nondescript figurations by additional dancers, even when, as in this instance, they are meant to support a superfluous and rather toplofty program note. The Albeniz "Triana," played by the orchestra under Arthur Fiedler's direction, made a delightful accompaniment.

Mr. Wiener's forte lies in the dance of folk flavor, the dance springing from that European background which was his own.

The suite, "Provinci[illegible]," is in this, his best, vein. It [illegible]ay and amusing and in the fin[illegible]e pitting of the mock-trag[illegible]t and att[illegible]des of the mourne[illegible] against the comedic antics of the christening party and the blithe motions of the betrothed pair (Mr. Wiener and Kathryn Pope) was far in advance of earlier works, which have tended toward the square-cut pattern, totally devoid of counterpoint. For this piece, Marco Montedoro's original costumes provided an extra dash of condiment and the orchestral playing of Ravel's "Alborada del Grazioso" was again a delight.

The program of last evening might be considered an experiment, as it was the first really concert program Mr. Wiener has given at the Pops. The experiment proved to be not entirely successful, for it was not thoroughly in accord with the prevailing temper of Pops audiences. Applause was fairly flaccid until the arrival of Mr. Wiener's familiar solo, "Circus," (replacing the "Dimensional Fugue" announced), when the audience begged for an encore which it did not receive.

In view of the uneasy popularity of concert dance, no service is done it by such futile abstractions as the selection "Carefree—Melancholic" from the "Lyrical Suite" (Milhaud). This is old material, but slightly reworked—an exercise in Mr. Wiener's favorite theory of the four stations, tension and relaxation, guidance and swing. Here the program note was worse than useless. The statement, "Under the lyrical form, the comparative freedom of the masses is disturbed and driven to cover through the recklessness of the individual," bore no apparent relation to the movements and could only generate further bewilderment in the spectator. It was an error of choreography, however, and not of performance. Estelle Kibbe, Kathryn Pope, Dorothy Sammis and Anita Rafey did what they could.

The spectacle-ballet, "The Incredible Flutist," of Monday evening, made a more favorable impression on this writer than it did last season. The action seemed more closely knit, the stage less crowded, and Mr. Montedoro's high-powered costuming more charming than ever.

Walter Piston's score was no less delectable than before, in its apt comment on the narrative, but it did reveal on second hearing a close kinship with other composers. Strains of the Richards, Strauss and Wagner, of Ravel, even of Berlioz in the perversion of the "Dies Irae" theme, kept rising to the ear.

It is a ballet of very little dancing and not one of Mr. Wiener's top-notch compositions, but its clowning, its pantomime, and its color please an audience and it received an ovation. It will be repeated this evening. M. L.

Tonight at the Pops

March. "Semper Fidelis" ...... Sousa
Carmen. Fantasia .... Bizet
Bach Goes to Town (A Fugue in Swing) Templeton
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812" Tchaikovsky
Scheherazade, Finale... Rimsky-Korsakov
Fantasy on Gershwin Melodies

Miriam Winslow, Foster Fitz-Simons, and Warrane Bulkeley, Jacqueline Magrath, June MacLaren and Mary Morse in the following dance program:

Little Women (Theme and Variations) Tchaikovsky
City Faun (Satirical Dance) Morton Gould
Magnificat (Air for the G String) Bach
Caribbee .... Milhaud
Archangel (Gymnopedie I) ...... Satie
Frail Woman (Excerpts from "Pour les Enfants") .... Tansman
Chromo: American Dance (Harmonica Player from Alley Tunes ...... Guion
Polonaise Militaire. .... Chopin

B. Herald

THE DANCE

May 25/39

THE POPS

Last evening at Symphony Hall, Hans Wiener and his Dancers appeared with the Boston Pops Orchestra in a ballet called "The Incredible Fitutist," with choreography by Wiener and music by Walter Piston.

Hans Wiener's "Incredible Flutist" is material for a warm and relaxing evening. It does not tax the brain with profundity of theme or complexity of design; it does not arouse one with dramatic intensity; its fun is not very hilarious. But the ballet, nevertheless, keeps the eye busy with its constant action and its kaleidoscopic colors, and it keeps the ear interested with Walter Piston's delightful music.

"The Incredible Flutist" is a combination of decidedly free ballet technique and Mr. Weiner's customary Von Laban style, and within this loose framework unfolds the slight story of the flutist and his circus-side-show compatriots. There are people in gilt tights and pseudo-military uniforms, there are monkeys, there's a snake charmer and there are the more homely characters of the widow, the old gentleman, the youths and the maidens. Some of them do a few dance steps, some strut and some pantomime their bits.

Mr. Wiener danced very little and turned the masculine honors to Ken Whelan. Under that young man's premature grand manner, a batch of mannerisms and a pair of hands that looks like a Salvator Dali version of early Theda Bara technique, one may find a very talented dancer who should have a fine future if hard work and simplicity become his standards. Betty Caplan is dedeveloping a style that suits her short physique, and with time, her humorous movement qualities should aid her in becoming a valuable and interesting character dancer. The large ensemble managed to keep going, and the little monkeys should have had a chance to go much longer, for they enticed numerous chuckles from the audience. To sum up, one might say that "The Incredible Flutist" was a Roxeyesque local Recital Show, far from the startling but for the most part, fairly entertaining. W. M. T.

C.S. Monitor Appreciation June 1/39

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

By a Staff Photographer

Ernest Schelling

Composer, conductor, and pianist, now rehearsing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the MacDowell benefit concert, at which he will conduct his own composition, "A Victory Ball."

'Pops' Concert Proceeds Going to MacDowell Colony

The MacDowell Colony in Peterboro, N. H., that haven for creative workers in the arts, which was devastated by the hurricane of last September, will benefit by the proceeds from the "Pops" concert tonight.

"A great loss to the cause of music," is the fact that the colony cannot be opened this summer, today declared Ernest Schelling, distinguished composer and pianist, who is president of the MacDowell Association and will conduct his "A Victory Ball" at tonight's concert.

"The MacDowell Colony, founded by the great American composer, Edward MacDowell, has offered ideal surroundings and working conditions for all artists who are doing creative work, whether in music, writing or painting. Now all those beautiful trees in the forest MacDowell loved so well, as well as many of the cottages, are gone. The task of clearing up the wreckage is tremendous and the expense very great. The public is helping most generously in raising funds and the colony will doubtless be opened next season."

Mrs. Edward MacDowell has carried on the work of extending the usefulness of the colony since her husband passed on, by giving concerts of his compositions all over the country. She came down from Peterboro today to be present at the concert tonight.

Concerning his own composition on the MacDowell benefit program, Mr. Schelling contributed some interesting facts.

"During the World War, I often heard the pipers up toward the front lines," he said. "The effect of the pipes made such a deep impression on men, that I tried repeatedly to make use of them in a composition. When Alfred Noyes's poem, 'A Victory Ball,' inspired me to compose a symphonic poem, the bagpipes seemed ideal for a military effect combined with great dramatic power. However, joining the pipes with a symphony orchestra raised technical problems too much for me to solve, so in the end I created a synthesis of the piping effects with the orchestra alone. But although I took some satisfaction in the resulting sounds, I still missed the sight of the pipers in action.

"Well, a few seasons ago when conducting concerts in the Hollywood Bowl, I gathered up 24 [illegible] and had them [illegible] audience and go [illegible]s of playing in [illegible] 'A Victory Ball,' [illegible] actually came [illegible]. The sight of [illegible] was tremendously effective. There is nothing else in music quite like the sound and sight of the pipers, and their power to stir human feelings to a high pitch."

Mr. Schelling takes quiet pride in the fact that "A Victory Ball" has come into considerable favor for performance on Armistice Day. On the last such occasion, performances included one in Cape Town, South Africa.

Mr. Schelling has himself spent considerable time in Peterboro, not as much as he would have liked, however, he said, as he returns to his home in Switzerland each summer to spend part of his vacation.

Walter Piston, one of the composers who has done much work at the Colony, will be represented on the program tonight by "The Incredible Flutist" which will be danced by the Hans Wiener dance group. Jesus Maria Sanroma, will play the MacDowell piano Concerto, in D minor. Arthur Fiedler will conduct the program, with exception of the Schelling number.

CLEVELAND, O.
PLAIN DEALER
JUN 4 - 1939

Right Off the Records

By Stewart Matter

Victor has issued another "Bolero" of Ravel by the Boston Pops Orchestra. The older Boston set and the Mengelberg are both finer readings, but Fiedler goes along in a rather routine manner and allows the accumulation of sound alone to build up the necessary effect. But with one hearing we realize the tremendous advances made in the last half dozen years in records and the volume of sound that can be stored up in such tiny grooves is positively amazing. The present set is not without its sour notes, sides one and three. The final side is taken up with the rousing "March of the Boyards" of Halvorsen. Victor Set 552. $3.50.

Columbia brings out an album of Strauss waltzes consisting of "Roses From the South" and "Tales From the Vienna Woods" conducted by Bruno Walter and "A Thousand and One Nights" and "Voices of Spring" conducted by Felix Weingartner. The four discs were made some five years ago and are being brought out under one cover. But do not think they are dated, by any means. Recording and surface good. Co-

---

Globe - June 1/39

Pops Crowd Cheers Widow Of Composer MacDowell

She held court last night at Symphony Hall, the bright eyed, white haired, vivacious Mrs. Edward MacDowell, widow of the famous American composer.

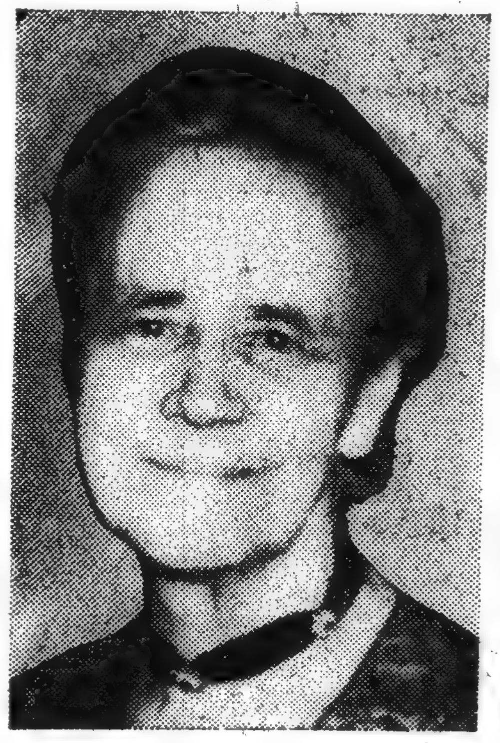
As the orchestra with Jesus Sanroma the soloist, finished playing her husband's second concerto, she was presented a great bouquet of American beauty roses. And as she took them the entire Pops audience, even those in the second balcony, rose as one man, cheering and applauding with all the strings in the orchestra beating the back of their bows against their instruments—a tribute reserved for famous guests.

This tiny, stooped woman, 81, dressed in purple, with an orchid at her throat, in the midst of this enormous, towering crowd, looked at first a little fussed, then very much pleased, as she clasped her roses and bowed her acknowledgement.

Honored by Audience

Previous to this she had received the adulation of the many who either themselves had been, or who had children who had attended, the MacDowell Colony for composers and other creative artists in Peterboro, N. H. She no sooner had entered the hall, clad in a long purple cape, when men and women, often with their offspring in tow, presented themselves to her. She had a hand shake and word for all of them. And during the intermission it was the same thing—young and old, with a "Do you remember me?" and "I want to present my son," crowded around her tiny form.

Last night was heartening for this woman who, though now an octogenarian, does more work, and much harder work, than many of her sex do at 50. She not only heard played MacDowell's second piano concerto, revived in 1936 by Arthur Fiedler and Sanroma. She also heard the works of two men who had found inspiration in the haven she founded and has kept going these many years—Walter Piston, chairman of Harvard's Music faculty, and Ernest Schelling, the famous "Uncle Ernest" of the New York Philharmonic children's concerts.



MRS. EDWARD MacDOWELL

Concert Benefits Colony

Now that the almost-a-year-old hurricane has made it impossible for her to open her colony this year, last night's benefit for the colony's tree removal process was just one of the many throughout the country which she is either attending or has knowledge of. These benefits are all spontaneous, decided upon by MacDowell Colony lovers who know that the money has to be raised somehow.

Some are not as large as Boston's, attended by all the city's music lovers. Some are very small, such as one out in a tiny Texas town with about 20 persons. Some aren't even gatherings, but individual contributions such as that sent by a youngster from Binghamton, N. Y., totaling the exact amount she had in her penny bank—83 cents. Yet they all show that the spirit in which this indomitable woman founded her colony lives on.

Rehearses Little

Mrs. MacDowell, who always when in Boston stays at the Parker House, says that the hurricane has again proved that "When I am faced with a crisis I can manage."

And managing she is, with a season's concerts in back of her, a New York and a Montreal concert facing her next month. For her appearances, at which she plays many of her husband's compositions, and talks both about him—to whom she always refers as "MacDowell," not "Edward," or "my husband"—and about the Colony, she only practices about five hours—and not at one time either. Yet her playing is remarkable, she was a concert pianist before she married MacDowell, and her hands, now dominated by large blue veins, are as supple and as commanding on the keys as they were when she was much younger.

She hasn't time for much practising, because most of her time is spent in traveling from California to New York, and from Georgia to Maine—all over the country—and in managing the Peterboro Colony. One of the requisites is answering mail—she receives an average of 50 letters a day, to all of which she dictates replies.

She leaves Boston this morning, to go up to Peterboro to see how the tree removal is getting on. Last night she was talking animatedly about these matters with Mr. and Mrs. Franklin W. Hobbs, Miss Mabel Daniels, chairman of the New England MacDowell groups, and Ernest Schelling—the "Uncle Ernest" of the New York Philharmonic's children's concerts who came to Boston for this occasion to conduct his "A Victory Ball."

JUNE 1, 1939 C
B. Trans.

MUSIC

MacDowell Night For Varied Fare

A program of exceptional variety and interest entertained the large and distinguished audience in Symphony Hall last evening, when the Pop concert benefited the MacDowell Colony in Peterboro, N. H. The composer was represented on the program by his Second Piano Concerto; the man was recalled by the presence of his widow in the audience.

The performance of the solo part of the Concerto by Jesus Maria Sanroma was of memorable strength, rhythmic incisiveness, virtuosity and dramatic statement. In it Mr. Sanroma seemed to achieve a new height as executant-interpreter. Even the lyrical element, in which the Concerto is rich and which is not ordinarily one of Mr. Sanroma's principal virtues, was unusually brought out last evening.

"The Incredible Flutist," presented on Monday evening, again provided the listener with ample opportunity to admire Walter Piston's witty, tuneful score, and the onlooker to take pleasure in the stage pictures presented by Hans Wiener and his company with spirit if not always with expert dancing.

The first part of the program, containing music by Rimsky-Korsakov, Mendelssohn and Smetana, ended with "A Victory Ball" by Ernest Schelling, who was on hand to conduct his own composition. The rest of the program, of course, was conducted by Arthur Fiedler. M. S.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
UTAH TRIBUNE
JUN 1 1 1939

Pops Orchestra As Record Review

Presenting the Boston "Pops" orchestra in concert, the program for the weekly record review Wednesday evening at 113 East Third South street will include Ravel's "Bolero," which was dedicated to the renowned dancer, Ida Rubinstein; also numbers by Glinka and Tschaikowsky.

This orchestra, whose concerts are given in Orchestra hall, Boston, commencing in May, has been in existence almost as long as the Boston Symphony orchestra and is conducted by Arthur Fiedler. These summer concerts have been extremely popular, a happy addition to Boston's musical life.

Her. 6

6th Week of Pops; Soloists Tonight; Italian Night

Features of the present week at the Pops in Symphony Hill will be the appearance of two soloists, tonight—E. Power Biggs, the organist, and Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist; "Old Timers' Night" on Tuesday; and Italian Night on Wednesday. The annual request program to be given next Sunday for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund will be the last Sunday concert of the season. The program will be announced shortly.

The programs of the week follow:

Sunday Evening, June 4

Praeludium from the Sixth Violin Sonata, in E major........Bach-Caillie t
Concerto for Organ and Orchestra, No. 2 in B flat..................Handel
Concerto for Organ and Orchestra, No. 77 in G minor..................Handel
Soloist: E. Power Biggs
Concerto for Piano and Orchestra in F Gershwin
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
Scherzo, pizzicato ostinato, from the Fourth Symphony in F minor Tchaikovsky
Waltz, "Briar Rose," from "Sleeping Beauty"..................Tchaikovsky
Marche Slave..................Tchaikovsky

Monday Evening, June 5

"El Capitan," march..................Sousa
"Il Guarany," overture..................Gomez
"Under the Linden Trees," from "Alsatian Scenes"..................Massenet
Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, from "Tannhauser"........Wagner
Pianoforte Concerto in A major (K. 488)..................Mozart
Soloist: Palmyra da Camara
Finale, Symphony in D minor......Franck
"Voices of Spring," waltzes........Strauss
Donkey Serenade from "The Firefly" Friml
"Stars and Stripes Forever," march Sousa

Tuesday Evening, June 6
Old Timers' Night

Second Connecticut March..........Reeves
Overture to "Raymond"..........Thomas
"Loin du Bal"..................Gillet
The Lost Chord..................Sullivan
"Mock Quadrille," a reminiscence of the old quadrille..................Coffey
"Pop Goes the Weazel"..........Caillie t
Song Fest, medley.
"Espana," waltzes..........Waldteufel
"Tiger Rag"........Arranged by McBride
Songs of the old days.

Wednesday evening, June 7
ITALIAN NIGHT

Triumphal March from "Aida"....Verdi
Overture to "Anacreon"........Cherubini
Minuet (for string orchestra)......Bolzoni
"Madam Butterfly," Fantasia......Puccini
Suite for Strings..................Corelli
Air, "Celeste Aida," from "Aida"..Verdi
Soloist: Mario Maiana, tenor
"Italia," Rhapsody..................Casella
Malaguena..................Lecuona
Perpetuum Mobile..................Paganini
Spanish Dance..................De Falla

Thursday evening, June 8

"Pomp and Circumstance." March..Elgar
Second Movement, Unfinished Symphony in B minor..................Schubert
Country Gardens..................Grainger
"The Ride of the Valkyries"......Wagner
"Tales from the Vienna Woods"....Strauss
Meditation from "Thais"..........Massenet
Violin solo: J. Theodorowicz
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"..Tchaikovsky
"Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," Fantasy..................Churchill-Bodge
Pavane..................Gould
Introduction to Act II, "Lohengrin" Wagner

Friday evening, June 9

March, "National Emblem"........Bagley
Overture to "Light Cavalry"......Suppe
Liebestraum..................Liszt-Herbert
Austrian Peasant Dances........Schonherr
Suite from "Carmen"..................Bizet
Pop Goes the Weasel..................Caillie t
Bolero..................Ravel
"Jolly Fellows," Waltz..........Volstedt
"Begin the Beguine"..................Porter
American Fantasy..................Herbert

Saturday, evening, June 10
Paul Cherkassky, conducting

Triumphal March from "Sigurd Jorsalfar"..................Grieg
Overture to "May Night" Rimsky-Korsakov
Song of the Volga Bargemen Arranged by Glazounov
"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem.....Sibelius
"Romeo and Juliet," Overture-Fantasia Tchaikovsky
Burleske in D minor for Pianoforte and Orchestra..........Richard Strauss
Soloist: Marjorie Church
Fantasy on Gershwin Melodies
"Night and Day"..................Porter
"Dance of the Buffoons from "Snow Maiden"..........Rimsky-Korsakov

Sunday evening, June 11
REQUEST NIGHT
(Pension Fund Concert)

PORTLAND, ME.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM
JUN 4 - 1939

E. Power Biggs, who recently completed a concert tour of the United States and Canada, appearing as soloist with the Boston and Chicago Symphony Orchestras and who was soloist this past season in the concert series sponsored by the Portland Branch of the Maine Chapter of the American Guild of Organists will be a member of the faculty of the Longy School of Music, Boston this Summer. Mr. Biggs was also organist for the Lili Boulanger Memorial Fund Concert which was conducted by Mlle. Nadia Boulanger in Symphony Hall, Boston, in March. Mlle. Boulanger has been teaching at the Longy School this Winter.

PORTLAND, ME.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM
JUN 4 - 1939

Annual New England Conservatory Night at "Pops" will be observed, June 17, when Arthur Fiedler, will give the baton to Quincy Potter, Dean of the faculty of the Conservatory who will conduct the Boston Symphony men in Symphony Hall. Mr. Potter will conduct his "Excerpts from incidental music to Shapespeare's Anthony And Cleopatra." Other Conservatory features will be the Saint-Saens second and third movement of the piano "Concert in G minor," played by Lillian A. Rosen the 1939 winner of the Mason and Hamlin Prize. The Conservatory Chorus led by Francis Findlay, conductor of Choral and Orchestral Classes at the Conservatory will sing two Brahms Gypsy Songs and other numbers. The orchestra will also play "A Jazz Passacaglia," by Arnold Chaitman, young student of composition at the Conservatory this year. The "Pops," Orchestra will play the other groups on the program.

C. S. Monitor Appreciation June 1/39

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

By a Staff Photographer

Ernest Schelling

Composer, conductor, and pianist, now rehearsing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the MacDowell benefit concert, at which he will conduct his own composition, "A Victory Ball."

'Pops' Concert Proceeds Going to MacDowell Colony

The MacDowell Colony in Peterboro, N. H., that haven for creative workers in the arts, which was devastated by the hurricane of last September, will benefit by the proceeds from the "Pops" concert tonight.

"A great loss to the cause of music," is the fact that the colony cannot be opened this summer, today declared Ernest Schelling, distinguished composer and pianist, who is president of the MacDowell Association and will conduct his "A Victory Ball" at tonight's concert.

"The MacDowell Colony, founded by the great American composer, Edward MacDowell, has offered ideal surroundings and working conditions for all artists who are doing creative work, whether in music, writing or painting. Now all those beautiful trees in the forest MacDowell loved so well, as well as many of the cottages, are gone. The task of clearing up the wreckage is tremendous and the expense very great. The public is helping most generously in raising funds and the colony will doubtless be opened next season."

Mrs. Edward MacDowell has carried on the work of extending the usefulness of the colony since her husband passed on, by giving concerts of his compositions all over the country. She came down from Peterboro today to be present at the concert tonight.

Concerning his own composition on the MacDowell benefit program, Mr. Schelling contributed some interesting facts.

"During the World War, I often heard the pipers up toward the front lines," he said. "The effect of the pipes made such a deep impression on men, that I tried repeatedly to make use of them in a composition. When Alfred Noyes's poem, 'A Victory Ball,' inspired me to compose a symphonic poem, the bagpipes seemed ideal for a military effect combined with great dramatic power. However, joining the pipes with a symphony orchestra raised technical problems too much for me to solve, so in the end I created a synthesis of the piping effects with the orchestra alone. But although I took some satisfaction in the resulting sounds, I still missed the sight of the pipers in action.

"Well, a few seasons ago when conducting concerts in the Hollywood Bowl, I gathered up 24 Cameron pipers, and had them appear before the audience and go through the motions of playing in a performance of 'A Victory Ball,' while the sounds actually came from the orchestra. The sight of the pipers in action was tremendously effective. There is nothing else in music quite like the sound and sight of the pipers, and their power to stir human feelings to a high pitch."

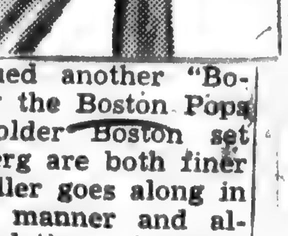
Mr. Schelling takes quiet pride in the fact that "A Victory Ball" has come into considerable favor for performance on Armistice Day. On the last such occasion, performances included one in Cape Town, South Africa.

Mr. Schelling has himself spent considerable time in Peterboro, not as much as he would have liked, however, he said, as he returns to his home in Switzerland each summer to spend part of his vacation.

Walter Piston, one of the composers who has done much work at the Colony, will be represented on the program tonight by "The Incredible Flutist" which will be danced by the Hans Wiener dance group. Jesus Maria Sanroma, will play the MacDowell piano Concerto, in D minor. Arthur Fiedler will conduct the program, with exception of the Schelling number.

CLEVELAND, O.
PLAIN DEALER

JUN 4 - 1939



Right

Victor has issued another "Bolero" of Ravel by the Boston Pops Orchestra. The older Boston set and the Mengelberg are both finer readings, but Fiedler goes along in a rather routine manner and allows the accumulation of sound alone to build up the necessary effect. But with one hearing we realize the tremendous advances made in the last half dozen years in records and the volume of sound that can be stored up in such tiny grooves is positively amazing. The present set is not without its sour notes, sides one and three. The final side is taken up with the rousing "March of the Boyards" of Halvorsen. Victor Set 552. $3.50.

Columbia brings out an album of Strauss waltzes consisting of "Roses From the South" and "Tales From the Vienna Woods" conducted by Bruno Walter and "A Thousand and One Nights" and "Voices of Spring" conducted by Felix Weingartner. The four discs were made some five years ago and are being brought out under one cover. But do not think they are dated, by any means. Recording and surface good. Co-

---

Pops Crowd Cheers Widow Of Composer MacDowell

Globe - June 1/39

She held court last night at Symphony Hall, the bright eyed, white haired, vivacious Mrs. Edward MacDowell, widow of the famous American composer.

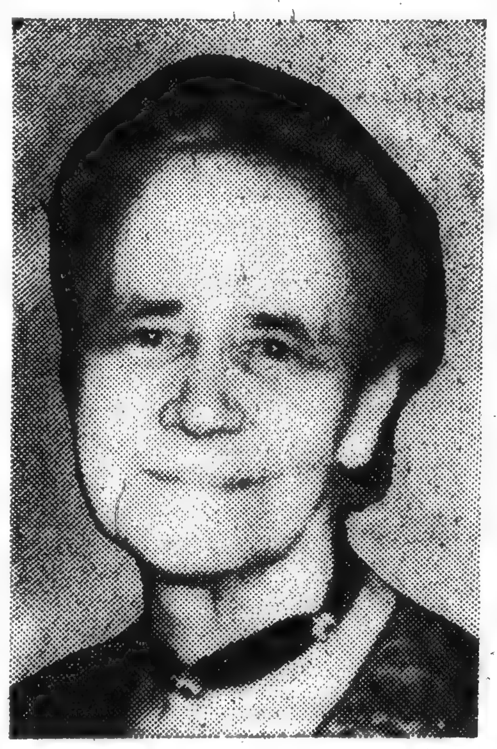
As the orchestra with Jesus Sanroma the soloist, finished playing her husband's second concerto, she was presented a great bouquet of American beauty roses. And as she took them the entire Pops audience, even those in the second balcony, rose as one man, cheering and applauding with all the strings in the orchestra beating the back of their bows against their instruments—a tribute reserved for famous guests.

This tiny, stooped woman, 81, dressed in purple, with an orchid at her throat, in the midst of this enormous, towering crowd, looked at first a little fussed, then very much pleased, as she clasped her roses and bowed her acknowledgement.

Honored by Audience

Previous to this she had received the adulation of the many who either themselves had been, or who had children who had attended, the MacDowell Colony for composers and other creative artists in Peterboro, N. H. She no sooner had entered the hall, clad in a long purple cape, when men and women, often with their offspring in tow, presented themselves to her. She had a hand shake and word for all of them. And during the intermission it was the same thing—young and old, with a "Do you remember me?" and "I want to present my son," crowded around her tiny form.

Last night was heartening for this woman who, though now an octogenarian, does more work, and much harder work, than many of her sex do at 50. She not only heard played MacDowell's second piano concerto, revived in 1936 by Arthur Fiedler and Sanroma. She also heard the works of two men who had found inspiration in the haven she founded and has kept going these many years—Walter Piston, chairman of Harvard's Music faculty, and Ernest Schelling, the famous "Uncle Ernest" of the New York Philharmonic children's concerts.



MRS. EDWARD MacDOWELL

Concert Benefits Colony

Now that the almost-a-year-old hurricane has made it impossible for her to open her colony this year, last night's benefit for the colony's tree removal process was just one of the many throughout the country which she is either attending or has knowledge of. These benefits are all spontaneous, decided upon by MacDowell Colony lovers who know that the money has to be raised somehow.

Some are not as large as Boston's, attended by all the city's music lovers. Some are very small, such as one out in a tiny Texas town with about 20 persons. Some aren't even gatherings, but individual contributions such as that sent by a youngster from Binghamton, N. Y., totaling the exact amount she had in her penny bank—83 cents. Yet they all show that the spirit in which this indomitable woman founded her colony lives on.

Rehearses Little

Mrs. MacDowell, who always when in Boston stays at the Parker House, says that the hurricane has again proved that "When I am faced with a crisis I can manage."

And managing she is, with a season's concerts in back of her, a New York and a Montreal concert facing her next month. For her appearances, at which she plays many of her husband's compositions, and talks both about him—to whom she always refers as "MacDowell," not "Edward," or "my husband"—and about the Colony, she only practices about five hours—and not at one time either. Yet her playing is remarkable, she was a concert pianist before she married MacDowell, and her hands, now dominated by large blue veins, are as supple and as commanding on the keys as they were when she was much younger.

She hasn't time for much practising, because most of her time is spent in traveling from California to New York, and from Georgia to Maine—all over the country—and in managing the Peterboro Colony. One of the requisites is answering mail—she receives an average of 50 letters a day, to all of which she dictates replies.

She leaves Boston this morning, to go up to Peterboro to see how the tree removal is getting on. Last night she was talking animatedly about these matters with Mr. and Mrs. Franklin W. Hobbs, Miss Mabel Daniels, chairman of the New England MacDowell groups, and Ernest Schelling—the "Uncle Ernest" of the New York Philharmonic's children's concerts who came to Boston for this occasion to conduct his "A Victory Ball."

JUNE 1, 1939 C
B. Trans.

MUSIC

MacDowell Night For Varied Fare

A program of exceptional variety and interest entertained the large and distinguished audience in Symphony Hall last evening, when the Pop concert benefited the MacDowell Colony in Peterboro, N. H. The composer was represented on the program by his Second Piano Concerto; the man was recalled by the presence of his widow in the audience.

The performance of the solo part of the Concerto by Jesus Maria Sanroma was of memorable strength, rhythmic incisiveness, virtuosity and dramatic statement. In it Mr. Sanroma seemed to achieve a new height as executant-interpreter. Even the lyrical element, in which the Concerto is rich and which is not ordinarily one of Mr. Sanroma's principal virtues, was unusually brought out last evening.

"The Incredible Flutist," presented on Monday evening, again provided the listener with ample opportunity to admire Walter Piston's witty, tuneful score, and the onlooker to take pleasure in the stage pictures presented by Hans Wiener and his company with spirit if not always with expert dancing.

The first part of the program, containing music by Rimsky-Korsakov, Mendelssohn and Smetana, ended with "A Victory Ball" by Ernest Schelling, who was on hand to conduct his own composition. The rest of the program, of course, was conducted by Arthur Fiedler. M. S.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
UTAH TRIBUNE

JUN 11 1939

Pops Orchestra As Record Review

Presenting the Boston "Pops" orchestra in concert, the program for the weekly record review Wednesday evening at 113 East Third South street will include Ravel's "Bolero," which was dedicated to the renowned dancer, Ida Rubinstein; also, numbers by Glinka and Tschaikowsky.

This orchestra, whose concerts are given in Orchestra hall, Boston, commencing in May, has been in existence almost as long as the Boston Symphony orchestra and is conducted by Arthur Fiedler. These summer concerts have been extremely popular, a happy addition to Boston's musical life.

Her.

6th Week of Pops; Soloists Tonight; Italian Night

Features of the present week at the Pops in Symphony Hill will be the appearance of two soloists, tonight—E. Power Biggs, the organist, and Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist; "Old Timers' Night" on Tuesday; and Italian Night on Wednesday. The annual request program to be given next Sunday for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund will be the last Sunday concert of the season. The program will be announced shortly.

The programs of the week follow:

Sunday Evening, June 4

Praeludium from the Sixth Violin Sonata, in E major......Bach-Caillet
Concerto for Organ and Orchestra, No. 2 in B flat..................Handel
Concerto for Organ and Orchestra, No. 77 in G minor..............Handel
Soloist: E. Power Biggs
Concerto for Piano and Orchestra in F.....Gershwin
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma
Scherzo, pizzicato ostinato, from the Fourth Symphony in F minor.Tchaikovsky
Waltz, "Briar Rose," from "Sleeping Beauty".................... Tchaikovsky
Marche Slave...................... Tchaikovsky

Monday Evening, June 5

"El Capitan," march.................Sousa
"Il Guarany," overture ....Gomez
"Under the Linden Trees," from "Alsatian Scenes"..............Massenet
Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg, from "Tannhauser" ....Wagner
Pianoforte Concerto in A major (K. 488) .... Mozart
Soloist: Palmyra da Camara
Finale, Symphony in D minor......Franck
"Voices of Spring," waltzes........Strauss
Donkey Serenade from "The Firefly" Friml
"Stars and Stripes Forever," march Sousa

Tuesday Evening, June 6
Old Timers' Night

Second Connecticut March..........Reeves
Overture to "Raymond"...........Thomas
"Loin du Bal"......................Gillet
The Lost Chord.....................Sullivan
"Mock Quadrille," a reminiscence of the old quadrille....................Coffey
"Pop Goes the Weazel"..............Caillet
Song Fest, medley.
"Espana," waltzes ....Waldteufel
"Tiger Rag"........Arranged by McBride
Songs of the old days.

Wednesday evening, June 7
ITALIAN NIGHT

Triumphal March from "Aida"....Verdi
Overture to "Anacreon"........Cherubini
Minuet (for string orchestra)......Bolzoni
"Madam Butterfly," Fantasia.......Puccini
Suite for Strings ....Corelli
Air, "Celeste Aida," from "Aida"..Verdi
Soloist: Mario Maiana, tenor
"Italia," Rhapsody..................Casella
Malaguena ....Lecuona
Perpetuum Mobile ....Paganini
Spanish Dance ....De Falla

Thursday evening, June 8

"Pomp and Circumstance," March..Elgar
Second Movement, Unfinished Symphony in B minor ....Schubert
Country Gardens ....Grainger
"The Ride of the Valkyries"......Wagner
"Tales from the Vienna Woods"....Strauss
Meditation from "Thais"..........Massenet
Violin solo: J. Theodorowicz
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"..Tchaikovsky
"Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," Fantasy ....Churchill-Bodge
Pavane ....Gould
Introduction to Act II, "Lohengrin" Wagner

Friday evening, June 9

March, "National Emblem".........Bagley
Overture to "Light Cavalry" .... Suppe
Liebestraum ....Liszt-Herbert
Austrian Peasant Dances.........Schonherr
Suite from "Carmen"...................Bizet
Pop Goes the Weasel...............Caillet
Bolero ....Ravel
"Jolly Fellows," Waltz ....Volstedt
"Begin the Beguine"................ Porter
American Fantasy ....Herbert

Saturday, evening, June 10
Paul Cherkassky, conducting

Triumphal March from "Sigurd Jorsalfar" ....Grieg
Overture to "May Night" Rimsky-Korsakov
Song of the Volga Boatmen Arranged by Glazounov
"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem......Sibelius
"Romeo and Juliet," Overture-Fantasia Tchaikovsky
Burleske in D minor for Pianoforte and Orchestra ....Richard Strauss
Soloist: Marjorie Church
Fantasy on Gershwin Melodies
"Night and Day" ....Porter
"Dance of the Buffoons from "Snow Maiden" ....Rimsky-Korsakov

Sunday evening, June 11
REQUEST NIGHT
(Pension Fund Concert)

PORTLAND, ME.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

JUN 4 - 1939

E. Power Biggs, who recently completed a concert tour of the United States and Canada, appearing as soloist with the Boston and Chicago Symphony Orchestras and who was soloist this past season in the concert series sponsored by the Portland Branch of the Maine Chapter of the American Guild of Organists will be a member of the faculty of the Longy School of Music, Boston this Summer. Mr. Biggs was also organist for the Lili Boulanger Memorial Fund Concert which was conducted by Mlle. Nadia Boulanger in Symphony Hall, Boston, in March. Mlle. Boulanger has been teaching at the Longy School this Winter.

PORTLAND, ME.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

JUN 4 - 1939

* * *

Annual New England Conservatory Night at "Pops" will be observed, June 17, when Arthur Fiedler, will give the baton to Quincy Potter, Dean of the faculty of the Conservatory who will conduct the Boston Symphony men in Symphony Hall. Mr. Potter will conduct his "Excerpts from incidental music to Shapespeare's Anthony And Cleopatra." Other Conservatory features will be the Saint-Saens second and third movement of the piano "Concert in G minor," played by Lillian A. Rosen the 1939 winner of the Mason and Hamlin Prize. The Conservatory Chorus led by Francis Findlay, conductor of Choral and Orchestral Classes at the Conservatory will sing two Brahms Gypsy Songs and other numbers. The orchestra will also play "A Jazz Passacaglia," by Arnold Chaitman, young student of composition at the Conservatory this year. The "Pops," Orchestra will play the other groups on the program.

THE BOSTON HERALD, THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1939

MUSIC IN THE AIR WHEN DIRECTORS MEET

Ernest Schelling, guest conductor at the Pops in Symphony Hall last night, and Mrs. Edward Alexander MacDowell, widow of the composer. Proceeds of the concert will be used in the restoration of the MacDowell colony in Peterboro, N. H., which was damaged by last year's hurricane.

A Hypothetical Radio Crooner At a Classical Sunday Pop

C. S. Monitor - June /39

It will be remembered that the Mikado, striving "to make the punishment fit the crime," had in store for the music-hall singer a peculiarly unpleasant fate—attendance at "Classical Monday Pops." It is our guess that a radio crooner, let us say, sentenced by some modern Mikado to expiate his offense at last night's classical Sunday Pop at Symphony Hall, might have found his penance not wholly disagreeable.

Bach, for example, was represented there not by the ponderous "masses and fugues and 'ops'" of the Gilbertian doom, but by Caillet's arrangement of the E-major Praeludium from the sixth Violin Sonata, an exuberantly cheerful piece of perpetual motion in music's brightest key and in the most brilliant register of the violins. (Crooners, be it remembered, are never as melancholy as their songs, but are athletic young men and women who play golf.)

The crooner might have been appalled by the prospect of hearing two organ concertos by Handel (they were No. 2, in B flat, and N. 7, in G minor); he might even have been cowed, for a minute or two, by the slightly pompous mock heroics of the introductory "Tempo ordinario e staccato" of the first of them. But he could scarcely have failed, once the oratory of the prologue (so to say) was disposed of, to be captivated by the hearty melodiousness of this music, by its healthy vigor and warm humanity, by its comfortable solidity and richness of instrumental timbre and harmonic texture.

The delicate but by no means effete melancholy of the Recitative of the B flat Concerto should have offered a salutary lesson; the magnificently flowing melody of the G minor's Minuet was an admirable example of the manner in which a great composer can burst the bonds of a confining and conventional form. The vitality of the performance, both that of E. Power Biggs, who played the organ part brilliantly, and that of the orchestra under Arthur Fiedler's leadership, roused last night's audience to enthusiastic applause and brought an encore from Mr. Biggs—a Noel and Variations by Daquin, played with great delicacy and with appropriate variety of organ registration.

Our crooner, listening to Gershwin's Concerto in F for piano and orchestra, which also found a place on last night's generous program, would, we suspect, have been alternately pleased and puzzled. He would have enjoyed the scraps of jazz melody, the ingenious and playful tricks of rhythm, the orchestral humor the lavishly polychromatic score. He would have been puzzled and probably bored by the interminable sequential repetitions which Gershwin regarded as the development proper to a full-length concerto. He might have enjoyed the abundant arabesques of the pianoforte part, a blend of Liszt and the more inventive of the improvising jazz pianists. Most of all he might have admired, as we did, as truest to the improvisational character of true jazz, the opening of the second movement, which is an exquisitely expressive instrumental dialogue in "blues" idiom.

About the excellence of Mr. Sanroma's performance, which combined virtuosity, intelligence, and sympathetic insight in rare degree, no one present last night had any doubt whatever. Mr. Fiedler and the orchestra, too, were admirably successful with a score notably foreign in style to the usual repertory of a symphony orchestra.

S. S.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUN 11 1939

Worcester's Pop Concert

WHERE ARE you going for this Sunday night's supper, Jane? To the Bancroft ballroom, I hope, for the first in a probable series of pop concerts by and for the Worcester County Light Opera Club. Tables in the ballroom tonight at 6.30 with the same privilege of subdued conversation are but a small sum, and one may order whatever one chooses in the way of refreshment, little or much (as at the Boston Symphony pops). There will be no Gilbert and Sullivan on the program by the W. C. L. O. Club orchestra of 30 men, under the leadership of conductor Ernest L. Reopel.

PHILADELPHIA, PA,
RECORD

JUN 4 - 1939

ON THE RECORDS

While Philadenphians languish for music in the spring months between the regular orchestra season and the Dell opening, our sister-cultural-city, Boston, goes us one better. It has the "Pops."

In the merry months of May and June the Boston Symphony gets down to shirtsleeves and Cousa and Sousa, and entertains its music-hungry patrons under peculiarly inviting surroundings.

Musical 'Dining.'

Patrons sit around tiny tables in Symphony Hall, imbibing beer, soft drinks, sandwiches and ice cream, while the orchestra sounds forth a miscellaneous program of overtures, fantasias, Strauss waltzes, Brahms dances or musical-comedy potpourris. There are Viennese, French and American nights; Harvard, Tech and Wellesley nights; Memorial Day, Gay Nineties and Fourth of July programs.

It's all quite gay and decidedly unique. Victor, from time to time, has issued individual records of Boston "Pops" performances.

Now, for June, they've given us an album of representative "Pops" music in their Boston "Pops" Concert release ($6.50). The album contains many favorites; the sparkling "Russian and Ludmilla" Overture, two spirituals in "Deep River" and "Nobody Knows De Trouble I've Seen," Strauss' unfamiliar but tingling "Doctrinen Waltz," the brilliant "Intermezzo" from Granados' "Goyescas" and the "Polonaise" from Tchaikovsky's "Eugen Onegin."

Spirited Rendition.

The "Pops" orchestra, under Arthur Fiedler put a tremendous amount of spirit and verve into the recordings, as if to show the rest of us what we're missing annually.

T, SATURDAY, JUNE 3, 1939

Pop-Fare

Soloists Aplenty Through the Week

There will be two soloists at the Pop concert in Symphony Hall tomorrow night — Jesus Maria Sanroma, who will play the Gershwin Concerto in F, and E. Power Biggs, who will play two organ concertos of Handel. Other soloists with the Pops Orchestra under Arthur Fiedler in a week of varied programs will be Palmyra da Camara, pianist, on Monday evening; Mario Maiana, tenor, for the Italian program of Wednesday evening, and Marjorie Church, who will play the piano solo part of the Strauss "Burleske" on Saturday evening, when her husband, Paul Cherkassky, appears as guest conductor. The last Sunday evening concert of the season will contain the annual "request" program for the benefit of the Pension Fund of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The programs for each night through next Saturday evening follow in detail:

Tonight

Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin"	Wagner
"Carmen," Fantasia	Bizet
Song Without Words	Tchaikovsky
"Peer Gynt" Suite	Grieg
"Emperor" Waltz	Strauss
First "Hungarian" Rhapsody	Liszt
Songs by the Mass. Institute of Technology Glee Club Henry Jackson Warren, Conductor Alva L. Herman, '39, Student Leader
Fugato on a Well-Known Theme	McBride
Swing Stuff (Clarinet solo by the Composer)	McBride
Strike up the Band	Gershwin

Sunday Evening

Praeludium from the Sixth Violin Sonata	Bach-Cailliet
Concerto in B flat	Handel
Concerto in G minor	Handel
Soloist: E. Power Biggs.
Concerto for piano and orchestra in F	Gershwin
Soloist: Jesus Maria Sanroma.
Scherzo, from the Fourth Symphony; Waltz, "Briar Rose," from "Sleeping Beauty"	Tchaikovsky
Marche Slave

Monday Evening

"El Capitan," March	Sousa
"Il Guarany," Overture	Gomez
"Under the Linden Trees," from "Alsacian Scenes"	Massenet
"Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg" from "Tannhauser"	Wagner
Piano Concerto in A major (K. 488)	Mozart
Soloist: Palmyra da Camara
Finale, Symphony in D minor	Franck
"Voices of Spring," Waltzes	Strauss
"Donkey Serenade," from "The Firefly"	Friml
Stars and Stripes Forever	Sousa

Tuesday Evening

(Old Timers' Night)

"Second Connecticut," March	Reeves
Overture to "Raymond"	Thomas
Loin du Bal	Gillet
The Lost Chord	Sullivan
"Mock Quadrille," a Reminiscence of the Old Quadrille	Coffey
Pop Goes the Weasel	Cailliet
Song Fest, Medley
"Espana," Waltzes	Waldteufel
Tiger Rag	Arranged by McBride
Songs of the Old Days

Wednesday Evening

(Italian Night)

Triumphal March from "Aida"	Verdi
Overture to "Anacreon"	Cherubini
Minuet (for String Orchestra)	Bolzoni
"Madame Butterfly," Fantasia	Puccini
Suite for Strings	Corelli
Air, "Celeste Aida"	Verdi
Soloist: Mario Maiana, Tenor.
"Italia," Rhapsody	Casella
Malaguena	Lecuona
Perpetuum Mobile	Paganini
Spanish Dance	De Falla

Thursday Evening

"Pomp and Circumstance," March	Elgar
Second Movement, "Unfinished" Symphony in B minor	Schubert
Country Gardens	Grainger
The Ride of the Valkyries	Wagner
Tales from the Vienna Woods	Strauss
Meditation from "Thais"	Massenet
Violin solo: J. Theodorowicz
Ouverture Solennelle, "1812"	Tchaikovsky
"Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," Fantasy	Churchill-Bodge
Pavane	Gould
Introduction to Act III, "Lohengrin"	Wagner

Friday Evening

March, "National Emblem"	Bagley
Overture to "Light Cavalry"	Suppe
Liebestraum	Liszt-Herbert
Austrian Peasant Dances	Schoenherr
Suite from "Carmen"	Bizet
Pop Goes the Weasel	Cailliet
Bolero	Ravel
"Jolly Fellows," Waltz	Volstedt
Begin the Beguine	Porter
American Fantasy	Herbert

Saturday Evening, June 10

Paul Cherkassky Conducting

Triumphal March from "Sigurd Jorsalfar"	Grieg
Overture to "May Night"	Rimsky-Korsakov
Song of the Volga Bargemen	Arranged by Glazounov
"Finlandia," Symphonic Poem	Sibelius
"Romeo and Juliet," Overture-Fantasia	Tchaikovsky
Burleske in D minor for Piano and Orchestra	Richard Strauss
Soloist: Marjorie Church
Fantasy on Gershwin Melodies
Night and Day	Porter
"Dance of the Buffoons" from "Snow Maiden"	Rimsky-Korsakov

Ninety members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, together with the Norwegian Glee Club of Boston, and with Jesus Maria Sanroma as soloist, will perform at the Festival of Welcome for Crown Prince Olav and Crown Princess Martha of Norway in Symphony Hall on July 3.

The Boston Art Club night at the Pops next Monday marks the opening of an exhibition by members of the club at Symphony Hall, to continue through June 17.

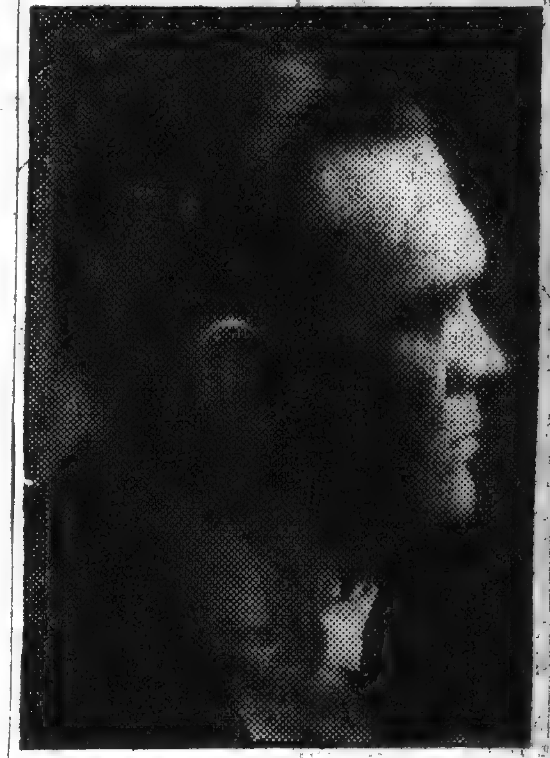
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

JUN 6 - 1939

LUDWIG JUHT TO BE SOLOIST

On Program for A. I. C. Graduation in Auditorium

A musical innovation is being planned for the graduation exercises of American International College in the Municipal Auditorium a week from tonight in the appearance on the program of Ludwig Juht, contra-bass soloist and member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. There also will be music by the college glee clubs.



LUDWIG JUHT

Contra-Bass with Boston Symphony Orchestra

Mr. Juht, who also is a composer and teacher, is a native of Estonia and former soloist with the Estonia Symphony Orchestra and the Helsingfors Symphony Orchestra. He has appeared in many concerts in Europe and has served as professor of contra-bass at the conservatory in Latvia. In 1935 he gave a special recital for the president of Estonia.

His program will include besides the works of the old masters one composition of his own for the contra-bass.

The graduation program, which is being held for the first time this year in the Auditorium so as to provide room for all who wish to attend, is open to the public. The glee clubs will sing under the direction of J. Clement Schuler.

HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

JUN 7 - 1939

Olin Downes, music editor of The New York Times, will return for the third consecutive year as lecturer for the Berkshire Symphonic festival, whose concerts will be given at the new Tanglewood music shed by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, August 3, 5, 6, 10, 12 and 13.

This year, Mr. Downes will give his lectures with the orchestra at the Tanglewood shed at the two Saturday morning rehearsals, extended as a privilege to members and patrons as well as public high school pupils in Berkshire county. There will be about 2500 persons in the audience.

Both Mr. Downes and Dr. Koussevitzky are enthusiastic over the plan, convinced that it will be an interesting departure from other years and that music lovers will obtain more first hand information of the character of the symphonies to be played at the Festival. The plan corresponds to one pursued by Mr. Downes at his course at the Brooklyn academy.

As an added attraction at festival time, the Junior league of Pittsfield is arranging a series of lectures to be given at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield by Charles L. Safford, director of music at Williams college. Mr. Safford, graduate of Williams and member of the faculty 15 years, is a member of the Festival's advisory committee. In charge of the lectures will be Mrs. Zenas Crane Colt, chairman of the league's area and interest committee. There will be no admission fee for the lectures. The public is invited.

B. Herald

MUSIC

/ 1939

THE POPS

The last of the Sunday night pops this season, except for Request Night, had considerable variety to recommend it. E. Power Biggs, organist, was soloist with the orchestra in Handel's Concertos in B flat and G minor. Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, was soloist in Gershwin's Concerto in F. The program opened with Cailliet's arrangement of the prelude from Bach's E major Violin Partita and closed with a group of Tchaikovsky selections. Arthur Fiedler conducted.

Three years ago George Gershwin was soloist with the Pops in a program of his own works, which turned out to be a rather disappointing occasion. A year later he was dead, and there were at once many critical summaries of his work and attempts to place it. The Concerto in F was unquestionably one of his more serious and ambitious compositions. At the most, however, it is only theatrically brilliant and at the worst it is pretty shoddy.

In spite of Mr. Sanroma's expert and invigorating performance, the Concerto in F dates badly. It is redundant and full of the cliches familiar to jazz. In the effort to be lyrical it falls into sentimentality; in the attempt to be witty it is never a patch on the concertos of such a composer as Prokofieff. You will say that of course Gershwin was never Prokofieff and that it is absurd to compare them. Then you should have read some of the literature in praise of Gershwin's talents. There are attractive bits in the Concerto, and of these the most was made last night. Moreover Mr. Sanroma's performance was, if memory does not deceive, far better than the composer's. There was much applause last night, so that for some the music is still effective—but not for us.

Mr. Biggs, on the not altogether satisfactory Symphony Hall organ, succeeded in presenting two of Handel's concertos with his usual skill. At the same time the recollection of the performance of these on the Germanic Museum baroque organ earlier this year by Mr. Biggs could not quite reconcile us to them in last night's version. Also, could there not have been a larger body of wind to balance the power of the strings in the orchestra? Mr. Biggs played Daquin's Variations on a Noel as an encore and was cordially received by the audience. Mr. Fiedler led an interesting performance of Bach's celebrated E major violin prelude in an attractive and curiously modern orchestral transcription by Lucien Cailliet. After the second intermission, Tchaikovsky had the final say.

A. W. W.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
JUN 13 1939

CITY NEWS

A. I. C. TO GIVE HONOR DEGREES AT GRADUATION

Dr. F. B. Sweet and Rev. R. M. McGown Chosen as Recipients

Two honorary degrees and 67 in course will be presented at the 54th annual graduation exercises of American International College in the Municipal Auditorium tonight at 8.

Dr. Frederick B. Sweet, senior surgeon of Springfield Hospital and former president of the New England Surgical Society, will be awarded the honorary degree of doctor of humane letters. He will be presented by Rev. James Gordon Gilkey of South Church.

The other honorary degree of doctor of divinity will go to Rev. Russell Miller McGown, pastor of the Glastonbury (Conn.) Congregational Church. He will be presented by Dean Luther A. Weigle of the Divinity School of Yale University.

Son of President

Rev. Mr. McGown, son of Dr. Chester S. McGown, president of A. I. C., who will do the degree conferring, also is receiving this month the earned degree of doctor of philosophy from Yale University, where he has done honor work. He is a former member of the faculty of Bates College.

To members of the senior class at A. I. C. will go 36 degrees of bachelor of arts and 31 of bachelor of science.

Of unusual interest on the program will be the half hour concert by Ludwig Juht, contra-bass soloist and member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who will be accompanied by Wilfred Churchill at the piano. His program follows:

Concerto	S. Koussevitzky
Allegro
Andante
Allegro
Pasterale	L. Couperin
Melodie	C. W. Gluck
Gavotte	A. Corelli
Vidalita	V. Padwa
Scherzo	L. Juht

Mr. Juht plays a Francesco Ruggeri (Cremona) 1679 contra-bass.

The organ prelude and processional march will by by Roland J. Pomerat at the organ and later organ selections will be by Lucius Harris, organist of Christ Church Cathedral. The A. I. C. Glee Club will sing with J. Clement Schuler as director.

MUSIC

B. Trans. /39

Two Soloists and A Pops Program

The program which the Pops Orchestra, under Arthur Fiedler, played at Symphony Hall last night was both for its musical content and its soloists one of the best of the current Pops season. Ordinarily one would say that the appearance of either Jesus Maria Sanroma or E. Power Biggs would give a Pops concert the additional importance of virtuosic authority. And when both play on the same evening, in music to which the style of each is particularly fitted, then one would add that there has been an abundance of good things, an attainment, for the time, of the loftiest goal set for these concerts.

Mr. Biggs was the first soloist of the evening, playing two Concertos for Organ and orchestra, those in B-flat and G minor, by Handel. These Concertos, as solidly built into the literature of the organ as they are heavy-footed and uninspired, were served an expert interpretation by the soloist and the conductor, Mr. Biggs playing with astonishing ease and grace, Mr. Fiedler adhering to the tempos with an admirable obstinacy.

In the Concerto in F, by Gershwin, which was Mr. Sanroma's contribution to the program, one again was given the opportunity of renewing his enjoyment of this appealing piece, safely guided by an artist who must by now be known wherever the composer's music is heard for the brilliance and the understanding of his treatment. Yet, as quickening in its cat-like litheness and assurance as was Mr. Sanroma's playing, it was the music that was the final reward; the million-noted throb of life which was sounding through Gershwin, making him the instrument for those inchoate disturbings of lyricism that had begun to lead him toward a larger, more expressive musical form.

J. G.

At Pops Tonight

Palmyra da Camara will make her debut as Pops soloist in the following program, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, in Symphony Hall this evening:

"El Capitan," March	Sousa
"Il Guarany," Overture	Gomez
"Under the Linden Trees," from "Alsacian Scenes"	Massenet
"Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg" from "Tannhauser"	Wagner
Piano Concerto in A major (K. 488)	Mozart
Soloist: Palmyra da Camara
Finale, Symphony in D minor	Franck
"Voices of Spring," Waltzes	Strauss
"Donkey Serenade," from "The Firefly"	Friml
Stars and Stripes Forever	Sousa

Miss da Camara at Pops Tonight

Palmyra da Camara, who will be the soloist with the Pops Orchestra tonight at Symphony Hall, is sponsored by the Portuguese Societies of Boston. She is said to be the first artist of Portuguese descent to appear as soloist with the Pops Orchestra. A graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music, Miss Camara has played and studied abroad as well as in America.

PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS
JUN 11 1939

Recordings for June Include Tschaikowsky Work Seldom Heard

Fine Compositions by Americans Are Features of List—Two-Piano Concerto Praised

By RALPH LEWANDO
Press Music Writer

The June releases of RCA-Victor's recordings in the "Musical Masterpieces" and "Red Seal" categories are pregnant with interest for those who are concerned with good music.

For more than 50 years the famous "Pop" concerts of the Boston Symphony have drawn hundreds of thousands of persons to listen to their unique programs. Under Arthur Fiedler these celebrated concerts have achieved further distinction. Thus great interest attached to the full program recorded by album 554 in Musical Masterpieces. The numbers include Dvorak's Russian and Ludmilla Overture; the two Negro spirituals: Deep River, and Nobody Knows the Trouble I've Seen, in arrangements by the late Agide Jacchia; Paul White's intriguing Five Miniatures; the charming Doctrinen Waltz of Eduard Strauss (1835-1916), youngest son of the more famous Johann Strauss; the Goyescas Intermezzo of Granados, the ill-fated Spanish composer who went down in the sinking of the steamer Sussex in 1916; and the Polonaise from Tschaikowsky's opera, "Eugene Onegin."

ROYALTY WILL VISIT THE POPS

B. Post /1939

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

BOSTON will have its taste of the current royalty next month. On Monday afternoon, July 3, Crown Prince Olav and Crown Princess Martha of Norway, will be guests of honor at a concert, presumably of Norwegian music, in Symphony Hall. Arthur Fiedler will conduct the Pops orchestra of 90 men, Jesus Maria Sanroma will be the assisting pianist and the Norwegian Glee Club of Boston will sing.

• • • •

"The Salzburg of America" is an alluring phrase, designed to give the final cachet to the native music festival. Already the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts in the Berkshires have been so designated. Recently the phrase was applied by the magazine Time to the Cincinnati May Festival, a more ambitious choral and orchestral affair that takes in its stride such works as Mahler's colossal Eighth Symphony and brings to light not a little new music. Also the orchestral, choral and operatic programme offered in conjunction with the New York World's Fair has been hailed by its sponsors as an "American Salzburg."

In the meantime, the original Salzburg goes its way offering this summer Mengelberg and Serafin in lieu of Walter and Toscanini, while these last-named conductors will again officiate at the Lucerne Festival, quite properly describable as the Salzburg of Switzerland. As was the case last August, Lucerne does not offer opera. When it takes that step it can aspire to all the glories once associated with the festival on the Salzach, with Wagner in place of Mozart as the local hero. The Lucerne Festival runs this summer from August 3 through August 29. The major event will be performances on the 16th and 17th of Verdi's Requiem under Toscanini. The soloists announced are Gigli, Kipnis, Horowitz, Rachmaninoff and Paderewski. It is unlikely, now, that Mr. Paderewski will appear. Among the conductors are also the names of Adrian Boult, Ernest Ansermet, Fritz Busch and Lorenzo Perosi who appears at the head of the Sistine Chapel Choir.

At Salzburg itself there will be considerable emphasis upon Richard Strauss, who reaches his 75th birthday next Sunday. His "Rosenkavalier" and "Buerger als Edelmann" will be performed, along with many orchestral works, and the venerable composer will conduct a Mozart-Haydn programme. The Festival extends from August 1 through September 8.

As for the Berkshire Festival, to come to matters nearer home, its six concerts will be held between August 3 and 13. Dr. Koussevitzky's only gesture in the direction of the American composer will be a performance of Walter Piston's Concerto for Orchestra. Otherwise the programmes run to repertory pieces, plus Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," which hardly fits in that classification.

Through its editor, Minna Lederman, that provocative quarterly "Modern Music," complains in an open letter to Grover Whalen that the New York World's Fair is doing precious little for the American composer. Nor is this the only time this patricular protest has been made.

Italian music, conspicuous by its absence in the fair's official programme, has a champion, too. And what a champion it turns out to be. To this desk there has come a pamphlet, "Musical Art at the New York World's Fair," its author Simone Belgiorno, from 1914-18 one of the trombone players in the Boston Symphony Orchestra. With more enthusiasm than elegance, more passion than accuracy, Mr. Belgiorno disparages the German classics and extols the music of Italy. Here is a sample paragraph:

"If there is going to be some Italian music, no matter when and what kind of music, be it even the worst folklore song played with a gipsy bagpipe, I will keep my peace and be contented. Being sure, as I am, that everything made in Italy is absolutely classic, very classic, superclassic, hyperclassic, Beethoven, Wagner, Brahms and all the galaxy of abstruse concocters of intonarumori may well feel at ease while they offer their celestial compositions to a sleeping audience; but to have music, really music, you know that you have got to go to Italy. Music was created in Italy, developed in Italy and brought in Italy at the summit of its glorious splendor; and for one German or French composer Italy has one hundred, and they are all the greatest. Do not forget that while Beethoven, Mozart, Handel (sic) and all the rest of the classics were living, the recognized master of the Austrian school in Vienna was Salieri, in France was Cherubini, in England was Clementi and in Germany was Spontini."

Surely Mr. Belgiorno is spoofing when he refers to "Wagnerian concoctions strongly based on the brass band and saxophones." Elsewhere he makes the intriguing suggestion that, since the score of "Aida" can be made to sound after a fashion by a small and not too experienced orchestra, "while Wagner's ponderous orchestration requires the most erudites of the musical field . . . no person on earth should hesitate to admit the immense superiority of Verdi on Wagner."

Anyway, the Pops will offer an Italian night on Wednesday, with a programme that ranges from Corelli to Casella!

SYMPHONY HALL—COM. 1492
TONIGHT 8:30
Soloists—J. M. SANROMA—Piano
E. POWER BIGGS—Organ
POPS
ARTHUR FIEDLER, Conductor
TUES., JUNE 6
OLD TIMERS' NIGHT
Tickets at all prices 2 weeks in advance, 25c, 50c, 75c, $1

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
Democrat-Chronicle
JUL 2 - 1939

Director Folds Arms As Orchestra Plays

Boston—(U.P.)—Conductor Arthur Fiedler raised his baton for the start of the next to last number of the final concert in the 54th Boston Symphony Orchestra "pops" series last night.

Then, as the orchestra began Leroy Anderson's intricate "Jazz Pizzicato," the 45-year-old conductor sat down facing the audience, his arms folded, his face wreathed in a smile. When the orchestra finished the difficult number in faultless fashion, the capacity audience of more than 2,000 burst into prolonged applause as Fiedler, still smiling, bowed gravely toward his musicians.

JUNE 15, 1939 B. Trans.

Pops Soloist

ALBION METCALF

Pianist, who will be the soloist tomorrow night at the Pops Concert in Symphony Hall, playing Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto.

At Pops Tonight

Tufts Night will be observed tonight at the Pops Concert in Symphony Hall, when Arthur Fiedler will lead the Pops Orchestra through the following program:

Thursday Evening

Overture to "Figaro"	Mozart
First Movement, Fifth Symphony in C minor	Beethoven
Valse Triste	Sibelius
Second Hungarian Rhapsody	Liszt
Violin Concerto, First Movement	Mendelssohn
Soloist: Sheldon Rotenberg
Tuftonia's Day	E. W. Hayes
Te Salutamus	K. MacKillop, Jr.
Brown and Blue	E. W. Newton
Tuftonian Rhapsody	R. R. Lamont
Fantasy on Gershwin Melodies
"Bach Goes to Town" (A Fugue in Swing)	Templeton
In the Hall of the Troll King, from "Peer Gynt"	Grieg

B. Herald

MUSIC

THE POPS

Traditionally Harvard Night at the Pops, which last night was, is a particularly diverting occasion. The program is an odd and by no means disagreeable hodge-podge. The performances, due to the presence of the spirited chorus of the Harvard Glee Club and a variety of enthusiastic guest conductors, take on an added freshness and vitality that in turn command the attention and cordial approval of the audience.

Last night, and properly so, the honors of the evening were carried off by the Glee Club and its able director, Mr. G. Wallace Woodworth. If its immediate success does nothing else, perhaps it may inoculate the public with a taste for choral music. No one could fail to be pleased with the gay choruses from Cimarosa's "Il Matrimonio Segreto," the witty music of Hindemith's "Martinslied" and the engaging choruses that John Knowles Paine wrote for "The Birds" of Aristophanes. By the time the choruses from "Iolanthe" were sung, the Glee Club had the audience where it wanted it and could have gone on all night. Mr. Woodworth, however, abruptly finished this part of the concert off with the popular Harvard songs which we are used to hearing in somewhat slipshod fashion on Soldiers' field. To be sure, there was nothing if not precise and musical singing last night.

For orchestral novelties we had, as the most interesting, Mr. Piston's energetic, fugal finale to his Orchestral Suite; and the composer was present to acknowledge the applause. We do not profess to be an authority on the Rumba; yet an example of this dance by Clair Leonard proved a very attractive orchestral piece. Mr. Malcolm Holmes conducted this section of the program successfully. It consisted of Elgar's familiar march Borodin's Dances from "Prince Igor," Brahms's Academic Festival Overture and, as encore, Robert McBride's Fugato on a well-known theme. Mr. Leonard was also in the audience to respond to the applause for his Rumba.

Good measure was added to this concert by Mr. Leroy Anderson, who conducted some lighter pieces and his own impressions of Harvard, in which such nuisances as the Lowell House bells, Freshmen in Harvard square, the Widener Reading Room and the Class Day Confetti Battle were portrayed. A. W. W.

20,000 Hear Esplanade Concert Season Opening

Bostonians and suburbanites to the number of nearly 20,000 gathered last night on the Charles River bank, near the foot of Mt. Vernon st., to hear the opening of the 11th season of Esplanade Concerts. Boston's unparalleled free musical entertainment, founded 10 years ago this Summer, will again be provided by an orchestra of Boston Symphony men conducted by Arthur Fiedler.

The popularity of these concerts and their conductor has continued to be enormous for a decade. Nightly crowds of several thousand persons are now a matter of course, though the audience last evening was said to be the biggest for an opening program in the history of the Esplanade Concerts. Some seated in camp chairs, some standing, they stretched for a considerable distance before the acoustic shell where the musicians sit. This reviewer obtained a vivid impression of the size of the crowd by climbing a "catwalk" up behind the shell and looking out over

Esplanade
Continued on Page 11

THE BOSTON GLOBE—FRIDAY, JULY 7, 1939

First Bow in Esplanade Season

CONDUCTOR ARTHUR FIEDLER AT OPENING OF FREE CONCERTS BY SYMPHONY PLAYERS

Esplanade—

Continued from the First Page

the roof. Without exaggeration, it was tremendous.

Orchestra Enlarged

The weather was just right for those who had come from Back Bay, the North, West and South Ends, and from beyond the city limits. It was not too warm, and a comfortably gentle breeze blew from the southwest. Once again there was a charming picture as dusk settled over the city and the softly illuminated shell stood out against a starry sky.

There are 10 men more, making a total of 60, in the orchestra this year. To accommodate them, an "apron" has been added to the stage of the steel acoustic shell. These gentlemen from the Boston Symphony, in their white trousers and dark coats, presented a cool, familiar and pleasant sight.

Among the notables present were William Whittaker, secretary of the Metropolitan District Commission; Edward M. Woods superintendent of the Metropolitan District Commission police; John Burke of Charlestown, co-trusteee of the Maria Hatch bequest, with which the new Edward Hatch Memorial acoustic shell will be erected; Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller and Prof. Alfred H. Meyer of the Boston University College of Music.

Beethoven Cycle Tonight

The opening program consisted of familiar music, beginning with Hector Berlioz' brilliant setting of the Hungarian "Rakoczy" March, and continuing with the first movement from Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony. The latter was encored with the same composer's ballet music from "Rosamunde." The Bach-Holst "Fugue a la Gigue" received especially warm applause, to the extent that it was encored with the so-called "Air on the G string," by Bach. The list also included the Prelude to Wagner's "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg"; the Second Hungarian Rhapsody by Liszt; the Prelude to Saint-Saens' "The Deluge" (violin solo by Gaston Elcus); the charming Strauss waltz, "Tales From the Vienna Woods," and the Seventh Slavonic Dance by Dvorak.

Tonight will begin the cycle of Beethoven symphonies, which will be given emphasis among the season's programs, according to Mr. Fiedler. All the nine Beethoven symphonies will be heard, with the exception of the choral finale from the Ninth Symphony, whose large dimensions make Esplanade performance impracticable. The First Symphony tonight will be played complete. The longer Beethoven symphonies will be divided, two movements to be heard on successive nights.

Mr. Fiedler also said, just before the concert, that the programs will afford prominence to the music of contemporary composers and their immediate predecessors.

Talks About Music

As in the past, Esplanade audiences may enjoy talks about the music, Prof. Alfred H. Meyer will begin the series tonight. Fr. Ahern of Weston College will be a future speaker, on "The Scientific Side of Music," it is said.

Again Mr. Fiedler will offer a series of three concerts for children, on the Wednesday mornings of July 12, 19 and 26 from 10:30 to 11:30. The children's series last year was a strikingly popular feature of the Esplanade season.

While the Esplanade Concerts are free and have been taken over by the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, contributions from the public are earnestly sought. They may be put in fund boxes on the grounds near the acoustic shell, or sent to the Esplanade Concert Fund, Merchants National Bank, 28 State st. The concerts will continue nightly except Saturdays for four weeks. They begin at 8:30. Tonight's program:

"Entrance of the Guests into the Wartburg," from "Tannhaeuser," Wagner; Symphony No. 1, in C major, Op. 21, Beethoven; Overture to "Oberon," Weber; Prelude to "Hansel and Gretel," Humperdinck; "Eili-Eili" (Trumpet Solo: Roger Voisin); "By the Beautiful Blue Danube," waltz, J. Strauss; Sixth Hungarian Dance, Brahms.—C. W. D.

THE BOSTON HERALD, FRIDAY, JULY 7, 1939

11TH ESPLANADE CONCERT SEASON opened last night. Part of audience of 20,000 who enjoyed Arthur Fiedler's con ducting of the orchestra of Boston Symphony musicians.

BOSTON POST, FRIDAY, JULY 7, 1939

21

20,000 THRONG TO CONCERT BY RIVER

Esplanade Series Has Brilliant First Night --- Size of Orchestra Increased This Year

One of the largest crowds ever to attend an opening of the Esplanade concerts, estimated by officials of the Metropolitan District police at close to 20,000, last night loudly expressed their appreciation for the beginning of the 11th season, and time and again demonstrated their feeling for Arthur Fiedler, conductor, and the programme of well-diversified appeal he arranged.

Continued on Page 11—Fourth Col.

20,000 THRONG TO CONCERT ON RIVER

Continued From First Page

Although the majority of the large crowd, which was able to enjoy a cooling breeze that swept in from across the Charles River throughout the programme, was composed of women, there were thousands of men, as well as innumerable young folk who were present at the opening night programme.

Prominent among those in the vast gathering, whose numbers included music lovers from the tenement sections as well as those from the higher strata of Boston's society, was Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller, wife of the former Governor. Smartly but comfortably attired, Mrs. Fuller, who was offered a seat up front, personally expressed her choice to "sit in with the crowd."

The crowd was obviously enraptured. Thousands of men, without coats or neckties, sat or stood during the appealing programme. During the intermission the throngs who flocked to the acoustic shell on Embankment road quietly but enjoyably intermingled as the perspiring musicians relaxed for their period of rest.

60 Men in Orchestra

This year for the first time the orchestra comprised 60 men, as compared with 51 last year. In order to accommodate the increased number, the platform of the shell had been built out some six feet. Members of the orchestra were nattily attired in white flannel trousers and blue coats.

Both Conductor Fiedler and George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who was constantly with the former before the programme began, at the conclusion of last night's concert expressed themselves as "deeply happy" over the results of the first night and "tremendously impressed" at the outpouring of music lovers.

Seated in the front row at last night's concert were John Burke of Charlestown, co-trustee of the Maria Hatch bequest, Edward M. Woods, superintendent of the Metropolitan District police, with William E. Whittaker, executive secretary of the Metropolitan District Commission, and Professor Alfred H. Meyer of the Boston University music department. Long after last night's concert began the crowd kept constantly swarming into the capacious area in front of the shell.

To Build New Shell

During intermission, Conductor Fiedler perspiring freely hastened to the rear of the shell, where he hastily donned a topcoat and nervously lighted a cigarette as crowds quickly gathered around him to express their appreciation of the numbers that had been given. Regaining his composure, Mr. Fiedler smiled generously and spared no effort in expressing his gratitude.

Nor were all of the spectators on the Embankment road reservation, either. A substantial number enjoyed the concert from a fleet of sail and cruising boats along the river edge. The crowd was reported by police to have been one of the most orderly on record.

It was announced last night, too, that at the conclusion of the present series of the Esplanade concerts, which run, with the exception of Saturdays, through July 30, a new shell is to be constructed at a cost of $275,000, which has been made possible as a result of the Hatch bequest.

Last night's programme began with the electrifying Hungarian march of Berlioz. Following this was the first movement of one of the most beautiful and generally best-loved of symphonies, Schubert's "Unfinished." Another popular rendition that was received with much acclaim was Strauss' "Tales From the Vienna Woods."

Gaston Elcus, concertmaster of the Esplanade orchestra and much admired by the river audiences for his velvet-toned violin solos, also was heard in the famous solo from Saint-Saens' "The Deluge." The rest of the programme ranged from Bach transcription by the late eminent English composer, Holst, through Wagner's stately and colorful prelude to "The Mastersingers" and the blood-tingling Second Hungarian Rhapsody of Liszt, to the Seventh Slavonic Dance of the Czech composer, Dvorak.

Tonight's programme follows:

1—"Entrance of the Guests into the Warburg," from "Tannhauser" ...... Wagner
2—Symphony No. 1, in C major, Op. 21, Beethoven
  I. Adagio molto: Allegro con brio
  II. Andante cantabile con moto
  III. Menuetto (Allegro molto e vivace)
  IV. Adagio: Allegro molto e vivace
3—Overture to "Oberon" .... Weber
Interval
4—Prelude to "Hansel and Gretel," Humperdinck
5—"Eili-Eili" (Trumpet Solo: Roger Voisin)
6—"By the Beautiful Blue Danube," Waltz .... J. Strauss
7—Sixth Hungarian Dance .... Brahms

20,000 Throng Esplanade For 11th Concert Season Start

More than 20,000 persons thronged the Charles River Esplanade last night as Arthur Fiedler conducted an enlarged orchestra of 60 members of the Boston Symphony orchestra through the opening program of the 11th season of esplanade concerts.

The huge crowd was enthusiastic throughout the evening, so enthusiastic, in fact, that on several occasions the program was delayed until Fiedler and his musicians had taken additional bows.

Particularly well received were the first movement of Schubert's "Unfinished Symphony," Bach's "Fugue a la Gigue," Wagner's "Prelude to the Meistersingers," and Strauss' "Tales from the Vienna Woods." Gaston Elcus was given prolonged applause for his violin solo in Saint-Saens' prelude to "The Deluge."

To accommodate the enlarged orchestra a special apron has been built on the front of the huge shell from which the musicians play and the entire shell was freshly painted and trimmed for this season's series.

Concerts will be played every night except Saturday at 8:30 o'clock through July 30. Due to the success of an experiment with special concerts for children last year, three of these have been arranged for this season. They will be given on Wednesday mornings, July 12, 19 and 26, at 10:30 o'clock.

As a special feature of this year's series Fiedler will present the complete cycle of Beethoven's nine symphonies, except the vocal finale of the ninth. The first symphony will be played in its entirety tonight.

Among those attending last night's opening concert were Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller, wife of the former Governor; George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; William E. Whittaker, secretary, and Supt. Edward M. Woods of the Metropolitan district commission; Prof. Alfred H. Meyer of the Boston University department of music, and John Burke of Charlestown, co-trustee of the Maria Hatch bequest for the new Edward Hatch Memorial shell.

The concerts, the only annual free outdoor concerts given by members of a major symphony orchestra, are, as in the past, maintained by voluntary contributions.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

JUL 8 - 1939

The Esplanade Concerts

So many Worcester folks have thoroughly enjoyed the concerts given by members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, on the Charles [illegible] Esplanade, during the past ten seasons, that the current schedule which opened Thursday evening is a welcome event. No one can question the popularity of these musical treats, for the opening evening saw a throng of enthusiastic listeners said to number twenty thousand.

Last year, it may be remembered, an experiment was made in the way of presenting several special concerts for children, and so well attended were they that the idea will be continued this season on three Wednesday mornings, beginning with July twelfth. Of course specially arranged programs are featured for the youngsters although it has been noted by a number of school instructors in music that an astonishing degree of appreciation is shown by the young, even in the less obvious themes.

The Esplanade concerts, maintained by voluntary contributions are, it is said, the only concerts, free to the public, to be given by a major symphony orchestra out-of-doors annually. And this year Conductor Arthur Fiedler plans, among other things, to present, with a single partial omission, the complete cycle of Beethoven's nine symphonies.

As for the splendid attendance records of these midsummer musical offerings, one finds it gratifying to consider the fact that at a time when so many critics, in various fields of art, voice repeatedly the opinion that public taste in these matters is degenerating in America, the Esplanade concerts optimistically repudiate such a judgment.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

JUL 22 1939

LAST OF ESPLANADE CONCERTS CANCELLED

BOSTON—The last in the 11th annual series of esplanade concerts, scheduled for July 30, was canceled today so that the Boston symphony musicians may hold a benefit concert on that date at Rye, N. H., for the families of the 26 men who perished in the fatal dive of the submarine Squalus.

The concert will be held at the opera field on the summer estate of Mrs. Arthur L. Hobson at Little Boar's Head, Rye Beach, which has a seating capacity of 10,000.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BATH, ME.
TIMES

JUL 22 1939

BOSTON SYMPHONY WILL GIVE BENEFIT CONCERT

Proceeds of Affair to Be Given at Rye Beach Will Be for Families of Squalus Victims

Rye Beach, N. H., July 22, (AP)—Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston outdoor Summer concerts on the Charles River Esplanade, announced today he and his 70 Boston Symphony musicians had cancelled their final program of the season in Boston to play here July 30 for the benefit of dependents left by the 26 men lost with the submarine Squalus.

The concert will be held on the opera field of Mrs. Arthur L. Hobson's estate at Little Boar's Head, near the beach, with room for 10,000 persons. The musicians will replace the marine band which could not come from Washington. The expense of bringing the conductor here in sight of the salvage scene eight miles off shore will be covered by a group of Bostonians who Summer at the beach, a spokesman said.

(Continued from Page One)

In case it rains the program will be moved to the Hampden Beach Casino. The committee, including Mrs. Alvin T. Fuller, wife of a former Massachusetts governor, announced contributions to the "Squalus Fund" would be received by George B. Lord, president of the Portsmouth, N. H. Savings Bank. Lt. Oliver F. Naquin, commanding officer on the Squalus, who will administer to the fund, is assisting the committee along with Rear Admiral Cyrus W. Cole, commandant of the Portsmouth Navy Yard and Capt. William F. Amsden, yard captain.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

EXETER, N. H.
NEWS
7/27/39

"Squalus" Benefit Concert

An opportunity to hear one of the most famous orchestras in America presents itself in the Squalus memorial concert, to be held Sunday, July 30, at Little Boar's Head. Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, have been receiving tremendous ovations for their concerts in Boston on the Esplanade and, by cancellation of their last concert there, have been able to schedule their appearance at the benefit concert on the Hobson estate, within easy reach of music lovers of this region.

In offering this service, the members of the orchestra are adding substantially to the resources to be placed at the disposal of the dependents bereaved by the Squalus disaster. We Americans, in addition to taking advantage of the musical treat made available, can hardly be less patriotic than these musicians, many of whom are foreign-born. The concert will begin at 4 P. M. and include many classical and semi-classical favorites, rendered in the quality of tone that only a well-trained symphony orchestra can produce. The singing of the Navy Hymn at the conclusion of the concert will give reverent significance to the memorial and the dropping of a wreath from an airplane into the water over the sunken Squalus will further symbolize the respect of the American nation.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

HAMPTON, N. H
UNION
7/27/39

U.S.S. SQUALUS MEMORIAL BENEFIT CONCERT TO BE HELD SUNDAY AFTERNOON

ADVANCE TICKET SALE INDICATES ATTENDENCE OF 5000 FOR PROGRAM

Boston Symphony Will Furnish Concert

A most worthwhile benefit con cert for the dependents of the vic tims of the Squalus disaster wil be given at Little Boar's He Sunday afternoon, July 30. Th program will be furnished b seventy members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Arthur Fiedler conducting and will be broadcast over a nationwide network.

The concert has a two-fold purpose—to raise funds to provide for the immediate needs of the wives and children of the victims of the submarine disaster, and, to sponsor a Memorial Concert suitable to the memory of the twenty-six heroic dead who lost their lives in peace time service to their nation.

Indications are that the attendance will be one of the largest ever to attend a production at the opera field. The state has been well organized in the distribution of tickets, with many of the larger places reporting an excellent response. Already 25 boxes have been sold and the ticket committee chairman Mrs. Alfred Rosser stated today that the committee is swamped with requests for tickets. In case of rain the program will be given at the Casino Ballroom, Hampton Beach.

The Boston Symphony orchestra appeals to all music lovers and will present a program which will be featured by the audience singing the Naval hymn "Eternal Father, Strong To Save."

Following the concert it is hoped that the expected 5000 listeners will go to the shore where the final tribute of this memorial concert will be held. Mrs. John P. Wingate, general chairman announced today arrangements have been made for the dropping of a wreath over the site of the Squalus from an airplane.

Programs with a beautifully designed cover by Dr. Donald W. Leonard of Exeter will be sold for 25 cents and 100 programs bearing the autograph of Lieutenant Naquin will be sold for one dollar.

Free parking space is being provided and local and state police are cooperating fully to prevent any traffic delay or tie-up.

Tickets may be obtained locally from members of the American Legion, Hampton Cooperative Bank, S. A. Dow and Son and at the Union office.

In reference to the final decision of Congress in denying the services of the Marine Band for the concert the following letter was received this morning by Mrs. John P. Wingate, from Representative Arthur B. Jenks.

Dear Mrs. Wingate:

This is to confirm the telegram which I have just sent to you reading as follows:

> Deeply regret to advise that at conference this morning chairman of senate Naval affairs committee decisively refused to consent to favorable action on H. R. 6942. Letter follows:

Despite the numerous appeals I and several of my colleagues in the House have made, plus the final drive made at the conference this morning by Chairman Vinson, of the House Naval Affairs Committee, and Congressman Maas, the ranking Republican Member of that Committee, Senator Walsh, Chairman of the Senate Naval Affairs Committee, has remained adamant and unyielding in his opposition to this legislation. I have no hesitancy in stating that solely because of his unfriendly attitude toward the bill it is buried in the Senate Naval Affairs Committee and dormant, as I feel confident that had he permitted it to be reported to the Senate it would have passed the Senate without any serious opposition and been approved by the President.

Naturally, I am keenly disappointed, as I know you and all concerned are, over the final outcome of this matter.

Yesterday I received the announcement that members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra would participate in the Memorial Concert, and I am hopeful that the splendid efforts of the Concert Committee wil be rewarded with overwhelming success in their fine work in behalf of the dependents of the SQUALUS victims.

A. B. Jenks

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PORTSMOUTH, N. H.
HERALD-TIMES

JUL 27 1939

Plans Complete For Squalus Benefit Concert Sunday

A high light of the benefit concert for the dependants of the Squalus victims will be the singing of the Navy Hymn. Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, are donating their services for this memorial benefit, and are also cancelling their final Boston Esplanade concert in order to come to Little Boar's Head for the concert on Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock.

The playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" will bring the musical program to a close, and immediately following the close of the concert, those attending will go to the shore, to witness the flight of an airplane, which will go to the scene of the sinking of the Squalus and drop a wreath.

The driveways of the summer homes of former Gov. Alvan T. Fuller of Massachusetts, and former Gov. Huntley N. Spaulding of New Hampshire, have been offered for use for the spectators as they proceed from the Opera Field on the Arthur L. Hobson estate, where the concert will be held, to the shore line of Little Boar's Head to watch the progress of the plane.

The committee reports an excellent response, not only in the matter of tickets, but in everything regarding the arrangements. Eight of the Squalus survivors are to be ushers and will be assisted by a detail of Marines from the Navy Yard. The Navy Yard will establish a first aid station at the Opera Field, and Dr. Donald W. Leonard of Exeter will also be on duty during the afternoon. Lieut. W. T. Doyle, USN, one of the survivors, is in charge of the decorations.

All of the Legion posts in the state are selling tickets. Adjutant Frank N. Sawyer is in charge of this sale by the American Legion and auxiliary, and in all large cities and towns in the state there is a ticket committee. Out-of-state requests for tickets have already come from Connecticut, Rhode Island, New York, Maine and Massachusetts. Gov. and Mrs. William H. Vanderbilt of Rhode Island are expected to attend the concert.

George B. Lord, president of the Portsmouth Savings Bank, has been designated to receive contributions and already has received a large number. This is in addition to the ticket sale, and will swell the Squalus fund by a large amount.

Tickets may be obtained in this city from Green's Drug Store, John H. Greenaway, The Rockingham Hotel, the New Hampshire Gas & Electric Co., Mrs. Charles H. Amhoff, or by calling Mrs. Richard D. Currier, Rye Beach 17.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NASHUA, N. H.
TELEGRAPH

JUL 27 1939

Boston Symphony At Squalus Benefit Program Sunday

Rye Beach — It was announced by Arthur Fielder, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, that he and his 70 musicians would play at the Opera Field of Mrs Arthur L. Hobson's estate at Little Boar's Head on Sunday, July 30, in a concert given for the benefit of the dependents left by the 26 men lost in the disaster of the submarine Squalus. In case of rain the program will be held in the Hampton Beach casino.

The Hobson estate Opera Field has room for 10,000 people.

A group of Bostonians who summer at the beach are paying the expenses of transporting the orchestra to this point, which is within sight of the salvage vessel eight miles off shore.

The citizens committee, of which Mrs Alvin T. Fuller, wife of a former Massachusetts governor, is a member, announced that contributions to the Squalus fund would be recevied by George B. Lord, president of the Portsmouth, N H, Savings Bank.

Lieut. Oliver F. Naquin, commanding officer of the Squalus, who will administer the fund, and Rear Admiral Cyrus W. Cole, commandant of the Portsmouth Navy Yard, and Capt William F. Amsden, yard captain, are all assisting the committee.

22

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

JUL 22 1939

LAST OF ESPLANADE CONCERTS CANCELLED

BOSTON—The last in the 11th annual series of esplanade concerts, scheduled for July 30, was canceled today so that the Boston symphony musicians may hold a benefit concert on that date at Rye, N. H., for the families of the 26 men who perished in the fatal dive of the submarine Squalus.

The concert will be held at the opera field on the summer estate of Mrs. Arthur L. Hobson at Little Boar's Head, Rye Beach, which has a seating capacity of 10,000.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BATH, ME.
TIMES

JUL 22 1939

BOSTON SYMPHONY WILL GIVE BENEFIT CONCERT

Proceeds of Affair to Be Given at Rye Beach Will Be for Families of Squalus Victims

Rye Beach, N. H., July 22, (AP)—Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Boston outdoor Summer concerts on the Charles River Esplanade, announced today he and his 70 Boston Symphony musicians had cancelled their final program of the season in Boston to play here July 30 for the benefit of dependents left by the 26 men lost with the submarine Squalus.

The concert will be held on the opera field of Mrs. Arthur L. Hobson's estate at Little Boar's Head, near the beach, with room for 10,000 persons. The musicians will replace the marine band which could not come from Washington. The expense of bringing the conductor here in sight of the salvage scene eight miles off shore will be covered by a group of Bostonians who Summer at the beach, a spokesman said.

(Continued from Page One)

In case it rains the program will be moved to the Hampden Beach Casino. The committee, including Mrs. Alvin T. Fuller, wife of a former Massachusetts governor, announced contributions to the "Squalus Fund" would be received by George B. Lord, president of the Portsmouth, N. H. Savings Bank. Lt. Oliver F. Naquin, commanding officer on the Squalus, who will administer to the fund, is assisting the committee along with Rear Admiral Cyrus W. Cole, commandant of the Portsmouth Navy Yard and Capt. William F. Amsden, yard captain.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

EXETER, N. H.
NEWS
7/27/39

"Squalus" Benefit Concert

An opportunity to hear one of the most famous orchestras in America presents itself in the Squalus memorial concert, to be held Sunday, July 30, at Little Boar's Head. Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, have been receiving tremendous ovations for their concerts in Boston on the Esplanade and, by cancellation of their last concert there, have been able to schedule their appearance at the benefit concert on the Hobson estate, within easy reach of music lovers of this region.

In offering this service, the members of the orchestra are adding substantially to the resources to be placed at the disposal of the dependents bereaved by the Squalus disaster. We Americans, in addition to taking advantage of the musical treat made available, can hardly be less patriotic than these musicians, many of whom are foreign-born. The concert will begin at 4 P. M. and include many classical and semi-classical favorites, rendered in the quality of tone that only a well-trained symphony orchestra can produce. The singing of the Navy Hymn at the conclusion of the concert will give reverent significance to the memorial and the dropping of a wreath from an airplane into the water over the sunken Squalus will further symbolize the respect of the American nation.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PORTSMOUTH, N. H.
HERALD-TIMES

JUL 27 1939

Plans Complete For Squalus Benefit Concert Sunday

A high light of the benefit concert for the dependants of the Squalus victims will be the singing of the Navy Hymn. Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, are donating their services for this memorial benefit, and are also cancelling their final Boston Esplanade concert in order to come to Little Boar's Head for the concert on Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock.

The playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" will bring the musical program to a close, and immediately following the close of the concert, those attending will go to the shore, to witness the flight of an airplane, which will go to the scene of the sinking of the Squalus and drop a wreath.

The driveways of the summer homes of former Gov. Alvan T. Fuller of Massachusetts, and former Gov. Huntley N. Spaulding of New Hampshire, have been offered for use for the spectators as they proceed from the Opera Field on the Arthur L. Hobson estate, where the concert will be held, to the shore line of Little Boar's Head to watch the progress of the plane.

The committee reports an excellent response, not only in the matter of tickets, but in everything regarding the arrangements. Eight of the Squalus survivors are to be ushers and will be assisted by a detail of Marines from the Navy Yard. The Navy Yard will establish a first aid station at the Opera Field, and Dr. Donald W. Leonard of Exeter will also be on duty during the afternoon. Lieut. W. T. Doyle, USN, one of the survivors, is in charge of the decorations.

All of the Legion posts in the state are selling tickets. Adjutant Frank N. Sawyer is in charge of this sale by the American Legion and auxiliary, and in all large cities and towns in the state there is a ticket committee. Out-of-state requests for tickets have already come from Connecticut, Rhode Island, New York, Maine and Massachusetts. Gov. and Mrs. William H. Vanderbilt of Rhode Island are expected to attend the concert.

George B. Lord, president of the Portsmouth Savings Bank, has been designated to receive contributions and already has received a large number. This is in addition to the ticket sale, and will swell the Squalus fund by a large amount.

Tickets may be obtained in this city from Green's Drug Store, John H. Greenaway, The Rockingham Hotel, the New Hampshire Gas & Electric Co., Mrs. Charles H. Amhoff, or by calling Mrs. Richard D. Currier, Rye Beach 17.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

HAMPTON, N. H
UNION
7/27/39

U.S.S. SQUALUS MEMORIAL BENEFIT CONCERT TO BE HELD SUNDAY AFTERNOON

ADVANCE TICKET SALE INDICATES ATTENDENCE OF 5000 FOR PROGRAM

Boston Symphony Will Furnish Concert

A most worthwhile benefit concert for the dependents of the victims of the Squalus disaster will be given at Little Boar's Head Sunday afternoon, July 30. The program will be furnished by seventy members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Arthur Fiedler conducting and will be broadcast over a nationwide network.

The concert has a two-fold purpose—to raise funds to provide for the immediate needs of the wives and children of the victims of the submarine disaster, and, to sponsor a Memorial Concert suitable to the memory of the twenty-six heroic dead who lost their lives in peace time service to their nation.

Indications are that the attendance will be one of the largest ever to attend a production at the opera field. The state has been well organized in the distribution of tickets, with many of the larger places reporting an excellent response. Already 25 boxes have been sold and the ticket committee chairman Mrs. Alfred Rosser stated today that the committee is swamped with requests for tickets. In case of rain the program will be given at the Casino Ballroom, Hampton Beach.

The Boston Symphony orchestra appeals to all music lovers and will present a program which will be featured by the audience singing the Naval hymn "Eternal Father, Strong To Save."

Following the concert it is hoped that the expected 5000 listeners will go to the shore where the final tribute of this memorial concert will be held. Mrs. John P. Wingate, general chairman announced today arrangements have been made for the dropping of a wreath over the site of the Squalus from an airplane.

Programs with a beautifully designed cover by Dr. Donald W. Leonard of Exeter will be sold for 25 cents and 100 programs bearing the autograph of Lieutenant Naquin will be sold for one dollar.

Free parking space is being provided and local and state police are cooperating fully to prevent any traffic delay or tie-up.

Tickets may be obtained locally from members of the American Legion, Hampton Cooperative Bank, S. A. Dow and Son and at the Union office.

In reference to the final decision of Congress in denying the services of the Marine Band for the concert the following letter was received this morning by Mrs. John P. Wingate, from Representative Arthur B. Jenks.

Dear Mrs. Wingate:

This is to confirm the telegram which I have just sent to you reading as follows:

> Deeply regret to advise that at conference this morning chairman of senate Naval affairs committee decisively refused to consent to favorable action on H. R. 6942. Letter follows:

Despite the numerous appeals I and several of my colleagues in the House have made, plus the final drive made at the conference this morning by Chairman Vinson, of the House Naval Affairs Committee, and Congressman Maas, the ranking Republican Member of that Committee, Senator Walsh, Chairman of the Senate Naval Affairs Committee, has remained adamant and unyielding in his opposition to this legislation. I have no hesitancy in stating that solely because of his unfriendly attitude toward the bill it is buried in the Senate Naval Affairs Committee and dormant, as I feel confident that had he permitted it to be reported to the Senate it would have passed the Senate without any serious opposition and been approved by the President.

Naturally, I am keenly disappointed, as I know you and all concerned are, over the final outcome of this matter.

Yesterday I received the announcement that members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra would participate in the Memorial Concert, and I am hopeful that the splendid efforts of the Committee will be rewarded with overwhelming success in their fine work in behalf of the dependents of the SQUALUS victims.

A. B. Jenks

THIS CLIPPING FROM NASHUA, N. H.
TELEGRAPH

JUL 27 1939

Boston Symphony At Squalus Benefit Program Sunday

Rye Beach — It was announced by Arthur Fielder, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, that he and his 70 musicians would play at the Opera Field of Mrs Arthur L. Hobson's estate at Little Boar's Head on Sunday, July 30, in a concert given for the benefit of the dependents left by the 26 men lost in the disaster of the submarine Squalus. In case of rain the program will be held in the Hampton Beach casino.

The Hobson estate Opera Field has room for 10,000 people.

A group of Bostonians who summer at the beach are paying the expenses of transporting the orchestra to this point, which is within sight of the salvage vessel eight miles off shore.

The citizens committee, of which Mrs Alvin T. Fuller, wife of a former Massachusetts governor, is a member, announced that contributions to the Squalus fund would be received by George B. Lord, president of the Portsmouth, N H, Savings Bank.

Lieut. Oliver F. Naquin, commanding officer of the Squalus, who will administer the fund, and Rear Admiral Cyrus W. Cole, commandant of the Portsmouth Navy Yard, and Capt William F. Amsden, yard captain, are all assisting the committee.

23

THIS CLIPPING FROM HAMPTON, N.H.
UNION
7/27/39

SQUALUS BENEFIT CONCERT

A most worthwhile benefit concert for the dependents of the victims of the Squalus disaster will be given at Little Boar's Head featuring the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Arthur Feidler. The concert will be held on the beautiful opera field of the Hobson estate at 4 P. M. and will afford every person in this corner of New England an opportunity to do their bit towards this worthy cause by attending.

The program will be furnished by seventy members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the able leadership of Arthur Fiedler and will be broadcast over a nationwide network.

The noble spirit of patriotism in the hearts of the sponsors has been evidenced by their untiring efforts to provide an impressive Memorial Concert to those twenty-six men who lost their lives in peace time service to their nation.

That their government failed to do its share is an item which will receive due attention in the press in the near future. As it is the Boston Symphony Orchestra, through the kindness and generosity of a group of summer residents at Little Boar's Head, will be furnished free of charge to this worthy cause. The orchestra is noted for its excellent instrumentation and interpretation of the great masterpieces of all time and will furnish a real treat to music lovers in this section.

Not only will people attend to hear the fine music, but more to take part in this Memorial Concert for those who gave their lives to their country.

They gave their lives—surely we can, each one of us, at least give one dollar, the price of general admission. Those not able to attend and desiring to make a contribution to this noble cause, can send their donation to Mr. George B. Lord, President of the Portsmouth Savings Bank, Portsmouth, New Hampshire, who is treasurer of the Squalus Benefit Concert.

Won't you do your part?

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEWARK, N. J.
CALL

JUL 30 1939

Concert to Aid Kin Of Squalus Victims

PORTSMOUTH, N. H. (AP)—While salvage workers on the fog-blanketed submarine rescue ship Falcon made ready last night to raise the last of three pontoons which sank when the submarine Squalus plunged back to the ocean bottom July 13, plans were completed for a benefit concert for near relatives of the submersible's 26 dead.

The concert, to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under direction of Arthur Fiedler, will be held this afternoon at Rye Beach on the estate of Arthur L. Hobson.

As part of the tribute, an airplane from Newburyport will fly over the scene of the Squalus disaster, and drop a floral wreath.

Divers working toward the raising of the submarine succeeded yesterday in bringing up a chain, which had been attached to the last of the three pontoons on which salvagers had been working. Navy men said they expected to raise the pontoon today.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

JUL 30 1939

Symphony to Play in Squalus Benefit

Rye Beach, N. H.—It was announced by Arthur Fielder, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, that he and his 70 musicians would play at the Opera Field of Mrs. Arthur L. Hobson's estate at Little Boar's Head on Sunday, July 30, in a concert given for the benefit of the dependents left by the 26 men lost in the disaster of the submarine Squalus. In case of rain the program will be held in the Hampton Beach Casino.

The Hobson estate Opera Field has room for 10,000 people.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 30 1939

BOSTON SYMPHONY WILL GIVE SQUALUS BENEFIT CONCERT

Portsmouth, N. H., July 29—(AP)—While salvage workers on the fog-blanketed submarine rescue ship Falcon made ready tonight to raise the last of three pontoons which sank when the submarine Squalus plunged back to the ocean bottom July 13, plans were completed for a benefit concert for near relatives of the submersible's 26 dead.

The concert, to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, will be held tomorrow afternoon at Rye Beach on the estate of Arthur L. Hobson.

As part of the tribute, an airplane from Newburyport will fly over the scene of the Squalus disaster, and drop a floral wreath prepared under the direction of the concert committee.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN

JUL 30 1939

Relatives Of Squalus Victims To Benefit

Concert Will Be Given Today By Boston Symphony Orchestra

Portsmouth, N. H., July 29. (AP)—While salvage workers on the fog-blanketed submarine rescue ship Falcon made ready tonight to raise the last of three pontoons which sank when the submarine Squalus plunged back to the ocean botton July 13, plans were completed for a benefit concert for near relatives of the submersible's twenty-six dead.

The concert, to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under direction of Arthur Fiedler, will be held tomorrow afternoon at Rye Beach, on the estate of Arthur L. Hobson.

As part of the tribute, an airplane from Newburyport will fly over the scene of the Squalus disaster and drop a floral wreath.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

JUL 30 1939

CONCERT TO BENEFIT KIN OF SQUALUS DEAD

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., July 29 (AP)—While salvage workers on the fog-blanketed submarine rescue ship Falcon made ready tonight to raise the last of three pontoons which sank when the submarine Squalus plunged back to the ocean bottom July 13, plans were completed for a benefit concert for near relatives of the submersible's 26 dead.

The concert, to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, will be held tomorrow afternoon at Rye Beach on the estate of Arthur L. Hobson.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY

JUL 31 1939

SUB SURVIVORS ACT AS USHERS

Nine from Squalus Serve At Concert Given for Aid of Dependents

RYE BEACH, N. H., July 30 (AP) — Nine survivors of the sunken submarine Squalus served as ushers today at an outdoor concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra to benefit dependents of the 26 men who died in the disaster.

Despite fog and light rain preceding the concert, it was attended by more than 2,500 persons, a number of whom sought autographs from Lieutenant Oliver F. Naquin, commander of the vessel which plunged to the ocean bottom off Portsmouth during tests last May.

Naquin sat inconspicuously in the rear of the audience. Later he thanked Arthur Fiedler, conductor, for his efforts.

Wooden seats for the audience were set up in a field on the estate of Arthur Hobson by a detail of Marines, who aided the nine Squalus enlisted men in their ushering assignment.

A highlight of the concert was a Navy hymn, "Eternal Father, Strong to Save," in which sailors, marines and audience joined in singing.

Others of the submarine's 33 rescued men were on duty at the salvage scene, where the breaking of a line prevented the lifting of the last of three pontoons which sank during the first attempt to raise the Squalus July 13. A diver attempted to repair the damage but was stopped by a heavy ground swell.

While most of the program consisted of typical concert selections, the second half included a solemn selection, the Adagio Lamentoso, from Tchaikovsky's Pathetique Symphony, marked on the program as "In Memorium."

With the musicians and the audience standing, the program ended with "The Star Spangled Banner."

Those in charge of the concert said the amount of money raised for the dependents had not been determined. Contributions were expected from some who did not attend.

THIS CLIPPING FROM PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD

JUL 31 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSBURG, PA.
POST-GAZETTE

JUL 31 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST-DISPATCH

JUL 31 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ST. LOUIS, MO.
GLOBE-DEMOCRAT

JUL 31 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM HOUSTON, TEXAS
POST

JUL 31 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM DALLAS, TEXAS
NEWS

JUL 31 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM BRISTOW, OKLA.
RECORD

JUL 31 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM NEW LONDON, CONN.
DAY

JUL 31 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER

JUL 31 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WINSTON SALEM, N. C.
JOURNAL

JUL 31 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

JUL 31 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM CHATTANOOGA, TENN.
TIMES

JUL 30 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS

JUL 31 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER-JOURNAL

JUL 31 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM DAYTON, OHIO
JOURNAL

JUL 31 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

JUL 31 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM LEWISTON, ME.
SUN

JUL 31 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM WATERVILLE, ME.
SENTINEL

JUL 31 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM ELMIRA, N. Y.
ADVERTISER

JUL 31 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

JUL 31 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 31 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM HUDSON, N. Y.
REGISTER

JUL 31 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 31 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
JAMESTOWN, N. Y.
POST

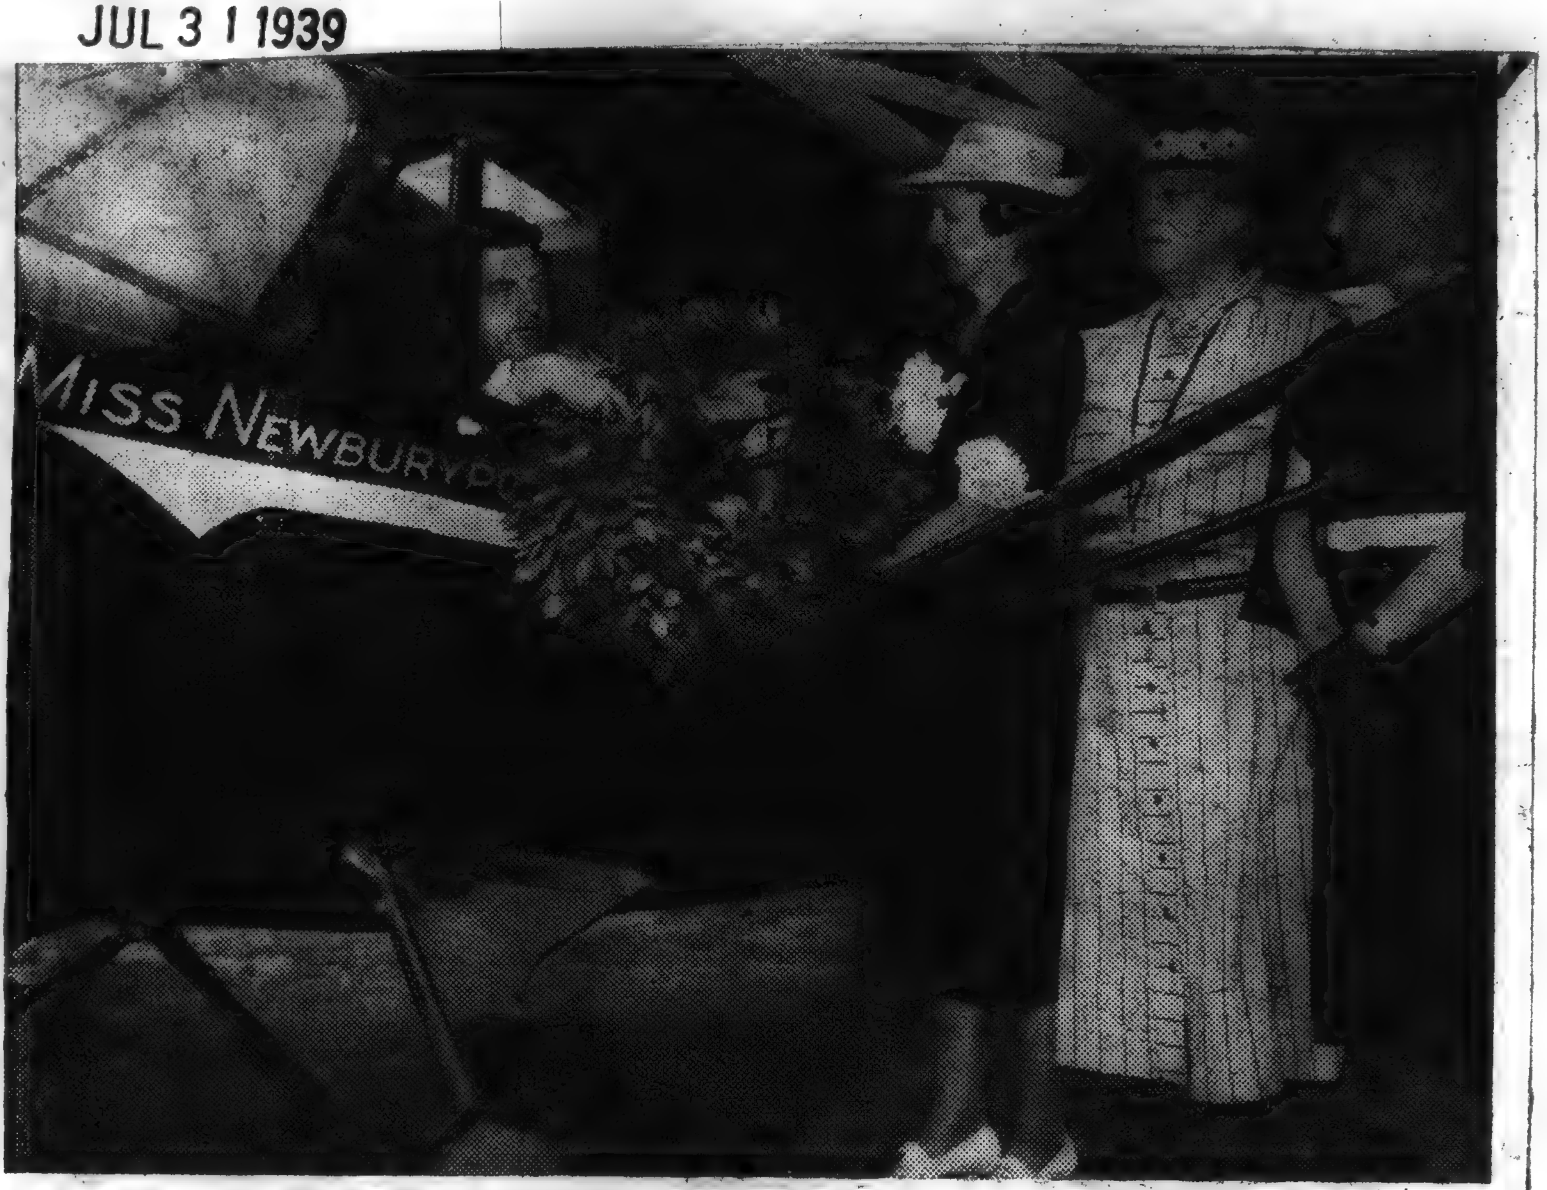
JUL 31 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
Democrat-Chronicle

JUL 31 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

JUL 31 1939



WREATH FOR SQUALUS VICTIMS

Pilot Warren S. Frothingham of Newburyport, shown receiving a memorial wreath from Mrs. John Paine Wingate of Hampton, N. H.; Mrs. Alfred Rosser of Hampton, N. H., and Mrs. Richard D. Currier of Rye Beach, N. H., prior to taking off for scene where the submarine Squalus sank last May, carrying 26 men to their death. (Associated Press Photo.)

ATTENDS BENEFIT CONCERT

Lieut. Oliver F. Naquin (left), commander of the United States submarine Squalus which sank last May with 26 men, attended a benefit concert at Rye Beach, N. H. The Boston Symphony Orchestra was conducted by Arthur Fiedler (right). Proceeds of the concert will go to dependents of the 26 men who died in the disaster. (Associated Press Photo.)

Squalus Salvage Work Is Delayed

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., July 31 (AP)—Heavy ocean swells plagued salvagers of the submarine Squalus again today and divers were unable to get down from the salvage ship Falcon to renew efforts to raise the last of three pontoons which sank July 13.

Officers aboard the Falcon reported to shore that visibility was zero when the time came for the resumption of diving today. Dense early morning fog covered coastal New England for the second successive day.

Later the salvagers sent word ashore that visibility was improving and the sea was getting easier and they hoped to begin diving by afternoon.

Lifting apparatus attached to the pontoon broke yesterday when an attempt was made to float the ponderous barrel, and a heavy swell prevented divers from repairing the damage.

While salvage crews rode the heavy seas, nine of 33 survivors of the sunken craft served as ushers at an outdoor concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at nearby Rye Beach for the benefit of dependents of 26 men who died May 23 in the disaster.

Despite fog and rain, the affair was attended by more than twenty-five hundred persons, many of whom sought autographs from Lieut. Oliver F. Naquin, commander of the vessel.

The program consisted of typical concert selections, but included a solemn selection, the Adagio Lamentoso from Tchaikovsky's Pathetique Symphony, marked on the program as "In Memorium."

The amount of money raised was not determined as the committee awaited contributions from many who did not attend.

THIS CLIPPING FROM KEOKUK, IA.
GATE CITY

JUL 31 1939

Bring Up Last Of Pontoons In Squalus Salvage

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., July 31 —(AP)—Weather permitting, salvagers planned today to bring up from the ocean depths the last of three pontoons which sank when the submarine Squalus plunged to the muddy bottom during the first attempt to lift her on July 13.

Lifting apparatus attached to the pontoon broke yesterday when an attempt was made to float the ponderous barrel, and a heavy swell prevented divers from repairing the damage.

While salvage crews rode the heavy seas, nine of 33 survivors of the sunken craft served as ushers at an outdoor concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra at nearby Rye beach for the benefit of dependents of 26 men who died in the disaster May 23.

The amount of money raised was not determined as the committee awaited contributions from many who did not attend.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CLINTON, IA.
HERALD

JUL 31 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
JUL 31 1939

Boston Symphony in Benefit For Survivors of Squalus

Eighty-five members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Arthur Fiedler, gave an outdoor concert at Rye Beach, N. H., yesterday for the benefit of the 26 men who died in the Submarine Squalus disaster. A crowd of 2500 turned out despite the fog and light rain preceding the concert.

Nine survivors of the ship served as ushers. Lieut. Oliver F. Naquin, commander of the vessel which plunged to the ocean bottom off Portsmouth in May, sat inconspicuously in the rear of the audience and at the close of the concert thanked Mr. Fiedler for his efforts in behalf of dependents of the survivors. A high light of the concert was a navy hymn, "Eternal Father, Strong To Save," in which sailors, marines and the audience joined in singing.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor and the entire orchestra of more than 100 men will arrive in the Berkshires Wednesday for rehearsals at the Tanglewood shed in anticipation of the opening of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Thursday night at 8.30.

THIS CLIPPING FROM LOWELL, MASS.
LEADER

JUL 31 1939

Practical Applause Needed

Although crowds of from 10,000 to 18,000 have attended and enjoyed the Esplanade concerts in Boston nightly, what one of the Boston Symphony staff officials called the "practical applause" has been the poorest since Arthur Fiedler organized the concerts 11 years ago.

He was referring to the collections from the contribution boxes scattered about the seating area of the Esplanade. The average amount put into any one of the boxes has been about 85 cents. On one night when there was a large attendance the total contributions amounted to only $17.

At the start of the venture it was dependent on the gifts of generous donors. These were reduced as a result of economic conditions. And now reliance is put on the contributions of the public. The fact is that this season ends with a deficit of $3600. That is unfortunate. If everybody who attended a concert contributed a dime it is likely that expenses would be met. An average contribution of a quarter would put the concerts on a sound financial basis.

Last week ground was broken for the new, permanent orchestral shell which will be ready for next season. That reflects faith that the concerts will not be abandoned. But there ought to be more "practical applause." That is the best way to show appreciation. And for the individual concert-goer it involves no sacrifice.

25

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JAN 4 - 1939

Dr. Koussevitzky Gives Hindemith's Symphonic Dances

By CARL E. LINDSTROM

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky in preparing the program which he offered here Tuesday evening must have reasoned that any novelty which could be programmed in Boston and New York would be as readily assimilated in Bushnell Memorial. Symphony Hall has heard Hindemith's Symphonic Dances and before the week is out they will be presented in Carnegie Hall.

They were politely received here, but that is all. In fact there was already a nodding acquaintanceship since the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo introduced early in the season Massine's St. Francis for which the music was originally composed. This writer has always been sorry he missed St. Francis until just now. Embarrassing comparisons have such a way of leaping at you that anyone should be happy to escape them, even at the cost of having waited about two months for the Hindemith music. After all there is an advantage in meeting a new face in broad daylight.

Hindemith's Dances

That should adequately describe the penetrating beams with which Koussevitzky's Boston Orchestra searched into the substance out of which Hindemith fashioned his Symphonic Dances. There was nothing obscure, or cryptic, or inconclusive. Beneath the hectic tissue, the very bone and cartilage were laid bare. The figure is used advisedly for the whole thing was as anatomical as an operating room and desperate as adolescence. The day has gone by when dissonances are either annoying or diverting. We are all seasoned and civilized now and do not bat an eye at fantastic rhythms or mathematical harmonies, but are still human enough to want to be interested and the fact is that a straw vote—sensibly disfranchising critics—would undoubtedly show that the Hindemith Dances were something of a bore. It might be pointed out that a wish that they were over fathered some premature applause between Sehr langsam and Maessig bewegt. That was a pity too since all told there was only just enough applause to go around and a few extra claps at the close of the concert would have suited nicely.

A Superb Brahms

It would then have been timed immediately after as elevating a performance of Brahms' Fourth Symphony as memory commands. To be more specific and willfully more extravagant about it, the andante moderato was the most celestial slow movement of any work whatsoever that these ears have heard in Bushnell Memorial. There was a sense of inner communion about it which pervaded the whole orchestra and produced "moments when we are on the edge where thought and emotion incessantly change into one another, the visions of Nature which we compose but which are not of Nature, the sorrows and depressions which have no name and to which we allot no cause, the depths of passionate fancy when we have not only no relation to mankind, but hate to feel that relation."

The spirit returned again for extended periods in the final movement where the lovely fabric of the passacaglia was fairly etherealized by exquisite playing in which trombones and flute must be particularized. The strings as a body came into their own in the opening Concerto Grosso No. 10 of Handel. Messrs Burgin, Theodorowicz and Bedetti took well deserved bows for their solos. The hearty response which the Handel Concerto drew would dispute the easy assumption that last night's audience was not in a receptive mood. Something reduced the listeners' temperature and that brings us back to Hindemith.

Seeking New Worlds

The Symphonic Dances are going to be heard again and one suspects that in using such a title Hindemith hoped that his music would have a career independent of the ballet. There is good precedent for that in Rosamunde, Le Sacre du Printemps and the bacchanale which could live without Tannhaeuser. Hindemith's music does not rank with any of these but it is as good as any you'll find in production these days. There is really a great deal like it. The collision between romanticism and twentieth century realism is still of fairly recent date and we shall be coming upon these asteroids with a frequency in proportion to our industry in looking for new worlds, which may not have been formed in the cataclysm after all.

If they are found, it will be at the hands of a Koussevitzky. An artist of his stature and with such an orchestra at his command could not well be blamed if he made his successes as merely a virtuoso conductor, but American audiences have received at his hands more new music than from any other leader. Nothing escapes him, whether it be a new score or an undiscovered facet in an old one.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CAMDEN, N. J.
COURIER

JAN 5 - 1939

BOSTON SYMPHONY IS HEARD IN PHILA.

Koussevitzky's Orchestra Gives Memorable Concert for Forum

Philadelphia was treated last night to one of those rare concerts which become future standards of comparison. It was by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, appearing in the Academy of Music for the Philadelphia Forum.

The two great "Fifths" of musical literature—Beethoven's and Sibelius' symphonies of that number—made a robust program satisfying to ears prepared for their elemental timelessness by the graceful virtuosity of Vivaldi's Concerto in D Minor for Orchestra and Organ. In this, the electrical organ used was far from effective, but that was incidental, because the number again established the pre-eminence of the Boston's strings—although perhaps the home-town pride of Philadelphians precludes the possibility of such concession from most of those in attendance.

Pre-eminent, too, is Koussevitzky as a conductor of Sibelius. From the stark grandeur of the composer's blue-print he erected a tonal structure as devoid of sentimentality as the framework of a skyscraper—and as overpoweringly impressive as steel stabbing the sky. Sparse in the sense of being devoid of orchestral bric-a-brac, the symphony ranks with the greatest of all time—when the conductor extracts its austere eloquence as does Koussevitzky: by simply hoisting the beams and driving the rivets and not trying to obscure them with "interpretative" terra-cotta.

No man today can give a better reading of Beethoven than the Boston's conductor. The Fifth, as he does it, is the familiar one that the listener's memory has strained from countless hearings—"old stuff," some might say. Which is as it should be, because the Fifth is old, both in age and in the sense that earth and fire and water and mountains are old—we feel that they always have been and always must be. No conductor has ever lived who could improve on Beethoven's own conception; all he has to do is to follow its perfection faithfully and extract the utmost of tone from his men. Worthy of note in this respect was the velvet fury of Koussevitzky's bass-fiddles in the third movement.

The concert was received with exceptional enthusiasm and the conductor was recalled five times at the close.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CITIZEN

JAN 7 - 1939

BOSTON SYMPHONY HEARD AT ACADEMY

Presents Program of Haydn, Ravel and Brahms—Sanroma Soloist

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting, made its second appearance of the season in the Academy of Music last night, presenting a program of Haydn, Ravel and Brahms.

Two of the compositions on the program were received with virtually unanimous acclaim, but the concerto for piano and orchestra by Ravel, with Jesus Maria Sanroma as soloist, evoked a mixed reception.

This is not to be construed, however, as any indication that the orchestra or Dr. Koussevitzky were not reading and playing music in accordance with a truly felicitous standard.

When they were concentrating their efforts on the Haydn Symphony No. 102 in B flat and the Braahms Symphony No. 4 in E minor, Op. 98, both the music and the efforts of the musicians formed an artistic blend which would brook no cavil.

To the Ravel concerto, Sanroma gave a masterly performance which was brilliantly supported by the orchestra. It was the music of Ravel which caused some of the more sedate members of the audience to lift eyebrows. This reviewer found it again a stimulating composition, delicately conceived, and containing some passages of lofty musical thought.

For the Brahms and Haydn, which were so thoughtfully conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky, there could have been nothing but unstinted praise.

W. R.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

APR 23 1939

FROM THE MAIL POUCH

Bloch's "America"

To the Music Editor:

After a decade of neglect Ernest Bloch's "America" was performed last week by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the composer conducting. Its effect on the audiences was strongly moving; some of the critics, on the other hand, did not treat it too tenderly. The misunderstanding is, I think, that those reviewers were speaking of one thing and Bloch of another. Tastes cultivated on the caviar and cocktails of much in modern music may have found it naive; but to those who understand that Bloch is serving buckwheat cakes, baked beans and juicy steak, not omitting new cider with the bead on it, a genuinely American square meal, not the least of his music's virtues is its occasional touch of naïveté. When it was first performed ten years ago I doubt if we were in a frame of mind to understand or to receive it. The work was written in 1926, not one of the years when this country was at its best. Fortunately Bloch has more to say of 1620 and 1865, the America of William Bradford, Abraham Lincoln and Walt Whitman, when this country emphatically was at its best. What he has to say of our Nineteen Twenties, in his third movement, is said with wit, irony, and, sardonic though it is, with not a little good humor. His prophetic insight told him that the phase would not last, and he has said so in the music itself.

What seems to irk some of his critics, professional and lay, is his treatment of our folk tunes. But they do not object to this when it is done by Brahms with German student songs, or by Aeschylus out of the Iliad. Isn't looking down our noses at our own tunes a little too much like town folks being ashamed of their country cousins? Perhaps our country cousins are quite as good as we are. If here and there in the work are touches of the naive and the sentimental, they belong right where they are, for as a people we are still quite capable of both. Bloch has not falsified his document, and his likeness is true. At the same time the score is full of noble and magnificent music and to hear it, after much that has been going on in our orchestra halls, is a relief and a delight to the ears. The funeral march at the end of the second movement, which suggests Whitman's elegy for President Lincoln, "When lilacs last in the dooryard bloom'd . . ." is profoundly touching, and still finer is the great hymn which concludes the work. Here in this music is the America that some of us would like to believe in, that some of us do believe in however often it may belie itself, the country for which we go on year after year quietly living and working.

Such music deserves to be heard widely. I think it would put heart into a lot of people. If critics do not like it, where is the harm in that? The common people may hear Bloch gladly. It as as though an Old Testament prophet had been living among us long enough to learn our ways and to believe that we and our ways are, at bottom, good. He has said so with unmistakable sincerity. My guess is that this music is only just beginning to be wanted and that it will be wanted more before it is wanted less.

LUCIEN PRICE.

Boston, April 20, 1939.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

APR 23 1939

Miss Ida Kimball Engaged To Boston Symphony Member

(Photo by Steiger's)

Mr and Mrs Benjamin L. Kimball of Leyfred terrace announce the engagement of their daughter, Ida, to Joseph Lukatsky of Boston. Miss Kimball is a graduate of the Bridgewater and Westfield State Teachers colleges and is at present teaching in the local schools. Mr Lukatsky, son of the late Mr and Mrs Frank Lukatsky, was graduated from Curtis institute at Philadelphia and the New England Conservatory of Music at Boston. He is a member of the oboe section of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

APR 23 1939

A CONDUCTOR IN ACTION—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Orchestra, which is scheduled in the next Bushnell concert series.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

MAY 1 - 1939

World of Lively Arts

By T. H. PARKER

Descent From the Heights.

On occasions there are reasons for believing in the oldtime superstitions, such as the unluckiness of the number 13. It was on that date in September, last, that Randolph Carter's dramatization of "Wuthering Heights" was tried out at the Avery Memorial here, and it was a bad day for Emily Bronte, the history of the American Stage and the audience.

On Thursday, the play opened in New York. Mr. Brooks Atkinson of the New York Times, says in part: "The burial services conducted over the novel at the Longacre are going to make a lot of people think twice before they ever look inside a Bronte play again . . . There is nothing wrong with Mr. Carter's dramatization, except that it is overpoweringly dull . . . People are wonderfully patient and tolerant. They can take it. Last evening was so quiet you could have heard a theatergoer drop . . . It was a remarkable exhibition of human fortitude on both sides of the footlights."

Mr. Richard Watts of the Tribune came out of his corner fighting: "It is conceivable that there have been worse plays presented in town this season than this turgid and silly dramatization of 'Wuthering Heights.' I think I can assure you, though, that there has been nothing so thoroughly and hopelessly dull . . . The stage 'Wuthering Heights,' I can tell you myself, is an utterly fatuous drama, completely devoid of merit. With Miss Edith Barrett giving one of the most astonishing performances of the year in the leading role, the current dramatization represents what I would like to think of as a nadir."

The critical gentry stick together, thick as thieves. Of course it's all a plot to ruin playwrights, nothing more.

Podium Ballet.

Now that the subject of Leon Barzin's podium manner has been opened, I may as well contribute my two cents worth. Personally, I have always been one to feel that a conductor may deport himself exactly as he pleases or needs, provided he can get music out of his men thereby. He can stand on his head and hold his baton in his toes, for all of me.

I am not unaware that Mr. Barzin's animation has been a topic for frequent comment. I have even been told by members of his orchestra here, that he noes not conduct that way in New York. Even if this is the case (which I greatly doubt), a different orchestra can easily lead a conductor to podium measures different from those he uses with the home team. I thought of all this as I listened to the orchestra in the Strauss Waltz Tuesday night, and I found myself straining in my seat in a subconscious effort to get the music swinging, which it was not doing. I felt for Mr. Barzin, as he tried to swing them off with the sympathetic magic of his own swaying.

I do not suppose we see any conductor in this city with a podium manner and baton technique, more classic than that of Artur Rodzinski, and I can take a few moments even from Beethoven, to admire the wonderful poise of that horizontal beat. It is the diametric opposite of Mr. Barbirolli, whose intensities have often put me in mind of Svengali working upon a particularly obstinate subject. My favorite will always be Dr. Koussevitzky, however, as he stands all but motionless, cueing in the players with only an imperious nod and surveying his racing orchestra with a look of fatherly pride.

Songs and Sixpence.

What with song hits cropping up at the rate of seven a week, and lasting just about one day too, it is interesting to have a few actual figures on ballads which have caught on in a ne plus ultra way. If anyone asks you what the No. 1 selling copyright song of all times is, tread warily, memory is deceiving and guessing won't tell. It is, according to Variety, "Tuck Me To Sleep in My Old 'Tucky Home," which has gone somewhere around 2,000.000 copies. This came out in connection with the death of Joe Young in New York last week, who was one of the most consistent producers of hit songs the country has ever known. He also wrote "Dinah," rated at a million and a half copies, and "Mammy," which went to 1,250 000.

Out of a long and impressive list, those that Joe wrote in war-time will have a peculiar significance probably long after his most familiar hits have been forgotten. They are "How Ya Gonna Keep 'em, Down On The Farm?" "Rocky Road to Dublin," and that marvelous weeper "Hello, Central, Give Me No Man's Land." showing a tot at the telephone, on the cover.

Joe made a fortune, and built a Spanish mansion on Long Island.

Double Trouble.

The years he has spent scampering around corners to escape the heartless world must have inured Charlie Chaplin to its vicissitudes by this time, but he is rather on the horns of a dilemma in his new picture, soon to be released. In the first place, it is called "The Dictator," which is likely to put a crimp in its style in several foreign countries, and in the second, it includes an old English music hall skit called "The Paper Hanger." You can see the chances of its being shown in Germany. And why yes, of course, I'd almost forgotten that little mustache.

Liberty Hall.

Emma Redell, who sings here with the Oratorio Society tonight, is making a double protest about the state of musical affairs in Washington. When she appeared there in February, she deplored the fact that the city has no suitable auditorium for concert, opera and dramatic performances. Shortly after, the Marian Anderson-DAR incident occurred, which gave Miss Redell the idea to kill two birds with one stone. She projects to give Washington an auditorium, and one where matters of race and similar criteria will not interfere with the course of true art. She has pledged to give 10 concerts in 10 cities, each of which must first pledge not less than $10.000. In this manner she expects to raise by herself $100,000 Then she hopes to get leading colleagues to do the same. Finally, a campaign will be conducted through the country, to secure the funds needed to complete the building of "Liberty Hall" in Washington.

THIS CLIPPING FROM COURIER
Rockland, Me

MAY 2 - 1939

"Hot-Shot Divertimento" and "Swing-Stuff"—names to lead one to expect just what such titles convey—were surprisingly pleasing. Mr. Polatschek, plump, short and jolly, and Mr. McBride, a stunning youth towering several inches over his partner, played beautifully; this was also true of Mr. Polatschek and Mr. Tillotson. Contrary to expectations, the compositions contained appeal in tonal effects and a certain haunting rhythmic style, though always modern in structure. I might add that Mr. Polatschek is solo clarinetist of the Boston S[illegible]chestra; born in Vienna. Mr. McBride a native of Tuscon, Arizona though still in his 20's, has had his compositions played by such orchestras as the New York Philharmonic Chamber Orchestra and Rochester Philharmonic; is skilled in clarient, oboe, saxaphone and piano; has also had the Guggenheim Fellowship.

* * * *

Mr. Piston's Sonata made a very general appeal, particularly in the Adagio and Allegro movements which contained fine melodic line despite the modern writing. Mr. Brodsky played with real mastery, and at the close it was rather thrilling to have Mr. Piston extract himself from a group about midway in the hall and go to the front, congratulate Mr. Brodsky in a very genial manner and acknowledge the thunderous applause.

THIS CLIPPING FROM HAVERHILL, MASS.
GAZETTE

MAY 3 - 1939

SYMPHONY SEASON

While the closing of the 58th season of the Boston Symphony orchestra is announced, simultaneously comes announcement of the 54th season of the "Pops" opening, Wednesday, May 3.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, concludes his 15th season as leader of the orchestra during its regular season of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts in Boston Symphony hall.

Arthur Fiedler of the orchestra will begin his tenth season as conductor of the "Pops" with the Wednesday concert. This is the longest term of any conductor in the history of the "Pops."

Mr. Fiedler will have 90 men of the Symphony orchestra under his baton. As usual they will play programs of light and familiar music. There will be "special night" performances, soloists of note, and many novelties. Sunday evening concerts will be given during May.

At the tables on the floor of the hall, one may eat, drink and smoke and "indulge in discreet conversation" to the accompaniment of music played by members of "one of the greatest orchestras ever known," according to the Boston Globe Music editor.

E. B. F.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BEAUMONT, TEX.
ENTERPRISE

MAY 3 - 1939

Overheard

The Boston symphony recently played in New Haven, and one of the pieces Mr. Koussevitzky conducted was Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf." One of our spies was in a nearby bar after the concert and heard two New Haven couples discussing it. "What I like about Prokofieff is the way he does things with his tongue in his cheek," one lady said. "Really?" said the other lady. "We couldn't see a thing from our seats."—New Yorker.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CINCINNATI, O.
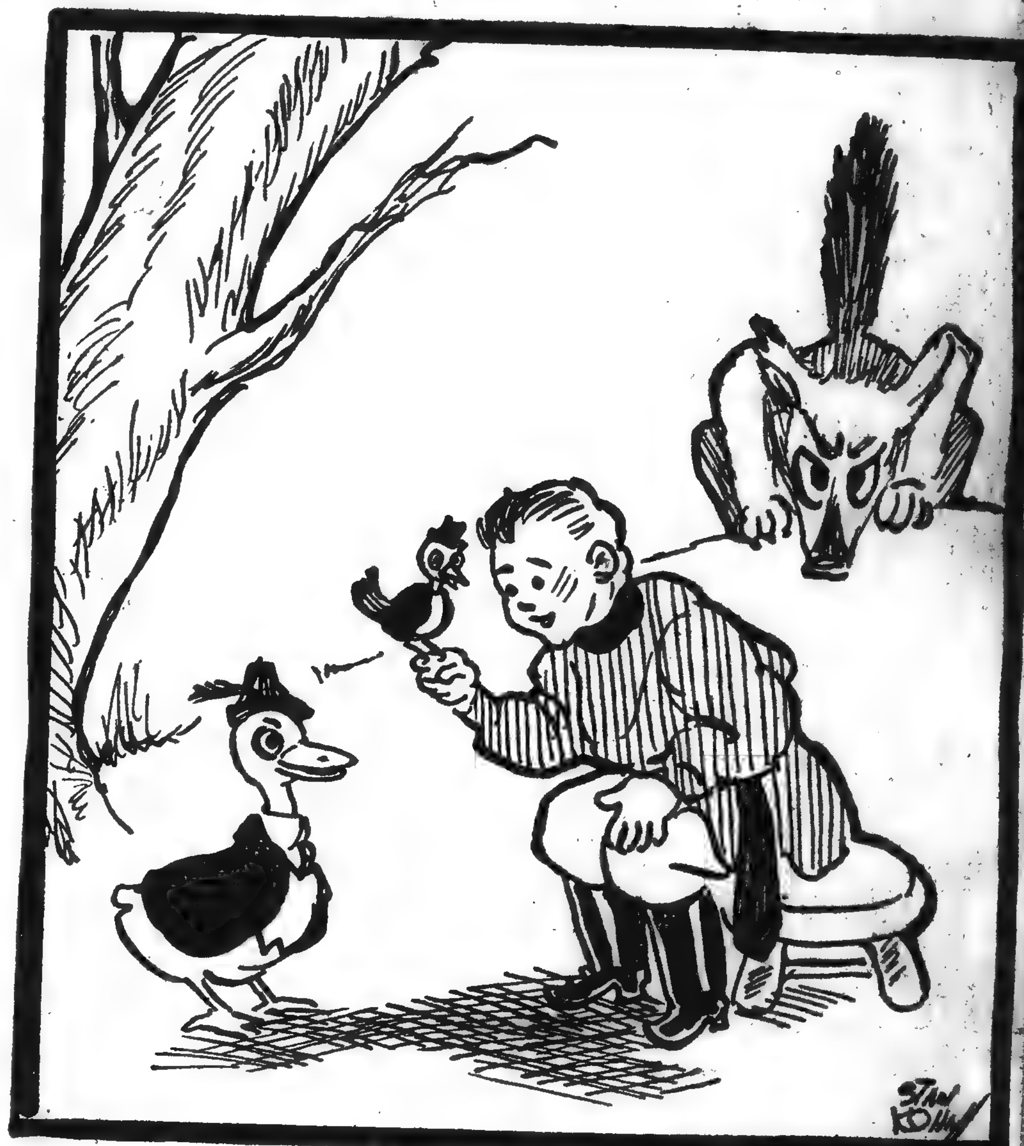
ENQUIRER

MAY 5 - 1939

Fantasy Of Festival



This is Artist Stanley Kohn's conception of a scene from the musical fantasy, "Peter and the Wolf," which will be presented tomorrow afternoon on the May Festival program.

"Peter and the Wolf," the amusing musical fantasy by Prokofieff which will be offered at tomorrow's matinee performance of the May Festival, has been enjoying one of the most outstanding successes of any of the new modern compositions. Originally introduced into this country by the eminent Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, on March 25, 1938, it has been repeated in the East a number of times. It was recently offered at the Pension Fund concerts in New York, where the sometimes skeptical metropolitan music public took Peter, the cat, the bird, the duck, Peter's grandfather, and even the wolf to its collective heart.

So impressed with the work is Dr. Koussevitsky that, in a recent interview in the Christian Science Monitor, he nominates it as a worthy successor to "Snow White," as a story for children that adults will take to their hearts. He suggests that Walt Disney use it if he is looking about for new nursery characters with which to charm adults. Incidentally, Koussevitsky is a Disney fan.

For those who are unfamiliar with "Peter and the Wolf," it should be explained that it is about a small boy who, with the help of his friend, the bird, captures a fierce wolf. The wolf swallowed the duck but, "if one would listen very carefully, he could hear the duck quaking in the wolf's belly, because in his hurry the wolf had swallowed the duck alive."

The fairy tale is written for orchestra and the spoken voice. Each of the characters who appear in the story is represented in the orchestra. Thus the bassoon represents the granddaddy, the flue is the bird, the cat is represented by the clarinet, the duck is the oboe, and the big, bad wolf is represented by the French horn trio. Peter is represented by the string quartet and the shooting of the hunters brings the kettledrum and the bass drum into action.

At the Saturday matinee performance of the work at Music Hall, Keith Falkner will be the narrator and read the amusing lines as the music progresses.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

MAY 3 - 1939

TONGUE IN CHEEK

The Boston Symphony recently played in New Haven, and one of the pieces Mr. Koussevitzky conducted was Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf." One of our spies was in a near-by bar after the concert and heard two New Haven couples discussing it. "What I like about Prokofieff is the way he does things with his tongue in his cheek," one lady said. "Really?" said the other lady. "We couldn't see a thing from our seats."—"New Yorker."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

APR 23 1939

A CONDUCTOR IN ACTION—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Orchestra, which is scheduled in the next Bushnell concert series.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

MAY 1 - 1939

World of Lively Arts

By T. H. PARKER

Descent From the Heights.

On occasions there are reasons for believing in the oldtime superstitions, such as the unluckiness of the number 13. It was on that date in September, last, that Randolph Carter's dramatization of "Wuthering Heights" was tried out at the Avery Memorial here, and it was a bad day for Emily Bronte, the history of the American Stage and the audience.

On Thursday, the play opened in New York. Mr. Brooks Atkinson of the New York Times, says in part: "The burial services conducted over the novel at the Longacre are going to make a lot of people think twice before they ever look inside a Bronte play again . . . There is nothing wrong with Mr. Carter's dramatization, except that it is overpoweringly dull . . . People are wonderfully patient and tolerant. They can take it. Last evening was so quiet you could have heard a theatergoer drop . . . It was a remarkable exhibition of human fortitude on both sides of the footlights."

Mr. Richard Watts of the Tribune came out of his corner fighting: "It is conceivable that there have been worse plays presented in town this season than this turgid and silly dramatization of 'Wuthering Heights.' I think I can assure you, though, that there has been nothing so thoroughly and hopelessly dull . . . The stage 'Wuthering Heights,' I can tell you myself, is an utterly fatuous drama, completely devoid of merit. With Miss Edith Barrett giving one of the most astonishing performances of the year in the leading role, the current dramatization represents what I would like to think of as a nadir."

The critical gentry stick together, thick as thieves. Of course it's all a plot to ruin playwrights, nothing more.

Podium Ballet.

Now that the subject of Leon Barzin's podium manner has been opened, I may as well contribute my two cents worth. Personally, I have always been one to feel that a conductor may deport himself exactly as he pleases or needs, provided he can get music out of his men thereby. He can stand on his head and hold his baton in his toes, for all of me.

I am not unaware that Mr. Barzin's animation has been a topic for frequent comment. I have even been told by members of his orchestra here, that he noes not conduct that way in New York. Even if this is the case (which I greatly doubt), a different orchestra can easily lead a conductor to podium measures different from those he uses with the home team. I thought of all this as I listened to the orchestra in the Strauss Waltz Tuesday night, and I found myself straining in my seat in a subconscious effort to get the music swinging, which it was not doing. I felt for Mr. Barzin, as he tried to swing them off with the sympathetic magic of his own swaying.

I do not suppose we see any conductor in this city with a podium manner and baton technique, more classic than that of Artur Rodzinski, and I can take a few moments even from Beethoven, to admire the wonderful poise of that horizontal beat. It is the diametric opposite of Mr. Barbirolli, whose intensities have often put me in mind of Svengali working upon a particularly obstinate subject. My favorite will always be Dr. Koussevitzky, however, as he stands all but motionless, cueing in the players with only an imperious nod and surveying his racing orchestra with a look of fatherly pride.

Songs and Sixpence.

What with song hits cropping up at the rate of seven a week, and lasting just about one day too, it is interesting to have a few actual figures on ballads which have caught on in a ne plus ultra way. If anyone asks you what the No. 1 selling copyright song of all times is, tread warily, memory is deceiving and guessing won't tell. It is, according to Variety, "Tuck Me To Sleep in My Old 'Tucky Home," which has gone somewhere around 2,000,000 copies. This came out in connection with the death of Joe Young in New York last week, who was one of the most consistent producers of hit songs the country has ever known. He also wrote "Dinah," rated at a million and a half copies, and "Mammy," which went to 1,250,000.

Out of a long and impressive list, those that Joe wrote in war-time will have a peculiar significance probably long after his most familiar hits have been forgotten. They are "How Ya Gonna Keep 'em, Down On The Farm?" "Rocky Road to Dublin," and that marvelous weeper "Hello, Central, Give Me No Man's Land," showing a tot at the telephone, on the cover.

Joe made a fortune, and built a Spanish mansion on Long Island.

Double Trouble.

The years he has spent scampering around corners to escape the heartless world must have inured Charlie Chaplin to its vicissitudes by this time, but he is rather on the horns of a dilemma in his new picture, soon to be released. In the first place, it is called "The Dictator," which is likely to put a crimp in its style in several foreign countries, and in the second, it includes an old English music hall skit called "The Paper Hanger." You can see the chances of its being shown in Germany. And why yes of course, I'd almost forgotten that little mustache.

Liberty Hall.

Emma Redell, who sings here with the Oratorio Society tonight, is making a double protest about the state of musical affairs in Washington. When she appeared there in February, she deplored the fact that the city has no suitable auditorium for concert, opera and dramatic performances. Shortly after, the Marian Anderson-DAR incident occurred, which gave Miss Redell the idea to kill two birds with one stone. She projects to give Washington an auditorium, and one where matters of race and similar criteria will not interfere with the course of true art. She has pledged to give 10 concerts in 10 cities, each of which must first pledge not less than $10,000. In this manner she expects to raise by herself $100,000 Then she hopes to get leading colleagues to do the same. Finally, a campaign will be conducted through the country, to secure the funds needed to complete the building of "Liberty Hall" in Washington.

THIS CLIPPING FROM COURIER

Rockland, Me

MAY 2 - 1939

"Hot-Shot Divertimento" and "Swing-Stuff"—names to lead one to expect just what such titles convey—were surprisingly pleasing. Mr. Polatschek, plump, short and jolly, and Mr. McBride, a stunning youth towering several inches over his partner, played beautifully; this was also true of Mr. Polatschek and Mr. Tillotson. Contrary to expectations, the compositions contained appeal in tonal effects and a certain haunting rhythmic style, though always modern in structure. I might add that Mr. Polatschek is solo clarinetist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; born in Vienna. Mr. McBride a native of Tuscon, Arizona though still in his 20's, has had his compositions played by such orchestras as the New York Philharmonic Chamber Orchestra and Rochester Philharmonic; is skilled in clarient, oboe, saxaphone and piano; has also had the Guggenheim Fellowship.

* * * *

Mr. Piston's Sonata made a very general appeal, particularly in the Adagio and Allegro movements which contained fine melodic line despite the modern writing. Mr. Brodsky played with real mastery, and at the close it was rather thrilling to have Mr. Piston extract himself from a group about midway in the hall and go to the front, congratulate Mr. Brodsky in a very genial manner and acknowledge the thunderous applause.

THIS CLIPPING FROM HAVERHILL, MASS.
GAZETTE

MAY 3 - 1939

SYMPHONY SEASON

While the closing of the 58th season of the Boston Symphony orchestra is announced, simultaneously comes announcement of the 54th season of the "Pops" opening, Wednesday, May 3.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, concludes his 15th season as leader of the orchestra during its regular season of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts in Boston Symphony hall.

Arthur Fiedler of the orchestra will begin his tenth season as conductor of the "Pops" with the Wednesday concert. This is the longest term of any conductor in the history of the "Pops."

Mr. Fiedler will have 90 men of the Symphony orchestra under his baton. As usual they will play programs of light and familiar music. There will be "special night" performances, soloists of note, and many novelties. Sunday evening concerts will be given during May.

At the tables on the floor of the hall, one may eat, drink and smoke and "indulge in discreet conversation" to the accompaniment of music played by members of "one of the greatest orchestras ever known," according to the Boston Globe Music editor.
E. B. F.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BEAUMONT, TEX.
ENTERPRISE

MAY 3 - 1939

Overheard

The Boston symphony recently played in New Haven, and one of the pieces Mr. Koussevitzky conducted was Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf." One of our spies was in a nearby bar after the concert and heard two New Haven couples discussing it. "What I like about Prokofieff is the way he does things with his tongue in his cheek," one lady said. "Really?" said the other lady. "We couldn't see a thing from our seats."—New Yorker.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CINCINNATI, O.
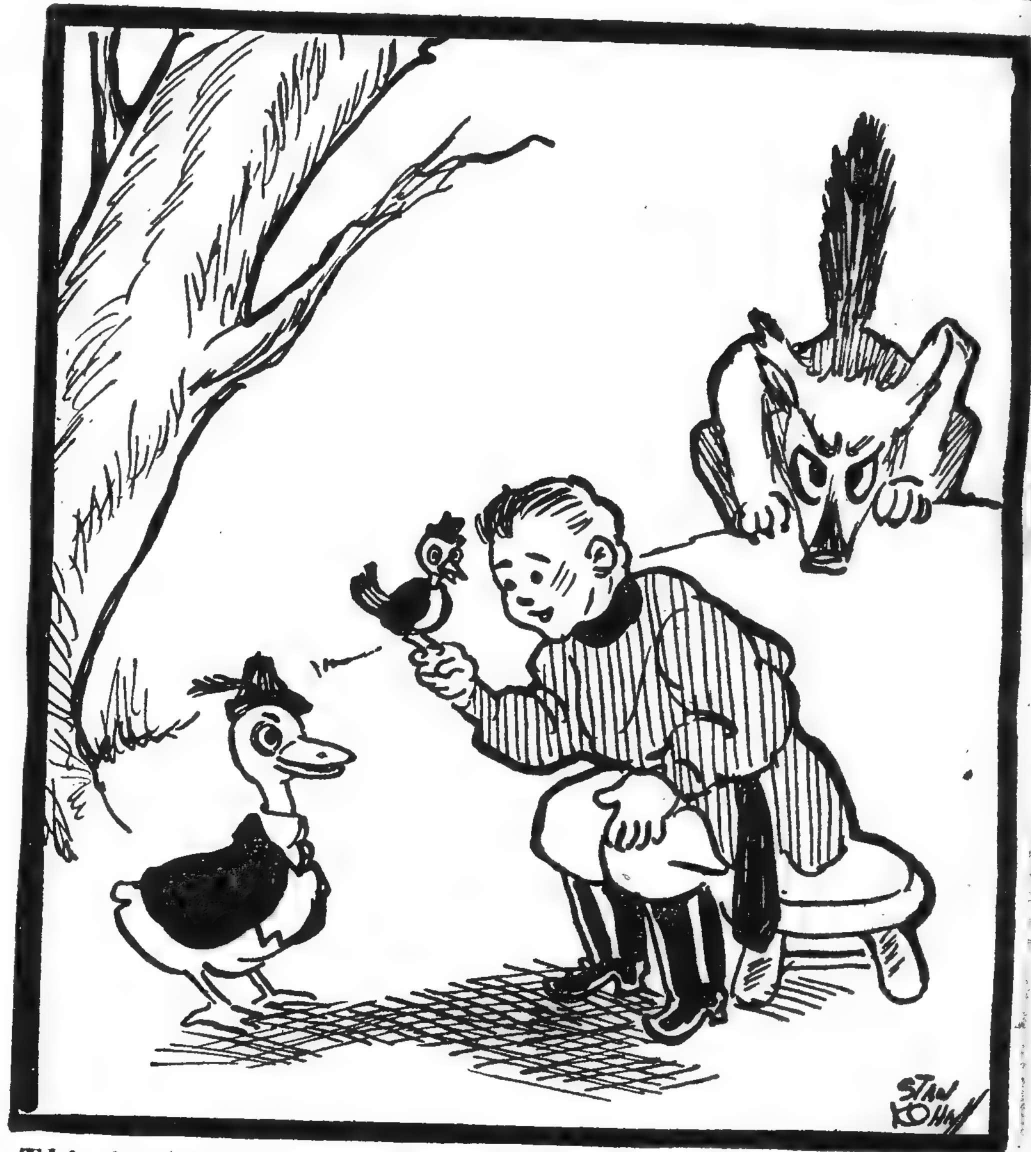
ENQUIRER

MAY 5 - 1939

Fantasy Of Festival



This is Artist Stanley Kohn's conception of a scene from the musical fantasy, "Peter and the Wolf," which will be presented tomorrow afternoon on the May Festival program.

"Peter and the Wolf," the amusing musical fantasy by Prokofieff which will be offered at tomorrow's matinee performance of the May Festival, has been enjoying one of the most outstanding successes of any of the new modern compositions. Originally introduced into this country by the eminent Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, on March 25, 1938, it has been repeated in the East a number of times. It was recently offered at the Pension Fund concerts in New York, where the sometimes skeptical metropolitan music public took Peter, the cat, the bird, the duck, Peter's grandfather, and even the wolf to its collective heart.

So impressed with the work is Dr. Koussevitsky that, in a recent interview in the Christian Science Monitor, he nominates it as a worthy successor to "Snow White," as a story for children that adults will take to their hearts. He suggests that Walt Disney use it if he is looking about for new nursery characters with which to charm adults. Incidentally, Koussevitsky is a Disney fan.

For those who are unfamiliar with "Peter and the Wolf," it should be explained that it is about a small boy who, with the help of his friend, the bird, captures a fierce wolf. The wolf swallowed the duck but, "if one would listen very carefully, he could hear the duck quaking in the wolf's belly, because in his hurry the wolf had swallowed the duck alive."

The fairy tale is written for orchestra and the spoken voice. Each of the characters who appear in the story is represented in the orchestra. Thus the bassoon represents the granddaddy, the flue is the bird, the cat is represented by the clarinet, the duck is the oboe, and the big, bad wolf is represented by the French horn trio. Peter is represented by the string quartet and the shooting of the hunters brings the kettledrum and the bass drum into action.

At the Saturday matinee performance of the work at Music Hall, Keith Falkner will be the narrator and read the amusing lines as the music progresses.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

MAY 3 - 1939

TONGUE IN CHEEK

The Boston Symphony recently played in New Haven, and one of the pieces Mr. Koussevitzky conducted was Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf." One of our spies was in a near-by bar after the concert and heard two New Haven couples discussing it. "What I like about Prokofieff is the way he does things with his tongue in his cheek," one lady said. "Really?" said the other lady. "We couldn't see a thing from our seats."—"New Yorker."

21

MUSIC

Symphony Orchestra

It Costs a Lot of Money to Run One Tod
And the Sources of Its Income Are Variou

By MOSES SMITH

From New York and Philadelphia, seats of two great American symphony orchestras, come tidings on orchestral finances, a subject that is especially likely to bob up at this time of the year. The striking fact in a statement from the retiring manager of the Philadelphia Orchestra is that during the past three years the deficit in operation has averaged only about $17,000, although it is not precisely clear whether this figure is obtained before or after income from endowment has been applied in the revenue column. It is, however, clear that a considerable revenue from broadcasting and record-royalties has been responsible for the slightness of the deficit. The Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra of New York, meanwhile, receives not only a substantial stipend from the Columbia Broadcasting System for the right to broadcast the Sunday afternoon concerts but also subscriptions in small amounts from thousands of radio listeners. During the past year there were 10,000 such subscribers, adding about $28,000 to the orchestra's treasury. The Philharmonic also realizes some money from its recordings, but the amount now is not comparable with that obtained from the same source by the Philadelphia Orchestra.

The Conditions Here

The position of the Boston Orchestra—the other member of America's "Big Three"—is a little different. Like the other two it earned until about two years ago a large amount of money from radio broadcasting of either the Saturday night subscription series or some of the Pops concerts, or both. This avenue has since been closed because the Musicians' Union, with which the members of the Boston Orchestra are not affiliated, succeeded in obtaining virtually closed-shop contracts with the major radio networks. At the same time the sales of records of the Boston Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky and the Pops Orchestra under Arthur Fiedler have risen rapidly, so that, at a guess, they now top the field. The word in the trade, though, has it that unless something drastic happens the Boston Orchestra will soon stop making records for the same reason that it ceased broadcasting. Royalties on records already made would continue, however.

Without laboring the point further, presumably enough has been submitted to indicate that the mechanical transmission of music is an important factor not only in increasing the public of a symphony orchestra but also in enabling it to balance its budget, or—since that seems to be impossible—to cut down its annual deficit. The principal remaining support of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, after the sale of tickets, thus assumes even greater importance for the immediate and perhaps distant future. I mean, of course, the Society of the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Friends in Need

To this group during the past five years has fallen the duty and honor of guaranteeing about 15 per cent of the orchestra's annual budget—that is, roughly, about $90,000 out of about $650,000. The amount asked of the Friends has varied because, with a more or less constant budget, the revenue has varied. But the variations have been surprisingly small. The loss in radio revenue, for example, might have been a serious threat but for the more or less concomitant increase in ticket sales and phonograph record royalties.

Of the four principal series of "operations" of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, one, the Esplanade season (taken over by the management last summer, it will be recalled), is a total loss except for voluntary subscriptions, because the concerts are free. The second, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, is self-sustaining, because the Festival Association guarantees all expenses. The third, the current Pops concerts, have been doing better than breaking even during the recent exceptional vogue under Arthur Fiedler. The fourth category, the winter concerts at home and afield, account for the greatest outlay, intake and deficit. And indubitably it is these concerts which, on the road as well as in Boston, have influenced the preponderating majority of Friends to make their contributions.

The Responsibility

Before the Friends were organized in 1934 there were many individual subscribers to the deficit. The organization of the Friends, however, was accompanied by a great increase in total number of subscribers, a similar increase in total amount of subscriptions, and—whether as a result or as a cause—an increase in the sense of communal responsibility. One other change, however, seems to me less worthy. The summary of orchestral finances is no longer published from year to year. Instead, the society of Friends is made acquainted, by an annual statement from the president, with the needs for the approaching season and with a general explanation of the basis of those needs.

The assigned reason for withholding the exact figures of the profit-and-loss statement is that they mean little to the layman. That reason may be correct, though other public and even private enterprises continue to publish such statements. But whether or not correct, the reason is not sufficient. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, by the character of its operations as well as by its formal setup, is a public institution, and the trustees have not only an eventual financial responsibility (at law) but also a responsibility to the public they serve without pay. This responsibility is increased by, if it does not indeed owe its nature to, the solicitation of the public for funds.

The point raised here may seem only academic, since there is no thought of raising the question of the proper allocation and accounting of the funds. But it seems to me that the possibility of harm arising from a misunderstanding of an ordinary trial balance is outweighed many times by the considerations of common business practice and public responsibility.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
[illegible]

MAY 6 - 1939

THE WORLD OF MUSIC

NEW YORK, May 6 (UP)—Private concerts at a Boston physician's home led to the organization of the Boston Doctors' Symphony Orchestra, whose first rehearsal was held recently at the Hampton Court hotel in Brookline, Mass.

More than 50 music-minded medicos temporarily abandoned their stethoscopes and scalpels to give themselves over to the baton-waving of Conductor Nicholas Slonimsky, music authority and composer who came to America from Russia abut 15 years ago as secretary to Serge Koussevitsky, Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor.

For several months a group of physicians met at the home of Dr. Julius Loman to relax with woodwinds, brasses and strings, which several had not touched since student days. Loman and his colleagues hit upon the idea of organizing a symphony orchestra as an avocation.

Notices for recruits, posted at most of the intown hospitals, brought prompt response.

They hope to make their professional debut at Sanders Theatre in Cambridge, but the date is indefinite.

* * * *

THE Curtis String Quartet of Philadelphia, making its first appearance there since its 10th anniversary cross-country tour, has instituted a series of chamber music recitals in their original setting—private music rooms.

The concerts are modeled after those sponsored by Prince Esterhazy of Austria in the 18th century, France's Louis XV and Prussia's Frederich Wilhelm for the entertainment of nobility.

The series was planned by 50 socially prominent women. While the recitals are held in private homes, the public is admitted in limited numbers, and admission is charged.

The Curtis Quartet, an outstanding exponent of chamber music, uses one of the world's finest collections of rare musical instruments.

Included are two Stradivarius violins, a Nicolo Amati viola and a Montagnana 'cello, all of which were the gifts of Mrs. Mary Louise Curtis Bok of Merion, Pa., president of the Curtis Institute of Music.

THIS CLIPPING FROM Yankee
[illegible]

MAY - - 1939

Our Contributors

TRISTRAM LIVINGSTONE is the pen name of a Massachusetts Smart Yank (December, 1938 YANKEE) — member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, poet, Harvard student, and owner of the most beautiful Russian wolfhound in Boston. Mr. Livingstone's favorite spot is Monhegan Island, Maine, where he summers.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

MAY 1 7 1939

Koussevitzky Cancels Yearly Trip to Europe

He Cites Chances for War in Last-Minute Change of Plans

BOSTON, May 16 (AP).—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said tonight that he had canceled his annual visit to Europe because of the possibilities of war.

The conductor was to have sailed tonight for France aboard the Normandie at New York, intending to visit Aix-les-Bains, but altered his plans a few hours before the Normandie sailed.

He said he would vacation instead at Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

MAY 1 7 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
TROY, N. Y.
TIMES RECORD

MAY 1 7 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY

MAY 1 7 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

MAY 1 7 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN

MAY 1 7 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

MAY 1 7 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
TROY, N. Y.
MORNING RECORD

MAY 1 7 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS

MAY 1 7 1939

MUSIC

Symphony Orchestra

It Costs a Lot of Money to Run One Tod
And the Sources of Its Income Are Vario

By MOSES SMITH

From New York and Philadelphia, seats of two great American symphony orchestras, come tidings on orchestral finances, a subject that is especially likely to bob up at this time of the year. The striking fact in a statement from the retiring manager of the Philadelphia Orchestra is that during the past three years the deficit in operation has averaged only about $17,000, although it is not precisely clear whether this figure is obtained before or after income from endowment has been applied in the revenue column. It is, however, clear that a considerable revenue from broadcasting and record-royalties has been responsible for the slightness of the deficit. The Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra of New York, meanwhile, receives not only a substantial stipend from the Columbia Broadcasting System for the right to broadcast the Sunday afternoon concerts but also subscriptions in small amounts from thousands of radio listeners. During the past year there were 10,000 such subscribers, adding about $28,000 to the orchestra's treasury. The Philharmonic also realizes some money from its recordings, but the amount now is not comparable with that obtained from the same source by the Philadelphia Orchestra.

The Conditions Here

The position of the Boston Orchestra—the other member of America's "Big Three"—is a little different. Like the other two it earned until about two years ago a large amount of money from radio broadcasting of either the Saturday night subscription series or some of the Pops concerts, or both. This avenue has since been closed because the Musicians' Union, with which the members of the Boston Orchestra are not affiliated, succeeded in obtaining virtually closed-shop contracts with the major radio networks. At the same time the sales of records of the Boston Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky and the Pops Orchestra under Arthur Fiedler have risen rapidly, so that, at a guess, they now top the field. The word in the trade, though, has it that unless something drastic happens the Boston Orchestra will soon stop making records for the same reason that it ceased broadcasting. Royalties on records already made would continue, however.

Without laboring the point further, presumably enough has been submitted to indicate that the mechanical transmission of music is an important factor not only in increasing the public of a symphony orchestra but also in enabling it to balance its budget, or—since that seems to be impossible—to cut down its annual deficit. The principal remaining support of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, after the sale of tickets, thus assumes even greater importance for the immediate and perhaps distant future. I mean, of course, the Society of the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Friends in Need

To this group during the past five years has fallen the duty and honor of guaranteeing about 15 per cent of the orchestra's annual budget—that is, roughly, about $90,000 out of about $650,000. The amount asked of the Friends has varied because, with a more or less constant budget, the revenue has varied. But the variations have been surprisingly small. The loss in radio revenue, for example, might have been a serious threat but for the more or less concomitant increase in ticket sales and phonograph record royalties.

Of the four principal series of "operations" of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, one, the Esplanade season (taken over by the management last summer, it will be recalled), is a total loss except for voluntary subscriptions, because the concerts are free. The second, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, is self-sustaining, because the Festival Association guarantees all expenses. The third, the current Pops concerts, have been doing better than breaking even during the recent exceptional vogue under Arthur Fiedler. The fourth category, the winter concerts at home and afield, account for the greatest outlay, intake and deficit. And indubitably it is these concerts which, on the road as well as in Boston, have influenced the preponderating majority of Friends to make their contributions.

The Responsibility

Before the Friends were organized in 1934 there were many individual subscribers to the deficit. The organization of the Friends, however, was accompanied by a great increase in total number of subscribers, a similar increase in total amount of subscriptions, and—whether as a result or as a cause—an increase in the sense of communal responsibility. One other change, however, seems to me less worthy. The summary of orchestral finances is no longer published from year to year. Instead, the society of Friends is made acquainted, by an annual statement from the president, with the needs for the approaching season and with a general explanation of the basis of those needs.

The assigned reason for withholding the exact figures of the profit-and-loss statement is that they mean little to the layman. That reason may be correct, though other public and even private enterprises continue to publish such statements. But whether or not correct, the reason is not sufficient. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, by the character of its operations as well as by its formal setup, is a public institution, and the trustees have not only an eventual financial responsibility (at law) but also a responsibility to the public they serve without pay. This responsibility is increased by, if it does not indeed owe its nature to, the solicitation of the public for funds.

The point raised here may seem only academic, since there is no thought of raising the question of the proper allocation and accounting of the funds. But it seems to me that the possibility of harm arising from a misunderstanding of an ordinary trial balance is outweighed many times by the considerations of common business practice and public responsibility.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
Hilo-Hawaii
Mainichi

MAY 6 - 1939

THE WORLD OF MUSIC

NEW YORK, May 6 (UP)—Private concerts at a Boston physician's home led to the organization of the Boston Doctors' Symphony Orchestra, whose first rehearsal was held recently at the Hampton Court hotel in Brookline, Mass.

More than 50 music-minded medicos temporarily abandoned their stethoscopes and scalpels to give themselves over to the baton-waving of Conductor Nicholas Slonimsky, music authority and composer who came to America from Russia abut 15 years ago as secretary to Serge Koussevitsky, Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor.

For several months a group of physicians met at the home of Dr. Julius Loman to relax with woodwinds, brasses and strings, which several had not touched since student days. Loman and his colleagues hit upon the idea of organizing a symphony orchestra as an avocation.

Notices for recruits, posted at most of the intown hospitals, brought prompt response.

They hope to make their professional debut at Sanders Theatre in Cambridge, but the date is indefinite.

* * *

THE Curtis String Quartet of Philadelphia, making its first appearance there since its 10th anniversary cross-country tour, has instituted a series of chamber music recitals in their original setting—private music rooms.

The concerts are modeled after those sponsored by Prince Esterhazy of Austria in the 18th century, France's Louis XV and Prussia's Frederich Wilhelm for the entertainment of nobility.

The series was planned by 50 socially prominent women. While the recitals are held in private homes, the public is admitted in limited numbers, and admission is charged.

The Curtis Quartet, an outstanding exponent of chamber music, uses one of the world's finest collections of rare musical instruments.

Included are two Stradivarius violins, a Nicolo Amati viola and a Montagnana 'cello, all of which were the gifts of Mrs. Mary Louise Curtis Bok of Merion, Pa., president of the Curtis Institute of Music.

THIS CLIPPING FROM Yankee
Dublin N.H.

MAY - - 1939

Our Contributors

TRISTRAM LIVINGSTONE is the pen name of a Massachusetts Smart Yank (December, 1938 YANKEE) — member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, poet, Harvard student, and owner of the most beautiful Russian wolfhound in Boston. Mr. Livingstone's favorite spot is Monhegan Island, Maine, where he summers.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE
17
MAY 1 7 1939

Koussevitzky Cancels Yearly Trip to Europe

He Cites Chances for War in Last-Minute Change of Plans

BOSTON, May 16 (AP).—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said tonight that he had canceled his annual visit to Europe because of the possibilities of war.

The conductor was to have sailed tonight for France aboard the Normandie at New York, intending to visit Aix-les-Bains, but altered his plans a few hours before the Normandie sailed.

He said he would vacation instead at Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION
MAY 1 7 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
TROY, N. Y.
TIMES RECORD
MAY 1 7 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY
MAY 1 7 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
MAY 1 7 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN
MAY 1 7 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
MAY 1 7 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
TROY, N. Y.
MORNING RECORD
MAY 1 7 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS
MAY 1 7 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM ESQUIRE
CHICAGO, ILL.
MAY - - 1939

Roulades and Cadenzas

Less than ten weeks before the Fair's opening there was no room for Euterpe

by CARLETON SMITH

▪ MUSIC ▪

THE other Sunday evening after an unforgettable New Friends concert, I walked across town on 42nd Street. For once, New York's midtown drag was empty. Hardly a loafer lingered in the park back of the library. No gaper slipped coppers in the telescope to gawk at the gawkers on the 102nd layer of the world's tallest skyscraper. No curious bumpkin wanted to ogle Saturn, even for a nickel. Trolley cars and taxis were elsewhere. The policeman yawned. For all the activity, it might have been Main Street in Bement, Illinois.

Yet, I thought, this is probably the last time in months Manhattan's belt line will be so silent, and deserted. Literature on my desk assures me that this summer America will be more than ever a nation of non-stop land lopers. Medicine men at the railroad and travel agencies declare that in the next six months upwards of sixty million will circle round Times Square and jam through the two-mile midway in Flushing, glimpsing not only the world of tomorrow but the world of today. For a week end or a month they will bivouac in the world's only city, compared to which all other towns are a mere huddle of shacks. They will spend over two billion for a show three times as costly and three times as large as any on record since the city of Venice inaugurated such carnivals back in 1268.

They will go haywire in a big way: be shot to the moon or Venus in "rocket" gun, bail out of a 250-foot parachute tower, descend into the depths of the ocean in a steel-walled bathysphere, wander around inside the model of a human eye while it gazes out on other hicks, shiver at the sight of a snowstorm sweeping down out of a clear spring sky, watch two hundred cows being milked simultaneously on a merry-go-round, buy orchids flown daily from Venezuela, hustle their mistresses out of sight of RCA's mobile televising apparatus, enter phony "life" classes, visit peepshows and see their own heads reflected on a painted naked body.

They will visit first-hand all Manhattan's temples of smut. Their blood pressure will surge at Billy Rose's million-dollar leg show. They will sample the costliest, emptiest fun-making known to man.

And they will wallow in the confusion of the noisiest, most aggressive and impersonal city in the world. Limited only by the capacity of their pocketbooks and their innards, visiting burghers will indulge in sensations bizarre and fantastic, do their best to vibrate in the groove of their predecessors, the "native" New Yorkers, who only a few years ago themselves deserted green fields, budding trees, sprouting corn, broad valleys, and mountain vistas for a niche amid the darkness of Skyscraper Alley . . . who only yesterday left the still music of night and nature for the snobbery of a Carnegie Hall, under which the subway rumbles with the regularity of "Old Faithful," and a 52nd Street dive where the air hasn't been changed for three years.

Settlers, squatters, and paying guests alike will drink the night through without becoming noticeably gayer or sadder. They will act like mechanized midgets in a drab, unreal, and monotonous tragedy. They will exchange neighborliness, affection, loyalty and other simple values for the competitive savagery, spiritual desolation and exhausting excitement of New York, where, as Priestley says, time is not "merely killed, but murdered, in public."

The question is: Will these rustics from igloo, tepee, shanty and residence have a yen for music? What, if anything, will they want to hear? Will the singing color fountain furnish all the sound they need? Will they stalk out of the organ recitals in the Temple of Religion, Inc., muttering, "Hell, there ain't nothing going on in this joint"?

About this, authorities could not agree. Most of them were apathetic or pessimistic, and predicted, "No sale!" A few were excited. As long ago as 1936 Olin Downes began outlining what he thought should be the basic plan of the Fair's music program:

The conventional thing to do would be to engage a famous symphony orchestra or two, call upon the Metropolitan Opera Association to provide a few performances, hire certain artists of international reputation to appear as soloists, provide some booths for records and music publishers' exhibits, radio a little entertainment of both respectable and popular sorts, and call it a job and turn to other matters. Now these things, or most of them, are desirable features of a great exposition. But they should not constitute its major musical offerings. They should be part of a music program of broader design.

The fact that we in America are able to maintain through private generosity and partial public support the finest orchestras in the world is very fortunate for us, and testimony to our enthusiasm for music . . . But these magnificent orchestras, while they are maintained here and do us infinite credit, are not indigenous to the land, or products of the people. They are not distinct from similar organizations in other countries; they do not represent something uniquely characteristic of America. As for a recital by a celebrated artist, it would be no more typical of our native culture in the Summer of 1939 than if it were held in Carnegie Hall in the winter of a boom year. The principal musical attractions of the coming exposition should be those which could be provided by only America, and they should afford us, as well as visitors from afar, an orientation which has hitherto been lacking in our tonal art.

They should furnish a complete cross-section of the musical life of the whole country, from the Colonial days to the present era. This could be done in a manner that would be of engrossing interest and that would give us a real perspective of our place in creative art.

"Maybe," laughed showmen of experience, "but better forget it." No public, they pointed out, has ever clicked Fair turnstiles to hear music. Successful expositions have been those that didn't try to lift interest above the navel. At Chicago in 1893 it was the undulations of Little Egypt's brown, pneumatic belly that lured the rabble. Forty years later the proletariat came for Sally Rand's curves.

But Olin Downes set out almost single-handed to prove that he was right! "If music is properly selected and performed in programs that include all the aspects, popular and serious, of the art, a new and great public, more numerous and more democratic, and perhaps more genuine and original in its reactions than the professional and sophisticated denizens of opera house and concert hall can be reached."

For backlog, he had the single act that at Chicago's Century of Progress, Joe Doakes, having had his fill of the quaint Belgian Village, the educational Gorilla Village, the tiresome Midget Village (complete with midget jail, midget courthouse, midget barber shop), the yodeling Swiss Village and a dozen other Villages, perfect in architecture and fake in atmosphere . . . having banged his bones about in the Cyclone Safety Coaster and thrilled with a Sky-Ride "five times as high as the Odd Fellows' Hall" . . . and having wearied himself with Ripley's Odditorium, the Pantheon of the War and the Battle of Gettysburg cycloramas . . . he was only too glad to sit himself down, Kewpie dolls under his arm, in Swift & Company's or Henry Ford's free seats while the Chicago or Detroit Symphony orchestras droned out Schubert's Unfinished and Strauss waltzes and Tchaikovsky's Pathétique.

Mr. Downes installed the first Music Department in any Fair, invited co-operation from far and near, jostled Mr. Toscanini out to Flushing and got him hopped up enough to say that he was "deeply impressed with the artistic and spiritual endeavors planned . . . particularly pleased that the Fair has put artistry above commercialism."

Mr. Downes, in fact, gave skeptics something to think about when six hundred thousand knocked down the police and each other to watch his free May Day pageant of choruses and dances. Eighteen thousand had been expected. He went on with plans for Mr. Toscanini to conduct operas, a Metropolitan Wagnerian season with Kirsten Flagstad, visits from the Glyndebourne, La Scala and Paris Opera companies, the Leningrad ballet, orchestras from home and abroad, folk-song festivals that would make history.

Then, plans hit a snag. Funds for music were withdrawn. Considerable doubt developed as to whether the Fair's air-conditioned Music Building would be used for music at all. Plans were rejected to air-condition the Metropolitan Opera House and/or Carnegie Hall. At our deadline, February 15th, less than ten weeks before the Fair's opening, the Muse is still walking the streets, a gal without a home. Doubtless by the time you read this, someone will have given her board and room.

Though music at the Fair will not be qualitatively and comprehensively what Mr. Downes hoped it would be, it will be worth your visit whether you come in May or September or November. And, Broadway know-it-alls notwithstanding, it will bring a substantial number of receptive visitors to New York, anxious to take away lasting impressions of a noble art. Euterpe may not be as popular as the Sun Valley Winter Wonderland, Their Majesties, or Lentelli's Golden Sprays, but still she has her charms.

* * *

The Music Department of the World's Fair will send you detailed lists of music events now scheduled and also sell you tickets in advance for the Met's Wagner Cycle:

Die Meistersinger	May 2
Das Rheingold	May 6
Die Walküre	May 8
Siegfried	May 10
Die Götterdämmerung	May 12
Tristan und Isolde	May 15
Parsifal	May 17

The official concert of the Polish government, with Artur Rodzinski conducting the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra: May 3

The official concert of the Rumanian government with Georges Enesco conducting the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra: May 5

The Philadelphia Orchestra concerts, with Leopold Stokowski and Eugene Ormandy conducting: May 14, 16, and 22

The "command" performance of the BBC Orchestra, which Their Majesties are to attend, early in June.

The six New York concerts of the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky, during the first two weeks of September.

Admissions will be free to the historical series of religious concerts in the Temple of Religion, the appearances of the Westminster Choir on May 26th and 27th, and the Association of Glee Clubs of America on July 1st and 2nd, and scores of daily band concerts and programs sponsored by foreign nations and exhibitors.

The Stadium Concerts, at a dollar top, will continue for ten weeks, beginning June 14th and featuring such soloists as: Jascha Heifetz, Josef Hofmann, Mischa Elman, Moritz Rosenthal, Albert Spalding, Efrem Zimbalist, Josef and Rosina Lhevinne, Jose Iturbi, Harold Bauer, Lily Pons and John Charles Thomas.

Discriminating music lovers will not miss the Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Massachusetts on August 3, 5, 6, 10, 12 and 13, easily America's premier summer series of orchestra concerts. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony in Haydn and Mozart symphonies, Beethoven's Second and Third, Brahms' First and Third, Sibelius' Second and Fifth, Tchaikovsky's Fourth, Debussy's L'Après-midi d'un Faune, Piston's Concerto for Orchestra, Prokofieff's Lieutenant Kije, Ravel's La Valse, Rimsky-Korsakoff's Scheherazade and Wagner's Siegfried Idyl.

If you're taking in the Pageant of the Pacific at the Golden Gate Exposition, don't miss The Oyster Grotto and the Twilight concerts on Sundays and make your visit coincide either with the San Francisco Symphony's six weeks' Fair season or that city's unrivaled opera season scheduled to begin October 13th. It includes Tristan, Walküre, Götterdämmerung, Fidelio, Lakme, Barbiere, Rigoletto, Boris Godunoff, Ballo in Maschera, and Bohème with Flagstad, Pons, Caniglia, Lawrence, Stignani, Favero, Tibbett, Melchior and Bjoerling.

It is expected that our expositions will reverse the flow of trans-Atlantic travel and that fewer Americans will spend the summer abroad. Those who go early will hear the London Music Festival, from April 23 to May 28, including all the Beethoven symphonies and the Missa Solemnis, conducted by Arturo Toscanini; orchestral concerts by Bruno Walter and Sir Thomas Beecham; opera at Covent Garden, Sadler's Wells and Glyndebourne (which continues on until July 15th); first-class performances of choral and church music in historic places such as Westminster Abbey, St. Paul's and Southwark Cathedral; and a concert of seventeenth and eighteenth century music in the Royal Palace at Hampton Court. For the first time, London's musical organizations have combined to promote and advertise an annual Festival, which promises to get the attention formerly given Salzburg. ##

THIS CLIPPING FROM DALLAS, TEXAS
NEWS
MAY 25 1939

Koussevitzky Cancels Summer in Europe

Special to The News.

NEW YORK, May 24.—Serge Koussevitzky has canceled his plans to take his annual vacation in Europe. He will visit several American resorts, and then take a house in Stockbridge or Lenox, Mass., for a time before and after the Berkshire Symphonic Festival which he will conduct during the first two weeks in August.

THIS CLIPPING FROM RICHMOND, VA.
TIMES-DISPATCH
MAY 21 1939

Philip Hale Program Notes Reissued

THE Garden City Publishing Company has issued a new edition of "Great Concert Music" (Philip Hale's Symphony Programme Notes) as edited by John N. Burk. Originally published at $3.50, the Garden City edition is available to music lovers at $1.49.

The book combines historical and descriptive notes with pertinent critical paragraphs.

Student and expert alike may profit from the store of useful information contained between its covers.

Of the author, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has said:

"Philip Hale, the great musicologist of America, left behind an incomparable gift—his annotations for the Boston Symphony programme books. These annotations, edited with care and distinction by John N. Burk, combined with Philip Hale's remarkable critical judgment, provide a book of historical value which should serve as a guide book to the student of music and to young critics. Indeed, the publication of this volume is an invaluable contribution to musical literature."

By special arrangement with the original publishers it is possible to offer this 400-page, fully indexed reference book at a price which brings it within the reach of everyone interested in musical literature.

THIS CLIPPING FROM ESQUIRE
CHICAGO, ILL.
MAY - - 1939

Roulades and Cadenzas

Less than ten weeks before the Fair's opening there was no room for Euterpe

by CARLETON SMITH

▪ MUSIC ▪

THE other Sunday evening after an unforgettable New Friends concert, I walked across town on 42nd Street. For once, New York's midtown drag was empty. Hardly a loafer lingered in the park back of the library. No gaper slipped coppers in the telescope to gawk at the gawkers on the 102nd layer of the world's tallest skyscraper. No curious bumpkin wanted to ogle Saturn, even for a nickel. Trolley cars and taxis were elsewhere. The policeman yawned. For all the activity, it might have been Main Street in Bement, Illinois.

Yet, I thought, this is probably the last time in months Manhattan's belt line will be so silent, and deserted. Literature on my desk assures me that this summer America will be more than ever a nation of non-stop land lopers. Medicine men at the railroad and travel agencies declare that in the next six months upwards of sixty million will circle round Times Square and jam through the two-mile midway in Flushing, glimpsing not only the world of tomorrow but the world of today. For a week end or a month they will bivouac in the world's only city, compared to which all other towns are a mere huddle of shacks. They will spend over two billion for a show three times as costly and three times as large as any on record since the city of Venice inaugurated such carnivals back in 1268.

They will go haywire in a big way: be shot to the moon or Venus in "rocket" gun, bail out of a 250-foot parachute tower, descend into the depths of the ocean in a steel-walled bathysphere, wander around inside the model of a human eye while it gazes out on other hicks, shiver at the sight of a snowstorm sweeping down out of a clear spring sky, watch two hundred cows being milked simultaneously on a merry-go-round, buy orchids flown daily from Venezuela, hustle their mistresses out of sight of RCA's mobile televising apparatus, enter phony "life" classes, visit peepshows and see their own heads reflected on a painted naked body.

They will visit first-hand all Manhattan's temples of smut. Their blood pressure will surge at Billy Rose's million-dollar leg show. They will sample the costliest, emptiest fun-making known to man.

And they will wallow in the confusion of the noisiest, most aggressive and impersonal city in the world. Limited only by the capacity of their pocketbooks and their innards, visiting burghers will indulge in sensations bizarre and fantastic, do their best to vibrate in the groove of their predecessors, the "native" New Yorkers, who only a few years ago themselves deserted green fields, budding trees, sprouting corn, broad valleys, and mountain vistas for a niche amid the darkness of Skyscraper Alley . . . who only yesterday left the still music of night and nature for the snobbery of a Carnegie Hall, under which the subway rumbles with the regularity of "Old Faithful," and a 52nd Street dive where the air hasn't been changed for three years.

Settlers, squatters, and paying guests alike will drink the night through without becoming noticeably gayer or sadder. They will act like mechanized midgets in a drab, unreal, and monotonous tragedy. They will exchange neighborliness, affection, loyalty and other simple values for the competitive savagery, spiritual desolation and exhausting excitement of New York, where, as Priestley says, time is not "merely killed, but murdered, in public."

The question is: Will these rustics from igloo, tepee, shanty and residence have a yen for music? What, if anything, will they want to hear? Will the singing color fountain furnish all the sound they need? Will they stalk out of the organ recitals in the Temple of Religion, Inc., muttering, "Hell, there ain't nothing going on in this joint"?

About this, authorities could not agree. Most of them were apathetic or pessimistic, and predicted, "No sale!" A few were excited. As long ago as 1936 Olin Downes began outlining what he thought should be the basic plan of the Fair's music program:

The conventional thing to do would be to engage a famous symphony orchestra or two, call upon the Metropolitan Opera Association to provide a few performances, hire certain artists of international reputation to appear as soloists, provide some booths for records and music publishers' exhibits, radio a little entertainment of both respectable and popular sorts, and call it a job and turn to other matters. Now these things, or most of them, are desirable features of a great exposition. But they should not constitute its major musical offerings. They should be part of a music program of broader design.

The fact that we in America are able to maintain through private generosity and partial public support the finest orchestras in the world is very fortunate for us, and testimony to our enthusiasm for music . . . But these magnificent orchestras, while they are maintained here and do us infinite credit, are not indigenous to the land, or products of the people. They are not distinct from similar organizations in other countries; they do not represent something uniquely characteristic of America. As for a recital by a celebrated artist, it would be no more typical of our native culture in the Summer of 1939 than if it were held in Carnegie Hall in the winter of a boom year. The principal musical attractions of the coming exposition should be those which could be provided by only America, and they should afford us, as well as visitors from afar, an orientation which has hitherto been lacking in our tonal art.

They should furnish a complete cross-section of the musical life of the whole country, from the Colonial days to the present era. This could be done in a manner that would be of engrossing interest and that would give us a real perspective of our place in creative art.

"Maybe," laughed showmen of experience, "but better forget it." No public, they pointed out, has ever clicked Fair turnstiles to hear music. Successful expositions have been those that didn't try to lift interest above the navel. At Chicago in 1893 it was the undulations of Little Egypt's brown, pneumatic belly that lured the rabble. Forty years later the proletariat came for Sally Rand's curves.

But Olin Downes set out almost single-handed to prove that he was right! "If music is properly selected and performed in programs that include all the aspects, popular and serious, of the art, a new and great public, more numerous and more democratic, and perhaps more genuine and original in its reactions than the professional and sophisticated denizens of opera house and concert hall can be reached."

For backlog, he had the single fact that at Chicago's Century of Progress, Joe Doakes, having had his fill of the quaint Belgian Village, the educational Gorilla Village, the tiresome Midget Village (complete with midget jail, midget courthouse, midget barber shop), the yodeling Swiss Village and a dozen other Villages, perfect in architecture and fake in atmosphere . . . having banged his bones about in the Cyclone Safety Coaster and thrilled with a Sky-Ride "five times as high as the Odd Fellows' Hall" . . . and having wearied himself with Ripley's Odditorium, the Pantheon of the War and the Battle of Gettysburg cycloramas . . . he was only too glad to sit himself down, Kewpie dolls under his arm, in Swift & Company's or Henry Ford's free seats while the Chicago or Detroit Symphony orchestras droned out Schubert's Unfinished and Strauss waltzes and Tchaikovsky's Pathétique.

Mr. Downes installed the first Music Department in any Fair, invited co-operation from far and near, jostled Mr. Toscanini out to Flushing and got him hopped up enough to say that he was "deeply impressed with the artistic and spiritual endeavors planned . . . particularly pleased that the Fair has put artistry above commercialism."

Mr. Downes, in fact, gave skeptics something to think about when six hundred thousand knocked down the police and each other to watch his free May Day pageant of choruses and dances. Eighteen thousand had been expected. He went on with plans for Mr. Toscanini to conduct operas, a Metropolitan Wagnerian season with Kirsten Flagstad, visits from the Glyndebourne, La Scala and Paris Opera companies, the Leningrad ballet, orchestras from home and abroad, folk-song festivals that would make history.

Then, plans hit a snag. Funds for music were withdrawn. Considerable doubt developed as to whether the Fair's air-conditioned Music Building would be used for music at all. Plans were rejected to air-condition the Metropolitan Opera House and/or Carnegie Hall. At our deadline, February 15th, less than ten weeks before the Fair's opening, the Muse is still walking the streets, a gal without a home. Doubtless by the time you read this, someone will have given her board and room.

Though music at the Fair will not be qualitatively and comprehensively what Mr. Downes hoped it would be, it will be worth your visit whether you come in May or September or November. And, Broadway know-it-alls notwithstanding, it will bring a substantial number of receptive visitors to New York, anxious to take away lasting impressions of a noble art. Euterpe may not be as popular as the Sun Valley Winter Wonderland, Their Majesties, or Lentelli's Golden Sprays, but still she has her charms.

* * *

The Music Department of the World's Fair will send you detailed lists of music events now scheduled and also sell you tickets in advance for the Met's Wagner Cycle:

Die Meistersinger	May 2
Das Rheingold	May 6
Die Walküre	May 8
Siegfried	May 10
Die Götterdämmerung	May 12
Tristan und Isolde	May 15
Parsifal	May 17

The official concert of the Polish government, with Artur Rodzinski conducting the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra: May 3

The official concert of the Rumanian government with Georges Enesco conducting the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra: May 5

The Philadelphia Orchestra concerts, with Leopold Stokowski and Eugene Ormandy conducting: May 14, 16, and 22

The "command" performance of the BBC Orchestra, which Their Majesties are to attend, early in June.

The six New York concerts of the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky, during the first two weeks of September.

Admissions will be free to the historical series of religious concerts in the Temple of Religion, the appearances of the Westminster Choir on May 26th and 27th, and the Association of Glee Clubs of America on July 1st and 2nd, and scores of daily band concerts and programs sponsored by foreign nations and exhibitors.

The Stadium Concerts, at a dollar top, will continue for ten weeks, beginning June 14th and featuring such soloists as: Jascha Heifetz, Josef Hofmann, Mischa Elman, Moritz Rosenthal, Albert Spalding, Efrem Zimbalist, Josef and Rosina Lhevinne, Jose Iturbi, Harold Bauer, Lily Pons and John Charles Thomas.

Discriminating music lovers will not miss the Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Massachusetts on August 3, 5, 6, 10, 12 and 13, easily America's premier summer series of orchestra concerts. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony in Haydn and Mozart symphonies, Beethoven's Second and Third, Brahms' First and Third, Sibelius' Second and Fifth, Tchaikovsky's Fourth, Debussy's L'Après-midi d'un Faune, Piston's Concerto for Orchestra, Prokofieff's Lieutenant Kije, Ravel's La Valse, Rimsky-Korsakoff's Scheherazade and Wagner's Siegfried Idyl.

If you're taking in the Pageant of the Pacific at the Golden Gate Exposition, don't miss The Oyster Grotto and the Twilight concerts on Sundays and make your visit coincide either with the San Francisco Symphony's six weeks' Fair season or that city's unrivaled opera season scheduled to begin October 13th. It includes Tristan, Walküre, Götterdämmerung, Fidelio, Lakme, Barbiere, Rigoletto, Boris Godunoff, Ballo in Maschera, and Bohème with Flagstad, Pons, Caniglia, Lawrence, Stignani, Favero, Tibbett, Melchior and Bjoerling.

It is expected that our expositions will reverse the flow of trans-Atlantic travel and that fewer Americans will spend the summer abroad. Those who go early will hear the London Music Festival, from April 23 to May 28, including all the Beethoven symphonies and the Missa Solemnis, conducted by Arturo Toscanini; orchestral concerts by Bruno Walter and Sir Thomas Beecham; opera at Covent Garden, Sadler's Wells and Glyndebourne (which continues on until July 15th); first-class performances of choral and church music in historic places such as Westminster Abbey, St. Paul's and Southwark Cathedral; and a concert of seventeenth and eighteenth century music in the Royal Palace at Hampton Court. For the first time, London's musical organizations have combined to promote and advertise an annual Festival, which promises to get the attention formerly given Salzburg. ##

THIS CLIPPING FROM DALLAS, TEXAS
NEWS
MAY 25 1939

Koussevitzky Cancels Summer in Europe

Special to The News.

NEW YORK, May 24.—Serge Koussevitzky has canceled his plans to take his annual vacation in Europe. He will visit several American resorts, and then take a house in Stockbridge or Lenox, Mass., for a time before and after the Berkshire Symphonic Festival which he will conduct during the first two weeks in August.

THIS CLIPPING FROM RICHMOND, VA.
TIMES-DISPATCH
MAY 21 1939

Philip Hale Program Notes Reissued

THE Garden City Publishing Company has issued a new edition of "Great Concert Music" (Philip Hale's Symphony Programme Notes) as edited by John N. Burk. Originally published at $3.50, the Garden City edition is available to music lovers at $1.49.

The book combines historical and descriptive notes with pertinent critical paragraphs.

Student and expert alike may profit from the store of useful information contained between its covers.

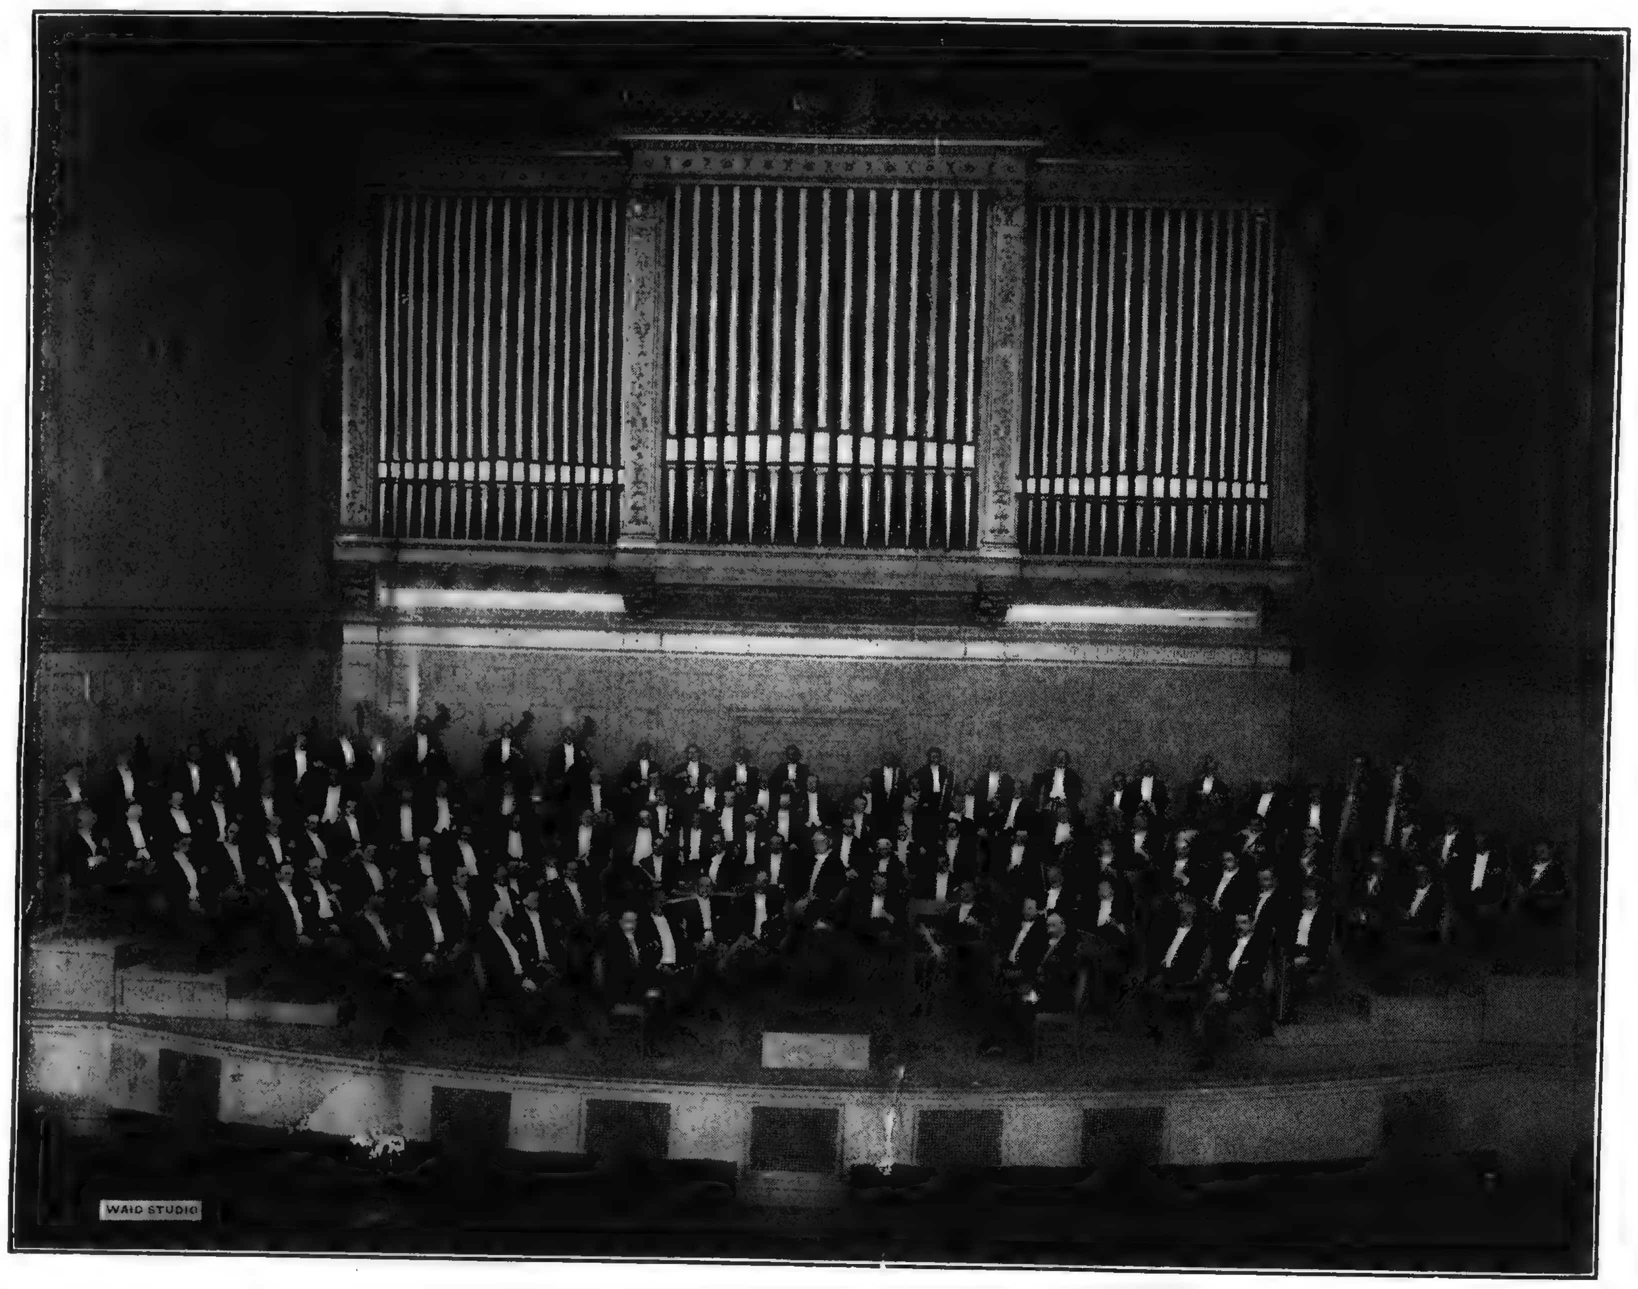
Of the author, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has said:

"Philip Hale, the great musicologist of America, left behind an incomparable gift—his annotations for the Boston Symphony programme books. These annotations, edited with care and distinction by John N. Burk, combined with Philip Hale's remarkable critical judgment, provide a book of historical value which should serve as a guide book to the student of music and to young critics. Indeed, the publication of this volume is an invaluable contribution to musical literature."

By special arrangement with the original publishers it is possible to offer this 400-page, fully indexed reference book at a price which brings it within the reach of everyone interested in musical literature.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
Phila. Forum
Mag.
Phila. Pa.
MAY - - 1939

24



Annual Philadelphia Concert

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY Conducting

The program will include the first Philadelphia performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with the distinguished actor Richard Hale as Narrator. "One of the most amusing and inventive scores that a witty composer, Serge Prokofieff, has written. Very admirable was Mr. Hale, the Narrator, as he read the lines and the orchestra laughably underscored the story. This is real musical humor."—Olin Downes, New York Times.

"Philadelphia is deeply indebted to The Forum for this annual concert by Dr. Koussevitzky's virtuoso organization. There was something breathtaking about the brilliance and beauty with which they played last night, and played, too, with a fullness and fire and finish of tone, an accuracy of execution plus excitement of inspiration, which showed what thrills a great symphonic conductor can command and communicate."—Linton Martin, Philadelphia Inquirer.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

MAY 17 1939

Koussevitzky Cancels Trip Abroad; Gives Plans for Berkshire Music Academy

Orchestra Leader Fears War in Europe; Says Festival Program Will Be Broadened to Give Course in Music Instruction and Appreciation in 1940

Special to The Springfield Union

BOSTON, May 16—Canceling his annual visit to Europe because of war possibilities a few hours before his steamer sailed for France from New York, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky found consolation here tonight by revealing plans for a new music academy to be started in the Berkshires in 1940. The conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra made the first announcement of the academy, intended to advance the progress of American music, to a Herald reporter.

To Go to Saratoga

Dr. Koussevitsky, forsaking passage on the Normandie, will take the cure at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., instead of at Aix-les-Bains. "I changed my mind because you never can tell what those two crazy persons can do," he declared, referring to Hitler and Mussolini.

Disappointed over the change in the sailing schedule, the conductor brightened when conversation touched on his future plans in the music field.

His dream of an academy for the advanced instruction of young musicians and for music lovers who want courses in appreciation will come to life in conjunction with the Berkshire Music Festival in the late summer of 1940.

"We have already started work on the academy," said the artist. "It can now be called a reality and we hope it will be a great and new thing for American music."

Two Courses

As Dr. Koussevitsky outlined the plan, two courses will be offered those attending the six-week session of the 1940 academy. The first course will be for musicians who are technically finished, with backgrounds strong enough in their fields to warrant the hope that some day they will contribute to a greater American music. They will be the few. Their course will include instruction by the best artists available.

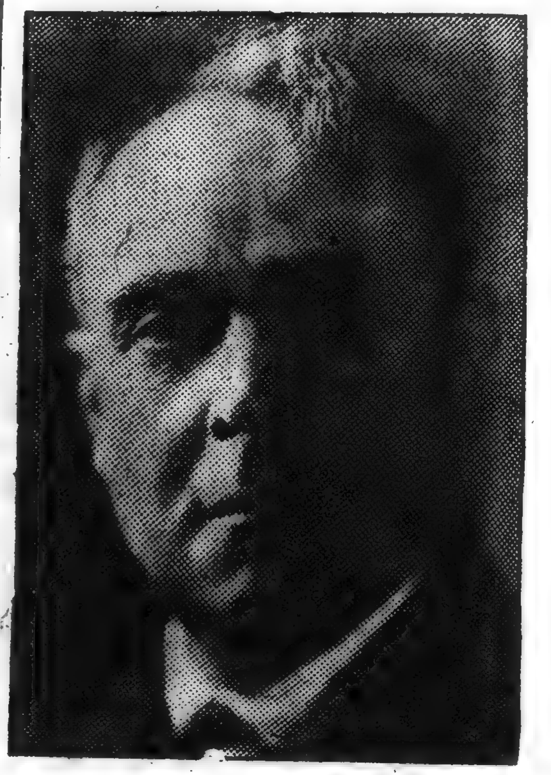
The second course, for the many, will be in music appreciation. It will be open to all. Choruses, soloists and the great Boston Symphony Orchestra itself will illustrate various points of technique. The phenomenally successful Berkshire Music Festival, for which half the seats for the 1939 August series have already been sold, will supplement the curriculum.

Among the 1940 lecturers and conductors will be Dr. Koussevitsky. He intends to work further on the academy plans during his sojourn at Saratoga, a spa for which he entrained late tonight. Otherwise Saratoga will offer repose from things musical, even to the extent of leaving behind in Brookline the big bass fiddle with which the conductor first achieved a reputation as an artist.

Dr. Koussevitsky highly praised the great development of native American composers, whose works he played more during the 58th orchestra season just ended than at any time since he first assumed the baton here in 1924. He suggested that, just as the wildness in Igor Stravinsky's compositions came just in advance of the World War and seemed to be an artist's prophesy of the world discord which was to prevail, so the steady but peaceful advance in American composing may presage a golden period for America.

"It is peculiar, but artists often seem to put into their work that which is to come later and which no one else seems able to see," explained the conductor.

Asked to what he attributed the improvement in American compositions, which he regards as more hopeful than any turned out by young artists today, Dr. Koussevitzky replied, "It is because there are better teachers in the conservatories, and because of the great progress in technique, such as that which Stravinsky inaugurated."



SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

Sees Big Advance

When Dr. Koussevitzky came to this country 15 years ago and made necessary changes in the personnel of the orchestra which he was destined to bring to new heights, he had to turn to Europe for artists.

"I began to play the youngest generation here this year," the conductor declared. "I found that actually those composers, just starting in, are more advanced than were the old composers at the same state of their lives. It is most interesting."

Dr. Koussevitzky, long intense in his admiration of Stravinsky, is delighted that the dynamic Russian is to come to Harvard next fall as the Charles Eliot Norton professor of poetry. He and Stravinsky are old friends.

"Stravinsky's Sacre du Printemps (1913) was a revolution. He changed everything for the younger generations, with his ideas of harmonics and dissonances. Now they are following him.

"I know that he will be a tremendous influence in Boston, a city now more musically advanced than any in the world, a place where such composers as Brahms are so well known, whereas Paris even now will have little of them. His very presence will do something to our whole musical life here, and he has great things in him to come."

When Dr. Koussevitzky saw Stravinsky in Europe last summer, he found the composer as sad as the general atmosphere there. But for another reason. His wife and his daughter were ill. A little later, both died. So Dr. Koussevitzky found it impossible to persuade the composer o come here for a Stravinski festival. The conductor staged one him- elf as a tribute and it was eminently uccessful. Stravinsky, highly educated, will be a great lecturer for Harvard, where he must give six public conferences," said Dr. Koussevitzky.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

MAY 26 1939

Olin Downes To Lecture At Tanglewood

Times Music Editor To Appear With Boston Orchestra

Olin Downes, music editor of The New York Times, will return for the third consecutive year as lecturer for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, whose concerts will be given at the new Tanglewood music shed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, Aug. 3, 5, 6, 10, 12 and 13.

This year, Mr. Downes will give his lectures with the orchestra at the Tanglewood shed at the two Saturday morning rehearsals, extended as a privilege to members and patrons as well as public high school pupils in Berkshire County. There will be about 2500 persons in the audience.

Both Mr. Downes and Dr. Koussevitzky are enthusiastic over the plan, convinced that it will be an interesting departure from other years and that music lovers will obtain more first hand information of the character of the symphonies to be played at the Festival. The plan corresponds to one pursued by Mr. Downes at his course at the Brooklyn Academy.

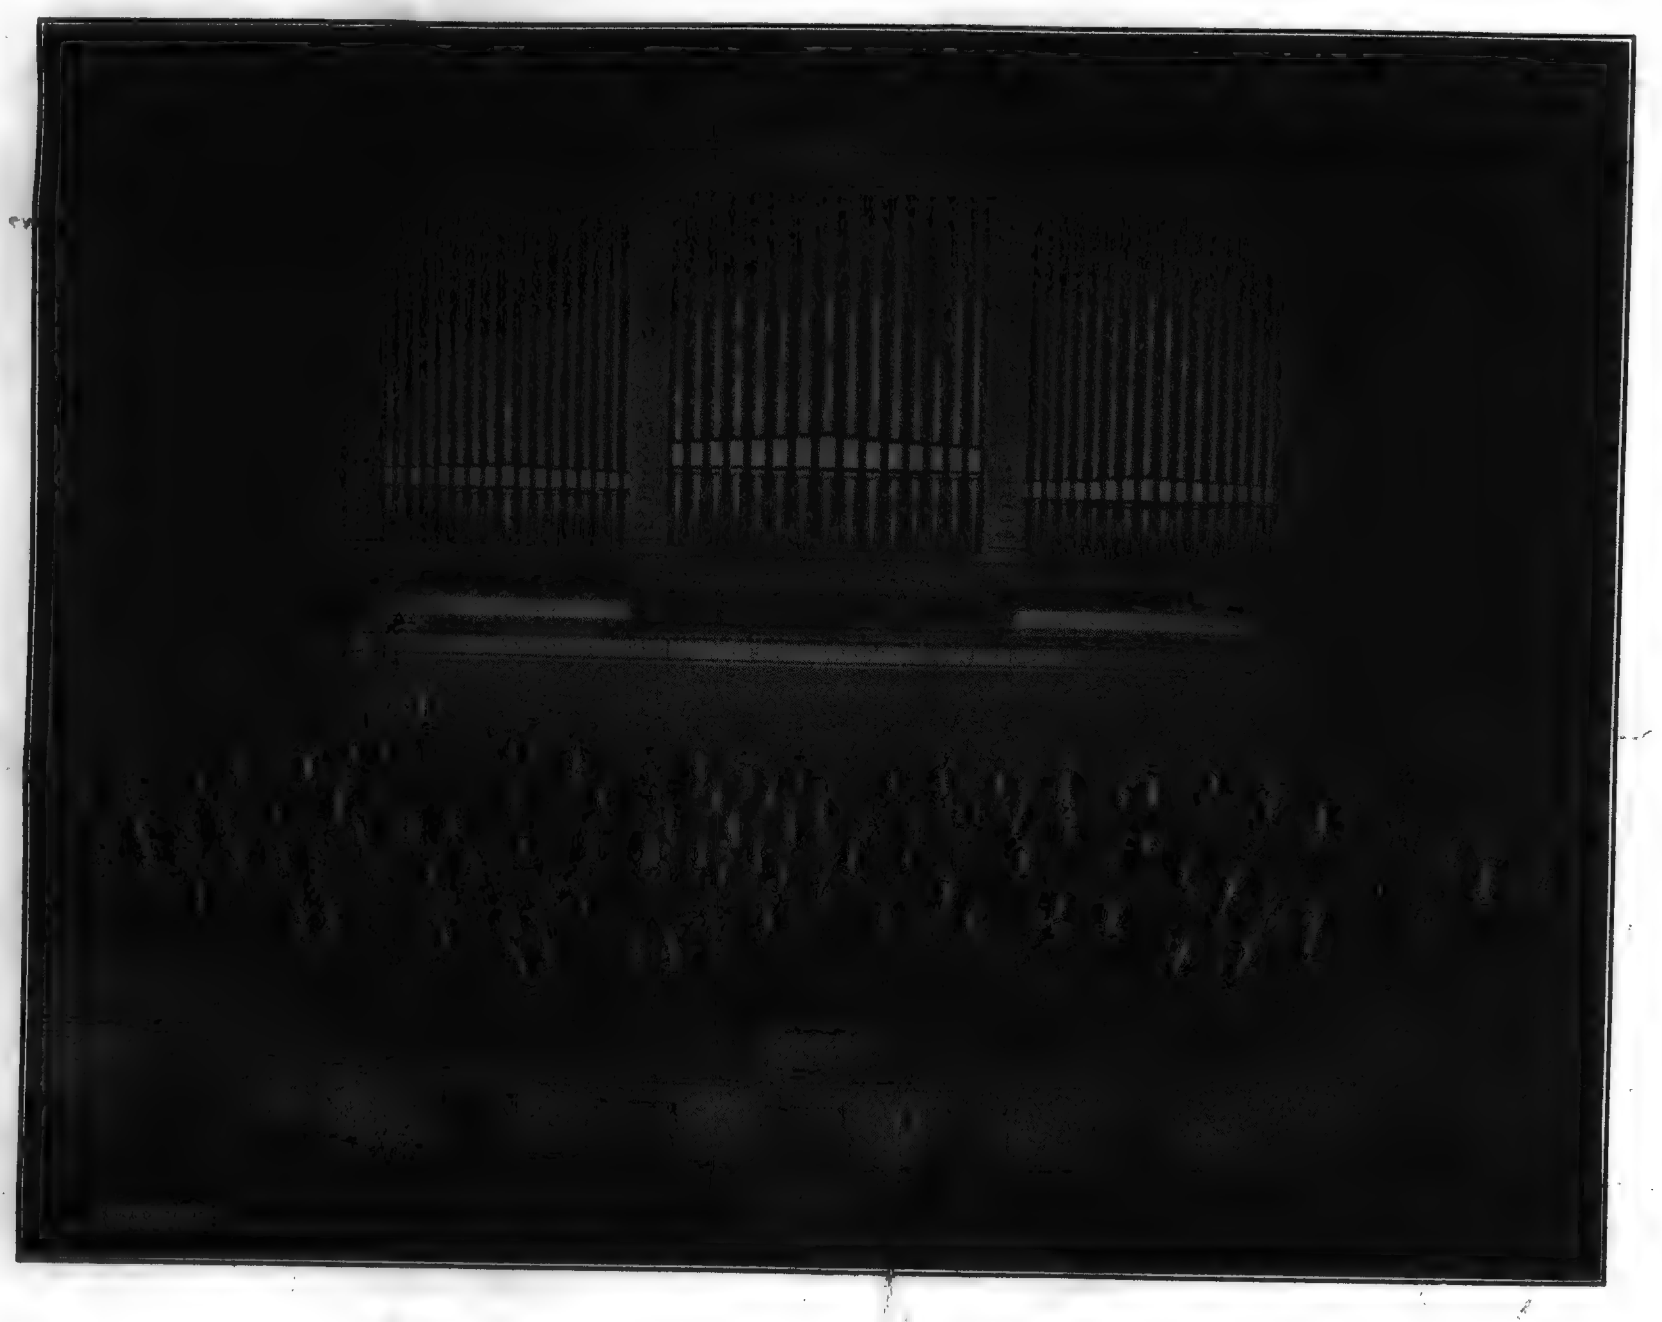
Pittsfield Lecture

As an added attraction to the Festival, the Junior League of Pittsfield is arranging a series of lectures to be given at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield by Charles L. Safford, director of music at Williams College. Mr. Safford, graduate of Williams and member of the faculty 15 years, is a member of the Festival's advisory committee, in charge of the lectures will be Mrs. Zenas Crane Colt, chairman of the league's arts and interest committee. There will be no admission fee. The public is invited.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

MAY 26 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
Phila. Forum
Mag.
Phila. Pa.
MAY [illegible] 1939



Annual Philadelphia Concert

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY Conducting

The program will include the first Philadelphia performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with the distinguished actor Richard Hale as Narrator. "One of the most amusing and inventive scores that a witty composer, Serge Prokofieff, has written. Very admirable was Mr. Hale, the Narrator, as he read the lines and the orchestra laughably underscored the story. This is real musical humor."—Olin Downes, New York Times.

"Philadelphia is deeply indebted to The Forum for this annual concert by Dr. Koussevitzky's virtuoso organization. There was something breathtaking about the brilliance and beauty with which they played last night, and played, too, with a fullness and fire and finish of tone, an accuracy of execution plus excitement of inspiration, which showed what thrills a great symphonic conductor can command and communicate."—Linton Martin, Philadelphia Inquirer.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
MAY 17 1939

Koussevitzky Cancels Trip Abroad; Gives Plans for Berkshire Music Academy

Orchestra Leader Fears War in Europe; Says Festival Program Will Be Broadened to Give Course in Music Instruction and Appreciation in 1940

Special to The Springfield Union

BOSTON, May 16—Canceling his annual visit to Europe because of war possibilities a few hours before his steamer sailed for France from New York, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky found consolation here tonight by revealing plans for a new music academy to be started in the Berkshires in 1940. The conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra made the first announcement of the academy, intended to advance the progress of American music, to a Herald reporter.

To Go to Saratoga

Dr. Koussevitsky, forsaking passage on the Normandie, will take the cure at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., instead of at Aix-les-Bains. "I changed my mind because you never can tell what those two crazy persons can do," he declared, referring to Hitler and Mussolini.

Disappointed over the change in the sailing schedule, the conductor brightened when conversation touched on his future plans in the music field.

His dream of an academy for the advanced instruction of young musicians and for music lovers who want courses in appreciation will come to life in conjunction with the Berkshire Music Festival in the late summer of 1940.

"We have already started work on the academy," said the artist. "It can now be called a reality and we hope it will be a great and new thing for American music."

Two Courses

As Dr. Koussevitsky outlined the plan, two courses will be offered those attending the six-week session of the 1940 academy. The first course will be for musicians who are technically finished, with backgrounds strong enough in their fields to warrant the hope that some day they will contribute to a greater American music. They will be the few. Their course will include instruction by the best artists available.

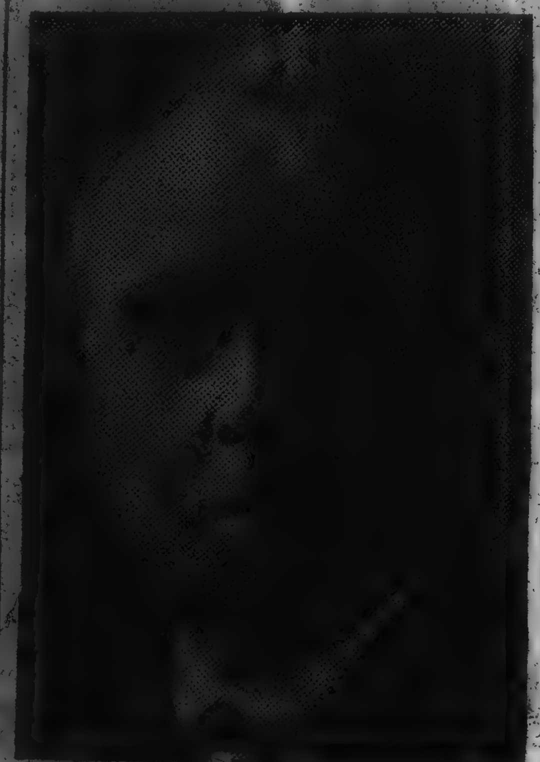
The second course, for the many, will be in music appreciation. It will be open to all. Choruses, soloists and the great Boston Symphony Orchestra itself will illustrate various points of technique. The phenomenally successful Berkshire Music Festival, for which half the seats for the 1939 August series have already been sold, will supplement the curriculum.

Among the 1940 lecturers and conductors will be Dr. Koussevitsky. He intends to work further on the academy plans during his sojourn at Saratoga, a spa for which he entrained late tonight. Otherwise Saratoga will offer repose from things musical, even to the extent of leaving behind in Brookline the big bass fiddle with which the conductor first achieved a reputation as an artist.

Dr. Koussevitsky highly praised the great development of native American composers, whose works he played more during the 58th orchestra season just ended than at any time since he first assumed the baton here in 1924. He suggested that, just as the wildness in Igor Stravinsky's compositions came just in advance of the World War and seemed to be an artist's prophesy of the world discord which was to prevail, so the steady but peaceful advance in American composing may presage a golden period for America.

"It is peculiar, but artists often seem to put into their work that which is to come later and which no one else seems able to see," explained the conductor.

Asked to what he attributed the improvement in American compositions, which he regards as more hopeful than any turned out by young artists today, Dr. Koussevitzky replied, "It is because there are better teachers in the conservatories, and because of the great progress in technique, such as that which Stravinsky inaugurated."



SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

Sees Big Advance

When Dr. Koussevitzky came to this country 15 years ago and made necessary changes in the personnel of the orchestra which he was destined to bring to new heights, he had to turn to Europe for artists.

"I began to play the youngest generation here this year," the conductor declared. "I found that actually those composers, just starting in, are more advanced than were the old composers at the same state of their lives. It is most interesting."

Dr. Koussevitzky, long intense in his admiration of Stravinsky, is delighted that the dynamic Russian is to come to Harvard next fall as the Charles Eliot Norton professor of poetry. He and Stravinsky are old friends.

"Stravinsky's Sacre du Printemps (1913) was a revolution. He changed everything for the younger generations, with his ideas of harmonics and dissonances. Now they are following him.

"I know that he will be a tremendous influence in Boston, a city now more musically advanced than any in the world, a place where such composers as Brahms are so well known, whereas Paris even now will have little of them. His very presence will do something to our whole musical life here, and he has great things in him to come."

When Dr. Koussevitzky saw Stravinsky in Europe last summer, he found the composer as sad as the general atmosphere there. But for another reason. His wife and his daughter were ill. A little later, both died. So Dr. Koussevitzky found it impossible to persuade the composer to come here for a Stravinski festival. The conductor staged one himself as a tribute and it was eminently successful. Stravinsky, highly educated, will be a great lecturer for Harvard, where he must give six public conferences," said Dr. Koussevitzky.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
MAY 26 1939

Olin Downes To Lecture At Tanglewood

Times Music Editor To Appear With Boston Orchestra

Olin Downes, music editor of The New York Times, will return for the third consecutive year as lecturer for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, whose concerts will be given at the new Tanglewood music shed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, Aug. 3, 5, [illegible]

This year, Mr. Downes will give his lectures with the orchestra at the Tanglewood shed at the two Saturday morning rehearsals, extended as a privilege to members and patrons as well as public high school pupils in Berkshire County. There will be about 2500 persons in the audience.

Both Mr. Downes and Dr. Koussevitzky are enthusiastic over the plan, convinced that it will be an interesting departure from other years and that music lovers will obtain more first hand information of the character of the symphonies to be played at the Festival. The plan corresponds to one pursued by Mr. Downes at his course at the Brooklyn Academy.

Pittsfield Lecture

As an added attraction to the Festival, the Junior League of Pittsfield is arranging a series of lectures to be given at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield by Charles L. Safford, director of music at Williams College. Mr. Safford, graduate of Williams and member of the faculty 15 years, is a member of the Festival's advisory committee. In charge of the lectures will be Mrs. Zenas Crane Colt, chairman of the league's arts and interest committee. There will be no admission fee. The public is invited.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
MAY 26 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

CHANGES IN TASTE

Koussevitzky Discusses Shifts in His Reactions in 15-Year Period

By OLIN DOWNES

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, in the course of a recent conversation, was recalling the changes in his own musical taste during the fifteen years since he came to America as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"Scriabine? I tell you frankly, it is now hard for me to play him at all."

This was an unexpected reply. Scriabine, in 1924, was a Koussevitzky war-horse. "Le Poème de l'extase" is a sure-fire piece. Always the conductor triumphed with it in the early years of his American career, as he had done times without number in Europe. "Is it my fault," he asked, "or Scriabine's? Next season I shall try the 'Divine Poem.' If that does not go, it will mean that it is no longer possible for me to conduct him.

"It will prove nothing else," he hastened to add. "One simply cannot estimate music of such importance as that when it is so near us. It may be that one's instinct supplies answers to artistic questions which are more reliable than any that a carefully reasoned critical estimate could supply. In former days, the exalting theme of 'Le Poème de l'extase,' vaulting skyward, used to stir me immeasurably, so that I would brood long hours upon the manner in which it should be announced by the orchestra. Now these tonal vistas recede from my mind. The music doesn't stir me as it did, and when one's convictions grow weaker it is time to stop attempting an interpretation designed to convince an audience.

* * *

"Mind you, I don't say that one should not play what one immediately dislikes. This dislike often disappears when there has developed a true understanding of the music. But after the music has possessed one and gone and left one cold, then it's time to look about—and forward.

"Yet think of the talent and the influence of this composer, who was such a significant figure in music, especially the Russian music of the turn of the century. A 'romantique retardé'? Perhaps! He was a solitary and highly egoistic figure, standing a little outside, or beside, the royal line of musical descent. All genius is egoistic—yes. But isn't it that the exceptional in art is only striking and valid when it is a variation in the way of expressing an eternal truth felt instinctively by mankind? How far may an artist wander from that center, from what we can call the common human experience, and achieve immortality?

* * *

"I ask this, not necessarily about Scriabine. I have evolved too many different opinions about music to think that any idea of mine on the subject is final. But ideas we must have—all artists—and follow them. It is the ideas that have so much to do with the development of the art."

What of Stravinsky? It is noteworthy that Koussevitzky talked about him with enthusiasm, but, one would say, a little defensively. Or was this courtesy in a conversation? "I know you don't like 'Appolon,' but what about 'Oedipus'—certainly a great work. The violin concerto—no? Whom have you heard play it? For me, there are so many harmonic things of interest, and new turns of phrase, variations of idiom, etc." This seemed to us lukewarm, and we pressed the matter. "What do you think now of 'Le sacre du printemps'?"

He thought a moment, and answered very briefly: "A noble experiment!"

"Meaning just what?"

"What I say: a noble experiment, one that created a tremendous sensation, the last tremendous sensation, perhaps, in modern music. It is a question whether the form is perfect, whether there are certain pages which might—if one were to venture so far with so great a composition—be excised. Understand, I would never do that. If such a work is to be played, it is as the composer wrote it.

* * *

"Stravinsky, it is true, did not follow in the direction indicated by the 'Sacre.' 'Noces' was a different thing—very wonderful. I would say, perhaps, a greater masterpiece. What is astonishing in 'Sacre,' which is amazing not only in its rhythmic evolutions, of which so much has been said, is the thematic developments and transformations, in ultra-modern ways, of thematic material and the essentially Russian quality of the thought. All this reaches a new and a wholly different level and even a bolder style of national expression. In more primitive folk vein is 'Noces.' A little masterpiece, in a wholly contrasted style, is the stage work, 'Histoire du soldat.' Stravinsky's mind is very quick and very restless. He experiments more in a year than many composers of eminence in a lifetime. It is true that he has in late years lost touch with his soil, which has cost him much, and which is a thing, by the way, that Prokofieff knew better than to risk.

"Prokofieff gravitated to Paris as one of the centers of his activity, but he always returns, in fact as in consciousness, to his own country, and he does so with realization of his creative needs. He has not lost the consciousness of his soil. His experience is international; his technical brilliancy and fluency are so great that they can constitute a danger for him. But the abundance of his creative gift and his essential seriousness as an artist clear up excesses of style and should make his product more and more concentrated. I think there are clear signs of this in late scores, to say nothing of the contributions which he already has made, of permanent value to the modern repertory. Probably all great composers learn the lesson the gardener knows so well—that you prune the tree, and thin out its shoots and branches, when you want a sturdy plant and a big production of fruit."

He reflected from that point on a condition in Russian music which impressed him. "Nearly all the Russian musicians, and many poets too, died so young. It would seem that the period, and its particular pressures, took toll of them, as the romantic age in Europe had already taken toll of the poets and musicians—Russia was not spared. And, if you speak to me of such immortals as Mozart and Schubert, Weber, Chopin, Schumann, burnt out before their time, I will say that in each of these cases the composers concerned had already achieved some of their supreme expressions, while Tchaikovsky, Mussorgsky and a whole group of semi-articulate Russians had not reached any such manifestation.

* * *

"Think of what Tchaikovsky indicated at the age of 53, when he had just completed the 'Pathetic' symphony. Think of the completely original treatment of the different movements, unparalleled in any other symphonic work; the fresh handling of the 'sonata' plan in the first; the novelty and unrivaled richness of the instrumentation and the wonderful fertility of invention. He had just found himself and confidently realized his mastery, and was emerging from the period of doubt and experiment, when he was gone. Why are the three last Tchaikovsky symphonies overplayed? For the same reason as Chopin, Wagner, Verdi are overplayed—because there is great music which the world wants. Do you know the novel of Turgenieff, wherein a character knocks at the door, when all his companions have vanished, and walks away, muttering, 'Anonymous Russia.' Not anonymous—anything but anonymous—is Russian music of the last century, but as for the complete expression of the musical genius of the nation, it has still a distance to go."

He spoke of Sibelius. "See what he had done," he said. "He didn't say farewell to his earth, as Stravinsky did. Sibelius's spirit is that of his forest, but what a sublimation! How deep in the earth are the roots of his music, but how high and how far it rises from that soil.

"Compare the last symphonies with the early ones—all remarkable in special ways. But the last symphonies are some of the purest music in existence. The Sixth becomes almost abstract in the alembication of the material and the profound objectivity of its working out. The Seventh is the most masterly synthesis of the symphonic form, in one movement—not at all a symphonic poem, actually a symphony—but an impressive and mysterious marshaling, in a unit, of all the ideas of structure which contributed through centuries to the symphonic formation. And withal, music of an unexampled serenity, wholly independent of the feverishness of this age. The Seventh symphony is the 'Parsifal' of Sibelius—but, let us hope, not his last creation in that medium." As for America, he is more certain than ever of talented figures already here, and the imminence of a school rich in energy and ideas. The indebtedness of young American composers to him was mentioned. He said: "Am I not in America, now a part of the nation and of its life, and, like all conductors, in need of new material for my audiences? You don't know how I like to work with the young men, feel what they are doing. Sometimes I am able to help them. Sometimes the best way to help them is to say nothing until the score is played. They usually discover their weaknesses before they have to be told. They are creating."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

JUN 9 - 1939

KOUSSEVITZKY TELLS WHY TSCHAIKOWSKY'S "PATHETIC" IS GREAT

In commenting upon the reasons why certain musical works are apt to be overplayed, Serge Koussevitzky, the eminent conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra cites the case of Tschaikowsky's Pathetic Symphony, saying in part:

"Think of what Tschaikowsky indicated at the age of 53, when he had just completed the 'Pathetic' symphony. Think of the completely original treatment of the different movements, unparalleled in any other symphonic work; the fresh handling of the 'sonata' plan in the first; the novelty and unrivalled richness of the instrumentation and the wonderful fertility of invention. He had just found himself and confidently realized his mastery, and was emerging from the period of doubt and experiment, when he was gone. Why are the last three Tschaikowsky symphonies overplayed? For the same reason as Chopin, Wagner, Verdi are overplayed—because there is great music which the world wants."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

JUN 14 1939

Music Notes.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, Nathan Milstein, the violinist, and S. Hurok, are among the passengers in the French liner Normandie, sailing today.

Mr. Hurok, impresario of the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo and manager of Marian Anderson, noted Negro contralto, is on his annual European talent-scouting trip. Miss Anderson will spend this summer resting, he said, instead of making her usual European tour. She was hostess at a large luncheon to musicians and musical journalists at the Hotel Algonquin yesterday.

George Crandall, manager of the concert division of the New York City Federal Music Project, has been appointed assistant director of the project by Horace Johnson, director.

Ernst Bloch and Jaromir Weinberger, composers, will be guests of the Essex County Symphony Society at the third concert of the series it is giving this month in the City Schools Stadium of Newark, N. J., on Tuesday night, June 20. The program includes Bloch's "Schelomo" for cello and orchestra, in which Emanuel Feuermann will be the soloist; and the Polka and Fugue from Weinberger's "Schwanda."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUN 14 1939

Koussevitzky Leaves Today For Europe

Will Return July 26 for Festival Rehearsals

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, rested and refreshed from his month's vacation at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., and Lake Memphremagog on the Vermont-Canadian border, sails on the Normandie today. He will return on the Champlain July 26 to rehearse with the orchestra for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The trip to Europe, long an annual custom for the maestro, was postponed in May because of the uncertainty of conditions abroad.

At Lake Memphremagog, Dr. Koussevitzky was the guest of Professor Pitirin Sorokin of Harvard University.

Painting Being Done

Festival trustees announced today that there is a great deal of activity at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge where six concerts will be given by the orchestra the first two weekends in August. Considerable interior painting at the new music shed has been completed and the huge parking area is being drained and groomed for the thousands of visitors who will use it.

It was also announced that subscriptions for the concerts are considerably ahead of last year but there are plenty of good seats left. All seats will be reserved this year. Community chairmen met with the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith today, to plan the subscription campaign which will continue until the final concert.

Making Early Reservations

Many music lovers heeding the advice of the Festival office made their hotel reservations early. Several hotels and inns, in Stockbridge and Lenox are already booked to capacity but there are still accommodations to be had in these towns and neighboring communities.

THIS CLIPPING FROM LOWELL, MASS.
LEADER

JUN 14 1939

Koussevitzky Goes To Europe

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, rested and refreshed from his month's vacation at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., and Lake Memphremagog on the Vermont-Canadian border, sails on the Normandie from New York today. He will return on the Champlain July 26 to rehearse with the orchestra for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The trip to Europe, long an annual custom for the maestro, was postponed in May because of the uncertainty of conditions abroad.

At Lake Memphremagog, Dr. Koussevitzky was the guest of Professor Pitirin Sorokin of Harvard university.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUN 14 1939

Ocean Travelers

The French Line flagship Normandie, sailing today for Southampton and Havre, will have a notable list of passengers, including United States Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter and Mrs. Frankfurter; Juan F. de Cardenas, Spanish envoy in the United States; Alvarez del Vayo, former Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Spanish Government; Dr. Dimitri Gusti, Rumanian High Commissioner to the World's Fair; the Grand Duchess Marie of Russia; Jean Zay, French Minister of Education; Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University, and Mrs. Butler; Dr. Serge Voronoff, noted surgeon, and Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Also listed for the Normandie voyage are Mrs. George Widener, Mrs. Whitney Warren, Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Miss Anne Morgan, Mrs. Raymond Harper, Mrs. C. de Ferry de Fontnouvelle, Mrs. Marcel Olivier, Mrs. P. A. B. Widener, H. Gordon Selfridge Jr., Cary Grant, Margot Grahame, Josef von Sternberg, Rex Ingram, Nathan Milstein, Erich Maria Remarque, Bruno Lessing, Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Ecker and Mr. and Mrs. Willis H. Booth.

The United States liner Washington will depart for European ports. Mrs. Joseph P. Kennedy, wife of the United States Ambassador to Great Britain; Lawson Little, former national amateur golf champion; Wellington Koo Jr., son of the Chinese envoy in Paris, and Thomas J. Watson, president of the International Business Machines Corporation, are among those listed for the Washington's departure.

Mr. Watson and a group of other business men are going to attend the tenth general meeting of the International Chamber of Commerce in Copenhagen. Others are Eliot Wadsworth of Boston, president of the International Chamber; Fred I. Kent, Clement Johnston, Eric Johnston, Silas H. Strawn, and Herbert S. Liang, Chinese delegate.

Also leaving on the Washington are Dr. James Brown Scott, Mr. and Mrs. J. Reed Miller, Arthur Hill, O. S. Caesar, Mr. and Mrs. George E. C. Wiggins, Blake-More Godwin, Professor Chandler Post, Chauncey B. Tinker, Vergil D. Reed, H. L. Jones, Mr. and Mrs. Robert M. Scotten and Colonel John N. Greeley.

Passengers sailing for Channel ports on the Aquitania of the Cunard White Star Line include Mr. and Mrs. Thomas W. Lamont, General Evangeline Booth, Major J. J. Astor, Mr. and Mrs. Anthony J. Drexel, Mr. and Mrs. Louis C. N. Drexel, Colonel F. Lindsay Lloyd, Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Stoddard, Prince and Princess Louis Torre Tasso, Sir George Sansom, Mr. and Mrs. H. Bissell Carey and Mrs. Richard Northcott.

Bound for cruise ports in Bermuda, Nassau and Cuba, the Rotterdam of the Holland-America Line will have Mr. and Mrs. Herman Arnold, Miss Lenora Rhoda, Mr. and Mrs. Michael Seereiter, Mr. and Mrs. I. Loring, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Kerr, Miss Belle Fabricant, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Forsman, Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Winter, Mr. and Mrs. B. H. De Voe.

The Panama Pacific liner City of Baltimore will arrive from California ports via the Panama Canal and Havana. On board are Willim P. Lough, Mrs. Ella G. Munson, Miss Barbara F. Blair, Mrs. Flora Jackson, Miss Emma Greer, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Roper, Mr. and Mrs. Bayard Ennis.

31

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

MAY 1 7 1939

Koussevitzky Will Occupy Rodzinski Farm This Summer

Invitation Extended to Boston Conductor Who Cancels European Trip Because of War Threat

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will accept the invitation of his friend, Dr. Artur Rodzinski, conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra, to occupy the Rodzinski farm in Stockbridge during the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, in August, and a period before and after the concerts.

The maestro of the Boston Orchestra has canceled his annual trip to Europe because of the threat of war and will spend part of his vacation at Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky stopped at the Wendell Hotel this noon for luncheon. They were en route to Saratogo Springs.

"Two Crazy Persons"

"I changed my mind because you never can tell what those two crazy persons can do," said Dr. Koussevitzky, referring to Hitler and Mussolini.

The Rodzinskis extended the invitation to the Koussevitzkys following a visit paid to the Cleveland conductor last week by Dr. Koussevitzky. Dr. Rodzinski will be away much of the summer conducting at Ravinia, California, and at Silvermine.

Disappointed at not going to Europe, Dr. Koussevitzky found consolation in discussing today, his plans for the academy to open at Tanglewood in 1940.

Dream of Academy

His dream of an academy for the advanced instruction of young musicians and for music lovers who want courses in appreciation will come to life in conjunction with the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in the late summer of 1940.

"We have already started work on the academy," he said. "It can now be called a reality and we hope it will be a great and new thing for American music."

As Dr. Koussevitzky outlined the plan, two courses will be offered those attending the six-week session of the 1940 academy. The first course will be for musicians who are technically finished, with backgrounds strong enough in their fields to warrant the hope that some day they will contribute to a greater American music. They will be the few. Their course will include instruction by the best artists available.

The second course, for the many, will be in music appreciation. It will be open to all. Choruses, soloists and the great Boston Symphony Orchestra itself will illustrate various points of technique. The phenomenally successful Berkshire Music Festival, for which half the seats for the 1939 August series have already been sold, will supplement the curriculum.

Koussevitzky

Koussevitzky To Lecture

Among the 1940 lecturers and conductors will be Dr. Koussevitsky. He intends to work further on the academy plans during his sojourn at Saratoga, a spa for which he entrained late tonight. Otherwise Saratoga will offer repose from things musical, even to the extent of leaving behind in Brookline the big bass fiddle with which the conductor has achieved a reputation as an artist.

Dr. Koussevitzky highly praised the great development of native American composers, whose works he played more during the 58th orchestra season just ended than at any time since he first assumed the baton here in 1924. He suggested that, just as the wildness in Igor Stravinsky's compositions came just in advance of the World War and seemed to be an artist's prophesy of the world discord which was to prevail, so the steady but peaceful advance in American composing may presage a golden period for America.

"It is peculiar, but artists often seem to put into their work that which is to come later and which no one else seems able to see," explained the conductor.

Praises Americans

Asked to what he attributed the improvement in American compositions, which he regards as more hopeful than any turned out by young artists today, Dr. Koussevitzky replied, "It is because there are better teachers in the conservatories, and because of the great progress in technique, such as that which Stravinsky inaugurated.

When Dr. Koussevitzky came to this country 15 years ago and made necessary changes in the personnel of the orchestra which he was destined to bring to new heights, he had to turn to Europe for artists.

"I began to play the youngest generation here this year," the conductor declared. "I found that actually those composers, just starting in, are more advanced than were the old composers at the same state of their lives. It is most interesting."

Dr. Koussevitzky, long intense in his admirationof Stravinsky, is delighted that the dynamic Russian is to come to Harvard next fall as the Charles Eliot Norton professor of poetry. He and Stravinsky are old friends.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUN 14 1939

Dr. Koussevitzky Sails for Europe

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, refreshed from his months' vacation at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., and Lake Memphremagog on the Vermont-Canadian border, sails on the Normandie from New York today.

He will return on the Champlain July 26 to rehearse with the orchestra for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The trip to Europe, long an annual custom for the maestro, was postponed in May because of the uncertainty of conditions abroad.

At Lake Memphremagog, Dr. Koussevitzky was the guest of Prof. Pitirin Sorokin of Harvard University.

Festival trustees announced today that there is much activity at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, where six concerts will be given by the orchestra the first two weekends in August. Considerable interior painting at the new music shed has been completed and the huge parking area is being drained and groomed for the thousands of visitors who will use it.

It was also announced that subscriptions for the concerts are considerably ahead of last year but there are plenty of good seats left. All 5,700 seats in the music shed will be reserved this year. Community chairmen met with the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, today to plan the subscription campaign which will continue until the final concert.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

JUN 14 1939

Koussevitzky Sails for Month's Rest in Europe

NEW YORK, June 14 (AP)—Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, sailed today on the Normandie for a month's rest abroad. He will rerturn July 26 to prepare for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival which will be held at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., the first two weeks of August.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CHELSEA, MASS.
EVE. RECORD

JUN 15 1939

KOUSSEVITZKY SAILS FOR EUROPEAN REST

New York—With his anxiety on European war threats allayed by recent assurances from abroad, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, sailed on the French liner Normandie for France and Switzerland. He was accompanied by his wife and said that he would spend four weeks abroad, sailing back from Havre on the Champlain, July 19.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUN 15 1939

KOUSSEVITZKY SAILS

New York, June 14—(AP)—Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra, sailed today on the Normandie for a month's rest abroad. He will return July 26 to prepare for the Berkshire symphonic festival which will be held at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., the first two weeks of August.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News

JUN 17 1939

Koussevitzky Sails for Europe

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, rested and refreshed from his month's vacation at Saratoga Springs and Lake Memphremagog on the Vermont-Canadian border, sailed on the Normandie from New York this week. He will return on the Champlain July 26 to rehearse with the orchestra for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The trip to Europe, long an annual custom for the maestro, was postponed in May because of the uncertainty of conditions abroad.

At Lake Memphremagog, Dr. Koussevitzky was the guest of Prof. Pitirin Sorokin of Harvard University.

Festival trustees announced today that there is a great deal of activity at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, where the concerts will be given by the orchestra the first two weekends in August. Considerable interior painting at the new music shed has been completed and the huge parking area is being drained and groomed for the thousands of visitors who will see it.

It was also announced that subscriptions for the concerts are considerably ahead of last year but there are plenty of good seats left. All 5,700 seats in the music shed will be reserved this year.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

JUN 15 1939

New York, June 15. — AP — Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, sailed yesterday on Normandie for a month's rest abroad. He will return July 26 to prepare for the Berkshire Symphonic festival which will be held at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., the first two weeks of August.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BURLINGTON, VT.
NEWS

JUN 17 1939

Boston Symphony Head Off on European Trip

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass. — Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, rested and refreshed from his month's vacation at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., and Lake Memphremagog on the Vermont-Canadian border, sailed on the Normandie from New York. He will return July 28 to rehearse for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The trip to Europe, long an annual custom for the maestro, was postponed in May because of the uncertainty of conditions abroad.

At Lake Memphremagog, Dr. Koussevitzky was the guest of Prof. Pitirin Sorokin of Harvard University.

Festival trustees have announced that there is a great deal of activity at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, where six concerts will be given by the orchestra the first two week-ends in August. Interior painting at the new music shed has been completed and the parking area is being drained and groomed for the thousands of visitors who will use it.

It was also announced that subscriptions for the concerts are considerably ahead of last year but there are plenty of good seats left

---

Boston Post June 18, 1939

NEWS OF THE WORLD OF MUSIC

Matters of Interest in the Musical Sphere

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

TWO Boston musicians, a singer and a composer, have recently been awarded the honorary degree of doctor of music. Roland Hayes was thus honored by Ohio Wesleyan University and Mabel Daniels by Boston University. In presenting Mr. Hayes' degree, Dr. Edward L. Rice, acting president of the university, said: "By the beauty of your voice, by your scholarly interpretation of the classics and of the folk music of your own race, by your unswerving loyalty to the highest ideals of your art, you have brought pleasure and inspiration to our campus and to multitudes in many lands." A pretty good summing up.

In her own way, and in more than one way, Miss Daniels has also been a faithful servant of art. On the creative side, at least, music is essentially a man's game. The woman composer is looked upon with suspicion. Miss Daniels has, therefore, reason to be proud of the impressive and constantly growing list of performances of her works, both large and small. Few American composers, of either sex, are as frequently represented on current programmes. Besides all this, Miss Daniels is a devoted patroness of music. She has given aid to many musical causes. In particular, she has worked zealously for the MacDowell Colony at Peterboro, N. H.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
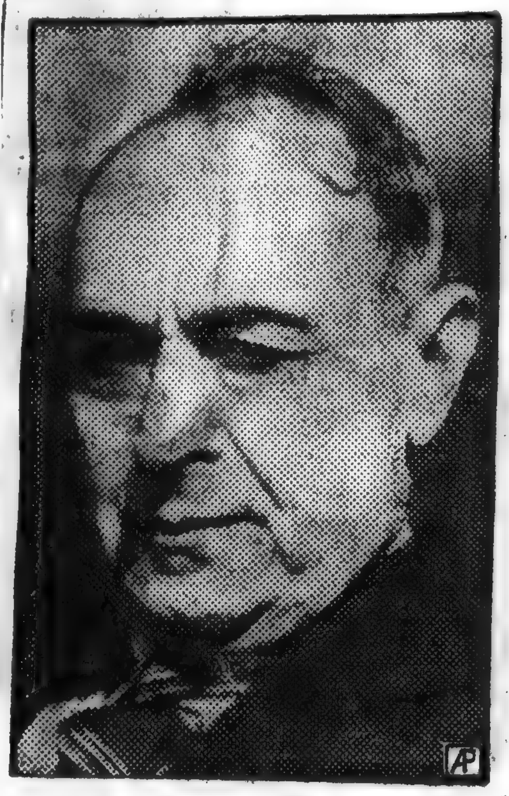
POST

JUN 19 1939

Koussevitzky Sails But He Will Return



SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, conductor of the Boston Symphony, sailed last week for France, but will return July 26 to begin rehearsals for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in August.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DALLAS, TEXAS
NEWS

JUN 24 1939

Koussevitzky Abroad Before Concert Series

Special to The News.

BOSTON, Mass., June 23.—Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, sailed last week for a short stay abroad. He will return on July 26 to begin rehearsals with the Boston Symphony for its six concerts in the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The concerts will be held on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons, Aug. 3, 5, 6, 10, 12 and 13.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS

JUN 26 1939

* * *

SERGE KOUSSEVITSKY has sailed for Europe after an unaccustomed vacation of one month in the United States and will return July 26 to rehearse the Boston Symphony for its Tanglewood Festival given the first two week ends in August.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD

JUL 9 - 1939

Serge Koussevitzky, who has been conducting in Europe, is due back in this country on July 26 to begin rehearsals for the Berkshire Festival in Massachusetts.

THIS CLIPPING FROM Mont. GAZETTE
Billings Mont

JUL 9 1939

* * *

Serge Koussevitzky, who has been conducting in Europe, is due back in this country on July 26 to begin rehearsals for the Berkshire Festival in Massachusetts.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ST. PAUL, MINN.
PIONEER-PRESS

JUL 9 - 1939

TURNING HOMEWARD

Serge Koussevitzky, who has been conducting in Europe, is due back in this country on July 26 to begin rehearsals for the Berkshire Festival in Massachusetts.

THIS CLIPPING FROM PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD

JUL 10 1939

Koussevitzky Back

NEW YORK, July 9.—Serge Koussevitzky, who has been conducting in Europe, is due back in this country on July 26 to begin rehearsals for the Berkshire Festival in Massachusetts.

THIS CLIPPING FROM ELLENSBURG, WASH.
RECORD

J

JUL 27 1939

"Great Concert Music"—Hale. A collection of the famous music critics comments on music and composers, which he wrote for the programs of the Boston Symphony orchestra, including both classic and modern compositions.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BROCKTON, MASS.
ENTERPRISE

JUL 27 1939

HOME FROM FRANCE.

BOSTON, July 27.—(UP)—On his 65th birthday anniversary, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, returned late last night from a three-week vacation in France. He said he had found the French nation united "like one man" in the face of a tense European situation.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 27 1939

Dr. Koussevitzky Returns to U. S.

To Prepare for Berkshire Festival, Opening Aug. 3

NEW YORK, July 26 (AP)—Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, arrived today on the Champlain to begin rehearsals for the sixth Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which opens Aug. 3 at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass.

Dr. Koussevitzky sailed late in June for a vacation in Paris. Mrs. Koussevitzky accompanied him.

This year's festival embraces six programs, all conducted by Dr. Koussevitsky and given in the festival "music shed" on Aug. 3, 5, 6, 10, 12 and 13. The orchestra will rehearse in its winter home, Symphony Hall, through Wednesday, and then migrate en masse from Boston to the Berkshires.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

JUL 27 1939

BOSTON SYMPHONY DIRECTOR RETURNS

BOSTON, July 27 (UP)—On his 65th birthday, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, returned late last night from a three-week vacation in France.

He said he had found the French united "like one man" in the face of a tense European situation. He began preparing musical scores for the annual Berkshire Music Festival to be opened by his orcrestra next Thursday.

THIS CLIPPING FROM PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES

JUL 27 1939

Hub Symphony Leader Marks 65th Birthday

BOSTON, July 27 (UP)—On his 65th birthday, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, returned late last night from a three-week vacation in France.

He said he had found the French nation united "like one man" in the face of a tense European situation.

Dr. Koussevitzky, at his Brookline home today, began preparing musical scores for the annual Berkshire music festival to be opened by his orchestra next Thursday.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
Democrat-Chronicle

APR 9 - 1939

Berkshire Festival Set for August

NEW YORK — (U.P.)—The sixth annual Berkshire symphonic festival will be held between Aug. 3 and 13 at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony in programs drawn from the second and third Beethoven symphonies, the first and third of Brahms, symphonies of Haydn and Mozart, Tshaikovsky's fourth, the Sibelius second and fifth, Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scherezade" Debussy's "Apres-midi d'un Faun," Ravel's "La Valse," Wagnerian excerpts, Walter Piston's "Concerto for Orchestra," and others to be announced later.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
DAYTON, O.
HERALD

APR 14 1939

SUMMER MUSIC FESTIVALS

Germany announces that three historic music festivals will be given in her confines this summer. Several months ago only two festivals were announced. The additional one is to be staged in Salzburg, Austria, a town which has gained its fame through the superlative quality of its annual music festival given in the name of Mozart, who was born there.

The other historic festivals announced by Germany are those of Bayreuth and Munich. Some of the singers have been announced, but they do not seem to offer much attraction to those who wish to hear the best in music, for these artists are not well known. Neither does the list of directors look particularly inviting. True, there are listed such names as those of Karl Boehm and Hans Knappertbusch, but even these do not carry the glory which accrues to that of Toscanini, who in other years directed for long periods both at Bayreuth and Salzburg. Toscanini will not be far distant. The luster of his name will be attracting people to a music festival at Luzerne, Switzerland.

There is little doubt that those Americans who wish to hear good music this summer had better remain within the confines of their own land. There will be much good music in New York. There will be the annual Philharmonic series and fine music will be incorporated in the New York world fair program. San Francisco is staging excellent music on Treasure island. Los Angeles is planning a splendid Hollywood bowl series. The Boston Symphony orchestra will give a series of programs in the Berkshire Hills. Appearing in these performances will be many of the world's greatest vocalists and instrumentalists. Some of these, like Toscanini, would not consider appearing in one of the German festivals.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
STAR-ENTERPRISE

APR 17 1939

Symphonic Festival Programs Listed

Programs by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival the first two weeks in August, will include nine of the world's famous symphonies. One specialty to be given in the first series of concerts will be Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with Richard Hale as narrator. Also from the modern school are Piston's Cocerto for Orchestra and the Fifth Symphony by Sibelius.

Beethoven's Symphony No. 2, heads the list of compositions for the second series. Other works include Debussy's, "L'Apresmidi d'un Faune;" Ravel's, "LeValse;" Stravinsky's, "Le Sacre du Printemps," and "The Second Symphony," by Sibelius. Brahms, Mozart, Beethoven, Tschaikovsky, Haydn, Schumann, Strauss and Wagner are represented in both series.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

APR 15 1939

Old and New Compositions To Be Heard at Festival

Richard Hale Narrator for "Peter and the Wolf" at Tanglewood This Summer

Programs by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival the first two weeks in August, will include nine of the world's famous symphonies. Dr. Koussevitzky's versatility at program building is reflected in the wide range of compositions to be played at Tanglewood. Chronologically they range from Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No 3 to the works of several contemporary composers.

Interesting Specialty

One interesting specialty to be given in the first series of concerts, will be Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolfe," with Richard Hale as narrator. This musical fairy tale having an appeal to adults and children alike and included in a programs, has been received with number of the orchestra's winter enthusiasm at every performance. Also from the modern school are Piston's Concerto for Orchestra and the Fifth Symphony by Sibelius.

Beethoven's Symphony No 2 heads the list of compositions for the second series. Other works include Debussy's "L'Apres-midi d'un Faune," Ravel's "La Valse," Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," the Second Symphony by Sibelius.

Brahms, Mozart, Beethoven, Tchaikovsky, Haydn, Schumann, Strauss, and Wagner are represented in both series.

This will be the second season in the Festival's music shed built last year on the 200-acre estate overlooking Stockbridge Bowl. Public subscriptions from many parts of the country, reflecting interest in the proposal to establish a great Festival center in America, made the building possible. Already nearly half of the 5700 seats have been taken for the six concerts. This year for the first time, all seats will be reserved. Complete details may be obtained from local chairmen or from the Festival office, Stockbridge.

The concert dates are: Series A, Aug. 3, 5 and 6; Series B, Aug. 10, 12 and 13. The Sunday concerts will be at 3.30 and the others at 8.30 P. M.

The programs by series will include the following:

SERIES A PROGRAM

Bandenburg Concerto No. 3	Bach
Symphony No. 7	Beethoven
Symphony No. 1	Brahms
Symphony in E Flat	Mozart
Concerto for Orchestra	Piston
"Peter and the Wolf"	Prokofieff
"Scheherazade"	Rimsky-Korsakoff
Symphony No. 5	Sibelius
Symphony No. 4	Tchaikovsky

SERIES B PROGRAM

Symphony No. 2	Beethoven
"L'Apres-midi d'un Faune"	Debussy
Symphony	Haydn
"La Valse"	Ravel
"Pictures at an Exhibition"	Moussorgsky-Ravel
Symphony No. 4	Schumann
Symphony No. 2	Sibelius
"Thus Spake Zarathustra"	Strauss
"Le Sacre du Printemps"	Stravinsky
Overture, "The Flying Dutchman"; Prelude to "Lohengrin"; Prelude, "The Meistersinger"; Siegfried's Rhine Journey	Wagner

---

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

APR 15 1939

Nine Famous Symphonies Scheduled For Festival

Serge Koussevitzky Maps Program for Boston Symphony at Sixth Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival During First Two Weeks of August—"Peter and the Wolf," Musical Fairy Tale, to be Heard in First Series—Nearly Half of 5,700 Seats Already Taken for First Two Concerts.

Programs by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky conductor, for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival the first two weeks in August, will include nine of the world's famous symphonies. Dr. Koussevitsky's versatility at program building is reflected in the wide range of compositions to be played at Tanglewood. Chronologically they range from Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 to the works of several contemporary composers.

One interesting specialty to be given in the first series of concerts will be Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with Richard Hale as narrator. This musical fairy tale, having an appeal to adults and children alike and included in a number of the orchestra's winter programs, has been received with enthusiasm at every performance. Also from the modern school are Piston's Concerto for Orchestra and the Fifth Symphony by Sibelius.

Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 heads the list of compositions for the second series. Other works include Debussy's "L'Apres-midi d'un Faune," Ravel's "La Valse," Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," the Second Symphony by Sibelius.

Brahms, Mozart, Beethoven, Tchaikovsky, Haydn, Schumann, Strauss and Wagner are represented in both series.

This will be the second season in the Festival's music shed, built last year on the 200-acre estate overlooking Stockbridge Bowl. Public subscriptions from many parts of the country, reflecting interest in the proposal to establish a great Festival center in America, made the building possible. Already nearly half of the 5700 seats have been taken for the six concerts. This year for the first time all seats will be reserved. Complete details may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

The programs by series will include the following:

Series A—Thursday, August 3, 8.30 p. m., Saturday August 5, 8.30 p. m., Sunday, August 6, 3.30 p. m. Bach, Brandenburg Concerto No. 3; Beethoven, Symphony No. 7; Brahms, Symphony No. 1; Mozart, Symphony in E Flat; Piston, Concerto for Orchestra; Prokofieff, "Peter and the Wolf"; Rimsky-Korsakoff, "Scheherazade"; Sibelius, Symphony No. 5; Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 4.

Series B—Thursday, August 10, 8.30 p. m., Saturday, August 12, 8.30 p. m., Sunday, August 13, 3.30 p. m. Beethoven, Symphony No. 2; Debussy, "L'Apres-midi d'un Faune"; Haydn, Symphony; Ravel, "La Valse"; Moussorgsky-Ravel, "Pictures at an Exhibition"; Schumann, Symphony No. 4; Sibelius, Symphony No. 2; Strauss, "Thus Spake Zarathustra"; Stravinsky, "Le Sacre du Printemps"; Wagner, Overture, "The Flying Dutchman"; Prelude to "Lohengrin"; Prelude, "The Meistersingers"; Siegfried's Rhine Journey.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

APR 15 1939

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Announces Tanglewood Programs

Stockbridge, April 15—Programs by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival the first two weeks in August, will include nine of the world's famous symphonies. Dr Koussevitzky's versatility at program building is reflected in the wide range of compositions to be played at Tanglewood. Chronologically they range from Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No 3 to the works of several contemporary composers.

One interesting specialty to be given in the first series of concerts will be Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with Richard Hale as narrator. This musical fairy tale, having an appeal to adults and children alike and included in a number of the orchestra's winter programs, has been received with enthusiasm at every performance. Also from the modern school are Piston's Concerto for Orchestra and the Fifth Symphony by Sibelius.

Beethoven's Symphony No 2 heads the list of compositions for the second series. Other works include Debussy's "L'Apres-midi d'un Faune," Ravel's "La Valse," Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," the Second Symphony by Sibelius.

Brahms, Mozart, Beethoven, Tchaikovsky, Haydn, Schumann, Strauss and Wagner are represented in both series.

This will be the second season in the festival's music shed, built last year on the 200-acre estate overlooking Stockbridge bowl. Public subscriptions from many parts of the country, reflecting interest in the proposal to establish a great festival center in America, made the building possible. Already nearly half of the 5700 seats have been taken for the six concerts. This year for the first time all seats will be reserved. Complete details may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

The programs by series will include the following:—

DR SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

Series A: August 3, Thursday, 8.30 p. m.; August 5, Saturday, 8.30 p. m.: August 6, Sunday, 3.30 p. m.

Bach	Brandenburg Concerto No 3
Beethoven	Symphony No 7
Brahms	Symphony No 1
Mozart	Symphony in E Flat
Piston	Concerto for Orchestra
Prokofieff	"Peter and the Wolf"
Rimsky-Kopsakoff	"Scheherazade"
Sibelius	Symphony No 5
Tchaikovsky	Symphony No 4

Series B: August 10, Thursday, 8.30 p. m. August 12, Saturday, 8.30 p. m.; August 13, Sunday, 3.30 p. m.

Beethoven	Symphony No 2
Debussy	"L'Apres-midi d'un Faune"
Haydn	Symphony
Ravel	"La Valse"
Moussorgsky-Ravel	"Pictures at an Exhibition"
Schumann	Symphony No 4
Sibelius	Symphony No 2
Strauss	"Thus Spake Zarathustra"
Stravinsky	"Le Sacre du Printemps"
Wagner, Overture	"The Flying Dutchman"
	Prelude to "Lohengrin"
	Prelude, "The Meistersingers"
	Siegfried's Rhine Journey.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

APR 16 1939

BERKSHIRE FETE LISTS PROGRAMS

Concerts for Two Series, Each of Three Days, Arranged for Boston Symphony

DATES IN EARLY AUGUST

Nearly Half of 5,700 Seats at Tanglewood Are Already Reserved for Festival

The music to be played at the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, during the first two weeks of August, was announced yesterday. For Series A, on Aug. 3, 5 and 6, programs will be compiled from the following works: Bach "Brandenburg Concerto," No. 3; Beethoven Seventh symphony, Brahms First symphony, Mozart E flat symphony, concerto for orchestra by Piston, "Peter and the Wolf" by Prokofieff, "Scheherezade" by Rimsky-Korsakoff, Sibelius's Fifth symphony and the Tchaikovsky Fourth symphony.

During the Series B, on Aug. 10, 12 and 13, the following works will be heard: Beethoven Second symphony, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," a Haydn symphony; Ravel's "La Valse," "Pictures at an Exhibition" y Mussorgsky-Ravel, Schumann Fourth symphony, Sibelius's Second symphony; "Thus Spake Zarathustra," by Strauss; Stravinskv's "The Rite of Spring" and, by Wagner, overture to "The Flying Dutchman," prelude to "Lohengrin," prelude to "Die Meistersinger" and "Siegfried's Rhine Journey."

This will be the second season that the Boston Symphony will appear in the festival's music shed at Tanglewood, the 200-acre estate overlooking the Stockbridge Bowl. Nearly half of the 5,700 seats have already been taken for the six concerts. This year, for the first time, all seats will be reserved.

Further details may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Festival, Stockbridge, Mass.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

APR 17 1939

Summer is i-cumen in, apparently, for announcement is already made of the works to be played at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony. Series A concerts will be given on Thursday August 3 and Saturday August 5, at 8:30 p. m., and on Sunday August 6, at 3:30 p. m. Series B will come at the end of the following week, Thursday August 10 and Saturday August 12, at 8:30 p. m., and Sunday August 13, at 3:30 p. m.

During the first series, the works to be performed will include Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3; Symphony N. 7, Beethoven; Symphony No. 1, Brahams; Symphony in E Flat, Mozart; Concerta for Orchestra, Piston; "Peter and the Wolf," (Richard- Hale, narrator), Prokofieff; "Scheherazade," Rimsky-Korsakov; Symphony No. 5, Sibelius, and Symphony No. 4, Tschaikowsky.

Series B will offer Symphony No. 2, Beethoven; "L'Apres-midi d'un Faune," Debussy; a Hayden Symphony; "La Valse," Ravel; "Pictures at an Exhibition," Moussorgsky; Symphony No. 4, Schumann; Symphony No. 2, Sibelius; "Thus Spake Zarathustra," Strauss; "La Sacre du Printemps," Strawinsky, and from Wagner, The "Flying Dutchman" Overture, Preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger," and "Siegfried's Rhine Journey."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

APR 17 1939

Berkshire Festival Programs Listed By Dr. Koussevitzky

Programs by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival the first two weeks in August will include nine of the world's famous symphonies.

Dr. Koussevitzky's versatility at program building is reflected in the wide range of compositions to be played at Tanglewood. Chronologically they range from Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 to the works of several contemporary composers.

One specialty to be given in the first series of concerts will be Prokefieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with Richard Hale as narrator. Also from the modern school are Piston's Concerto for Orchestra and the Fifth Symphony by Sibelius.

Second Season in Bowl

This will be the second season in the Festival's music shed, built last year on the 200-acre estate overlooking Stockbridge Bowl. Public subscriptions from many parts of the country, reflecting interest in the proposal to establish a great festival center in America, made the building possible.

Already nearly half of the 5,700 seats have been taken for the six concerts. This year for the first time all seats will be reserved. Complete details may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

Programs for Series

The programs by series will include the following:

Series A, Aug. 3, 5 and 6: Bach, Brandenburg Concerto No. 3; Beethoven, Symphony No. 7; Brahms, Symphony No. 1; Mozart, Symphony in E flat; Piston, Concerto for orchestra; Prokofieff, "Peter and the Wolf"; Rimsky-Korsakoff, "Scheherazade"; Sibelius, Symphony No. 5; Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 4.

Series B, Aug. 10, 12 and 13: Beethoven, Symphony No. 2; DeBussy, "L'Apres-midi d'un Faune"; Haydn, Symphony; Ravel, "La Valse"; Moussorgsky-Ravel, "Pictures at an Exhibition"; Schumann, Symphony No. 4; Sibelius, Symphony No. 2; Strauss, "Thus Spake Zarathustra"; Stravinsky, "Le Sacre du Printemps"; Wagner, Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," Prelude to "Lohengrin," Prelude to "The Meistersingers," Siegfried's Rhine Journey.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

APR 17 1939

PROGRAMS by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival the first two weeks in August, will include nine of the world's famous symphonies. Dr. Koussevitzky's versatility in program building is reflected in the wide range of compositions to be played. Chronologically they range from Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 to works of several contemporary composers.

One interesting specialty to be given in the first series of concerts will be Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with Richard Hale as narrator. This musical fairy tale, having an appeal to adults and children alike, was included in a number of the orchestra's Winter programs and was received with enthusiasm at every performance. Also from the modern school will be, Piston's Concerto for Orchestra and the Fifth Symphony by Sibelius.

Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 heads the list of compositions for the second series. Other works include Debussy's "L'Apres-midi d'un Faune," Ravel's "A Valse," Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," and the Second Symphony of Sibelius. Brahms, Mozart, Beethoven, Tschaikowsky, Haydn, Schumann, Strauss and Wagner are represented in both series.

This will be the second season in the Festival's music shed, built last year on the 200-acre estate overlooking Stockbridge Bowl. Already nearly half of the 5,700 seats have been taken for the six concerts. This year for the first time all seats will be reserved. Complete details may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stock-

---

Old and New Compositio To Be Heard at Festival

Richard Hale Narrator for "Peter and the Wolf" at Tanglewood This Summer

Eagle

Programs by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival the first two weeks in August, will include nine of the world's famous symphonies. Dr. Koussevitzky's versatility at program building is reflected in the wide range of compositions to be played at Tanglewood. Chronologically they range from Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No 3 to the works of several contemporary composers.

Interesting Specialty

One interesting specialty to be given in the first series of concerts, will be Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolfe," with Richard Hale as narrator. This musical fairy tale having an appeal to adults and children alike and included in a programs, has been received with number of the orchestra's winter enthusiasm at every performance. Also from the modern school are Piston's Concerto for Orchestra and the Fifth Symphony by Sibelius.

Beethoven's Symphony No 2 heads the list of compositions for the second series. Other works include Debussy's "L'Apres-midi d'un Faune," Ravel's "La Valse," Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," the Second Symphony by Sibelius.

Brahms, Mozart, Beethoven, Tchaikovsky, Haydn, Schumann, Strauss, and Wagner are represented in both series.

This will be the second season in the Festival's music shed built last year on the 200-acre estate overlooking Stockbridge Bowl Public subscriptions from many parts of the country, reflecting interest in the proposal to establish a great Festival center in America, made the building possible. Already nearly half of the 5700 seats have been taken for the six concerts. This year for the first time, all seats will be reserved. Complete details may be obtained from local chairmen or from the Festival office, Stockbridge.

The concert dates are: Series A, Aug. 3, 5 and 6; Series B, Aug. 10, 12 and 13. The Sunday concerts will be at 3.30 and the others at 8.30 P. M.

The programs by series will include the following:

SERIES A PROGRAM

Bandenburg Concerto No. 3 ...... Bach
Symphony No. 7 .... Beethoven
Symphony No. 1 .... Brahms
Symphony in E Flat .... Mozart
Concerto for Orchestra .... Piston
"Peter and the Wolf" .... Prokofieff
"Scheherazade" .... Rimsky-Korsakoff
Symphony No. 5 .... Sibelius
Symphony No. 4 .... Tchaikovsky

SERIES B PROGRAM

Symphony No. 2 .... Beethoven
"L'Apres-midi d'un Faune" ...... Debussy
Symphony .... Haydn
"La Valse" .... Ravel
"Pictures at an Exhibition"
Moussorgsky-Ravel
Symphony No. 4 .... Schumann
Symphony No. 2 .... Sibelius
"Thus Spake Zarathustra" ..... Strauss
"Le Sacre du Printemps" ..... Stravinsky
Overture, "The Flying Dutchman"; Prelude to "Lohengrin"; Prelude, "The Meistersinger"; Siegfried's Rhine Journey
Wagne

Berkshire Festival Programs Listed By Dr. Koussevitzky

Hartford Times

Programs by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival the first two weeks in August will include nine of the world's famous symphonies.

Dr. Koussevitzky's versatility at program building is reflected in the wide range of compositions to be played at Tanglewood. Chronologically they range from Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 to the works of several contemporary composers.

One specialty to be given in the first series of concerts will be Prokefieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with Richard Hale as narrator. Also from the modern school are Piston's Concerto for Orchestra and the Fifth Symphony by Sibelius.

Second Season in Bowl

This will be the second season in the Festival's music shed, built last year on the 200-acre estate overlooking Stockbridge Bowl. Public subscriptions from many parts of the country, reflecting interest in the proposal to establish a great festival center in America, made the building possible.

Already nearly half of the 5,700 seats have been taken for the six concerts. This year for the first time all seats will be reserved. Complete details may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

Programs for Series

The programs by series will include the following:

Series A, Aug. 3, 5 and 6: Bach, Brandenburg Concerto No. 3; Beethoven, Symphony No. 7; Brahms, Symphony No. 1; Mozart, Symphony in E flat; Piston, Concerto for orchestra; Prokofieff, "Peter and the Wolf"; Rimsky-Korsakoff, "Scheherazade"; Sibelius, Symphony No. 5; Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 4.

Series B, Aug. 10, 12 and 13: Beethoven, Symphony No. 2; DeBussy, "L'Apres-midi d'un Faune"; Haydn, Symphony; Ravel, "La Valse"; Moussorgsky-Ravel, "Pictures at an Exhibition"; Schumann, Symphony No. 4; Sibelius, Symphony No. 2; Strauss, "Thus Spake Zarathustra"; Stravinsky, "Le Sacre du Printemps"; Wagner, Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," Prelude to "Lohengrin," Prelude to "The Meistersingers," Siegfried's Rhine Journey.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR

APR 18 1939

GIVE BERKSHIRE SYMPHONY PLANS

Serge Koussevitzky's Program To Conclude Nine World Famous Symphonies

Programs by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival the first two weeks in August, field on Friday afternoon, Apr. 28, at 2 o'clock. A cordial invitation is extended to the ladies.

will include nine of the world's famous symphonies. Dr. Koussevitzky's versatility at program building is reflected in the wide range of compositions to be played at Tanglewood. They range from Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 to the works of several contemporary composers.

One interesting specialty to be given in the first series of concerts will be Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with Richard Hal as narrator. From the modern school also are Piston's Concerto for Orchestra and the Fifth Symphony by Sibelius.

Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 heads the list of compositions for the second series. Other works include Debussy's "L'Apres-midi d'un Faune", Ravel's "La Valse", Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," the Second Symphony by Sibelius.

Brahms, Mozart, Beethoven, Tchaikovsky, Haydn, Schumann, Strauss and Wagner are represented in both series.

This will be the second season in the Festival's music shed, built last year on the 200-acre estate overlooking Stockbridge Bowl. Already nearly half of the 5,700 seats have been taken for the six concerts. This year for the first time all seats will be reserved. Complete details may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

34

Nine Famous Symphonies Scheduled For Festival

N. Adams Trans.

Serge Koussevitzky Maps Program for Boston Symphony at Sixth Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival During First Two Weeks of August—"Peter and the Wolf," Musical Fairy Tale, to be Heard in First Series—Nearly Half of 5,700 Seats Already Taken for First Two Concerts.

Programs by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky conductor, for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival the first two weeks in August, will include nine of the world's famous symphonies. Dr. Koussevitsky's versatility at program building is reflected in the wide range of compositions to be played at Tanglewood. Chronologically they range from Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 to the works of several contemporary composers.

One interesting specialty to be given in the first series of concerts will be Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with Richard Hale as narrator. This musical fairy tale, having an appeal to adults and children alike and included in a number of the orchestra's winter programs, has been received with enthusiasm at every performance. Also from the modern school are Piston's Concerto for Orchestra and the Fifth Symphony by Sibelius.

Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 heads the list of compositions for the second series. Other works include Debussy's "L'Apres-midi d'un Faune," Ravel's "La Valse," Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," the Second Symphony by Sibelius.

Brahms, Mozart, Beethoven, Tchaikovsky, Haydn, Schumann, Strauss and Wagner are represented in both series.

This will be the second season in the Festival's music shed, built last year on the 200-acre estate overlooking Stockbridge Bowl. Public subscriptions from many parts of the country, reflecting interest in the proposal to establish a great Festival center in America, made the building possible. Already nearly half of the 5700 seats have been taken for the six concerts. This year for the first time all seats will be reserved. Complete details may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

The programs by series will include the following:

Series A—Thursday, August 3, 8.30 p. m., Saturday August 5, 8.30

THIS CLIPPING FROM RECORD

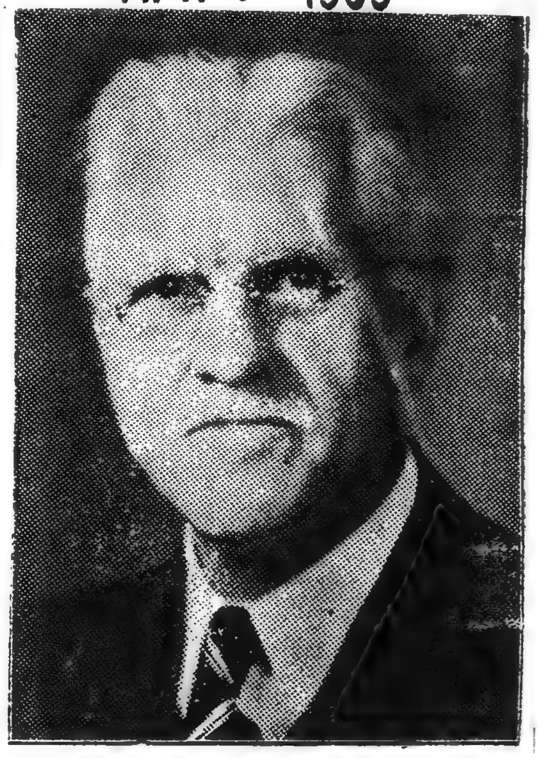
Amherst Mass

APR 19 1939



Dr. James Dexter Taylor

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Announces 1939 Program

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, Conductor to Give Six Concerts

Programs by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival the first two weeks in August, will include nine of the world's famous symphonies. Dr. Koussevitzy's versatility at program building is reflected in the wide range of compositions to be played at Tanglewood. Chronologically they range from Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 to the works of several contemporary composers.

One interesting specialty to be given in the first series of concerts will be Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with Richard Hale as narrator. This musical fairy tale, having an appeal to adults and children alike and included in a number of the orchestra's winter programs, has been received with enthusiasm at every performance. Also from the modern school are Piston's Concerto for Orchestra and the Fifth Symphony by Sibelius.

Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 heads the list of compositions for the second series. Other works include Debussy's "L'Apres-midi d'un Faune," Ravel's "La Valse," Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," the Second Symphony by Sibelius.

Brahms, Mozart, Beethoven, Tohaikovsky, Haydn, Schumann, Strauss and Wagner are represented in both series.

This will be the second season in the Festival's music shed, built last year on the 200-acre estate overlooking Stockbridge Bowl. Public subscriptions from many parts of the country, reflecting interest in the proposal to establish a great Festival center in America, made the building possible.

Already nearly half of the 5700 seats have been taken for the six concerts. This year for the first time all seats will be reserved. Complete details may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

The programs by series will include the following:

SERIES A August 3 Thursday, 8:30 p. m.
August 5 Saturday, 8:30 p. m.
August 6 Sunday, 3:30 p m

BACH Brandenburg Concerto No. 3
BEETHOVEN ....Symphony No. 7
BRAHMS .... Symphony No. 1
MOZART .... Symphony in E flat
PISTON .... Concerto for Orchestra
PROKOFIEFF .... Peter and the Wolf
RIMSKY-KORSAKOFF ....Scheherazade
SIBELIUS .... Symphony No. 5
TCHAIKOVSKY .... Symphony No. 4

SERIES B August Thursday, 8:30 p m
August 12 Saturday 8:30
August 13 Sunday 3:30 p m

BEETHOVEN .... Symphony No. 2
DEBUSSY ..L'Apres-midi d'un Faune
HAYDN .... Symphony
RAVEL .... La Valse
MOUSSORGSKY-RAVEL .... Pictures at an Exhibition
SCHUMANN .... Symphony No. 4
SIBELIUS .... Symphony No. 2
STRAUSS .... Thus Spake Zarathustra
STRAVINSKY Le Sacre du Printemps
Wagner ....Vverture, "The Flying Dutchman; Prelude to Lohengrin" Prelude, "The Meistersingers";

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
APR 17 1939

Berkshire Festival Programs Listed By Dr. Koussevitzky

Programs by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Kousse[illegible] conductor, for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival the first two weeks in August will include nine of the world's famous symphonies.

Dr. Koussevitzky's versatility at program building is reflected in the wide range of compositions to be played at Tanglewood. Chronologically they range from Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 to the works of several contemporary composers.

One specialty to be given in the first series of concerts will be Prokefieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with Richard Hale as narrator. Also from the modern school are Piston's Concerto for Orchestra and the Fifth Symphony by Sibelius.

Second Season in Bowl

This will be the second season in the Festival's music shed, built last year on the 200-acre estate overlooking Stockbridge Bowl. Public subscriptions from many parts of the country, reflecting interest in the proposal to establish a great festival center in America, made the building possible.

Already nearly half of the 5,700 seats have been taken for the six concerts. This year for the first time all seats will be reserved. Complete details may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

Programs for Series

The programs by series will include the following:

Series A, Aug. 3, 5 and 6: Bach, Brandenburg Concerto No. 3; Beethoven, Symphony No. 7; Brahms, Symphony No. 1; Mozart, Symphony in E flat; Piston, Concerto for orchestra; Prokofieff, "Peter and the Wolf"; Rimsky-Korsakoff, "Scheherazade"; Sibelius, Symphony No. 5; Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 4.

Series B, Aug. 10, 12 and 13: Beethoven, Symphony No. 2; DeBussy, "L'Apres-midi d'un Faune"; Haydn, Symphony; Ravel, "La Valse"; Moussorgsky-Ravel, "Pictures at an Exhibition"; Schumann, Symphony No. 4; Sibelius, Symphony No. 2; Strauss, "Thus Spake Zarathustra"; Stravinsky, "Le Sacre du Printemps"; Wagner, Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," Prelude to "Lohengrin," Prelude to "The Meistersingers," Siegfried's Rhine Journey.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR
APR 17 1939

PROGRAMS by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival the first two weeks in August, will include nine of the world's famous symphonies. Dr. Koussevitzky's versatility in program building is reflected in the wide range of compositions to be played. Chronologically they range from Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 to works of several contemporary composers.

One interesting specialty to be given in the first series of concerts will be Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with Richard Hale as narrator. This musical fairy tale, having an appeal to adults and children alike, was included in a number of the orchestra's Winter programs and was received with enthusiasm at every performance. Also from the modern school will be Piston's Concerto for Orchestra and the Fifth Symphony by Sibelius.

Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 heads the list of compositions for the second series. Other works include Debussy's "L'Apres-midi d'un Faune," Ravel's "A Valse," Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," and the Second Symphony of Sibelius. Brahms, Mozart, Beethoven, Tschaikowsky, Haydn, Schumann, Strauss and Wagner are represented in both series.

This will be the second season in the Festival's music shed, built last year on the 200-acre estate overlooking Stockbridge Bowl. Already nearly half of the 5,700 seats have been taken for the six concerts. This year for the first time all [illegible] be reserved. [illegible] obtain- [illegible] Berkshire [illegible] Stock-

---

Old and New Compositions To Be Heard at Festival

Eagle

Richard Hale Narrator for "Peter and the Wolf" at Tanglewood This Summer

Programs by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival the first two weeks in August, will include nine of the world's famous symphonies. Dr. Koussevitzky's versatility at program building is reflected in the wide range of compositions to be played at Tanglewood. Chronologically they range from Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No 3 to the works of several contemporary composers.

Interesting Specialty

One interesting specialty to be given in the first series of concerts, will be Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolfe," with Richard Hale as narrator. This musical fairy tale having an appeal to adults and children alike and included in a programs, has been received with number of the orchestra's winter enthusiasm at every performance. Also from the modern school are Piston's Concerto for Orchestra and the Fifth Symphony by Sibelius.

Beethoven's Symphony No 2 heads the list of compositions for the second series. Other works include Debussy's "L'Apres-midi d'un Faune," Ravel's "La Valse," Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," the Second Symphony by Sibelius.

Brahms, Mozart, Beethoven, Tchaikovsky, Haydn, Schumann, Strauss, and Wagner are represented in both series.

This will be the second season in the Festival's music shed built last year on the 200-acre estate overlooking Stockbridge Bowl. Public subscriptions from many parts of the country, reflecting interest in the proposal to establish a great Festival center in America, made the building possible. Already nearly half of the 5700 seats have been taken for the six concerts. This year for the first time, all seats will be reserved. Complete details may be obtained from local chairmen or from the Festival office, Stockbridge.

The concert dates are: Series A, Aug. 3, 5 and 6; Series B, Aug. 10, 12 and 13. The Sunday concerts will be at 3.30 and the others at 8.30 P. M.

The programs by series will include the following:

SERIES A PROGRAM

Bandenburg Concerto No. 3	Bach
Symphony No. 7	Beethoven
Symphony No. 1	Brahms
Symphony in E Flat	Mozart
Concerto for Orchestra	Piston
"Peter and the Wolf"	Prokofieff
"Scheherazade"	Rimsky-Korsakoff
Symphony No. 5	Sibelius
Symphony No. 4	Tchaikovsky

SERIES B PROGRAM

Symphony No. 2	Beethoven
"L'Apres-midi d'un Faune"	Debussy
Symphony	Haydn
"La Valse"	Ravel
"Pictures at an Exhibition"	Moussorgsky-Ravel
Symphony No. 4	Schumann
Symphony No. 2	Sibelius
"Thus Spake Zarathustra"	Strauss
"Le Sacre du Printemps"	Stravinsky
Overture, "The Flying Dutchman"; Prelude to "Lohengrin"; Prelude, "The Meistersinger"; Siegfried's Rhine Journey	Waghe

---

Berkshire Festival Programs Listed By Dr. Koussevitzky

Hartford Times

Programs by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival the first two weeks in August will include nine of the world's famous symphonies.

Dr. Koussevitzky's versatility at program building is reflected in the wide range of compositions to be played at Tanglewood. Chronologically they range from Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 to the works of several contemporary composers.

One specialty to be given in the first series of concerts will be Prokefieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with Richard Hale as narrator. Also from the modern school are Piston's Concerto for Orchestra and the Fifth Symphony by Sibelius.

Second Season in Bowl

This will be the second season in the Festival's music shed, built last year on the 200-acre estate overlooking Stockbridge Bowl. Public subscriptions from many parts of the country, reflecting interest in the proposal to establish a great festival center in America, made the building possible.

Already nearly half of the 5,790 seats have been taken for the six concerts. This year for the first time all seats will be reserved. Complete details may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

Programs for Series

The programs by series will include the following:

Series A, Aug. 3, 5 and 6: Bach, Brandenburg Concerto No. 3; Beethoven, Symphony No. 7; Brahms, Symphony No. 1; Mozart, Symphony in E flat; Piston, Concerto for orchestra; Prokofieff, "Peter and the Wolf"; Rimsky-Korsakoff, "Scheherazade"; Sibelius, Symphony No. 5; Tchaikovsky, Symphony No. 4.

Series B, Aug. 10, 12 and 13: Beethoven, Symphony No. 2; DeBussy, "L'Apres-midi d'un Faune"; Haydn, Symphony; Ravel, "La Valse"; Moussorgsky-Ravel, "Pictures at an Exhibition"; Schumann, Symphony No. 4; Sibelius, Symphony No. 2; Strauss, "Thus Spake Zarathustra"; Stravinsky, "Le Sacre du Printemps"; Wagner, Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," Prelude to "Lohengrin," Prelude to "The Meistersingers," Siegfried's Rhine Journey.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR
APR 18 1939

GIVE BERKSHIRE SYMPHONY PLANS

Serge Koussevitzky's Program To Conclude Nine World Famous Symphonies

Programs by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival the first two weeks in August, field on Friday afterneon, Apr. 28, at 2 o'clock. A cordial invitation is extended to the ladies. will include nine of the world's famous symphonies. Dr. Koussevitzky's versatility at program building is reflected in the wide range of compositions to be played at Tanglewood. They range from Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 to the works of several contemporary composers.

One interesting specialty to be given in the first series of concerts will be Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with Richard Hal as narrator. From the modern school also are Piston's Concerto for Orchestra and the Fifth Symphony by Sibelius.

Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 heads the list of compositions for the second series. Other works include Debussy's "L'Apres-midi d'un Faune", Ravel's "La Valse", Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," the Second Symphony by Sibelius.

Brahms, Mozart, Beethoven, Tchaikovsky, Haydn, Schumann, Strauss and Wagner are represented in both series.

This will be the second season in the Festival's music shed, built last year on the 200-acre estate overlooking Stockbridge Bowl. Already nearly half of the 5,700 seats have been taken for the six concerts. This year for the first time all seats will be reserved. Complete details may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

Nine Famous Symphonies Scheduled For Festival

N. Adams Trans.

34

Serge Koussevitzky Maps Program for Boston Symphony at Sixth Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival During First Two Weeks of August—"Peter and the Wolf," Musical Fairy Tale, to be Heard in First Series—Nearly Half of 5,700 Seats Already Taken for First Two Concerts.

Programs by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky conductor, for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival the first two weeks in August, will include nine of the world's famous symphonies. Dr. Koussevitsky's versatility at program building is reflected in the wide range of compositions to be played at Tanglewood. Chronologically they range from Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 to the works of several contemporary composers.

One interesting specialty to be given in the first series of concerts will be Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with Richard Hale as narrator. This musical fairy tale, having an appeal to adults and children alike and included in a number of the orchestra's winter programs, has been received with enthusiasm at every performance. Also from the modern school are Piston's Concerto for Orchestra and the Fifth Symphony by Sibelius.

Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 heads the list of compositions for the second series. Other works include Debussy's "L'Apres-midi d'un Faune," Ravel's "La Valse," Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," the Second Symphony by Sibelius.

Brahms, Mozart, Beethoven, Tchaikovsky, Haydn, Schumann, Strauss and Wagner are represented in both series.

This will be the second season in the Festival's music shed, built last year on the 200-acre estate overlooking Stockbridge Bowl. Public subscriptions from many parts of the country, reflecting interest in the proposal to establish a great Festival center in America, made the building possible. Already nearly half of the 5700 seats have been taken for the six concerts. This year for the first time all seats will be reserved. Complete details may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

The programs by series will include the following:

Series A—Thursday, August 3, 8.30 p. m., Saturday August 5, 8.30

THIS CLIPPING FROM RECORD
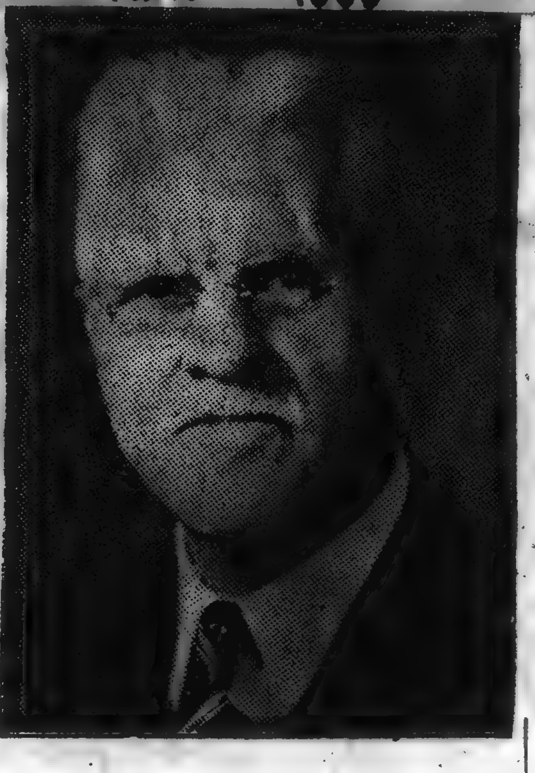
Amherst Mass
APR 19 1939



Dr. James Dexter Taylor

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Announces 1939 Program

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, Conductor to Give Six Concerts

Programs by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival the first two weeks in August, will include nine of the world's famous symphonies. Dr. Koussevitzy's versatility at program building is reflected in the wide range of compositions to be played at Tanglewood. Chronologically they range from Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 to the works of several contemporary composers.

One interesting specialty to be given in the first series of concerts will be Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with Richard Hale as narrator. This musical fairy tale, having an appeal to adults and children alike and included in a number of the orchestra's winter programs, has been received with enthusiasm at every performance. Also from the modern school are Piston's Concerto for Orchestra and the Fifth Symphony by Sibelius.

Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 heads the list of compositions for the second series. Other works include Debussy's "L'Apres-midi d'un Faune," Ravel's "La Valse," Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," the Second Symphony by Sibelius.

Brahms, Mozart, Beethoven, Tchaikovsky, Haydn, Schumann, Strauss and Wagner are represented in both series.

This will be the second season in the Festival's music shed, built last year on the 200-acre estate overlooking Stockbridge Bowl. Public subscriptions from many parts of the country, reflecting interest in the proposal to establish a great Festival senter in America, made the building possible.

Already nearly half of the 5700 seats have been taken for the six concerts. This year for the first time all seats will be reserved. Complete details may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

The programs by series will include the following:

SERIES A August 3 Thursday, 8:30 p. m.
August 5 Saturday, 8:30 p. m.
August 6 Sunday, 3:30 p m

BACH	Brandenburg Concerto No. 3
BEETHOVEN	Symphony No. 7
BRAHMS	Symphony No. 1
MOZART	Symphony in E flat
PISTON	Concerto for Orchestra
PROKOFIEFF	Peter and the Wolf
RIMSKY-KORSAKOFF	Scheherazade
SIBELIUS	Symphony No. 5
TCHAIKOVSKY	Symphony No. 4

SERIES B August Thursday, 8:30 p m
August 12 Saturday 8:30
August 13 Sunday 3:30 p m

BEETHOVEN	Symphony No. 2
DEBUSSY	L'Apres-midi d'un Faune
HAYDN	Symphony
RAVEL	La Valse
MOUSSORGSKY-RAVEL	Pictures at an Exhibition
SCHUMANN	Symphony No. 4
SIBELIUS	Symphony No. 2
STRAUSS	Thus Spake Zarathustra
STRAVINSKY	Le Sacre du Printemps
Wagner	Vverture, "The Flying Dutchman; Prelude to Lohengrin" Prelude, "The Meistersingers";

35

THIS CLIPPING FROM MONTREAL, CAN.
GAZETTE

APR 22 1939

Berkshire Festival Announces Schedule

Stockbridge Mass. — Programmes by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Serge Ko[illegible] conductor, for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival the first two weeks in August, will include nine famous symphonies. Compositions to be played at Tanglewood range chronologically from Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 to the works of several contemporary composers.

One interesting specialty to be given in the first series of concerts will be Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with Richard Hale as narrator. This musical fairy tale, having an appeal to adults and children alike and included in a number of the orchestra's winter programmes, has been received with enthusiasm at every performance. Also from the modern school are Piston's Concerto for Orchestra and the Fifth Symphony by Sibelius.

Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 heads the list of compositions for the second series. Other works include Debussy's "L'Apres-midi d'un Faune," Ravel's "La Valse," Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," the Second Symphony by Sibelius.

Brahms, Mozart, Beethoven, Tchaikovsky, Haydn, Schumann, Richard Strauss and Wagner are represented in both series.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
UNion-REPUBLICAN

APR 23 1939

Berkshire Festival Announces Programs

Programs by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival the first two weeks in August, will include nine of the world's famous symphonies. Dr Koussevitzky's versatility at program-building is reflected in the wide range of compositions to be played at Tanglewood. Chronologically they range from Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No 3 to the works of several contemporary composers.

One interesting specialty to be given in the first series of concerts will be Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with Richard Hale as narrator. This musical fairy tale, having an appeal to adults and children alike and included in a number of the orchestra's winter programs, has been received with enthusiasm at every performance. Also from the modern school are Piston's concerto for orchestra and the Fifty symphony by Sibelius.

Beethoven's symphony No 2 heads the list of compositions for the second series. Other works include Debussy's. "L'Apres-midi d'un Faune," Ravel's "La Valse," Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," the Second symphony by Sibelius.

Brahms, Mozart, Beethoven, Tchaikovsky, Haydn, Schumann, Strauss and Wagner are represented in both series.

This will be the second season in the festival's music shed, built last year on the 200-acre estate overlooking Stockbridge bowl. Public subscriptions from many parts of the country, reflecting interest in the proposal to establish a great festival center in America, made the building possible. Already nearly half of the 5700 seats have been taken for the six concerts. This year, for the first time, all seats will be reserved. Complete details may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic festival, inc., Stockbridge.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
Democrat-Chronicle

APR 23 1939

Berkshire Festival Programs Selected

Programs by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbrildge, Mass., the first two weeks in August, will include nine of the world's famous symphonies. Chronologically they range from Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 to the works of contemporary composers.

From the modern school are Prokofieff's Peter and the Wolf with Richard Hale as narrator; Piston's Concerto for Orchestra and the Fifth Symphony by Sibelius.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

APR 28 1939

Symphony Fete To Include Nine Famous Pieces

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Announces Tanglewood Programs of Conductor Koussevitsky

Programs by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival the first two weeks in August, will include nine of the world's famous symphonies. Dr. Koussevitzky's versatility at program building is reflected in the wide range of compositions to be played at Tanglewood. Chronologically they range from Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 to the works of several contemporary composers.

One interesting specialty to be given in the first series of concerts will be Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf", with Richard Hale as narrator. This musical fairy tale, having an appeal to adults and children alike and included in a number of the orchestra's winter programs, has been received with enthusiasm at every performance. Also from the modern school are Piston's concerto for orchestra and the Fifth Symphony by Sibelius.

Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 heads the list of compositions for the second series. Other works include Debussy's "L'Apres-midi d'un Faune", Ravel's "La Valse", Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps", the Second Symphony by Sibelius.

Brahms, Mozart, Beethoven, Tchaikovsky, Haydn, Schumann, Strauss and Wagner are represented in both series.

All Seats Reserved

This will be the second season in the festival's music shed, built last year on the 220-acre estate overlooking Stockbridge bowl. Public subscriptions from many parts of the country, reflecting interest in the proposal to establish a great festival center in America, made the building possible. Already nearly half of the 5,700 seats have been taken for the six concerts. This year for the first time all seats will be reserved. Complete details may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

The programs by series will include the following: Series A—August 3, Thursday, 8:30 p. m.; August 5, Saturday, 8:30 p. m.; August 6, Sunday, 3:30 p. m.

Brandenburg Concerto No. 3..Bach
Symphony No. 7 ....Beethoven
Symphony No. 1 ....Brahms
Symphony in E Flat........Mozart
Concerto for Orchestra......Piston
"Peter and the Wolf"...Prokofieff
"Scheherzade" ..Rimsky-Korsakoff
Symphony No. 5 ....Sibelius
Symphony No. 4 ......Tchaikovsky

Series B—August 10, Thursday, 8:30 p. m.; August 12, Saturday, 8:30 p. m.; August 13, Sunday, 3:30 p. m.

Symphony No. 2 ....Beethoven
"L'Apres-midi d'un Faune"....... .... Debussy
Symphony ....Haydn
"La Valse" ....Ravel
"Pictures at an Exhibition" .... Moussorgsky-Ravel
Symphony No. 4 ....Schumann
Symphony No. 2 ....Sibelius
"Thus Spake Zarathustra"..Strauss
"Le Sacre du Printemps" .... Stravinsky
Overture, "The Flying Dutchman; Prelude to "Lohengrin"; Prelude, "The Meistersingers"; Siegfried's Rhine Journey .... Wagner

---

THIS CLIPPING FROM MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL

APR 30 1939

Programs Being Drafted for Berkshire Festival

The sixth annual Berkshire symphonic festival will be held between Aug. 3 and 13 at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston symphony in programs drawn [illegible] second and third Beethoven symphonies, the first and third Brahms, symphonies of Haydn and Mozart, Tchaikovsky's fourth, the Sibelius second and fifth, Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherezade," Debussy's "Apres-midi d'un Faun," Ravel's "La Valse," Wagnerian excerpts, Walter Piston's "Concerto for Orchestra," and others to be announced later.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PRESS
Northfield, Mass

MAY 5 - 1939

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Announced

Already nearly half of the 5700 seats have been taken for the six concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor to be played at Tanglewood, in the fine new music pavilion near Stockbridge in the Berkshires in the month of August. The program prodhced will range from Bachs Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 to the works of several contemporary composers.

One interesting specialty to be given in the first series of concerts will be Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with Richard Hale as narrator. Also from the modern school are Piston's Concerto for Orchestra and the Fifth Symphony by Sibelius.

Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 heads the list of compositions for the second series. Other works include Debussy's L'Apres-midi d'un Faune, Ravel's La Valse, Stravinsky's Le Sacre du Printemps, the Second Somphony by Sibelius.

Brahms, Mozart, Beethoven, Tohaikovsky, Haydn, Schumann, Strauss and Wagner are represented in both series.

This year for the first time all seats will be reserved. Complete details may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

The program is divided into two series and the dates are as follows:

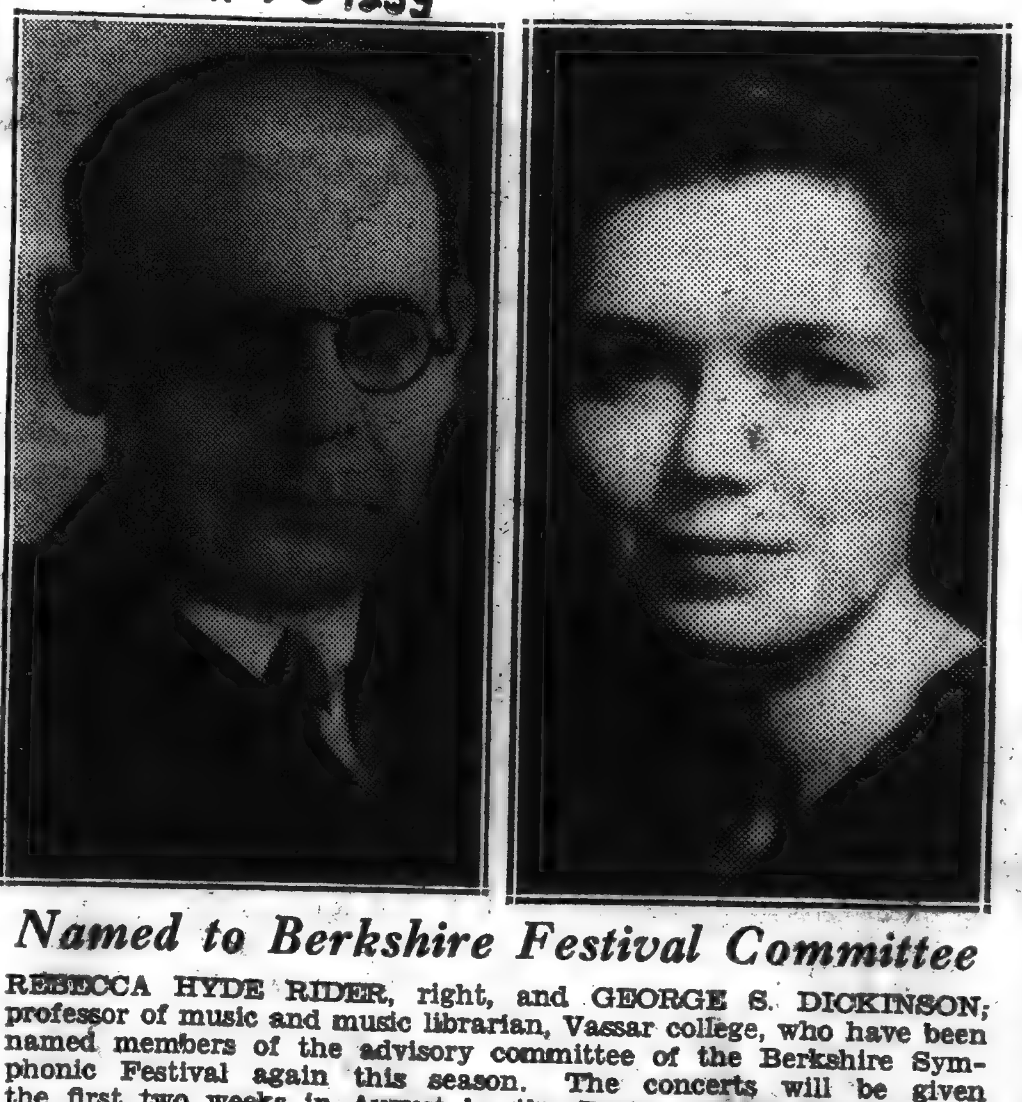
Series A—Aug. 3, Thursday, 8:30 p. m.; Aug. 5, Saturday, 8:30 p. m.; Aug. 6, Sunday, 3:30 p. m.

Series B—Aug. 10, Thursday, 8:30 p. m.; Aug. 12, Saturday, 8:30 p. m.; Aug. 13, Sunday, 3:30.

Tanglewood has become a great festival center and people attend these concerts from all parts of the country. Northfield music lovers have a real opportunity to attend.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
STAR-ENTERPRISE

MAY 18 1939



Named to Berkshire Festival Committee

REBECCA HYDE RIDER, right, and GEORGE S. DICKINSON, professor of music and music librarian, Vassar college, who have been named members of the advisory committee of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival again this season. The concerts will be given the first two weeks in August by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. A meeting of the advisory committee was held at the home of the president, Gertrude Robinson Smith, Stockbridge, this week. Dorothea Wheaton of Millbrook, also is a member of this committee.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL

MAY 9 - 1939

Berkshire Festival

Programs by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky, conductor, for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival the first two weeks in August, will include nine of the world's famous symphonies. Dr. Koussevitsky's versatility at program building is reflected in the wide range of compositions to be played at Tanglewood, in the Berkshires.

This will be the second season in the Festival's music shed, built last year on the 200-acre estate overlooking Stockbridge bowl. Public subscriptions from many parts of the country, reflecting interest in the proposal to establish a great festival center in America, made the building possible. Already, nearly half of the 5,700 seats have been taken for the six concerts. This year for the first time all seats will be reserved. Complete details may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

One interesting specialty to be given in the first series of concerts will be Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with Richard Hale as narrator.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

MAY 7 - 1939

* * *

PROGRAMS by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky conductor, for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival the first two weeks in August, will include nine of the world's famous symphonies. Dr. Koussevitsky's versatility at program building is reflected in the wide range of compositions to be played at Tanklewood. Chronologically they range from Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 to the works of several contemporary composers.

This will be the second season in the Festival's music shed, built last year on the 200-acre estate overlooking Stockbridge Bowl. Public subscriptions from many parts of the country, reflecting interest in the proposal to establish a great festival center in America, made the building possible. Already nearly half of the 5,700 seats have been taken for the six concerts. This year for the first time all seats will be reserved. Complete details may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

One interesting specialty to be given in the first series of concerts will be Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" with Richard Hale as narrator. •

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

MAY 19 1939

Berkshire Festival Committee.

Announcement has been made of the advisory committee for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts to be given the first two weeks in August by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Connecticut members of the committee are Mrs. Blanchard W. Means of Hartford, Mrs. Maurice M. Firuski of Salisbury, Mrs. David Goodnow of Norfolk, Mrs. Bertrand Peck of Torrington, and Mrs. Elizabeth C. T. Miller of Windsor.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SO. NORWALK, CONN.
SENTINEL

MAY 19 1939

SET CONCERTS FOR BERKSHIRE

Boston Symphony Orchestra To Give Concerts Early In August

Berkshire symphonic festival activities were on in earnest this week in anticipation of the concerts to be given the first two weeks in August by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

Following a visit to the Berkshires, Dr. Koussevitzky announced that he had cancelled his plans to go to Europe this summer and, instead, will spend several weeks at Saratoga Springs, N. Y. It is likely that for a period before and after the festival he will take a house in Stockbridge or Lenox.

The advisory committee, comprising community chairman from all parts of the country met at the home of the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, in Stockbridge this week. The resignation of Mrs. George W. Edman of Pittsfield, Mass., as chairman was announced and it was decided to have the work of the chairman taken over by the office. Miss Robinson Smith will preside at the meetings of the committee. The committee also received instructions for opening the subscription campaign on June 15.

Although hundreds of music lovers have taken out memberships and many subscriptions have been received this spring, chairmen were advised that there are plenty of seats available in the new music shed at "Tanglewood" for those who wish to hear the concerts.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
Sunday
Union & Republican

MAY 21 1939

Boston Symphony School

Announcement was made last summer, in connection with the annual Berkshire festival of the Boston Symphony orchestra, of a projected summer school of music, in connection with the festival, giving advanced students an opportunity to study composition, orchestration, conducting and the technic of orchestral instruments under the distinguished specialists of Boston's famous organization. This project has now been worked out in greater detail and some features of it are described by Dr Koussevitzky in an interview in the Boston Herald.

The plan will not take effect until the summer of 1940, but its scope has been enlarged by the lengthening of the session to six weeks and the inclusion of a general course in appreciation, material for which will be provided by orchestra, a chorus and soloists. This should appeal to many summer visitors in Berkshire and will not interfere with the special instruction for advanced students and professional musicians from all parts of the country which was the starting point of the project.

Both the summer festival, now housed in a weather-proof music shed, and the proposed school are in line with the movement to make fuller use of the talent and knowledge assembled in Boston through its symphony orchestra. This was the first permanent orchestra in the country, the previous practice having been to engage musicians who depended on other engagements for a living.

Though the munificence of its founder, Maj Higginson, the Boston orchestra put the playing of symphonies on a professional footing through the musical season, but there still remained the problem of the long summers. Some of the members used to go to Europe, others took jobs at summer hotels. But summer engagements are now scarce, and Dr Koussevitzky's decision to omit his annual visit to Europe shows that this avenue is also pretty well closed. The orchestra's beautiful summer home at Tanglewood not only solves the summer problem but gives a chance to expand the cultural mission of this long famous array of musicians.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

MAY 21 1939

Koussevitzky Outlines List For Berkshires

Nine Symphonies Will Be Played in Sixth Event of Series in August

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival has announced the principal works to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction in the sixth annual festival next August in the Music Shed on the Tanglewood estate near Lenox, Mass. Works scheduled for the first series, Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon, August 3, 5 and 6, include the following symphonies: Beethoven's seventh, Brahms's first, Mozart's thirty-ninth (E flat); Sibelius's fifth and Tchaikovsky's fourth. Other compositions announced are Walter Piston's concerto for orchestra, Bach's third Brandenburg Concerto, Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" and Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherazade."

The symphonies announced for the second series, August 10, 12 and 13, are Beethoven's second, Schumann's fourth and Sibelius's second. Other major works in this series will be Debussy' "Afternoon of a Faun," Ravel's "La Valse," Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition," a Haydn symphony, Strauss's "Also sprach Zarathustra," Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps" and, from the Wagnerian repertoire, the preludes to "The Flying Dutchman," "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger" and the Rhine Journey from "Götterdämmerung."

Richard Hale, who was the narrator in "Peter and the Wolf" this season here and in Boston, will again take part in this work at Lenox. This will be the fourth festival of the series to be played by the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky, and the second to be held in the new Music Shed. Full information may be obtained from the Berkshire Festival office in Stockbridge, Mass.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

MAY 23 1939

PHS Students Would Rather "Swing" to a Goodman Tune Than Listen to Koussevitsky

Music addicts at Pittsfield High School would rather have a hot jam session with Benny Goodman furnishing musical inspiration than to delve into deeper stuff with Serge Koussevitsky and his Boston Symphony Orchestra.

At least that's the verdict rendered by 100 typical Pittsfield High students who chose between the delights of Goodman and Koussevitsky in an informal poll. Sixty-four chose the "King of Swing" while 36 cast their lot with the great interpreter of symphonies.

Goodmanites in all three classes favored him because they "understand swing." Koussevitsky's followers enjoyed his concerts because they felt his music is more lasting. Of course, this group added, "swing is all right. Were not against it at all." A few claimed that a choice between the two is all a matter of their prevailing mood at the moment.

Boys proved the most ardent swing fans while girls showed a greated liking for the classics. The boys' interest in concert music increased with their progress in school, and in the senior class trailed the girls by one in this group.

Interest in learning more about the classics came mostly from the junior class where most of the students evinced a desire to inform themselves. The sophomores showed the least desire to further their knowledge, while the senior class showed little more than mediocre interest in this line, claiming that senior activities kept them from taking music courses given by Miss Harriet Johnson at Central each Wednesday.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

MAY 29 1939

Festival Articles To Appear In Magazines

Illustrated articles about the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Tanglewood, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, are to appear in early issues of Town and Country, Vogue, Ladies' Home Journal, Yankee Magazine and the Hudson Valley Magazine, according to notices received by the Festival office. Already newspaper articles have been received from various parts of the country, including Florida, Montana and Canada.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

MAY 30 1939

Music Festival Starts June 15

The subscription campaign for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Stockbridge, will begin June 15. Announcements of the program, which always interest prospective purchasers of season or single concert tickets, have been announced. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky, will play in the first series, August 3, 5 and 6, Bach's "Brandenburg" Concerto, No. 3, Beethoven's seventh, Brahms' first, Mozart's Symphony in E flat, Piston's Concerto for orchestra, Prokofiess's "Peter and the Wolf" Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scherezade," Sibelius' Symphony No. 5 and Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 4.

In the second series will be Symphony No. 2, Beethoven; "Prelude a l'Apres d'un Faune," Debussy; a symphony by Haydn; "Pictures at an Exhibition," Moussorgsky-Ravel; "LaValse," Ravel; Symphony No. 4, Schumann; Symphony No. 2, Sibelius; "Also Sprach Zarathustra" Strauss; "LeSacre du Printemps," Stravinsky and from "Wagner, the overture to "The Flying Dutchman," prelude to "Lohengrin," prelude to "The Meistersingers" and "Siegfried's Rhine Journey."

All seats in the music shed will be reserved this season. Subchairmen will have tickets for sale and seats will be assigned in order of application. Mrs. Dudley M. Diggs is the subchairman for Schenectady.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

MAY 22 1939

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL PREPARES FOR SUMMER

Berkshire Symphonic Festival activities were on in earnest this week in anticipation of the concerts to be given the first two weeks in August by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

Following a visit to the Berkshires, Dr. Koussevitzky announced that he had cancelled his plans to go to Europe this summer and, instead, will spend several weeks at Saratoga Springs N. Y. It is likely that for a period before and after the Festival he will take a house in Stockbridge or Lenox.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

MAY 22 1939

Moment Musicale

By Maud L Welin

THE NOTT TERRACE A Cappella Choir, under the direction of Rufus Wheeler, gave a concert at Bennington College last week and the 90 young singers were entertained at dinner following. In the evening a student program was given by the college. Included on the Schenectady's singers' program was an arrangement of Robert McBride's for male voices, clarinet and piano, "Hot stuff." Mr. McBride, who played the clarinet part, will be remembered here by those who attended the Yaddo Festivals, for the modern spirit of his amusing "Workout for clarinet and piano," which was featured, among other of his compositions, on the Festival program.

BERKSHIRE Symphonic Festival activities were on in earnest this week in anticipation of the concerts to be given the first two weeks in August by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Following a visit to the Berkshires, Dr. Koussevitzky announced that he had cancelled his plans to go to Europe this Summer and will spend several weeks at Saratoga Springs. He is expected to take a house in Stockbridge or Lenox for a period before and after the Festival.

Although hundreds have taken memberships and many subscriptions have been received this Spring, there are plenty of seats available in the new music shed at Tanglewood for those who wish to hear the concerts. Trustees met last week to hear of the many improvements being made to the property. These include the laying of tile to drain the large parking area, hauling in hundreds of tons of gravel to fill in low spots in the field, improvements to roads, erection of a steel tower for improved lighting of the parking area and painting of the interior of the shed.

The gardens, which no one should miss who attends the Festival, are receiving their share of attention to be in readiness for the many visitors who flock to Tanglewood before the concerts. Complete information about programs or other details may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

THE EIGHTH choir festival in Albany will climax a week of music in the Cathedral on Saturday, May 27. The programs starting on Monday, May 22, will include an orchestra night, a choral night, a chamber music night, an American Guild of Organists' night, and on Friday night there will be Festival organ recital by Thomas Matthews of St. Martin-in-the-Field, Philadelphia, formerly assistant to Norman Coke-Jephcott at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York. Prominent Albany and Schenectady musicians are co-operating with J. William Jones, director of the Festival, in making this annual event representative of the Capital district's music life.

Ten choirs have registered for the Guild Service on Thursday evening at 8:30. These include the First Church, Reformed, Albany; First Presbyterian, Schenectady; Trinity Methodist Episcopal, Albany; the First Methodist Episcopal of Schenectady, Scotia, Delmar, Canajoharie and Catskill; the First Presbyterian of Albany and St. Luke's Episcopal, Albany.

The combined choirs will be directed by J. Stanley Lansing. The anthems and hyms will be played by Helen Henshaw. Mary Richards will offer the organ Prelude. The Offertory will be played by Frederick Chapman, the Postlude by Gerald Bliss.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION
MAY 28 1939

In The World of Music

By Edgar S. Van Olinda

Arrangements Begun for Berkshire Music Festival

BERKSHIRE Symphonic Festival activities were on in earnest last week in anticipation of the concerts to be given the first two weeks in August by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

Following a visit to the Berkshires, Dr. Koussevitzky announced that he had cancelled his plans to go to Europe this summer and, instead, will spend several weeks at Saratoga Springs. It is likely that for a period before and after the Festival he will take a house in Stockbridge or Lenox.

The advisory committee, comprising community chairmen from all parts of the country, met at the home of the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, in Stockbridge, last week. The resignation of Mrs. George W. Edman, of Pittsfield, Mass., as chairman was announced, and it was decided to have the work of the chairman taken over by the office. Miss Robinson Smith will preside at the meetings of the committee. The committee also received instructions for opening the subscription campaign on June 15.

Although hundreds of music lovers have taken out memberships and many subscriptions have been received this spring, chairmen were advised that there are plenty of seats available in the new music shed at "Tanglewood" for those who wish to hear the concerts.

Trustees also met last week and heard about the many improvements being made to the physical property at Tanglewood. These improvements include the laying of hundreds of feet of tile to drain the large parking area, hauling in hundreds of tons of gravel to fill in low spots in the parking field, improvements to roads, erection of a steel tower for improved lighting of the parking area, painting of the interior of the shed.

The gardens, too, are receiving their share of attention, to be in readiness for the many visitors who flock to Tanglewood before the concerts. Complete information about programs and other details may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

* * *

Berkshire Symphonic Festival

Berkshire Symphonic Festival activities are on in earnest in anticipation of the concerts to be given the first two weeks in August by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

Dr. Koussevitzky, instead of going to Europe this summer, will spend several weeks at Saratoga Springs, N. Y. It is likely that for a time before and after the festival he will take a house in Stockbridge or Lenox.

The advisory committee, comprising community chairmen from all parts of the country, met at the home of the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, in Stockbridge last week. The resignation of Mrs. George W. Edman of Pittsfield, Mass., as chairman was announced and it was decided to have the work of the chairman taken over by the office. Miss Robinson Smith will preside at the meetings of the committee. The committee also received instructions for opening the subscription campaign on June 15.

Although hundreds of music lovers have taken out memberships and many subscriptions have been received this spring, chairmen were advised that there are plenty of seats available in the new music shed at "Tanglewood."

* * *

Members of the advisory committee who will be glad to furnish information about the concerts (Aug. 3, 5, 6, 10, 12, and 13) are: Mrs. Theodore R. Plunkett and Mrs. James Cashin of Adams; Mrs. S. D. Coding of Amherst; Mrs. Alan Craig, Bangor, Me.; Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Smith of Bennington, Vt.; Mrs. Otto Luening of Bennington College; Mrs. Carl Dreyfus, M. A. DeWitt Howe, Mrs. Henry K. White, Mrs. William Penn Cresson, Mrs. Robert Brandegee, and Mrs. Walter Atherton of Boston; Harlie E. Wilson of Burlington, Vt.; Miss Annabelle Terrell of Chatham, N. Y.; Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton; Mrs. Doris Adams Hunn of Des Moines, Iowa; Mrs. George L. Taylor of Great Barrington; Mrs. Mary Robbins Champney of Greenfield; Mrs. Blanchard W. Means of Hartford, Conn.; Mrs. Alexander Bloch of Hillsdale, N. Y.; Miss Alma Haydock of Hinsdale; Mrs. Charles Giddings of Housatonic; Mrs. Otis W. Bradley of Hudson, N. Y.; Mr. James E. Leath of Kinderhook, N. Y.; Mrs. Maurice M. Firuski of Salisbury, Conn.; Miss Margery Whiting of Lanesboro; Mrs. Harry Adams of Canaan; Miss Estelle Hutchinson of Lenox; Prof. Lewis J. Hathaway of Middlebury, Vt.; Miss Dorothea Wheaton of Millbrook, N. Y.; Mrs. Clifford W. Elling of Montclair, N. J.; Mrs. Earle Stafford of Monterey; Mrs. Norton Perkins of New Boston; Mrs. Edward T. Thaw of Dublin, N. H.; Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Keene, N. H.; Mrs. Justin Godchaux of New Orleans, La.; Mrs. David Goodnow of Norfolk; Mrs. Shelley W. Potter of North Adams; Miss Dorothy M. Bement of Northampton; Miss Rebecca H. Rider and Prof. George Dickinson of Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; Miss Inez Eldridge of Richmond; Mrs. Dudley Diggs of Schenectady, N. Y.; Mrs. Hollis Carlisle of Springfield; Mrs. John C. Lynch of Stockbridge; Mrs. Cornelia Colton Hollister of Toledo, Ohio; Sir Ernest MacMillan of Toronto; Mrs. Bertrand Peck of Torrington; Mrs. Archie Bray of Troy; Mrs. Harry C. Holloway of Turingham; Mrs. Noah Nason of Westboro; Mrs. Paul Mackie of Westfield; Elmer Smithies of Westfield River; Charles L. Safford and Roderick Danaher of Williamstown; Mrs. Elizabeth C. T. Miller of Windsor; Mrs. Frank London of Woodstock, N. Y.; Mrs. Frank C. Smith and Mrs. Frederick Williams of Worcester.

* * *

Trustees also met this week and heard about the many improvements being made to the physical property at Tanglewood. These improvements include the laying of hundreds of feet of tile to drain the large parking area, hauling in hundreds of tons of gravel to fill in low spots in the parking field, improvements to roads, erection of a steel tower for improved lighting of the parking area, and painting of the interior of the shed.

The gardens, too, are receiving their share of attention to be in readiness for the many visitors who flock to Tanglewood before the concerts.

Complete information about programs and other details may be obtained by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BURLINGTON, VT.
FREE PRESS
MAY 31 1939

Downes To Lecture For Berkshire Symphonic Festival

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., May 30.—Olin Downes, music editor of The New York Times, will return for the third consecutive year as lecturer for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, whose concerts will be given at the new Tanglewood music shed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, August 3, 5, 6, 10, 12 and 13.

This year, Mr. Downes will give his lectures with the orchestra at the Tanglewood shed at the two Saturday morning rehearsals, extended as a privilege to members and patrons as well as public high school pupils in Berkshire county. There will be about 2,500 persons in the audience.

Both Mr. Downes and Dr. Koussevitzky are enthusiastic over the plan, convinced that it will be an interesting departure from other years and that music lovers will obtain more first hand information of the character of the symphonies to be played at the festival. The plan corresponds to one pursued by Mr. Downes at his course at the Brooklyn Academy.

As an added attraction at festival time, the Junior League of Pittsfield is arranging a series of lectures to be given at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield by Charles L. Safford, director of music at Williams College. Mr. Safford, graduate of Williams and member of the faculty 15 years, is a member of the festival's advisory committee. In charge of the lectures will be Mrs. Zenas Crane Colt, chairman of the league's arts and interest committee. There will be no admission fee for the lectures. The public is invited.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE
JUN 2 - 1939

Music Reviewer to Lecture at This Year's Berkshire Festival.

Olin Downes, music reviewer for the New York Times, will return for the third consecutive year as lecturer for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, whose concerts will be given at the new Tanglewood music shed by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, Aug. 3, 5, 6, 10, 12 and 13.

This year, Mr. Downes will give his lectures with the orchestra at the Tanglewood shed at the two Saturday morning rehearsals, extended as a privilege to members and patrons as well as public high school pupils in Berkshire county. There will be about 2500 persons in the audience.

Both Mr. Downes and Dr. Koussevitzky are enthusiastic over the plan, convinced that it will be an interesting departure from other years and that music lovers will obtain more first hand information of the character of the symphonies to be played at the festival. The plan corresponds to one pursued by Mr. Downes at his course at the Brooklyn academy.

As an added attraction at Festival time, the Junior league of Pittsfield is arranging a series of lectures to be given at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield by Charles L. Safford, director of music at Williams college. Mr. Safford, graduate of Williams and a member of the faculty 15 years, is a member of the festival's advisory committee. In charge of the lectures will be Mrs. Zenas Crane Holt, chairman of the league's arts and interest committee. There will be no admission fee for the lectures.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR
JUN 3 - 1939

Downes to Lecture At Berkshire Festival

Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times, will return for the third consecutive year as lecturer for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival whose concerts will be given at the new Tanglewood music shed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, August 3, 5, 6, 10, 12 and 13. This season Mr. Downes will give his lectures with the orchestra at the Tanglewood shed at the two Saturday morning rehearsals, extended as a privilege to members and patrons as well as public high school pupils in Berkshire County. Both Mr. Downes and Dr. Koussevitzky are enthusiastic over the plan, convinced that it will give music lovers more first-hand information on the symphonies to be played at the Festival.

As an added attraction at festival time, the Junior League of Pittsfield is arranging a series of lectures to be given at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield by Charles I. Safford, director of music at Williams College. Mr. Safford, a graduate of Williams and member of the faculty for 15 years, is a member of the festival's Advisory Committee. There will be no admission fee for the Pittsfield lectures, which are open to the public.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News
JUN 3 - 1939

Downes Due At Music Festival

OLIN Downes, music editor of the New York Times, will return for the third consecutive year as lecturer for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, whose concerts will be given at the new Tanglewood music shed, Stockbridge, Mass., by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, Aug. 3, 5, 10, 12 and 13.

This year, Mr. Downes will give his lectures at the two Saturday morning rehearsals, extended as a privilege to members and patrons as well as public high school pupils in Berkshire County. About 2,500 persons are expected to attend.

Both Mr. Downes and Dr. Koussevitzky are enthusiastic over the plan, convinced that it will be an interesting departure from other years and that music lovers will obtain more first-hand information of the character of the symphonies to be played at the Festival. The plan corresponds to one persued by Mr. Downes at his course at the Brooklyn Academy.

As an added attraction at Festival time, the Junior League of Pittsfield is arranging a series of lectures at the Berkshire Museum, Pittsfield, by Charles L. Safford, director of music at Williams College. Mr. Safford, graduate of Williams and member of the faculty 15 years, is a member of the Festival's advisory committee. In charge of the lectures will be Mrs. Zenas Crane Colt, chairman of the League's arts and interest committee. There will be no admission fee for the lectures. The public is invited.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR

JUN 3 - 1939

OLIN DOWNES TO TALK AGAIN AT FESTIVAL

Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times, will return for the third consecutive year as lecturer for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, whose concerts will be given at the new Tanglewood music shed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, Aug. 3, 5, 6, 10, 12 and 13.

This year, Mr. Downes will give his lectures with the orchestra at the Tanglewood shed at the two Saturday morning rehearsals, extended as a privilege to members and patrons as well as public high school pupils in Berkshire County. There will be about 2,500 persons in the audience.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

JUN [illegible]

OLIN DOWNES, music editor of the New York Times, will return for the third consecutive year as lecturer for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, whose concerts will be given at the new Tanglewood music shed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky, conductor, August 3, 5, 6, 10, 12 and 13.

This year, Mr. Downes will give his lectures with the orchestra at the Tanglewood shed at the two Saturday morning rehearsals. Privileged to attend will be members and patrons as well as high school pupils in Berkshire county. There will be about 2,500 persons in the audience.

Both Mr. Downes and Dr. Koussevitsky are enthusiastic over the plan, convinced that it will be an interesting departure from other years and that music lovers will obtain more first hand information of the character of the symphonies to be played at the Festival. The plan corresponds to one pursued by Mr. Downes at his course at the Brooklyn academy.

As an added attraction at Festival time, the Junior League of Pittsfield is arranging a series of lectures to be given at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield by Charles L. Safford, director of music at Williams college. Mr. Safford, graduate of Williams and member of the faculty 15 years, is a member of the Festival's advisory committee. In charge of the lectures will be Mrs. Zenas Crane Colt, chairman of the league's arts and interest committee. There will be no admission fee for the lectures. The public is invited.

* * *

DR. ARTUR RODZINSKI, conductor of the Cleveland orchestra who has a summer home in the heart of the Berkshires just outside Stockbridge, will turn over his home to Dr. Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra for the period of the festival. Dr. Koussevitsky was a recent guest of the Cleveland orchestra's leader and greatly admired "White Goat Farms," as it is called. Dr. Rodzinski immediately placed it at the disposal of the Boston orchestra's conductor while the owner acts as guest conductor at the Hollywood Bowl, California, Ravinia Park in Chicago and at Silvermine, Conn. Dr. Rodzinski, with his wife, has just completed the power-tractor-plowing of the land on his estate and on his return in September will have the experience of harvesting the results of this month's handiwork.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DAVENPORT, IA.
DEMOCRAT-LEADER

JUN 1 8 1939

SERGE KOUSSEVITSKY

. . . conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra who has been vacationing in this country leaves on the Normandie on Monday June 26 for a month in Europe. On his return he will begin rehearsals for the Boston Symphony's sixth annual appearance at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. And at "Tanglewood" the scene of the festival there is great activity. The new music shed is complete and has been painted and the parking area is ready for the thousands of visitors. Hotels in Stockbridge and Lenox are booked to capacity for the duration of the festival the first two week-ends in August.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUN [illegible] - 1939

As a new departure at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival to be held in the Tanglewood music-shed near Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 3, 5, 6, 10, 12 and 13, Olin Downes, music critic of THE NEW YORK TIMES, who has been engaged as lecturer for the third consecutive year, will present his lectures at the two Saturday morning rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky. It is believed that by this plan music lovers will obtain greater first-hand information of the symphonies scheduled for the festival. Attendance at this brace of events has been extended as a privilege to members and patrons as well as to public high school pupils in Berkshire County.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

JUN 11 1939

Downes and Safford Lecture in Berkshire

Talks To Be in Connection With August Festival

As in previous seasons of this series Olin Downes, music critic of "The New York Times," will lecture in connection with the Berkshire Symphonic Festival next August in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., but, instead of giving separate talks, he will give his lectures with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky at its two Saturday morning rehearsals on Aug. 5 and 12 at Tanglewood. The lectures will be open to members and patrons of the festival and to pupils of public high schools in Berkshire County.

Charles L. Safford, who is retiring this month from the position of director of music at Williams College, which he has held since 1923, will give a free series of lectures during the festival period at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield under the auspices of the Pittsfield Junior League. The festival concerts will be held on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons, Aug. 3, 5, 6, 10, 12 and 13.

THIS CLIPPING FROM PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER

JUN 2 5 1939

American Salzburg To Open in August

BOSTON, June 24.—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, an American Salzburg, will begin this summer at Stockbridge Aug. 3. All programs will be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of its noted conductor, Sergei Koussevitsky. Divided into two sections, the Festival will hold Series A Aug. 3, 5 and 6 and Series B Aug. 10, 12 and 13.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUN 14 1939

RENOVATE SHED AT TANGLEWOOD

In Preparation for Concerts in August

GROUNDS DRAINED

Dr. Koussevitzky Will Return July 26 to Begin Rehearsals for Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Tanglewood, Berkshire hills home of the Boston Symphony orchestra between Lenox and Stockbridge, is undergoing a thorough renovating the Berkshire Symphonic Festival trustees announced today. Considerable interior painting at the new music shed has been completed and the huge parking area is being drained and groomed for the thousands of visitors who will gather there in August for the six concerts to be presented by the orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky.

Dr. Koussevitsky sailed on the Normandie today after a month's vacation spent at Saratoga Springs, N. Y. and Lake Memphramagog and will return from his annual trip to Europe about July 26 to begin rehearsals with his orchestra.

It was also announced today that subscriptions for the concerts are considerably ahead of last year but that there are still many good seats left. All 5,700 seats in the music shed will be reserved this year. Community chairmen met today with the Festival president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, to plan the subscription campaign which will continue until the final concert.

Several hotels and inns in Stockbridge and Lenox are already booked to capacity for the concert period, but there are still accommodations to be had in these towns and the neighboring communities.

THIS CLIPPING FROM Sun REPUBLICAN
Springfield Mass

JUN 1 8 1939

COMING FESTIVAL LATE IN AUGUST

Koussevitzky to Conduct Sixth Annual Series—Berkshire Workers Busy

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, rested and refreshed from his month's vacation at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., and Lake Memphremagog on the Vermont-Canadian border, sailed recently on the Normandie from New York. He will return on the Champlain July 26 to rehearse with the orchestra for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival.

The trip to Europe, long an annual custom for the maestro, was postponed in May because of the uncertainty of conditions abroad.

At Lake Memphremagog, Dr Koussevitzky was the guest of Prof Pitirin Sorokin of Harvard university.

Festival trustees have announced that there is much atcivity at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, where six concerts will be given by the orchestra the first two weekends in August. Considerable interior painting at the new music shed has been completed and the huge parking area is being drained and groomed for the thousands of visitors who will use it.

It was also announced that subscriptions for the concerts are considerably ahead of last year but there are plenty of good seats left. All 5700 seats in them usic shed will be reserved this year. Community chairmen have met with the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, to plan the subscription campaign which will continue until the final concert.

Many music lovers heeding the advice of the festival office made their hotel reservations early. Several hotels and inns at Stockbridge and Lenox are already booked to capacity but there are still accommodations to be had in these towns and the neighboring communities of Great Barrington, Pittsfield, Dalton, Lee, and West Stockbridge. Complete information about the concerts and accommodations may be obtained by writing to the festival office in Stockbridge.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS

JUN 15 1939

Preparing Tanglewood For Berkshire Concerts

Special to Newark News.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass.—There is a great deal of activity at Tanglewood, near here, where six concerts will be given the first two week-ends in August by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The interior of the new music shed of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is being painted and the parking area is being drained and groomed for the thousands of music lovers expected at the sixth annual festival.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, sailed this week for his annual trip to Europe and will return in July to rehearse the orchestra for the festival concerts.

All 5,700 seats in the music shed will be reserved this year.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

JUN 16 1939

Large Audiences Anticipated at Berkshire Music Festival.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, rested and refreshed from his month's vacation at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., and Lake Memphremagog on the Vermont-Canadian border, sailed a few days ago on the Normandie from New York. He will return on the Champlain July 26 to rehearse with the orchestra for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The trip to Europe, long an annual custom for the maestro, was postponed in May because of the uncertainty of conditions abroad. At Lake Memphremagog, Dr. Koussevitzky was the guest of Prof. Pitirin Sorokin of Harvard university.

Festival trustees announce that there is a great deal of activity at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, where six concerts will be given the first two week-ends in August. Considerable interior painting at the new music shed has been completed and the huge parking area is being drained and groomed for the thousands of visitors who will use it. It was also announced that subscriptions for the concerts are considerably ahead of last year but there are plenty of good seats left. All 5700 seats in the music shed will be reserved this year. Many music lovers heeding the advice of the festival office, made their hotel reservations early. Several hotels and inns in Stockbridge and Lenox are already booked to capacity but there are still accommodations to be had in these towns and the neighboring communities of Great Barrington, Pittsfield, Dalton, Lee, and West Stockbridge.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

JUN 18 1939

Berkshire Festival

Koussevitzky Back July 26 to Begin Rehearsals

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, sailed last [illegible] for a short stay abroad, and will return on the Champlain on July 26 to begin rehearsals with the Boston Symphony for its six concerts in the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The concerts, as already announced, will be held on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons, Aug. 3, 5, 6, 10, 12 and 13.

Advance subscriptions have come in in larger numbers than at this time a year ago, but many good seats are still available. All of the 5,700 seats in the Music Shed will be reserved. The painting of the interior of the semi-outdoor auditorium has been completed and the parking area is being drained and groomed. The office of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, advising intending visitors to make early reservations, reports that full information about the accommodations available in the district can be had by writing to this office at Stockbridge, Mass.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEWARK, N. J.
CALL

39

JUN 25 1939

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Time Is Set

BOSTON—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival. an American Salzburg, will begin this summer at Stockbridge August 3, according to Robert Mathews, manager of the American Express travel service, who reports that all programs will be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of its noted conductor, Serge Koussevitsky. Divided into two sections, the festival will hold Series A August 3, 5 and 6, and Series B August 10, 12 and 13.

Programs will be selected from the works of the greatest composers, including Beethoven, Brahms, Mozart, Tchaikovsky, Debussy, Wagner and many others. All performances will be given in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUN 26 1939

Leaders in Music Visit 'Tanglewood'

Stockbridge, Mass. — Distinguished visitors are coming daily to "Tanglewood," between Lenox and Stockbridge, to inspect the permanent home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the music shed dedicated last summer by the Boston Symprony Orchestra. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

Many of the visitors are coming to the Berkshires on a side trip from the New York World's Fair and plan to return for the six concerts to be given the first two weeks in August by the Boston Symphony.

The most distinguished guest recently was Arthur Bliss of London, England, well-known composer and conductor. He and his family are guests of Mrs. Bliss' uncle, Bernhard Hoffman, and Mrs. Hoffman in Stockbridge. Mr. and Mrs. Bliss expect to be here for the concerts.

Visiting Mr. and Mrs. Bliss over the weekend was Sir Adrian Cedric Boult, director of music for the British Broadcasting Corporation since 1930. He was accompanied by Dr. Davidson, director of music at Harvard.

Persons planning to attend the concerts in August are urged to communicate with the Festival office at Stockbridge as soon as possible to avoid disappointment in procuring tickets.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

News

Norwalk Wis.

JUN 30 1939

Hawthorne's Home

Tanglewood, the estate at Stockbridge, Mass, where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived, was deeded to the Boston symphony as a permanent home several years ago. It is here that the annual Berkshire Symphonic festivals are held.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

FORDS, N. J.
BEACON
6/30/39

Hawthorne's Home

Tanglewood, the estate at Stockbridge, Mass, where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived, was deeded to the Boston symphony as a permanent home several years ago. It is here that the annual Berkshire Symphonic festivals are held.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SALEM, N. J.
WEEKLY SUNBEAM

JUL 12 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 1 - 1939

Music:

~~Why~~ Tanglewood Is a Festival

By CARL E. LINDSTROM

In a retrospect of the several years that the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been identified with the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, the element which stands out above all others is the number of criterion performances.

Literally there is no criterion in music or any of the arts, but with the symphonic masterpieces which are repeated so often in the concert halls, certain performances will always stand as peaks of artistic achievement. The words model and pattern will not do, for they signify nothing in so fluid a medium as music. These peak performances are experiences, not to be duplicated except as memory restores them.

All minds will not agree but each, at the mention of such a work as the Fifth Symphony, will recall a particular interpretation, perhaps Koussevitzky's, or Toscanini's or Stokowski's, and say: "That is the Fifth Symphony!"

It has been possible to exclaim at Tanglewood: That is the Daphnis and Chloe Suite—that is the Pathetique—and that is the Brahms First. Beethoven's Pastorale in two performances has not sounded either vacuous or long. In fact, its tones now conjure the sun-distilled aroma of the Hawthorne pines, and the drone of Berkshire locusts is as much a part of the score as though Beethoven had composed their pedal point.

There is no need to recite the outstanding performances at Stockbridge, but it is worth noting that the programs for the two series in August show a large number of works for which Dr. Koussevitzky is already famous. To hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra play the Fifty Symphony of Sibelius is worth traveling many more miles than Hartford finds itself from Tanglewood, and the same may be said of the Sibelius Second which is also to be given.

Prokofieff's amusing suite, "Peter and the Wolf," was the hit of the Pension Fund concert at Symphony Hall last winter and it was hailed with delight at New York concerts. Ravel's La Valse is almost the property of Koussevitzky and he makes of it a coruscating gem.

"Peter and the Wolf," by the way, was reviewed in The Times after its first Symphony Hall performance some time before even New York and Brooklyn discovered it. Whether it was written for children or not is something about which only those can be sure who have not yet made its acquaintance. The piece could very well be symbolical, especially the conclusion where you hear the live duck quacking in the wolf's belly. The big bad wolf, you see, mes enfants, is merely pretense and things which it attempts to swallow have a way of showing through.

Whether one's favorite be Mozart's E flat, Beethoven's Seventh or the Wagner standbys, experience warrants the expectation that they are to be recreated in forgettable lineaments. That, after all, is what makes a Festival of the Tanglewood concerts. It is not merely a lovely outdoor setting, not just a great orchestra repeating itself, not just an aesthetic snack between seasons, but a series of programs, comprising for the most part familiar classics, performed in such a way as to give us a new criterion.

The program by days are printed herewith:

Series A

THURSDAY, Aug. 3, at 8:30:

Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G major	Bach
"Scheherazade," Symphonic Suite	Rimsky-Korsakov
Symphony No. 1 in C minor, Op 68	Brahms

SATURDAY, Aug. 5, at 8:30:

Concerto for Orchestra	Piston
Symphony No. 5 in E flat major	Sibelius
Symphony No. 7 in A major	Beethoven

SUNDAY, Aug. 6, at 3:30:

Symphony in E flat major	Mozart
"Peter and the Wolf"	Prokofieff
Symphony No. 4 in F minor	Tschaikowsky

Series B

THURSDAY, Aug. 10, at 8:30:

Symphony No. 2 in D major	Beethoven
"Also Sprach Zarathustra," Tone Poem	Strauss
"Pictures at an Exhibition"	Moussorgsky-Ravel

SATURDAY, Aug. 12, at 8:30:

Symphony in B flat, No. 102	Haydn
"Le Sacre du Printemps"	Stravinsky
Overture to "Der Fliegende Hollander" Prelude to "Lohengrin" Bacchanale from "Tannhauser" Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg"	Wagner

SUNDAY, Aug. 13, at 3:30:

Symphony No. 4 in D minor	Schumann
Prelude a "L'Apres-midi d'un Faune"	Debussy
"LaValse"	Ravel
Symphony No. 2 in D major	Sibelius

THIS CLIPPING FROM MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL

JUL 2 - 1939

Berkshire Festival in August

The Berkshire symphonic festival announces that the Boston symphony orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky will give six concerts during the sixth annual festival at Tanglewood, in Stockbridge, Mass., between Aug. 3 and 13. The aim of the festival is to create a musical center at Stockbridge in 1940.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 2 - 1939

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL GIVES OUT PROGRAMS

Boston Symphony Announces Details for Six Concerts

Detailed programs of the six concerts of the Berkshire Festival to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conductor, at Stockbridge, Mass., beginning on Aug. 3, were announced yesterday as follows:

Thursday, Aug. 3, 8:30 P. M.: Bach's Brandenburg Concerto, No. 3, in G major; "Scheherazade," by Rimsky-Korsakoff, and Brahms's First symphony.

Saturday, Aug. 5, 8:30 P. M.: Concerto for Orchestra by Piston; the Sibelius Fifth symphony, and the Beethoven Seventh symphony.

Sunday, Aug. 6, 3:30 P. M.: Mozart E flat symphony, "Peter and the Wolf," by Prokofieff, and the Tchaikovsky Fourth symphony.

Thursday, Aug. 10, 8:30 P. M.: Beethoven's Second symphony, Strauss's "Also Sprach Zarathustra" and the Moussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures at an Exhibition."

Saturday, Aug. 12, 8:30 P. M.: Haydn's B flat symphony, No. 102; "Rites of Spring," by Stravinsky, and a final group by Wagner.

Sunday, Aug. 13, 3:30 P. M.: Schumann's Fourth symphony, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," Ravel's "La Valse" and the Sibelius Second symphony.

Reservations for both series of concerts are being received at the festival offices in Stockbridge, and tickets for single seats will be on sale later in the month.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 2 - 1939

Subscriptions for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, at which the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky will give six concerts the first two week-ends in August at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass., are announced as considerably ahead of those of last year. But there are plenty of good seats left. This Summer all of the 5,700 seats in the Music Shed will be reserved. A considerable amount of painting has been completed in the Shed interior and the large parking area is being drained and groomed. Rehearsals will begin immediately after Mr. Koussevitzky's return on July 26 from his present trip abroad. The conductor sailed for Europe recently on the Normandie.

THIS CLIPPING FROM TOLEDO, O.
TIMES

JUL 2 - 1939

Mrs. Cornelia Colton Hollister To Entertain At Music Festival

DISTINGUISHED visitors from all parts of the country are going daily to Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., to inspect the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival which will be given this summer by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky conducting.

The music shed, seating almost 6,000 guests, was dedicated last summer, and Mrs. Cornelia Colton Hollister one of our prominent social leaders and music lovers, has been a patron from the beginning.

Six concerts to be given during the first two weeks of August comprise the program this year.

Mrs. Hollister will have as her guests at the opening concert Mrs. Zorah Bowman and Miss Katharine Geddes, who are at their summer home at Chappaqua, N. Y., for the season, and also Miss Leslie Leland, who will be a guest at the Curtis House at Lenox.

At other concerts Mrs. Hollister will entertain William Miles, director of the Berkshire Playhouse; Mr. and Mrs. Leroy V. Stransky, and her sister, Miss Olive Colton.

Ethel Barrymore Opens Drama Season

GUESTS in the Berkshires do not lack for entertainment. Miss Ethel Barrymore and her own company opened the Berkshire Playhouse Monday night for its 12th season. This is Miss Barrymore's first appearance there in four years, and her play was Mazo De La Roche's "White Oaks."

Among the many guests who attended were Mrs. Hollister and Miss Colton.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 3 - 1939

Koussevitzky Announces Programs For Festival

Works of Bach, Rimsky-Korsakov and Brahms Will be Played by Boston Symphony Orchestra in Opening Concert at Tanglewood on Tuesday, Aug. 3—Brandenburg Concerto is on List—Sibelius and Beethoven Symphonies at Second Concert—Wagnerian Music to be Heard at Second Concert in Second Series on Aug. 12.

Works by Bach, Rimsky-Korsakov and Brahms will provide variety as Serge Koussevitzky conducts the Boston Symphony orchestra in the opening concert of the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, on Thursday, Aug. 3. The concert will begin at 8.30 o'clock.

Concerts in the first series will be presented at 8.30 on Aug. 3 and Aug 5, and at 3.30 Aug. 6. The same schedule will apply to the second series, which will start Thursday, Aug. 10. Reservations for both series are now on sale at the festival office, Stockbridge, and tickets for single concerts will be sold later in the month.

The Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G major, by Bach; the "Scheherazade" suite, by Rimsky-Korsakov, and Brahms' Symphony No. 1 in C minor comprise the program for the first concert. The second program includes Piston's Concerto for Orchestra, the Symphony No. 5 in E flat major by Sibelius, and Symphony No. 7 in A major by Beethoven. The first series will close with the Symphony in E Flat major of Mozart, "Peter and the Wolf," Prokofieff's musical fairy tale, and Tchaikowsky's Symphony No. 4 in F minor.

The second series will open with Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 in D major, "Also Sprach Zarathustra," by Richard Strauss, and the Moussorgsky-Ravel work, "Pictures at an Exhibition." In the second concert the orchestra will play the Symphony in B flat, No. 102, of Haydn, "Le Sacre du Printemps" by Stravinsky, and the following Wagner selections: Overture, "Der Fliegende Hollander," prelude to "Lohengrin," Bacchanale from "Tannhauser" and prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg." The concluding program includes the Schumann Symphony No. 4 in D major, prelude, "L'Apres-midi d'un Faun," by Debussy; "La Valse," by Ravel, and Symphony No. 2 in D major by Sibelius.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 6 - 1939

Brandenburg Concerto to Open Sixth Annual Berkshire Festival

Stockbridge, July 6—Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No 3 in G major will open the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge August 3. The opening concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will begin at 8.30 and indications point to equally as large an audience as attended the dedicatory concert for the new shed last year.

Two moderns will be represented on the program for the second concert Saturday, August 5, at 8.30. The concert will open with Piston's Concerto for orchestra and it will also include the Fifth Symphony in E Flat major by Sibelius.

Sunday afternoon, August 6, at 3.30 the program will include Prokofieff's musical fairy tale, "Peter and the Wolf," with Richard Hale as narrator.

The second series of concerts will open August 10 at 8.30 with Beethoven's Symphony No 2 in D major, followed by Strauss's tone poem, "Also Sprach Zarathustra." On Saturday, August 12, at 8.30 the program will include Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps" and several operatic works by Wagner.

The festival will close the 13th at 3.30 and on the closing program will be works by Schumann, Debussy, Ravel and the Second Symphony by Sibelius.

Detailed Programs

The complete program follows:—

Thursday, August 3, at 8.30: Brandenburg Concerto No 3 in G Major, Bach; "Scheherazade," Symphonic suite, Rimsky-Korsakov; Symphony No 1 in C Minor, Brahms.

Saturday, August 5, at 8.30: Concerto for Orchestra, Piston; Symphony No 5 in E Flat Major, Sibelius; Symphony No 7 in A Major, Beethoven.

Sunday, August 6, at 3.30: Symphony in E Flat Major, Mozart; "Peter and the Wolf," Prokofieff; Symphony No 4 in F Minor, Tchaikowsky.

Thursday, August 10, at 8.30: Symphony No 2 in D Major, Beethoven; "Also Sprach Zarathustra," tone poem, Strauss; "Pictures at an Exhibition," Moussorgsky-Ravel.

Saturday, August 12, at 8.30: Symphony in B flat, No 102, Haydn; "Le Sacre du Printemps," Stravinsky; Overture "Der Fliegende Hollander," Prelude to "Lohengrin," Bacchanale from "Tannhauser," and Prelude "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg," Wagner.

Sunday, August 13, at 3.30: Symphony No 4 in D Minor, Schumann; Prelude "L'Apres-midi d'un Faune," Debussy; "La Valse," Ravel; Symphony No 2 in D Major, Sibelius.

Reservations for both series of concerts are now being received by the Berkshire Symphonic festival office at Stockbridge and tickets for the single concerts will be put on sale later in the month. The office will also be pleased to supply information regarding accommodations in the Berkshires and listings of other attractions such as chamber music concerts, art exhibitions, dance recitals and historic and scenic drives.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 8 - 1939

Big Year for Festival

At this date there is every indication that the crowds attending the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood last year will be surpassed next month. Reservations are substantially ahead of 1939 and according to Festival authorities the most gratifying feature is, that many new reservations have come from distant places.

The encouraging reports this year are the more surprising because there can be no ballyhoo about a new building, no dedicatory ceremony, no Cecilia Chorus. The attraction is a great orchestra under a great conductor playing great music in beautiful surroundings.

But soon or late the limit of patronage for the kind of program offered will be reached. Undoubtedly Festival and orchestra authorities are shrewd enough to realize this. No doubt they are looking ahead to the time when Dr. Koursevitzky's academy is in full swing, when there will be local participation in some form or another, so that truly the Berkshire Festival will be more than a name. It will be a real Festival that is constantly growing and maturing in an American way, without any attempt to follow a pattern set down by European predecessors. It will be interesting, yes thrilling to watch, if spirit, imagination, and artistic talent are allowed a reasonable amount of play.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

JUL 6 - 1939

Berkshire Festival Varied Programs to Open on August 3rd

The first week's program of the Berkshire Symphonic festival which opens on Thursday evening, Aug. 3, at Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge, and which will this year, as usual, be performed by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky will include works by the following:

Bach, Rimsky-Korsakow and Brahms.

The Saturday, Aug. 5, concert, also in the evening, will present works by Piston, Sibelius and Beethoven.

The Sunday, Aug. 6 concert, will include Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," which was played in Northampton by the orchestra at Smith college Mar. 7. Mr. Koussevitzky conducted on that occasion and Mr. Hale delightfully filled the difficult role of narrator for this orchestral fairy tale for children. The performance of this work here was one of the first occasions of its presentation and its immediate popularity is being recognized by placing it on the festival list. The complete program for Aug. 6 includes works of Mozart, Prokofieff and Tschaikowsky.

The evening concerts are at 8.30; the afternoon concert at 3.30.

Miss Dorothy Bement, co-principal of the Northampton School for Girls, is the Northampton chairman for the festival advisory committee and reservations for series seats are now being received at the Music House and will be filled in the order received.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DAVENPORT, IA.
DEMOCRAT-LEADER

JUL 9 - 1939

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY . . . has announced its programs for the Berkshire festival next month. Serge Koussevitsky will direct the orchestra in Bach's Brandenberg concerto, No. 3, Rimsky Korsakof's "Scheherazade" and Brahms first Symphony on August 3. Concerto for Orchestra by Piston, Sibelius 5th Symphony and Beethoven's seventh will be heard on August 5; Sunday, August 6th, the Mozart E Flat Symphany. "Peter and the Wolf" by Prokofieff and Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony will be played. On August 10, Beethoven's second symphony, Strauss" "Also Sprach Zarathustra" and the Moussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures At An Exhibition" will be on the program. The last two programs on Saturday and Sunday, Aug. 12 and 13, will include Haydn's B Flat Symphony; "Rites of Spring," by Stravinsky, a group by Wagner, Schumann's Fourth, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," Ravel's "La Valse" and the Sibelius Second Symphony.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD - TRIBUNE

JUL 3 - 1939

Boston Symphony Plans ForBerkshires Published

New Works by Piston and Prokofieff To Be Played

Detailed programs for six concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitsky's direction in the music shed on the Tanglewood estate at Lenox, Mass., have been announced by the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. The recently composed works, a concerto for orchestra by Walter Piston, of Harvard University, and Serge Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" will be heard for the first time in this series.

In the opening program, Thursday night, Aug. 3, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct Bach's third Brandenburg Concerto, Rimsky Korsakoff's "Scheherezade" and Brahms's first symphony. The second program, Saturday night, Aug. 5, offers the Piston concerto, Sibelius's fifth symphony and Beethoven's seventh symphony. Mozart's symphony in E flat, Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" and Tchaikovsky's fourth symphony will be heard Sunday afternoon, Aug. 6.

On the second Thursday evening, Aug. 10, the orchestra will play Beethoven's second symphony, Richard Strauss's "Also sprach Zarathustra" and Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition." On Saturday night, Aug. 12, Haydn's symphony in B flat, No. 102, and Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps" will precede four Wagnerian excerpts. The closing program, Sunday afternoon, Aug. 13, includes Schumann's fourth symphony, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," Ravel's "La Valse" and Sibelius's second symphony.

Information regarding tickets, accommodations and musical and other events in the Berkshires during the festival may be obtained from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office in Stockbridge, Mass.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR

JUL 3 - 1939

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL TO BEGIN ON AUG. 3

Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G Major will open the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., on Aug. 3. The opening concert by the ~~Boston Symph~~ony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will begin at 8:30 and indications point to equally as large an audience as attended the dedicatory concert for the new shed last year.

Two moderns will be represented on the program for the second concent Saturday Aug. 5 at 8:30. The concert will open with Piston's Concerto for Orchestra and it will also include the Fifth Symphony in E. Flat Major by Sibelius.

Sunday afternoon Aug. 6 at 3:30 the program will include Prokofieff's musical fairly tale, "Peter and the Wolf," with Richard Hale as narrator.

The second series of concerts will open Aug. 10 at 8:30 with Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 in D Major, followed by Strauss' tone poem, "Also Sprach Zarathustra." On Saturday, Aug. 12, at 8:30 the program will include Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps" and several operatic works by Wagner.

The festival will close the 13th at 3:30 and on the closing program will be works by Schumann, Debussy, Ravel and the Second Symphony by Sibelius.

Reservations for both series of concerts are now being received by the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office at Stockbridge and tickets for the single concerts will be put on sale later in the month. The office will also be pleased to supply information regarding accommodations in the Berkshires and listings of other attractions such as chamber music concerts, art exhibitions, dance recitals, and historic and scenic drives.

THIS CLIPPING FROM Freeman
Waukesha Wis

JUL 8 1939

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, who has been conducting in Europe, is due back in this country on July 26 to begin rehearsals for the Berkshire Festival in Massachusetts.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

JUL 10 1939

Berkshire Symphonic Series In August

Reservations for single concerts in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival series at Tanglewood are being accepted now and will be filled on or after July 20, according to an announcement made today. The concert dates are Aug. 3, 5, and 6; and Aug. 10, 12, and 13, and all concerts will be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky.

Other activities taking place at the same time include recitals by Ted Shawn and his men dancers at Jacob's Pillow, performances at the Berkshire Playhouse at Stockbridge, chamber music concerts at South Mountain, Pittsfield and Music Mountain at Falls Village, Conn., and art exhibits at the Berkshire museum in Pittsfield and at Heaton hall, Stockbridge.

In addition there are the Berkshire Garden center at Stockbridge, the Pleasant Valley Bird and Wild Flower Sanctuary in Lenox, and the Mission house at Stockbridge to visit.

THIS CLIPPING FROM PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS
JUL 9 - 1939

41

Stockbridge Festival Features Six Concerts By Boston Symphony

Koussevitzky Will Return to Direct Programs—Hungarian Opera to Be Presented at Fair

By RALPH LEWANDO
Press Music Editor

Dr. Koussevitzky, who has been conducting a number of concerts in Europe, returns to the United States on July 28 to begin rehearsal of programs the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play at the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 3, 5-6, and Aug. 10, 12-13.

This will be the second season for these concerts in the Festival's spacious music shed, seating 5700, which was built last year on the beautiful "Tanglewood" estate of 210 acres that Mrs. Gorham Brooks, Brookline, Mass., socialite and music patron, deeded to the Boston Symphony and Festival Assn. Mrs. Brooks' gift is a memorial to her mother and father. The site is ideal. Situated between Stockbridge and Lenox, it overlooks the mirror-like surface of Stockbridge Bowl (Lake Mahkeenac).

Mr. Lewando

With Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith and her board of directors ruling the destinies of the Festival, it has become the foremost of its kind in the world. Stockbridge has become a mecca for faithful devotees of music of high symphonic caliber performed in surpassing style.

Capacity audiences have become the rule. The business success of the venture fully approximates the artistic goals attained by Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony.

The extent of the interest in this Festival is indicated by the fact that more than half the seats have been taken for the six concerts by subscribers from various parts of the country.

This year, for the first time, all seats will be reserved.

The dates, time of performance and the programs to be performed are as follows:

Aug. 3, 8:30 p. m.—Bach's Brandenburg Concerts, No. 3, in G-major; "Scheherazade," by Rimsky-Korsakoff, and Brahms' First symphony.

Aug. 5, 8:30 p. m.—Concerto for Orchestra by Walter Piston; the Sibelius Fifth symphony, and Beethoven's Seventh symphony.

Aug. 6, 3:30 p. m.—Mozart's E-flat symphony; "Peter and the Wolf," by Prokofieff, and Tschaikowsky's Fourth symphony.

Aug. 10, 8:30 p. m.—Beethoven's Second symphony; "Thus Spake Zarathustra," Richard Strauss; and the Moussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures at an Exhibition."

Aug. 12, 8:30 p. m.—Haydn's B-flat symphony, No. 102; "Rites of Spring," by Stravinsky; and a final group of Wagner works.

Aug. 13, 3:30 p. m.—Schumann's Fourth symphony; Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun;" Ravel's "La Valse," and the Sibelius Second symphony.

In connection with the orchestral performances Olin Downes, distinguished music critic of the New York Times, will give two lectures at the morning rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be held in the music shed Aug. 5 and 12.

* * *

Books on music added to Carnegie Library loan department are as follows: "Your Child's Music," Mrs. S. N. B. Coleman; "Background Readings in Music," R. E. Bradley; "Holiday Musical Plays for Children," Federal Theater Project; "How to Memorize Music," C. F. Kenyon; "Aida, the Story of Verdi's Greatest Opera," Robert Lawrence; "Carmen, the Story of Bizet's Opera, Robert Lawrence; "Opera Cavalcade, the Story of the Metropolitan," Metropolitan Opera Guild; "How to Make Music on the Harmonica," P. V. Planta.

* * *

The Hungarian folk opera, "Hary Janos," by Zoltan Kodaly, will have 10 performances at the New York World's Fair during the first half of July. The composer will make his first American visit in connection with the production and will conduct at least one of the performances.

"Hary Janos" has been especially adapted for American listeners. The dialog will be spoken in English and the songs will be sung in Hungarian. Leading singers of the Budapest Opera will participate. The title role will be sung by Imre Pallo, Antal Nemeth will direct the staging and Laszlo Halasz of the St. Louis Opera Company, a Hungarian by birth, will conduct.

Juana de Laban will direct the dances and appear as solo dancer.

Composed in 1925-26, "Hary Janos" was premiered in Oct., 1926, at Budapest.

The comic opera deals with the incredible story of a humble soldier of Napoleonic days who meets with strange adventures, attains the rank of general, becomes a favorite at the Austrian court, and when the Emperor wishes to reward Janos' bravery with the hand of his daughter the soldier's old-time sweetheart appears and he decides to give up royal aspirations and return with her to the simple life in a Hungarian village.

* * *

Richard Kountz, for 10 years director of the standard and educational department of Music Publishers M. Witmark & Sons, has resigned his post to devote his time to musical composition. Mr. and Mrs. (Irma Carpenter) Kountz, both former Pittsburghers, will spend the summer at Sharon, Conn.

* * *

Horace Johnson has been appointed director of the New York WPA Federal Music Project, succeeding Chalmers Clifton, who resigned March 19.

Mr. Johnson is vice president of the National Association for American Composers and Conductors. For eight years he was managing editor of New York Musical Courier, and he has held positions with Musical Observer, Etude, The Musician, The Talking Machine Journal and The Delineator.

Born at Waltham, Mass., in 1893, Mr. Johnson studied composition with Crist and Marshall and studied four years in Italy, France and England. Many of his songs have been published in the United States and England, and his orchestral works have been played in the United States, Mexico, Canada and England. Some of these compositions are an orchestral suite: "Imagery;" a tone poem: "Astarte;" "Streets of Florence," and "In the American Manner."

As head of the N. Y. music project, Mr. Johnson will direct activities of its artistic and technical departments, including 27 instrumental and choral units and the division of music education.

* * *

Correction: Last Sunday this department stated that the famous pianist, Arthur Schnabel, would be a recitalist on the Friends of Music series next season. Instead Karl Ulrich Schnabel, Mr. Schnabel's gifted son, will be the pianist in collaboration with Elisabeth Schumann, soprano, and Leonard Shure, pianist.

Pianist

Walter Gieseking, noted pianist, will be featured in recital on the Art Society series next season.

* * *

With infrequent exception Pittsburghers seem disinterested and neglectful of musical talent within our gates. Too little, financially, is done to aid gifted boys and girls to further their aspirations. Teachers of such youngsters, try to do their share by awarding free or partial scholarships. But gifted children need other help such as special schooling, and oftimes certain necessities that contribute to normal living. Teachers cannot provide these items, nor can they always furnish the needed music which is costly over a long period of time.

Some fund should be set up and properly administered so that children of unusual musical endowment might be able to participate in its benefits. Much is being done for underprivileged children who possessed no particular natural endowments in the arts; and, also, the condition of subnormal and abnormal youngsters is being ameliorated. This is as it should be. But it is astonishing that the plight of children who are highly endowed in a musical way is given hardly any recognition. Perhaps all this may be changed for the better some day. But meanwhile youngsters of potential greatness are losing their rightful opportunity to develop.

* * *

Pittsburgh Musical Institute announces the following summer session faculty recitals: July 12, William H. Oetting, organ recital; Puly 19, Robert Topping, guest tenor; July 26, string ensemble program by Roy E. Shoemaker and Leo Allera, violinists; George H. Wilkins, cellist, and William H. Oetting and Dallmeyer Russell, pianists; Aug. 2, two-piano program by Frank Kennedy and Pauline Hopkins, assisted by Helen Young Kennedy, soprano. No admission cards are required.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR
JUL 1 0 1939

Berkshire Festival Interest Increases

Reservations for single concerts for the Berkshire Symphonic Festivl at Tanglewood will be filled on or after July 20. The demand for reservations for both series of concerts to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, continues brisk with a marked increase in the number of reservations from Canada and the Middle West. The concert dates are August 3, 5 and 6; 10, 12 and 13.

There will be many activities of interest to Berkshire visitors in addition to the festival. Ted Shawn and his men dancers will hold forth at their Summer headquarters in West Becket; the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge will present Broadway stars every night and at two matinees; there will be chamber music at the South Mountain in Pittsfield and Music Mountain at Falls Village, Conn., and art exhibitions at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield. There will be the Berkshire Garden Center at Stockbridge, the Pleasant Valley Bird and Wild Flower Sanctuary at Lenox and the Mission House at Stockbridge among the many places of interest to visit.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CITIZEN
Lowell Mass
JUL 1 0 1939

Berkshire Festival.

Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G Major will open the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge, Aug. 3. The opening concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will begin at 8.30 and indications point to equally as large an audience as attended the dedicatory concert for the new shed last year.

Two moderns will be represented on the program for the second concert Saturday, Aug. 5 at 8.30. The concert will open with Piston's Concerto for Orchestra and it will also include the Fifth Symphony in E Flat Major by Sibelius.

Sunday afternoon, Aug 6 at 3.30 the program will include Prokofieff's musical fairy tale, "Peter and the Wolf," with Richard Hale as narrator.

The second series of concerts will open Aug. 10 at 8.30 with Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 in D Major, followed by Strauss' tone poem, "Also Sprach Zarathustra." On Saturday, Aug. 12, at 8.30 the program will include Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps" and several operatic works by Wagner.

The festival will close the 13th at 3.30 and on the closing pro-

Debussy, Ravel and the Second Symphony by Sibelius.

Reservations may be made at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office, Stockbridge, Mass. and single seats will be put on sale later in the month.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
JUL 1 2 1939

Tanglewood Architect Awarded Prize

Eliel Saarinen Honored in Competition

Eliel Saarinen, president of the Cranbrook Academy of Art, who made the original design for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's shed at Tanglewood, with his son, Eero and his son-in-law Robert Swanson, all of Bloomfield Hills, Mich., have been awarded first prize of $7500 in the competition for a design for the proposed Smithsonian Institution Gallery of Art in Washington.

Eliel Saarinen

Frederic A. Delano, chairman of the National Capitol Park and Planning Commission headed the jury making the award. The Saarinens and Swanson submitted a design for a building in modern tyle, asymmetrical and distinguished by its dignity and simplicity. If funds are raised for the building, the architects will realize about $90,000.

Eliel Saarinen, internationally known, is a native of Finland. He was named architectural consultant in the construction of the model village at Norris Dam in Tennesssee and in 1936 was invited to be consulting architect in designing buildings for the New York World's Fair. At the recommendation of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, he was chosen architect for the Tanglewood shed.

In construction of the shed, the Festival trustees followed Mr. Saarinen's plans in their essentials as to size, proportions and form, with a number of minor changes recommended by Joseph Franz, engineer of Stockbridge, to meet the limited funds raised by the trustees. The shed is incomplete but trustees are hopeful as years go by, funds will be forthcoming to make completion possible.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST
JUL 1 2 1939

Berkshire Festival Tickets Go on Sale

Because of the interest of a number of music lovers coming from distances who wish to include one or more concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in their plans to combine a visit to New England with a visit to the New York World's Fair, reservations for single concerts are being accepted by the Festival office at Stockbridge, Mass. They will be filled on or after July 20. Tanglewood, home of the Festival, on Route 183 between Stockbridge and Lenox, is only three hours by motor from the Fair.

The demand for reservations for both series of concerts to be played by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, continues brisk with a marked increase in the number of reservations from Canada and the mid-west. The concert dates are Aug. 3, 5 and 6; Aug. 10, 12 and 13.

In addition to the festival, there will be many activities of interest to Berkshire visitors. Ted Shawn and his men dancers will hold forth at their summer headquarters in West Becket; The Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge will present Broadway stars every night and at two matinees; there will be chamber music at the South Mountain in Pittsfield and Music Mountain at Falls Village, Conn.; and art exhibitions at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield. There will be the Berkshire Garden Center at Stockbridge, the Pleasant Valley Bird and Wild Flower Sanctuary at Lenox, and the Mission House at Stockbridge among the many places of interest to visit.

42

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

UL 13 1939

Berkshire Music Festival Hartford Committee Named

Boston Orchestra, Koussevitzky Play 6 Concerts in August

Announcement of the Hartford Committee for the Berkshire Music Festival was made by its chairman. Mrs. Blanchard W. Means, Tuesday. The members are:

Mrs. Chester R. Seymour. Mrs. Walter H. Gray, Mrs. James Ellicott Hewes. Mrs. Jeremiah H. Bartholomew. Mrs. William H. Bissell. Mrs. Robert B. Ranson, Mrs. Edward N. Allen. Miss Elizabeth Knox. Dr. William O. Aydelotte. Arnold Goldstein. Arthur L. Shipman, Jr., Walter K. Schwinn and Dr. Blanchard W. Means.

The sixth annual Berkshire Festival will be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, on August 3. 5 and 6. and August 10. 12 and 13. when the following programs will be heard:

Thursday. August 3. at 8:30—Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G Major. Bach; "Scheherezade" Symphonic Suite. Rimsky Korsakov; Symphony No. 1 in C Minor. Brahms.

Saturday. August 5. at 8:30—Concerto For Orchestra. Piston: Symphony No. 5. E flat Major. Sibelius; Symphony No. 7. Beethoven.

Sunday. August 6. at 3:30—Symphony in E Flat Major. Mozart; "Peter and the Wolf." Prokofieff; Symphony No. 4 in F Minor. Tschaikowsky.

Thursday. August 10. at 8:30—Symphony No. 2 in G Major. Beethoven; "Asl Sprach Zarathustra," Strauss; "Pictures At An Exhibition." Moussorgsky-Ravel.

Saturday. August 12. at 8:30—Symphony in B Flat. No. 102. Haydn; "Sacre Du Printemps." Stravinsky; four Wagnerian Overtures

Sunday August 13 at 3:30—Symphony No. 4 in D Minor. Schumann; Prelude "L'Apres-midi d'un Faune" Debussy; "La Valse" Ravel, and Symphony No. 2 in D Major. Sibelius.

---

130 Attend Lecture on Symphony

Pittsfield Eagle
July 12

Analyze Form, Hear Records of August Programs

An audience of 130 heard the first lecture by Charles L. Safford of Williamstown on the first of the 1939 Berkshire Symphonic Festival programs at the Berkshire Museum yesterday afternoon.

With emphasis on the first symphony of Brahms, the lecture included a brief analysis of the form of symphony and the difference between a symphony and a symphonic poem or suite. Excerpts from the Brahms symphony, Rimsky-Korsakow's "Scheherazade" and Bach's "Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G Major," which will comprise the program that the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play at Tanglewood on the evening of August 3 were played on the piano by Mr. Safford and from the record library.

Miss Elise Blanchard and Mrs. Maurice Woolverton assisted at the door and Mrs. Zenas C. Colt, chairman of the committee on arrangements for the lectures for the Pittsfield Junior League, sponsor of the series, played the records.

The second program of the Festival to be played Aug. 5 at Tanglewood, will be heard tomorrow afternoon at 3 from records in the Ellen Crane Memorial Room of the Museum. Sibelius's Fifth Symphony and the Seventh of Beethoven will be played. The program will be shorter than the actual Festival program, as the "Concerto for the Orchestra," by Piston has not been recorded.

The second lecture by Mr. Safford will be given next Tuesday at 4.30. Lectures and recorded concerts are open to the public, with no charge.

THIS CLIPPING FROM VOGUE
GREENWICH, CONN.

15 1939

MUSIC IN THE BERKSHIRES

Howard Taubman describes the informal life at the Boston Symphony Outdoor Festival

JUST as New England as pumpkin pie is the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Massachusetts. There the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by great, stalwart Dr. Koussevitzky, plays six performances in August under a grey, fan-shaped music shed at Tanglewood, the spacious estate where Nathaniel Hawthorne once lived. The whole Festival is as American as the two-party system, and as heart-warming as Salzburg.

You may think back to delicious Salzburg Würstl, to the Festspielhaus, with the mountainside beginning its abrupt ascent directly behind it, to the narrow streets in the old part of the town, where the eaves of houses on opposite sides of the street meet each other like the friendly branches of neighbouring oaks, and to the grey-walled, whitewashed halls of the house where a little fellow named Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart was born. Salzburg was quaint Old World, and it filled you with a nostalgic warmth. But Tanglewood has a tingling pulse, with the sweep and audacity of the New World; there is a lift in a place and a people whose eyes seem to range boldly to the future.

Waitresses, bus-boys, and chefs go to the concerts in the Berkshires, and some hotels close their dining-rooms early so that they may get there on time. In Salzburg, the townsfolk used to line up outside the Festspielhaus, just as they do in front of Grauman's Chinese Theatre in Hollywood, to watch the celebrities enter; only the Burgomaster and a few local dignitaries heard the performances. The Salzburg Festival was for the Toscanini worshippers, the Mozart devotees and the foot-loose and wealthy citizens of the world who liked to be where excitement was thick. The Berkshire Festival, like the Gettysburg Address, is of, by, and for the community.

When Koussevitzky enters on the platform, with his slow, measured gait, he looks as if he were in a solemn, mediæval procession, except that he wears white tie and tails. But the moment he begins to conduct, his shoulders are thrust back, his body is tense, his face becomes crimson; it is as if he were himself physically operating every one of the hundred instruments in his band. Salzburg or Bayreuth never had an orchestra to match the Boston Symphony, now the greatest orchestra in America, and Sergei Koussevitzky is perhaps the length of a baton behind Toscanini. At Salzburg, two thousand men and women stood for ten minutes after a concert and cheered Toscanini. In the Berkshires, more than six thousand men, women, and children remained and shouted for half an hour at the end of last year's Festival.

Salzburg had its Mozart, the Berkshires have Tanglewood—Nathaniel Hawthorne's home for several happy years. In the early

SCHAAL-PIX

CONDUCTOR SERGEI KOUSSEVITZKY (LEFT) AT REHEARSAL

42

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

JUL 13 1939

Berkshire Music Festival Hartford Committee Named

Boston Orchestra, Koussevitzky Play 6 Concerts in August

Announcement of the Hartford Committee for the Berkshire Music Festival was made by its chairman, Mrs. Blanchard W. Means, Tuesday. The members are:

Mrs. Chester R. Seymour, Mrs. Walter H. Gray, Mrs. James Ellicott Hewes, Mrs. Jeremiah H. Bartholomew, Mrs. William H. Bissell, Mrs. Robert B. Ransom, Mrs. Edward N. Allen, Miss Elizabeth Knox, Dr. William O. Aydelotte, Arnold Goldstein, Arthur L. Shipman, Jr., Walter K. Schwinn and Dr. Blanchard W. Means.

The sixth annual Berkshire Festival will be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, on August 3, 5 and 6, and August 10, 12 and 13, when the following programs will be heard:

Thursday, August 3, at 8:30—Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G Major, Bach; "Scheherezade" Symphonic Suite, Rimsky Korsakov; Symphony No. 1 in C Minor, Brahms.

Saturday, August 5, at 8:30—Concerto For Orchestra, Piston; Symphony No. 5, E flat Major, Sibelius; Symphony No. 7, Beethoven.

Sunday, August 6, at 3:30—Symphony in E Flat Major, Mozart; "Peter and the Wolf," Prokofieff; Symphony No. 4 in F Minor, Tschaikowsky.

Thursday, August 10, at 8:30—Symphony No. 2 in G Major, Beethoven; "Asl Sprach Zarathustra," Strauss; "Pictures At An Exhibition," Moussorgsky-Ravel.

Saturday, August 12, at 8:30—Symphony in B Flat, No. 102, Haydn; "Sacre Du Printemps," Stravinsky; four Wagnerian Overtures.

Sunday August 13 at 3:30—Symphony No. 4 in D Minor, Schumann; Prelude "L'Apres-midi d'un Faune" Debussy; "La Valse" Ravel, and Symphony No. 2 in D Major, Sibelius.

THIS CLIPPING FROM VOGUE
GREENWICH, CONN.

JUL 15 1939

---

130 Attend Lecture on Symphony

Pittsfield Eagle July 12

Analyze Form, Hear Records of August Programs

An audience of 130 heard the first lecture by Charles L. Safford of Williamstown on the first of the 1939 Berkshire Symphonic Festival programs at the Berkshire Museum yesterday afternoon.

With emphasis on the first symphony of Brahms, the lecture included a brief analysis of the form of symphony and the difference between a symphony and a symphonic poem or suite. Excerpts from the Brahms symphony, Rimsky-Korsakow's "Scheherazade" and Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G Major, which will compose the program that the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play at Tanglewood on the evening of August 3 were played on the piano by Mr. Safford and from the record library.

Miss Elise Blanchard and Mrs. Maurice Woolverton assisted at the door and Mrs. Zenas C. Colt, chairman of the committee on arrangements for the lectures for the Pittsfield Junior League, sponsor of the series, played the records.

The second program of the Festival to be played Aug. 5 at Tanglewood, will be heard tomorrow afternoon at 3 from records in the Ellen Crane Memorial Room of the Museum. Sibelius's Fifth Symphony and the Seventh of Beethoven will be played. The program will be shorter than the actual Festival program, as the "Concerto for the Orchestra," by Piston has not been recorded.

The second lecture by Mr. Safford will be given next Tuesday at 4.30. Lectures and recorded concerts are open to the public, with no charge.

MUSIC IN THE BERKSHIRES

Howard Taubman describes the informal life at the Boston Symphony Outdoor Festival

SCHAAL-PIX

CONDUCTOR SERGEI KOUSSEVITZKY (LEFT) AT REHEARSAL

JUST as New England as pumpkin pie is the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Massachusetts. There the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by great, stalwart Dr. Koussevitzky, plays six performances in August under a grey, fan-shaped music shed at Tanglewood, the spacious estate where Nathaniel Hawthorne once lived. The whole Festival is as American as the two-party system, and as heart-warming as Salzburg.

You may think back to delicious Salzburg Würstl, to the Festspielhaus, with the mountainside beginning its abrupt ascent directly behind it, to the narrow streets in the old part of the town, where the eaves of houses on opposite sides of the street meet each other like the friendly branches of neighbouring oaks, and to the grey-walled, whitewashed halls of the house where a little fellow named Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart was born. Salzburg was quaint Old World, and it filled you with a nostalgic warmth. But Tanglewood has a tingling pulse, with the sweep and audacity of the New World; there is a lift in a place and a people whose eyes seem to range boldly to the future.

Waitresses, bus-boys, and chefs go to the concerts in the Berkshires, and some hotels close their dining-rooms early so that they may get there on time. In Salzburg, the townsfolk used to line up outside the Festspielhaus, just as they do in front of Grauman's Chinese Theatre in Hollywood, to watch the celebrities enter; only the Burgomaster and a few local dignitaries heard the performances. The Salzburg Festival was for the Toscanini worshippers, the Mozart devotees and the foot-loose and wealthy citizens of the world who liked to be where excitement was thick. The Berkshire Festival, like the Gettysburg Address, is of, by, and for the community.

When Koussevitzky enters on the platform, with his slow, measured gait, he looks as if he were in a solemn, mediæval procession, except that he wears white tie and tails. But the moment he begins to conduct, his shoulders are thrust back, his body is tense, his face becomes crimson; it is as if he were himself physically operating every one of the hundred instruments in his band. Salzburg or Bayreuth never had an orchestra to match the Boston Symphony, now the greatest orchestra in America, and Sergei Koussevitzky is perhaps the length of a baton behind Toscanini. At Salzburg, two thousand men and women stood for ten minutes after a concert and cheered Toscanini. In the Berkshires, more than six thousand men, women, and children remained and shouted for half an hour at the end of last year's Festival.

Salzburg had its Mozart, the Berkshires have Tanglewood—Nathaniel Hawthorne's home for several happy years. In the early 1850's, he wandered along the wooded height and down the paths that paralleled the stream on its way to Lake Makheenac. There is a great clearing now on Tanglewood's high plateau, but the woods are still thick along the grounds that fall away suddenly to the lake. The big house—where "the mild, shy, gentle, melancholic, exceedingly sensitive, and not very forcible man" (as Hawthorne wrote of himself while at Tanglewood) romped with the children and told them the tales that grew into The Wonder-Book—is now the ground superintendent's home and, at Festival time, headquarters for press and first aid. The serenity of Tanglewood and the breadth of the good American landscape, "rough, broken, rugged, headlong Berkshire," quickened Hawthorne's imagination, and he wrote The House of Seven Gables there, as well as The Wonder-Book. Later, fondly, he gave the estate its bit of immortality with Tanglewood Tales.

10 +

Covering an acre and a half, the music shed dominates the height. It is open at the sides, delicately poised on the lean shanks of bare steel girders; it has the grace and calm strength of Beethoven's "Pastoral" Symphony. From the closely shaved lawn, the visitor looks out on a dramatic vista of mountains; Hawthorne spoke of them as "the mighty hills of Berkshire." There is a formal English garden, with hedges of hemlock and pine fastidiously cropped, and a fountain plays in the centre. But it is still America, for beside the garden, there is a canvas tent under which the ladies of the Thursday Morning Club of Great Barrington, Massachusetts, sell ham and Swiss cheese sandwiches, orangeade and soda pop.

Festival time raises the beat of every one's pulse in the Berkshires. For the Festival is a communal enterprise, with no Ministry of Fine Art and no State Treasury to organize and maintain it. Committees have been meeting all winter and spring for the sixth holding of the Festival next month. Volunteers have been selling subscriptions; volunteers have tended the gardens; volunteers will serve as ushers and will take charge of parking. At the moment, volunteers are overseeing the grading of roads.

The Berkshire Festival people do not go wrong twice the same way. Last year, the parking area became soft after a heavy rain, and some limousines were stuck like flies on flypaper. It won't happen this August. Even last year, there was a remedy at hand, for the Berkshire Festival was in New England. After a downpour, a canny Yankee farmer drove up to the Festival grounds in his tractor. "Reckoned," he said, "folks would git stuck in the mud; kin haul 'em out fer a dollar a piece." But this was not a Festival where you could gouge the customer. The Festival management paid the farmer a flat rate for the tractor's use.

Volunteers draw up a list of inns, tourist houses, and eating places, all prices stated. A stranger in the Berkshires can obtain advice as to where to stay; wherever he goes he will have hot water, electric light, and bath. You recall your hopeless wanderings the first day in Salzburg. You remember that, in despair, you finally took a room that looked like a blocked capital I, that you didn't know it was morning because your room was so dark, and that you gashed your chin as you shaved with cold water in the gloom. You remember that you spent the next day hunting for another room and landed a prize in a Gasthof that was only two hundred years old; that there was no bath, and the washroom was on another landing; and that you paid five shillings a day extra because its window looked out on the grave of Mozart's sister.

The Berkshire fête has accumulated a reservoir of tradition. The veterans at the sixth Festival in the first fortnight of this August can conjure up past Festivals. The first, in 1934, was held in a horse-show ring on an estate in the village of Interlaken. It was suggested by the late Henry Hadley, who conducted a pick-up orchestra, with two thousand listeners sitting on rough benches under the stars. A canvas tent, set up as rain insurance in 1935, saved the final concert that year when a deluge soaked the horse-show ring. The Festival acquired the cooperation of Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony in 1936, and it took place at another estate. Then Tanglewood was deeded to the Boston Symphony in 1937 on condition that it play at the Festival each year.

Most of all, veterans will talk of the night of the storm, as Noah and his crew must have reminisced. The Boston Symphony was playing under a huge circus tent to five thousand people. As Koussevitzky began "The Siegfried Idyl," the storm broke. While the rain poured in at the sides, people huddled toward the heart of the tent. A leak developed, rain pouring in on the box-holders. Streaks of lightning lit up the faces. The thunder blotted out Wagner. Koussevitzky stopped, tried again, and then stopped. There was a long wait. In the rear of the tent, a group of young people began singing college songs. Afraid of panic, Dr. Koussevitzky came out to conduct "The Ride of the Valkyries." Never will this savage, elemental music be heard again in such a setting. As the Valkyrs' wild horses whinnied fiercely in the strings, as the defiant calls of the heroic maidens poured from the brasses, the rain, the lightning, the thunder set the stage.

At last, the rain stopped. The concert was finished. Beautifully gowned women waded through the mud in bare feet, carrying their spattered shoes.

(Continued on page 73)

THE ORCHESTRA REHEARSES

HEADQUARTERS: HAWTHORNE'S OLD HOME

COOKING AT A MUSICIAN'S COTTAGE

MUSIC IN THE BERKSHIRES

(Continued from page 31) Box-holders told of the mice that entertained them during the height of the storm. Strangers offered to drive home people whose cars were stuck for the night. And through it all, the crowd talked and laughed.

But in the conductor's quarters, Koussevitzky was still tense; now he was livid instead of red-faced. He told several Board members that he never liked the tent, that he had agreed to it this year against his judgment and would only finish out this Festival because so many people were in the Berkshires for it. The next day, however, a decision was taken to build a shed, and a campaign was launched. In a short time, eighty thousand dollars were raised, and the shed was ready for 1938. During the Festival of 1938, incidentally, it did not rain.

Because so many workers give their services, the Festival (this year, the concerts are given on August third, fifth, sixth, tenth, twelfth, and thirteenth) pays for itself. There was a deficit in the first two years, made up by private guarantors. But when the Boston Symphony Orchestra came in, the Festival paid its costs. The budget for this year, for example, is about fifty thousand dollars, which pays for the orchestra and for a small administrative and ground staff.

There is the rivalry between townships to absorb a greater share of the Festival's glory. Although the Festival office is in Stockbridge, the neighbouring town of Lenox offered to turn over its Town Hall to the Festival for its year-round offices, rent free. But Stockbridge people bettered that offer, and gave the Festival its present offices not only rent free, but threw in a little lagnappe.

People who attend the Berkshire Festival, especially the Sunday-afternoon concerts, come en famille, taking a picnic lunch and making a day of it. Some drive two hundred miles for one concert, and they come from towns and farms where music of this calibre is to be heard only on the radio. Many people follow scores. And when the sun is warm, young couples sprawl on the grass outside the shell. The acoustics are wonderful, and the music can be heard clearly a hundred yards away.

The subscribers love it. They are invited to a rehearsal on Friday mornings, and two thousand of them watch orchestra and conductor practise. Koussevitzky stops the men from time to time, and once or twice he bawls them out. An instrumentalist once told me that nothing had gone wrong during the rehearsal and that you could see, if you looked closely, a twinkle in the conductor's eye as he bawled out the men. There is no twinkle when Koussevitzky is really mad.

The orchestra players look forward to the annual pilgrimage to Tanglewood. A number of them set up tents on the edge of Lake Makheenac, cook their own meals, and rough it for the fortnight. Apparently they think of Tanglewood in the off-season. Visitors one Sunday morning recently heard the notes of a flute coming from the garden. They discovered that a member of the Orchestra had driven from Boston to visit Tanglewood. There he sat on a bench amid the spring blooms, tooting away, wanting only the costume of Pan and perhaps dryads to make the scene look like a painting by Fragonard.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 16 1939

ANNUAL BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Forthcoming Season Promises to Maintain High Standards of The Past—Academy Proposed for Next Year

By OLIN DOWNES

ADVANCE information of the forthcoming Berkshire Music Festival held annually at Stockbridge, Mass., and given by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony, under the presidency of Gertrude Robinson, is significant of the remarkable development of this institution and its place in American culture.

From the practical point of view—a consideration that must profoundly affect any artistic undertaking—there is the certainty that the festival will again balance its budget, with a margin to spare, as it has in each of the past three seasons since the ministrations of the festival have been in the hands of the famous conductor and orchestra.

This is apparently the one American music festival which has a consistent record of fully paying its way. Its expenses, last season, were about fifty-nine thousand dollars. This season they will be approximately sixty-one thousand, partly on account of improvement of the grounds at Tanglewood for the convenience of patrons of the concerts.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is more than fortunate in the noble gift of these grounds, which it received from Mrs. Gorham Brooks in 1936. Requisite space and permanence of a home for the festival would in themselves have been a princely boon, but the beauty of the festival's surroundings constitutes a setting well-nigh ideal for its traditions and purposes. Against this background the conditions for performance are improved with each season that passes. In the first two years of the Boston Symphony's incumbency the concerts were given under a tent. Last year the Music Shed, open at the sides, but provided with shutters for use in event of bad weather, was erected and proved eminently suitable for requirements. The Shed seats 5,726 people. It is now evident, from advance subscriptions proportionately greater than those of the same time last year, that again the festival will be able to accommodate late comers only with standing room.

* * *

Statistics such as these are ordinarily reserved for financial reports or final paragraphs of newspaper articles. They are advanced here because they demonstrate so strikingly the development of artistic standards and of public taste for music in America. They show that it is perfectly possible to institute a series of performances of the highest quality and the most serious purpose, and find for them a public and a method of self-maintenance. In this undertaking there is no element of cheapness, sensationalism or misleading press-agentry. There is no "concession," as it is often put, to popular taste. The public taste is consulted in so far as the body of a repertory consisting chiefly of masterworks of proved popularity is concerned, but this does not preclude the occasional orchestral novelty, or the prevailingly modern tone of the programs. The only thing offered is great orchestral music, greatly performed. Very seldom has a soloist appeared with the orchestra, and then only as a component part of a symphonic ensemble, or as Mr. Richard Hale will appear this coming season as the Narrator in the delicious whimsy of Prokofieff, "Peter and the Wolf"; a humorous masterpiece in childlike vein which has proved an ornament in the past two seasons of the Boston Symphony's Winter programs. The Berkshire Festival performances give added and conclusive evidence that the greatest soloist is the modern orchestra in the hands of a master musician and interpreter. No other attractions have been necessary. No orchestral series has offered truer evidence of the evolution of the taste of American audiences from the days, still within memory, when an orchestral season without great soloists was an impossibility. Indeed, it seems still an impossibility, under certain conductors, with certain orchestras.

* * *

It can justly be said that the symphonic audiences of today are learning to listen to great music and love it for its own sake and not for the sake of some glittering personality among conductors. At the same time it pays not to underestimate—indeed, one can hardly overrate—the importance of a master interpreter. A "practical" manager, or press-agent, will state cynically that one thing, and one thing only, will bring the great public to the support of a symphonic organization—namely, a virtuoso leader of international glamour and fame. The other school of thought will express its scorn of this kind of exhibitionism and savagely take to task those who eye a conductor instead of listening solely for the sake of the music. Does not the truth lie between the two extremes? Cheap and pretentious virtuosity, playing to the gallery, etc., are pernicious. But great interpretation is utterly essential to music's complete realization.

* * *

This is not a point upon which we can afford to fool ourselves. When the music really speaks, when, in a word, it is really itself, is when the performance reveals the true intensity and beauty of the composer's thought, which is never done except by masterly and inspired presentation. With a detail of such interpretation, or the technical superiority of this over that performance, or with profounder matters regarding a conductor's conception of a score, there can well be differences of opinion. But not concession where quality enters. The standards of the Berkshire Festival are of the highest. The public knows this and is correspondingly generous with its patronage.

Another aspect of the Berkshire Music Festival, a proposed future phase of its activities, should prove to be of unprecedented importance. This is the "academy" of music which Dr. Koussevitzky has been planning for years as an adjunct of the performances of the orchestra. Details of the conception have yet to be put in final form. The extent to which this academy or—as it might be proper to describe it—institution for post-graduate work in music will be developed in its first season is yet to be determined, but ground has been broken for activities next Summer, and definite announcement of its plans may be expected before the end of this one.

* * *

The courses will be devoted in considerable part to the complete training of young conductors who have talent and substantial studies already to their credit. But the academy will have broader aims than these, and it will be extremely interesting to discover their development in terms of practical instruction and training in ensemble and musicianship. The conception of the school involves the establishment, from the student body, of a chorus to be trained in sight-singing and interpretation, with a sound theoretical background, and experience in actual performance with the orchestra. There will be lessons for advanced orchestral players by first-desk members of the Boston Symphony. There will be study of repertory, lectures upon these and related subjects, "laboratory" work under the direct supervision of the leader. The school will not compete with the work done by established Summer schools of music in America, but will present certain rounded plans for the specialized development of young musicians.

This project would appear as a logical step in the development of the Berkshire Music Festival. It is planned to begin three weeks in advance of the three-week season of the Boston Symphony performances. It has unique possibilities for the development of musicians and music in America.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

JUL 16 1939

Berkshire Festival

Single Ticket Sale Opens Next Thursday

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival announces that reservations for single concerts in this summer's series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at [redacted], Lenox, Mass., are being accepted at the festival office in Stockbridge, Mass., and will be filled beginning next Thursday. As already announced, the concerts under Serge Koussevitzky's direction will be held on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, Aug. 3, 5, 6, 10, 12 and 13.

Among artistic events in the Berkshire region during the festival period are programs by Ted Shawn and his men dancers in [redacted], Mass., plays at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge, chamber music at South Mountain, Pittsfield, Mass and Falls Village, Conn., and art exhibitions in the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield. Other points of interest include the Berkshire Garden Center in Stockbridge, the Pleasant Valley Bird and Wild Flower Sanctuary in Lenox and the Mission House at Stockbridge.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 17 1939

THREE EXHIBITIONS AT BERKSHIRE MUSEUM SET FOR AUGUST

In line with the general policy of art museums to show "topical" ex-[redacted] particularly in the summer time, when the turnover of shows is slower than in other seasons, the Berkshire museum, under the direction of Miss Laura Bragg, will hold three exhibitions during the period of the Berkshire symphonic festival, August 3-13.

One of the three will comprise 40 of the paintings and wash-drawings of the Boston symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky while in rehearsal, [redacted]ason. The exhibition will open the 26th, with two others, at the midsummer reception given annually by the director and trustees.

The other shows will be the annual Berkshire national photographic exhibition, held under the auspices of the Berkshire Museum Camera club, and a collection of oils, water colors and drawings by New York artists, assembled under the heading, "The World of Today."

Other summer exhibitions in New England include a "utilitarian art" show of early New England work at the George Walter Vincent Smith gallery in this city, and the following galleries are also exhibiting special collections: Addison Gallery of American Art, Andover; Institute of Modern Art, Boston; Fogg Art museum, Cambridge; Yale Gallery of Fine Arts; Rhode Island School of Design (Providence) and the Worcester Art museum. At the latter may be seen prints from the Goodspeed collection of American prints which was acquired by the museum in 1910.

THIS CLIPPING FROM ✓
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 17 1939

CITY NEWS

40 SKETCHES OF SYMPHONY STARS WILL BE SHOWN

Berkshire Museum to Have Greason Exhibit; Camera Club Show

One of the three large exhibitions of national importance to be held during the period of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Aug. 3 to Aug. 13, at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield, will be 40 of the ~~paintings~~ and wash drawing of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky while in rehearsa[redacted] Greason.

Delighted Boston

This exhibition, which delighted Boston when shown in Symphony Hall the past winter, opens July 26, with two others, at the midsummer reception given annually by the trustees and the director of the museum, Miss Laura Bragg. The museum is open weekdays from 10 to 5, except Monday, and on Sundays from 2 to 5. The public is invited. There is no admission fee.

Another exhibition of national importance to be viewed privately at the reception and then open for a period extending through the Festival will be the second annual Berkshire National Photographic Exhibition, held under the auspices of the Berkshire Museum Camera Club.

Largest Exhibition

The largest exhibition, and in a way the most memorable ever held at the museum, will continue until after Labor Day. It is "The World of Today," oils, water colors, gouaches, drawings and prints by New York artists. The exhibition was organized by Elizabeth McCausland of New York City.

Visitors may have the thrill of registering on a mahogany writing desk used by Nathaniel Hawthorne while he lived at Tanglewood, another Festival contact. If of literary inclination, they may see the "One-Hoss Shay," immortalized by Oliver Wendell Holmes, and a trundle bed which held little Melvilles during nights when father Herman Melville was writing the great novel "Moby Dick." "Moby Dick," by the way, is pictured on a wall of the biology room.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 17 1939

BERKSHIRE MUSEUM PLANS EXHIBITION

One of the three large exhibitions of national importance to be held during the period of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, August 3 to 13, at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield, will be 40 of the paintings and wash-drawings of the Boston [redacted]phony Orchestra and [redacted] Koussevitzky while in rehearsal, by Donald Greason.

Delighted Boston

This exhibition, which delighted Boston when shown in Symphony Hall the past winter, opens July 26, with two others, at the mid-summer reception given annually by the trustees and the director of the museum, Miss Laura Bragg. These three exhibitions are another evidence of the cooperative spirit of the Berkshire region in an effort to provide interesting, entertaining and cultural attraction for the hundreds of visitors who will be here for the sixth annual Festival. The museum is open week days from 10 to 5, except Monday, and on Sundays from 2 to 5. The public is invited. There is no admission fee.

Another exhibition of national importance to be viewed privately at the reception and then open for a period extending through the Festival will be the second annual Berkshire National Photographic Exhibition, held under the auspices of the Berkshire Museum Camera Club, an affiliated organization where experienced photographers not only work together but maintain teaching courses for beginners.

Largest Exhibition

The largest exhibition, and in a way the most memorable ever held at the museum, will continue until after Labor Day. It is "The World of Today," oils, water-colors, gouaches, drawings, and prints by New York artists. The exhibition was organized by Elizabeth McCausland of New York City, who is recognized as without a superior in her power to discriminate and evaluate among the works of contemporary artists.

The museum is now completing a reorganization. Students are sent to see it from the far reaches of the world—South Africa, Australia, New Zealand, China, Europe and the islands. Its art collections are distinguished and its science exhibitions have features not to be seen elsewhere in the world, for example, the Biology Room, just completed, where the walls have been painted in unique fashion by Helen Damrosch Tee-Van, of the musical Damrosch family.

Hawthorne Desk at Museum

Visitors may have the thrill of registering on a mahogany writing desk used by Nathaniel Hawthorne while he lived at Tanglewood—another Festival contact. If of literary inclination, they may see the "One-Hoss Shay," immortalized by Oliver Wendell Holmes, and a trundle bed which held little Melvilles during nights when father Herman Melville was writing the great novel "Moby Dick." "Moby Dick," by the way, is pictured on a wall of the Biology room.

Information concerning the exhibitions or the concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be supplied gladly by the Festival office at Stockbridge.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

JUL 17 1939

BOSTON SYMPHONY PAINTINGS TO BE EXHIBITED SOON

One of the three large exhibitions of national importance to be seen during the period of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, August 3 to August 13 at the Berkshire Museum, will be 40 of the paintings and wash-drawings of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky while in rehearsal, by Donald Greason.

This exhibition which delighted Boston when shown in Symphony Hall the past winter opens July 26 with two others at the mid-summer reception given annually by the trustees and the director of the Museum, Miss Laura Bragg. These three exhibitions are another evidence of the co-operative spirit of the Berkshire region in an effort to provide interesting, entertaining and cultural attractions for the hundreds of visitors who will be here for the sixth annual Festival. The Museum is open week days from 10 to 5 except Monday and on Sundays from 2 to 5. The public is invited. There is no admission fee.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 18 1939

Berkshire Exhibits To Include Boston Symphony Drawings

One of the three large exhibitions during the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Aug. 3 to Aug. 13, at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield, will be 40 of the paintings and wash-drawings of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky while in rehearsal, by Donald Greason.

This exhibition, which delighted Boston when shown in Symphony Hall the past winter, opens July 26, with two others will open at the mid-summer reception given annually by the trustees and the director of the museum, Miss Laura Bragg. These three exhibitions are another evidence of the co-operative spirit of the Berkshire region to Berkshire region in an effort to provide attractions for the hundreds of visitors who will be here for the sixth annual Festival. The museum is open week days from 10 to 5, except Monday, and on Sundays from 2 to 5. The public is invited. There is no admission fee.

Photographic Exhibit

Another exhibition of national importance to be viewed privately at the reception and then open for a period extending through the Festival will be the second annual Berkshire National Photographic Exhibition, held under auspices of the Berkshire Museum Camera Club, an affiliated organization where experienced photographers not only work together but maintain teaching courses for beginners.

The largest exhibition will continue until after Labor Day. It is "The World of Today," oils, water-colors, gouaches, drawings and prints by New York artists. The exhibition was organized by Elizabeth McCausland of New York City.

Museum Reorganized

The museum is now completing a reorganization. Students are sent to see it from the far reaches of the world.

Its art collections are distinguished and its science exhibitions have features not to be seen elsewhere in the world, for example, the biology room, just completed, where the walls have been painted by Helen Damrosch Tee-Van, of the musical Damrosch family.

Visitors may register on a mahogany writing desk used by Nathaniel Hawthorne while he lived at Tanglewood, another Festival contact. If of literary inclination, they may see the "One-Hoss Shay", immortalized by Oliver Wendell Holmes, and a trundle bed which held little Melvilles during nights when father Herman Melville was writing "Moby Dick".

Information concerning the exhibitions or the concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be supplied by the Festival office at Stockbridge, Mass.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
JOURNAL

JUL 20 1939

FESTIVAL TICKETS TO BE SOLD SINGLY

Because of the interest of a number of music lovers coming from distances who wish to include one or more concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood in their visit to New England and the New York World's Fair, reservations for single concerts are being accepted by the festival office at Stockbridge, Mass.

They are now being filled. Tanglewood, home of the festival, on Route 183 between Stockbridge and Lenox, is only three hours by motor from the Fair.

The demand for reservations for both series of concerts to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, continues brisk with a marked increase in the number of reservations from Canada and the mid-west. The concert dates are August 3, 5 and 6; August 10, 12 and 13.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER

JUL 18 1939

Three Art Exhibits Planned During Berkshire Festival

One of the three large exhibitions of national importance to be held during the period of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, August 3 to August 13, at the Berkshire museum in Pittsfield, Mass., will be 40 of the paintings and wash-drawings of the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky while in rehearsal, by Donald Greason. This exhibition opens July 26, with two others, at the midsummer reception given annually by the trustees and the director of the museum, Miss Laura Bragg. The museum is open week days from 10 to 5, except Monday, and on Sundays from 2 to 5. The public is invited.

Another exhibition of national importance to be viewed privately at the reception and then open for a period extending through the festival will be the second annual Berkshire National Photographic exhibition, held under the auspices of the Berkshire Museum Camera club, an affiliated organization where experienced photographers not only work together but maintain teaching courses for beginners.

The largest exhibition which will continue until after Labor Day is "The World of Today," oils, watercolors, gouaches, drawings and prints by New York artists.

The walls of the museum's biology room, just completed have been painted by Helen Damrosch Tee-Van, of the musical Damrosch family.

Visitors may register on a mahogany writing desk used by Nathanial Hawthorne while he lived at Tanglewood, may view the "One-Hoss Shay" immortalized by Oliver Wendell Holmes, and a trundle bed which held little Melvilles during nights when father Herman Melville was writing the great novel "Moby Dick." "Moby Dick" is pictured on a wall of the biology room.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

JUL 21 1939

To Display Paintings and Drawings At Berkshire Music Festival.

One of the three large exhibitions of national importance to be held during the period of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Aug. 3 to Aug. 13, at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield, Mass., will be 40 of the paintings and wash-drawings of the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky while in rehearsal, by Donald Greason. This exhibition, which delighted Boston when shown in Symphony hall the past winter, opens July 26, with two others, at the midsummer reception given annually by the trustees and the director of the museum, Miss Laura Bragg

Another exhibition of national importance to be viewed privately at the reception and then open for a period extending through the festival will be the second annual Berkshire National Photographic exhibition, held under the auspices of the Berkshire Museum Camera club, an affiliated organization where experienced photographers not only work together but maintain teaching courses for beginners. The largest exhibition, and in a way the most memorable ever held at the museum, will continue until after Labor day. It is "The World of Today," oils, water colors, gouaches, drawings, and prints by New York artists.

Visitors may have the thrill of registering on a mahogany writing desk used by Nathaniel Hawthorne while he lived at Tanglewood—another festival contact. If of literary inclination, they may see the "One Hoss Shay," immortalized by Oliver Wendell Holmes, and a trundle bed which held little Melvilles during nights when father Herman Melville was writing the great novel "Moby Dick." "Moby Dick," by the way, is pictured on a wall of the Biology room.

Information concerning the exhibitions or the concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra will be supplied gladly by the festival office at Stockbridge, Mass.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CLEVELAND, O.
PRESS

JUL 21 1939

All Walks of Life Go to Berkshire Festival

New England Towns All Send Quota to Williamstown

By WINSOR FRENCH

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass., July 21—The annual Berkshire Festival takes place at Stockbridge, Mass., at Tanglewood, once upon a time the impressive estate of that great man of letters, Nathaniel Hawthorne.

Nothing quite like it happens anywhere else in the country and regardless of the fact it is only about to commence its sixth season it has already assumed its traditions, rich anecdotage and is every bit as important as the musical magnets that draw thousands of people to Central Europe every summer.

The Berkshire Festival takes place during the first two weeks in August with the great Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a series of six concerts.

Stories Legend

Originally, the concerts used to be held in a vast circus tent and the stories of those historic evenings are now legend—nights when the musicians could hardly be heard above the rain and when sudden and terrific thunderstorms threatened real panic.

Now, however, the festival has become a communal enterprise. Tanglewood has been given to the Boston Orchestra as a permanent home, and if the good people of Stockbridge are still unable to curb the elements, at least they have erected a proper theater, eliminated the parking problem and done everything within their power to make the music lovers as comfortable as possible. Make no mistake, however, these musical evenings are not patterned solely for the entertainment of the moneyed, or anything like it.

Gingham and Silk

Koussevitzky conducts wearing tails and a white tie, station wagons, sleek, silent town cars and snappy roadsters emerge from the secluded gates of large estates and the wealthy and fashionable are in evidence but it is still far from their show. Men, women and children come from miles around—farmers in overalls and their wives in crisp, clean gingham. The hotels literally push the dinner hour forward so the waitresses and bus boys can be on time and the ladies of the town try to swell their club's coffers by selling soft drinks and various homemade delicacies at roadside stands.

From a musical standpoint, however, the concerts are in no sense popular. Far from aloof, Koussevitzky even allows subscribers to attend rehearsals but once he raises his baton and an almost magic hush falls over some 5000 people, the music that pours forth into the warm, kinetic summer evening is not for those who believe the ultimate was achieved when Victor Herbert dashed off "Kiss Me Again."

Unfortunately there is no space here for detailed descriptions of Tanglewood, what has already been achieved or the plans for the future. Plans there are, however, and they include a school for conductors and advanced, highly specialized students of music.

Success Seems Assured

Personally, I don't see how it can possibly fail. Determined New Englanders are in back of the project for all they are worth and just try and cross a New Englander.

The citizens of Stockbridge and the other neighboring towns don't merely give it their attention during the summer season, but throughout the year. Volunteer workers tend the grounds, contact the press and solicit subscribers for miles around. To describe their efforts as successful is putting it mildly.

There is a bicycle for every station wagon that goes forth on the evenings when Koussevitzky is about to go to work and the man or woman on the bicycle, you will discover, usually carries a score.

This year the concerts will take place on Aug. 3, 5, 6, 10, 12 and 13.

Reservations for seats for the concerts, individual or for the two series, may be made by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., and the prices will hardly disturb your budget.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUL 22 1939

Summer Set to Music

On August 3rd the Berkshires will usher in their sixth Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, halfway between Stockbridge and Lenox.

There will be two series of concerts—the first (Series A) on August 3rd, 5th, and 6th; the second (Series B) on the 10th, 12th, and 13th. The weekday concerts will be in the evenings at 8:30, and the Sunday concerts at 3:30 in the afternoon—an excellent arrangement for those who can go up for a long weekend, get plenty of favorite sport, and be back in New York Monday morning if necessary.

The concerts are given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky and are held in the new music shed, designed by Finnish Eliel Saarinen. All the seats are reserved, so that you don't have to rush from dinner to secure a good place. The prices for each series are $3, $4.50, $6, and $7.50, depending on the location of the seat.

Stay for both series if you can, for you'll be sure of a delightful Summer holiday. The big hotels in the immediate vicinity are Heaton Hall and the Red Lion Inn, with its famous collection of antiques, at Stockbridge; the Berkshire Inn at Great Barrington, and the Curtis House at Lenox. The prices at these hotels range from $6 to $7 a day and up per person, American plan. There are two smaller, but perfectly delightful old inns three miles from Great Barrington—the Olde Egremont Tavern and the Egremont Inn, both at South Egremont. The rates are a little less than at the hotels, and the inns are quaint and intimate with a nice blending of Colonial atmosphere and modern plumbing.

For a place that is original and unconventional in a smart, sophisticated manner we recommend the Jug End Barn, also at South Egremont. It is an enormous stock barn made over into an unique hostelry. Non-members' reservations must be accompanied by a letter of introduction from a member or former guest. The rates for them are $3.50 and $4.50.

There is a quite simple but very comfortable hotel at Stockbridge, the Oak Lawn Inn. Not many of the rooms have private baths, but all of them have running water and the rates are extremely reasonable—from $3 a day, American plan. At Hillsdale, N. Y., a few miles from South Egremont, is a very beautiful old Colonial house, the Elmwood Inn. It takes only a few guests, but if you're interested in fine old houses you'll enjoy staying there. Rates on application (about $4 a day).

At Stockbridge, Lenox, Great Barrington, and South Egremont there is plenty of golf, from the semi-public 9-hole course at Stockbridge where you can play for 50c a day, to the 18-hole Club course, open to hotel guests, with greens fees of $1.50 and $2 a day. Swimming is in the Stockbridge Bowl, lakes, and abandoned quarries. Bicycles rent for 25c an hour or $2 a week—it's a fine free wheeling country. The rates for riding horses range from $1 to $2 an hour depending on where you're staying. Tennis is on dirt or clay courts, usual charge $1 for two hours. There's no charge at all for the dirt court at Oak Lawn.

The Berkshires are about 125 miles from New York and there are two excellent motor routes. You can take the Hutchinson River and Merritt Parkways to Norwalk, and Route 7 straight through to Great Barrington, Stockbridge, and Lenox. Or you can take the Eastern States Parkway to Arthursburg, No. 82 from Arthursburg to Milbrook, No. 44 from Milbrook to Canaan, and No. 7 from Canaan onward. For Hillsdale and South Egremont use the Eastern States Parkway, Routes 82 and 44 to Millerton, 22 to Hillsdale, and 23 from Hillsdale to South Egremont. Part of the Parkway is under construction, but it's passable.

By train you take the Berkshire Division of the New Haven Railroad. The fare is $2.98 to Great Barrington, $3.19 to Stockbridge, and $3.60 to Lenox. There is a station at Hillsdale (fare $2.75) near the Elmwood Inn and only two miles from South Egremont.

—PAMELA PRATT FORBES

Editorial Note: To make sure of accommodations, make reservations ahead and send references. Many inns and hotels require them. Or make your reservations through your travel bureau.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 18 1939

Berkshire Exhibits To Include Boston Symphony Drawings

One of the three large exhibitions during the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Aug. 3 to Aug. 13, at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield, will be 40 of the paintings and wash-drawings of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky while in rehearsal, by Donald Greason.

This exhibition, which delighted Boston when shown in Symphony Hall the past winter, opens July 26, with two others will open at the mid-summer reception given annually by the trustees and the director of the museum, Miss Laura Bragg. These three exhibitions are another evidence of the co-operative spirit of the Berkshire region to Berkshire region in an effort to provide attractions for the hundreds of visitors who will be here for the sixth annual Festival. The museum is open week days from 10 to 5, except Monday, and on Sundays from 2 to 5. The public is invited. There is no admission fee.

Photographic Exhibit

Another exhibition of national importance to be viewed privately at the reception and then open for a period extending through the Festival will be the second annual Berkshire National Photographic Exhibition, held under auspices of the Berkshire Museum Camera Club, an affiliated organization where experienced photographers not only work together but maintain teaching courses for beginners.

The largest exhibition will continue until after Labor Day. It is "The World of Today," oils, water-colors, gouaches, drawings and prints by New York artists. The exhibition was organized by Elizabeth McCausland of New York City.

Museum Reorganized

The museum is now completing a reorganization. Students are sent to see it from the far reaches of the world.

Its art collections are distinguished and its science exhibitions have features not to be seen elsewhere in the world, for example, the biology room, just completed, where the walls have been painted by Helen Damrosch Tee-Van, of the musical Damrosch family.

Visitors may register on a mahogany writing desk used by Nathaniel Hawthorne while he lived at Tanglewood, another Festival contact. If of literary inclination, they may see the "One-Hoss Shay", immortalized by Oliver Wendell Holmes, and a trundle bed which held little Melvilles during nights when father Herman Melville was writing "Moby Dick".

Information concerning the exhibitions or the concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be [illegible] by the Festival office at Stockbridge, Mass.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
JOURNAL
Rockville Conn
JUL 20 1939

FESTIVAL TICKETS TO BE SOLD SINGLY

Because of the interest of a number of music lovers coming from distances who wish to include one or more concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood in their visit to New England and the New York World's Fair, reservations for single concerts are being accepted by the festival office at Stockbridge, Mass.

They are now being filled. Tanglewood, home of the festival, on Route 183 between Stockbridge and Lenox, is only three hours by motor from the Fair.

The demand for reservations for [illegible] series of concerts to be played [illegible] Boston Symphony Orchestra, [illegible] conductor, con[illegible] a marked increase in [illegible] reservations from Canada [illegible] concert dates are A[illegible] August 10, 12 and 13.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER
JUL 18 1939

Three Art Exhibits Planned During Berkshire Festival

One of the three large exhibitions of national importance to be held during the period of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, August 3 to August 13, at the Berkshire museum in Pittsfield, Mass., will be 40 of the paintings and wash-drawings of the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky while in rehearsal, by Donald Greason. This exhibition opens July 26, with two others, at the midsummer reception given annually by the trustees and the director of the museum, Miss Laura Bragg. The museum is open week days from 10 to 5, except Monday, and on Sundays from 2 to 5. The public is invited.

Another exhibition of national importance to be viewed privately at the reception and then open for a period extending through the festival will be the second annual Berkshire National Photographic exhibition, held under the auspices of the Berkshire Museum Camera club, an affiliated organization where experienced photographers not only work together but maintain teaching courses for beginners.

The largest exhibition which will continue until after Labor Day is "The World of Today," oils, watercolors, gouaches, drawings and prints by New York artists.

The walls of the museum's biology room, just completed have been painted by Helen Damrosch Tee-Van, of the musical Damrosch family.

Visitors may register on a mahogany writing desk used by Nathanial Hawthorne while he lived at Tanglewood, may view the "One-Hoss Shay" immortalized by Oliver Wendell Holmes, and a trundle bed which held little Melvilles during nights when father Herman Melville was writing the great novel "Moby Dick." "Moby Dick" is pictured on a wall of the biology room.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE
JUL 21 1939

To Display Paintings and Drawings At Berkshire Music Festival.

One of the three large exhibitions of national importance to be held during the period of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Aug. 3 to Aug. 13, at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield, Mass., will be 40 of the paintings and wash-drawings of the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky while in rehearsal, by Donald Greason. This exhibition, which delighted Boston when shown in Symphony hall the past winter, opens July 26, with two others, at the midsummer reception given annually by the trustees and the director of the museum, Miss Laura Bragg

Another exhibition of national importance to be viewed privately at the reception and then open for a period extending through the festival will be the second annual Berkshire National Photographic exhibition, held under the auspices of the Berkshire Museum Camera club, an affiliated organization where experienced photographers not only work together but maintain teaching courses for beginners. The largest exhibition, and in a way the most memorable ever held at the museum, will continue until after Labor day. It is "The World of Today," oils, water colors, gouaches, drawings, and prints by New York artists.

Visitors may have the thrill of registering on a mahogany writing desk used by Nathaniel Hawthorne while he lived at Tanglewood—another festival contact. If of literary inclination, they may see the "One Hoss Shay," immortalized by Oliver Wendell Holmes, and a trundle bed which held little Melvilles during nights when father Herman Melville was writing the great novel "Moby Dick." "Moby Dick," by the way, is pictured on a wall of the Biology room.

Information concerning the exhibitions or the concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra will be supplied gladly by the festival office at Stockbridge, Mass.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CLEVELAND, O.
PRESS
JUL 21 1939

All Walks of Life Go to Berkshire Festival

New England Towns All Send Quota to Williamstown

By WINSOR FRENCH

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass., July 21—The annual Berkshire Festival takes place at Stockbridge, Mass., at Tanglewood, once upon a time the impressive estate of that great man of letters, Nathaniel Hawthorne.

Nothing quite like it happens anywhere else in the country and regardless of the fact it is only about to commence its sixth season it has already assumed its traditions, rich anecdotage and is every bit as important as the musical magnets that draw thousands of people to Central Europe every summer.

The Berkshire Festival takes place during the first two weeks in August with the great Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a series of six concerts.

Stories Legend

Originally, the concerts used to be held in a vast circus tent and the stories of those historic evenings are now legend—nights when the musicians could hardly be heard above the rain and when sudden and terrific thunderstorms threatened real panic.

Now, however, the festival has become a communal enterprise. Tanglewood has been given to the Boston Orchestra as a permanent home, and if the good people of Stockbridge are still unable to curb the elements, at least they have erected a proper theater, eliminated the parking problem and done everything within their power to make the music lovers as comfortable as possible. Make no mistake, however, these musical evenings are not patterned solely for the entertainment of the moneyed, or anything like it.

Gingham and Silk

Koussevitzky conducts wearing tails and a white tie, station wagons, sleek, silent town cars and snappy roadsters emerge from the secluded gates of large estates and the wealthy and fashionable are in evidence but it is still far from their show. Men, women and children come from miles around—farmers in overalls and their wives in crisp, clean gingham. The hotels literally push the dinner hour forward so the waitresses and bus boys can be on time and the ladies of the town try to swell their club's coffers by selling soft drinks and various homemade delicacies at roadside stands.

From a musical standpoint, however, the concerts are in no sense popular. Far from aloof, Koussevitzky even allows subscribers to attend rehearsals but once he raises his baton and an almost magic hush falls over some 5000 people, the music that pours forth into the warm, kinetic summer evening is not for those who believe the ultimate was achieved when Victor Herbert dashed off "Kiss Me Again."

Unfortunately there is no space here for detailed descriptions of Tanglewood, what has already been achieved or the plans for the future. Plans there are, however, and they include a school for conductors and advanced, highly specialized students of music.

Success Seems Assured

Personally, I don't see how it can possibly fail. Determined New Englanders are in back of the project for all they are worth and just try and cross a New Englander.

The citizens of Stockbridge and the other neighboring towns don't merely give it their attention during the summer season, but throughout the year. Volunteer workers tend the grounds, contact the press and solicit subscribers for miles around. To describe their efforts as successful is putting it mildly.

There is a bicycle for every station wagon that goes forth on the evenings when Koussevitzky is about to go to work and the man or woman on the bicycle, you will discover, usually carries a score.

This year the concerts will take place on Aug. 3, 5, 6, 10, 12 and 13.

Reservations for seats for the concerts, individual or for the two series, may be made by writing to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at [illegible] prices [illegible]

THIS CLIPPING FROM CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JUL 22 1939

Summer Set to Music

On August 3rd the Berkshires will usher in their sixth Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, halfway between Stockbridge and Lenox.

There will be two series of concerts—the first (Series A) on August 3rd, 5th, and 6th; the second (Series B) on the 10th, 12th, and 13th. The weekday concerts will be in the evenings at 8:30, and the Sunday concerts at 3:30 in the afternoon—an excellent arrangement for those who can go up for a long weekend, get plenty of favorite sport, and be back in New York Monday morning if necessary.

The concerts are given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky and are held in the new music shed, designed by Finnish Eliel Saarinen. All the seats are reserved, so that you don't have to rush from dinner to secure a good place. The prices for each series are $3, $4.50, $6, and $7.50, depending on the location of the seat.

Stay for both series if you can, for you'll be sure of a delightful Summer holiday. The big hotels in the immediate vicinity are Heaton Hall and the Red Lion Inn, with its famous collection of antiques, at Stockbridge; the Berkshire Inn at Great Barrington, and the Curtis House at Lenox. The prices at these hotels range from $6 to $7 a day and up per person, American plan. There are two smaller, but perfectly delightful old inns three miles from Great Barrington—the Olde Egremont Tavern and the Egremont Inn, both at South Egremont. The rates are a little less than at the hotels, and the inns are quaint and intimate with a nice blending of Colonial atmosphere and modern plumbing.

For a place that is original and unconventional in a smart, sophisticated manner we recommend the Jug End Barn, also at South Egremont. It is an enormous stock barn made over into an unique hostelry. Non-members' reservations must be accompanied by a letter of introduction from a member or former guest. The rates for them are $3.50 and $4.50.

There is a quite simple but very comfortable hotel at Stockbridge, the Oak Lawn Inn. Not many of the rooms have private baths, but all of them have running water and the rates are extremely reasonable—from $3 a day, American plan. At Hillsdale, N. Y., a few miles from South Egremont, is a very beautiful old Colonial house, the Elmwood Inn. It takes only a few guests, but if you're interested in fine old houses you'll enjoy staying there. Rates on application (about $4 a day).

At Stockbridge, Lenox, Great Barrington, and South Egremont there is plenty of golf, from the semi-public 9-hole course at Stockbridge where you can play for 50c a day, to the 18-hole Club course, open to hotel guests, with greens fees of $1.50 and $2 a day. Swimming is in the Stockbridge Bowl, lakes, and abandoned quarries. Bicycles rent for 25c an hour or $2 a week—it's a fine free wheeling country. The rates for riding horses range from $1 to $2 an hour depending on where you're staying. Tennis is on dirt or clay courts, usual charge $1 for two hours. There's no charge at all for the dirt court at Oak Lawn.

The Berkshires are about 125 miles from New York and there are two excellent motor routes. You can take the Hutchinson River and Merritt Parkways to Norwalk, and Route 7 straight through to Great Barrington, Stockbridge, and Lenox. Or you can take the Eastern States Parkway to Arthursburg, No. 82 from Arthursburg to Milbrook, No. 44 from Milbrook to Canaan, and No. 7 from Canaan onward. For Hillsdale and South Egremont use the Eastern States Parkway, Routes 82 and 44 to Millerton, 22 to Hillsdale, and 23 from Hillsdale to South Egremont. Part of the Parkway is under construction, but it's passable.

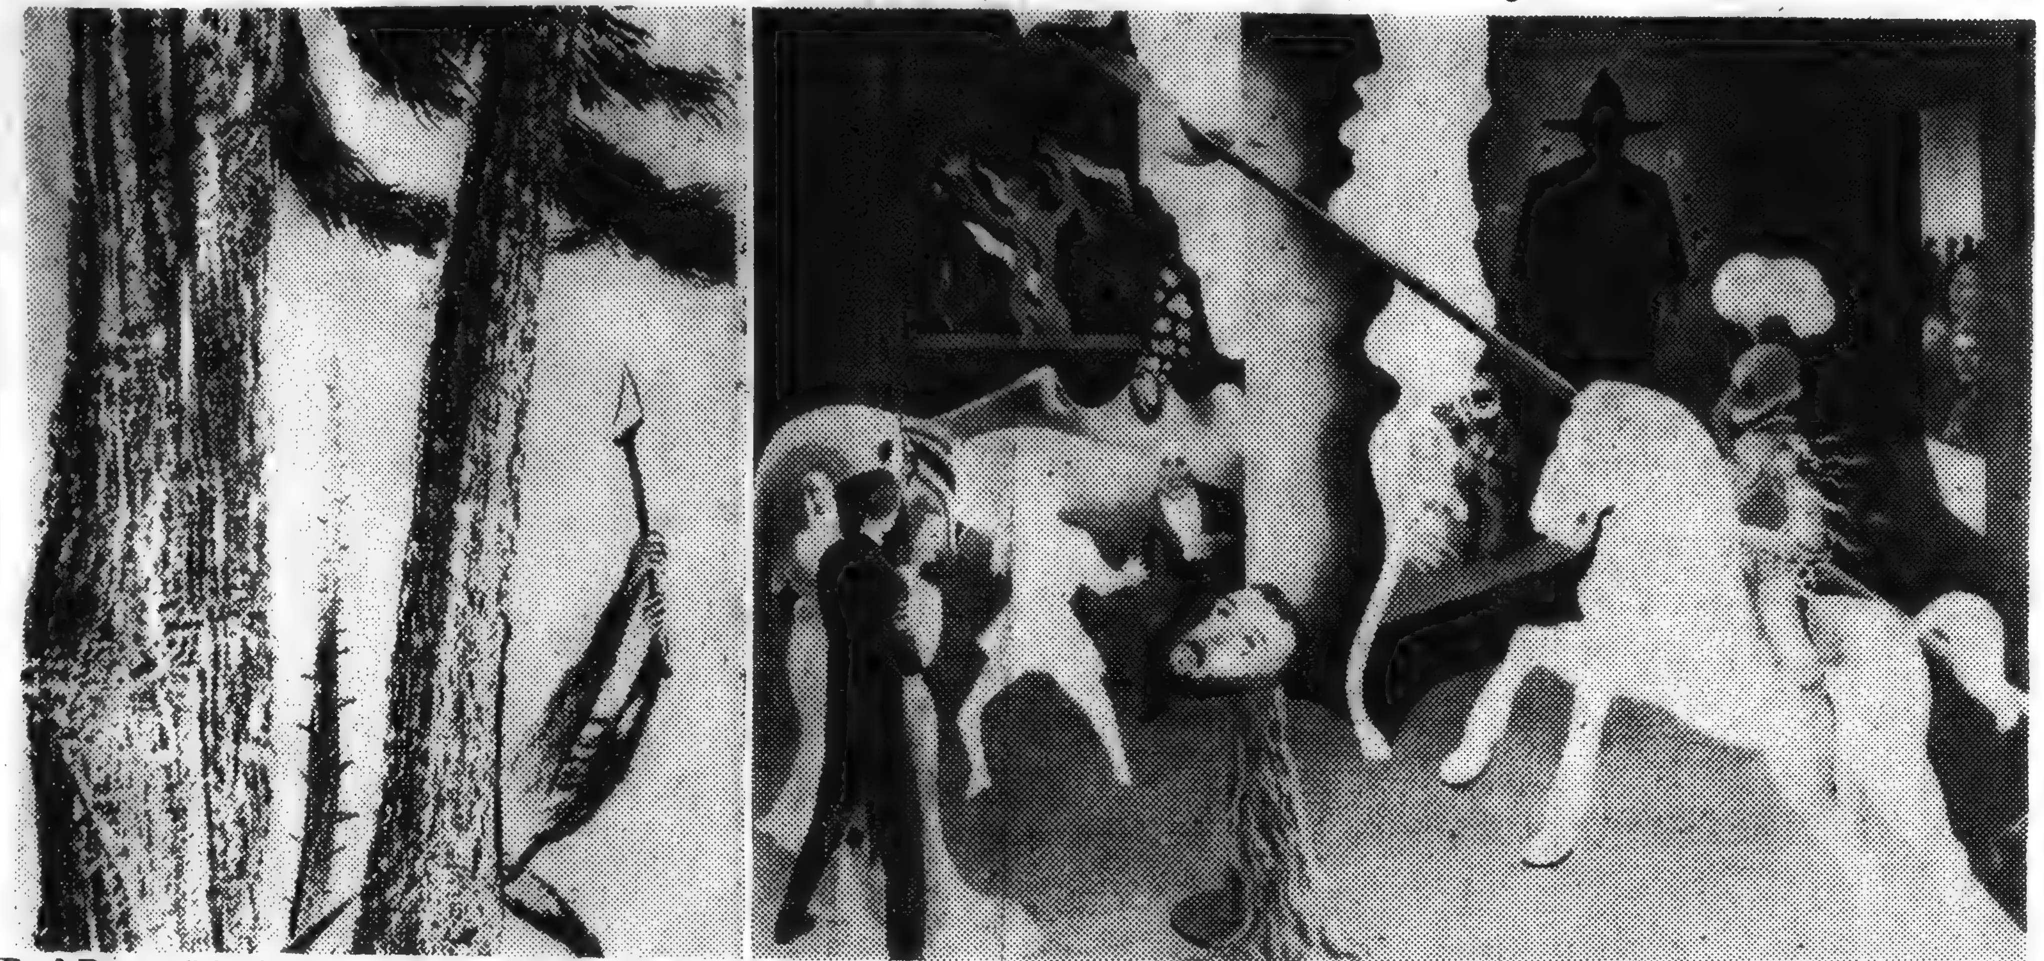
By train you take the Berkshire Division of the New Haven Railroad. The fare is $2.98 to Great Barrington, $3.19 to Stockbridge, and $3.60 to Lenox. There is a station at Hillsdale (fare $2.75) near the Elmwood Inn and only two miles from South Egremont.

—PAMELA PRATT FORBES

Editorial Note: To make sure of accommodations, make reservations ahead and send references. Many inns and hotels require them. Or make your reservations through your travel bureau.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
JUL 22 1939

Three Exhibits To Open at Museum Wednesday



"Paul Bunyan" is title of crayon cartoon at left by William Gropper, depicting the felling of forest giants, loaned through the ACA Gallery, New York. At right, is ultra-modernistic conception, "Death Rides the Horse of Uccello," by James Guy, from the Boyer Galleries, New York, which will be in the "World of Today" exhibit.

Photographs, Paintings To Be Displayed

Formal Reception Will Be Held Wednesday Night

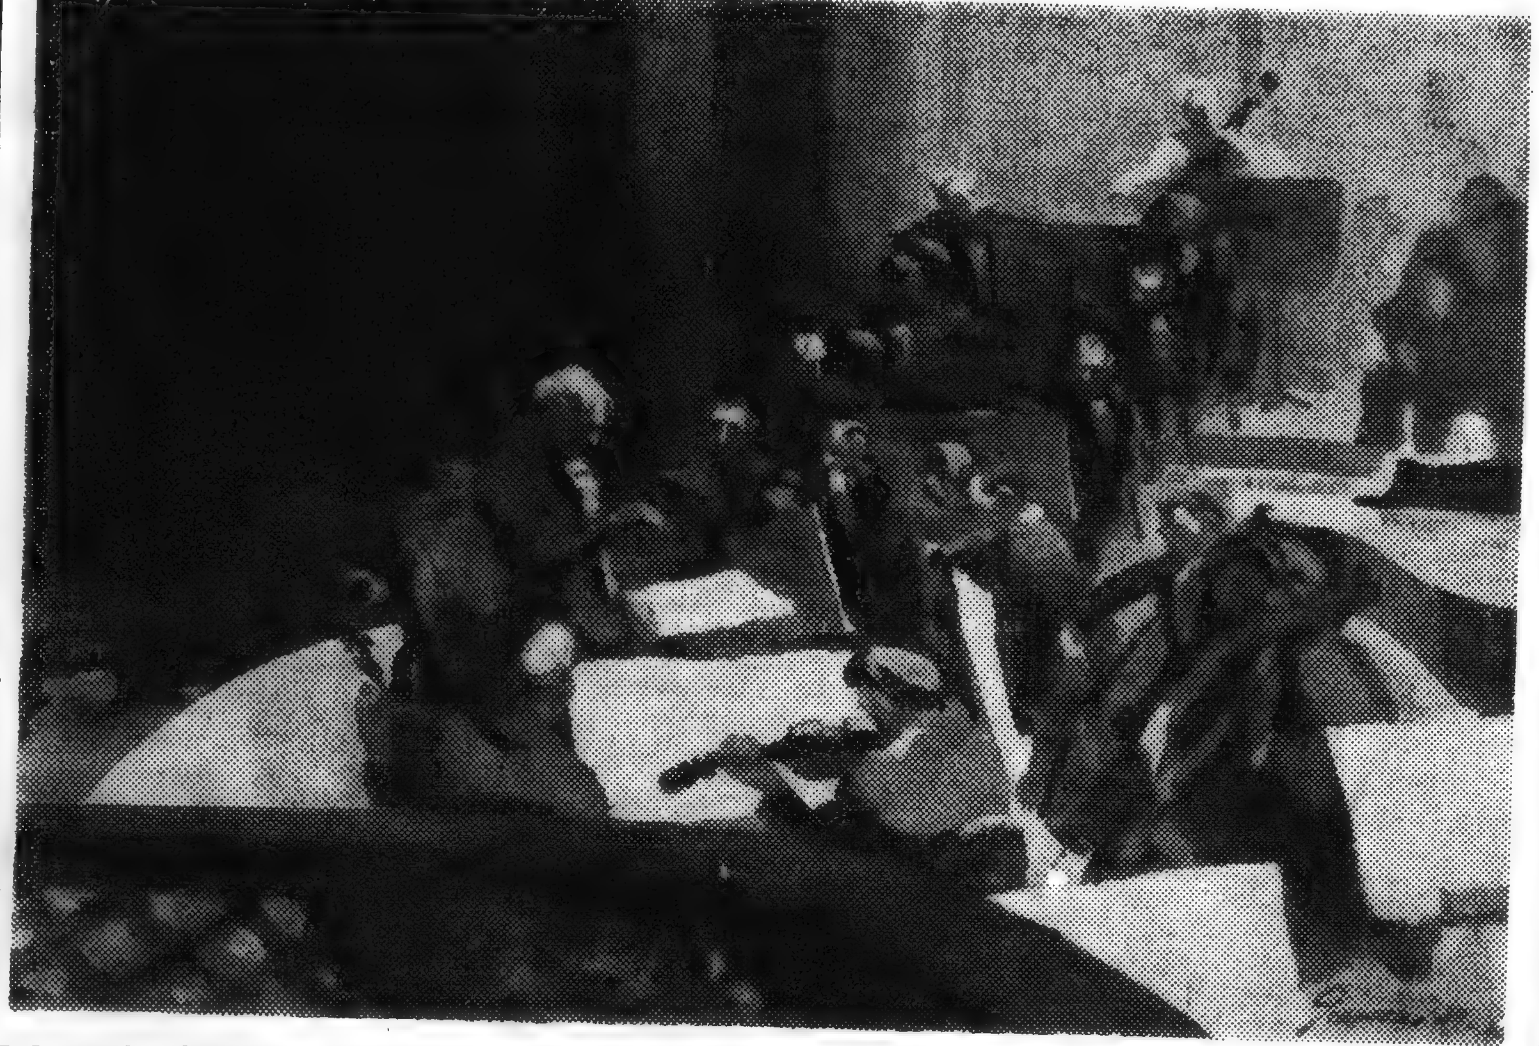
The season's principal art show at the Berkshire Museum, to open formally with a public view at the annual mid-summer reception Wednesday evening from 9 to 12, will consist of three major exhibitions, occupying several of the main picture galleries and covering an exceptionally wide range of media, subject matter and interest.

Included are a critic's selection of oils, water colors, gouaches, drawings and prints by more than 100 contemporary New York artists, called "The World of Today," arranged and hung under the supervision of Miss Elizabeth McCausland of Springfield, in the Ellen Crane Memorial room, the upper front hall and the two green-blue rooms; the Second Berkshire National Photographic Exhibition, consisting of a selection of about 100 prints from among 600 submitted by exhibition photographers throughout the country, arranged and hung by the Berkshire Museum Camera Club, in the Chinese room and modern gallery, and a large group of oil paintings, pen and wash drawings of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is to perform at the Sixth Berkshire Symphonic Festival during the next two weeks, by Donald Carlisle Greason, Boston artist, arranged and hung by the museum staff in the 19th century gallery.

New Media Included

"The World of Today" collection is given the major emphasis and will remain in place until Sept. 5, whereas the other two exhibitions will close Aug. 13. Besides the conventional media listed, there are several new ones in this group of pictures, and these are expected to attract interest. The entire collection is evocative, commensurate with its attempted scope representing typically modern trends in painting and related art. Some of the artists are well known in the contemporary advanced fields, while their works to be shown are regarded as offering unusual opportunity for study. They will bear special explanatory labels prepared by Miss McCausland.

The local showing of the Greason exhibit is important, not only because of the Boston Symphony's coming appearances here in an internationally spotlighted musical concert series, but as the first fully public exhibition of the significant group of paintings and drawings made by the artist in a year's attendance at morning rehearsals of the orchestra in darkened Symphony Hall. Heretofore, the Greason exhibit has been viewed only by concert goers at the Boston center, where they have elicited the commendation of metropolitan critics, all of whom have lamented that the pictures could not be placed on public display.



Balcony furnished the perspective for this painting of a section of the Boston Symphony under conductor's baton, by Donald C. Greason, lent by the Goodman-Walker Gallery, Boston.

Varied Impressions

The Greason pictures represent graphically recorded impressions of the moods and physical forms of the musicians in their outstanding performances of great symphonies. There are sketches of the conductor, the orchestra en masse, separate players, groups of players and soloists, from many viewpoints and in many lights. Mr. Greason, an overseas World War cavalryman, has attended the Academic Colarossi in Paris, painted in many countries of Europe, as well as at home, and in 1932 and 1933 was resident instructor of painting at the Addison Gallery of American Art, Phillips Academy, Andover.

Members of the Museum will receive at the Wednesday opening, as their initial participation in formal activities of the institution which they support. Besides the large general reception committee comprising the members, there is a refreshment committee consisting of Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller, assisted by Mrs. Alan Blau, Mrs. Laurence R. Connor and Mrs. Elmer A. Euston, while flowers for the opening will be arranged by Miss Emma Robbins.

Reception Group

The members forming the general reception committee are:

Dr. and Mrs. I. M. Altaraz, Mrs. William Felton Barrett, Miss Edith Bartlett, Mrs. Newton H. Bates, Mr. and Mrs. Alan J. Blau, Miss Marion H. Bryant, Mrs. William Norton Bullard, Miss Mabel Choate, Mrs. J. H. C. Church, Mr. J. H. Cox, Mrs. William Penn Cresson, Mrs. William E. Cushing, Mrs. David T. Dana, Miss Marion S. Davies, Mr. George H. Denison, Miss Mary Dewey, Mrs. Lucy W. Dodge, Mrs. George W. Edman, Dr. and Mrs. Albert C. England, Mr. Simon England, Miss Caroline C. Helm.

Mrs. Shaun Kelly, Miss Florence L. Lattimore, Miss Alice L. Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. McClaren, Miss Lizzie Lake MacNeil, Miss Dora J. Malcolm, Mrs. Ralph B. Marean, Mrs. Edwin Payson Merwin, Mrs. D. Percy Morgan, Mrs. George A. Newman, Mrs. Brace W. Paddock, Dr. Frank K. Paddock, Miss Mary Parsons, Miss Clara B. Beck, Mr. and Mrs. G. Franklin Pierce, Mr. Theodore M. Pomeroy, Miss Mary E. Porter, Mr. Edward D. Renouf, Dr. and Mrs. Austen Fox Riggs, Miss Emma R. Robbins, Miss Frances D. Robbins, Mr. Henry E. Robbins, Mr. and Mrs. John L. Robbins.

Dr. Nathan Finklestein, Mrs. Philip Freeman, Mrs. William H. Hall, Bernhard Hoffmann, Mrs. Carl B. Lindholm, Miss Anna McGowan, Mr. Gardner S. Morse, Miss Isabella T. Redfield, Mrs. Charles F. Sawyer, Mr. and Mrs. H. Severance Sawyer, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Miss Nellie M. Smith, Mrs. William A. Whittlesey, Dr. George S. Wickham.

Mr. and Mrs. James D. Colt, Mrs. Bruce Crane, Mr. Henry A. Francis, Mrs. E. Griswold Hollister, Mrs. William A. Pike, Mrs. Rodney Procter, Dr. and Mrs. George H. Thompson, Mr. and Mrs. Charles J. Kittredge.

Miss Anna R. Alexandre, Mr. and Mrs. John Barker, Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett, Miss Elizabeth Campbell, Mr. and Mrs. Sheridan R. Cate, Mr. and Mrs. Laurence R. Connor, Mr. Winthrop M. Crane 3rd, Mr. and Mrs. W. Murray Crane Jr., Mrs. Carl A. de Gersdorff, Mrs. Michael L. Eisner, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel England, Mr. and Mrs. Monroe England, Mr. Giraud Foster, Mr. Robert T. Francis, Mrs. Irving H. Gamwell, Mr. and Mrs. Richard H. Gamwell, Miss Margaret H. Hall, Lt. Col. and Mrs. John C. Hoag, Miss Mary R. Kennedy, Miss Isabella C. King.

Mrs. John Bross Lloyd, Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Martin, Mr. and Mrs. Leon Mohill, Rev. and Mrs. G. Gardner Monks, Mr. Donald B. Miller, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Pease, Mrs. William Prall, Mrs. Charles Rockhill, Dr. and Mrs. George S. Reynolds, Mrs. Jay C. Rosenfeld, Mrs. Edwards Spencer.

Rev. Anson Phelps Stokes, Mrs. Grace C. Van Norden, Mrs. Henry K. White, Miss Jane Wilcox, Mrs. Samuel G. Colt, Mrs. W. Murray Crane, Mrs. Zenas Crane Colt, Mrs. J. Arthur Crane, Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Power, Mrs. Loring Robbins, Miss Judith Colt.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 22 1939

Boxholders List For Stockbridge Music Festival

The list of boxholders for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Aug. 3, 5, 6, 10, 12 and 13 at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., includes Mrs. Samuel Gilbert Colt, Mrs. Stanley P. Benton, Mrs. Harley E. Jones, Mrs. Edward A. Jones, Mr. and Mrs. Laurence R. Connor, all of Pittsfield; Mrs. Bruce Crane, Mrs. Winthrop M. Crane Jr. of Dalton; Mrs. E. Parmelee Prentice, Dr. Harry A. Garfield and Prof. and Mrs. Philip Marshall Brown of Williamstown; Mr. and Mrs. Walter Atherton, Mrs. Arthur D. Budd of Windsor; Princess Diane R. Eristavi of Lebanon Springs, N. Y.; Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs of Richmond.

Mrs. William Felton Barrett, Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett, Mr. and Mrs. Robert K. Wheeler, Miss Gertrude Walker of Great Barrington; Mrs. John Bross Lloyd, Mrs. N. H. Busey Jr. of Lee.

Miss M. Symphorosa Bristed, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dougles Jackson, Miss Anna Remsen Alexandre, Miss Ellen Bullard; Mr. and Mrs. R. Jay Flick, Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Clark Feathers, Giraud Foster, Mr. and Mrs. Lester Roberts, E. Griswold Hollister, Miss Mary Parsons, Mrs. Henry Hollister Pease, Mrs. Arthur F. Schermerhorn, Mr. and Mrs. John Shepard Jr., Grenville Lindall Winthrop, Mrs. Edward Spencer of the Lenox colony.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Heaton I. Treadway, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ivison Parsons, Miss Mabel Choate, Mr. and Mrs. Norman H. Davis, Mr. and Mrs. Carl A. de Gersdorff, Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, Mrs. Charles C. Griswold, Mrs. Ramsay C. Hoguet, Mr. and Mrs. Owen Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Horton Lippincott, Mr. and Mrs. John Barry Ryan, Mr. and Mrs. Rodney Proctor, James Lawson Karrick and Mrs. William Marshall Bullitt, all of Stockbridge.

Miss Alice J. Clapp of Washington, Mrs. John C. Breckinridge of Santa Barbara, Calif., Mrs. Charles Sumner Bird of Walpole, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Davis of Philedalphia and Paradise Farm, North Adams; Mrs. Arthur W. Ewell of Rowley, Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller, Ernest B. Dane, Bentley Wirt Warren, Mrs. Franklin W. Hobbs, Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Sawyer, Edward Taft, all of Boston; Mrs. Frank C. Smith of Worcester.

Mrs. Edward S. Harkness, Mrs. William E. S. Griswold, Mr. and Mrs. William C. Cannon, Mrs. Evelyn W. Adams, Mrs. Harry Adams, Mrs. E. E. Whitney, the Misses Caroline R. and Adeline F. Wing, Dr. C. R. Barker, all of New York.

Mrs. Arnold Whitridge, Mrs. Donald J. Warner, Miss Edith Scoville of the summer colony at Salisbury, Mrs. Walter Jennings of Cold Spring Harbor, L. I., Mrs. William J. Knapp of Millbrook, N. Y.; Dr. William Mather Lewis, president of Lafayette College at Easton, Pa., and Mrs. Lewis Gordon Mendelssohn of Millbrook, N. Y.; Mrs. James W. Packard of Lakewood, N. Y.; Mrs. John S. Newberry of Grosse Point Farms, Mich.; Mrs. F. N. Southam of Montreal.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News

47 JUL 22 1939

Art Exhibits Planned at Festival

ONE of three large exhibitions of national importance to be held during the period of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Aug. 3 to Aug. 13, at the Berkshire Museum, Pittsfield, Mass., will be 40 of the paintings and wash-drawings of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky while in rehearsal, by Donald Greason.

This exhibition, which delighted Boston when shown in Symphony Hall last winter, opens July 26, with two others, at the midsummer reception given annually by the trustees and the director of the museum, Miss Laura Bragg. The museum is open week days from 10 to 5, except Monday, and on Sundays from 2 to 5. The public is invited. There is no admission fee.

Another exhibition to be viewed during the festival will be the second annual Berkshire National Photographic Exhibition, held under the auspices of the Berkshire Museum Camera Club.

The largest exhibition, and in a way the most memorable ever held at the museum, will continue until after Labor Day. It is "The World of Today," oils, water colors, gouaches, drawings and prints by New York artists. The exhibition was organized by Elizabeth McCausland, New York City.

Visitors may have the thrill of registering on a mahogany writing desk used by Nathanial Hawthorne while he lived at Tanglewood.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 26 1939

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY OPENS REHEARSALS

Begins Preparation for Berkshire Festival

HOME FROM FRANCE

Boston Symphony Conductor Returns to Start Final Preparations for Lenox Concerts.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, returned today from a brief vacation in France to enter into rehearsals in preparation for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, which opens a week from tomorrow.

The orchestra will rehearse at Symphony hall in Boston several days and then will arrive in the Berkshires the first of the month and have more rehearsals at the music shed at Tanglewood.

Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky will occupy the summer home of their friends, Dr. and Mrs. Artur Rodzinski in Stockbridge during their stay in the Berkshires. Members of the orchestra will be scattered all over the county. Some of them will pitch tents on the Tanglewood shores of Stockbridge Bowl.

George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra arrived in the Berkshires yesterday for a brief stay.

According to the Festival office at Stockbridge there has been a marked acceleration in subscription and single ticket sales this week but there are still a number of good seats available. Reservations may be made through local chairmen or at the office.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 23 1939

Mrs. Arnold Whitridge, Mrs. Donald J. Warner and Miss Elizabeth Scoville of Salisbury are among the boxholders for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra to be [redacted] Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 3, 5, 6, 10, 12 and 13.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
JUL 25 1939

Realism With Hope, Theme Of Art Group

Psychological Topics Seen Brighter at Museum Show

Many of the paintings, drawings and prints in the "World of Today" exhibit by some 60 New York artists, which features the three-part show opening at the Berkshire Museum with a reception tomorrow night, are very modern and very realistic. Some persons undoubtedly will find them starkly repulsive in their emphasis upon social ills and psychological themes.

But the keynote of the collection, according to Miss Elizabeth McCausland, noted critic who has arranged this section of the show, is the emergence of realistic painting and drawing from the state of depression hopelessness to one perceptibly tempered by growing hopelessness to one perceptibly tempered by growing hopefulness. Many of the realistic pieces show this trend. So Miss McCausland has chosen as the key picture a 6 by 10 foot painting entitled "Music," which portrays a swing band, the rather motley musicians evidently responsive to the rhythm of the score. The piece will be hung in the hall.

Tell Stories

Besides the purely realistic pictures, there are others in allegorical, surrealistic, abstract and stylized traditional modes. Miss McCausland admits that none of the psycholiogical pictures is "Pollyanna," or near it, in cheerfulness. The work, however, represents the latest production of a leading group of young artists. Nineteen are under 30 years of age, 37 under 50 and three over 50. Many have been in the Federal Arts Project. Because Miss McCausland was determined to select only modern pictures which "tell a story," she has spent more than a year in the consideration and selection of these pictures, representing the advanced trends in modern art as it is being produced in the New York centers.

Augmenting the conventional media in the "World of Today" group, there are several new, revived or little known media. Two important revivals are the colored wood cuts and lithographs, brought back by the Federal Arts Project after their virtual abandonment by independent artists due to prohibitive production costs involved. There are several experimental media, such as silk-screen stencilled color prints, baked enamel paintings on steel and lacquer paintings on various backings. Line engravings, tempera and oils-on-paper are a few samples of the unusual media represented.

The "World of Today" exhibit is in sharp contrast to the excellently drafted, somewhat classical pen and wash drawings of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Donald C. Greason in another section of the show. Mr. Greason has produced more than 100 of these drawings, following rather closely the same style conceived by Stuart C. Henry, art curator of the museum, in several drawings of the orchestra sketched two and three years ago at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, where the orchestra will again perform next week and the week following.

Rooms Cooler

Several changes in the blower ventilating system have been made by Willard Gray, local engineer who has been working on the air equipment at the Museum, with the result that the exhibition rooms will be cooled and airy on the night of the opening, according to Miss Laura M. Bragg, director.

Arrangements have been made for the presence of members of the board of trustees, as well as Museum contributing members, in the various display rooms for the opening. In the Ellen Crane Memorial room, with Miss Bragg, Stuart C. Henry, art curator, Mrs. Henry and Miss McCausland, will be Henry A. Francis, president of the board, Mrs. Francis, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel G. Colt, Mr. and Mrs. Richard H. Gamwell, Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Power, Mr. and Mrs. John Barker and Mrs. Loring G. Robbins.

Assisting the members of the Berkshire Museum Camera Club with the reception of visitors to the second Berkshire National Photographic Exhibition, will be Mr. and Mrs. Charles J. Kittredge.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Corporation will be among those to receive in the room filled with the third exhibit comprising drawings and sketches of the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Donald C. Greason. Mrs. Zenas Crane Colt, who has charge of the Junior League record library and Mr. Colt will be there, as will Mrs. James D. Colt, representing the Community Concert Association, and Mr. Colt.

The reception, from 9 to 12, will be open to the public.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 25 1939

Many Get Tanglewood Preview Before 1939 Festival Starts

More and more visitors are daily flocking to Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, to obtain a preview of the gardens, the shed, and the view across Stockbridge bowl before the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky.

The concerts open on Thursday of next week and will continue through the following week-end. Already there has been a tremendous advance demand for tickets, exceeding the demand for 1938. The festival office announced today, however, that there are still a number of good seats available for the six concerts.

At Tanglewood, one of the beauty spots is the evergreen garden planted by the Tappan family, former owners of the 200-acre estate. At the end of the garden, backed by a hemlock hedge extending along Hawthorne street, is a stone seat of simple design. On the seat, Mrs. Gorham Brooks, who gave the estate to the orchestra in 1937, had inscribed last year these words to describe the gift:

"Tanglewood given to the Boston Symphony orchestra by Mary Aspinwall Tappan and Rosamond Sturgis Brooks in memory of William Aspinwall Tappan, Caroline Sturgis Tappan, Richard Cowell Dixey, Ellen Sturgis Dixey, Arthur Sturgis Dixey, who lived here for many years. MCMXXXVII."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 26 1939

Berkshire Festival Opens Next Week

More and more visitors are flocking to Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., daily to obtain a preview of the gardens, the shed, and the view across Stockbridge Bowl before the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky.

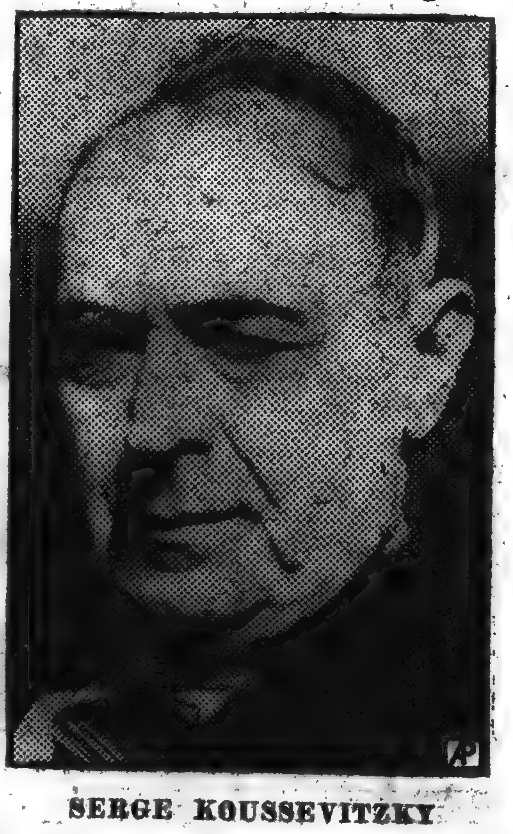
The concerts open next week, Aug. 3, and will continue through the following weekend. Already there has been a tremendous advance demand for tickets, exceeding the demand for 1938. The festival office announced today, however, that there are still a number of good seats available for the six concerts.

At Tanglewood, one of the beauty spots is the evergreen garden planted by the Tappan family, former owners of the 200-acre estate. At the end of the garden, backed by a hemlock hedge extending along Hawthorne Street, is a stone seat of simple design. On the seat, Mrs. Gorman Brooks, who made the magnificent gift of the estate to the orchestra in 1937, had inscribed last year these words to describe the gift:

"Tanglewood given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Mary Aspinwall Tappan, Caroline Sturgis Tappan, Richard Cowell Dixey, Ellen Sturgis Dixey, Arthur Sturgis Dixey, who lived here for many years."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
JUL 27 1939

Arrives to Rehears Berkshire Program



SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

New York, July 26—(AP)—Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston [redacted] orchestra, arrived today on the Champlain to begin rehearsals for the sixth Berkshire symphonic festival, which opens August 3 at Tanglewood near Stockbridge, Mass.

Dr Koussevitzky sailed late in June for a vacation in Paris. Mrs Koussevitzky accompanied him.

This year's festival embraces six programs, all conducted by Dr Koussevitzky and given in the festival "music shed" on August 3, 5, 6, 10, 12 and 13. The orchestra will rehearse in its winter home, Symphony hall, through Wednesday, and then migrate from Boston to the Berkshires.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
JUL 27 1939

Voyager

Sergei Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, pictured as he arrived aboard the liner Champlain.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 27 1939

Berkshire Music Festival At Historic Tanglewood Prepares for 6th Season

Stockbridge Expects Busiest Year Yet, as Parking Facilities Are Vastly Improved; Visitors Throng To Shell Which Was Dedicated Last Year by Dr Koussevitzky and Boston Orchestra; Balanced Program Offered

To the west of Springfield, an hour and a half by automobile, lies one of the most beautiful musical centers in the world. At Tanglewood in Stockbridge, called "The Salzburg of America," preparations are humming for the sixth annual Berkshire Music festival to be held there during the first and second weekends of August, with music provided by Dr Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Last year, the completion of the music shell insured friends of the festival of protection against inclement weather during the actual performances, and this year, work has been concentrated on the improvement of the grounds, lest the quagmires that remain after torrential Berkshire rains again plague the homeward-bound motorists.

Under the direction of Joseph Franz, the engineer, the 10½-acre parking field has been drained. More than 900 feet of 12-inch and 18-inch tile have been installed and more than 7000 cubic yards of gravel spread over the low areas thus drained, to give double protection.

To further aid parkers, a steel tower with 12 huge floodlights has been erected to make the area for cars as light as day, no matter what the hour.

Of esthetic merit is the removal of the old ticket office from a location near the music shed to the north side of the Hawthorne pines where it is more accessible to the public and less of an eyesore in the vicinity of the shell, air conditioned by the clear Berkshire air. The hurdle fence has also been removed from near the shell.

Mecca for Many

Visitors to Tanglewood where Hawthorne wrote his immortal Tanglewood Tales now find the shell in its natural setting, amid the pines, maples and birches, with no discordant note in the immediate vicinity. And visitors aplenty are flocking to the home of the festival. As many as 500 persons come on a good Sunday, according to a list compiled of those who are willing to register as they stroll about the beautiful estate which Mrs Gorham Brooks made to the orchestra in 1937. Through the week, scores of visitors come from near and far either to see the festival setting for the first time or to check on progress. Attendants declare that only about half of the visitors are willing to register, but already this year the shell has been visited by travelers from 30 states, not to mention interested journeyers from The Netherlands, Belgium, Switzerland, and Honolulu.

Last year the festival drew from 44 states, and this year the festival committee is aiming to get the missing four states on the books. The huge shell, 42 feet high and seating 5726 people is little changed itself, except for a new coat of aluminum paint on the gigantic girders that brace the structure. The principal girder of the building is 96½ feet long and weighs 16½ tons.

The "Big Top"

The festival which started six years ago in a tent has, despite the construction of the new shell, been able to remain out of the red for several years. The festival remained under the "big top" until one night during the 1937 festival the Berkshire heavens dropped on the canvass. Even the rugged measures of Wagner could not prevail against the elements, and the concert had to be halted several times and rearranged so that the loudest music was pitted against the storm, and the more idyllic selections were reserved for the lulls in the storm.

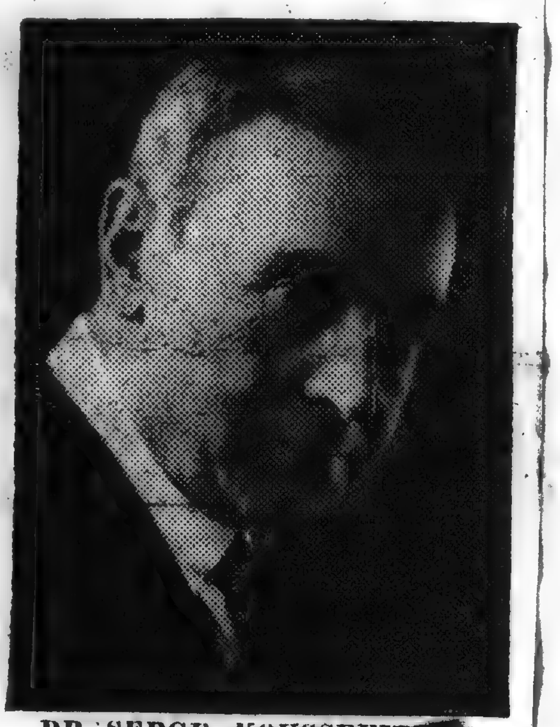
That storm and the muddy consequences that interfered with exit from the grounds decided the trustees to act, whereas their plans had previously been only in the hopeful stage.

Under the forceful direction of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, the trustees immediately started a campaign for funds that found the shell ready for dedication last August. Welcomed throughout the country, the shell revealed the acoustical perfection that the virtuosity of the Boston orchestra demanded. Not only those under the great roof could hear perfectly, but those who chose to loll about outside on the long grassy slope that stretches down toward the Stockbridge bowl were able to hear the softest of pianissimos.

Seats All Reserved

The expenses last year ran to about $59,000. This year, due to the improvements made about the grounds, they will be about $61,000. To help meet this added expense, the trustees have decided to have all seats reserved. Tickets may be purchased for individual concerts, for the first series August 3, 5 and 6; the second series August 10, 11 and 13; or for both series.

Reservations, according to George W. Edman, who directs publicity for the festival, have been running well ahead of last year, and the "S. R. O." sign will greet most of the late comers this year.



DR SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

'Academy' Plans

Festival goers this year will be anxious to hear plans for next year, for it is almost certain that some report will be given on the proposed "academy," so dear to the heart of Dr Koussevitzky. Details have yet to take definite form, but Dr Koussevitzky believes that the Berkshire center is the proper place for post graduate work in music, not only for the training of young conductors, but also the development of more mature artists. There will be lessons for advanced orchestral players under the direction of first desk men of the symphony. There will be a study of reprertory, lectures upon related subjects, and a chance to work with the orchestra itself for a chorus to be developed from the student body. Present indications point to a start about three weeks in advance of the festival itself and the most optimistic are hoping for an announcement of a 1940 start.

The festival shell has a potential capacity of 8100 seats and it is no secret that the trustees hope to realize this possibility within another year or two. Extension to this point will enable the trustees to provide sides for the shell to be dropped in the event of a driving rain. The size of the shell in proportion to the number of seats now enables subscribers to remain dry in the event of almost any storm. Should a driving rain come, however, shuttered sides would enable a concert to proceed with no rearrangement of seats.

The Program

The program this year follows the usual Koussevitzky pattern, plenty of the tried and true, and just enough of the good and new. The "three B's" receive their due, and as defiance to the weather, Dr Koussevitzky again has arranged one program drawn entirely from the works of Wagner.

Walter Piston is the sole American composer represented, but modern music has one of its most capable exponents in Prokofieff, whose "Lieutenant Kije" was a hit at the festival last season and since then as a recording by the orchestra. This year, the Soviet composer is represented by "Peter and the Wolf," whimsical fairy tale in which different instruments of the orchestra take the part of animals in the story. Richard Hale will again be the narrator.

The complete program follows:—

Thursday, August 3, 15 8.30

Brandenburg Concerto No 3 in G-major	Bach
"Scheherazade," symphonic suite	Rimsky-Korsakov
Symphony No 1 in C-minor	Brahms

Saturday, August 5, at 8.30

Concerto for orchestra	Piston
Symphony No 5 in E-flat major	Sibelius
Symphony No 7 in A-major	Beethoven

Sunday, August 6, at 3.30

Symphony in E-flat major	Mozart
"Peter and the Wolf"	Prokofieff
Symphony No 4 in F-minor	Tchaikowsky

Thursday, August 10, at 8.30

Symphony No 2 in D-major	Beethoven
"Also Sprach Zarathustra," tone poem	Strauss
"Pictures at An Exhibition"	Moussorgsky-Ravel

Saturday, August 12, at 8.30

Symphony in B-flat, No 102	Haydn
"Le Sacre du Printemps"	Stravinsky
Overture "Der Fliegende Hollander"	Wagner
Prelude to "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Baccanale from "Tannhauser"	Wagner
Prelude "Die Meistersinger"	Wagner

Sunday, August 13, at 3.30

Symphony No 4 in D-minor	Schumann
Prelude "L'Apres-midi D'un Faune"	Debussy
"La Valse"	Ravel
Symphony No 2 in D-major	Sibelius

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

JUL 27 1939

World of Lively Arts

By T. H. PARKER

Before The Doctor Comes.

If you are planning to arrive in Stockbridge some time before Dr. Serge Koussevitzky takes the podium, you might be interested to hear of other esthetic activities in and around the village.

Three exhibitions which the Berkshire Museum at Pittsfield assures are of "national importance," will be held at this institution between August 3 and 13. The first will include 40 paintings and wash drawings of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Koussevitzky, made during rehearsals by Donald Greason, and previously shown at Symphony Hall in the orchestra's home port.

For camera fanciers, and I daresay this includes the entire American population with the exception of myself, there will be the second annual Berkshire National Photographic Exhibition, under auspices of the museum Camera Club.

Finally, there will be the exhibition "World of Today," offering oils, water colors, gouaches, drawings and prints by New York artists. This array will continue up through Labor Day.

The nostalgic minded will have an opportunity to register on a mahogany desk used by Nathaniel Hawthorne while he lived at Tanglewood, where the festival is held. Also on view are the one-hoss shay of which Oliver W. Holmes wrote, and the trundle bed in which the little Melvilles were kept quiet while daddy harpooned himself a literary fame, writing "Moby Dick."

By Easy Stages.

Devotees of summer theater will find their needs also provided for in Stockbridge during the two festival weeks. The Berkshire Playhouse there is offering from July 31 through August 5, "The Petrified Forest," by Robert E. Sherwood, incidentally the last play ever to have its premiere in Hartford. John Beal will take the lead role. Starting August 7, audiences will have the opportunity to see Dennis King in Mark Reed's established perennial, "Petticoat Fever."

Incidental Music.

In addition to the grand fanfares of the Boston, it will also be possible to hear chamber music concerts on Friday afternoons, August 4 and 11, at South Mauntain, Pittsfield, with Willem Willike in the line-up. Admission is free, my pets, if you will communicate with Mr. Willike in advance. He'll send you tickets. What do you say to the nice man?

Workaday Intelligence.

If you were snagged out of the mire by tractors at the festival last year, you will be relieved to know that while Dr. Koussevitzky and his men have been preparing the rarified delights of Beethoven and the other great masters for you, the more down-to-earth Joseph Franz, Stockbridge architect, has seen to it that the 10 and a half acre parking field has been drained and topped with 7000 cubic feet of gravel. Also, a steel tower with 12 floodlights has been erected and permanent lighting installed at the Tanglewood entrances. All you've got to think about is not running over any of the Massachusetts state policemen who will be frisking about.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

JUL 27 1939

Tanglewood Rehearsals Under Way

Koussevitzky Home After Vacation Spent in Europe

Serge Koussevitzky arrived in New York today from a brief vacation spent in Europe and went directly to Boston to rehearse with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in anticipation of the opening concert at Tanglewood in the Berkshires on August 3. Wednesday the orchestra will arrive at the site of the Berkshire Festival to prepare for the Summer series.

In keeping with the festival spirit, Henry Wigeland, youthful organist of the Great Barrington Congregational Church, has scheduled a performance of Verdi's "Requiem" with New York soloists for next Wednesday evening. Many early arrivals for the festival concerts will attend the performance.

Charles L. Safford, retired director of music at Williams College, will give his final lecture on the symphonies to be played at the festival, at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield Tuesday afternoon. These lectures have been sponsored by the Junior League of Pittsfield and are open to the public at no cost.

Invalids or others temporarily incapacitated need not remain away from the festival concerts. A fleet of wheel chairs has been assembled from Berkshire County hospitals and will be available for those who wish them. By writing to the festival office at Stockbridge, a special invalid's card may be obtained, permitting automobiles to enter the box parking area and drive to the corner of the music shed. A. L. Bliss, General Electric engineer, is in charge of this service.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 27 1939

A TRIPLE EXHIBITION HELD IN PITTSFIELD

Midsummer Reception Given by Berkshire Museum

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., July 26.—The annual midsummer Berkshire Museum reception was held tonight to mark the opening of three exhibitions—the second annual Berkshire National Photographic Display, "The World of Today," organized by Miss Elizabeth McCausland, and Donald Greason's wash-drawings of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Two thousand invitations were sent out. On the reception committee were Mrs. Samuel Gilbert Colt, daughter of the late Zenas Crane, founder of the museum; Miss Judith Colt, Mr. and Mrs. Zenas Crane Colt, Miss Laura M. Bragg, director of the museum; Mrs. Edwards Spencer, Mr. and Mrs. Charles James Kittredge, Mr. and Mrs. Allan B. Hendriks, Mrs. William Felton Barrett, Mrs. William Penn Cresson, Mrs. Edward Payson Merwin, Mr. and Mrs. Stuart C. Henry, the Misses Anna Remsen Alexandre, Margaret H. Hall, Mr. and Mrs. George W. Edman, Mr. and Mrs. John Barker, Mr. and Mrs. Richard H. Gamewell, Dr. George S. Reynolds, Winthrop M. Crane Jr., and Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. Francis.

At the refreshment tables were Mrs. Alan J. Blau, Mrs. Samuel G. Colt Jr., Mrs. Elmer A. Euston and Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller.

Mr. and Mrs. Harris Fahnestock have returned to Eastover, Lenox, after spending two months in Europe.

Mr. and Mrs. William Ellery Sedgwick have Mrs. Sedgwick Delafield as a guest at Sedgwick Mansion, Stockbridge. Mrs. Sedgwick Marquand and her two children, Miss Christian Marquand and John P. Marquand Jr., left today to spend six weeks on a ranch in Colorado.

Mrs. Arthur Murray Sherwood is entertaining at Stockbridge Mr. and Mrs. Arthur M. Sherwood Jr., Miss Virginia C. Sherwood of New York and Miss Julia Townsend of St. James, L. I. Robert Emmet Sherwood, the playwright, and Mrs. Sherwood, who had been visiting his mother, left for Hollywood, Calif.

With Mr. and Mrs. John Barry Ryan at The Old Place in Stockbridge are Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Ludlow Clarke Jr. of New York.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 27 1939

TANGLEWOOD BUSY ON ARRANGEMENTS

Preparations for Festival go Forward

MANY INQUIRIES

Patrons Seek Accommodations— Orchestra Comes to Lenox Next Wednesday for First Concert.

With the orchestra already engaged in its rehearsals in Boston, preparations for the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge are going forward rapidly.

The opening concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky will be given a week from tonight. The others in the first series will be on Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

Requests for information about rooms and other attractions are pouring into the Festival office which urges everyone who wishes to avoid disappointment to communicate with it at once. The ticket sales are substantially ahead of 1938, it is stated, indicating a capacity audience for the opening concert.

Next Wednesday the orchestra comes to Tanglewood for its final rehearsals and the opening concert. One member of the orchestra, Roger Voison, has already pitched his tent on the shores of the Stockbridge bowl at Tanglewood and before the week is out others will do the same.

Arrangements have been made by the Festival office whereby invalids or others temporarily incapacitated need not remain away from the concerts. A fleet of wheelchairs has been assembled from Berkshire county hospitals and will be available for those who wish them. By writing to the Festival office at Stockbridge, a special "invalid's" card may be obtained, permitting automobiles to enter the box parking area and drive to the corner of the music shed.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

CHICOPEE, MASS.
HERALD
7/27/39

The Berkshire Festival.

One more week must elapse until the opening of the Koussevitsky-conducted Music Festival of the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood.

One more week, but already from Canada, from our far West, from the deep South and up from Mexico, cars and streamlined trains are rushing and from Europe the great liners are ploughing the seas, bringing eager passengers whose goal is the Berkshire hills and the Festival.

At the end of the first series last year, twenty thousand people had been thrilled by the music under the stars. The indications this year are for greater crowds, and there are also, greater provisions made for their comfort.

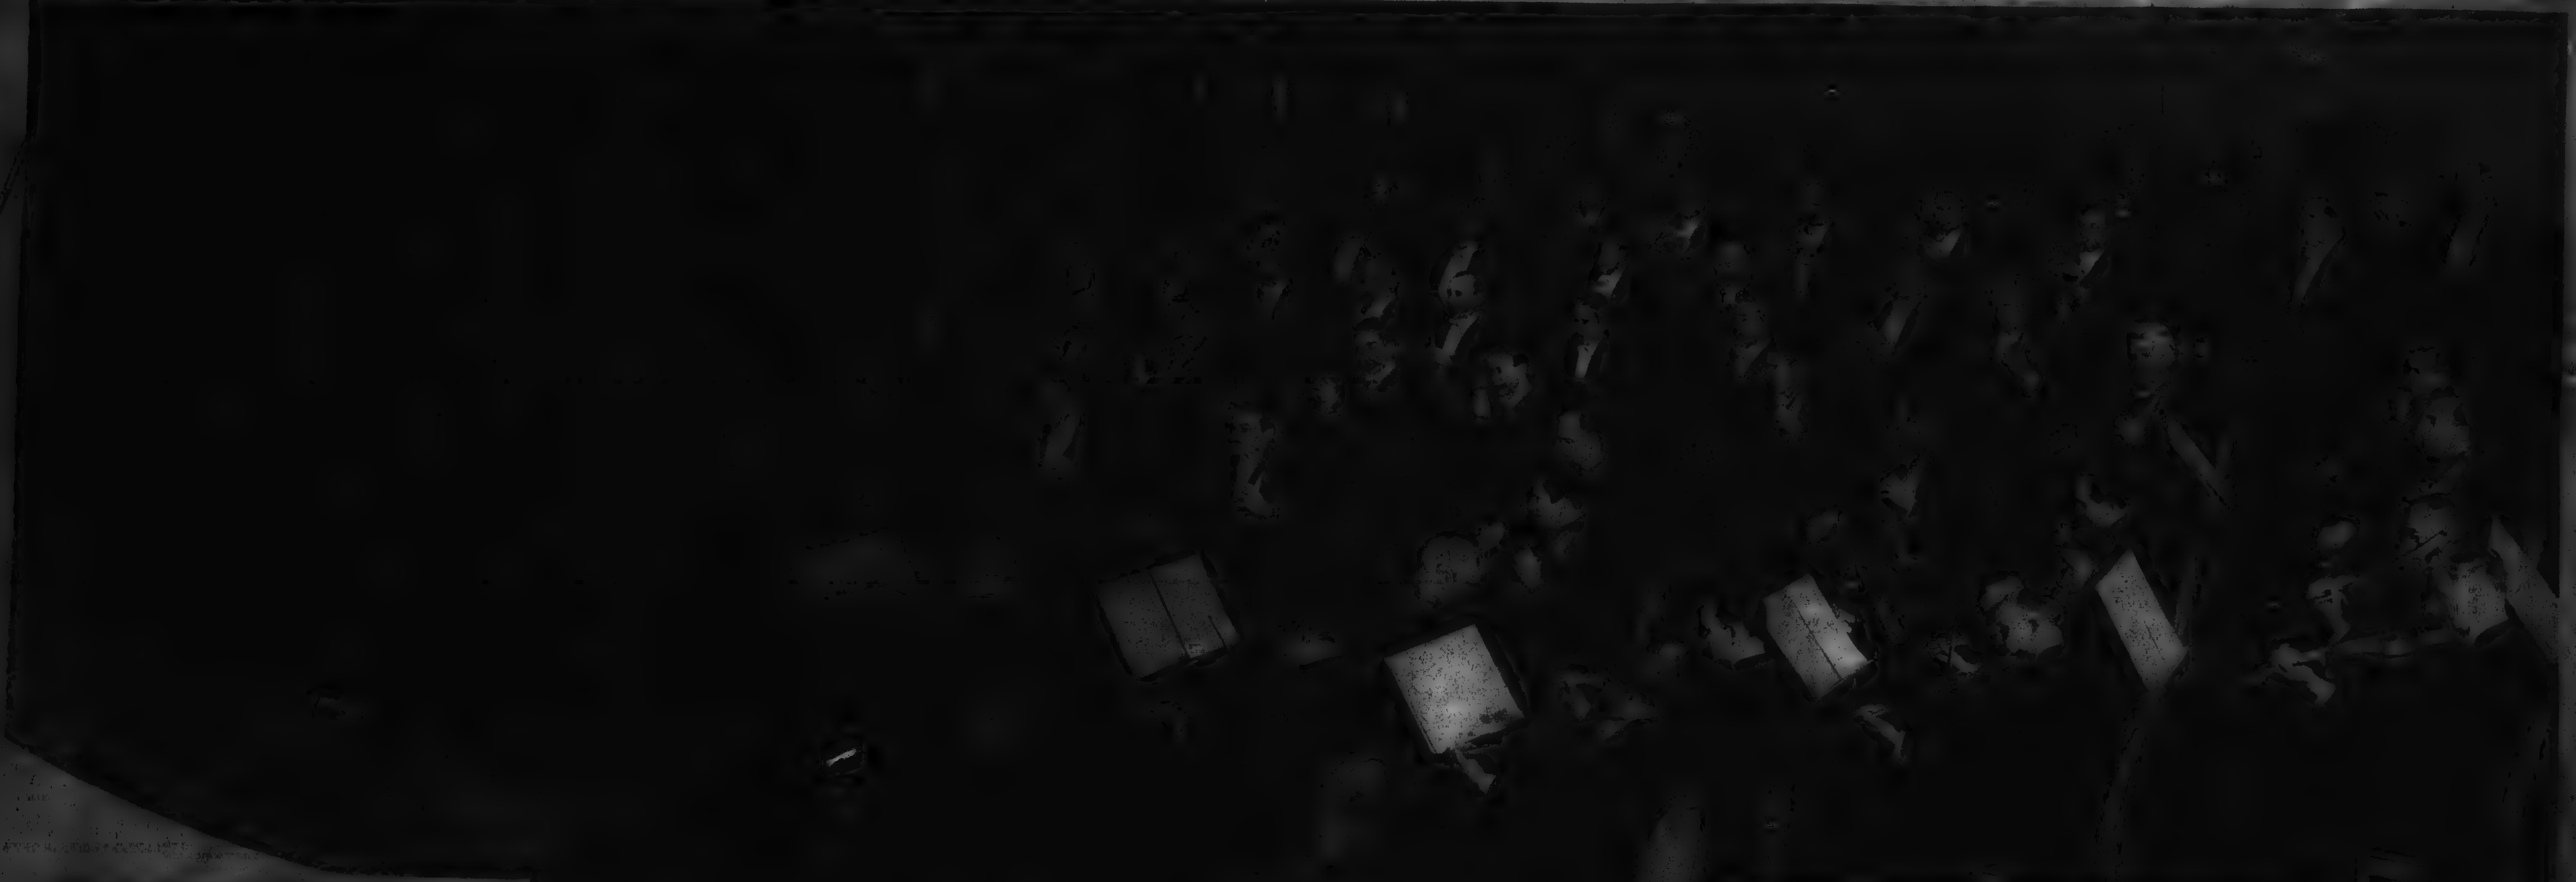
By far the greater number of patrons secure series tickets but there will be hundreds every night who will secure in advance tickets for single concerts.

The music of Brahms and of Rimsky-Korsokov will feature the first concert. In the concerts of August 3-4-5 and August 10-11-12 fifteen great composers will have their works performed in the world's most ideal setting. According to many who have been to European musical events, not even Salzburg, at least Salsburg of today, can provide the atmosphere, the perfect acoustics, the charm of this great American artistic event. Here Dr. Koussevitsky as presiding genius, supported by expert management, attended by the most sympathetic of audiences, brings annually to our Western hills the most notable, most unforgettable event in which music lovers anywhere can hope to participate.

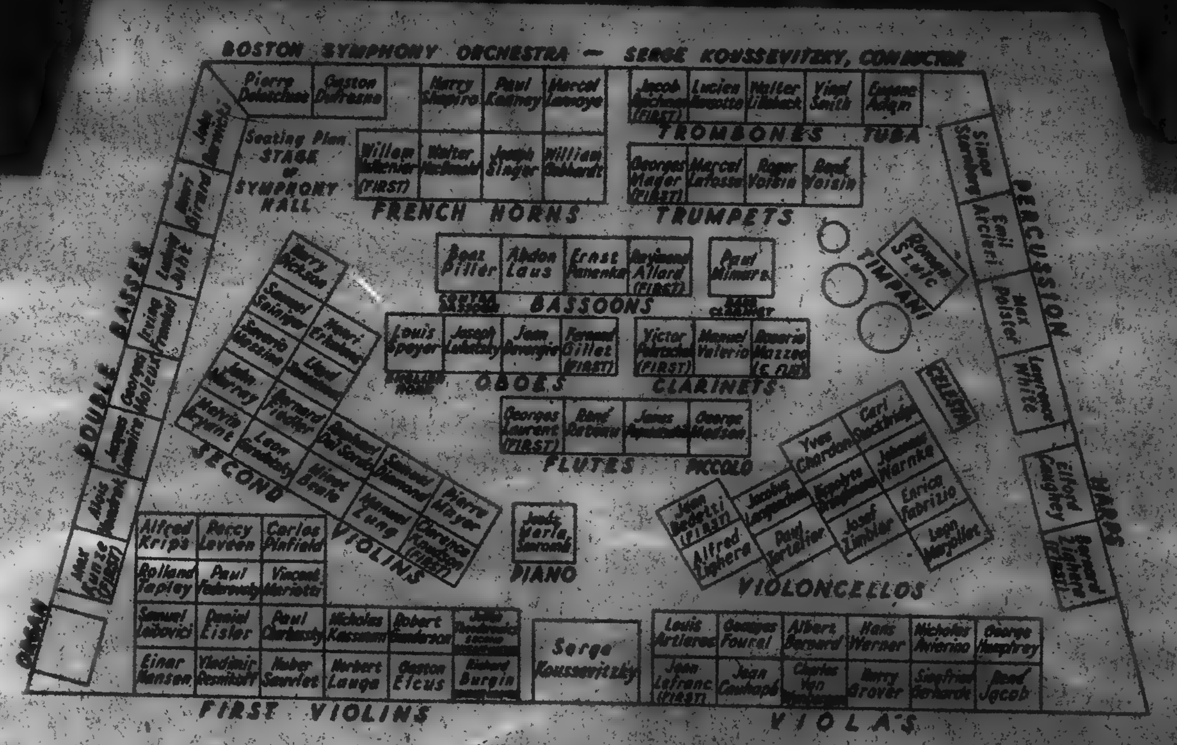
No one able to make the trip to Stockbridge—only a little more than one hour's ride from here—can afford to lose the experience.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
JUL 26 1939

2



The Boston Symphony Orchestra is more than half a century old, but more notable than the span of its years is its place in the growth of musical America. In 1881, Major Henry L. Higginson (left) realized the foremost dream of his life when he founded in Boston the first permanent orchestra in America. The idea had come to him as a student in Vienna. It was an ambitious dream for an impecunious young man, but after many years, having made his fortune as a banker, he was able to give the Boston Symphony to the world. He engaged the finest musicians and brought to this country a succession of the greatest conductors of their time, to whom he gave entire artistic freedom. Today, under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra (above) is universally ranked among the greatest ensembles in the world.

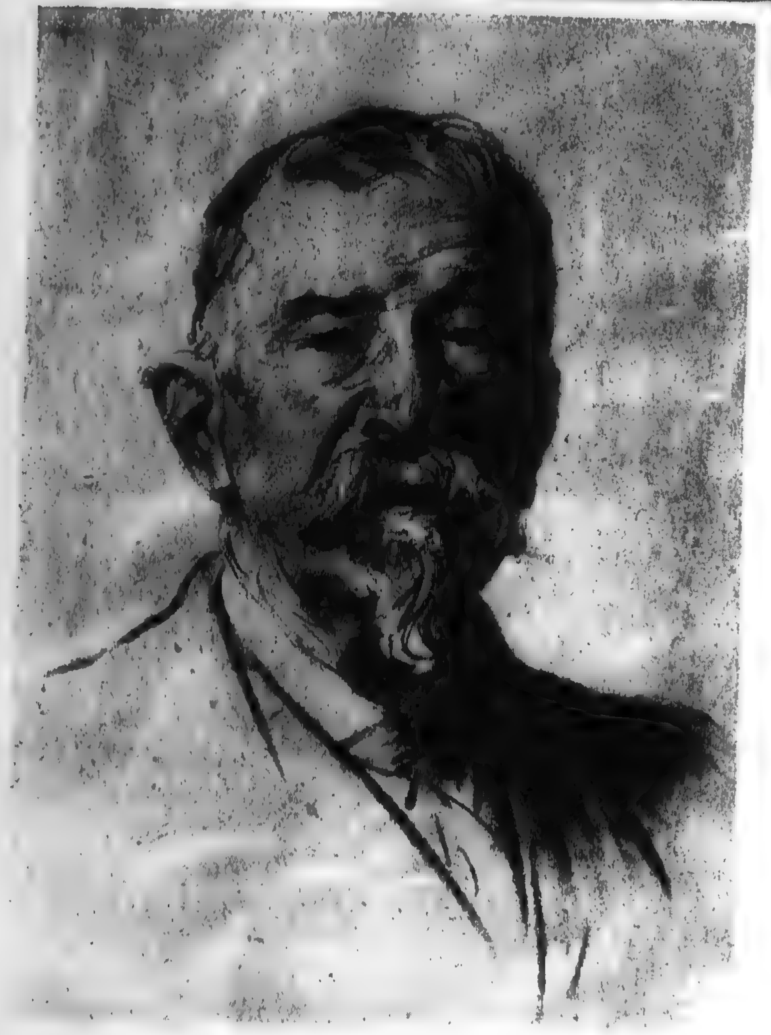


BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA — SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, CONDUCTOR
Seating Plan STAGE of SYMPHONY HALL
Pierre Delaschaux
Gaston Dufresne
Harry Shapiro
Paul Kadney
Marcel Lannoye
Willem Valkenier (FIRST)
Walter Macdonald
Joseph Singer
William Gebhardt
FRENCH HORNS
Jacob Raichman (FIRST)
Lucien Hansotte
Walter Lillebach
Vinal Smith
Eugene Adam
TROMBONES
TUBA
Georges Mager (FIRST)
Marcel Lafosse
Roger Voisin
René Voisin
TRUMPETS
Boaz Piller
Abdon Laus
Ernst Panenka
Raymond Allard (FIRST)
CONTRA BASSOON
BASSOONS
Paul Mimart
BASS CLARINET
Louis Speyer
Joseph Lukatsky
Jean Devergie
Fernand Gillet (FIRST)
ENGLISH HORN
OBOES
Victor Polatschek (FIRST)
Manuel Valerio
Rosario Mazzeo
(E FLAT)
CLARINETS
Georges Laurent (FIRST)
René Pollain
James Pappoutsakis
George Madsen
FLUTES
PICCOLO
Roman Szulc
TIMPANI
Simon Sternburg
Emil Arcieri
Max Polster
Lawrence White
PERCUSSION
CELESTA
Elford Caughey
Bernard Zighera (FIRST)
HARPS
Jesús María Sanromá
PIANO
Jean Bedetti (FIRST)
Alfred Zighera
Jacobus Langendoen
Paul Tortelier
Yves Chardon
Hippolyte Droeghmans
Josef Zimbler
Carl Stockbridge
Johannes Warnke
Enrico Fabrizio
Leon Marjollet
VIOLONCELLOS
Harry Dickson
Samuel Gerhardt
Henri Erkelens
Lloyd Stonestreet
John Murray
Bernard Fiedler
Melvin Bryant
Leon Gorodetzky
Stanley Del Sordo
Samuel Diamond
Minot Beale
Clarence Knudson (FIRST)
Pierre Mayer
Manuel Zung
SECOND VIOLINS
Max Kunze (FIRST)
Alois Mondroch
Georges Moleux
Irving Frankel
Ludwig Juht
Henry Girard
John Barwicki
DOUBLE BASSES
ORGAN
Alfred Krips
Percy Leveen
Carlos Pinfield
Rolland Tapley
Paul Fedorovsky
Vincent Mariotti
Samuel Leibovici
Daniel Eisler
Paul Cherkassky
Nicholas Kassman
Robert Gundersen
Julius Theodorowicz
Einar Hansen
Vladimir Resnikoff
Hubert Sauvlet
Norbert Lauga
Gaston Elcus
Richard Burgin
FIRST VIOLINS
Serge Koussevitzky
Louis Artières
Georges Fourel
Albert Bernard
Hans Werner
Nicholas Avierino
George Humphrey
Jean Lefranc (FIRST)
Jean Cauhapé
Charles Van Wynbergen
Harry Grover
Siegfried Gerhardt
René Jacob
VIOLAS

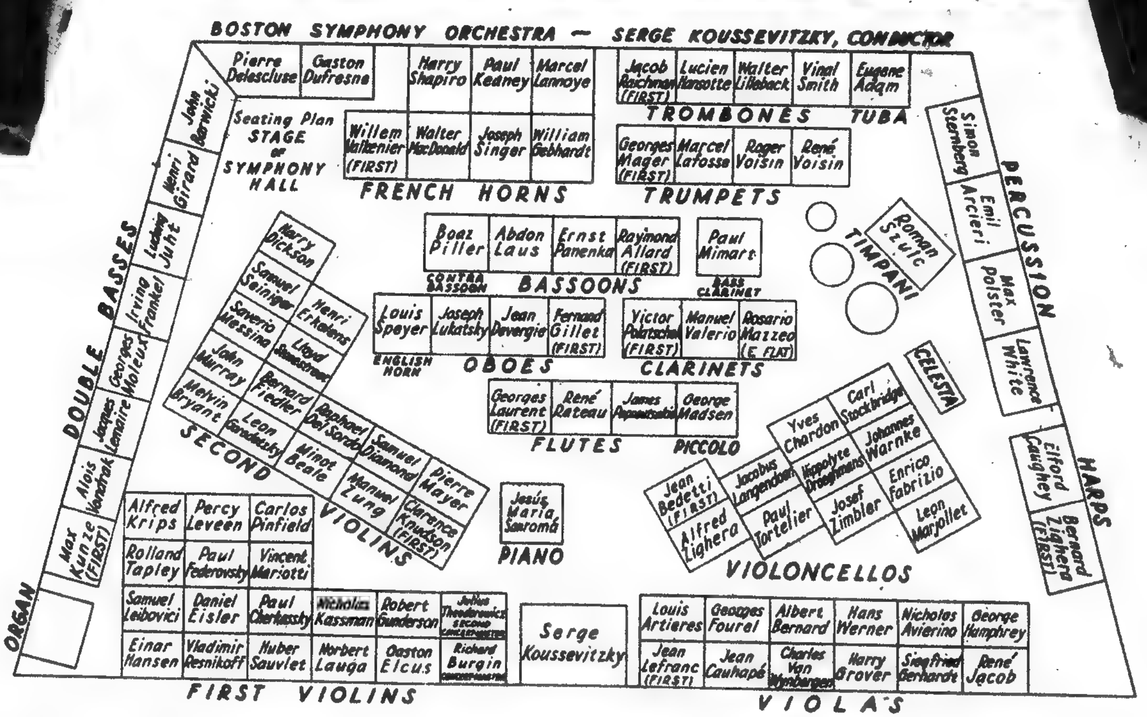
THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 26 1939

2



The Boston Symphony Orchestra is more than half a century old, but more notable than the span of its years is its place in the growth of musical America. In 1881, Major Henry L. Higginson (left) realized the foremost dream of his life when he founded in Boston the first permanent orchestra in America. The idea had come to him as a student in Vienna. It was an ambitious dream for an impecunious young man, but after many years, having made his fortune as a banker, he was able to give the Boston Symphony to the world. He engaged the finest musicians and brought to this country a succession of the greatest conductors of their time, to whom he gave entire artistic freedom. Today, under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra (above) is universally ranked among the greatest ensembles in the world.

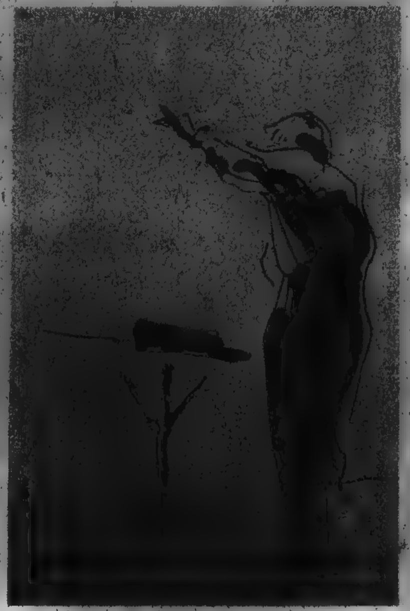


BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA — SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, CONDUCTOR
Seating Plan STAGE of SYMPHONY HALL
Pierre Delescluse
Gaston Dufresne
Harry Shapiro
Paul Keaney
Marcel Lannoye
Willem Valkenier (FIRST)
Walter MacDonald
Joseph Singer
William Gebhardt
FRENCH HORNS
Jacob Raichman (FIRST)
Lucien Hansotte
Walter Lillaback
Vinal Smith
TROMBONES
Eugene Adam
TUBA
Georges Mager (FIRST)
Marcel Lafosse
Roger Voisin
René Voisin
TRUMPETS
Boaz Piller
CONTRA BASSOON
Abdon Laus
Ernst Panenka
Raymond Allard (FIRST)
BASSOONS
Paul Mimart
BASS CLARINET
Louis Speyer
ENGLISH HORN
Joseph Lukatsky
Jean Devergie
Fernand Gillet (FIRST)
OBOES
Victor Polatschek (FIRST)
Manuel Valerio
Rosario Mazzeo (E FLAT)
CLARINETS
Georges Laurent (FIRST)
René Rateau
James Pappoutsakis
FLUTES
George Madsen
PICCOLO
Roman Szulc
TIMPANI
Simon Sternberg
Emil Arcieri
Max Polster
Lawrence White
PERCUSSION
CELESTA
Elford Caughey
Bernard Zighera (FIRST)
HARPS
John Barwicki
Henri Girard
Ludwig Juht
Irving Frankel
Georges Moleux
Jacques Lemaire
Alois Vondrak
Max Kunze (FIRST)
DOUBLE BASSES
ORGAN
Harry Dickson
Samuel Seiniger
Henri Erkelens
Saverio Messina
Lloyd Stonestreet
John Murray
Bernard Fiedler
Melvin Bryant
Leon Gorodetzky
Raphael Del Sordo
Minot Beale
Samuel Diamond
Manuel Zung
Pierre Mayer
Clarence Knudson (FIRST)
SECOND VIOLINS
Jesús María Sanromá
PIANO
Alfred Krips
Percy Leveen
Carlos Pinfield
Rolland Tapley
Paul Fedorovsky
Vincent Mariotti
Samuel Leibovici
Daniel Eisler
Paul Cherkassky
Nicholas Kassman
Robert Gunderson
Julius Theodorowicz SECOND CONCERTMASTER
Einar Hansen
Vladimir Resnikoff
Huber Sauvlet
Norbert Lauga
Gaston Elcus
Richard Burgin CONCERTMASTER
FIRST VIOLINS
Serge Koussevitzky
Jean Bedetti (FIRST)
Alfred Zighera
Jacobus Langendoen
Paul Tortelier
Yves Chardon
Hippolyte Droeghmans
Josef Zimbler
Carl Stockbridge
Johannes Warnke
Enrico Fabrizio
Leon Marjollet
VIOLONCELLOS
Louis Artieres
Georges Fourel
Albert Bernard
Hans Werner
Nicholas Avierino
George Humphrey
Jean Lefranc (FIRST)
Jean Cauhapé
Charles Van Wynbergen
Harry Grover
Siegfried Gerhardt
René Jacob
VIOLAS

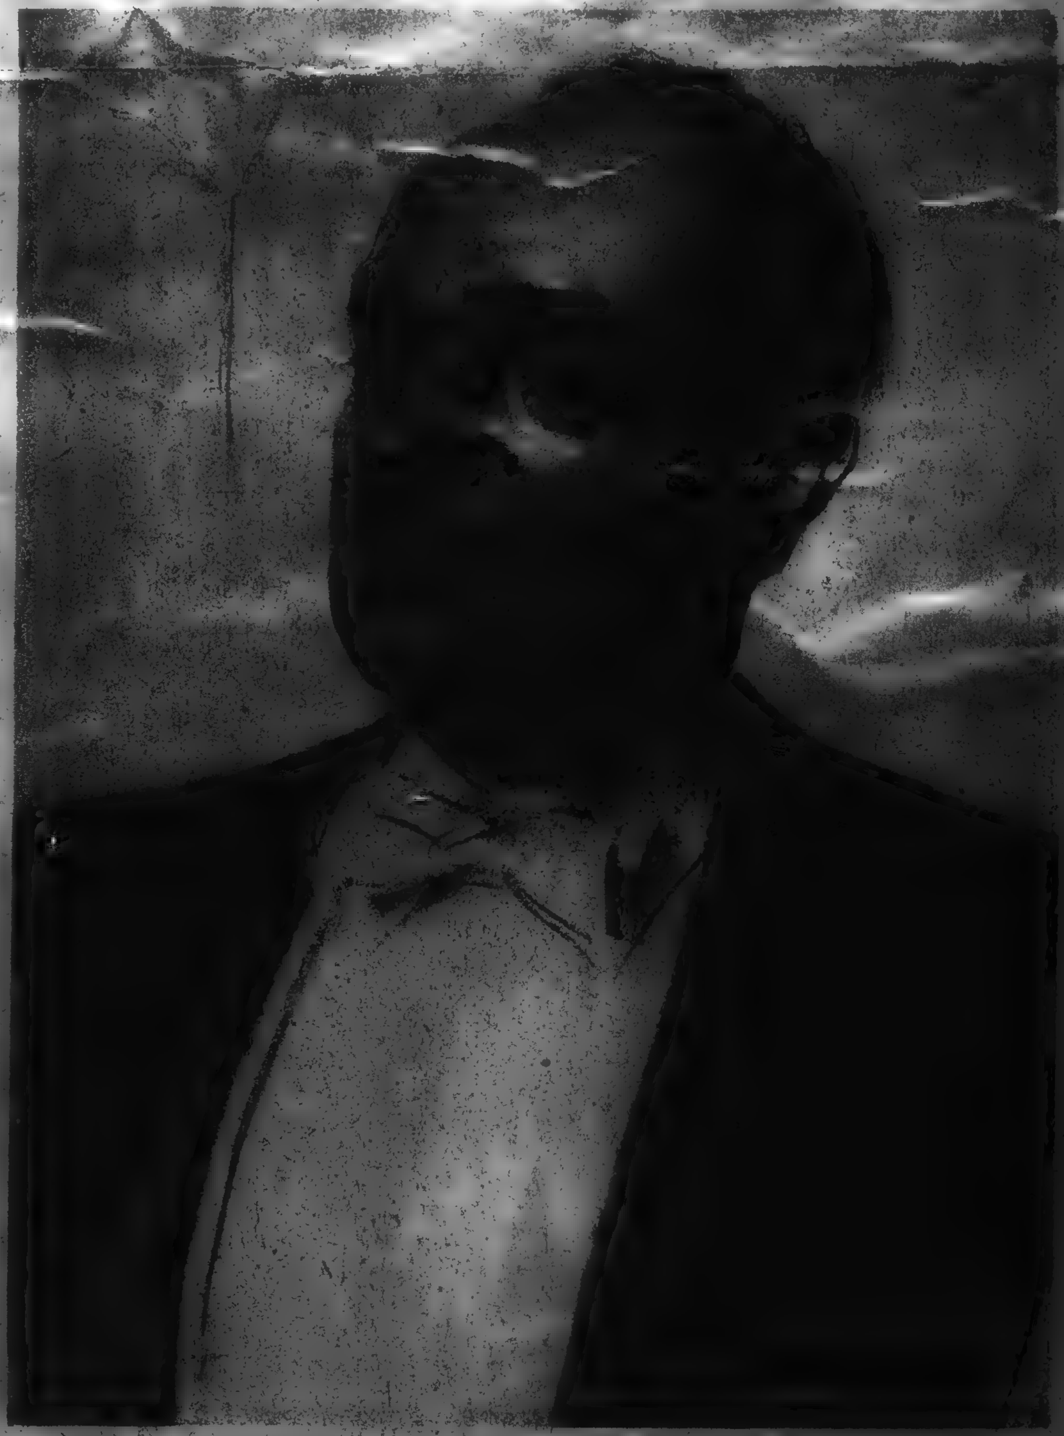
The Boston Symphony Orchestra

At a regular Boston Symphony Orchestra concert in Symphony Hall last November.

George Henschel was the Boston Symphony's first conductor, to be followed by Wilhelm Gericke, who moulded it into its now traditional degree of perfection. Arthur Nikisch next took the baton and after him, Dr. Karl Muck, who kept the orchestra at a high peak of virtuosity and beauty. Serge Koussevitzky (right) has just completed his 15th season, the longest tenure of a conductor in the 58 years of the Boston Symphony. To the orchestra he has brought new beauty, a fresh importance and distinction reflected in a greatly enlarged public. The broadened repertory of the regular concerts, the festivals and special choral concerts, are tangible results of his regime. The regular season in Symphony Hall, Boston, ending in April, is augmented by two months of nightly pop concerts and there is a month of free concerts on the Charles River Esplanade in July. The season to come, opening Oct. 13, will include the four series in Boston, 50 concerts in New England cities, New York and as far west as Chicago.

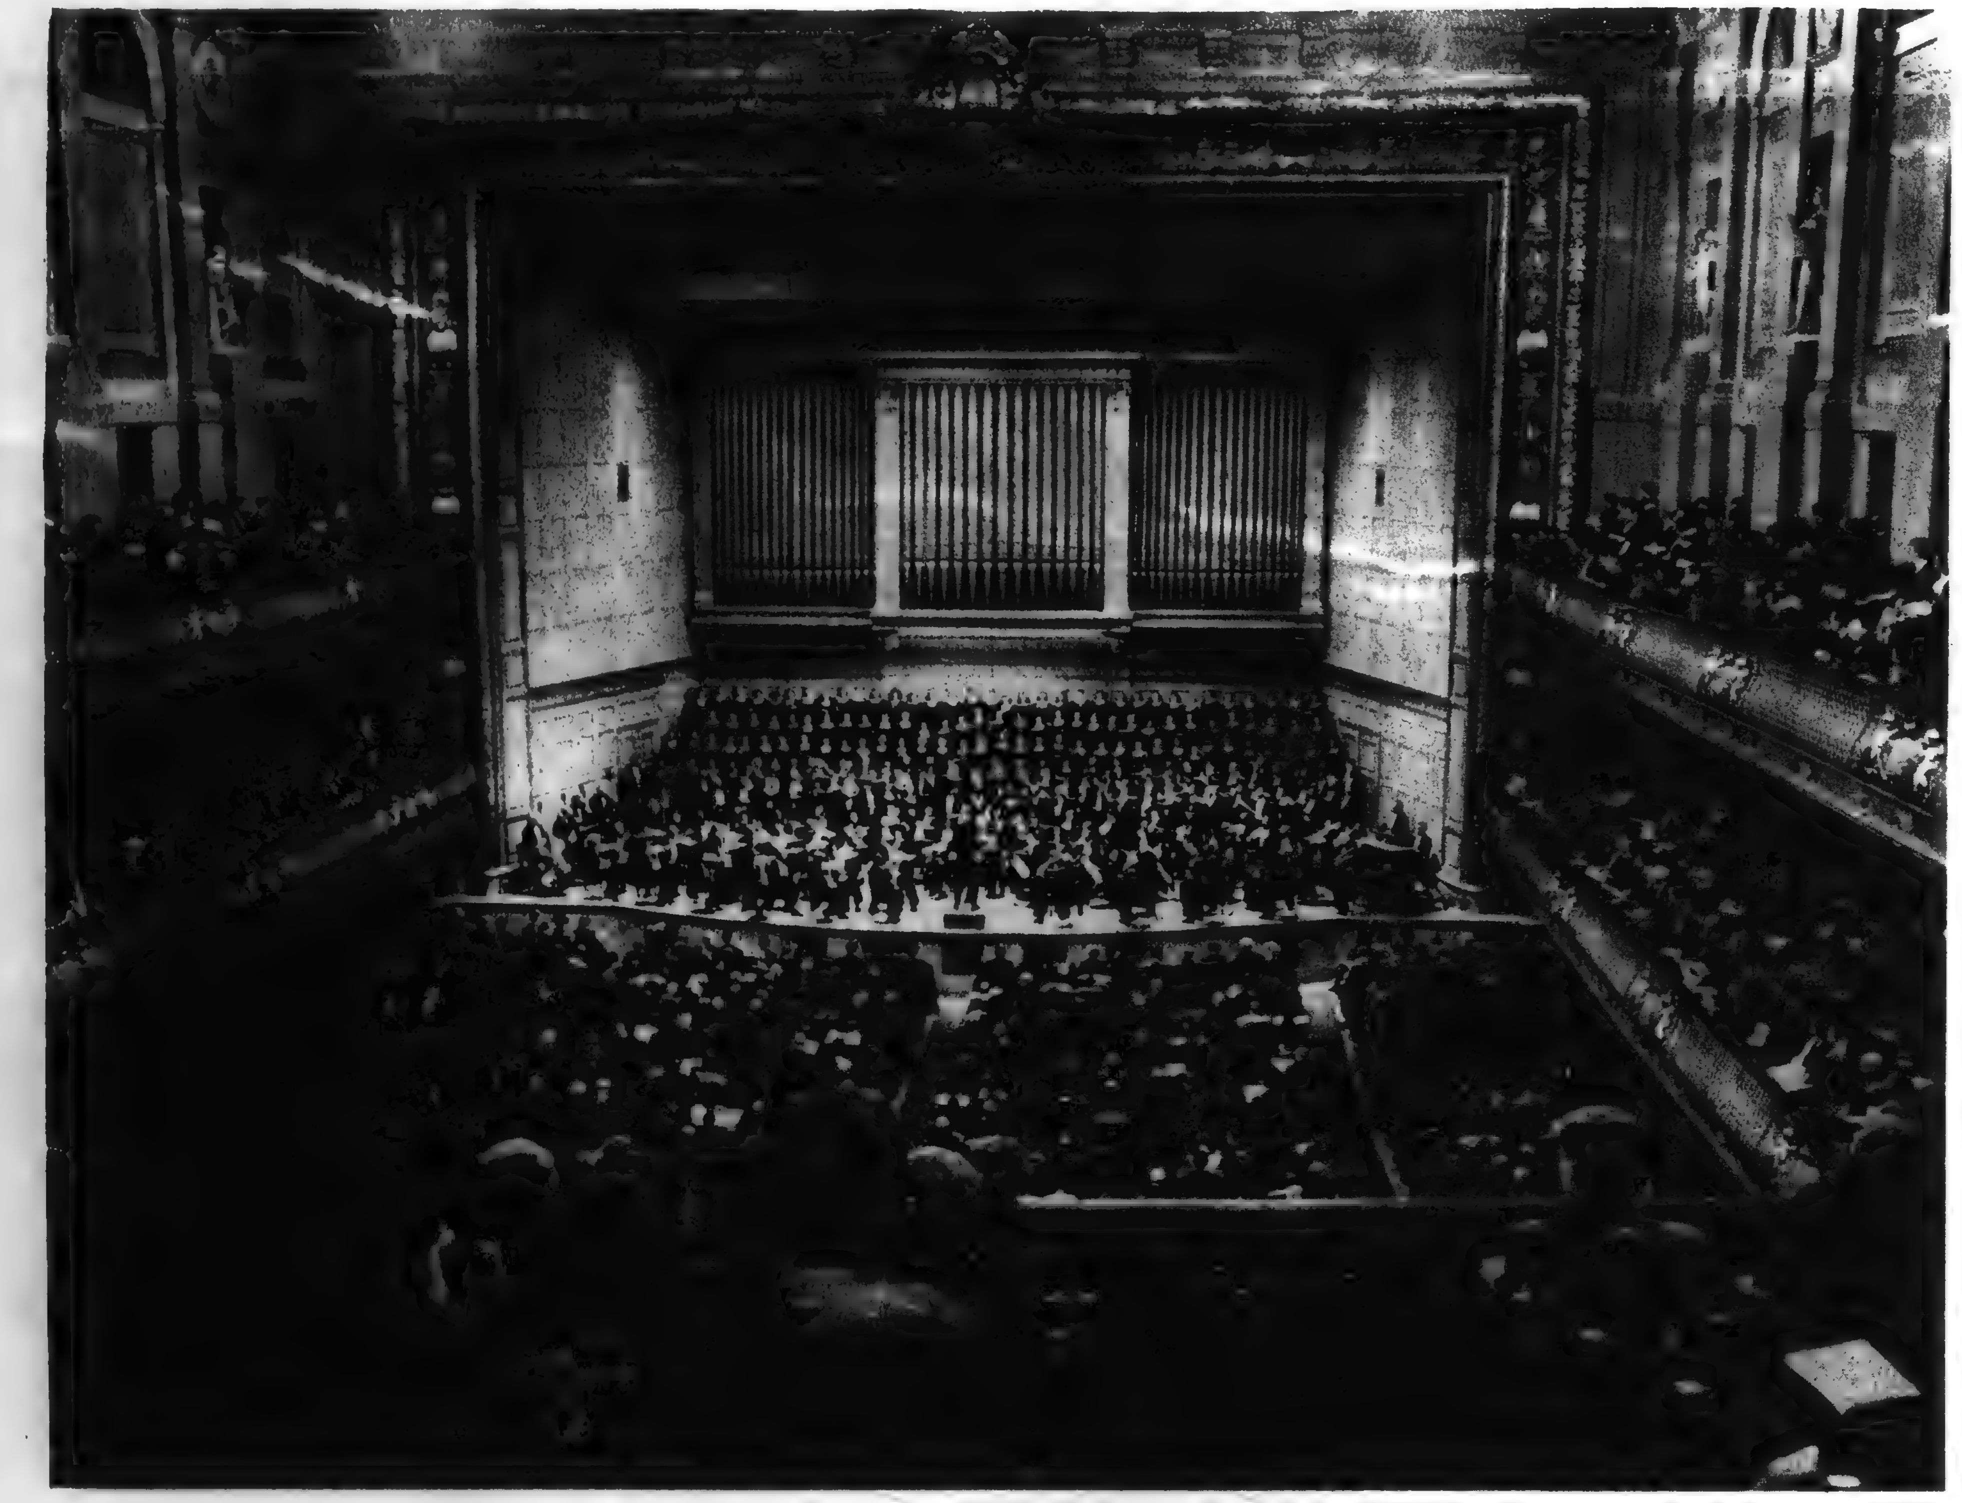


The ink sketches of Dr. Koussevitzky and members of the orchestra on this page are the work of Donald C. Greason, a Rockport, Mass. artist. The original sketches have been on exhibition at Symphony Hall, the orchestra's home in Boston, and will be seen this summer at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield.



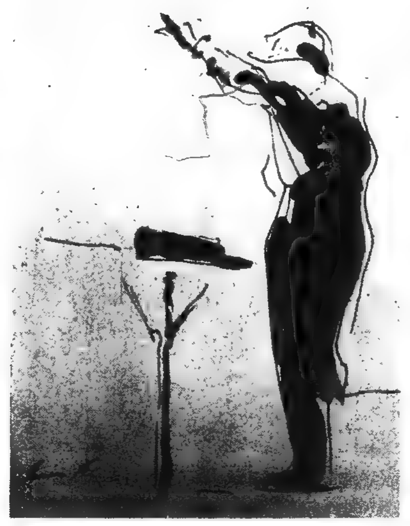
A portrait of Dr. Koussevitzky by the late Alexandre Iacovleff.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra as pictured in its second season (1882) in the old Music Hall. Conductor Henschel stands on the center platform.

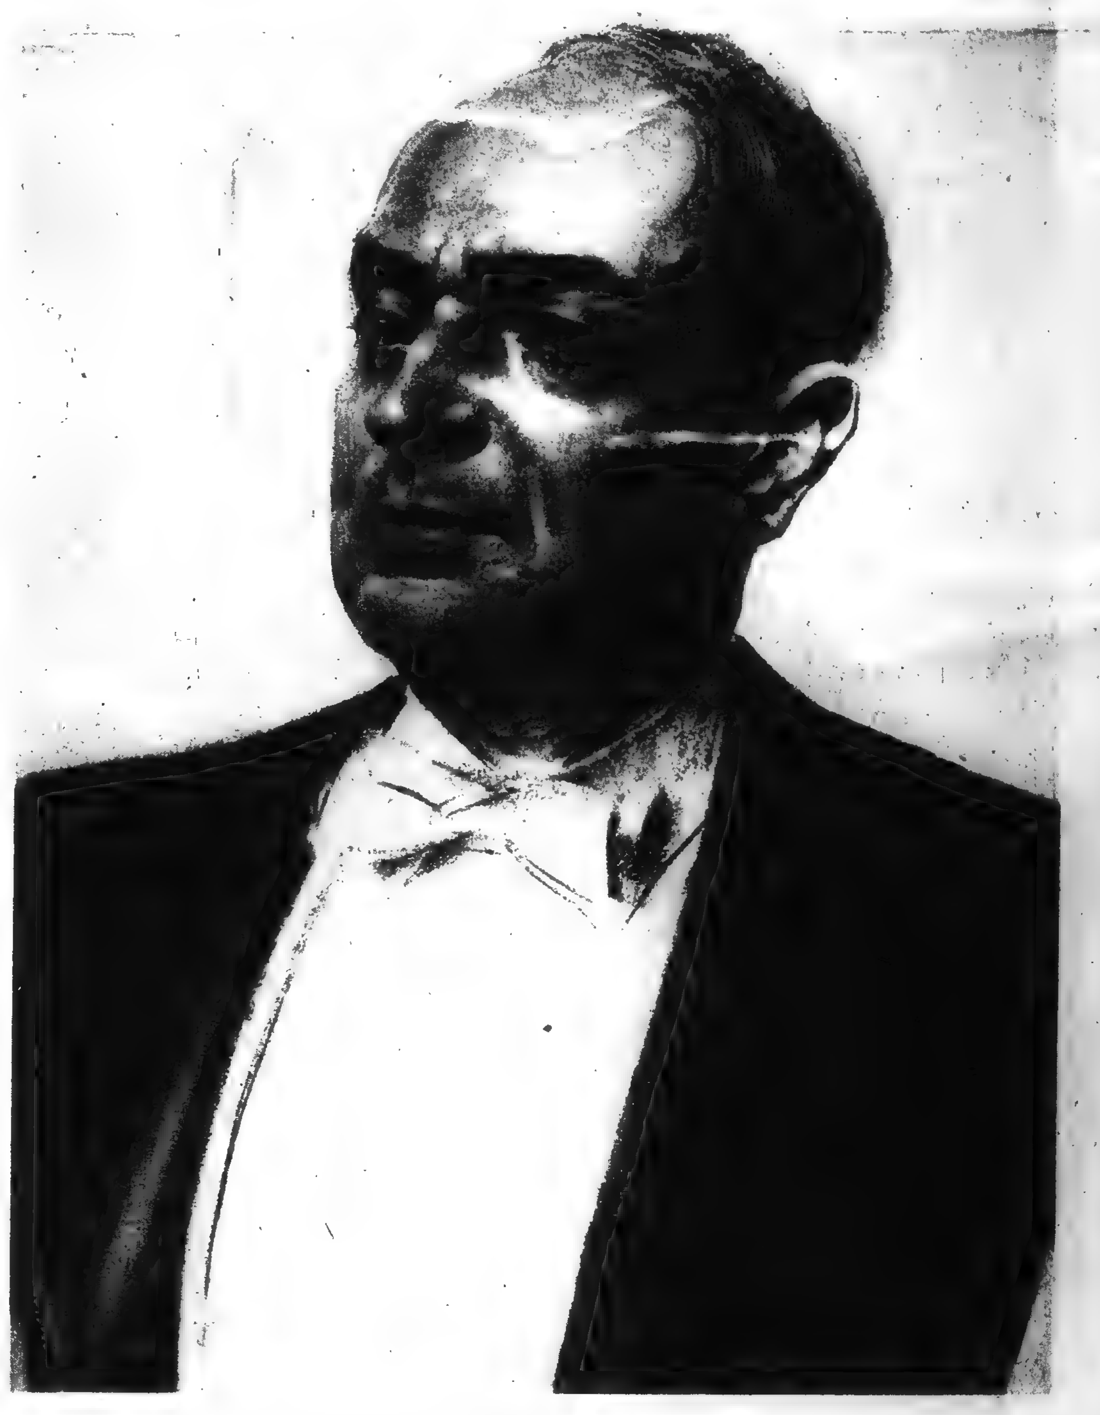


At a regular Boston Symphony Orchestra concert in Symphony Hall last November.

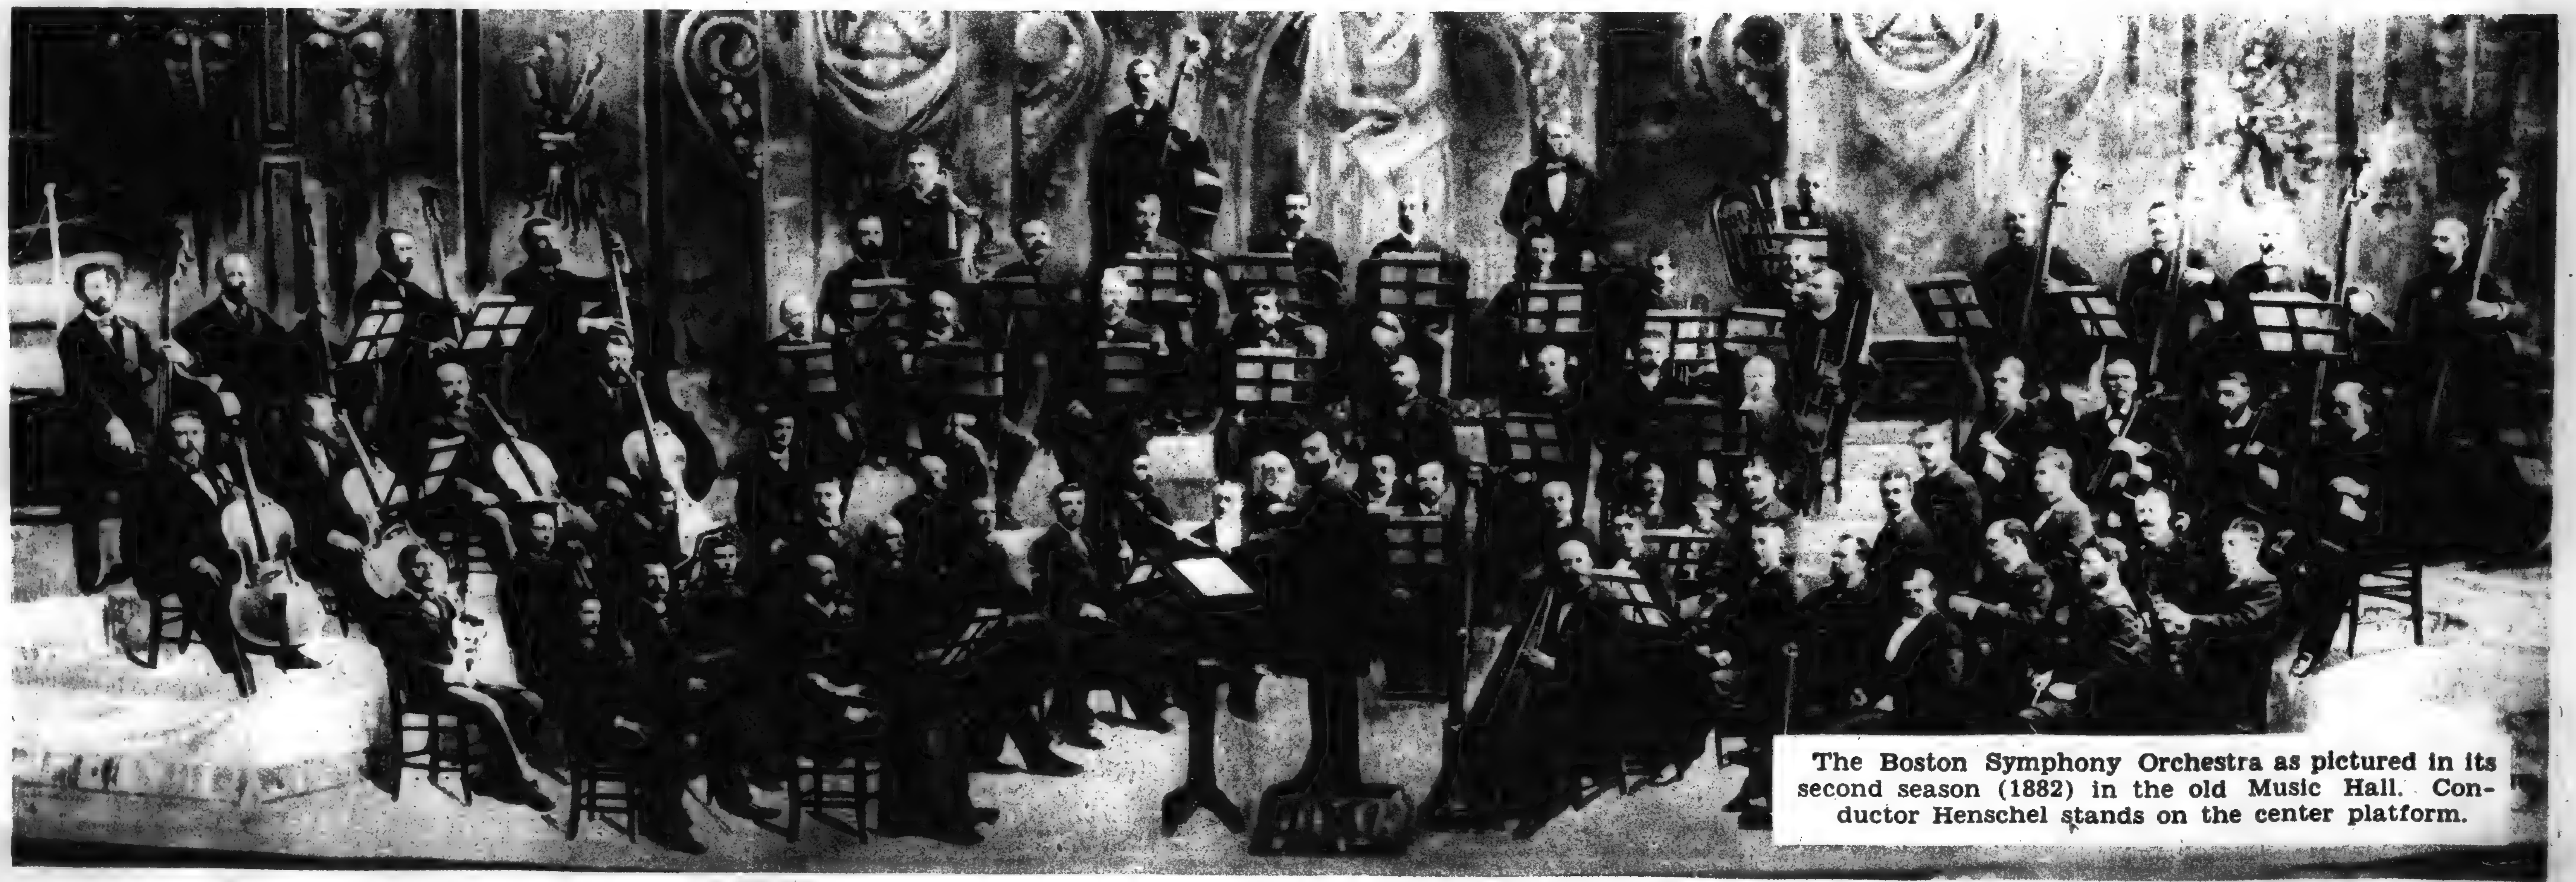
George Henschel was the Boston Symphony's first conductor, to be followed by Wilhelm Gericke, who moulded it into its now traditional degree of perfection. Arthur Nikisch next took the baton and after him, Dr. Karl Muck, who kept the orchestra at a high peak of virtuosity and beauty. Serge Koussevitzky (right) has just completed his 15th season, the longest tenure of a conductor in the 58 years of the Boston Symphony. To the orchestra he has brought new beauty, a fresh importance and distinction reflected in a greatly enlarged public. The broadened repertory of the regular concerts, the festivals and special choral concerts, are tangible results of his regime. The regular season in Symphony Hall, Boston, ending in April, is augmented by two months of nightly pop concerts and there is a month of free concerts on the Charles River Esplanade in July. The season to come, opening Oct. 13, will include the four series in Boston, 50 concerts in New England cities, New York and as far west as Chicago.



The ink sketches of Dr. Koussevitzky and members of the orchestra on this page are the work of Donald C. Greason, a Rockport, Mass. artist. The original sketches have been on exhibition at Symphony Hall, the orchestra's home in Boston, and will be seen this summer at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield.



A portrait of Dr. Koussevitzky by the late Alexandre Iacovleff.



The Boston Symphony Orchestra as pictured in its second season (1882) in the old Music Hall. Conductor Henschel stands on the center platform.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival

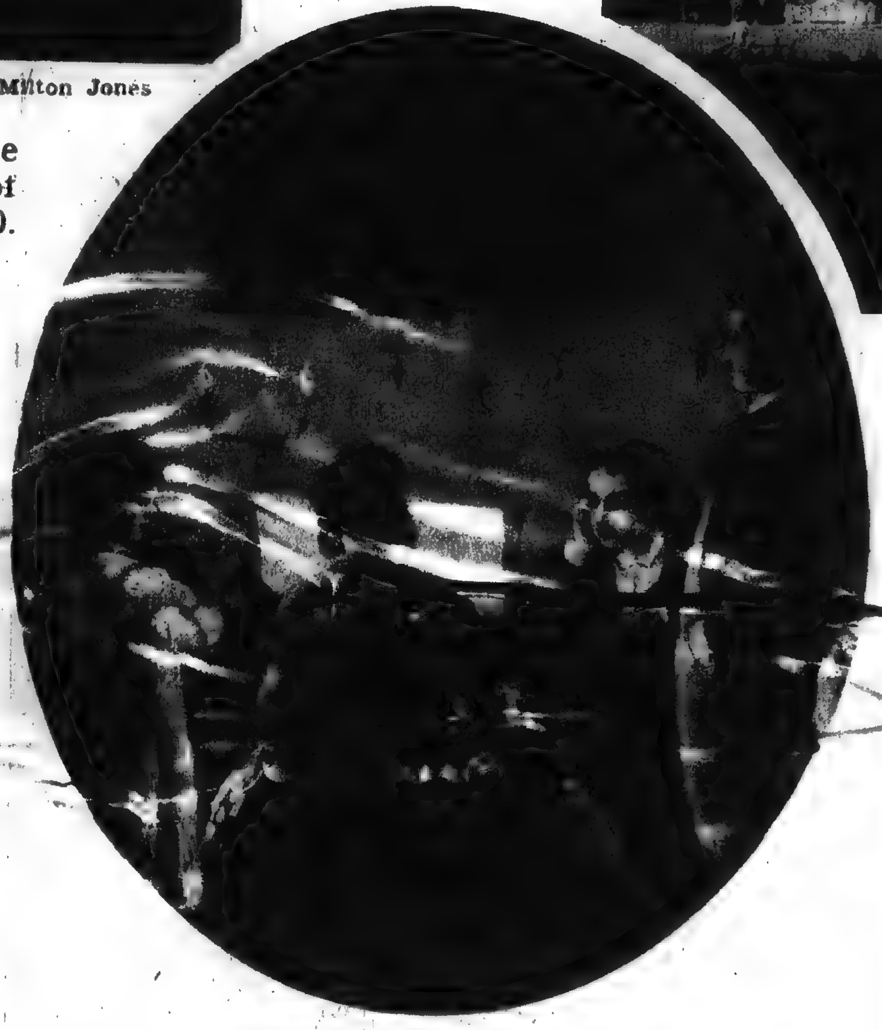
1934 To 1939

David Milton Jones

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival had its inaugural series at historic Dan Hanna Farm in the Interlaken hills of Stockbridge the summer of 1934. The late Henry Hadley and members of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra played three concerts before audiences totalling 7000.

David Milton Jones

After two seasons at Hanna Farm, the Festival moved in 1936 to Holmwood, the Lenox estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, where Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra made their debut in three concerts under the canvas of a half-acre tent.



Early association of Tanglewood with music is reflected in this painting of the Tappan family. It was found in the house attic.

David Milton Jones

The Festival's music shed, built with public contributions, was dedicated last summer by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Above is the shed as it looks during a matinee concert; below, as it is during "music under the moon."

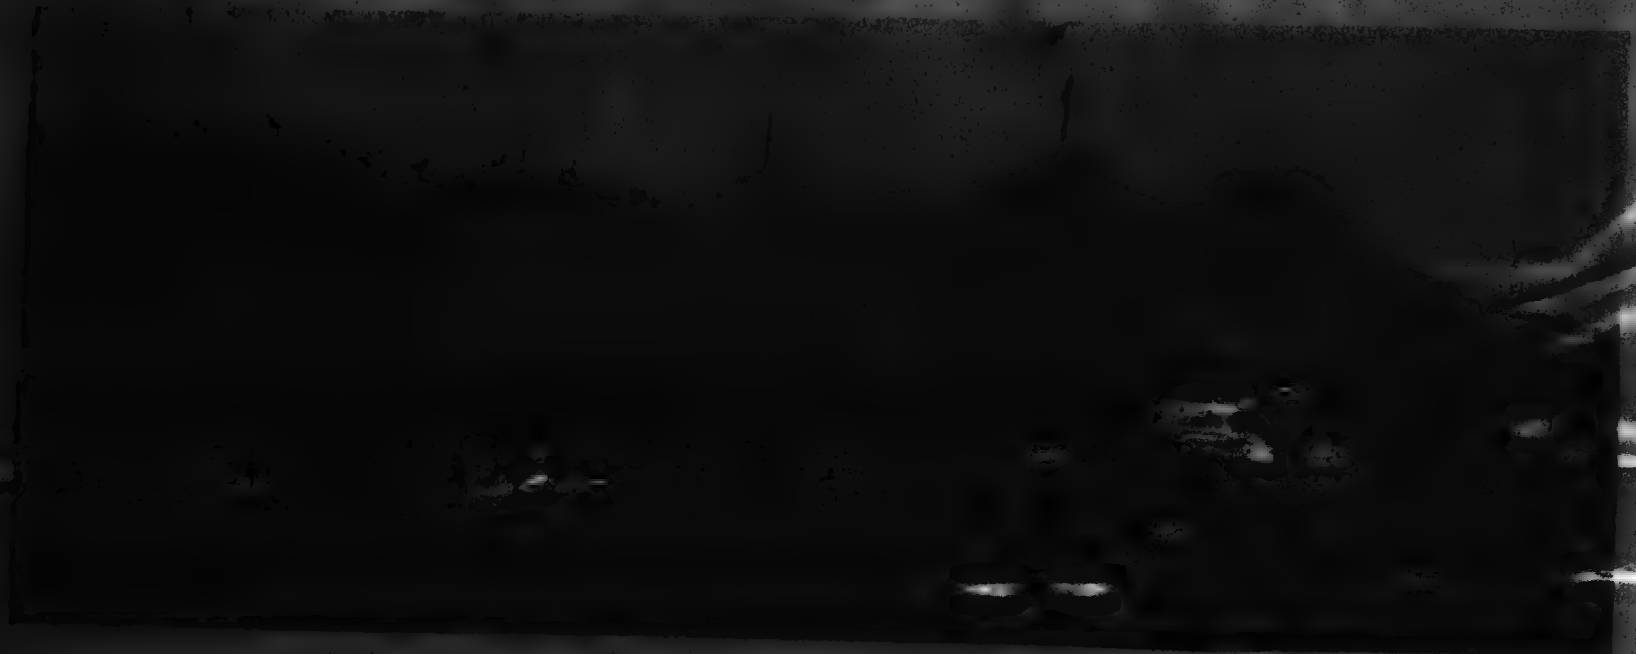
Music lovers have contributed generously toward the Festival shed but the building is not finished. It is essential that the building be enclosed for protection against sudden storms. Contributions in any amount will be welcome.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival

1934 To 1939

David Milton Jones

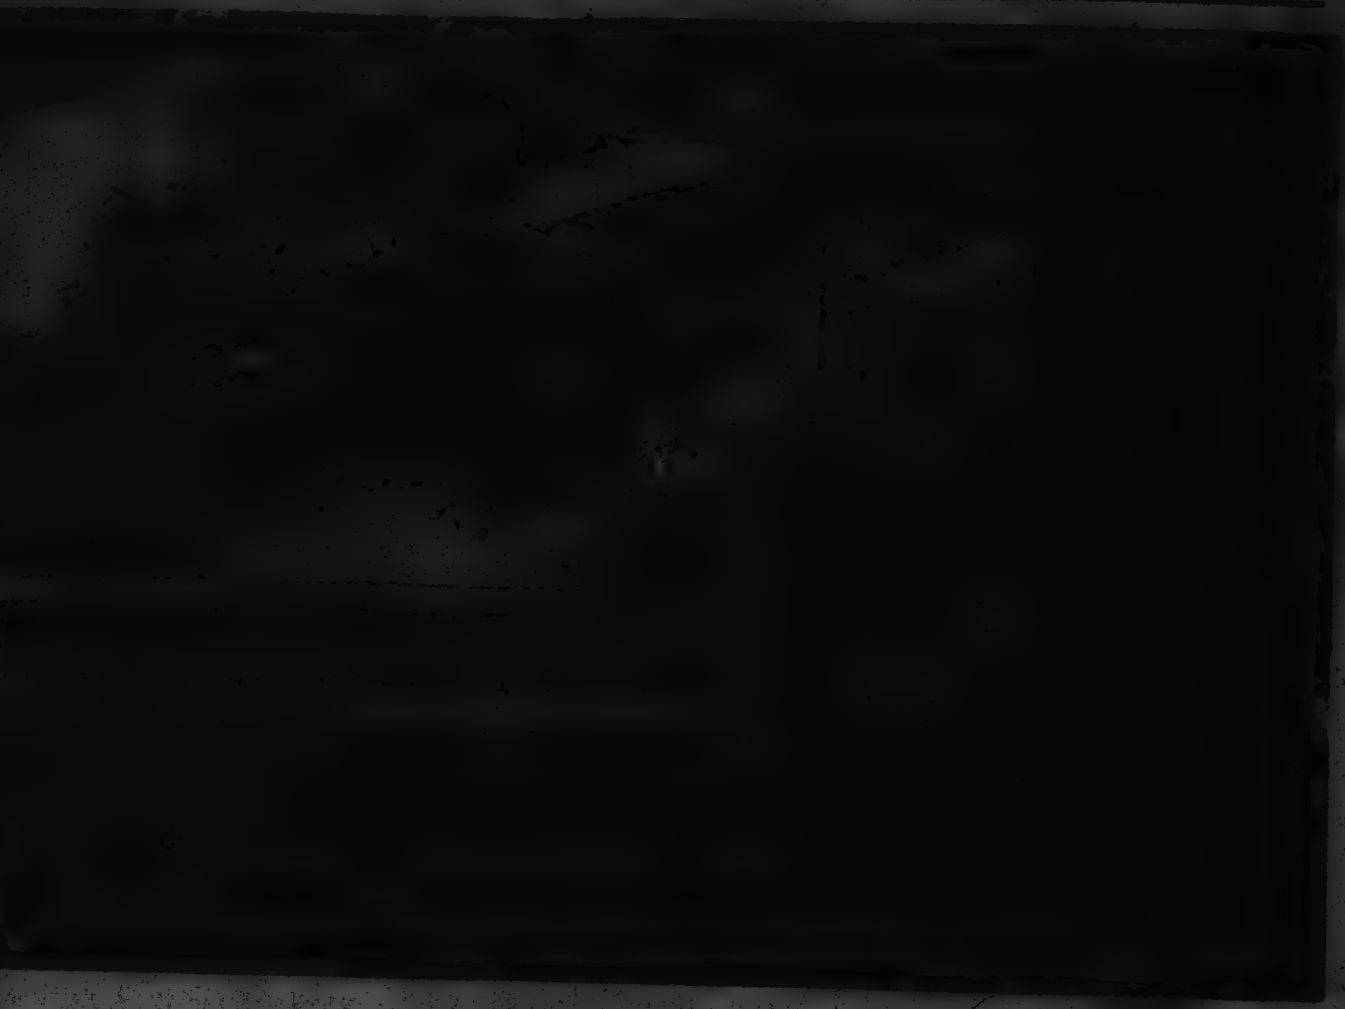
The Berkshire Symphonic Festival had its inaugural series at historic Dan Hanna Farm in the Interlaken hills of Stockbridge the summer of 1934. The late Henry Hadley and members of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra played three concerts before audiences totalling 7000.



David Milton Jones

After two seasons at Hanna Farm, the Festival moved in 1936 to Holmwood, the Lenox estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, where Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra made their debut in three concerts under the canvas of a half-acre tent.

Early association of Tanglewood with music is reflected in this painting of the Tappan family. It was found in the house attic.



David Milton Jones

The Festival's music shed, built with public contributions, was dedicated last summer by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Above is the shed as it looks during a matinee concert; below, as it is during "music under the moon."

Music lovers have contributed generously toward the Fes [illegible]

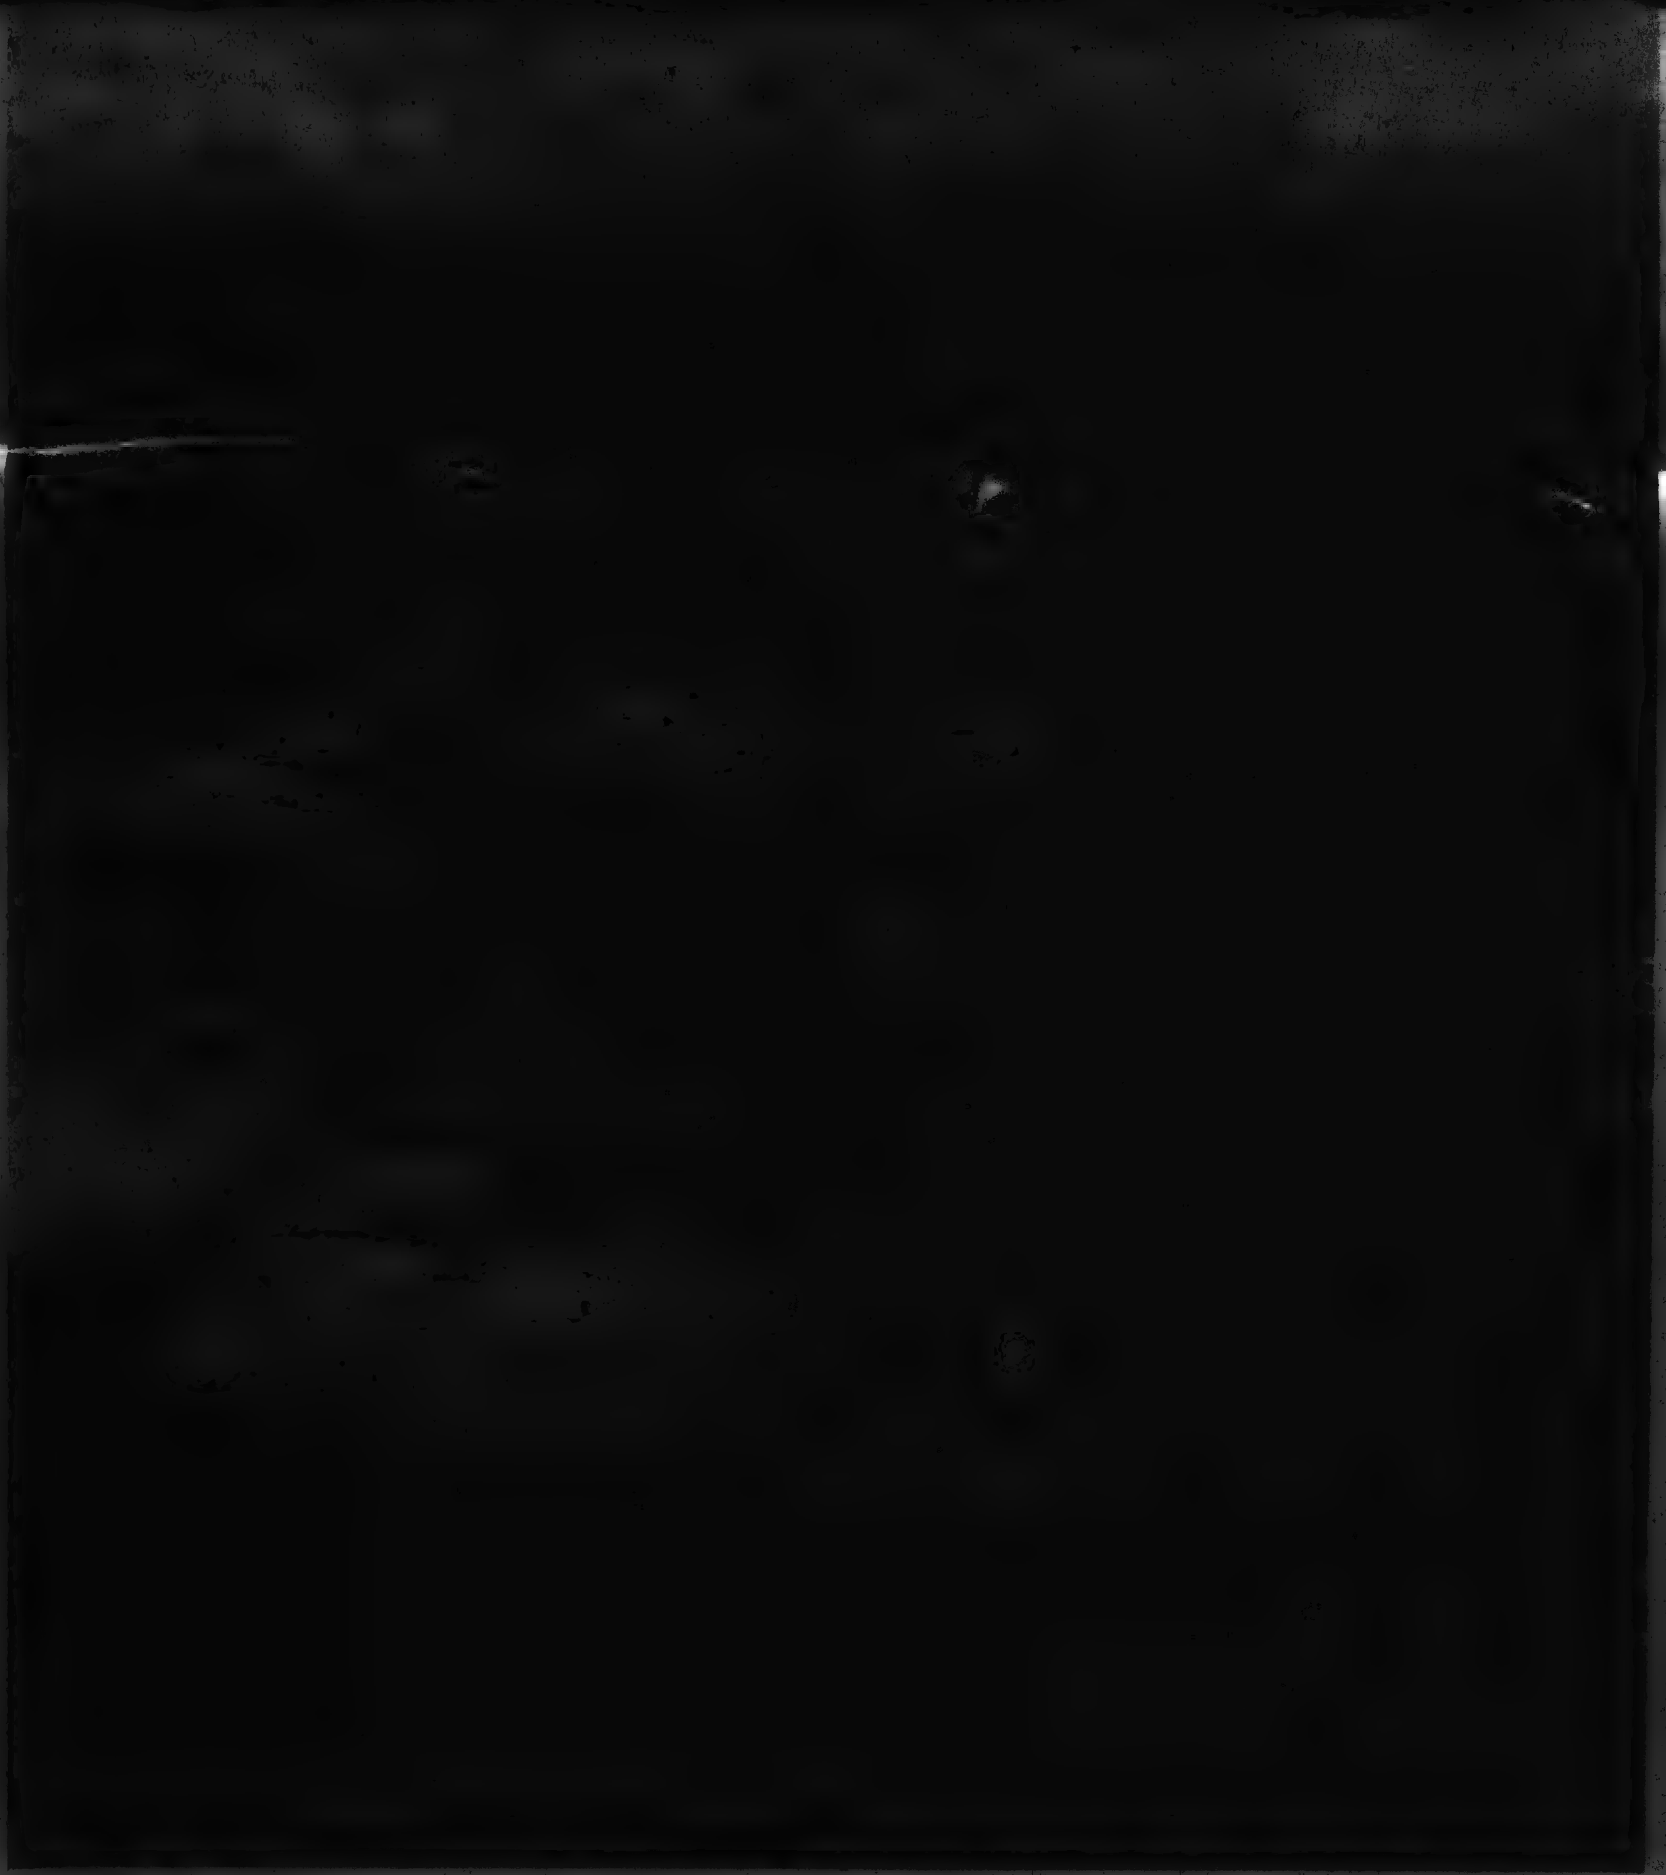
Two presidents take a bow, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of the Festival; Bentley W. Warren, president of the orchestra in 1938.

Music lovers have contributed generously toward the Festival shed but the building is not finished. It is essential that the building be enclosed for protection against sudden storms. Contributions in any amount will be welcome.

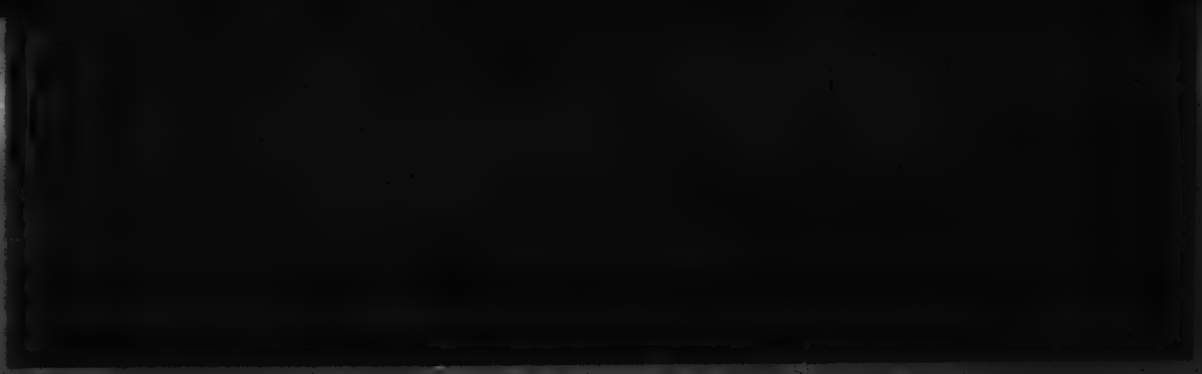
Among the distinguished visitors at the Festival during its four years have been Mrs. Sarah Delano Roosevelt (above), mother of the President; Miriam Hopkins, screen star (right), and Mrs. Grace Coolidge (below) widow of President Coolidge.

From an airplane, Tanglewood may be seen in all its beauty. The music shed is in the center of this picture. From it the rolling acres of the estate reach southward to lovely Stockbridge Bowl. Far to the north is Mt. Greylock, Massachusetts' highest peak. Below is a section of a 1938 matinee audience and to the left, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting at an evening performance.

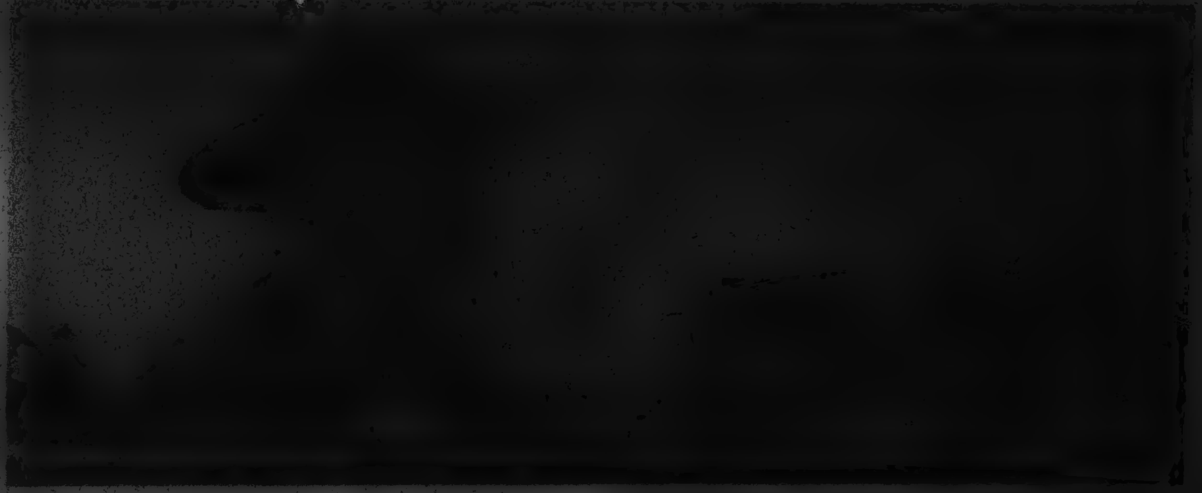
Two presidents take a bow. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of the Festival; Bentley W. Warren, president of the orchestra in 1938.



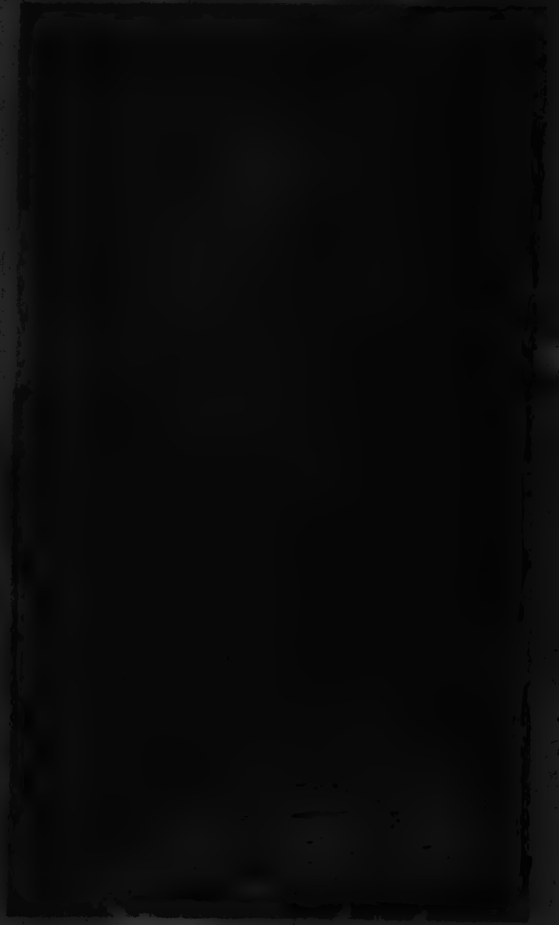
From an airplane, Tanglewood may be seen in all its beauty. The music shed is in the center of this picture. From it the rolling acres of the estate reach southward to lovely Stockbridge Bowl. Far to the north is Mt. Greylock, Massachusetts' highest peak. Below is a section of a 1938 matinee audience and to the left, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting at an evening performance.

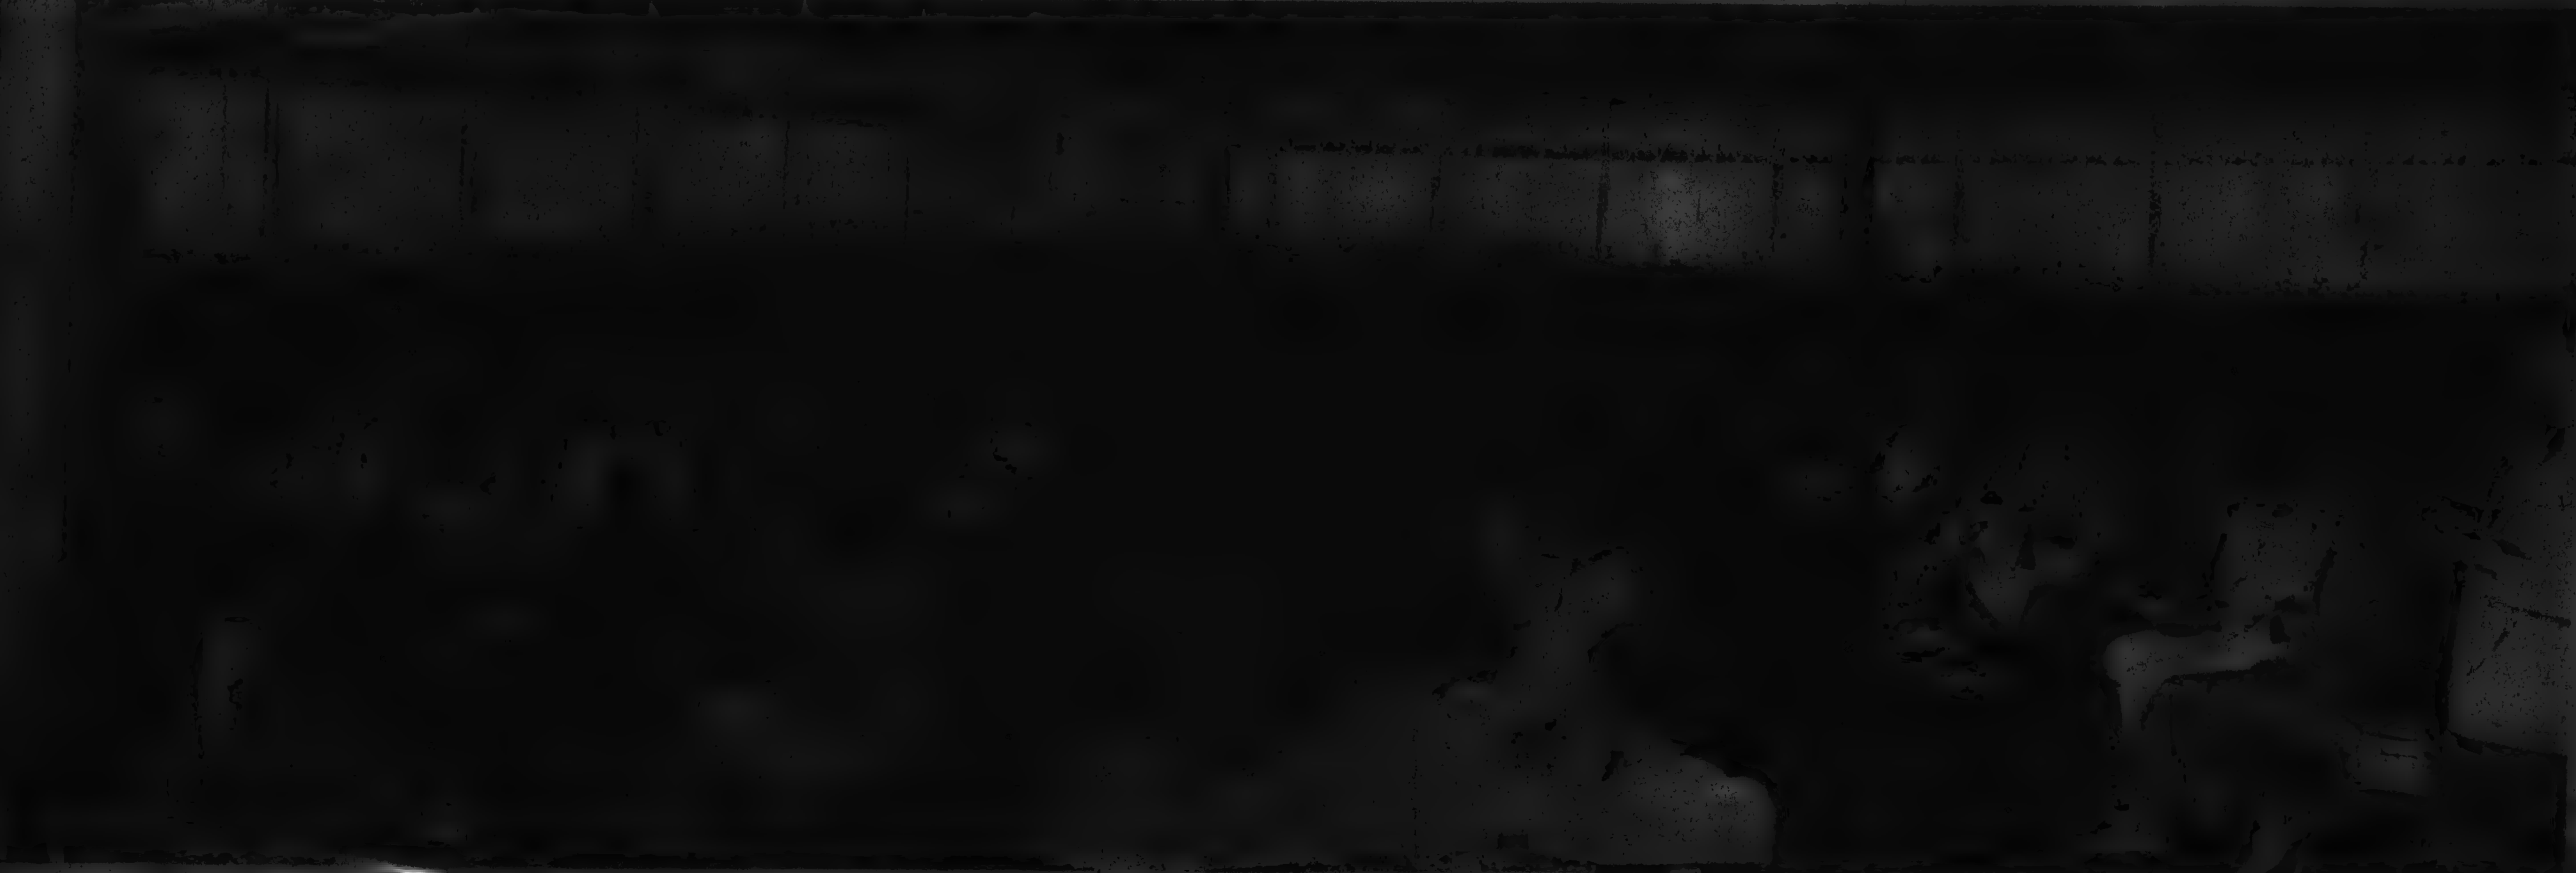


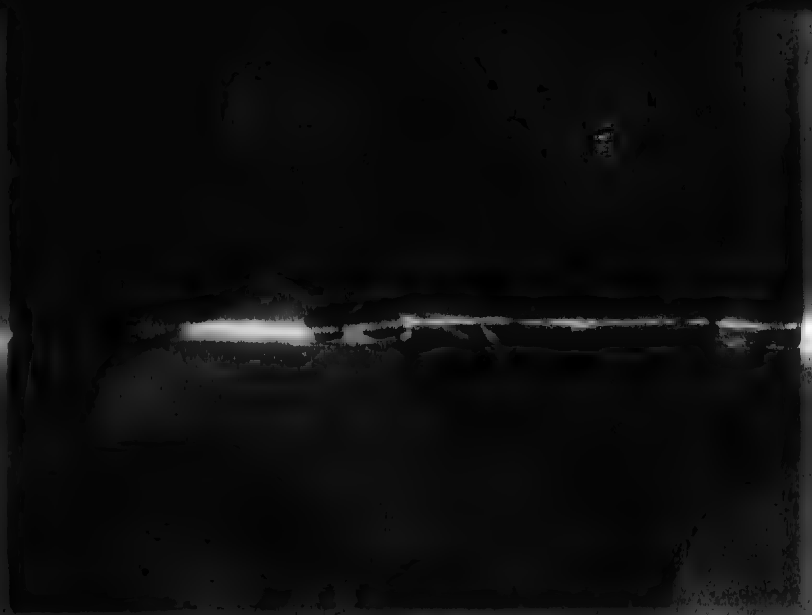
[illegible] but the building [illegible] It is essential [illegible] be enclosed [illegible]



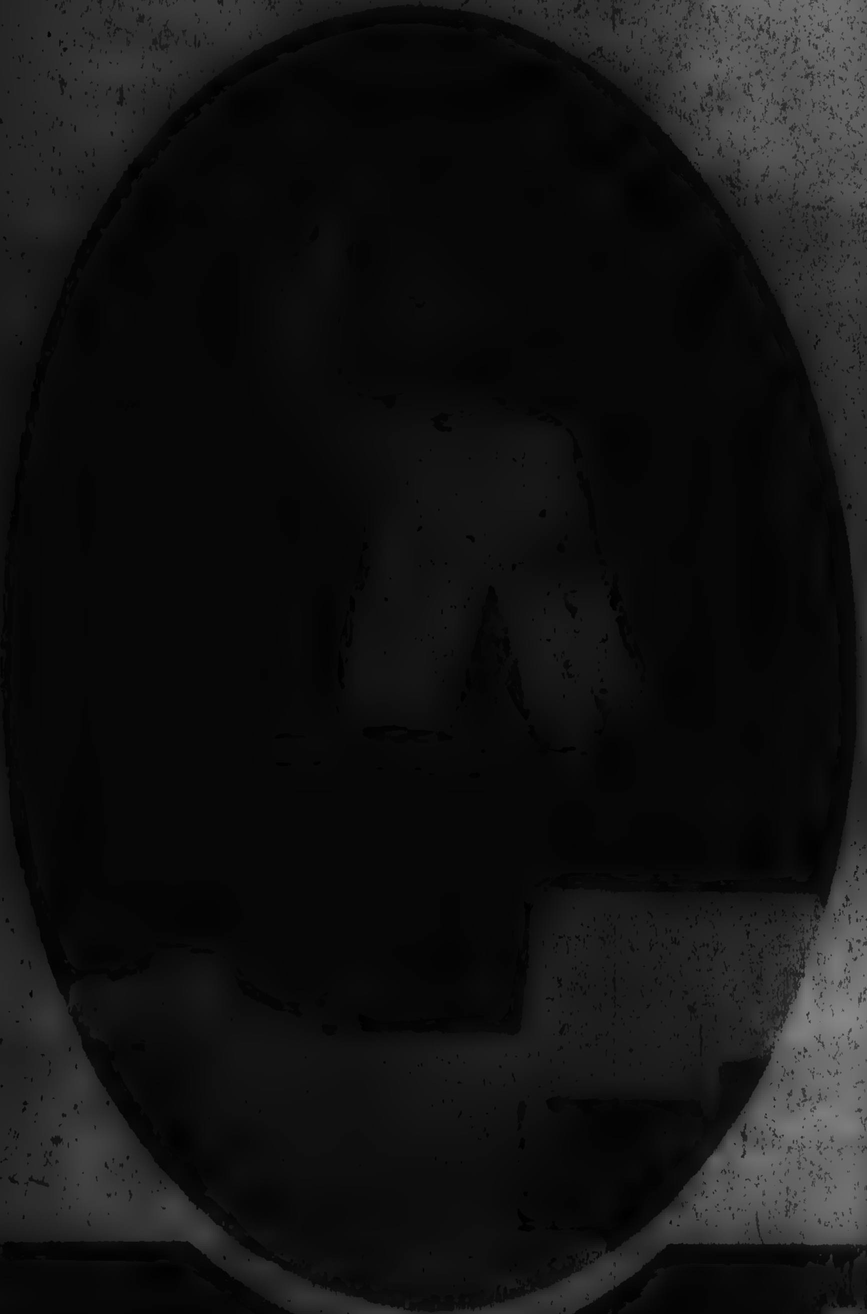
Among the distinguished visitors at the Festival during its four years have been Mrs. Sarah Delano Roosevelt (above), mother of the President; Miriam Hopkins, screen star (right), and Mrs. Grace Coolidge (below) widow of President Coolidge.



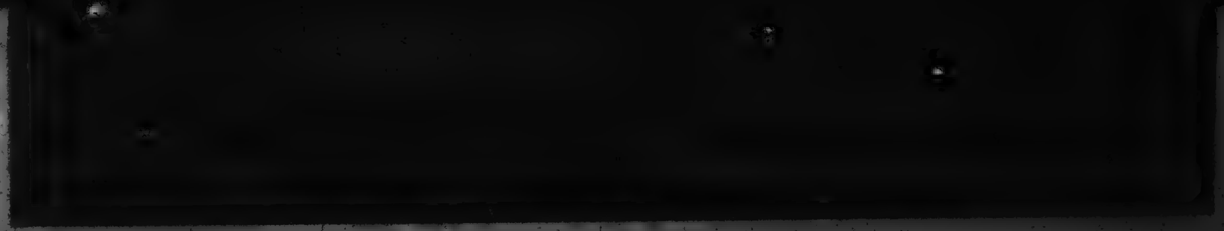




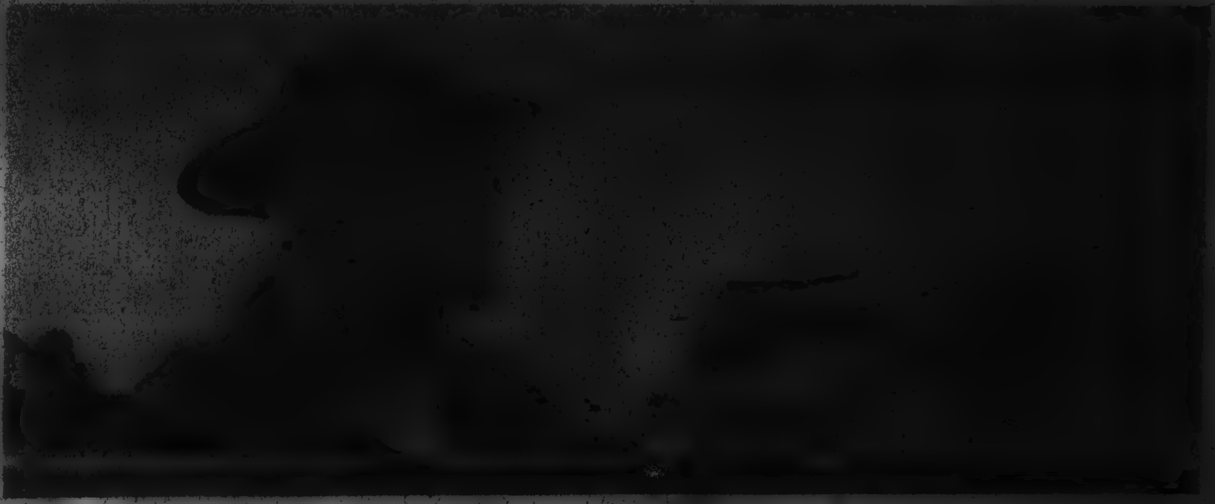
Two presidents take a bow. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of the Festival; Bentley W. Warren, president of the orchestra in 1938.



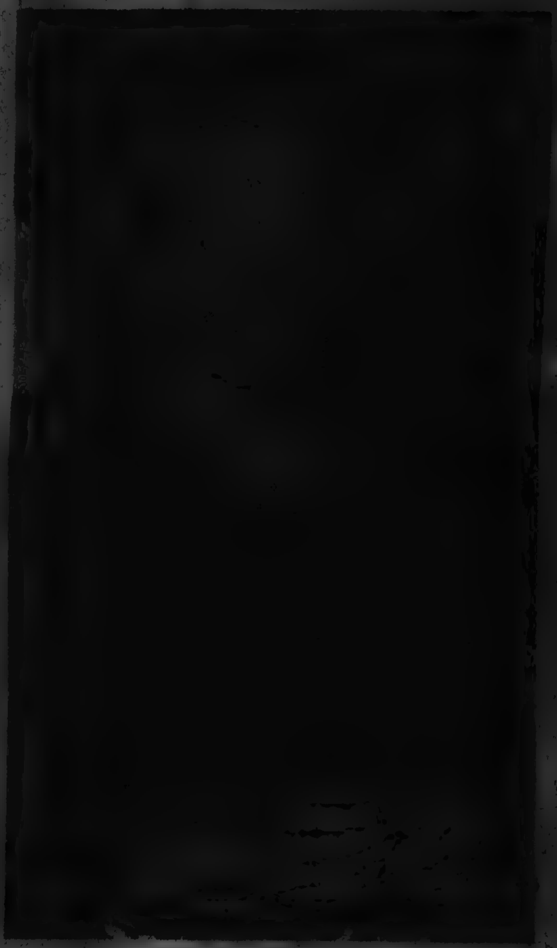
From an airplane, Tanglewood may be seen in all its beauty. The music shed is in the center of this picture. From it the rolling acres of the estate reach southward to lovely Stockbridge Bowl. Far to the north is Mt. Greylock, Massachusetts' highest peak. Below is a section of a 1938 matinee audience and to the left, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting at an evening performance.

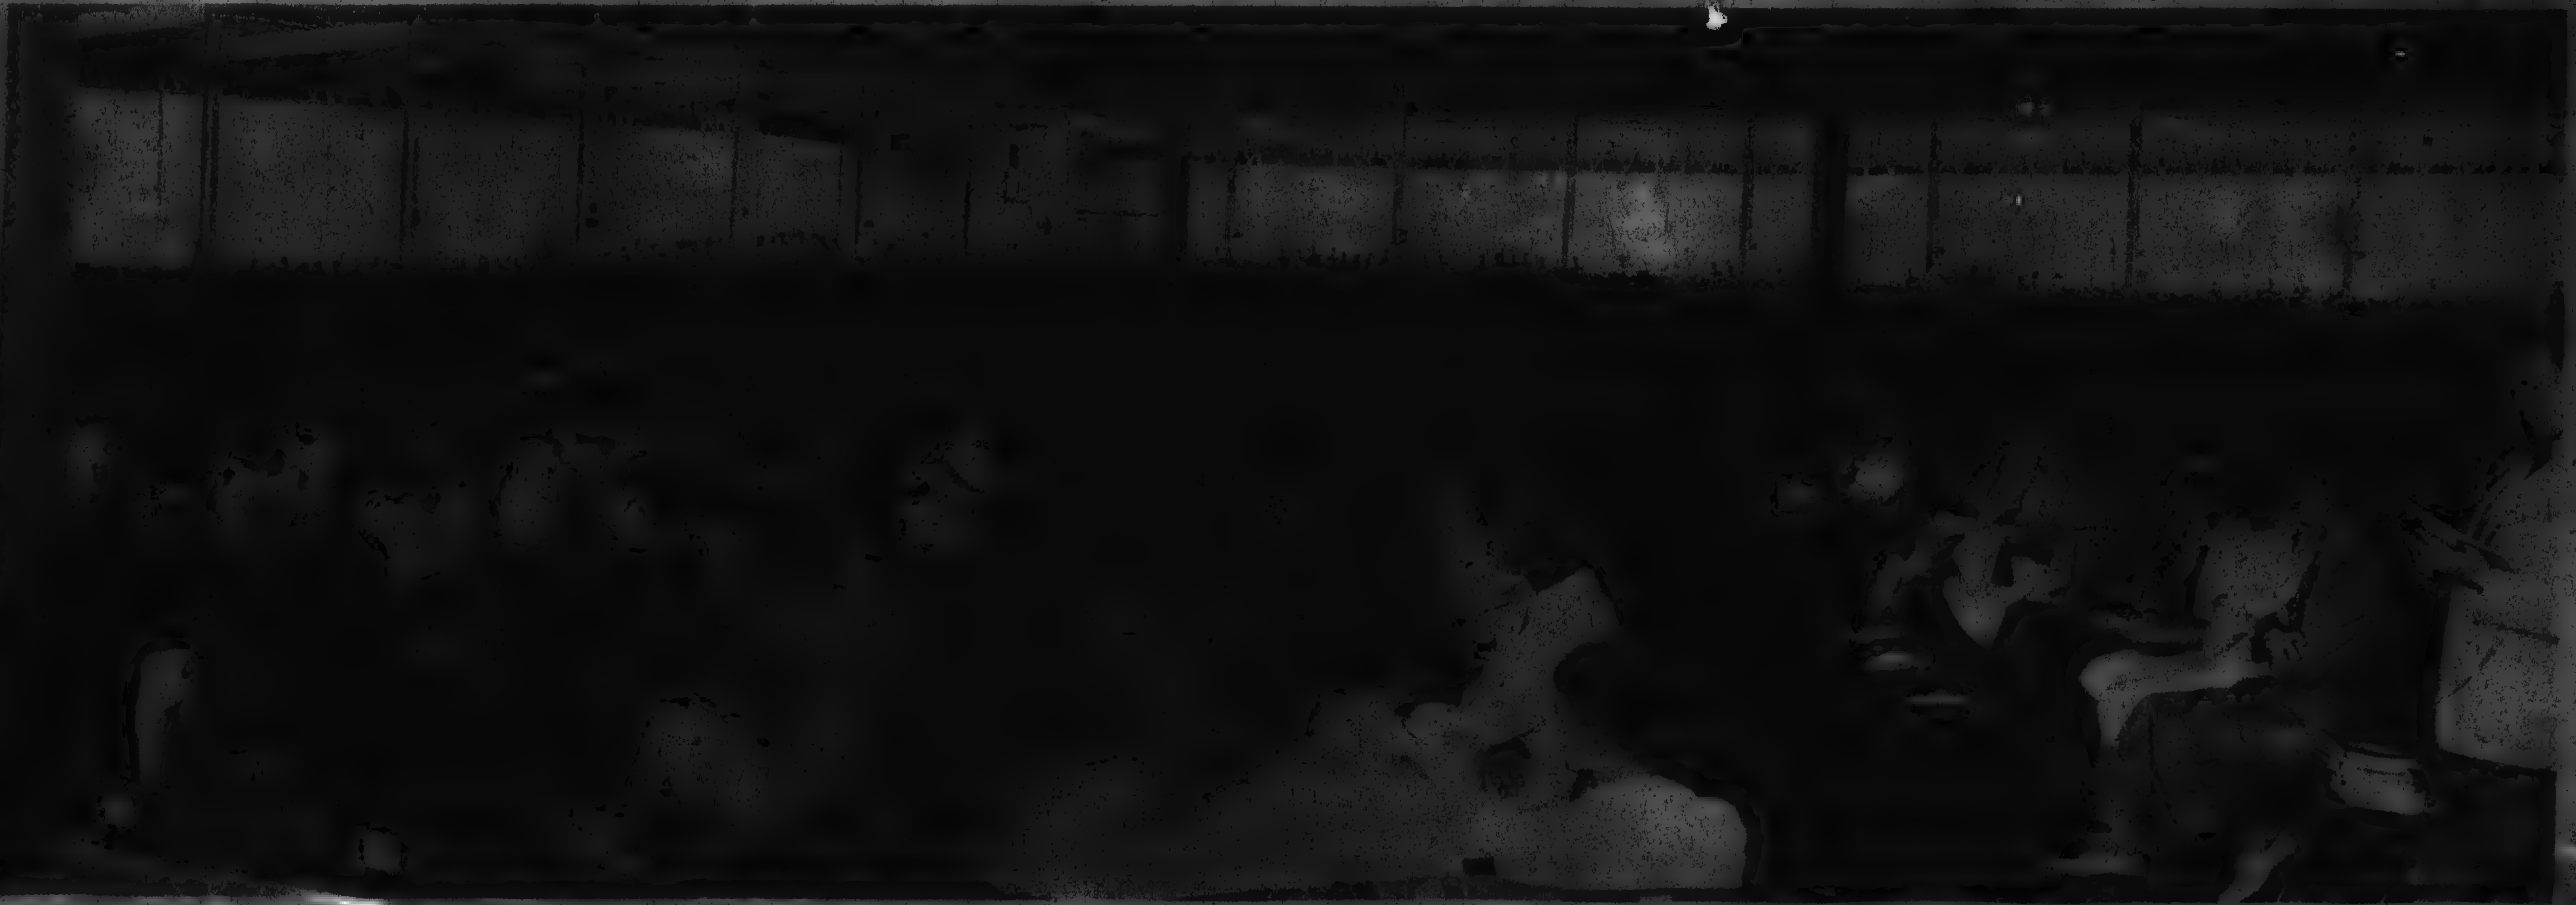


[illegible] val shed but the [illegible] is not finished. It is [illegible] the building be enclosed for protection [illegible] contributions [illegible]



Among the distinguished visitors at the Festival during its four years have been Mrs. Sarah Delano Roosevelt (above), mother of the President; Miriam Hopkins, screen star (right), and Mrs. Grace Coolidge (below) widow of President Coolidge.





THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE ✓

53

JUL 27 1939

Colorful Reception Opens Six Galleries of Art At the Berkshire Museum

Many Artists Attend Opening of Exhibits—Photographs, Wash Drawings of Boston Symphony, New York Artists' Work Showing

One of the most important and colorful art openings at the Berkshire Museum was held last night from 9 to midnight at a reception which formally inaugurated the showings in six galleries. On view were the Second Annual Berkshire National Photographic Exhibit, "The World of Today" exhibit by New York artists, and Donald Greason's wash drawings of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

~~300 Attend Ope~~ning

Three hundred attended the opening, which was formal. Laces and sheer fabrics like chiffon and organzas predominated in the women's gowns, while pale blue was probably the leading color, with plenty of white, pale green and lavendar also being worn.

Many of the artists whose work was on display were among the guests. H. J. Phillips, associate of the Royal Photographic Society and only photographer to have all four of his entries accepted, was present from New York. Philip Evergood of Long Island whose painting was hung on the stair landing attended. Also from Long Island, were Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Emptage. Mr. Emptage has an oil painting in the modern gallery. An artist who is represented by a water color in the exhibit, Stuyvesant Van Veen, attended from New York City, accompanied by Miss Susan French, also of New York.

Other artists who were present included Henry Hudson Kitson of Tyringham, the sculptor, with Mrs. Kitson; Sterling Calder of Richmond, who did the fountain in the Ellen Crane Memorial Gallery in the Museum, with Mrs. Calder; Mrs. Helen Damrosch Tee Van, who decorated the biology room at the Museum; Dr. Charles C. Adams, director of the New York State Museum at Albany, with his daughter, Miss Harriet Adams of New York; Herman Baron, who conducts the American Contemporary Artists gallery in New York, which loaned work to this exhibit.

Miss McCausland Receives

Miss Elisabeth McCausland, of Springfield, who arranged and supervised the exhibit by the 100 New York City artists, aided in the receiving. She wore a black satin skirt with a jacket of knitted satin ribbon fastened with flowered buttons. Miss Laura M. Bragg, director of the Museum, wore a pale blue sheer dress, a gardenia corsage and a necklace of gold chains.

Largest artists' group to attend was the North Adams Art Club, which has been represented in various Museum exhibits. Among the members present were M. John Paradis, Roy B. Peebles, and J. J. Ruberti, with Mrs. Ruberti. Stefan Hirsch, head of the art department of Bennington College, attended with Mrs. Hirsch. Dr. Edward Deming Andrews who wrote the book, "Shaker Furniture," attended with Mrs. Andrews. Mr. and Mrs. Charles L. Safford of Williamstown attended with their guest, Mrs. Safford's sister, Miss Margaret Tappen of Philadelphia.

Many Helped in Receiving

The three exhibits had separate receiving lines. For "The World of Today," the collection of paintings in the Ellen Crane Memorial Room, those receiving were: Miss McCausland, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel G. Colt, Miss Laura Bragg, Henry A. Francis, Mr. and Mrs. John Barker, Mr. and Mrs. Richard H. Gamwell, Mr. and Mrs. Stuart C. Henry, Mrs. William E. Cushing, Dr. and Mrs. I. M. Altarez, Mrs. Edwards Spencer, Mr. and Mrs. Leon Mohill, Mrs. David T. Dana, Miss Anna R. Alexandre, Mrs. Edwin Payson, Merwin and Winthrop M. Crane Jr.

Receiving in the gallery, which contained the paintings of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, done by Donald Greason, were Dr. George S. Reynolds, Mr. and Mrs. George W. Edman, Mr. and Mrs. Zenas Crane Colt and Miss Judith Colt. At the Berkshire National Photographic Exhibit were Mr. and Mrs. Charles J. Kittredge, Mr. and Mrs. Allan B. Hendricks, Mr. and Mrs. Erwin Stanley, Mr. and Mrs. George H. Denison and Mr. and Mrs. Bartlett Hendricks.

Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller headed the refreshments committee. She was assisted by Mrs. Alan Blau, Mrs. George Edman, and Mrs. Samuel G. Colt Jr., who helped with the refreshments, and by Mrs. Elmer Euston.

Decorations consisted of midsummer flowers, different color schemes and arrangements being used in each gallery. Miss Emma Robbins and her committee arranged the floral decorations.

Art Lovers Discuss the Current Museum Show

Seven of the artists and art lovers who attended last night's opening at the Berkshire Museum, are shown above discussing the exhibition with Miss Laura M. Bragg, Museum director, extreme left. They are, left to right, Arthur Emptage of New York who has an oil painting in the exhibit; Herman Baron, who conducts the American Contemporary Artists Gallery in New York; Mrs. Emptage; Miss Susan French of New York; Miss Elisabeth McCausland of Springfield who organized the exhibit by New York artists; and Stuyvesant Van Veen of New York, who has a water color in the exhibit.

THIS CLIPPING FROM QUINCY, MASS.
PATRIOT LEDGER

JUL 27 1939

Koussevitzy Finds French Nation United

BOSTON, July 27 (UP)—On his 65th birthday, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, returned late last night from a three-week vacation in France.

He said he had found the French nation united "like one man" in the face of a tense European situation.

Dr. Koussevitzky, at his Brookline home today, began preparing musical scores for the annual Berkshire musical festival to be opened by his orchestra next Thursday.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR

JUL 27 1939

KOUSSEVITZKY BACK FOR BERKSHIRE MUSIC

New York (AP) — Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, arrived yesterday on the Champlain to begin rehearsals for the sixth Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which opens Aug. 3 at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass.

Dr. Koussevitzky sailed late in June for a vacation in Paris. Mrs. Koussevitzky accompanied him.

This year's festival embraces six programs, all conducted by Dr. Koussevitzky and given in the festival "music shed" on Aug. 3, 5, 6, 10, 12 and 13. The orchestra will rehearse in its winter home, Symphony Hall, through Wednesday, and then migrate en masse from Boston to the Berkshires.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 27 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR

JUL 27 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM

JUL 27 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

JUL 27 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
PRESS

JUL 27 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WILLIMANTIC, CONN.
CHRONICLE

JUL 27 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

JUL 27 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

JUL 27 1939

KOUSSEVITZKY HOME FROM FRANCE

Boston, July 27 — (U.P.) — On his 65th birthday, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, returned late last night from a three-week vacation in France.

He said he had found the French nation united "like one man" in the face of a tense European situation.

Dr. Koussevitzky, at his Brookline home today, began preparing musical scores for the annual Berkshire music festival to be opened by his orchestra next Thursday.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 27 1939

ANNUAL MIDSEASON BERKSHIRE MUSEUM RECEPTION IS HELD

Opening of Three Exhibitions Inaugurated—Invitations Issued to 2000—Receiving Line Announced

Special Dispatch to The Republican

Berkshire Hills, July 26—The annual midsummer Berkshire museum reception was held tonight at Pittsfield to mark the opening of three exhibitions—second annual Berkshire national photographic display, "The World of Today," organized by Miss Elizabeth McCausland and Donald Greason's wash-drawings of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Two thousand invitations were issued and among those who received were Mrs Samuel Gilbert Colt, daughter of the late Zenas Crane, founder of the museum; Miss Judith Colt, Mr and Mrs Zenas Crane Colt, Miss Laura M. Bragg, director of the museum; Mrs Edwards Spencer, Mrs William Felton Barrett, Mrs William Penn Cresson, Mrs Edward Payson Merwin, Mr and Mrs Stuart C. Henry, Misses Anna Remsen Alexandre, Margaret H. Hall, Mr and Mrs George W. Edman, Mr and Mrs John Barker, Mr and Mrs Richard H. Gamwell, Dr George S. Reynolds, Winthrop M. Crane, Jr., Mr and Mrs Henry A. Francis, Mr and Mrs Charles James Kittredge, Mr and Mrs Allan B. Hendricks, Mr and Mrs G. Bartlett Hendricks, Mr and Mrs Erwin Stanley, Mr and Mrs George H. Denison, Mr and Mrs Leon Mohill and Dr I. M. Altaraz. At refreshment tables were Mrs Alan J. Blau, Mrs Samuel Gilbert Colt, Jr., Mrs Elmer A. Euston and Mrs Lawrence K. Miller.

Return from Trip Abroad

Mr and Mrs Harris Fahnestock have returned to Eastover, Lenox, after a two months' trip abroad.

Mr and Mrs William Ellery Sedgwick have Mrs Sedgwick Delafield as a guest at Sedgwick Mansion, Stockbridge. Mrs Sedgwick Marquand and two children, Miss Christina and John P. Marquand, Jr., left today for six weeks on a ranch in Colorado.

Visiting Mrs Arthur Murray Sherwood at Stockbridge are Mr and Mrs Arthur M. Sherwood, Jr., Miss Virginia C. Sherwood of New York and Miss Julia Townsend of St James, L. I.

Robert Emmet Sherwood, the playwright, and Mrs Sherwood, who were with his mother, left for Hollywood, Cal.

Mrs C. Wickliffe Yulee is back at Curtis hotel, Lenox, from Bar Harbor.

Miss Elizabeth de L. Cunningham of New York is at Hotel Wendell, Pittsfield, for a month.

With Mr and Mrs John Barry Ryan at the Old Place, Stockbridge, are Mr and Mrs Thomas Ludlow Clarke, Jr., of New York city.

At Stockbridge Club

Mr and Mrs Constant Southworth and Mr and Mrs James A. Seaman of Springfield registered recently at Stockbridge Golf and Tennis club.

Mr and Mrs F. H. Williams of Springfield have Mr and Mrs John Barnard of Nahant as guests at Berkshire inn, Great Barrington.

Mr and Mrs Fred W. Main of Springfield are at Egremont inn, South Egremont, for three weeks.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

JUN 28 1939

VISITORS INSPECT HOME OF BERKHIRE FESTIVAL

Distinguished visitors are coming daily to Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge to inspect the permanent home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the music shed dedicated last summer by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor. Many of the visitors are coming to the Berkshires on a side trip from the New York World's Fair and plan to return for the concerts to be given the first two weeks in August by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

JUL 28 1939

FESTIVAL PATRONESS

Special Dispatch to The Gazette

PITTSFIELD, July 28.—Mrs. Frank C. Smith, Jr., of Worcester is one of the patronesses of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Aug. 3, 5, 6, 10, 12 and 13, at Tanglewood, Lenox. Mrs. Smith, who will occupy one of the boxes at the festival with her guests, is one of 84 patrons and patronesses who are box-holders to date. The Boston Symphony Orchestra will [illegible] six concerts.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CHICOPEE, MASS.
HERALD
7/27/39

Visitors Welcome At Tanglewood, Home of Berkshire Symphonic Festival

More and more visitors are flocking to Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, daily to obtain a preview of the gardens, and shed, and the view across Stockbridge Bowl before the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge [redacted].

The concerts open next week and will continue through the following week-end. Already there has been a tremendous advance demand for tickets, exceeding the demand for 1938. The Festival office announced today; however, that there are still a numbed of good seats available for the six concerts.

At Tanglewood, one of the beauty spots is the evergreen garden planted by the Tappan family, former owners of the 200-acre estate. At the end of the garden, backed by a hemlock hedge extending along Hawthorne St., is a stone seat of simple design. On the seat, Mrs. Gorham Brooks, who made the magnificent gift of the estate to the orchestra in 1937, had inscribed last year these words to describe the gift:

"Tanglewood given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Mary Aspinwall Tappan and Rosamond Sturgis Brooks in memory of William Aspinwall Tappan, Caroline Sturgis Tappan, Richard Cowell Dixey, Ellen Sturgis Dixey, Arthur Sturgis Dixey, who lived here for many years. MCMXXXVII."

Visitors are welcome to Tanglewood, a shrine of music growing in its appeal annually. Information about Tanglewood and tickets for the concerts will be supplied gladly by the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office at Stockbridge, Massachusetts.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

JUL 27 1939

Berkshire Hills Colony Sees Three Exhibitions

Reception for 2,000 Is Held in Pittsfield Museum

Special to the Herald Tribune

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., July 6.—A reception, for which 2,000 invitations had been issued, was held at Berkshire Museum, Pittsfield, tonight to mark the opening of three exhiibtions, "The World of Today," organized by Miss Elizabeth McCausland, the second annual Berkshire national photographic display, and Mr. Donald Greason's wash-drawings o fthe Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Among [redacted] received were Miss Laura M. Bragg, director of the cuseum; Mrs. Samuel Gilbert Colt, daughter of the late Zenas Crane, its founder; Mr. and Mrs. Stuart C. Henry, Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. Francis, Mr. and Mrs. John Barker, Mr. and Mrs. Richard H. Gamwell, Mr. and Mrs. George W. Edman, Mr. and Mrs. Charles James Kittredge, Mr. and Mrs. Allan B. Hendricks, Mr. and Mrs. Zenas Crane Colt, Miss Judith Colt, Dr. George S. Reynolds, Miss Anna Remsen Alexandre and Mmes. Edward Payson Merwin, William Felton Barrett, William Penn Cresson and William E. Vushing, and Miss Margaret H. Hall. In charge of refreshments were Mmes. Samuel Gilbert Colt jr., Elmer A. Euston, Alan J. Blau and Lawrence K. Miller.

Mr. Robert Emmet Sherwood, the playwright, and Mrs. Sherwood departed for Hollywood, Calif., following a visit with his mother, Mrs. Arthur Murray Sherwood, at Stockbridge. Visiting her now are Mr. and Mrs. Arthur M. Sherwood jr. and Miss Virginia O. Sherwood, of New York, and Miss Julia Townsend, of St. James, L. I. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Ludlow Clarke jr., of New York, are visiting Mr. and Mrs. John Barry Ryan in Stockbridge. Miss Elizabeth De L. Cunningham, of New York, is at Hotel Wendell, Pittsfield.

Mrs. Sedgwick Delafield is visiting Mr. and Mrs. William Ellery Sedgwick at the Sedgwick Mansion in Stockbridge. Mrs. Sedgwick Marquand and two children, Miss Christina and Mr. John P. Marquand jr., departed for six weeks on a Colorado ranch.

Mr. and Mrs. Harris Fahnestock are at Eastover Lenox following a two months' visit in England and France. Mrs. C. Wickliffe Yulee has returned to Curtis Hotel, Lenox, from Bar Harbor.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

JUL 28 1939

Music-Loving Invalids To Get Special Service

Invalids or others temporarily incapacitated need not remain away from the Boston Symphony orchestra concerts at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival opening Aug. 3 at 8:30 at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

A fleet of wheel chairs has been assembled from Berkshire county hospitals and will be available for those who wish them. By writing to the Festival office at Stockbridge, a special "invalid's" card may be obtained, permitting automobiles to enter the box parking area and drive to the corner of the music shed.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 28 1939

Millionth and Million-First Customers At World's Fair Coming to Berkshires

On Monday, Aug. 7, the millionth and million-first customers will click the turnstiles at the New York World's Fair. You cannot blame President Grover Whalen's press department and the six New England governors if the two persons happen to be extremely personable young women. Nor can you attach any criticism of the fair's plans to send them on a trip through New England as a special reward for the coincidence of their arrival at the fair. So the Berkshire Hills Conference has agreed to find lodging for the two young women, their chaperon, and press agent on Aug. 10, together with dinner and breakfast.

While in the Berkshires, they will visit the Symphonic Festival for the first concert of the second series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The question is: Who will be first to offer entertainment for the Fair party? The Conference has bulletined hotels and rooming houses to inform them of their opportunity.

Another notice on the bulletin concerns the request of A. K. Arnold, Tourist Counsellors, 11 West 42nd Street, New York City, for information as to the best location for a proposed 10-room ski lodge in the Berkshires. He plans to come here this weekend for investigation of possibilities.

Third, and last special item in the bulletin, requests that someone donate services to decorate a booth, made available to the Conference by the Massachusetts Development and Industrial Commission at its summer information center in the Massachusetts State Building on the Eastern States Exposition grounds at West Springfield. Signs have been erected directing tourists to the building, where Conference and other resort pamphlets and information are available. The Conference has had a sign made for the booth which must be decorated suitably at once.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

JUL 28 1939

VISITORS WELCOME AT TANGLEWOOD HOME OF BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

More and more visitors are flocking to Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, daily to obtain a preview of the gardens, the shed, and the view across Stockbridge Bowl before the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky.

The concerts open next week (Aug. 3) and will continue through the following week-end. Already there has been a tremendous advance demand for tickets, exceeding the demand for 1938. The Festival office announced, however, that there are still a number of good seats available for the six concerts.

At Tanglewood, one of the beauty spots is the evergreen garden planted by the Tappan family, former owners of the 200-acre estate. At the end of the garden, backed by a hemlock hedge extending along Hawthorn St., is a stone seat of simple design. On the seat, Mrs Gorham Brooks, who made the magnificent gift of the estate to the orchestra in 1937, had inscribed last year these words to describe the gift:

"Tanglewood given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Mary Aspinwall Tappan and Rosamond Sturgis Brooks in memory of William Aspinwall Tappan, Caroline Sturgis Tappan, Richard Cowell Dixey, Ellen Sturgis Dixey, Arthur Sturgis Dixey, who lived here for many years. MCMXXXVII."

Visitors are welcome to Tanglewood, a shrine of music growing in its appeal annually. Information about Tanglewood and tickets for the concerts will be supplied gladly by the Berkshire Symphonic Festivall office at Stockbridge, Mass.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News

JUL 28 1939

MUSIC FESTIVAL PROGRAM NEAR

Tanglewood Parking Area Improved; Lighting Provided

Those who love symphony music will converge at Tanglewood in the Berkshires Thursday night for the opening performance of the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the series of six concerts on the 200-acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge.

Arrangements were completed this week to park hundreds of cars on a 10½-acre field which has been drained completely. Installation of 900 feet of 12-inch and 18-inch tile has been completed and more than 7,000 cubic yards of gravel spread over the low areas in the parking field.

A steel tower was erected for installation of floodlights and permanent light arrangements at the Tanglewood entrances completed for the concerts under direction of Joseph Franz of Stockbridge, one of the board of trustees for the festival.

Parking will be in charge of Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre of Pittsfield and ushers in charge of Willard Sistare of Pittsfield. The Thursday Morning Club of Great Barrington will have charge of the food concession.

A fleet of wheel chairs assembled from Berkshire County hospitals will be available for those who are invalided. Special "invalid" cards permit automobiles to enter the box parking area and drive to the corner of the music shed this year.

One of the beauty spots at Tanglewood is an evergreen garden planted by the Tappan family, former owners of the 200-acre estate. Mrs. Gorham Brooks, who presented the grounds to the orchestra two years ago, has noted the gift with an inscription on a stone seat at one end of the garden: "Tanglewood—Given to the Boston Symphoy Orchestra by Mary Aspinwall Tappan and Rosamond Sturgis Brooks in memory of William Aspinwall Tappan, Caroline Sturgiss Tappan, Richard Cowell Dixey, Ellen Sturgis Dixey, Arthur Sturgis Dixey, who lived here for many years—1937."

55

THIS CLIPPING FROM

HARTSDALE, N.Y
TIMES
7/26/39

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HERALD
Elmsford N.Y.

JUL 28 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM

ELMSFORD, N.Y
HERALD
7/28/39

Berkshire Festival Will Open Soon

1st Concert Of Annual Musical Event Will Be Played Thursday Night

The Berkshires are catching the festival spirit in anticipation of the opening concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., on next Thursday night, beginning at 8:30 o'clock.

Dr. Koussevitzky arrived in New York City on Wednesday from a brief vacation spent in Europe and went directly to Boston to rehearse with the orchestra at Symphony Hall. Next Wednesday the orchestra goes to Tanglewood to continue rehearsals for the opening concert. One member of the orchestra. Roger Voisin, probably the youngest trumpeter in any major orchestra—he's only 18—has already pitched his tent on the shores of Stockbridge Bowl at Tanglewood and, before the week is out, others will do the same.

Catching the festival spirit, Henry Wigeland, youthful organist of the Great Barrington Congregational Church, has scheduled a performance of Verdi's "Requiem" with New York soloists for next Wednesday evening. Many early arrivals for the Festival concerts will attend the performance.

Charles L. Safford, retired director of music at Williams College, will give his final lecture on the symphonies to be played at the Festival at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield Tuesday afternoon. These lectures have been sponsored by the Pittsfield Junior League and have been open to the public at no cost.

The Berkshire Museum has opened three special exhibitions for Festival goers. One exhibition is of the Donald Greason wash drawings and paintings of the orchestra in rehearsal.

Miss Estelle Hutchinson, chairman of the Lenox Festival committee, will open the Lenox information booth Tuesday and ticket reservations may be made through this booth as well as at the office in Stockbridge. Miss Hutchinson has also arranged a tour of a number of the outstanding estates in Lenox. All persons wishing to go on these tours must register at the Lenox booth. There is no charge.

Other information booths will be found in Great Barrington and Pittsfield. They will be in charge of volunteers.

Arthur Bliss, British composer and conductor, will speak to the Pittsfield Rotary Club next week Thursday on the Festival and possibilities of development.

The Festival office in Stockbridge is being flooded with requests for information about rooms and other attractions and urges everyone who wishes to avoid disappointment to communicate with it at once. The ticket sales are substantially ahead of 1938, indicating a capacity audience for the opening concert.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUL 28 1939

CONDUCTOR

Aboard the Champlain as it docked in New York is Sergei Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He said he plans to start rehearsals in a few days for the Berkshire Music Festival, to be held in Stockbridge. (AP photo.)

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

JUL 28 1939

REHEARSALS OPEN TO DRURY PUPILS

Tickets for Practice of Boston Symphony at Tanglewood Sent Here for Interested Students.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival committee has sent complimentary tickets to rehearsals of the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood in Lenox to Drury high school for distribution to pupils who have signified an interest in attending one of these sessions.

In addition to the regular music appreciation course presented at the high school by James Morley Chambers, supervisor of music, eight lectures were sponsored by the Festival organization for the benefit of those pupils who were interested in the symphony concerts. The lectures and arrangements for the rehearsals were under the direction of Miss Alice Riggs of Pittsfield.

Donald W. Fowler, principal of Drury high school, said this morning that he will telephone all those possible to determine whether or not they still wish to attend and asked that all those pupils who signed up as being interested but have no telephones get in touch with the high school office concerning their tickets.

About 30 pupils signified interest in attending a rehearsal and those driving cars to transport them to Tanglewood will also get complimentary tickets, Mr. Fowler said. The rehearsals which will be open to the pupils of Drury high school will be on Aug. 5 and Aug. 12 and Mr. Fowler will assign a date to each pupil.

This project is part of a county-wide plan for pupils of selected high schools, but the rehearsals are open to any high school pupil in the county and tickets may be obtained from the Festival committee office for those who did not sign up for the complimentary admissions.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 28 1939

Berkshires Offer Varied Attractions During Festival

Stockbridge, July 28—The Berkshires are catching the festival spirit in anticipation of the opening concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge, next Thursday.

Dr Koussevitzky arrived in New York Wednesday from a brief vacation spent in Europe and went directly to Boston to rehearse with the orchestra at Symphony hall. Next Wednesday, the orchestra comes to Tanglewood to continue rehearsals for the opening concert. One member of the orchestra, Roger Voisin, 18, probably the youngest trumpeter in any major orchestra has already pitched his tent on the shores of Stockbridge bowl at Tanglewood and, before the week is out, others will do the same.

Catching the festival spirit, Henry Wigeland, youthful organist of the Great Barrington Congregational church has scheduled a performance of Verdi's "Requiem" with New York soloists for next Wednesday evening. Many early arrivals for the festival concerts will attend the performance.

Charles L. Safford, retired director of music at Williams college, will give his final lecture on the symphonies to be played at the festival at the Berkshire museum in Pittsfield Tuesday afternoon. These lectures have been sponsored by the Pittsfield Junior league and have been open to the public at no cost.

The Berkshire Museum has opened three special exhibitions for festival goers. One exhibitin is of the Donald Greason wash drawings and paintings of the orchestra in rehearsal.

Tour of Estates

Miss Estelle Hutchinson, chairman of the Lenox festival committee, will open the Lenox information booth Tuesday and ticket reservations may be made through this booth as well as at the office in Stockbridge. Miss Hutchinson has also arranged a tour of a number of the outstanding estates in Lenox. All persons wishing to go on these tours must register at the Lenox booth. There is no charge. Other information booths will be found in Great Barirngton and Pittsfield. They will be in charge of volunteers.

Chamber Music

At Music Mountain in Falls Village, Ct., there will be chamber music concerts both Wednesday afternoons of the festival weeks and Sundays while the South Mountain quartet at Pittsfield will give concerts Friday afternons of the festival weeks. Tickets for the latter concert may be obtained from Willem Willeke without charge.

Ted Shawn and his men dancers will [illegible]es Fridays and Saturdays at their summer headquarters in West Becket. Special invitations to the public have been issued by the Berkshire Garden center in Stockbridge and the Pleasant Valley Bird and Wild Flower sanctuary in Lenox.

The festival office in Stockbridge is being flooded with requests for information about rooms and other attractions, and urges everyone wh wishes to avoid disappointment t communicate with it at once. Th ticket sales are substantially ahead 1938 indicating a capacity audience the opening concert.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 28 1939

Berkshires Catch Festival Spirit as Concerts Near

The Berkshires are catching the festival spirit in anticipation of the opening concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood Aug. 3.

Dr. Koussevitzky has returned from a brief vacation in Europe and is in Boston to rehearse with the orchestra. Next Wednesday the orchestra goes to Tanglewood.

Henry Wigeland, youthful organist of the Great Barrington Congregatoinal Church, has scheduled a performance of Verdi's "Requiem" with New York soloists for next Wednesday evening.

The Berkshire Museum has opened three special exhibitions for festival goers.

At Music Mountain in Falls Village there will be chamber music concerts both Wednesday afternoons of the festival weeks, while the South Mountain Quartet at Pittsfield will give concerts Friday afternoons. Tickets for the latter concert may be obtained from Willem Willeke without charge.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 28 1939

TANGLEWOOD OFFERS WHEEL CHAIR SERVICE

Invalids or others temporarily incapacitated need not remain away from the Boston Symphony orchestra concerts at the Berkshire Symphonic festival opening August 3 at 8.30 at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge.

A fleet of wheel chairs has been assembled from Berkshire county hospitals and will be available for those who wish them. By writing to the festival office at Stockbridge, a special "invalid's" card may be obtained, permitting automobiles to enter the box parking area and drive to the corner of the music shed. A. L. Bliss, a General Electric engineer, is in charge of this service.

THIS CLIPPING FROM HARRISBURG, PA.
PATRIOT

JUL 28 1939

CHATTER

By MARGARET BECKER KULP

IT is with great regret that we read that Paderewski, eminent Polish pianist, seems to have retired for good and all from the concert stage. There is no one who has ever heard this grand old man of Poland perform and caught the beautiful sensitivity of his interpretations who will not mourn his passing from the concert platform.

It seems that he was scheduled to have appeared in the great festival at Lucerne, Switzerland, next month, but his contract has been canceled since the illness that caused the halting of his concert in May at the Madison Square Garden concert in New York when there was an audience of 15,000 persons in the Garden.

In his place on the Lucerne program Arturo Toscanini will conduct a symphonic program. The date is August 5.

* * *

THE BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, Mass., will get under way the early part of next month, and from all reports this annual affair will attract a larger body of audiences than at any previous summer performance. The festival is played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Conductor Serge Koussevitsky, its permanent leader.

This festival has had a remarkable development in the progress of American music culture. First of all it has had a famous conductor. Second it has a splendid symphonic organization made up of the finest of musicians, and again it has had an energetic women's committee which has seemed to surmount all difficulties and achieve all dreams for it.

During the first two years of the Boston Symphony's incumbency the summer festival was given under a tent. Then the women's committee went to work and started a drive to raise money for a permanent building to house the festival's performers and audiences. Through the generosity of a patron of music, Mrs. Gorham Brooks, the grounds were given as a gift in 1936. Last year saw the fulfillment of the women's dream and a permanent structure, which sheltered the festival in inclement weather, was opened for the first time.

It just proves what women can accomplish when they set their shoulders to the wheel to overcome obstacles.

* * *

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News

JUL 29 1939

BERKSHIRES CATCH FESTIVAL SPIRIT

Koussevitzky Rehearses Orchestra

Opening at Tanglewood to Be Next Thursday Night

THE Berkshires are catching the festival spirit in anticipation of the opening concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge Aug. 3.

Dr. Koussevitzky has arrived in New York from a brief vacation spent in Europe and went directly to Boston to rehearse with the orchestra at Symphony Hall. Next Wednesday, the orchestra comes to Tanglewood to continue rehearsals for the opening concert.

One member of the orchestra, Roger Voisin, probably the youngest trumpeter in any major orchestra (he's only 18), has already pitched his tent on the shores of Stockbridge Bowl at Tanglewood and before the week is out others will do the same.

* * *

HENRY WIGELAND, youthful organist of the Great Barrington Congregational Church, has scheduled a performance of Verdi's "Requiem" with New York soloists for next Wednesday night. Many early arrivals for the festival concerts will attend the performance.

Charles L. Safford, retired director of music at Williams College, will give his final lecture on the symphonies to be played at the Festival at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield Tuesday afternoon. These lectures have been sponsored by the Pittsfield Junior League and have been open to the public at no cost.

The Berkshire Museum has opened three special exhibitions for Festival goers. One exhibition is of the Donald Greason wash drawings and paintings of the orchestra in rehearsal.

* * *

MISS ESTELLE HUTCHINSON, chairman of the Lenox Festival committee, will open the Lenox information booth Tuesday and ticket reservations may be made through this booth as well as at the office in Stockbridge. Miss Hutchinson also has arranged a tour of a number of the outstanding estates in Lenox. All persons wishing to go on these tours must register at the Lenox booth. There is no charge.

Other information booths will be found in Great Barrington and Pittsfield. They will be in charge of volunteers.

Arthur Bliss, British composer and conductor, will speak to the Pittsfield Rotary Club next week Thursday on the Festival and possibilities of development.

* * *

AT MUSIC MOUNTAIN in Falls Village, Conn., there will be chamber music concerts both Wednesday afternoons of the festival weeks and Sundays, while the South Mountain Quartet at Pittsfield will give concerts Friday afternoons of the festival weeks. Tickets for the latter concert may be obtained from Willem Willeke without charge. Ted Shawn and his men dancers will give performances Fridays and Saturdays at their summer headquarters in West Becket. Special invitations to the public have been issued by the Berkshire Garden Center in Stockbridge and the Pleasant Valley Bird and Wild Flower Sanctuary in Lenox.

The festival office in Stockbridge is being flooded with requests for information about rooms and other attractions, and urges everyone who wishes to avoid disappointment to communicate with it at once. The ticket sales are substantially ahead of 1938 indicating a capacity audience for the opening concert.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
JAMESTOWN, N. Y.
POST

JUL 29 1939

GOING ON TRIP.

Mrs. William S. Gifford and Mrs. Charles Justin Bailey are leaving Wednesday to motor to Woodstock, Vt., to join Mrs. J. W. Packard, for the Music Festival there at which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

JUL 29 1939

House and Box Parties Arranged For Coming Berkshire Music Fete

Special Dispatch to THE SUN.

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., July 29.—For the next two weeks Tanglewood at Stockbridge will be a musical and society center with six concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra comprising the sixth annual Berkshire Music Festival.

House and box parties have been arranged. Hotels and taverns, especially in Lenox, Stockbridge and Great Barrington are booked to capacity and there will be many dinners, luncheons and other entertainments.

All concerts will be held in the music shed.

Among the boxholders are Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival Association; Princess Diane R. Eristavi, Mrs. E. Parmalee Prentice, Mrs. Edwards Spencer, Mr. and Mrs. John Shepard, Mrs. Arthur F. Schermerhorn, Mrs. William E. S. Griswold, Mrs. S. Harkness, Mrs. William C. Cannon, Mr. and Mrs. R. Jay Flick, Mrs. Bruce Crane, Misses Mary Parsons, Anna Remsen Alexandre, M. Symphorosa Bristed, Edith Scoville.

And the Mmes. Samuel Gilbert Colt, William Felton Barrett, Bruce Crane, Thomas H. Blodgett, John Bross Lloyd, Arnold Whitridge, Walter Jennings, Donald J. Warner, Mr. and Mrs. Lester Roberts, Mr. and Mrs. Norman H. Davis.

Also Mr. and Mrs. Carl A. de Gersdorff, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Horton Lippincott, Mr. and Mrs. Heaton I. Treadway, Mr. and Mrs. John Barry Ryan, Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Atherton, Miss Mabel Choate, Mrs. Charles C. Griswold and Mrs. Ramsay Hoguet.

Reservations have been made at the Curtis Hotel, Lenox, by Mr. and Mrs. Stuart Crockett, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Blumenthal of New York, Mr. and Mrs. Lowell Thomas of Pawling, N. Y., and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur E. Hobbs of Darien, Conn.

At Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, will be Mrs. Edward W. Root of Clinton, N. Y.; Misses Martha A. Alford and Isabel T. Moore of Brookline, Mass.; Mrs. John S. Newberry of Grosse Pointe, Mich.

Dr. and Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky are to be guests of Dr. Artur Rodzinski, conductor of the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra and Mrs. Rodzinski at White Goat Farm, Stockbridge.

Wyantenuck Country Club at Great Barrington is having its golf tournament ball tonight with more than 300 expected. Mrs. Sayre Starbuck of New York, chairman of the entertainment committee, is in charge. Seventy are having a "Dutch treat" dinner at the club.

Col. E. Parmalee Prentice is 76 years old today. His birthday for many years has been celebrated at Mount Hope Farm, Williamstown, with a luncheon given by Mrs. Prentice. Their son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin D. Gilbert are expected from Utica, N. Y. Col. Prentice was born at Davenport, Iowa, on July 29, 1863, one day before Henry Ford was born at Greenfield, Mich. His marriage to Miss Alta Rockefeller, daughter of the late John D. Rockefeller took place in 1901.

Mrs. Phillips Blagden and Mrs. Rodney Procter are in general charge of a bazaar to be held on St. Paul's Episcopal Church lawn, Stockbridge, next Wednesday for the benefit of the church missionary fund. Mrs. Owen Johnson is to conduct a fashion show.

Miss Grace E. Peters of Newark, N. J. is passing two weeks at Olde Egremont Tavern, South Egremont, where Mrs. Sara Peters Downing had a luncheon and bridge party with twenty guests.

Mrs. James Cummings Chase was a bridge and tea hostess at Berkshire Inn, Great Barington. Misses Elizabeth and Rosina Ellis of Forest Hills, L. I. are at the inn for several weeks.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

JUL 29 1939

Concert Thursday At Tanglewood

Serge Koussevitzy, widely known conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will [illegible] conductor for a series of six concerts to be given at Tanglewood in the Berkshires. Opening concert is scheduled for 8 p. m. Thursday. Parking arrangements and flood lights for the concerts have been completed under direction of Joseph Franz of Stockbridge, one of the board of trustees for the Tanglewood festival.

Berkshire county hospitals have offered wheel chairs for invalids who want to attend the outdoor concerts.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

JUL 30 1939

Berkshire Festival Transforms Region Into Music Center

Program Starting Thursday Will Draw Many Visitors; 300 Attend Golf Dance

Special to the Herald Tribune

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., July 29.—For the next two weeks the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, will take first rank as a musical and society event, and will fill the hotels at Lenox, Stockbridge and Great Barrington with visitors.

Boxholders include Mrs. Edward S. Harkness, Mrs. William E. S. Griswold, Mrs. Arnold Whitridge, Mr. and Mrs. John Barry Ryan, Miss Edith Scoville, Mrs. Donald J. Warner, Dr. William Mather Lewis, president of Lafayette College, and Mrs. Lewis; Mrs. Walter Jennings, of Cold Spring Harbor, L. I.; Mr. and Mrs. Edward Davis, of Philadelphia; Mr. and Mrs. Norman H. Davis, Mrs. Arthur F. Schermerhorn, Princess Diane R. Eristavi and Mr. and Mrs. Lester Roberts.

Among those expected at Curtis Hotel, Lenox, during the festival period are Mr. and Mrs. Lowell Thomas, of Pawling, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Stuart Crockett, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Blumenthal, of New York; Mrs. Zora W. Bowman, Miss Katherine R. Davis, of Chappaqua, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Arthur E. Hobbs, of Darien, Conn.; Mrs. Robert E. Paine, Mrs. Frederick S. Mead, of Brookline, Mass.; Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Sawyer, Mr. and Mrs. George E. Judd, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest B. Dane Mrs. James A. Neal, Mrs. Kerr Blackner, Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller, Mrs. Franklin W. Hobbs, of Boston; Mr. and Mrs. Robert F. Davison, of Cleveland, and Miss Leslie Leland, of Toledo, who is to be the guest of Mrs. E. Griswold Hollister.

Among those who will be at Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, are Mrs. Edward W. Root, of Clinton, N. Y.; Mrs. John S. Newberry and Mr. and Mrs. Henry D. Joy, of Grosse Pointe, Mich.; the Misses Martha A. Alford and Isabel T. Moore, of Brookline, and Mr. Donald M. McIlvaine, of Boston.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conductor, will give all six concerts between Aug. 3 and 13. Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky are to be guests of Dr. Artur Rodzinski, conductor of the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra, and Mrs. Rodzinski at Stockbridge.

Wyantenuck Country Club, Great Barrington, held its annual golf tournament ball tonight, with 300 attending. It was one of the largest dances of the year in southern Berkshire. Eighty members of the club and dinner at the clubhouse. Mrs. Sayre Starbuck was general chairman.

Mrs. Joseph C. Keber was in charge of the Wyantenuck tea this afternoon and those assisting were Mrs. Frederick A. Pearson, Miss Katherine Rockhill, Miss Barbara Bryan, Mmes. Richard Cobden jr., Everitt H. Pell, Livingston Hall, Thomas T. Mackie, Robert Latimer Redfield jr., Arthur C. Smith, Henry D. Bultman and Charles D. Barnes. Tomorrow, the Edward Parsons Davis memorial golf handicap is to be played, ith prizes for low gross and low net scores.

THIS CLIPPING FROM KNOXVILLE, TENN.
NEWS-SENTINEL

JUL 30 1939

* * *

Attending the Berkshire Festival

ONE of the most interesting travelers' tales dates back to an evening last summer when Evelyn Miller, the pianist, was having herself a grand time. She had the radio turned to the Bershire music festival. Beethoven's Ninth Symphony was coming in in grand style with the Boston Symphony Orchestra playing and a chorus of two hundred voices assisting. Evelyn had been listening for twenty minutes enraptured when the program was cut off and local election returns took its place on the air. From that day Evelyn has been making plans to be out front when the festival is given this August.

She left Thursday night for Washington to join her cousin, Kitty Holt. They will meet Avelyn Morris, who is flying up from Knoxville, today, in New York and go to the Festival.

I think you will be interested in hearing more about this musical festival in the Berkshire Hills. It is being called the American Salzburg. The setting is an open air amphitheater in Tanglewood (the Hawthorne country) half way between Lennox and Stockbridge, Mass., Sergei Koussevitsky conducts the Boston Symphony orchestra in the concerts. Famous guest artists assist.

After the festival the three have planned a motor trip through New England up to Quebec and through the Gaspe Peninsula.

THIS CLIPPING FROM 56
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 30 1939

Berkshire Fete To Attract Many

Large Subscription Made to Music Festival to Begin Next Thursday

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., July 29.—There has been a large subscription for the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood with concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra beginning on Thursday. The boxholders include Mr. and Mrs. Norman H. Davis, Mrs. Edward S. Harkness, Mrs. William E. S. Griswold, Mrs. Arnold Whitridge, Dr. William Mather Lewis, president of Lafayette College, and Mrs. Lewis; Dr. Harry A. Garfield, Professor Philip Marshall Brown and Mrs. Brown of Washington, Mrs. E. Parmalee Prentice, Mrs. Arthur F. Schermerhorn, Mr. and Mrs. John Barry Ryan, Miss Edith Scoville, Mrs. Donald J. Warner, Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Crane, Mrs. Samuel Gilbert Colt, Princess Diane R. Eristavi, Mr. and Mrs. Robert K. Wheeler, Mr. and Mrs. John Shepard Jr. Mrs. Edwards Spencer, Mrs. Walte Jennings and Mr. and Mrs. Leste Roberts.

Among those who have made reservations at the Curtis Hotel Lenox, for the festival are Mr. and Mrs. Stuart Crockett, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Blumenthal of New York, Mr. and Mrs. Lowell Thomas, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur E. Hobbs of Darien, Conn.; Mr. and Mrs. Robert F. Davison of Cleveland, Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller, Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Sawyer, Mrs. Robert Treat Paine, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick S. Mead, Mrs. Franklin W. Hobbs, Mrs. James A. Neal and Mr. and Mrs. Ernest T. Dane of Boston.

Festival visitors expected at the Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, are Mrs. E. W. Root of New York, the Misses Martha A. Alford and Isabel T. Moore of Brookline, Mass.; Mrs. John S. Newberry and Mr. and Mrs. Henry D. Joy of Grosse Pointe, Mich.

Colonel E. Parmalee Prentice observed his seventy-sixth birthday today at Mount Hope Farm, Williamstown, where Mrs. Prentice for many years has been accustomed to give a birthday luncheon in his honor.

Mrs. Henry A. Francis of Pittsfield and Mrs. Cornelius Boardman Tyler will assist at the tea which Mrs. William Willeke is to give tomorrow at Mountain House, Pittsfield, after the concert in Mrs. Frederick S. Coolidge's Temple of Music.

The Wyantenuck Country Club had its annual golf tournament ball tonight with 300 attending. Mrs. Joseph C. Keber was chairman of the tea there this afternoon and assisting were Mrs. Frederick A. Pearson, Mrs. Thomas T. Mackie, Mrs. Robert Latimer Redfield Jr., the Misses Katharine Rockhill and Barbara Bryan, Mrs. Richard Cobden Jr., Mrs. Charles D. Barnes, Mrs. Arthur C. Smith and Mrs. Henry D. Bultman.

Mrs. Albert H. Spahr will entertain the Great Barrington Garden Club at Fair Brook Farm, North Egremont, on Tuesday and Miss Helen Gage will describe Chinese gardens.

Mrs. Phillips Blagden and Mrs. Rodney Procter are in general charge of a bazaar to be held on St. Paul's Episcopal Church lawn next Wednesday.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

JUL 30 1939

T.-U. Critic to Cover Festival

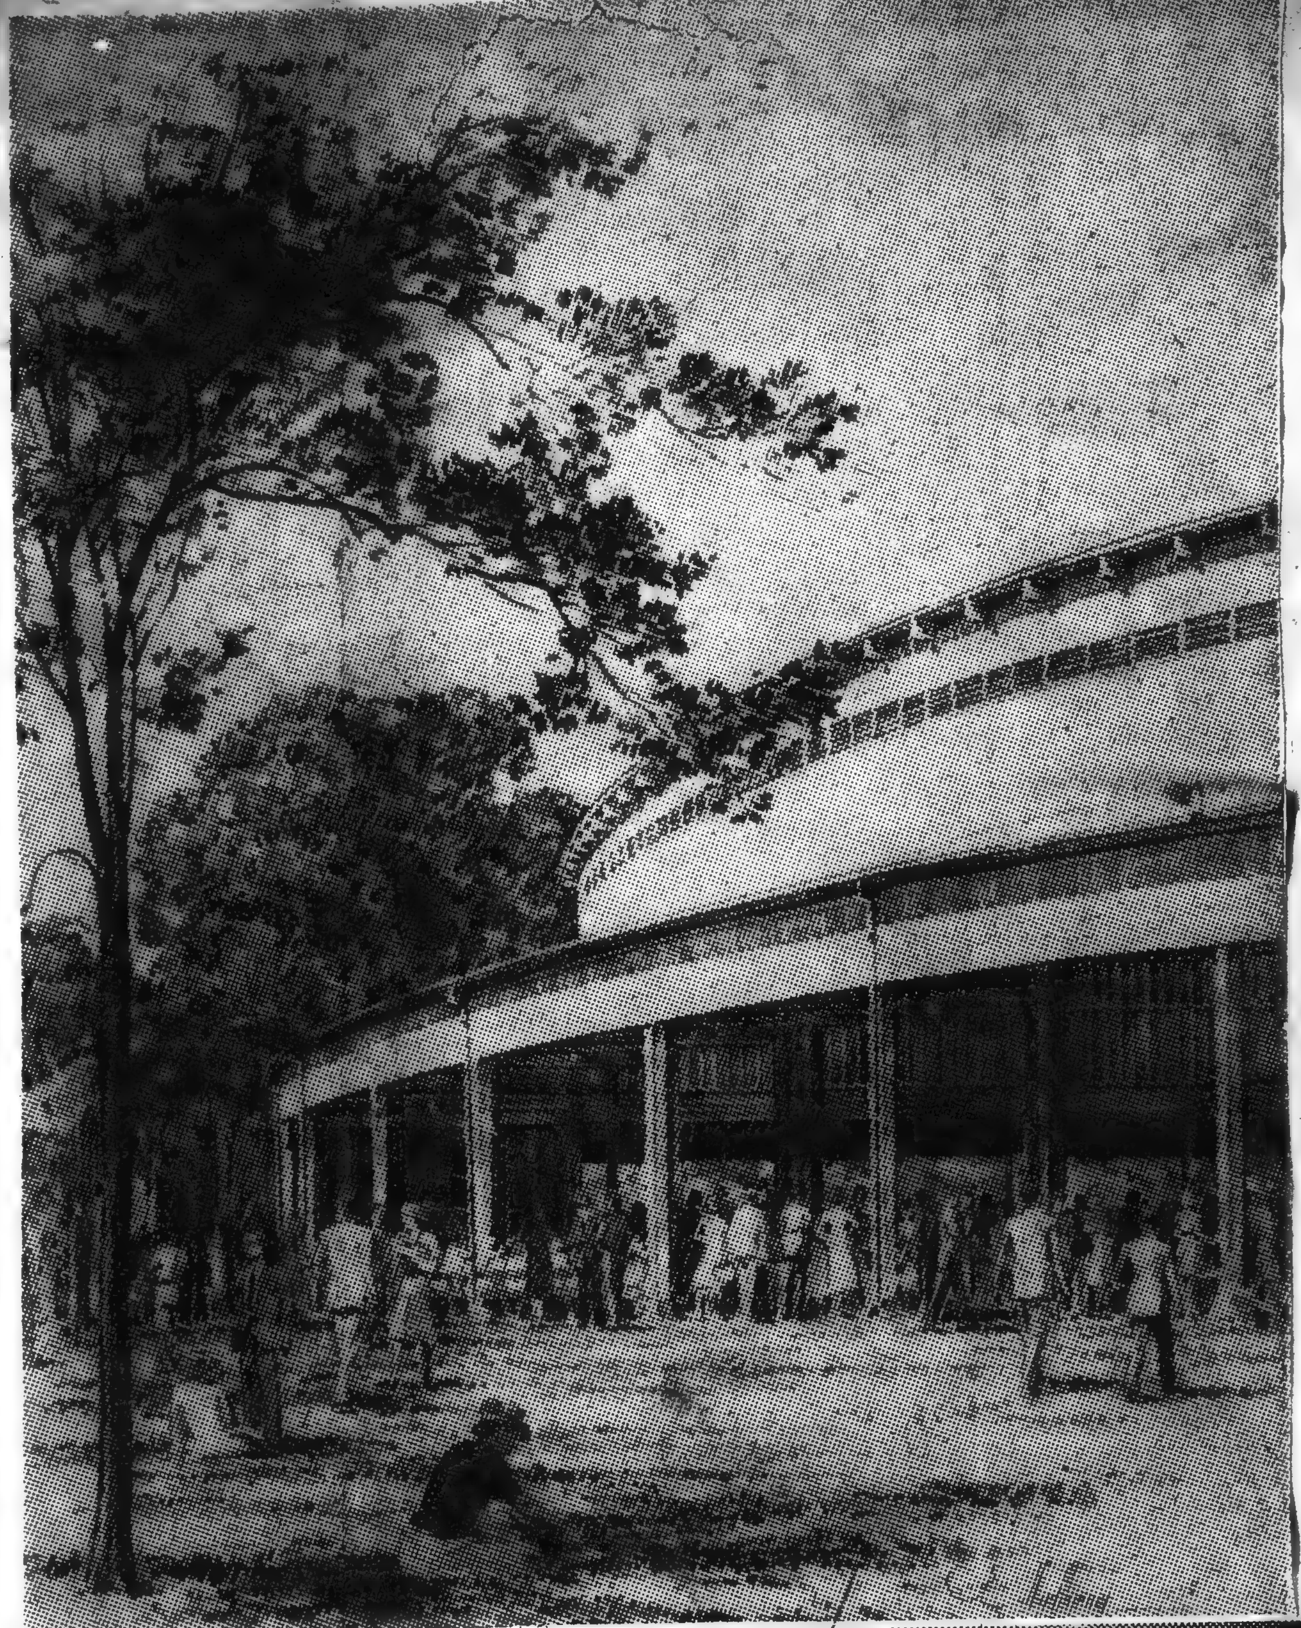
Edgar S. Van Olinda, Music and Dramatic critic of The Times-Union will cover the entire two weeks of the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Stockbridge in which the Boston Symphony, directed by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will be heard in the new music shed at Tanglewood. Mr. Van Olinda will present the highlights of the concert with comments about the distinguished visitors who will attend the most important summer music festival in America. The first concert will take place Thursday evening, Aug. 3.

57

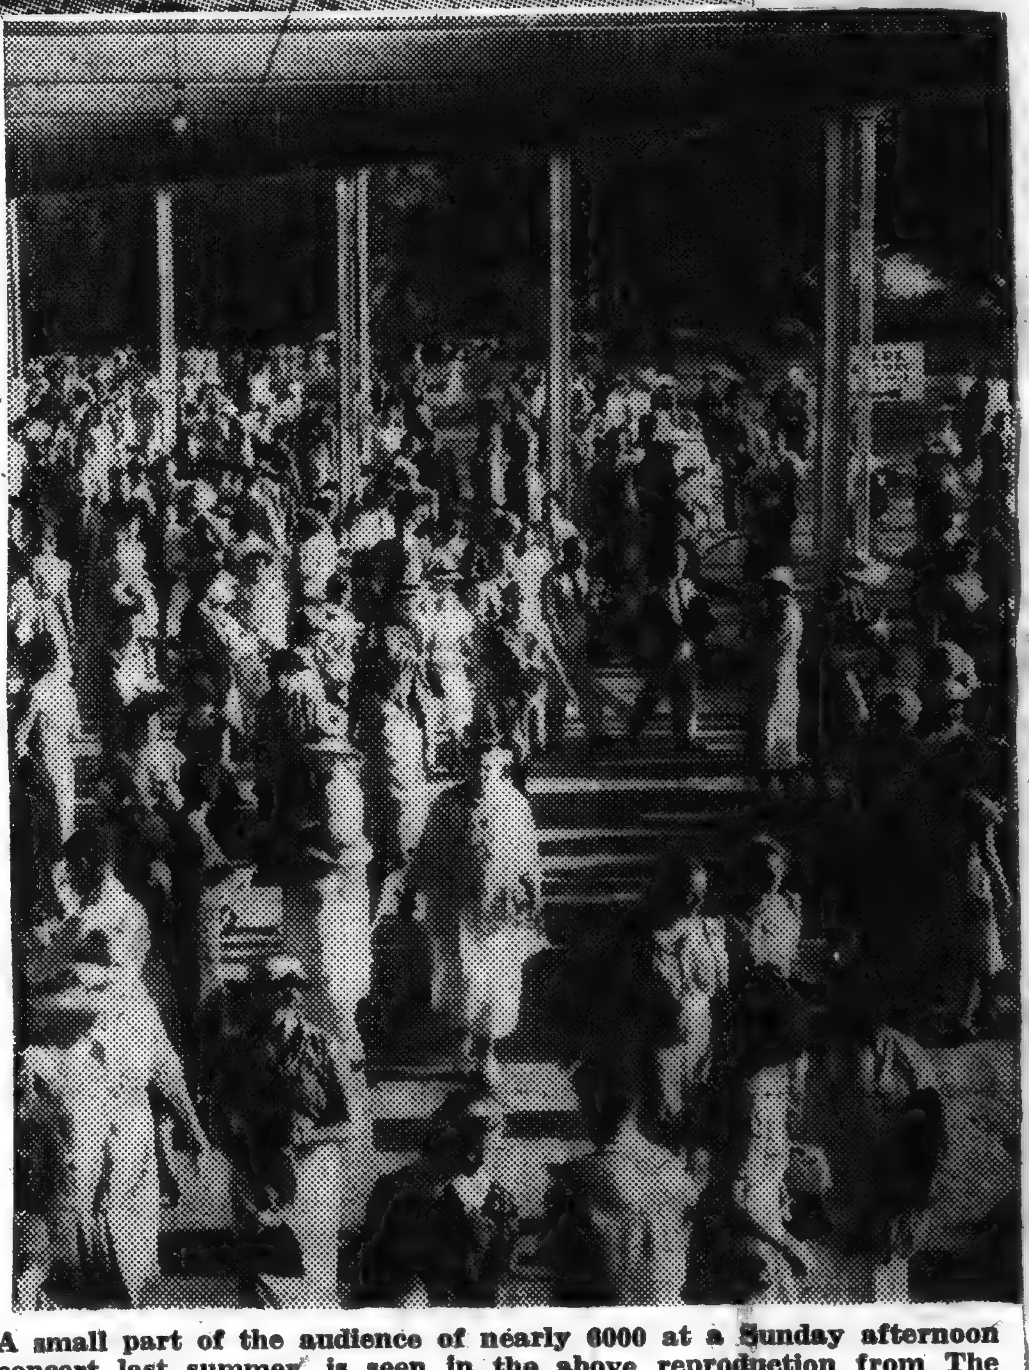
Symphonic Festival Is the Greatest

Hotel Group Acts To Solve Room Shortage

Concerts May Reverse Trek To Salzburg



This delightfully informal scene at the Festival was etched from a photograph for N. A. Campbell, proprietor of the Hotel Wendell, used for a menu cover.



A small part of the audience of nearly 6000 at a Sunday afternoon concert last summer, is seen in the above reproduction from The Eagle's photographic files forming a pictorial record of the Symphony's growth.

Musically, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival has progressed, in the brief period of six summers, from the presentation of a makeshift group of 65 available members of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra to an event recognized as the artistic superior of Salzburg and Bayreuth in happily democratized form, through the Boston Symphony and its leader, Serge Koussevitzky. As a side issue to the main purpose, the Festival has the makings of backbone salvation for the area's diffused resort industry.

Welcome Congestion

Already, the Festival constitutes easily the "number one drawing card" from the resort point of view, as appraised by the commercial trade represented in the Berkshire Hills Innkeepers Association at a meeting this week. In this respect, it takes precedence over the sensational winter sports boom in proportion to the length of its season. From Williamstown to Sharon, Conn., Worthington to the Lebanons in New York, hotels and related tourist businesses have benefitted from Festival patronage increasingly each year. The situation has now reached the point where the welcome congestion of demands upon local accommodations is a problem that is receiving the special attention of hotelmen and otners.

With prospects that every available room in the first class hotels, within 25 miles of the Tanglewood concert site at Lenox and Stockbridge, will be taken before the Aug. 3-6, 10-13 programs, the Innkeepers Association has set up an emergency clearing house for listing remaining available accommodations within a 35-mile radius. Heaton I. Treadway, manager of the long since fully reserved Red Lion Inn and Heaton Hall at Stockbridge, is in charge of the volunteer service and already active in re-distributing overflow requests for accommodations received in the capacity reservation center.

700 Turned Down

Stockbridge hotels have been forced to turn away 500 advance requests for one-night accommodations during Festival weeks, in deference to three-day or two-week customers. At Lenox, the principal hotel, the Curtis, two weeks ago had 200 applications it could not accommodate. Pittsfield's largest hostelry, the Wendell, has many score special reservations for the Festival and is absorbing overflow inquiries. So it goes. Rooms are filling up in advance of the concerts, in proportion to the distance from this remarkable American cultural enterprise that has emerged from the experimental stage and attained world importance.

It would be a mistaken idea that all, or even the majority of Festival goers are from outside the home territory, and no hotelman, promotional agency or Festival official overlooks the fundamental enthusiasm of the home folks, represented so widely in concert attendance. As a writer in Vogue points out, "waitresses, bus-boys and chefs go to the concerts in the Berkshires, and some hotels close their dining roms early so that they may get there on time . . . The Berkshire Festival, like the Gettysburg Address, is of, by, and for the community." Esquire's observer notes that the audience includes "gardeners and gigolos, cooks and chauffeurs, grand dames and students with well-worn copies of scores," all of which is not news to Berkshire.

European "Trek" Begins

But the Festival business office reports that other people are coming from California, Ohio, Iowa, Florida, Louisiana and nearly all the 48 States. In fact, this year, the hoped for reversal of Americans' trek abroad for the European summer music events is becoming noticeable. There will be French dignitaries at the opening concert. Important Englishmen are expected, as well as representatives of the music-minded population of Canada and what once was Czechoslovakia. Porbably other countries will be represented. From Montreal comes news of the formation of a special committee to serve as a clearing house for arrangements as to accommodations and so forth for Festival goers, so many are interested in the programs. The Berkshire realty trade reports several rentals made to distant Festival-attracted visitors.

So much for the present programs. Hotelmen say the lag between the two concert series is an unwelcome let-down, but they hope that the expanding plans of the Festival association will soon provide interlude attractions to keep the patronage constant for the full fortnight's period. This prospect is merely a stepping stone to the outlook for larger and more prosperous times, intimated in store. Multiply all the present Festival interest and patronage by the plans for the addition of operas, in concert form, oratorios, ballets and dramas, as well as an Academy of Music and Arts—and you are convinced when the hotelmen cite limitless promotional possibilities for the trade in keeping with the artistic progress of the sturdy young musical institution.

Chasing Rainbows

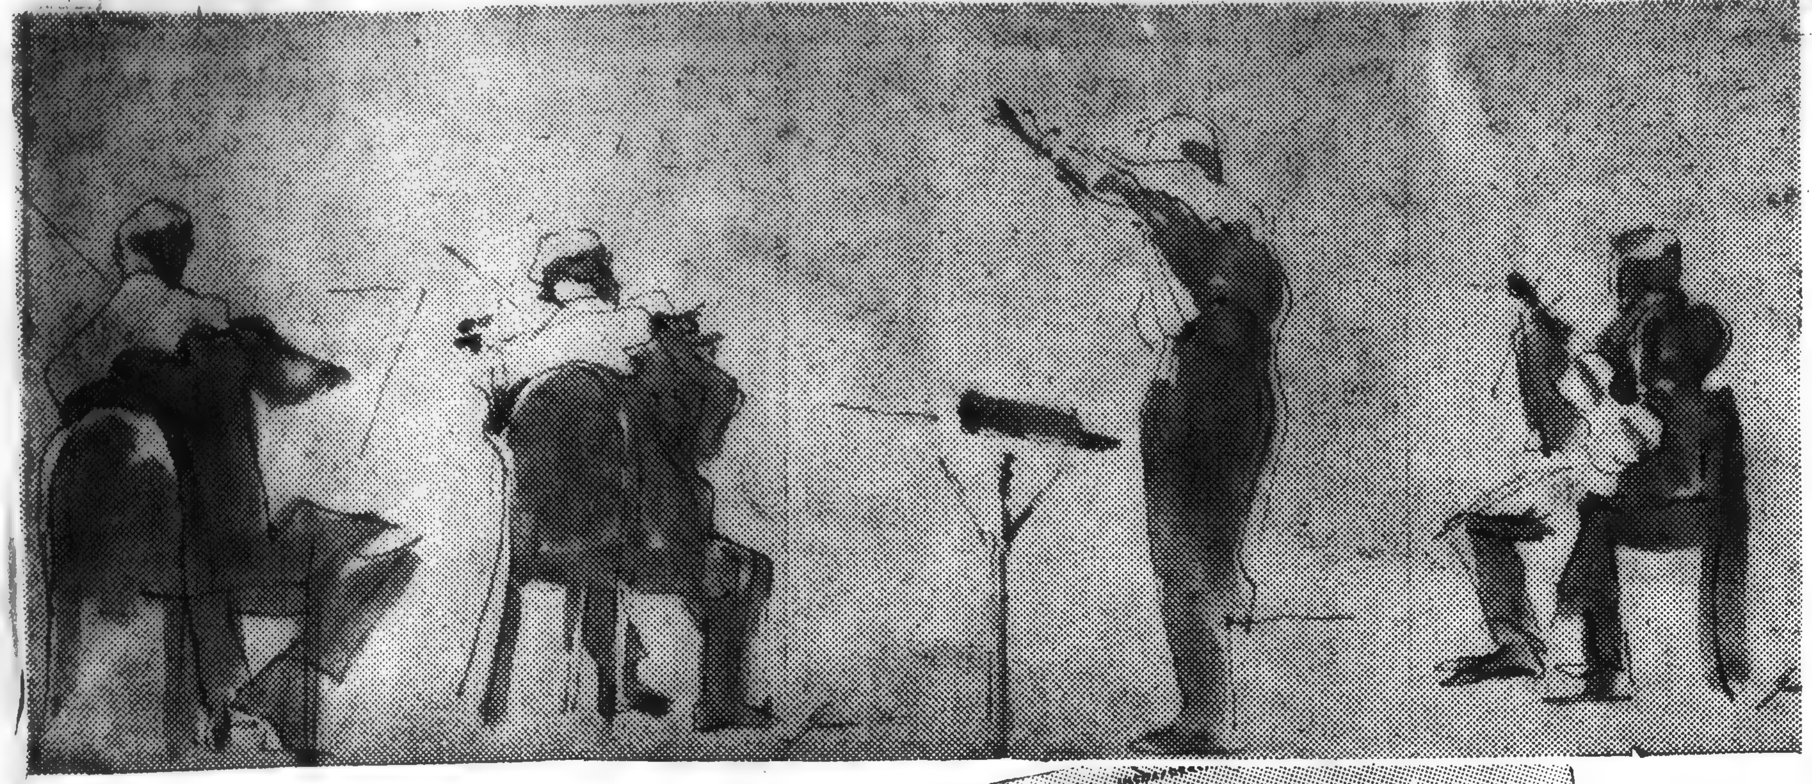
The prosperity now enjoyed temporarily may be spread over the entire summer. Not only hotels, gasoline stations and other tourist-dependent businesses, but general business may be expected to benefit beyond estimate, they say. Present hotels may be augmented by additional ones. Vacant country estates may be populated again. Vast expanses of open countryside may be dotted with new summer homes. Yes, resort interests are chasing rainbows, in their leisure between hard working hours spent in the endeavor to boost the Festival and take advantage of its opportunities for new business.

A veteran hotel executive, reputed in the trade to be hard-boiled and ultra-practical, remarked the other day that the Festival "is the greatest single attraction ever brought to Massachusetts" from the tourist-entertainment point of view. It is the largest single factor in the Berkshire resort trade today. It has the potentialities of becoming a very deciding factor in the entire guest business of the future. But, he added, "if it did not bring us a dollar in profit, I still would be 100 per cent for it." He explained that Festival guests in his house are the most pleasing type to entertain. They are people of taste and refinement. They do not always take the higher

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

JUL 28 1939

Factor in Berkshire's Resort



◆

Look with squinted eyes at the above sketches, and you imagine yourself already at next week's opening concert at Tanglewood. Donald C. Greason, Boston artist, has drawn more than 150 similar pieces, the best of which are exhibited publicly for the first time in an entire gallery of the Berkshire Museum. The central figure shows the Boston Symphony's great conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, in a characteristic pose while the others are from the fiddle section of the renowned orchestra.

◆

Vogue
BETWEEN-SEASONS FASHIONS
JULY 15, 1939
PRICE 35 CENTS
Eric
MUSIC IN BERKSHIRE

Cover models, pictured above, might be seated on the grass carpet surrounding the music shed, as so many do to enjoy more exclusively the strains heard distinctly in the marginal grounds.

Leading magazines espouse the Festival cause, as shown by the above page from a current number of Vogue, in which Howard Taubman describes the informal and democratic character of "Music in the Berkshires."

priced accommodations; in fact, the majority seek nearer minimum rates. But they are an asset because of their character and courtesy. It is a distinct satisfaction to put them up and make their stay agreeable. The Festival itself is worth cultivating, from this businessman's standpoint, even if it did not bring trade, because of the exceedingly worthwhile nature of such a cultural undertaking and its effect upon the tone of the community life. This attitude toward the Festival and its followers reflects testimony throughout the trade.

Enthusiastic Press

Much of the influence in bringing the Festival and its crowds of supporters to such large proportions in so short a time, has lain in the sympathetic attitude of the press. Magazines have joined newspapers in expecting great things from the new enterprise and pointing this out to the public. This week, a staff photographer for Life Magazine has been "shooting" all over the Tanglewood estate. Articles in Vogue and Esquire have been cited above. Others are appearing in the Ladies' Home Journal, New Yorker, Town and Country, Musical America, Cue Magazines and the monthly tabloid paper, "The New England Stage," which is the medium to promote New England at the New York World's Fair.

Metropolitan newspapers and county weeklies from coast to coast have espoused the cause. Already, more than 50 newspapers have assigned representatives to "cover" the Festival. In addition there will be special dispatches over the Associated Press and United Press wires, as well as batches of photographs circulated by the important news picture services. All of which will contribute to the sound growth of Festival popularity in keeping with its increasing musical stature.

Salzburg's publicized new buildings are matched by interest in Berkshire's present unique new shed and plans for further construction. Bayreuth may have Hitler and other military and political notables in its boxes, but Berkshire boasts the cream of musical intellect, as well as the happy democratic combination of busboys and business tycoons. Dr. Koussevitsky was inspired when he said, in a rare public statement last year, that "American freedom is the best of soil" for this significant cultural undertaking, with its highly important incidental implications for local prosperity.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION
JUL 30 1939

MUSIC WORLD

By EDGAR S. VAN O'LINDA

ALL roads will lead to Stockbridge and its environs in the Berkshire mountains during the coming week when the beautiful little village takes on new activities as the cultural and amusement center of the East during the annual visit of the Boston Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky. Those who have attended the festival for the last five years will find many improvements in the physical aspects of the festival grounds for the comfort and convenience of its guests.

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

One of the busiest members of the festival board is Joseph Franz of Stockbridge. For several years he has been donating his services as architect, engineer and superintendent at Tanglewood, the festival's permanent home, on Route 183 between Lenox and Stockbridge. This year is no exception. So far as he is concerned, the concerts could be given tomorrow, as all arrangements have been completed.

Under Mr. Franz's direction, the ten and a half acre parking field has been completely drained. More than 900 feet of 12-inch and 18-inch tile have been installed and more than 7,000 cubic yards of gravel spread over the low areas thus drained to give double protection. He has erected a steel tower with 12 floodlights by which the parking area at night will be made as light as day. He has installed permanent lighting arrangements at the Tanglewood entrances and for the food concession tent and moved the ticket office to the north side of the Hawthorne pines so that it is now at a point where the public will approach the shed from the parking field. He has removed all hurdle fences from the grounds immediately near the shed. The appearance of the shed as a result is undisturbed by any discordant note.

In keeping with the community spirit, William Miles, manager of the Berkshire Playhouse, has announced the engagement of John Beal, celebrated moving picture actor, in a performance of Robert E. Sherwood's play, "The Petrified Forest." Other events scheduled are the chamber music concerts at South Mountain in Pittsfield, Mass., and at Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn. There will be three special exhibitions at the Berkshire museum in Pittsfield, including the drawings and paintings of the Boston Symphony orchestra in rehearsal by Donald Greason. There is no admission fee at the museum.

JOHN BEAL

The festival, which extends over the two following weeks, is divided into Series A and Series B. Series A will start Thursday evening, August 3. The dates and programs for the first week are as follows:

THURSDAY, AUGUST 5, AT 8:30

Brandenburg Concerto, No. 3, in G major	Bach
"Scheherazade," Symphonic Suite	Rimsky-Korsakov
Symphony No. 1, in C minor	Brahms

SATURDAY, AUGUST 5, AT 8:30

Concerto for Orchestra	Piston
Symphony No. 5, in E flat major	Sibelius
Symphony No. 7, in A major	Beethoven

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, AUGUST 6 AT 3:30

Symphony in E flat major	Mozart
"Peter and the Wolf"	Prokofieff
Symphony No. 4, in F minor	Tschaikowsky

The shed is believed to be the largest and most unique structure for symphonic music in the United States. It covers an acre and a half of ground, fan-shaped, seating 5,700, including 80 boxes, and the stage is as large as Symphony hall in Boston. The audience is entirely protected from sun and rain and still has the illusion of being out of doors. Single seats for individual concerts may be obtained at the box office before each concert. For the convenience of residents of the Albany Area, a branch ticket office has been installed in the Van Curler Music company, 120 State street. Reservations may be arranged by calling 4-7495.

Paderewski's Practice

It is not generally known that in his early days as a concert artist the great pianist, Paderewski, suffered a crushing blow in Berlin.

So complete was his failure to win the slightest endorsement from either the critics or the public that he decided to devote himself entirely to composition. He turned to his native Poland for several years worked and studied with utmost diligence, yet in this too he seemed doomed to disappointment. Everyone agreed that his compositions were very melodious, graceful works, but that they lacked the true dynamic quality to make them endure.

Realizing the bitter truth of this verdict, he turned again in sheer desperation, to his first ambition, and induced the great Leschetizski to accept him as a pupil. Strange to say, after only six months work with this master pedagogue he appeared again in public as a pianist, and this time there was no question of his scuccess. Critics and music lovers were electrified, and from that moment, Ignace Jan Paderewski took his rightful place among those at the top of the ladder.

Although he has always succeeded in keeping it from his public, he has labored all his life against the gravest of all musical handicaps. This is an extraordinarily defective musical memory. It is not merely an imperfect recall of the notes, as such—although that is bad enough in any case—but with Pederewski the matter goes deeper than that. The incredible truth is that this great artist cannot mentally retain the complete pattern of any piece for more than approximately forty-eight hours. He frankly admits this amazing fact and says it has been the greatest torment of his life.

This is the real reason, he explains, for his daily practice periods of eight or ten hours during the concert season.

"It is the only way I can keep myself and my deplorable memory in shape," he said in a recent conversation. "I realized at the outset that it was either that keyboard slavery or speedy oblivion. If I neglect my practice for even one day, I can see the difference in my playing. If I neglect it for two days, the critics discover it, while if I neglect it for three days every member of my audience knows it. I realize that other artists have said the same thing of their own work, but I doubt if in any one's else case it is as cruelly true as it is in mine."

Psychologists tell us that in such cases — defective musical memory—something fades out in our mental makeup, and can only be brought back by endless repetition of the same act. Is is much the same situation as confronts the feeble-minded person who struggles to retain a vocabulary. Strictly speaking, he does NOT retain it; he re-learns it, again and again.

59

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
Sunday
Union & Republican

JUL 30 1939

Public Has Chance to 'Own' Berkshire Symphonic Festival

Organization Opening Sixth Series of Concerts by Boston Symphony This Week Points Out People's Opportunity to Become Foster Parent of Western Massachusetts Institution of World-Wide Fame — Gifts From $1 Up Will Be Welcomed by Committee

By BENJAMIN BUXTON

THE BERKSHIRE Symphonic festival, in its sixth series of concerts during the next two weekends (Thursday and Saturday nights, 8.30; Sunday afternoons, 3.30) will at the same time bring to a close one era of this remarkable event, and open a new era, new vistas too far distant to distinguish in detail, but fully enough clothed in reality to make the concerts at "Tanglewood" by the Boston Symphony orchestra for this year and for years to come an increasingly vital part of the country's artistic life.

So rapidly growing an organization as the Berkshire Symphonic festival may naturally be expected to pass through a new phase with each season; the engagement of the Boston orchestra under Dr Serge Koussevitzky three years ago was an important step; the opening of the new music shed last year was still another, for it put into tangible form the dreams of a group of farseeing Berkshire residents. First in the open air, then in a tent, were these concerts heard—then in a permanent, marvelously designed building in a setting that would be hard to rival anywhere.

New Note This Year

But between the close of last year's festival and its opening this week, there must be placed a period—or at least a semi-colon. There is this year a new note of finality and determination, the thought that the physical fact of six concerts by a great symphony orchestra in a structure specially built for it is but the beginning of an institution that is entirely American. The shed, the orchestra, the vast amount of detail that make these concerts possible, are but outward manifestations of the courage that was able to give them expression. Already, for all six concerts, the house is well on the way to a sellout; that means that the festival has come to be favorably known by the public and that thousands of dollars will change hands in the interests of music. This money must defray the great expense of the series, and as soon as bills are paid and tag ends caught up, plans for another season will again be under way.

These prosaic, banal facts are unimportant in themselves, for everywhere concerts and operas are presented at tremendous expense, and people buy their tickets in the same way as they do at the festival. Artistic standards vary, budgets fluctuate according to the caprice of the public and the generosity of the patrons, and season after season the country is given its quota of music of all kinds.

Beginnings and Growth

Now, in the Berkshires, comes the summer festival idea—not a new one, to be sure—with symphonic programs that are neither experimental like those of the leftists, nor ultra-conservative like those often heard in the provinces. The business organization, to begin with, differs little enough from the others, and at first deficits are made up by Berkshire residents of means. Thus far, there is no mark of special individuality; at the end of the third year, the festival has gone through the usual growing pains of an infant enterprise; the budget is somehow met, and the public continues to pay for its tickets in increasing numbers. Solicitation, although not along campaign proportions, is carried on, and money is raised for a new shed. Finally, the festival becomes self-supporting.

Here is the first unique point which now distinguishes the Berkshire festival from similar organizations and thus realizes one of the ideals of all artistic enterprise. The people have come to appreciate the quality of the offerings and they respond with enthusiasm. The ovations they give the orchestra and its conductor testify quickly to their satisfaction in hearing the world's greatest symphonic music presented under the most ideal conditions. They feel that they have gotten their money's worth and plan to attend the next festival. A notice mailed to them the following year, a call by one of the team workers, and once again the concerts will be largely attended.

Message to the People

And here comes the period (or semicolon) that separates last year's festival from that which will open Thursday night. "Now," asks the Berkshire Symphonic festival, "here I am and what about it? You come to my concerts, enjoy them, but what about me? I am an important and integral part of the life of the community; I am a part of you and I want you to feel that you have a real and vital interest in me.

"My directors have fought to keep me alive and healthy during my earliest years; they have been unstinting in their contributions and in their energy to make me the fine, vigorous youth I have now become. They present me to you, a living thing, capable of giving you pleasure. Yet I still have years of growth and expansion before me and to see me safely through these years not a few of you but many of you must become my foster parents. I must suffer no neglect lest my approaching manhood be less full and bright than you would have it. You have helped create me; do not forget me!"

Thus severely does the festival speak to the public. Figuratively speaking, it is truly a creation of the people who must more and more understand their responsibility toward their young ward. With the vision of both courage and discrimination, the directors of the festival, headed by the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson-Smith, have kept it on the highest possible artistic level, and with the shrewdness of bankers have guarded the coffers jealously, making no unnecessary expenditures and leaving some of the less essential details to a provident future.

Because of this strict economy, made imperative by a none too rapidly increasing fund, many items in the construction of the shed and in the improvement of the parking areas are still lacking. Among them are roll curtains to close in the shed against storms, chairs, permanent lighting of parking fields and grounds, paint, the completion of stage and shell. All the details must have attention if the festival is to be placed on a final and permanent basis in its physical setup. This accomplished, a substantial bank surplus to care for current expenses, damages and repairs, is needed.

The total sum required is $60,742.

Value of Small Gifts

Staggering? Perhaps. But reduced to simple figures it is not quite so formidable. Supposing that 6074 individuals contributed $10 each—there you have it; supposing that 12,148 individuals contributed $5 each—there it is again! Supposing that several thousand concert-goers gave a dollar each and that several hundred others gave amounts in two, three or four figures? It is therefore no remote possibility that the general public, understanding the needs of the festival, can raise the necessary sum in a short time. The age of large donations may be on its way out, but where the fat bankrolls may be less numerous, the interest and enthusiasm on the part of the ordinary wage earner places upon him at once the responsibility of keeping alive the musical enterprise that he is coming to care for in increasingly larger numbers.

This is a sign of the times, but is perhaps not generally recognized by the average concertgoer who feels that he has done his duty to himself and to his community by purchasing tickets. If, however, the deeper implications of the Berkshire festival have not been noted, it is largely because the public has labored under the delusion that only huge gifts are acceptable. Perhaps it is because they have not yet been forcifully enough told that the festival may be theirs, a permanent and lasting monument to themselves, if they will show that extra interest which will place it on a firm financial footing. They may not fully understand as yet that (to use the language in one of the festival circulars) they may become "stockholders."

While this is a different age from that of the early cathedrals, when both individual and guild joined forces in the construction of their places of worship, there can be made a comparison between that far-off time and today. Contributions can hardly be made separately of gravel, steel, timber and design, for civilization has become too complex for piecemeal contribution and management, yet in the same sense, the 25 cent pieces of school children, the wrinkled dollar bills of the wistful, music-loving store clerk, and the 10 and 20-spots of the more prosperous citizens can make them blood descendants of those toilers of a past age who wanted their cathedrals to be beautiful and of the best workmanship and moreover give freely of the best they had.

It's the People's Business

In other words, no contribution, however small, will be scorned by the Berkshire festival. The directors in the program books for the coming series have made this emphatic and in so doing have pointed out what is generally not understood: that the festival is for the people and it is therefore their business to keep it alive and growing. This is still further noted in the fact that no organized program of solicitation has been planned in order to raise the required sum. Because of last fall's international situation, as well as the New England hurricane, no attempt was made to raise the amount, which means that the festival in its financial program was set back nearly a year, although plans went steadily forward for the 1940 series and efforts toward its success have been undiminished.

In keeping with the progressive policy of the directors, improvements and additions have been made constantly, and this year is no exception. The knotty problem of parking has again been tackled with vigor. In the center of the parking field has been built a permanent floodlight tower; the grounds have been partially leveled off, drains in case of stormy weather have been installed, and many details have been altered in order to increase the comfort of the concertgoers and the efficiency with which the crowds may be handled.

The Berkshire festival in its present state of development represents not only the wide and true vision of its directors and a great amount of careful planning and labor by its volunteer workers, but the beginning of its new era. It is not with timidity, but with a positive challenge that the festival calls on the public, rich and poor alike, to come to the realization that the shed, the music, can be theirs, and that they express in tangible form their understanding of that fact.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
Sunday
Union & Republican

JUL 30 1939

Festival at Tanglewood Will Be Society Occasion As Well as Music Event

Many Visitors Expected in Berkshires During Next Two Weeks for Boston Symphony's Series of Concerts—Hotels and Taverns Booked to Capacity — Numerous Dinners, Luncheons and Other Entertainments Planned — Col E. Parmalee Prentice Celebrates His 76th Birthday With Gathering of Friends at Mount Hope Farm — Wyantenuck Club Plays Host to 300 at Tournament Ball — Bazar and Fashion Show Scheduled Wednesday On Lawn of St Paul's Episcopal Church, Stockbridge — Miss Gertrude Russel Doughty of Williamstown to Wed John Hay Swartz Saturday Afternoon

Special Dispatch to The Sunday Union and Republican

BERKSHIRE HILLS, JULY 29—Many visitors will be in the Berkshire Hills the next two weeks for the sixth annual music festival at Tanglewood, Lenox. It will take first rank both as a society and musical event. There will be many house guests at summer homes; hotels and taverns especially at Lenox, Stockbridge and Great Barrington are booked to capacity. Numerous dinners, luncheons and other entertainments are on the calendar. The festival represents the peak of the mid-summer season.

Among Recent Arrivals

Among those who have made reservations at Curtis hotel, Lenox for the festival are Mrs Alvan T. Fuller, Mrs Franklin W. Hobbs, Mr and Mrs Henry B. Sawyer, Mrs Robert Treat Paine, Mrs Frederick S. Mead, Mrs James A. Neal, Mr and Mrs George E. Judd, Mr and Mrs Ernest B. Dane, all of Boston. Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra and Mrs Koussevitzky are to be guests during the festival of Dr Artur Rodzinski, conductor of the Cleveland Symphony orchestra and Mrs Rodzinski at White Goat farm, Stockbridge.

Col E. Parmalee Prentice celebrated today his 76th birthday at Elm Tree house, Mount Hope farm, Williamstown, Mrs Prentice always gives a luncheon in compliment to her husband on his birthday. Their son-in-law and daughter, Mr and Mrs Benjamin D. Gilbert motored over from Utica, N. Y., for the event. Col Prentice was born at Davenport, Iowa, July 29, 1863, one day before Henry Ford was born at Greenfield, Mich. The colonel was graduated from Amherst college with the class of 1885. He practiced law in Chicago from 1888 to 1900 and was married to Alta Rockefeller, daughter of the late John D. Rockefeller, in 1901. With assessed valuation of $400,000 Elm Tree house located on an upland in the 1000-acre Williamstown estate adjoining Greylock reservation is the most valuable dwelling in Western Massachusetts.

Wyantenuck Country club, Great Barrington, had its annual golf tournament ball tonight with 300 present from all the South Berkshire resort towns. Seventy members of the club had a "dutch treat" dinner at the club house. The entertainment committee of the club, Mrs Sayre Starbuck of New York, chairman, was in charge of the dance. Tomorrow the Edward Parsons Davis memorial golf handicap is to be played with prizes for low gross and low net scores.

Mrs Joseph C. Keber was chairman of the tea this afternoon at Wyantenuck and those assisting were Mrs Frederick A. Pearson, Misses Katherine Rockhill and Barbara Bryan, Mrs Robert Latimer Redfield, Jr., Mrs Thomas T. Mackie, Mrs Livingston Hall, Mrs Richard Cobden, Jr., Mrs Charles D. Barnes, Mrs Everitt H. Pell, Mrs Henry D. Bultman.

A bazar and fashion show are scheduled for next Wednesday on St Paul's Episcopal church lawn, Stockbridge, with Mrs Phillips Blagden and Mrs Rodney Procter in charge. Mrs Owen Johnson is to have oversight of the fashion show. Mrs Charles C. Griswold will be at the head of the tea table and among others participating in the arrangements are Mrs William Ellery Sedgwick, Mrs Carl A. de Gersdorff, Mrs D. Percy Morgan and Mrs William Marshall Bullitt.

Mrs Albert H. Spahr is to be hostess for the Great Barrington Garden club at Fair Brook farm, North Egremont, Monday afternoon and Miss Helen Gage will be the speaker on "Chinese gardens."

THIS CLIPPING FROM DAVENPORT, IA.
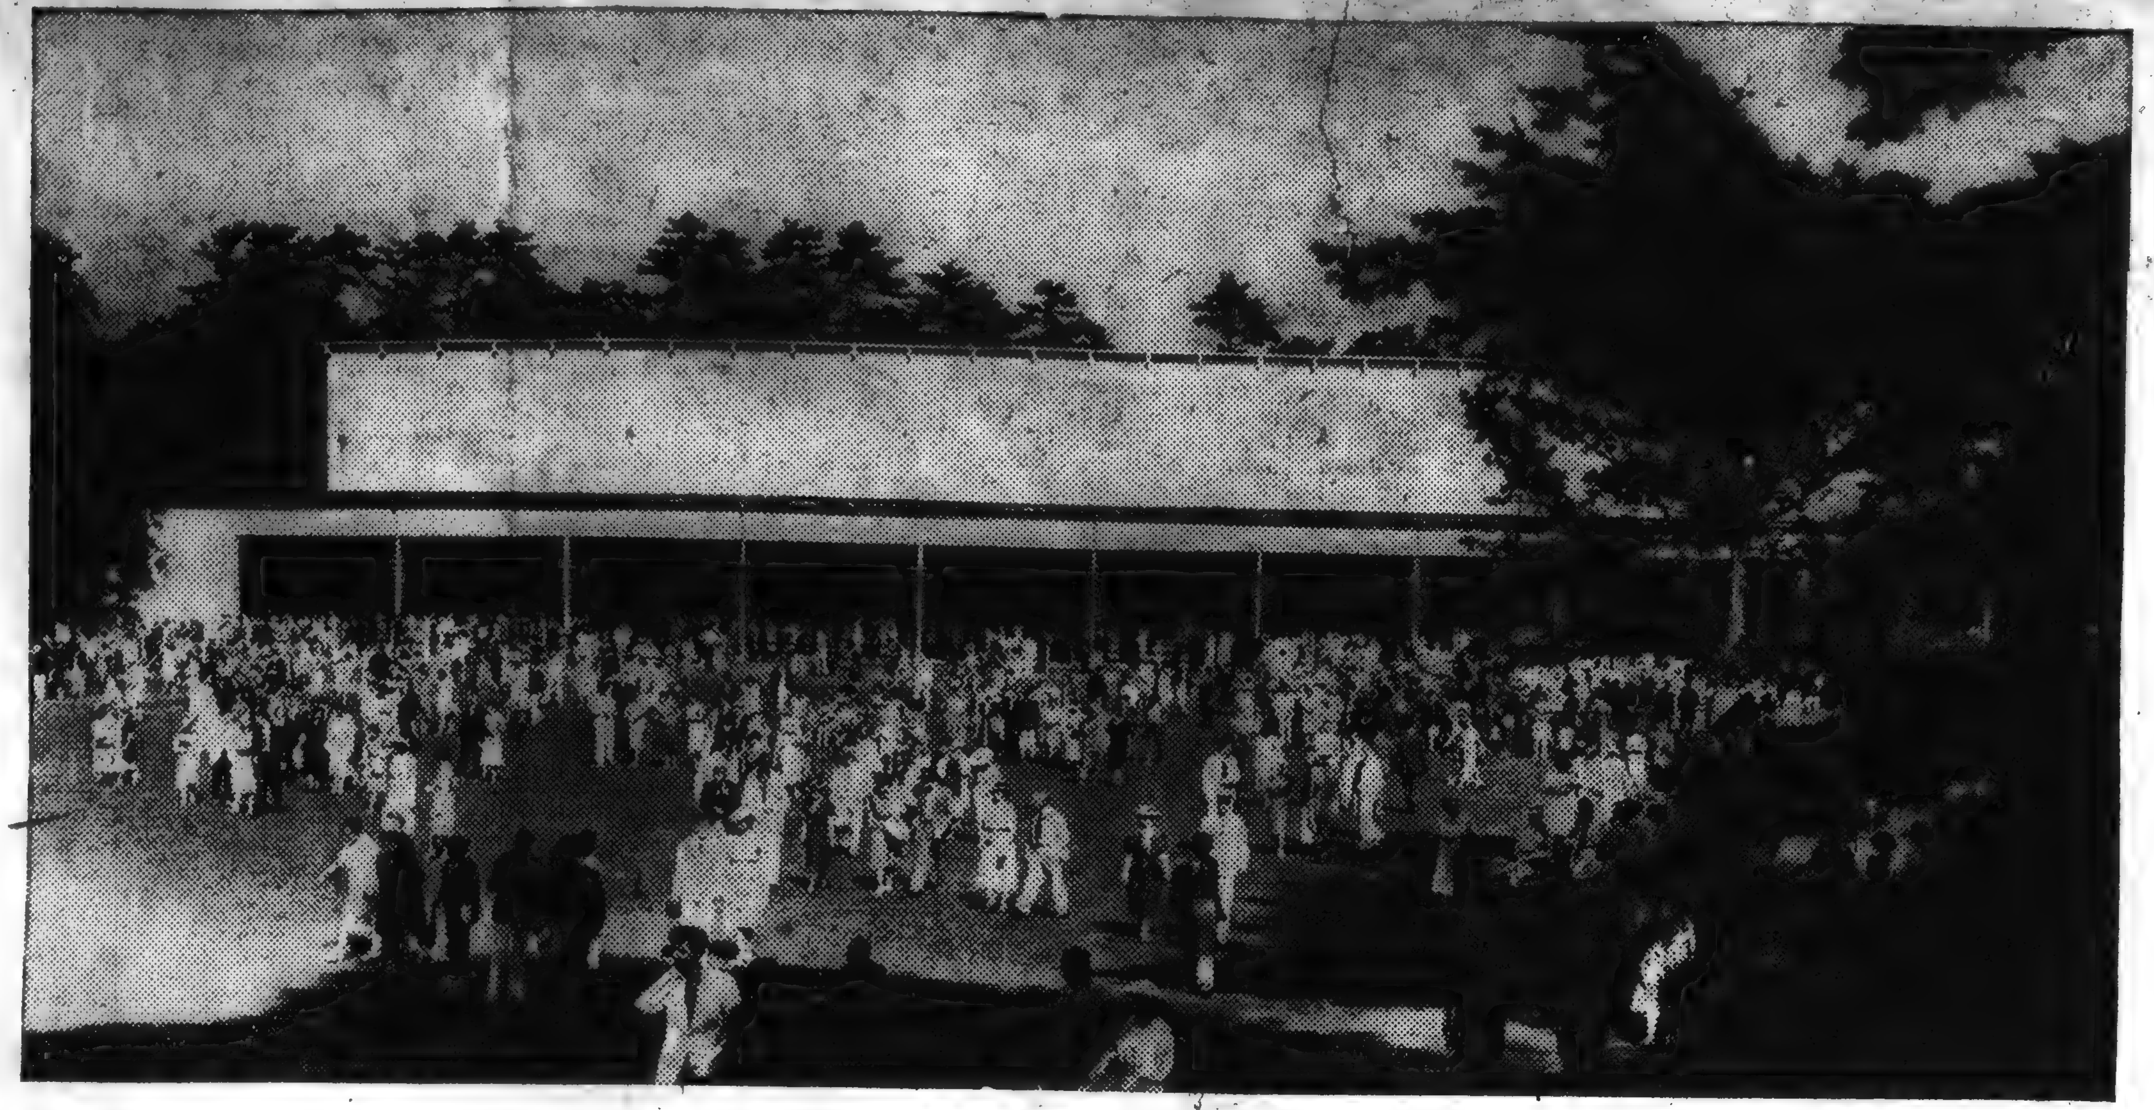
DEMOCRAT-LEADER

JUL 30 1939

THE SIXTH ANNUAL . . . Berkshire Symphonic festival given by the Boston Symphony directed by Serge Koussevitsky at Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge Mass. opens on Thursday. The first three concerts will be given on Thursday, Saturday and Sunday and the programs include Bach's Brandenberg concerto No. 3, "Scheherazade" by Rimsky Korsakof and Brahms first symphony on Thursday afternoon; Concerto for Orchestra by Piston, Sibelius's Fifth and Beethoven's Seventh Symphony on Saturday and Mozart's E Flat Symphony, "Peter and the Wolf" by Prokofieff and Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony. The second set of concerts will be August 10, 12 and 13.

Potential Participators in Great Project at Tanglewood



(Photo by Arthur Palme)

A view of the Berkshire Symphonic festival shed during intermission. The hundreds of individuals shown above must become aware of their responsibility toward one of the greatest summer music enterprises in the United States and feel not only the obligation to attend the concerts but to contribute to their support.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

JUL 30 1939

Music Festival in Berkshires to Open Aug. 3

Many visitors will be in the Berkshire hills the next two weeks for the

PITTSFIELD, MASS.

Berkshire Music festival at Tanglewood, Lenox. Six concerts will be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, as follows: Thursdays and Saturdays, Aug. 3, 5, 10, and 12, at 8:30, and Sundays, Aug. 6 and 13, at 3:30. Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky will be the guests during the festival of Dr. Artur Rodzinski, conductor of the Cleveland Symphony orchestra, and Mrs. Rodzinski, at White Goat farm, Stockbridge.

Festival box holders include Mrs. E. Parmalee Prentice, Mrs. Arthur F. Schermerhorn [Harriett S. Pullman], Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs, Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett, Mr. and Mrs. Norman H. Davis, Dr. William Mather Lewis, president of Lafayette college, and Mrs. Lewis.

The festival association, of which Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Stockbridge is president, has a budget of $60,000, which is $8,000 more than last year. Receipts to date are about $40,000.

• • •

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

JUL 30 1939

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

THE sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the fourth with the participation of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open next Thursday evening, when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the first concert of the second season in the Music Shed on the Tanglewood estate, about one mile west of Lenox, Mass., on Route 183.

As in the two previous summers, there will be six concerts. The scheduled programs are:

Thursday, Aug. 3, 8:30

Brandenburg Concerto No. 3, for strings. ....Bach
Scheherazade ....Rimsky-Korsakoff
Symphony No. 1, in C minor......Brahms

Saturday, Aug. 5, 8:30

Concerto for Orchestra.....Walter Piston
Symphony No. 5, in E flat........Sibelius
Symphony No. 7, in A major....Beethoven

Sunday, Aug. 6, 3:30

Symphony in E flat..............Mozart
Peter and the Wolf............Prokofieff
Narrator, Richard Hale
Symphony No. 4, in F minor..Tchaikovsky

Thursday, Aug. 10, 8:30

Symphony No. 2, in D Major....Beethoven
Also Sprach Zarathustra......R. Strauss
Pictures at an Exhibition.Moussorgsky-Ravel

Saturday, Aug. 12, 8:30

Symphony No. 102, in B flat......Haydn
Le Sacre du Printemps........Stravinsky
Overture to "Der Fliegende Hollaender"; Prelude to "Lohengrin"; Bacchanale from "Tannhaeuser"; Prelude to "Die Meistersinger" ....Wagner

Sunday, Aug. 13, 3:30

Symphony No. 4, in D minor...Schumann
Afternoon of a Faun............Debussy
La Valse............................Ravel
Symphony No. 2, in D major.....Sibelius

Dr. Koussevitzky returned from a short trip to Europe last Wednesday and has begun rehearsals with the orchestra in Boston at Symphony Hall. The conductor and instrumentalists will go to Tanglewood on Wednesday. Olin Downes, music critic of "The New York Times," will lecture at the rehearsals at Tanglewood next Saturday and the following Saturday mornings. These will be open to festival members and patrons and high school pupils of Berkshire County. Charles L. Safford, who retired this spring from his long-held position as director of music at Williams College, will give the last lecture in a free series on the festival program next Tuesday afternoon at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield, where three special art exhibitions for festival patrons have been opened. Among these is an exhibit of Donald C. Greason's paintings and drawings of Dr. Koussevitzky and the members of the orchestra.

Reservations and Parking

All the 5,700 seats in the Music Shed are reserved. Since advance reservations are ahead of last year's figure at this time, a capacity audience is expected for next Thursday's opening concert. Standing room will also be sold. Reservations may be made at the festival office in Stockbridge or at the Lenox information booth, which will be opened next Tuesday by Miss Estelle Hutchinson, chairman of the Lenox Festival Committee. Registrations may also be made there for a tour of the principal estates in Lenox, for which there will be no charge. Inquiries regarding lodgings should be directed to the festival office. Other information booths will be opened in Great Barrington and Pittsfield.

Arthur Bliss, British composer and conductor, will lecture on the festival and its possibilities of development next Thursday for the Pittsfield Rotary Club.

In the parking fields, where conditions last summer left something to be desired, widespread improvements have been made under the direction of Joseph Franz, of Stockbridge. The field has been completely drained, and tiles have been installed and gravel spread to assure the absence of mud. The field will be lighted by twelve floodlights on a steel tower. The ticket office has been moved to a point on the way from the parking field to the Music Shed, and the hurdle fences in the neighborhood of the shed have been removed. Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre, of Pittsfield, will have charge of parking arrangements, which, as before, will be free.

For the use of invalids and others who may be temporarily unable to walk with ease, wheel-chairs, assembled from hospitals of the county, will be available. Special invalids' cards, permitting automobiles to be driven up to the Music Shed, may be obtained by application to the festival office in Stockbridge.

Other Musical Events

As usual, there will be several other musical events in the Berkshire area during the festival period. The South Mountain String Quartet will play at South Mountain, near Pittsfield, next Friday and the following Friday at 4 o'clock. The program for next Friday includes Beethoven's cello and piano sonata in A major, Op. 69, played by Willem Willeke and Harold Bauer; Schubert's quartet in G minor and the Brahms quintet in F minor, with Mr. Bauer as the assisting pianist. Tickets for this series may be obtained without charge by application, inclosing a stamped self-addressed envelope, to Mr. Willeke at South Mountain. Katherine Bacon will be the assisting pianist today at 4 in Brahms' piano quintet in G minor. The South Mountain group will also play Haydn's string quartet in D, Op. 20, No. 4, and Honegger's second quartet.

The Gordon Quartet will give chamber music concerts at Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn., today and the next two Sundays at 4 o'clock, and on Saturdays, Aug. 5 and 12, at 3:30. Ted Shawn and his men dancers will give performances at their summer headquarters in West Becket, Mass., on Fridays and Saturdays.

Festival History

Verdi's Requiem will be sung Wednesday night at the Congregational Church in Great Barrington under the direction of Henry Wigeland, organist of this church, with soloists from New York. For theatergoers there will be performances at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge throughout the festival period.

The festival began in August, 1934, when the late Henry Hadley conducted an orchestra of Philharmonic-Symphony musicians in three concerts on the Dan R. Hanna farm, near Stockbridge. The 1935 festival, of the same length, also was held at the Hanna farm with Dr. Hadley conducting an orchestra composed of members of several major organizations. Dr. Hadley decided not to return in 1936, owing to plans for appearances elsewhere, and the festival committee, whose president is Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, engaged the Boston Symphony, under Dr. Koussevitzky. The three concerts in August, 1936, were held in a large tent on the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, Holmwood, between Lenox and Stockbridge.

The engagement of one of the principal American orchestras under its regular conductor was an important step in the progress of the festival; the next was the gift of a permanent site in the winter of 1937, when Mrs. Gorham Brooks turned over the Tanglewood estate, where Nathaniel Hawthorne had written his "Tanglewood Tales," to the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the festival association.

The number of concerts for the 1937 festival was doubled. Eliel Saarinen was commissioned to design a building for future seasons, but no definite date had been set for construction when the 1937 concerts began under canvas. The need for such a building, however, was vividly proved at the concert of Aug. 12, when a series of heavy thunder showers drowned out the music with the drumming of rain on the tent, in addition to the peals of thunder. Funds were raised by an intensive campaign in the fall and the Music Shed was ready for the six concerts of last August.

It was announced last summer that Dr. Koussevitzky is planning to organize an academy at Tanglewood for orchestral and choral leaders and instrumentalists as a prelude and complement to the festival itself. It is hoped that this phase of the plans for future development may be realized by next summer.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

JUL 31 1939

Miss Alva Magnusson of 6 Minthorne street, is on vacation at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, where she will attend the sixth Berkshire Symphonic Festival which opens Thursday. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra which will appear on programs Thursday, Saturday, Sunday, also Aug. 10, 12 and 13.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

JUL 31 1939

Northampton People Planning to Attend Berkshire Festival

Large Number from Here Have Obtained Tickets for Symphony Orchestra Concert Thursday

As reports come in that the Berkshires are catching the festival spirit in anticipation of the opening concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood next Thursday evening, residents of Northampton and vicinity continue to apply for festival tickets.

The following already have obtained tickets at the Music House, local festival office: Miss Sara Armstrong, of 32 Bedford terrace; Miss Mary R. Howe, 10 West street; Dr. Harry Michelson, of the Northampton State hospital; Frederick McConnell and John Hitchcock of the Arnold inn; Miss Ruth Cubbage, of 95 West street; Robert M. Blackall, 200 Ladd avenue; Miss Venetta Larson, 61 New South street; Mrs. Leonora Madeira, Gothic street; Miss Marion Warren, 47 Munroe street; George E. Feiker, 237 Riverside Drive, Bay State; Miss Elsa Parshley, 250 Elm street! Mr. and Mrs. Bernard O'Shea, Butler place; Rabbi Morris Fishman, South street; Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Wells, Paradise road; Atty. William Dwyer; Dr. J. Miller, Northampton State hospital, and Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Potter, 95 West street, all of this city.

Also Miss Mary E. Marsh, Miss Alice DuPont Wilson, Miss Jeanne I. Murphy, Miss Barbara L. Salmon, Miss Mary Wishman, Miss Marion Goodstein, Miss Jessie K. Herkimer, Donald Pirnie and Walter Mentze, all students at the Smith College Summer school; Miss Beatrice Billings, Mt. Pleasant inn; Miss Miriam B. Clark, East Pleasant street; Miss Frances Warner, 18 Hillcrest place, and Miss Virginia Robertson, 23 Orchard street, all of Amherst; Miss Esther Mesh, 8 Clark street, Easthampton; Fred Mahan, West Cummington; Miss Gladys Pearlman, Huntington, and a party of 25 from the Northampton School for Girls.

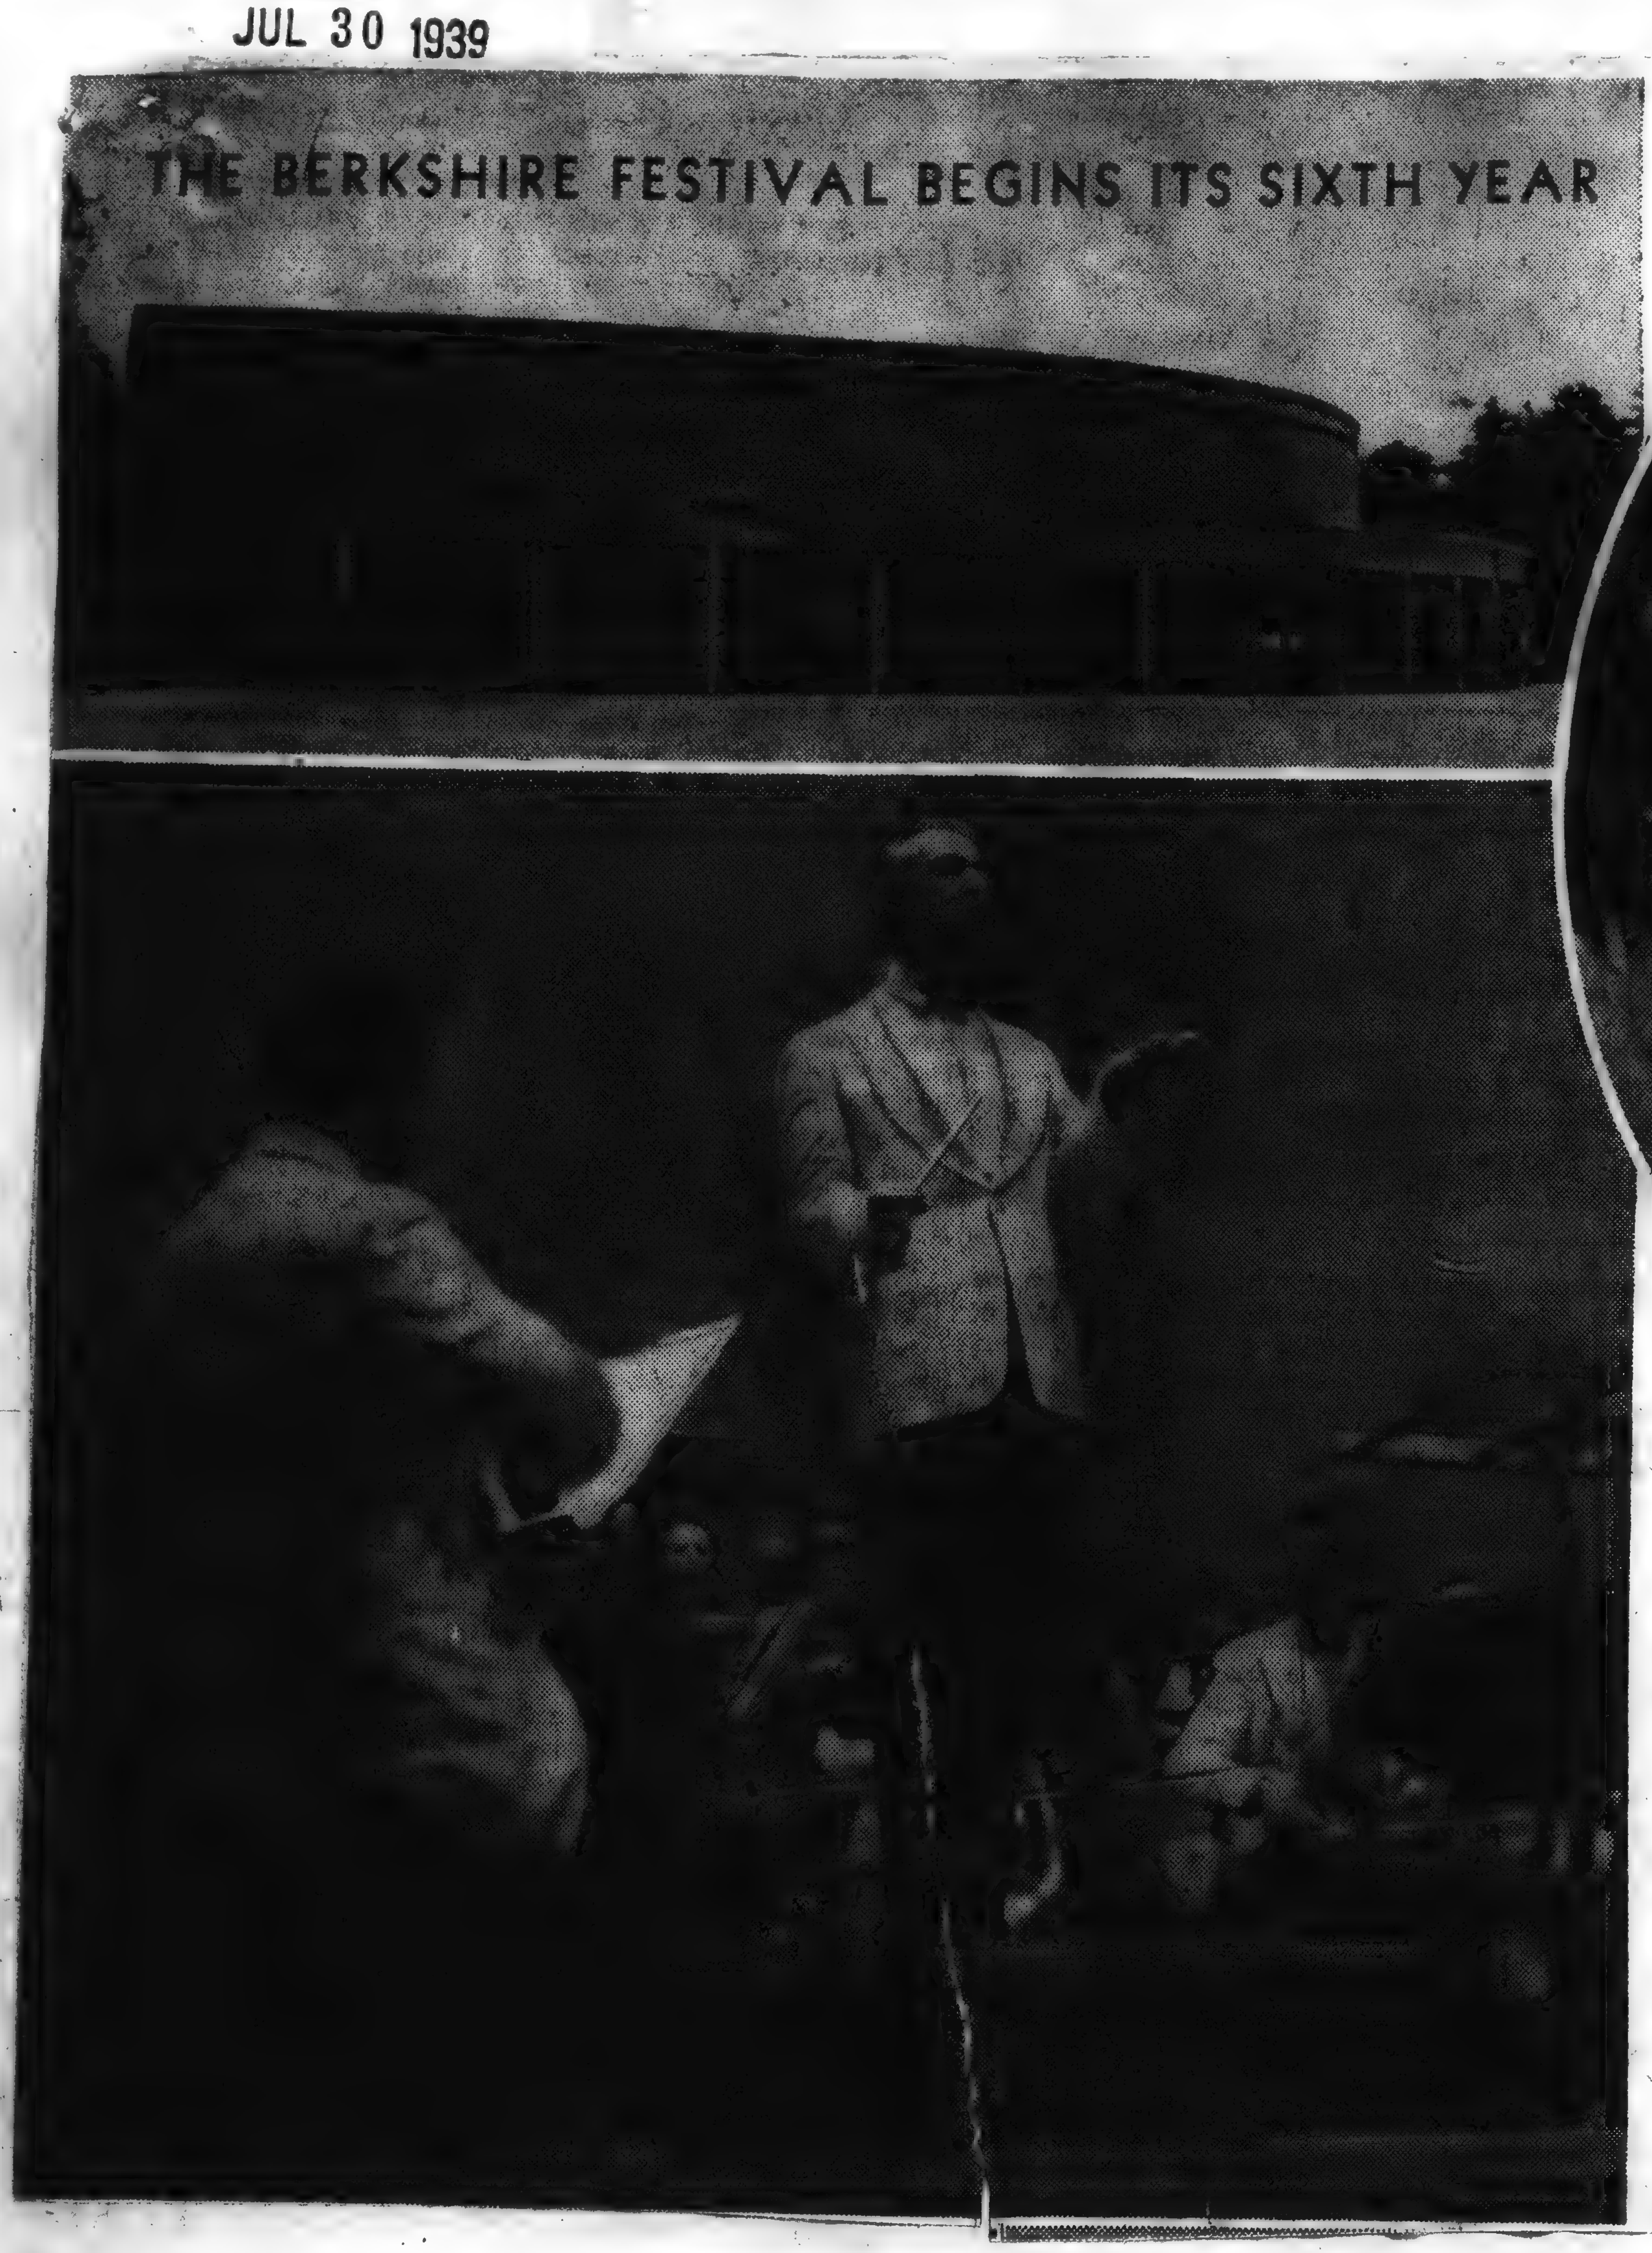
Charles L. Safford, retired director of music at Williams college, will give his final lecture on the symphonies to be played at the festival at the Berkshire museum in Pittsfield Tuesday afternoon. These lectures have been sponsored by the Pittsfield Junior league and have been open to the public at no cost. The Berkshire museum has opened three special exhibitions for festival goers. One exhibition is of the Donald Greason wash drawings and paintings of the orchestra in rehearsal.

At Tanglewood, one of the beauty spots is the evergreen garden planted by the Tappan family, former owners of the 200-acre estate. At the end of the garden, backed by a hemlock hedge extending along Hawthorne street, is a stone seat of simple design. On the seat, Mrs. Gorham Brooks, who made the magnificent gift of the estate to the orchestra in 1937.

The concerts open this week and will continue through the following week-end. Already there has been a tremendous advance demand for tickets, exceeding the demand for 1938. The festival office has announced, however, that there are still a number of good seats available for the six concerts.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 30 1939

THE BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL BEGINS ITS SIXTH YEAR



In preparation for the forthcoming concerts in the Music Shed (above, left) at Stockbridge, Serge Koussevitzky (left) conducts a rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Above is part of the huge audience which comes to the Festival from every section of the country.

Schaal-Life-Pix

BERKSHIRE PROGRAMS

THE sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival opens Thursday night at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass. As usual the festival will consist of six concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky. During each of the two weeks of the festival concerts will be given on Thursday and Saturday at 8:30 P. M., and on Sunday at 3:30 P. M.

The complete programs will be as follows:

Thursday, Aug. 3, at 8:30 P. M.

Bach—Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G major for string orchestra with the Sinfonia from the Cantata "Christ lag in Todesbanden").
Rimsky-Korsakoff....................."Schéhérazade"
Brahms....................Symphony No. 1 in C minor, Op. 68

Saturday, Aug. 5, at 8:30 P. M.

Piston....................Concerto for Orchestra
Sibelius....................Symphony No. 5 in E-flat major
Beethoven....................Symphony No. 7 in A major

Sunday, Aug. 6, at 3:30 P. M.

C. P. E. Bach—Concerto in D major for Stringed Instruments (Arranged for Orchestra by Maximilian Steinberg).
Prokofieff—"Peter and the Wolf," an Orchestral Fairy Tale for Children, Op. 67.
Narrator: Richard Hale.
Tchaikovsky....................Symphony No. 4 in F minor

Thursday, Aug. 10, at 8:30 P. M.

Beethoven....................Symphony No. 2 in D major
Strauss..........."Also Sprach Zarathustra," Tone Poem, Op. 30
Mussorgsky—"Pictures at an Exhibition," pianoforte pieces arranged for orchestra by Maurice Ravel.

Saturday, Aug. 12, at 8:30 P. M.

Haydn....................Symphony in B-flat, No. 102
Stravinsky—"Le Sacre du Printemps" ("The Rite of Spring")
Wagner—Overture to "Der Fliegende Holländer." Prelude to "Lohengrin." Bacchanale from "Tannhaeuser." Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg."

Sunday, Aug. 13, at 3:30 P. M.

Schumann....................Symphony No. 4 in D minor
Debussy..................Prèlude à "L'Aprés-midi d'un Faune"
Ravel...................."La Valse," Choreographic Poem
Sibelius....................Symphony No. 2 in D major

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

JUL 31 1939

Boston Symphony Rehearses Programs For Berkshire Festival

Serge Koussevitzky will assemble the Boston Symphony orchestra for its first Tanglewood rehearsal on Wednesday in preparation for the opening concert of the fourth Berkshire Symphonic festival on Thursday night. The orchestra has been rehearsing in Boston for the past few weeks.

Brahms' First symphony will be the climax for the opening concert of the six concert series. The first program will also include Bach's third Brandenburg Concerto for string orchestra and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherezade."

The program for Saturday evening, Aug. 5, will open with the orchestral concerto of Walter Piston, American composer, and will include Sibelius' Fifth symphony and Beethoven's Seventh spmphony. The Sunday afternoon program, Aug. 6, will consist of the Fourth symphony chestral fairy tale, "Peter and the Wolf," with Peter Hale as narrator, of Tschaikowsky, Prokofieff's or- and Emanuel Bach's orchestral concerto in D major.

The programs for the second week will be as follows: Thursday evening, Aug. 10, Beethoven's Second Symphony, Strauss' "Thus Spoke Zarathustra,' and Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition," in Ravel's orchestration. The Saturday program, Aug. 12, will include Haydn's Symphony in B flat, No. 102, Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring," and excerpts from Wagner's "Flying Dutchman," "Meistersinger," "Lohengrin' and "Tannhauser. The final program on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 13, will comprise Schumanns Fourth Symphony, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," Ravel's "La Valse,' and the Second Symphony of Sibelius.

For information about tickets and accommodations, address the Berkshire Symphonic festival , Stockbridge.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
JUL 30 1939

Berkshire Musical Fete Opens Thursday Evening

Concert Series Spread Over Two Week-Ends At Tanglewood; Boston Symphony To Play

BY SAMUEL MEYERS

The Berkshire musical festival which annually draws thousands of music lovers from all parts of the world to hear the Boston Symphony orchestra under the conductorship of Serge Koussevitzky in six concerts at Tanglewood between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., will begin at 8:30 o'clock Thursday evening with the presentation of compositions by Bach, Rimsky-Korsakov, and Brahms.

This year a much larger number of music lovers from Waterbury, Litchfield, Torrington and other western Connecticut towns is expected than in previous years when many came to all or part of the concert series which again is spread over the first two week-ends of August.

The advance sale of tickets this year has been far ahead of last year when the new music shed at Tanglewood, seating 5,800 persons, was opened with a capacity audience. For the first time all seats are reserved for the convenience of music lovers who have long motor drives and can thus avoid the necessity of arriving long in advance of the concerts if they are sitting in the cheaper seats. There has been no advance in the price of these cheaper seats over last year but they now are more convenient for visitors.

Eagerly Awaited.

Of the Berkshire music festivals critics speak in superlatives so no long descriptions of their quality are needed. It is sufficient to announce them and the rest takes care of itself. Music lovers eagerly await the first announcement of them and act accordingly. This year those who attend will hear some of the finest music played with the excellence for which Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra are famous. The opening concert will include Bach's "Brandenburg Concerto No. 3", Rimsky - Korsakov's "Scheherazade", and Brahms' "Symphony No. 1".

Subsequent concerts on Saturday evening and on Sunday afternoon will include works of Sibelius, Beethoven, Mozart, Tschaikowsky, Piston, and Prokofieff. In the second series of three concerts beginning on Thursday, Aug. 10, music of Strauss, Beethoven, Moussorgsky-Ravel, Haydn, Stravinsky, Wagner, Schuman, Debussy, Ravel, and Sibelius, will be heard. Dr. Koussevitzky always attempts to include a number of the works of important moderns along with those of the older composers. This year the program includes a number of the more interesting works of that type. The Sunday concerts begin at 3:30 p. m.

In the beautiful grounds of Tanglewood where Hawthorne lived and wrote many of his best works, music lovers now come each year for the music festival which has made this place the Salzburg of America. So famous has this place become already that it holds a foremost place in musical circles and current magazines have some interesting articles about it. Last year's dedication of the new music shed with its excellent acoustics, making it possible for everyone to hear well regardless of where they may be sitting, assured music lovers the opportunity of listening to the best music in comfort and without fear of interference of the weather which was a constant threat before the wooden music shed was constructed.

Many improvements have been made since last year for the comfort and convenience of those who attend. Chief among these are a decided improvement in the parking fields and handling of parking. Since last season the 10 and a half acre parking field has been completely drained. More than 900 feet of 12-inch and 18-inch tile were installed to drain the field and more than 7,000 cubic yards of gravel were spread over low areas thus drained to give double protection. A steel tower with 12 flood lights was installed in the parking area to facilitate parking.

Best Route To Shed.

The ticket office has been moved to the north side of the Hawthorne pines so that it is now at a point where the public will approach the shed from the parking field. There is also a place adjoining the ticket office for people to wait and to meet friends.

Persons from this section are advised to approach the music shed at Tanglewood by going up Route 183 in Massachusetts and entering through the first entrance on West street at the festival. If they do this they will find it much more convenient than any other route unless they are going to the special entrance for box-holders and invalids.

People who can arrive early are urged to do so in order that they may have time in which to enjoy the beauty of the grounds and the gardens and the magnificent views of the Stockbridge bowl nearby.

Art Exhibition.

In order to make the visit of music lovers to the section more enjoyable many organizations annually cooperate to schedule concerts, plays and art and dance exhibitions so they may be attended without interfering with the Berkshire festival concerts. This year the Berkshire museum in Pittsfield has three art exhibitions on during the festival. One of the exhibitions will be especially interesting because it contains 40 painting and wash-drawings of the Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky while in rehearsal. These are the work of Donal Greason and delighted Boston when shown in Symphony hall during the past winter. The museum is open week days from 10 to 5, except Monday, and on Sundays from [illegible] to 5. The public is invited and there is no admission fee.

The museum also has the second annual Berkshire national photographic exhibition and an exhibition, "The World of Today", consisting of oils, water-colors, gouaches, drawings and prints by New York artists.

Special Attractions.

The Berkshire Playhouse at Stockbridge is offering two special attractions during the festival in "The Petrified Forest" by Robert E. Sherwood, former Stockbridge resident, and "Petticoat Fever" by Mark Reed. John Beal will play the leading role in the Sherwood piece while Dennis King will appear in the Reed production.

Other events include chamber music concerts at South Mountain in Pittsfield, Friday afternoon, Aug. 4 and 11. Admissions to these chamber music concerts are free and tickets may be obtained by communicating with Willem Willike at South Mountain.

Book lovers who have enjoyed Rachael Field's "All This and Heaven Too" will find Stockbridge with its many places and associations mentioned in the book a very interesting place. The writer can recommend to such people a visit to the Mission house on the main street in town. It was in this house that the Fields lived at one time though at that time it was situated in a different part of town. Garden lovers will find the old-fashioned garden in the grounds of the Mission house well worth their consideration.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
JUL 31 1939

KOUSSEVITZKY, BOSTON SYMPHONY, ARRIVE WEDNES.

Serge Koussevitzky will assemble the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's music shed at "Tanglewood" on Route 183 between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., Wednesday for a rehearsal in anticipation of the opening of the sixth annual Festival Thursday evening at 8:30 o'clock.

The orchestra has been rehearsing in Boston and will continue to do so until it embarks on the 150-mile jaunt to the Berkshires.

The specially built shed, seating 5,700, is located on the 200-acre estate presented in 1937 to the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, of Brookline, Mass. This will be the fourth successive Berkshire festival at which the orchestra has played and the second in the splendid new acoustical shed which, after its inauguaration last summer, was declared to have remarkable properties for hearing and comfortable accommodation.

The programs are those of winter symphony concerts. The performances are of a symphonic standard consistent with the famous orchestra here assembled in full personnel under its illustrious conductor. To hear a Boston Symphony concert in incomparable midsummer surroundings is a rare and unforgettable experience.

The advance demand for season and single tickets is greater than it has ever been for a previous festival series. There is every indication of capacity audiences for each of the six concerts. The concerts will be given on Thursday and Saturday evenings, and Sunday afternoon of next week and of the week following.

Dr. Koussevitzky will open the 1939 Festival with Bach's Third Brandenburg Concerto String Orchestra. Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade" will be on the same programme, which will include the First Symphony of Brahms in C minor.

The second program (for Saturday, August 5) will open with the orchestral concerto of Walter Piston, the American composer, and will continue with the Fifth Symphony of Sibelius, and end with the Seventh by Beethoven. The program of the following (Sunday) afternoon will feature the Fourth Symphony of Tchaikovsky, and also include Prokofieff's orchestral fairy tale, "Peter and the Wolf," — Richard Hale acting as narrator. Emanuel Bach's orchestral concerto in D major will open the program.

The programs for the second week will be as follows: Thursday evening, August 10: Beethoven's Second Symphony, Strauss' "Thus Spake Zarathustra," and Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition," in Ravel's orchestration. The Saturday program, August 12, will include Haydn's Symphony in B flat, No. 102, Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring," and excerpts from Wagner's "Flying Dutchman," "Meistersinger," "Lohengrin," and "Tannhauser." The final program on Sunday afternoon, August 13, will comprise Schumann's Fourth Symphony, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," Ravel's "La Valse," and the Second Symphony of Sibelius.

For information about tickets and accommodations, address the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Stockbridge, Mass.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

Promenade

63 N.Y.C.

APR - - 1939

Records

THE outstanding event of the month for the lovers of serious recorded music was the release by Victor of the first complete recording of Mozart's The Magic Flute. This playing is by the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra under the baton of Sir Thomas Beecham and fills 37 sides. (Musical Masterpiece Album M-541. 2 vols.) This is a large package of Mozart, and it contains some of his best-loved work, heretofore available only in fragmentary recordings of this opera.

Whatever this recording may lack in brilliance of execution is amply compensated for by its fidelity to the spirit of the era in which it was written, and the singing of Tiana Lemnitz, soprano; Rut Berglund, contralto; Helge Roswaenge, tenor; and Gerhard Husch, baritone; and their supporting voices are vital and adequate.

I would not like you to think that I mean to disparage this work by calling it less than brilliant. It is a Mozart treasury and should be one of the solid foundation stones of any serious record library. From the rich store of other less ambitious Mozart recordings one may select his own favorite specimens of interpretive virtuosity. This, it seems to me, is the soundest way to build a library of recorded music. It is analagous to possessing your own edition of Hamlet, from the reading of which you may enjoy Shakespeare, and from which, in turn, you may enjoy more the Gielgud or the Evans interpretation. Each contributes a compounding interest to the other.

In a slender album (4 sides) Victor has released the Suite for Strings derived by John Barbirolli from the Dramatick Musick of Henry Purcell. It is played by the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra of New York with Barbirolli conducting. (Musical Masterpiece Album M-533. 4 sides)

This, too, is an event of importance for it gives modern listeners an opportunity to hear the Music of the England of Restoration days. Culled from the incidental music which he wrote profusely for the plays of the day and including the famous song in which Dido voices her sorrow after the departure of Aeneas in Purcell's great opera "Dido and Aeneas," this album is a coherent suite in which is revealed the great artistry of both Purcell and Barbirolli.

Haydn's Symphony No. 102 in B Flat Major as played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Koussevitzky's direction (Victor Musical Masterpiece album M-529. 6 sides) is another important event, as is the release of any Boston Symphony number.

This is the mature Haydn and not at all like the younger composer of minuets. It has indeed contributed largely to the conception of Haydn as the father of the symphony as well as of the string quartet. It has long been familiar to Boston ears, for it was the major work on the program of that orchestra's first concert in October, 1881. But although you may have heard the Boston or other orchestras play it many many times, you have never heard it played more satisfyingly.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSBURG, PA.
POST-GAZETTE

APR 12 1939

Starring ★ ★ ★ ★

The New RECORDS

By D. S. Steinfirst

Bach—Overture A La Maniere Francaise—Harpsichord

★★ Dr. Ernst Victor Wolff. Columbia Set No. 357.

Bach wrote, in all, seven massive partitas for the clavier. The last, never before recorded, is known as "The Ouverture A La Maniere Francaise." The harpsichord is rapidly coming back into popular favor and Columbia has been unusually successful in recording the instrument. This is particularly true of the Bach now put on discs bya really noted harpsichordist, Dr. Ernst Victor Wolff. He seems to be able to sustain his tone, something unusually difficult to do on a harpsichord, and as a result, the tone of original clavier, is more nearly duplicated. While not as interesting as some of the other partitas, the Seventh is a model of counterponit, brilliant and varied dance forms.

Copland—El Salon Mexico

★★★ Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky —Victor No. 546.

Dr. Koussevitzky's penchant for modern music has led him to record this brilliant piece of exotic writing by Aaron Copland. The composer has strung together several Mexican folk and dance tunes suggested to him by a visit to Mexico City's topical dance hall —El Salon Mexico—done in the Bostonian's best brittle style, with the wood winds having a field day.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
APR 15 1939

Records: Beethoven and Moderus

By C. E. L.

It would be a splendid thing if we could forget dates, opus numbers and periods in the career of Beethoven. Useful as they may be for classification purposes, it is to be feared that we sometimes deprive ourselves of the fullest enjoyment of fine early scores because of the business of looking for Haydnisms. Opus 9 is not a very impressive number in the catalogue of a composer whose total ran up to 256. but it happens to identify a series of three Trios, the first of which has just been issued by Musicraft (Album No. 28), the artists being Mara Sebriansky, violin; Edward Neikrug, viola; and George Neikrug, cello.

The very opening with its descending chord figure has a certain awesomeness and is bodeful of important happenings. The thematic material has an eventful life, for Beethoven thus early was economical and consequently averse to letting any bit go to waste. Forgetting both the composer and his style, the very fact that three voices can be employed to such eloquent ends is something to marvel at.

The slow movement is Beethoven in one of his rarest moods. The melody is enchanting and the spirit shines through. This section contradicts the facile belief that it was only in his later, deafened years that Beethoven could live at will in a world apart. The scherzo has abundant life and the final presto draws upon an additional stream of energy and bubbling excitement. Splendid Beethoven, splendidly performed on first-class discs.

* * *

It would be well to play Aaron Copland's El Salon Mexico at least three times before you make up your mind about it. That will clear your mind of dissonances, which at first seem just plaguey, and a good deal of ordinary noise and thumpings. Sergei Koussevitzky and the Boston Orchestra have taken it in charge for this Victor set M-546 and with these sponsors the Copland divertissement has its best foot forward.

Now that the fright-wig is off and we knew all the time it was only Uncle Abner, this El Salon Mexico is really amusing and brilliant music. The tunes are ripe and luscious; they are earthy, intelligible and downright seductive. Curves like that could never be unpopular. As a matter of fact, they are the people's tunes—El Mosco, El Palo Verde, and that sort of thing right out of Cancionero Mexicano. The composer says that the cafe which inspired this opus is one of the hot spots of the tourist center where a sign on the wall says: "Please don't throw lighted butts on the floor so the ladies won't burn their feet."

There is a good deal of Copland in El Salon as the instrumentation and harmonic texture. If any comparison is to be made it might as well be with Ravel's Bolero because people will feel strongly about it one way or the other. There can be no neutral ground where the other fellow's opinion is a darn sight better and yours is just as good, only if you keep it to yourself.

* * *

And this modernist went to church. Francis Poulenc's Mass in G major as done by Les Chanteurs de Lyon at the Cathedral of Saint-Jean and under the direction of E. Bourmack is offered currently by Columbia as Set X-127.

Poulenc was ever one of the most intelligible of The Six, not only because he never suffered from melo-phobia but because his melodies have a spontaneity and charm all their own. Their vitality appears in the G major Mass, although its predominant complexion is an affinity with early church polyphony. This is rather a matter of spirit than of technique for details betray the modernist. A rhythmic angularity creeps in now and then as in the persistently rough-hewn second syllable of "sanctus." There are fine solo voices which contribute to the desirability of an interesting example of contemporary church music.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS
APR 14 1939

Recorded Music

Chamber Music

THE world's picture of Beethoven is formed from the music of his middle period. Nobody has got to the bottom of his last works and nobody pays a great deal of attention to his early ones. The mystic side of Beethoven is admitted, but on the whole we think of him as writing a kind of music that is an explosian of energy and that reaches after what it is impossible to say.

In his early works he is as large a composer, as inventive and independent, as the forms of his day permitted, and he is a peaceful one. Two of his early compositions have recently been put on the market, his string trio in G, opus 9, No. 1, by Musicraft, and Beethoven's piano quartet, rewritten from his quintet for piano and woodwinds, opus 16 released by Columbia. They are perfect illustrations of Beethoven's early largeness of range.

Though Beethoven was admittedly under the spell of Mozart when he wrote the two versions of opus 16, and while its slow movement does quote "Batti, batti," there is no use of looking for Mozart in Beethoven except in that both were writing 18th century music. That is, for Beethoven, this music is not disturbed, restless, or, though ample in scale, dynamic; it is strictly self-contained, and as such, contrasting so sharply with the dramatic utterances of later years, it is curiously refreshing. It gives us a glimpse of Beethoven when he was not addressing humankind, as it were; or, better, as if he were writing music for fun.

The same is true of the engaging trio for strings, out of a set which Beethoven held particularly dear. It is music that works of its own accord, with humor, tenderness and expertness, music that goes of itself and without a "message."

The performances are excellent. For the Musicraft release of the trio Mara Sebriansky and Edward and George Neikrug form a congenial ensemble. For Columbia's recording of the quartet E. Robert Schmitz is the pianist, playing with three members of the Roth quartet, Messrs. Roth, Molnar and Scholz.

* * *

IF MUCH is to be said for a revival of interest in Beethoven's early works, much is also to be said for acquaintance with the early works of Paul Hindemith. Victor has published a recording of his sonata for viola and piano, opus 11, No. 4, written with admirable instinct for the color of the one and the technic of the other and played supremely well by the incomparable William Primrose and by Jesus Maria Sanroma, the admirable pianist of the Boston Symphony.

Unlike the early music of many modernists, this sonata of Hindemith's does not represent a procedure the composer afterward abandoned. It is typical Hindemith music, just as Beethoven's early music was typical of Beethoven and or nobody else. But Hindemith's reach is here not as complicated nor is his subject matter so austere. Yet it is modernist music and as such will be a profitable stepping stone for anyone who is interested in exploring the intricacies and the delights of contemporary music. Outwardly it will, for the moment, present some difficulties to the musical amateur; its substance, however, is both brilliant and warm and it is one of the most beautiful of Hindemith's works.

Strangely enough, the clarinet and piano sonata of Brahms (F minor) affords a parallel and as well a contrast. Each of the instruments combined with the piano is of melancholy nature, yet each composer uses it with particular brilliance and power. More than this, Brahms' work was once as undecipherable to the public as Hindemith's may be now. The workmanship in either case is incomparably gifted and the quality of each work is of particular mellowness.

Brahms' idiom is now as clear to us as Beethoven's, and moreover those works of his last years wherein he discovered the clarinet and made such sympathetic use of it, are graced with the deepening warmth and repose of a man whose music was never weak, never pessimistic and never negative, yet gained its enormous power from a peculiarly sunny and vigorous sort of human resignation.

The sonata is an especially beautiful example of Brahms. The two sonatas he wrote for clarinet are interchangeable with viola; this is the first recording of the clarinet version of the F minor and is the excellent work of Musicraft. The performance, a very good and sympathetic one, is by David Weber and Ra[illegible]ev.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
THE STAGE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

APR 15 1939

RECORDS

Classical

THE CARNEGIE HALL concerts of the New Friends of Music having lately aroused public interest in the Haydn symphonies restored by Dr. Alfred Einstein, Victor has neatly timed the release of an album containing two of those symphonies—No. 80 in D minor, and No. 67 in F major. However, these records will pass beyond the demand of a season's curiosity. The music is beautiful beyond praise and humbles the listener to a renewed awareness of Haydn's true stature. The performance by the New Friends' Orchestra under Fritz Stiedry is zestful and scrupulous. This is an album that should be in every library.

Also on the honor list is Walter Gieseking's Columbia recording of the Beethoven Waldstein sonata. This music needs every bit of Gieseking's dynamic technique (which comes out beautifully here), and a somewhat deeper poetry than he sees in certain of its pages. By and large, however, he gives an impressive account of one of the most powerful and elusive of the Beethoven sonatas.

Two smaller orchestral albums: Felix Weingartner and the London Philharmonic give a splendidly vigorous and authoritative reading of one of Brahms' happiest inspirations, the Variations on a Theme by Haydn. The tempi will be a joy to those who like Brahms' strength more than his softness (Columbia). The artistic intention of El Salon Mexico, brilliantly recorded for Victor by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony, is best described in the words of its composer, Aaron Copland: "Other tourists will pull out their snapshots to show you what a country looks like, but a composer wants you to know what a country sounds like." A spare side is devoted to the Song of the Volga Boatmen in a pseudo-Mussorgsky arrangement by that man of the people, Igor Stravinsky.

THIS CLIPPING FROM Promenade
63 N.Y.C
APR -- 1939

Records

THE outstanding event of the month for the lovers of serious recorded music was the release by Victor of the first complete recording of Mozart's The Magic Flute. This playing is by the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra under the baton of Sir Thomas Beecham and fills 37 sides. (Musical Masterpiece Album M-541. 2 vols.) This is a large package of Mozart, and it contains some of his best-loved work, heretofore available only in fragmentary recordings of this opera.

Whatever this recording may lack in brilliance of execution is amply compensated for by its fidelity to the spirit of the era in which it was written, and the singing of Tiana Lemnitz, soprano; Rut Berglund, contralto; Helge Roswaenge, tenor; and Gerhard Husch, baritone; and their supporting voices are vital and adequate.

I would not like you to think that I mean to disparage this work by calling it less than brilliant. It is a Mozart treasury and should be one of the solid foundation stones of any serious record library. From the rich store of other less ambitious Mozart recordings one may select his own favorite specimens of interpretive virtuosity. This, it seems to me, is the soundest way to build a library of recorded music. It is analagous to possessing your own edition of Hamlet, from the reading of which you may enjoy Shakespeare, and from which, in turn, you may enjoy more the Gielgud or the Evans interpretation. Each contributes a compounding interest to the other.

In a slender album (4 sides) Victor has released the Suite for Strings derived by John Barbirolli from the Dramatick Musick of Henry Purcell. It is played by the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra of New York with Barbirolli conducting. (Musical Masterpiece Album M-533. 4 sides)

This, too, is an event of importance for it gives modern listeners an opportunity to hear the Music of the England of Restoration days. Culled from the incidental music which he wrote profusely for the plays of the day and including the famous song in which Dido voices her sorrow after the departure of Aeneas in Purcell's great opera "Dido and Aeneas," this album is a coherent suite in which is revealed the great artistry of both Purcell and Barbirolli.

Haydn's Symphony No. 102 in B Flat Major as played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Koussevitzky's direction (Victor Musical Masterpiece album M-529. 6 sides) is another important event, as is the release of any Boston Symphony number.

This is the mature Haydn and not at all like the younger composer of minuets. It has indeed contributed largely to the conception of Haydn as the father of the symphony as well as of the string quartet. It has long been familiar to Boston ears, for it was the major work on the program of that orchestra's first concert in October, 1881. But although you may have heard the Boston or other orchestras play it many many times, you have never heard it played more satisfyingly.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSBURG, PA.
POST-GAZETTE
APR 12 1939

Starring ★ ★ ★ ★

The New RECORDS

By D. S. Steinfirst

Bach—Overture A La Maniere Francaise—Harpsichord

★★ Dr. Ernst Victor Wolff. Columbia Set No. 357.

Bach wrote, in all, seven massive partitas for the clavier. The last, never before recorded, is known as "The Ouverture A La Maniere Francaise." The harpsichord is rapidly coming back into popular favor and Columbia has been unusually successful in recording the instrument. This is particularly true of the Bach now put on discs bya really noted harpsichordist, Dr. Ernst Victor Wolff. He seems to be able to sustain his tone, something unusually difficult to do on a harpsichord, and as a result, the tone of original clavier, is more nearly duplicated. While not as interesting as some of the other partitas, the Seventh is a model of counterponit, brilliant and varied dance forms.

Copland—El Salon Mexico

★★★ Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky —Victor No. 546.

Dr. Koussevitzky's penchant for modern music has led him to record this brilliant piece of exotic writing by Aaron Copland. The composer has strung together several Mexican folk and dance tunes suggested to him by a visit to Mexico City's topical dance hall —El Salon Mexico—done in the Bostonian's best brittle style, with the wood winds having a field day.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
APR 15 1939

Records:

Beethoven and Moderus

By C. E. L.

It would be a splendid thing if we could forget dates, opus numbers and periods in the career of Beethoven. Useful as they may be for classification purposes, it is to be feared that we sometimes deprive ourselves of the fullest enjoyment of fine early scores because of the business of looking for Haydnisms. Opus 9 is not a very impressive number in the catalogue of a composer whose total ran up to 256. but it happens to identify a series of three Trios, the first of which has just been issued by Musicraft (Album No. 28), the artists being Mara Sebriansky, violin; Edward Neikrug, viola; and George Neikrug, cello.

The very opening with its descending chord figure has a certain awesomeness and is bodeful of important happenings. The thematic material has an eventful life, for Beethoven thus early was economical and consequently averse to letting any bit go to waste. Forgetting both the composer and his style, the very fact that three voices can be employed to such eloquent ends is something to marvel at.

The slow movement is Beethoven in one of his rarest moods. The melody is enchanting and the spirit shines through. This section contradicts the facile belief that it was only in his later, deafened years that Beethoven could live at will in a world apart. The scherzo has abundant life and the final presto draws upon an additional stream of energy and bubbling excitement. Splendid Beethoven, splendidly performed on first-class discs.

* * *

It would be well to play Aaron Copland's El Salon Mexico at least three times before you make up your mind about it. That will clear your mind of dissonances, which at first seem just plaguey, and a good deal of ordinary noise and thumpings. Sergei Koussevitzky and the Boston Orchestra have taken it in charge for this Victor set M-546 and with these sponsors the Copland divertissement has its best foot forward.

Now that the fright-wig is off and we know all the time it was only Uncle Abner, this El Salon Mexico is really amusing and brilliant music. The tunes are ripe and luscious; they are earthy, intelligible and downright seductive. Curves like that could never be unpopular. As a matter of fact, they are the people's tunes—El Mosco, El Palo Verde, and that sort of thing right out of Cancionero Mexicano. The composer says that the cafe which inspired this opus is one of the hot spots of the tourist center where a sign on the wall says: "Please don't throw lighted butts on the floor so the ladies won't burn their feet."

There is a good deal of Copland in El Salon as the instrumentation and harmonic texture. If any comparison is to be made it might as well be with Ravel's Bolero because people will feel strongly about it one way or the other. There can be no neutral ground where the other fellow's opinion is a darn sight better and yours is just as good, only if you keep it to yourself.

* * *

And this modernist went to church. Francis Poulenc's Mass in G major as done by Les Chanteurs de Lyon at the Cathedral of Saint-Jean and under the direction of E. Bourmack is offered currently by Columbia as Set X-127.

Poulenc was ever one of the most intelligible of The Six, not only because he never suffered from melo-phobia but because his melodies have a spontaneity and charm all their own. Their vitality appears in the G major Mass, although its predominant complexion is an affinity with early church polyphony. This is rather a matter of spirit than of technique for details betray the modernist. A rhythmic angularity creeps in now and then as in the persistently rough-hewn second syllable of "sanctus." There are fine solo voices which contribute to the desirability of an interesting example of contemporary church music.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS
APR 14 1939

Recorded Music

Chamber Music

THE world's picture of Beethoven is formed from the music of his middle period. Nobody has got to the bottom of his last works and nobody pays a great deal of attention to his early ones. The mystic side of Beethoven is admitted, but on the whole we think of him as writing a kind of music that is an explosian of energy and the reaches after what it is impossible to say.

In his early works he is as large a composer, as inventive and independent, as the forms of his day permitted, and he is a peaceful one. Two of his early compositions have recently been put on the market, his string trio in G, opus 9, No. 1, by Musicraft, and Beethoven's piano quartet, rewritten from his quintet for piano and woodwinds, opus 16, released by Columbia. They are perfect illustrations of Beethoven's early largeness of range.

Though Beethoven was admittedly under the spell of Mozart when he wrote the two versions of opus 16, and while its slow movement does quote "Batti, batti," there is no use of looking for Mozart in Beethoven except in that both were writing 18th century music. That is, for Beethoven, this music is not disturbed, restless, or, though ample in scale, dynamic; it is strictly self-contained, and as such, contrasting so sharply with the dramatic utterances of later years, it is curiously refreshing. It gives us a glimpse of Beethoven when he was not addressing humankind, as it were; or, better, as if he were writing music for fun.

The same is true of the engaging trio for strings, out of a set which Beethoven held particularly dear. It is music that works of its own accord, with humor, tenderness and expertness, music that goes of itself and without a "message."

The performances are excellent. For the Musicraft release of the trio Mara Sebriansky and Edward and George Neikrug form a congenial ensemble. For Columbia's recording of the quartet E. Robert Schmitz is the pianist, playing with three members of the Roth quartet, Messrs. Roth, Molnar and Scholz.

* * *

IF MUCH is to be said for a revival of interest in Beethoven's early works, much is also to be said for acquaintance with the early works of Paul Hindemith. Victor has published a recording of his sonata for viola and piano, opus 11, No. 4, written with admirable instinct for the color of the one and the technic of the other and played supremely well by the incomparable William Primrose and by Jesus Maria Sanroma, the admirable pianist of the Boston Symphony.

Unlike the early music of many modernists, this sonata of Hindemith's does not represent a procedure the composer afterward abandoned. It is typical Hindemith music, just as Beethoven's early music was typical of Beethoven and or nobody else. But Hindemith's reach is here not as complicated nor is his subject matter so austere. Yet it is modernist music and as such will be a profitable stepping stone for anyone who is interested in exploring the intricacies and the delights of contemporary music. Outwardly it will, for the moment, present some difficulties to the musical amateur; its substance, however, is both brilliant and warm and it is one of the most beautiful of Hindemith's works.

Strangely enough, the clarinet and piano sonata of Brahms (F minor) affords a parallel and as well a contrast. Each of the instruments combined with the piano is of melancholy nature, yet each composer uses it with particular brilliance and power. More than this, Brahms' work was once as undecipherable to the public as Hindemith's may be now. The workmanship in either case is incomparably gifted and the quality of each work is of particular mellowness.

Brahms' idiom is now as clear to us as Beethoven's, and moreover those works of his last years wherein he discovered the clarinet and made such sympathetic use of it, are graced with the deepening warmth and repose of a man whose music was never weak, never pessimistic and never negative, yet gained its enormous power from a peculiarly sunny and vigorous sort of human resignation.

The sonata is an especially beautiful example of Brahms. The two sonatas he wrote for clarinet are interchangeable with viola; this is the first recording of the clarinet version of the F minor and is the excellent work of Musicraft. The performance, a very good and sympathetic one, is by David Weber and [illegible]

THIS CLIPPING FROM
THE STAGE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
APR 15 1939

RECORDS

Classical

THE CARNEGIE HALL concerts of the New Friends of Music having lately aroused public interest in the Haydn symphonies restored by Dr. Alfred Einstein, Victor has neatly timed the release of an album containing two of those symphonies—No. 80 in D minor, and No. 67 in F major. However, these records will pass beyond the demand of a season's curiosity. The music is beautiful beyond praise and humbles the listener to a renewed awareness of Haydn's true stature. The performance by the New Friends' Orchestra under Fritz Stiedry is zestful and scrupulous. This is an album that should be in every library.

Also on the honor list is Walter Gieseking's Columbia recording of the Beethoven Waldstein sonata. This music needs every bit of Gieseking's dynamic technique (which comes out beautifully here), and a somewhat deeper poetry than he sees in certain of its pages. By and large, however, he gives an impressive account of one of the most powerful and elusive of the Beethoven sonatas.

Two smaller orchestral albums: Felix Weingartner and the London Philharmonic give a splendidly vigorous and authoritative reading of one of Brahms' happiest inspirations, the Variations on a Theme by Haydn. The tempi will be a joy to those who like Brahms' strength more than his softness (Columbia). The artistic intention of El Salon Mexico, brilliantly recorded for Victor by Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony, is best described in the words of its composer, Aaron Copland: "Other tourists will pull out their snapshots to show you what a country looks like, but a composer wants you to know what a country sounds like." A spare side is devoted to the Song of the Volga Boatmen in a pseudo-Mussorgsky arrangement by that man of the people, Igor Stravinsky.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

APR 16 1939

Overtones

Trio of Authors Seek to Enlighten Layman With Aaron Copland Succeeding in Writing One of the Best Works in the Field

By MILES KASTENDIECK

All kinds of books on the appreciation of music have rolled off the presses in the last decade. Some of them have been good; most of them have been unsatisfactory; others have been worthless. The purpose of the majority of them has been to "enlighten" the layman on music in general and musical form in particular. More recently the concern has been the relationship between music and the listener. Into this field have stepped three Brooklynites whose writings have only recently been published. Their efforts to instruct their neighbors deserve special comment in this paper.

Most important in this trio is Aaron Copland, the composer, a native son of Brooklyn whose "El Salon Mexico" was heard in the first Boston Symphony concert at the Academy of Music last November. As a creator of music, he tells the listener how music is made and how it can be understood in "What to Listen For in Music," published by Whittlesey House. Harry Allen Feldman, a teacher of orchestral music in the New Utrecht High School, attempts to answer many of the questions which probably come to the mind of the uninitiated radio and concert listener in "Music and the Listener," published by Dutton. Finally, B. H. Haggin, formerly music critic of the Eagle, now record reviewer for The Nation, who has conducted the "Recorded Concerts" at Brooklyn Institute this year, has written a guide to recorded music in "Music on Records," published by Oxford. Each book serves the same purpose, each in its special way.

●

Mr. Copland's work is the best answer to the everlasting question, "What book would you recommend to some one who knows nothing about music and wants to find out what it is all about?" that I have read. This is not a discourse on appreciation; this is a statement of the essential facts. In straightforward writing that is disarmingly clear, the author points out what the listener should hear. His final chapter, devoted to "From Composer to Interpreter to Listener," states the case that confronts any one who listens to music: "Music can only be really alive when there are listeners who are really alive. To listen intently, to listen consciously, to listen with one's whole intelligence is the least we can do in the furtherance of an art that is one of the glories of mankind." Such is the listener's responsibility.

After discussing the creative process and the elements of rhythm, melody, harmony and tone color, Mr. Copland explains how these are combined into musical forms. The ability to play the piano or read musical notation is somewhat necessary for complete comprehension, but the untutored layman really interested will learn a great deal under any circumstances. Two chapters of particular interest are: "How We Listen" and "Opera and Music Drama."

What makes this book invaluable, however, is its up-to-date treatment. The changes that the first quarter century has brought in the art of music are expertly woven into the discussion of both the elements of music and musical form. It is possible to see how "modern" music is a continuation of the past or a break with it and understand how contemporary music is not only a natural but a logical development. No other book do I recall offhand that links old and new together so lucidly. Here at last is the book which will best inform the listener who wants to know the complete story about music from the listener's point of view.

Quite different is Mr. Feldman's book which falls into the type of popularizations all too glib and none too accurate. His intentions were good and there are some informative and refreshing comments on various composers. Like many radio commentators, the author presents an interesting digest of extensive reading and appreciation. But he leaves the impression that much of the material was not digested, only swallowed. He likes the flowery phrase and the flow of language. Unfortunately they run away with him. The book is poorly organized and the author takes considerable space telling the reader how he is leading him on. The generalizations are superficial in most cases: comments on Haydn are inaccurate in the light of Tovey's writings; one hardly looks on Mozart as a "Titan"; one would like to know what is meant by "the comparative weakness of the first two symphonies" of Beethoven; and so on through most of the chapters, including those on swing and the American symphony. In short, this book falls into many of the pitfalls of the average book on listening.

●

If you are prepared to accept Mr. Haggin's personal judgment on records and music or both, then his "Music on Records" has definite value for its survey of the material available. In spite of the author's wish not to be arbitrary, the reader becomes aware that his dogmatic treatment leads him to arbitrary decisions. Mr. Haggin has definite opinions and he states them strongly; his judgments of records are presumably of a similar order. He has prejudices, Stokowski among them. He finds the finale of Beethoven's violin concerto "one of the silliest pieces of music ever written," leaves Bach's Fifth Brandenburg Concerto off the list of recommendations, says of Liszt's piano works that "most of them are trash," places Tchaikowsky's Sixth Symphony ahead of Brahms' First, finds Debussy's "Pelleas and Melisande" tedious, says "you may also afford to neglect the slick trash of Ravel" and that Sibelius is overrated. In and out of these observations are others that are excellent. If the reader knows how to tread warily, he may profit by reading this book.

Mr. Haggin's approach to collecting records has its point. He believes that the less frequently-heard works are perhaps the ones to acquire first. Thus, look first into the less familiar Schubert, Brahms' songs, etc. Here again personal judgment enters freely into the picture, but in covering the range of recorded music, the author does the knowing reader a service. This variation on music for the listener demands some knowledge of the material on his part.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N. Y.

APR 15 1939

Musical Chat

THE Boston Symphony recently played in New Haven, and one of the pieces Mr. Koussevitzky conducted was Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf." One of our spies was in a nearby bar after the concert and heard two New Haven couples discussing it. "What I like about Prokofieff is the way he does things with his tongue in his cheek," one lady said. "Really?" said the other lady. "We couldn't see a thing from our seats."

THIS CLIPPING FROM DECATUR, ILL.
REVIEW

APR 22 1939

Boston Orchestra And Lotte Lehman Make New Records

By W. ST. CLARE MINTURN
Director, Millikin Conservatory of Music

El Salon Mexico (Aaron Copland) and Song of the Volga Boatmen (arr. by Strawinsky) Boston Symphony Orchestra under direction of Serge Koussevitsky. M-546.

Aaron Copland (born 1900) is considered by many to be one of the most gifted of the twentieth Century Americans. He has a thorough understanding of dissonance, a ready technique, a fine sense of structural values, and he knows how to represent the Jazz period in dazzling fashion.

The "Salon Mexico" is a famous bar and dance hall in Mexico City, where both Mexicans and tourists congregate nightly for the wildest of music and dancing. Mr. Copland, a tourist himself says he was "taken by the typically Mexican flavor of the place. Where else in the world could you find a sign on a dance hall wall which says: 'Please don't throw lighted butts on the floor so the ladies don't burn their feet!' " He chose some of the most attractive Mexican folk tunes he could find and "strung them together like beads on a string", but the music reaches beyond the ballroom to give a bit of the charm and color of the whole country. This is certainly modern music; the instrumentation is loud and a little jazzy; the rhythm hard, but interesting. It is tropical and exciting symphonic jazz, and it has been given a stunning recording by the Boston Symphony Orchestra directed by Serge Kousevitzky.

Visions (Tonerne) (Sjoberg — Balogh) and d'Une Prison (Verlaine — Reynolds Hahn) — Lotte Lehman, Soprano, Erno Balogh, Accompanist. 1972.

Lotte Lehman is one of the great singers of all time and these recordings are exceptionally good.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MILWAUKEE, WIS.
Sunday News and Sentinel

APR 16 1939

New Recorded Music

APRIL RELEASES

Music for Four Stringed Instruments (Charles Martin Loeffler). Coolidge Quartet. Loeffler, another neglected composer and an American, here gets his phonographic due in a rich and luscious recording of the quartet dedicated to the memory of an American aviator who fell in the World war. It is Easter music, for the inspiration of the second movement comes from the "Resurrexi" in the Easter service of the Catholic church. The music does not touch the heart immediately. Its eloquence is that of a man whose mind is far away. There are beautifully colored phrases which drift down to mortal ears. It is all a dream, vaguely lovely, but unreal—a sweet negation of things as they are. But do not mistake its sweetness for syrup. There is a stoic strain in it. (Three 12 inch discs in Victor set M-543.)

Symphony no. 31 in D major ("Paris") (Mozart). London Philharmonic orchestra, Sir Thomas Beecham, conductor. The "Paris" symphony, written when Mozart was 22, is not quite comparable to the last three, but one should not be fooled by the simple directness of its speech and the clarity of its style. The brilliance of the finale is apparent from the start, but it takes a few playings to plumb the depths of the first movement and even to grasp the artful simplicity of the andantino's little song. Beecham, the perfect Mozartian, gives the symphony an inspired performance. There is a godlike serenity in the music—a divine detachment and yet a very human and heartlifting friendliness. For the filler side, Beecham takes the beautiful Minuet and the lively Hornpipe from "The Gods Go a-Begging," his own ballet arrangement of Handelian tunes. (Three 12 inch discs in Columbia set no. 360.)

Partita no. 7 in B minor (Ouverture a la maniere francaise) (Bach). Dr. Ernest Victor Wolff, playing his Maendler-Schramm harpsichord. The crisp, dry tone of the harpsichord revives the courtly atmosphere of another century. The partita is full of brisk music, and Dr. Wolff plays it in a genial but scholarly fashion. Pert as some of the tunes are, the harpsichord gives them a mildly dessiccated dignity. The fugue flashes and sparkles, the bourrees, the gigue and the echo move with the stiff-jointed agility of tireless marionettes. The odd side is devoted to a fine performance of the Fugue in A minor. (Four 12 inch discs in Columbia set no. 357.)

"Hora Staccato" (Dinicu-Heifetz-orchestrated by Adolf Schmid) and "None But the Lonely Heart" (Tschaikowsky—orchestrated by Lucien Gailliet). Boston "Pops" orchestra, Arthur Fiedler, conductor. This favorite concert piece, arranged by Heifetz for the violin, is magnificently boisterous in this orchestral version. The Boston "Pops" men play it as if they were having the time of their lives. Tschaikowsky's melancholy song, in this setting, is almost as highly charged with emotion as the "Liebestod." (Victor 4413.)

1. "Fireflies (Russian folk song), 2. "Echo Song" (Orlando de Lassus—English version by Nathan Haskell Dole), and "Oh! Susanna" (Stephen Foster—arranged by Noble Cain). Augustana choir, unaccompanied, Henry Veld, conductor. Partisans of a cappella singing should be enchanted by the performance of these highly varied arrangements. (Victor 1971).

"Il Bacio"—Vals (The Kiss) (Arditi) and Parla-Vals (Arditi). Miliza Korjus, soprano, with Berlin State Opera orchestra. Miss Korjus' wide ranging voice is better served by the "Parla" piece than any of her releases so far heard. In "Il Bacio," as in "Tales from Vienna Woods," she has a twangy tone in the lower register. (Victor 12588.)

Arioso from "Israel in Egypt" (Handel) and "Litanei" (Schubert—arranged by J. Pasternack). Hulda Lashanska, soprano; Mischa Elman, violin; Emmanuel Feuermann, cello; Rudolf Serkin, piano. The arias are beautiful, the performance distinguished, and the royalties go to the relief of refugees of all sects. (Victor 15365.)

Also Sprach Zarathustra (Richard Strauss). Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor. Strauss here plays the superman, if not some one even higher in the hierarchy, with more than his usual skill and eloquence. It is just about as near to delirious excitement as you can get in the concert hall. As time goes on, its arrogance mellows and its real Rosenkavalierish charm and enchantment are more and more apparent. It is not a recent release, but the recording is still of the best, the Bostonians' version is incomparable, and notice of it is timely in view of its presence on the Chicago Symphony orchestra program Monday night. (Five 12 inch discs, nine sides, in Victor set M-257.)

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
DESERET NEWS

APR 22 1939

Superiority Of Boys' Choir Given Proof In 'Stabat Mater'

CHORAL music of a kind almost unknown to us in this vigorous, western world comes by way of RCA-Victor's Musical Masterpiece Series (M-545) containing Pergolesi's "Stabat Mater" sung by the Vienna Choir boys under the direction of Victor Gomboz.

Those, who would become acquainted with the most ethereal church music ever achieved by man, must secure this group of records of once. Viewed either as a work of art or as a form of inspiration, this volume of three records is a gem.

Persons, unacquainted with the virtuosity attained by the best boy choirs, will be amazed at the musicianship, the perfection of the ensemble, the balance of the parts, the purity of the voices. No wonder that the Catholic Church forbade the use of women in choirs, for the sexless quality of such singing explains its ethereality.

In boy choirs, one hears no singing for the sake of display, or for the exploitation of personality. Here, alone, is a devotion to the highest ideals of music, a desire that the prayers of man may thread the paths of infinity and at last reach the ears of the Almighty.

* * *

FROM the singing of the first chorus, "Stabat Mater dolorosa" the singers, whose ages cannot average more than eleven years—for men's voices are not used—forge an unbreakable chain of fascination. The listener marvels at the long sustained tones of the soprano soloist in "Quis est homo, qui non fleret" against which the alto chants the dolorous burden of his part. The airy runs of the "Inflammatus et Accensus" and the exultant power generated in the closing "Amen" chorus are other facets of a work lofty in plan and execution.

Dr. Gomboz conducts the string orchestra with harpsichord and the choir in a manner that develops all the subtle beauties of the Pergolesi score, a favorite since its composition in 1736 when the composer completed it on his deathbed. The soloists—Hans Schneider, Hans Frank and Erich Kuchar—should be heard to appreciate what boy soloists can do with religious music. Where is the patron of music in Utah, who will endow a boys' choir so that we, too, can enjoy this highest form of religious expression?

* * *

THE adventurous would search far and long for a greater contrast than that offered by another recent RCA-Victor album, offering Aaron Copland's "El Salon Mexico" played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. From the absolute music of the early 18th century one jumps to that inspired by the "Roseland Ballroom," one of Mexico's hot spots.

Strange instrumentation, exotic tonalities, jarring dissonances pour forth. Much of it is music which will cause the family cat to raise its fur and assume a defensive attitude, prancing about the house looking for hidden foes. A slow movement compensates for the acerbities punctuating and coloring a brilliant arrangement of Mexican folk tunes. Modernity plus is this music, but yet a provocative and exciting experience.

The Hindemith "Sonata for Viola and Piano," played by William Primrose and Jesus Maria Sanroma, has a persuasive eloquence and novelty, which should make it easy for anyone to listen to.

Igor Gorin, Russian baritone recently heard at the Tabernacle, contributes a performance of Gretchaninoff's "On the Steppes" reaching the ultimate in song interpretation.—G. M.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

APR 16 1939

Overtones

Trio of Authors Seek to Enlighten Layman With Aaron Copland Succeeding in Writing One of the Best Works in the Field

By MILES KASTENDIECK

All kinds of books on the appreciation of music have rolled off the presses in the last decade. Some of them have been good; most of them have been unsatisfactory; others have been worthless. The purpose of the majority of them has been to "enlighten" the layman on music in general and musical form in particular. More recently the concern has been the relationship between music and the listener. Into this field have stepped three Brooklynites whose writings have only recently been published. Their efforts to instruct their neighbors deserve special comment in this paper.

Most important in this trio is Aaron Copland, the composer, a native son of Brooklyn whose "El Salon Mexico" was heard in the first Boston Symphony concert at the Academy of Music last November. As a creator of music, he tells the listener how music is made and how it can be understood in "What to Listen For in Music," published by Whittlesey House. Harry Allen Feldman, a teacher of orchestral music in the New Utrecht High School, attempts to answer many of the questions which probably come to the mind of the uninitiated radio and concert listener in "Music and the Listener," published by Dutton. Finally, B. H. Haggin, formerly music critic of the Eagle, now record reviewer for The Nation, who has conducted the "Recorded Concerts" at Brooklyn Institute this year, has written a guide to recorded music in "Music on Records," published by Oxford. Each book serves the same purpose, each in its special way.

●

Mr. Copland's work is the best answer to the everlasting question, "What book would you recommend to some one who knows nothing about music and wants to find out what it is all about?" that I have read. This is not a discourse on appreciation; this is a statement of the essential facts. In straightforward writing that is disarmingly clear, the author points out what the listener should hear. His final chapter, devoted to "From Composer to Interpreter to Listener," states the case that confronts any one who listens to music: "Music can only be really alive when there are listeners who are really alive. To listen intently, to listen consciously, to listen with one's whole intelligence is the least we can do in the furtherance of an art that is one of the glories of mankind." Such is the listener's responsibility.

After discussing the creative process and the elements of rhythm, melody, harmony and tone color, Mr. Copland explains how these are combined into musical forms. The ability to play the piano or read musical notation is somewhat necessary for complete comprehension, but the untutored layman really interested will learn a great deal under any circumstances. Two chapters of particular interest are: "How We Listen" and "Opera and Music Drama."

What makes this book invaluable, however, is its up-to-date treatment. The changes that the first quarter century has brought in the art of music are expertly woven into the discussion of both the elements of music and musical form. It is possible to see how "modern" music is a continuation of the past or a break with it and understand how contemporary music is not only a natural but a logical development. No other book do I recall offhand that links old and new together so lucidly. Here at last is the book which will best inform the listener who wants to know the complete story about music from the listener's point of view.

Quite different is Mr. Feldman's book which falls into the type of popularizations all too glib and none too accurate. His intentions were good and there are some informative and refreshing comments on various composers. Like many radio commentators, the author presents an interesting digest of extensive reading and appreciation. But he leaves the impression that much of the material was not digested, only swallowed. He likes the flowery phrase and the flow of language. Unfortunately they run away with him. The book is poorly organized and the author takes considerable space telling the reader how he is leading him on. The generalizations are superficial in most cases: comments on Haydn are inaccurate in the light of Tovey's writings; one hardly looks on Mozart as a "Titan"; one would like to know what is meant by "the comparative weakness of the first two symphonies" of Beethoven; and so on through most of the chapters, including those on swing and the American symphony. In short, this book falls into many of the pitfalls of the average book on listening.

●

If you are prepared to accept Mr. Haggin's personal judgment on records and music or both, then his "Music on Records" has definite value for its survey of the material available. In spite of the author's wish not to be arbitrary, the reader becomes aware that his dogmatic treatment leads him to arbitrary decisions. Mr. Haggin has definite opinions and he states them strongly; his judgments of records are presumably of a similar order. He has prejudices, Stokowski among them. He finds the finale of Beethoven's violin concerto "one of the silliest pieces of music ever written," leaves Bach's Fifth Brandenburg Concerto off the list of recommendations, says of Liszt's piano works that "most of them are trash," places Tchaikowsky's Sixth Symphony ahead of Brahms' First, finds Debussy's "Pelleas and Melisande" tedious, says "you may also afford to neglect the slick trash of Ravel" and that Sibelius is overrated. In and out of these observations are others that are excellent. If the reader knows how to tread warily, he may profit by reading this book.

Mr. Haggin's approach to collecting records has its point. He believes that the less frequently-heard works are perhaps the ones to acquire first. Thus, look first into the less familiar Schubert, Brahms' songs, etc. Here again personal judgment enters freely into the picture, but in covering the range of recorded music, the author does the knowing reader a service. This variation on music for the listener demands some knowledge of the material on his part.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N. Y.

APR 15 1939

Musical Chat

THE Boston Symphony recently played in New Haven, and one of the pieces Mr. Koussevitzky conducted was Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf." One of our spies was in a nearby bar after the concert and heard two New Haven couples discussing it. "What I like about Prokofieff is the way he does things with his tongue in his cheek," one lady said. "Really?" said the other lady. "We couldn't see a thing from our seats."

THIS CLIPPING FROM DECATUR, ILL.
REVIEW

APR 22 1939

Boston Orchestra And Lotte Lehman Make New Records

By W. ST. CLARE MINTURN
Director, Millikin Conservatory of Music

El Salon Mexico (Aaron Copland) and Song of the Volga Boatmen (arr. by Strawinsky) Boston Symphony Orchestra under direction of Serge Koussevitsky. M-546.

Aaron Copland (born 1900) is considered by many to be one of the most gifted of the twentieth Century Americans. He has a thorough understanding of dissonance, a ready technique, a fine sense of structural values, and he knows how to represent the Jazz period in dazzling fashion.

The "Salon Mexico" is a famous bar and dance hall in Mexico City, where both Mexicans and tourists congregate nightly for the wildest of music and dancing. Mr. Copland, a tourist himself says he was "taken by the typically Mexican flavor of the place. Where else in the world could you find a sign on a dance hall wall which says: 'Please don't throw lighted butts on the floor so the ladies don't burn their feet!'" He chose some of the most attractive Mexican folk tunes he could find and "strung them together like beads on a string", but the music reaches beyond the ballroom to give a bit of the charm and color of the whole country. This is certainly modern music; the instrumentation is loud and a little jazzy; the rhythm hard, but interesting. It is tropical and exciting symphonic jazz, and it has been given a stunning recording by the Boston Symphony Orchestra directed by Serge Koussevitzky.

Visions (Tonerne) (Sjoberg — Balogh) and d'Une Prison (Verlaine — Reynolds Hahn) — Lotte Lehman, Soprano, Erno Balogh, Accompanist. 1972.

Lotte Lehman is one of the great singers of all time and these recordings are exceptionally good.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MILWAUKEE, WIS.
Sunday News and Sentinel

APR 16 1939

New Recorded Music

APRIL RELEASES

Music for Four Stringed Instruments (Charles Martin Loeffler). Coolidge Quartet. Loeffler, another neglected composer and an American, here gets his phonographic due in a rich and luscious recording of the quartet dedicated to the memory of an American aviator who fell in the World war. It is Easter music, for the inspiration of the second movement comes from the "Resurrexi" in the Easter service of the Catholic church. The music does not touch the heart immediately. Its eloquence is that of a man whose mind is far away. There are beautifully colored phrases which drift down to mortal ears. It is all a dream, vaguely lovely, but unreal—a sweet negation of things as they are. But do not mistake its sweetness for syrup. There is a stoic strain in it. (Three 12 inch discs in Victor set M-543.)

Symphony no. 31 in D major ("Paris") (Mozart). London Philharmonic orchestra, Sir Thomas Beecham, conductor. The "Paris" symphony, written when Mozart was 22, is not quite comparable to the last three, but one should not be fooled by the simple directness of its speech and the clarity of its style. The brilliance of the finale is apparent from the start, but it takes a few playings to plumb the depths of the first movement and even to grasp the artful simplicity of the andantino's little song. Beecham, the perfect Mozartian, gives the symphony an inspired performance. There is a godlike serenity in the music—a divine detachment and yet a very human and heartlifting friendliness. For the filler side, Beecham takes the beautiful Minuet and the lively Hornpipe from "The Gods Go a-Begging," his own ballet arrangement of Handelian tunes. (Three 12 inch discs in Columbia set no. 360.)

Partita no. 7, in B minor (Ouverture a la manière francaise) (Bach). Dr. Ernest Victor Wolff, playing his Maendler-Schramm harpsichord. The crisp, dry tone of the harpsichord revives the courtly atmosphere of another century. The partita is full of brisk music, and Dr. Wolff plays it in a genial but scholarly fashion. Pert as some of the tunes are, the harpsichord gives them a mildly desiccated dignity. The fugue flashes and sparkles, the bourrees, the gigue and the echo move with the stiff-jointed agility of tireless marionettes. The odd side is devoted to a fine performance of the Fugue in A minor. (Four 12 inch discs in Columbia set no. 357.)

"Hora Staccato" (Dinicu-Heifetz—orchestrated by Adolf Schmid) and "None But the Lonely Heart" (Tschaikowsky—orchestrated by Lucien Cailliet). Boston "Pops" orchestra, Arthur Fiedler, conductor. This favorite concert piece, arranged by Heifetz for the violin, is magnificently boisterous in this orchestral version. The Boston "Pops" men play it as if they were having the time of their lives. Tschaikowsky's melancholy song, in this setting, is almost as highly charged with emotion as the "Liebestod." (Victor 4412.)

1. "Fireflies (Russian folk song), 2. "Echo Song" (Orlando de Lassus—English version by Nathan Haskell Dole), and "Oh! Susanna" (Stephen Foster—arranged by Noble Cain). Augustana choir, unaccompanied, Henry Veld, conductor. Partisans of a cappella singing should be enchanted by the performance of these highly varied arrangements. (Victor 1971).

"Il Bacio"—Vals (The Kiss) (Arditi) and Parla-Vals (Arditi). Miliza Korjus, soprano, with Berlin State Opera orchestra. Miss Korjus' wide ranging voice is better served by the "Parla" piece than any of her releases so far heard. In "Il Bacio," as in "Tales from Vienna Woods," she has a twangy tone in the lower register. (Victor 12388.)

Arioso from "Israel in Egypt" (Handel) and "Litanei" (Schubert—arranged by J. Pasternack). Hulda Lashanska, soprano; Mischa Elman, violin; Emanuel Feuermann, cello; Rudolf Serkin, piano. The arias are beautiful, the performance distinguished, and the royalties go to the relief of refugees of all sects. (Victor 15365.)

Also Sprach Zarathustra (Richard Strauss). Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor. Strauss here plays the superman, if not some one even higher in the hierarchy, with more than his usual skill and eloquence. It is just about as near to delirious excitement as you can get in the concert hall. As time goes on, its arrogance mellows and its real [illegible] charm and enchantment are more and more apparent. It is not a recent release, but the recording is still of the best. The Bostonians' version is incomparable, and notice of it is timely in view of its presence on the Chicago Symphony orchestra program Monday night. (Five 12 inch discs, nine sides, in Victor set M-257.)

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
DESERET NEWS

APR 22 1939

Superiority Of Boys' Choir Given Proof In 'Stabat Mater'

CHORAL music of a kind almost unknown to us in this vigorous, western world comes by way of RCA-Victor's Musical Masterpiece Series (M-545) containing Pergolesi's "Stabat Mater" sung by the Vienna Choir boys under the direction of Victor Gomboz.

Those, who would become acquainted with the most ethereal church music ever achieved by man, must secure this group of records of once. Viewed either as a work of art or as a form of inspiration, this volume of three records is a gem.

Persons, unacquainted with the virtuosity attained by the best boy choirs, will be amazed at the musicianship, the perfection of the ensemble, the balance of the parts, the purity of the voices. No wonder that the Catholic Church forbade the use of women in choirs, for the sexless quality of such singing explains its ethereality.

In boy choirs, one hears no singing for the sake of display, or for the exploitation of personality. Here, alone, is a devotion to the highest ideals of music, a desire that the prayers of man may thread the paths of infinity and at last reach the ears of the Almighty.

* * *

FROM the singing of the first chorus, "Stabat Mater dolorosa" the singers, whose ages cannot average more than eleven years—for men's voices are not used—forge an unbreakable chain of fascination. The listener marvels at the long sustained tones of the soprano soloist in "Quis est homo, qui non fleret" against which the alto chants the dolorous burden of his part. The airy runs of the "Inflammatus et Accensus" and the exultant power generated in the closing "Amen" chorus are other facets of a work lofty in plan and execution.

Dr. Gomboz conducts the string orchestra with harpsichord and the choir in a manner that develops all the subtle beauties of the Pergolesi score, a favorite since its composition in 1736 when the composer completed it on his deathbed. The soloists—Hans Schneider, Hans Frank and Erich Kuchar—should be heard to appreciate what boy soloists can do with religious music. Where is the patron of music in Utah, who will endow a boys' choir so that we, too, can enjoy this highest form of religious expression?

* * *

THE adventurous would search far and long for a greater contrast than that offered by another recent RCA-Victor album, offering Aaron Copland's "El Salon Mexico" played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. From the absolute music of the early 18th century one jumps to that inspired by the "Roseland Ballroom," one of Mexico's hot spots.

Strange instrumentation, exotic tonalities, jarring dissonances pour forth. Much of it is music which will cause the family cat to raise its fur and assume a defensive attitude, prancing about the house looking for hidden foes. A slow movement compensates for the acerbities punctuating and coloring a brilliant arrangement of Mexican folk tunes. Modernity plus is this music, but yet a provocative and exciting experience.

The Hindemith "Sonata for Viola and Piano," played by William Primrose and Jesus Maria Sanroma, has a persuasive eloquence and novelty, which should make it easy for anyone to listen to.

Igor Gorin, Russian baritone recently heard at the Tabernacle, contributes a performance of Gretchaninoff's "On the Steppes" reaching the ultimate in song interpretation.—G. M.

65

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

APR 22 1939

The New Records

Mass by Poulenc—Scores by Copland and Hindemith—The Lighter Side.

By IRVING KOLODIN.

It would be difficult to think of a more startling juxtaposition than the one which Columbia offers in a current album—the Gallic esprit of Francis Poulenc and the severe outlines of the formal mass. Yet this initial surprise is as nothing beside the quality of the work itself, which is certainly the finest music by Poulenc I have ever heard.

A considerable element is the sense of discipline in the music. One is almost tempted to say that it is the first time that Poulenc has taken his talent seriously, set aside thoughts of superficially exciting his listeners, and really devoted himself to a straightforward musical expression. Whether one has a partiality to writing of this type or not, the sturdy plan of the music and its finely wrought contours cannot fail to delight the ear.

Note particularly the fresh approach to the Kyrie Eleison, the brightness and vitality of the Sanctus, the flowing line of the Benedictus, and the tender emotion of the Agnus Diei. Moreover, there is a definite sense of inevitability in the writing, which makes any characterization of the harmonic idiom or the contrapuntal elaboration superfluous. This is the way it should; and one is satisfied to accept it without isolation of this element or that. The work is splendidly performed by "Les Chanteurs de Lyon" and save for a bit of reverberation (the recording was made in the Cathedral of Saint-Jean in Lyon) the reproduction is very satisfying.

Copeland and Hindemith.

Contemporary music of quality is also to be found this month in the Victor list, which presents Aaron Copland's "El Salon Mexico," one of his most recent works, and the early opus 11 viola sonata of Hindemith. How much of the effect of Copland's score is due to the superb playing of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the vital conducting of Serge Koussevitzky and the startling fidelity of the recording is difficult to analyze; but the total is one of the most convincing examples of American composition on records. Actually, the impression of these bright tunes and their skillful handling is much the same as one recalls it to have been in the concert hall, which suggests that Copland is entitled to at least some of the credit. To repeat, the recording is dazzling.

As for the Hindemith, it is another case in which an inspired performance may confuse one's estimate of the work's musical values. The players are William Primrose and Jesus Maria Sanroma, both of them experts in the performance of such music. In contrast to the Hindemith quartet recently released by Victor, the material of this score is conservative, almost romantic, in character, with a good deal of melodic distinction. Much of it is written in the upper register of the viola, which permits Primrose's fine tone full prominence. It is well recorded.

Singles.

"Piece Heroique" (Franck). A powerful recording by Edouard Commette does not improve the musical attractiveness of this feeble work (Columbia No. 69460).

"Caprice Basque" and "Negro Spiritual Melody" (Dvorak). A familiar exhibition piece and a transcription from Dvorak's "New World Symphony" are only moderately interesting as played by Yehudi Menuhin. His tone is none too robust and the kind of brilliance required by such flimsy material is lacking (Victor No. 15369).

The Lighter Side.

Connoisseurs of sentimental ballads will find a lavish supply in the forthcoming Bing Crosby film, "East Side of Heaven," which contains such heart-stopping tid-bits as "Sing a Song of Sunbeams," "That Sly Old Gentleman From Featherbed Lane," "Hang Your Heart on a Hickory Limb" and of course "East Side of Heaven." They are all available on Decca Nos. 2359 and 2360, delivered in appropriately mellow style by Crosby himself, with the aid of John Scott Trotter's orchestra. "Hang Your Heart" and "That Sly Old Gentleman" are not unpromising tunes, but Crosby is more concerned here with their treacle content than with their musical possibilities. A word to the wise. . . .

Recommended: "Pastel Blue" and "Rehearsin' for a Nervous Breakdown," two compositions by Charles Shavers which again shows the John Kirby band to be one of the most consistent producers of good records among small bands (Decca No. 2367). The first has an excellent vocal by O'Neill Spencer, the second some remarkable bass playing by Kirby, plus a full complement of other solos. From its files Victor has extracted a disk of uncommon interest for jazz enthusiasts; trio performances by Jelly-Roll Morton (piano), Barney Bigard (clarinet) and Zutti Singleton (drums), which are as remarkable for style as they are for excellent recording. The titles (on Bluebird 10,194) are "Turtle Twist" and "Smilin' the Blues Away."

What They're Selling.

Center—
"Our Love" V
"Sunrise Serenade" ....D
Gimbel—
"Heaven Can Wait" V
"Deep Purple" ....D
Rabson—
"And the Angels Sing" V
"Deep Purple" ....D
Symphony—
"Deep Purple" V
"And the Angels Sing" V

Queries on records, needles, machines, &c., are invited.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

22 1939

Mozart "Paris" Symphony Given a Fine Recording

Five 12-Inch Sides Are Required For London Philharmonic Disc

By ROBERT C. BAGAR.

Columbia's current catalogue offers, among various interesting items, the Mozart "Paris" symphony (K. 297) as performed by the London Philharmonic Orchestra conducted by Sir Thomas Beecham. Five twelve-inch sides are required for the performance, the remaining one being concerned with the Minuet and the Hornpipe from the Handel-Beecham "The Gods Go A-begging."

One always knows what to expect when Sir Thomas Beecham is coupled with Mozart. Unfailingly he delivers that master's compositions with all the authenticity, the style, the strong feeling for the buoyant lines. It is so in this case, needless to add.

Two factors make this work an important one historically:—It was Mozart's initial experience with a large orchestra and he wrote parts for clarinets for the first time in a symphony of his. What he achieved, his adaptability and kindred matters are all incorporated in a creation that glitters and effervesces from start to finish. The odd side offering is no less appealing.

Walter Gieseking, who stirred a Carnegie Hall audience to an extraordinary pitch of enthusiasm with his performance of a Rachmaninoff concerto some weeks ago, appears in the Columbia lists in a reading of the Beethoven "Waldstein" sonata. It is an extremely fine accomplishment and nothing further need be said.

Plays Schumann's Ballet.

The London Philharmonic, conducted by Walter Goehr, plays the Roy Douglas arrangement of the Schumann "Carnaval"—specifically the ballet arrangement. This is a single disc, twelve-inch, and it merits consideration from the gramophiles. (Columbia).

Aaron Copland's remarkably engaging work, "El Salon Mexico," is now available via Victor in a publication by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky at the helm.

The inspiration for this composition is a tourist hot spot in Mexico known by that name. Mr. Copland's music is derived from authentic native sources and he has welded it into a beautifully integrated, harmonically, rhythmically and melodically colorful opus. The Boston organization contributes one of its superior performances.

Vienna Choir Boys.

The Vienna Choir Boys, Viktor Gomboz, director, have recorded also for Victor the Pergolesi "Stabat Mater," a work of ineffable and devoted tenderness. This group of youngsters, which includes three highly gifted soloists, namely, Hans Schneider, Hans Frank and Erich Kuchar, render unto Pergolesi and the author of the text (the thirteenth century Franciscan friar Jacobus de Benedictus) great homage by their magnificent singing.

Several emendations have been made, one of them a minor change in the order of the stanzas, and three solos and two stanzas have been omitted. Nothing is seriously injured in this version, however, and the listener will derive much pleasure from the composition, as well as from its execution.

The Schumann "Carnaval" suite bobs up again in the story, this time in its original form—for piano—played with distinction by none other than the admired English artist, Myra Hess. (Victor).

In Lighter Vein.

The throbby vocalizing of Frances Langford is heard to good advantage via Decca in two airs from "Stars in Your Eyes." They are "This Is It" and "It's All Yours." She is accompanied by the Harry Sosnick orchestra. For the same company Tony Martin delivers his versions of Cole Porter's "Begin the Beguine" and from "Knickerbocker Holiday" the "September Song." Ray Sinatra conducts the assisting orchestra.

Then for a heave-ho at swing there is the Bob Crosby and crew recording of "Stomp Off and Let's Go," backed by the "Song of the Wanderer." These, too, are Decca items.

Charlie Barnet and his orchestra, who are rapidly pushing their way to the top among the swing aristocracy, have made a top-notch disc for Bluebird containing "In a Mizz" and "Night Song." And Artie Shaw and his orchestra are concerned with "Pastel Blue," a recommended effort, doubled up with Deep Purple," which is only slightly less enjoyable.

THIS CLIPPING FROM AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL

APR 23 1939

[illegible]

Copland Recording Combines Mexican Tunes, U. S. Jazz

REGARDLESS of what certain scornful music critics think of modern music, the Boston Symphony orchestra and its noted conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, are not afraid of it. Particularly when they set out to record such music as Aaron Copland's "El Salon Mexico." (Victor album M-546).

Copland's colorful, often raucous and dissonant music, is an interesting combination of Mexican themes, folk tunes, and American jazz. Melodic moments at times relieve the harsh measures of the composition, descriptive of the Roseland ballroam in Mexico City, one of the tourist center's "hot spots."

"Where else in the world," the 39-year-old composer wants to know, "could you find a sign on a dance hall wall which says: 'Please don't throw lighted cigaret butts on the floor so the ladies don't burn their feet.'" That gives you a rough idea of the music.

Hulda Lashanska, soprano, sings with deep feeling and exquisite tone, Handel's "Arioso," from "Israel in Egypt" and Pasternack's arrangement of Schubert's "Litany." Exceptionally fine accompaniments are provided by Violinist Mischa Elman, Cellist Emanuel Feuermann and Pianist Rudolf Serkin. (Victor 15365).

The Boston "Pops" orchestra, conducted by Arthur Fiedler, effectively records two contrasting numbers, Adolf Schmid's orchestration of the rhythmic "Hora Staccato," by Dinicu-Heifetz and Tschaikowsky's moving song, "None but the Lonely Heart," orchestrated by Lucien Cailliet. (Victor 4413).

5

THIS CLIPPING FROM LOS ANGELES, CAL.
TIMES

APR 23 1939

RECORDS OF THE WEEK

LOEFFLER, MUSIC FOR FOUR STRINGS. This recording of Charles Martin Loeffler's quartet is a little late. He died in 1935. But the music is very much of today. Since the early 1900's Loeffler lived in Boston but his life in his native Alsace, in Russia and other parts of Europe made him a composer of the world rather than primarily American. The Coolidge Quartet, composed of William Kroll, Nicolai Berezowsky, Nicolas Moldavan and Victor Gottlieb weld this heterogeneous modern work into a whole. Loeffler ranks with Debussy and Ravel and adds a certain forthrightness that is American. This recording will help America realize his power.

EL SALON MEXICO by Aaron Copland. Los Angeles' young intellectuals will reach for this two-disced album. It is immense. Copland has lived in Mexico long enough to hear it. He includes folk-music, of course, but makes a conglomerate mass of many songs and orchestrates them smartly. There are sudden dives of temperament, he stops short and brings his band up at bay just like a vaquero riding for the fun of it. How the staid Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky ever rehearsed this bandit music enough to play it in the crisp style it requires is a mystery. Paul Whiteman's gang will be green with envy. Stravinsky's own Volga Boatman has a way of cursing in a loud voice on the other side.

HINDEMITH'S SONATA for viola and piano. The composer's love for his own instrument is apparent in this sonata. It is a more tender and romantic work than the concerto he played here recently with Klemperer. The second movement sounds Chinese and intrigues the imagination. It has an exciting finish. William Primrose, star viola player of the London String Quartet and now of the N.B.C. Orchestra, plays the work marvelously with Jesus Maria Sanroma, the pianist. This is a collector's item and an album for lovers of rich, woody viola tone well.

66

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

APR 23 1939

RECENT PHONOGRAPH RECORDINGS

By COMPTON PAKENHAM

As fine a performance and recording as has ever been given an American composer is to be found in the Boston Symphony Orchestra album (Victor M-546) of Aaron Copland's "El Salon Mexico." During a Mexican trip in 1932, remembering the precedents of Debussy, Charpentier, Chabrier and others, Copland felt the urge to put his impressions into music. The obvious tourist sketches did not appeal to him, and to go deeper into the Mayan and Aztec civilizations or the philosophy of the peon was beyond his capacity at the time.

At El Salon Mexico he suddenly felt himself in the unique and indigenous atmosphere he was after. Patrons were frisked at the door for guns. The wall bore signs: "Please don't throw lighted cigarette butts on the floor so the ladies won't burn their feet." At 5 A. M. the festivities closed, but most of the overalled patrons simply collapsed onto the chairs around the wall for two hours' snooze before going to work. Completed in four years, the piece had its first performance in Mexico City and was accepted with enthusiasm.

Copland admits the work is not easy to perform and that it presents rhythmic problems of the most intricate kind to both orchestra and conductor. But, of course, such difficulties are inherent in the subject. Those who have found other difficulties in his music, who consider him a trifle acid or who suspected him of deliberately complicating his scores and making them biting and harsh will find him, and themselves, rather more relaxed here.

Where previously the impression was often that Copland was not entirely sure of what he was trying to do himself, here one would venture to bet that the composer knew quite well what he was after and is as satisfied as one can be in such matters with the result. Koussevitzky plays the music for all it is worth. When the Boston Orchestra is well recorded the results take a lot of beating. Details of the polished score are plainly set forth and admirably reproduced. The filler is a full-toned performance of Stravinsky's arrangement of "The Song of the Volga Boatmen" scored for wind and percussion.

* * *

The great "Variations on a Theme by Haydn" that serve somewhat in the nature of a forerunner to Brahms's symphonies are the subject of Felix Weingartner's latest release. The orchestra is the London Philharmonic. The immediate question prompted by the news of this recording quite naturally was: How will it compare with the Toscanini? An answer intended to guide any one in making a selection is not forthcoming. Each in its own manner, both are exemplary performances.

It is in the conductor's approach, therefore, that the preference lies, and that is entirely a matter for the individual conscience. Where Toscanini stressed the dramatic manner in which the variations build up to a crashing climax the veteran Dalmatian proceeds with unhurried suavity to make the most of the inner developments. Weingartner benefits by better middle and lower register recording, the latter happening to be the position of most importance in this case.

* * *

This month's Beecham album contains Mozart's Symphony No. 31 in D (K. 297), known as the "Paris" (Columbia M. W. 360). Once in a while such titles do mean something, and in this case the work was actually done to order for a Paris concert. Which fact accounts for one of its most interesting features, for, obviously au fait with Parisian tastes, Mozart demonstrated his showmanship by giving them exactly what they wanted—a showy bit of work, full of life but essentially of little depth. There is no need to comment on Sir Thomas, his orchestra or the recording they receive.

Part of Schumann's "Carnaval" suite—noted last week in its authentic form as played by Myra Hess—comes on a single from Columbia as an addition to the series of excerpts from ballets played by the London Philharmonic under Walter Goehr. A representative cross-section for those who are satisfied with the highlights from something of this sort, the disk is much like its predecessors, clearly set forth with a little too heavy and studied precision but well recorded.

The Boston "Pops" make the usual full-toned and richly recorded show with an orchestration of Dinicu's catchy "Hora Staccato" and a Lucien Caillet arrangement of Tchaikovsky's "None But the Lonely Heart." The worst that can be said of these is that both really do sound better in the forms originally chosen by their creators.

L' [illegible]

Musical Impressions

By GUY LANTNER

The Boston Symphony plays Richard Strauss's Also Sprach Zarathustra. This is understood to be a Feast A Rare Occasion for Music Lovers. This work now being a standard of two generations is unlikely to receive a keen criticism; yet in such procedure alone lies true appreciation. Undoubtedly Richard Strauss caught the spirit of Nietzsche; in much the same manner of Anatomical and Spiritual Transgressions of his Model, he produced a music characteristic of the technique of the harp intruding on the Bow and Blowing instruments. The sweep of imagination detaching him unwarily from the earth-bound humanity expressed by Nietzsche is repeated in the same way in the virtuoso passages instead of the homelier lays for violini, clarinets and brasses in the symphonic poem of Richard Strauss.

The impression of askance remains: for what purpose is it, and why all of it?

Those who read Nietsche's Also Sprach Zarathrustra tasted a medley of poetry and of prose, here crying for fortification by music and there repelling with its sinister reconditeness and dreary hair splitting. Those who tried to read and could not finish reading might have felt the shame of their own leahst square perversity, all too obtrusively, and could not go on in spite of the poetry; and others were bored to death with the futility of it all! Considering that every one has a painful page in his life story, the test is: Do you find some uplift finally in the spread of the morbidities?

You will at least in the Straus Zarathustra but at a terrific cost to the tortured instruments and in the end I fear at a terrific cost to music.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CAMDEN, N. J.
POST

APR 29 1939

Many Albums Listed By RCA For April

Spaulding Concerto, Vienna Choirboys Top Variety of Records

There ars many interesting items on Victor's April list of recorded music.

For instance there's the Spohr Concerto No. 8 in A Minor, played by Albert Spaulding, with the Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy conducting (M-544). Many will recall that this concerto is a favorite of Mr. Spaulding, renowned as an American violinist, and the album is one to excite every musician.

The Vienna Choir Boys, who visited this country under the direction of Viktor Gomboz, as a reminder that once there was a Vienna with unhampered loveliness, sings the Pergolesi "Stabat Mater" with the delightful accompaniment of a string orchestra and harpsicord (M-545). RCA experts were surely on their toes when they seized their opportunity to record this charming music.

The Coolidge Quartet, which played with the Philadelphia Orchestra last week, offers the Charles Martin Loeffler "Music for Four Stringed Instruments" (M-543) and this item seems to be chiefly for rabid fans of chamber music, not particularly partial to old masters.

The orchestra of the New Friends of Music, which many have been hearing with increasing pleasure via radio, are heard in the Haydn Symphony No. 80 and another Haydn, No. 67, on one album. The musicians play very well and the recording, as usual, is above reproach (M-536).

No, that isn't all, for this was a big release. Myra Hess supplies something for collectors of recorded pianoforte in the Carnaval Suite of Schumann (M-476). Moreover, the Boston Symphony, under Koussevitzky's direction, plays Aaron Copland's "El Salon Mexico" and the seldom-heard Stravinsky arrangement of "The Song of the Volga Boatmen," both worth hearing (M-546).

If you like Hindemith, and some do, you will try to hear, at least once, the Sonata for viola and piano, played by William Primrose, of string quartet fame, and Jesus Maria Sanroma, of Boston Pops fame (M-547). And while Sonatas are being discussed, there's another piano number, this time Alexander Brailowski playing the Chopin B. Minor.

These are the chief headlines. The smaller news includes the Boston Pops playing the "Hora Staccato" of Dinicu-Heifetz and a lovely orchestration by Lucien Cailliet of Tschaikowski's "None But The Lonely Heart." Igor Gorin sings the Moussorgsky "Hopak" and the Gretchaninoff "Over the Steppe" with an orchestra conducted by Wilfred Pelletier. Miliza Korjus sings "Il Bacio" and "Parla" but you may not like it as it comes from Germany.

The two Iturbis, Jose and Amparo, play the Caprice Arabe of Saint-Saens. Yehudi Menuhin adds his own originality to the Dvorak-Kreisler "Largo" from "The New World" Symphony and the Sarasate "Caprice Basque."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

APR [illegible]39

The New Records

Three Haydn Symphonies—Weingartner's Haydn-Brahms—The Lighter Side.

By IRVING KOLODIN.

Thanks to the enterprise of the New Friends of Music, the repertory of recorded Haydn symphonies now shows two scores which are not only first recordings, but in all probability have not previously been accessible in sound or print. They are the Nos. 67 and 80 introduced during the recent Carnegie Hall series. (Victor.)

Both works are first line Haydn, but I confess myself more partial to the sixty-seven (in F), perhaps because it is closer to the outlines defined by Haydn in his more familiar works. It has a lovely spontaneity, freshness and charm, particularly in the slow movement and finale, and has already assumed the warming manner or an old friend. Its companion in the album is more provocative, but also more cerebral; and though its ingenuity and resourcefulness are equally high, I do not find its musical content as satisfying. Both works are conducted with style and finesse by Fritz Stiedry. The orchestra plays well, but it is too large a group for the studio in which it is recorded. The tone has no breathing space, and the sound ceases abruptly after chord endings and solo passages.

Concurrently we have the well-worn "Surprise" symphony from Columbia, the second album to be recorded by Howard Barlow and the Columbia Broadcasting Symphony Orchestra. The conductor has the misfortune to have his treatment of this work necessarily weighed against those of such specialists as Koussevitzky and Beecham, not always with favorable results. It is a more even and reasonable version than Koussevitzy's one for Victor; but its values are not so sharply defined as one would like. Thus the famous second movement is sensibly and sympathetically conducted, but more could be done with it, dynamically. Most heartening is the clear, full recording of the orchestra, which indicates that Columbia has finally acquired the resources to originate sound orchestral recordings in this country.

Weingartner's Haydn-Brahms.

There are few conductors who sustain their own characteristic qualities as consistently as Felix Weingartner does — which means that the phonographic initiate will know exactly what to expect of his current version of the Haydn-Brahms variations with the London Philharmonic (Columbia). There will be the inevitable comparison with Victor's Toscanini—Philharmonic version; and sequential playing indicates that each has its distinctions. Weingartner makes less of the purely physical play of sound values, projecting more of the substantial, four-square heartiness of the composer's thought. Several of the fast variations would profit by more volatility, a greater variety of color; but there is much to enjoy in his treatment of the work as a whole. It is very well recorded.

Dances by Schumann.

The "Davidsbuendlertaenze" of Schumann are likely to be a fourth or fifth choice of the average recitalist seeking to show his ability as a Schumann interpreter, but Kurt Appelbaum's performance of them for Musicraft shows that they should be heard more often as variants for the "Carneval," "Fantasy" and "Symphonic Etudes." As for Appelbaum himself, the playing is an even more flattering reflection of his musical and pianistic qualities than that of the Schubert sonata recently reviewed here. The music never overburdens his technic, and the interpretation of such reflective sections as Dances 14, 16 and 17 is admirably refined and sensitive. The piano reproduction is acceptable, but well short of impressive.

What They're Selling.

Abraham & Straus—
  "Three Little Fishes" ......B
  "God Bless America" V
Aeolian—
  "Three Little Fishes" V
  "Little Sir Echo" ....B
Gramophone—
  "And the Angels Sing" V
  "Deep Purple" ....B
Liberty—
  "And the Angels Sing" V
  "Three Little Fishes" ......B

Queries on records, machines, needles, &c., are invited.

The Lighter Side.

There's a better than average tune entitled "And the Angels Sing" coming into prominence—but if you have Ziggy Elman's "Fralich in Swing" on Bluebird (recommended here two months ago), your wants will be satisfied. It's the same tune, outfitted with a new title and lyric by word-juggler Johnny Mercer. For those who prefer the revised version there is a choice list of recordings that include the orchestras of Harry James on Brunswick, Count Basie on Vocalion, Jan Savitt on Decca, Benny Goodman on Victor, and Glenn Miller duplicating on Bluebird. The last of these is the best arrangement, for those who think in such terms, but the James band makes the most of the tune and the lyric, though it lacks the trumpet flourishes that Elman contributed to the Goodman recording. The Savitt job is routine, the Basie mediocre.

Recommended: If your record shelf still has room for another version of "Taint Whatcha Do," by all means let it be Mildred Bailey's on Vocalion 4708. With some excellent support by a small band including Red Norvo, Miss Bailey again demonstrates that the final word is not said on a song until she has been heard from. Its companion, "Slumbertime on the Swanee," also finds Miss Bailey in fine form.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

APR 23 1939

RECENT PHONOGRAPH RECORDINGS

By COMPTON PAKENHAM

As fine a performance and recording as has ever been given an American composer is to be found in the Boston Symphony Orchestra album (Victor M-546) of Aaron Copland's "El Salon Mexico." During a Mexican trip in 1932, remembering the precedents of Debussy, Charpentier, Chabrier and others, Copland felt the urge to put his impressions into music. The obvious tourist sketches did not appeal to him, and to go deeper into the Mayan and Aztec civilizations or the philosophy of the peon was beyond his capacity at the time.

At El Salon Mexico he suddenly felt himself in the unique and indigenous atmosphere he was after. Patrons were frisked at the door for guns. The wall bore signs: "Please don't throw lighted cigarette butts on the floor so the ladies won't burn their feet." At 5 A. M. the festivities closed, but most of the over-alled patrons simply collapsed onto the chairs around the wall for two hours' snooze before going to work. Completed in four years, the piece had its first performance in Mexico City and was accepted with enthusiasm.

Copland admits the work is not easy to perform and that it presents rhythmic problems of the most intricate kind to both orchestra and conductor. But, of course, such difficulties are inherent in the subject. Those who have found other difficulties in his music, who consider him a trifle acid or who suspected him of deliberately complicating his scores and making them biting and harsh will find him, and themselves, rather more relaxed here.

Where previously the impression was often that Copland was not entirely sure of what he was trying to do himself, here one would venture to bet that the composer knew quite well what he was after and is as satisfied as one can be in such matters with the result. Koussevitzky plays the music for all it is worth. When the Boston Orchestra is well recorded the results take a lot of beating. Details of the polished score are plainly set forth and admirably reproduced. The filler is a full-toned performance of Stravinsky's arrangement of "The Song of the Volga Boatmen" scored for wind and percussion.

* * *

The great "Variations on a Theme by Haydn" that serve somewhat in the nature of a forerunner to Brahms's symphonies are the subject of Felix Weingartner's latest release. The orchestra is the London Philharmonic. The immediate question prompted by the news of this recording quite naturally was: How will it compare with the Toscanini? An answer intended to guide any one in making a selection is not forthcoming. Each in its own manner, both are exemplary performances.

It is in the conductor's approach, therefore, that the preference lies, and that is entirely a matter for the individual conscience. Where Toscanini stressed the dramatic manner in which the variations build up to a crashing climax the veteran Dalmatian proceeds with unhurried suavity to make the most of the inner developments. Weingartner benefits by better middle and lower register recording, th latter happening to be the positio of most importance in this case.

* * *

This month's Beecham albu contains Mozart's Symphony No. 3 in D (K. 297), known as the "Paris (Columbia M. W. 360). Once in while such titles do mean something, and in this case the work was actually done to order for a Paris concert. Which fact accounts for one of its most interesting features, for, obviously au fait with Parisian tastes, Mozart demonstrated his showmanship by giving them exactly what they wanted—a showy bit of work, full of life but essentially of little depth. There is no need to comment on Sir Thomas, his orchestra or the recording they receive.

Part of Schumann's "Carnaval" suite—noted last week in its authentic form as played by Myra Hess—comes on a single from Columbia as an addition to the series of excerpts from ballets played by the London Philharmonic under Walter Goehr. A representative cross-section for those who are satisfied with the highlights from something of this sort, the disk is much like its predecessors, clearly set forth with a little too heavy and studied precision but well recorded.

The Boston "Pops" make the usual full-toned and richly recorded show with an orchestration of Dinicu's catchy "Hora Staccato" and a Lucien Caillet arrangement of Tchaikovsky's "None But the Lonely Heart." The worst that can be said of these is that both really do sound better in the forms originally chosen by their creators.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

APR 29 1939

The New Records

Three Haydn Symphonies—Weingartner's Haydn-Brahms—The Lighter Side.

By IRVING KOLODIN.

Thanks to the enterprise of the New Friends of Music, the repertory of recorded Haydn symphonies now shows two scores which are not only first recordings, but in all probability have not previously been accessible in sound or print. They are the Nos. 67 and 80 introduced during the recent Carnegie Hall series. (Victor.)

Both works are first line Haydn, but I confess myself more partial to the sixty-seven (in F), perhaps because it is closer to the outlines defined by Haydn in his more familiar works. It has a lovely spontaneity, freshness and charm, particularly in the slow movement and finale, and has already assumed the warming manner or an old friend. Its companion in the album is more provocative, but also more cerebral; and though its ingenuity and resourcefulness are equally high, I do not find its musical content as satisfying. Both works are conducted with style and finesse by Fritz Stiedry. The orchestra plays well, but it is too large a group for the studio in which it is recorded. The tone has no breathing space, and the sound ceases abruptly after chord endings and solo passages.

Concurrently we have the well-worn "Surprise" symphony from Columbia, the second album to be recorded by Howard Barlow and the Columbia Broadcasting Symphony Orchestra. The conductor has the misfortune to have his treatment of this work necessarily weighed against those of such specialists as Koussevitzky and Beecham, not always with favorable results. It is a more even and reasonable version than Koussevitzy's one for Victor; but its values are not so sharply defined as one would like. Thus the famous second movement is sensibly and sympathetically conducted, but more could be done with it, dynamically. Most heartening is the clear, full recording of the orchestra, which indicates that Columbia has finally acquired the resources to originate sound orchestral recordings in this country.

Weingartner's Haydn-Brahms.

There are few conductors who sustain their own characteristic qualities as consistently as Felix Weingartner does — which means that the phonographic initiate will know exactly what to expect of his current version of the Haydn-Brahms variations with the London Philharmonic (Columbia). There will be the inevitable comparison with Victor's Toscanini—Philharmonic version; and sequential playing indicates that each has its distinctions. Weingartner makes less of the purely physical play of sound values, projecting more of the substantial, four-square heartiness of the composer's thought. Several of the fast variations would profit by more volatility, a greater variety of color; but there is much to enjoy in his treatment of the work as a whole. It is very well recorded.

Dances by Schumann.

The "Davidsbuendlertaenze" of Schumann are likely to be a fourth or fifth choice of the average recitalist seeking to show his ability as a Schumann interpreter, but Kurt Appelbaum's performance of them for Musicraft shows that they should be heard more often as variants for the "Carneval," "Fantasy" and "Symphonic Etudes." As for Appelbaum himself, the playing is an even more flattering reflection of his musical and pianistic qualities than that of the Schubert sonata recently reviewed here. The music never overburdens his technic, and the interpretation of such reflective sections as Dances 14, 16 and 17 is admirably refined and sensitive. The piano reproduction is acceptable, but well short of impressive.

The Lighter Side.

There's a better than average tune entitled "And the Angels Sing" coming into prominence—but if you have Ziggy Elman's "Fralich in Swing" on Bluebird (recommended here two months ago), your wants will be satisfied. It's the same tune, outfitted with a new title and lyric by word-juggler Johnny Mercer. For those who prefer the revised version there is a choice list of recordings that include the orchestras of Harry James on Brunswick, Count Basie on Vocalion, Jan Savitt on Decca, Benny Goodman on Victor, and Glenn Miller duplicating on Bluebird. The last of these is the best arrangement, for those who think in such terms, but the James band makes the most of the tune and the lyric, though it lacks the trumpet flourishes that Elman contributed to the Goodman recording. The Savitt job is routine, the Basie mediocre.

Recommended: If your record shelf still has room for another version of "Taint Whatcha Do," by all means let it be Mildred Bailey's on Vocalion 4708. With some excellent support by a small band including Red Norvo, Miss Bailey again demonstrates that the final word is not said on a song until she has been heard from. Its companion, "Slumbertime on the Swanee," also finds Miss Bailey in fine form.

What They're Selling.

Abraham & Straus—
"Three Little Fishes" ......B
"God Bless America" V
Aeolian—
"Three Little Fishes" V
"Little Sir Echo" ....B
Gramophone—
"And the Angels Sing" V
"Deep Purple" ....B
Liberty—
"And the Angels Sing" V
"Three Little Fishes" ......B

Queries on records, machines, needles, &c., are invited.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CAMDEN, N. J.
POST

APR 29 1939

Many Albums Listed By RCA For April

Spaulding Concerto, Vienna Choirboys Top Variety of Records

There are many interesting items on Victor's April list of recorded music.

For instance there's the Spohr Concerto No. 8 in A Minor, played by Albert Spaulding, with the Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy conducting (M-544). Many will recall that this concerto is a favorite of Mr. Spaulding, renowned as an American violinist, and the album is one to excite every musician.

The Vienna Choir Boys, who visited this country under the direction of Viktor Gomboz, as a reminder that once there was a Vienna with unhampered loveliness, sings the Pergolesi "Stabat Mater" with the delightful accompaniment of a string orchestra and harpsicord (M-545). RCA experts were surely on their toes when they seized their opportunity to record this charming music.

The Coolidge Quartet, which played with the Philadelphia Orchestra last week, offers the Charles Martin Loeffler "Music for Four Stringed Instruments" (M-543) and this item seems to be chiefly for rabid fans of chamber music, not particularly partial to old masters.

The orchestra of the New Friends of Music, which many have been hearing with increasing pleasure via radio, are heard in the Haydn Symphony No. 80 and another Haydn, No. 67, on one album. The musicians play very well and the recording, as usual, is above reproach (M-536).

No, that isn't all, for this was a big release. Myra Hess supplies something for collectors of recorded pianoforte in the Carnaval Suite of Schumann (M-476). Moreover, the Boston Symphony, under Koussevitzky's direction, plays Aaron Copland's "El Salon Mexico" and the seldom-heard Stravinsky arrangement of "The Song of the Volga Boatmen," both worth hearing (M-546).

If you like Hindemith, and some do, you will try to hear, at least once, the Sonata for viola and piano, played by William Primrose, of string quartet fame, and Jesus Maria Sanroma, of Boston Pops fame (M-547). And while Sonatas are being discussed, there's another piano number, this time Alexander Brailowski playing the Chopin B. Minor.

These are the chief headlines. The smaller news includes the Boston Pops playing the "Hora Staccato" of Dinicu-Heifetz and a lovely orchestration by Lucien Cailliet of Tschaikowski's "None But The Lonely Heart." Igor Gorin sings the Moussorgsky "Hopak" and the Gretchaninoff "Over the Steppe" with an orchestra conducted by Wilfred Pelletier. Miliza Korjus sings "Il Bacio" and "Parla" but you may not like it as it comes from Germany.

The two Iturbis, Jose and Amparo, play the Caprice Arabe of Saint-Saens. Yehudi Menuhin adds his own originality to the Dvorak-Kreisler "Largo" from "The New World" Symphony and the Sarasate "Caprice [illegible]

L'Artista = April - 1939

Musical Impressions

By GUY LANTNER

The Boston Symphony plays Richard Strauss's Also Sprach Zarathustra. This is understood to be a Feast A Rare Occasion for Music Lovers. This work now being a standard of two generations is unlikely to receive a keen criticism; yet in such procedure alone lies true appreciation. Undoubtedly Richard Strauss caught the spirit of Nietzsche; in much the same manner of Anatomical and Spiritual Transgressions of his Model, he produced a music characteristic of the technique of the harp intruding on the Bow and Blowing instruments. The sweep of imagination detaching him unwarily from the earth-bound humanity expressed by Nietzsche is repeated in the same way in the virtuoso passages instead of the homelier lays for violini, clarinets and brasses in the symphonic poem of Richard Strauss.

The impression of askance remains: for what purpose is it, and why all of it?

Those who read Nietsche's Also Sprach Zarathrustra tasted a medley of poetry and of prose, here crying for fortification by music and there repelling with its sinister reconditeness and dreary hair splitting. Those who tried to read and could not finish reading might have felt the shame of their own leahst square perversity, all too obtrusively, and could not go on in spite of the poetry; and others were bored to death with the futility of it all! Considering that every one has a painful page in his life story, the test is: Do you find some uplift finally in the spread of the morbidities?

You will at least in the Straus Zarathustra but at a terrific cost to the tortured instruments and in the end I fear at a terrific cost to music.

67

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
GAZETTE

APR 30 1939

RECORD REVIEWS

Aaron Copeland—El Salon Mexico, played by the Boston Symphony under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, and also included is the Song of the Volga Boatman in an arrangement by Igor Starvinsky. Album of two 12-inch disks. Victor.

The name of Aaron Copeland is one that is well known to music lovers. "El Salon" is said to have been inspired by the composer's visits to a famous bar and dance hall in Mexico City where both tourists and Mexicans congregate nightly for the wildest of music and dancing.

The composer has utilized Mexican folk and jazz tunes, and those who like their music "hot" have something in store for them with this concoction. As for us, the first hearing aroused doubts as to the seaworthiness of our machine. A careful examination revealed that what we had heard were some new orchestral "effects." Incidentally, Mr. Copeland is the author of a book, "What to Listen For in Music," which we recently finished. The book, we like very much.

Time has not impaired the touching eloquence of the Volga Boatman song, but this arrangement by Stravinsky has. The inherent qualities of the melody is poingancy and depth of soul. The Stravinsky arrangement makes us feel the physical anaemia, weakness and starvation of the poor singers. We much prefer the arrangement by Albert Stoessel, an American composer and conductor.

Chopin—Sonata No. 3 in B Minor, played by Alexander Brailowsky, pianist. Album of three 12-inch disks. Victor.

Judging by this recording, Mr. Brailowsky's reputation as a Chopin interpreter is well founded. He has given a series of recitals of the complete Chopin works in a number of music centers with considerable success. To give the sonata such coherence and unity is indeed an achievement for Chopin was not in his element in the sonata form. But despite this fact the sonata has a wealth of exquisite thematic material and is a beautiful and moving work. The four movements cover a wide variety of moods, each a piece in itself. The finale is one of the most proudly defiant and magnificent pieces we know of.

The recording reveals an opulence and beauty of tone that is almost unbelievable. Mr. Brailowsky's future recordings will be awaited with deepest interest.

Saint Saens, Havanaise, Op. 3, played by Jascha Heifetz, violinist, and the London Symphony orchestra, conducted by John Barbirolli. One 12-inch disk. Victor.

A Heifetz recital is always an occasion; no less so, a Heifetz recording, when it is as fine as this one, Spanish color and atmosphere hover over this delightful composition, and the violinist exercises his witchery to create a mood the most casual listener cannot fail to enjoy. How a human being with only four strings and a bow can create such enchanting sounds, almost defies comprehension.

This is a record one will wish to come back to again and again.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
AMERICAN

MAY 1 4 1939

Disc--covering -:-

By T. T. S.

"Salon Mexico," a symphony which Aaron Copland wrote as a composer tourist who wanted "to remember what a country sounds like," has been splendidly recorded in three parts on two 12-inch records by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky for RCA Victor in series M-546, Nos. 15363-15364. Stravinsky's "Volga Boatman" is on the reverse. The music is modern, flavored with Mexican but distinctly American.

Barrere-Salzedo-Britt recorded for May RCA release a jewel on 10 inches of wax; "La Cupis," by Rameau and his "Tambourines", on 1976 A-B. Metropolitan quartet member Frederick Jaegel gives on 1979 A-B, 10-inch, lovely tenor attention to Charles' "The House on the Hill" and "My Parting Gift," the verse by Mrs. Lawrence Tibbett and music by Eleanor Warren, with Edwin MacArthur at the piano. Lauritz Melchior, another Syracuse tenor favorite, ends in a wraith of melody the Strauss "Traum durch die Daemmerung," with the timely "Mai Lied" on the other side of No. 1980, RCA Victor.

For piano and orchestra lovers Columbia Masterpiece set No. 362, projects by the London Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted by Leslie Howard, a masterful interpretation of Liszt's "A Major Concerto," with Egon Petri as soloist. The balance of orchestra and piano is superb. A Russian pianist, Anatole Kitain, gets fine poetic effects on No. 69569-D, playing Rachmaninoff's "Etude in F. Minor" and "Prelude in G Sharp, and reverse, a Scriabin "Etude" and "Prelude."

Decca new headliners on the "swing platter" among the choicest are: "Wishing," from "Love Affair," and "Little Genius" on 2436 by Russ Morgan, with vocal; Will Osborne's fox trot, 2442, "Tell Me Pretty Maiden" and "The Gentleman Awaits," his theme song; Mills Brothers, 2441, in "Goodbye Blues" and "Sweet Sue"; Frances Langford singing "Blue Evenings" and "Mr. So and So," 2443.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

Bandwagon
W
Okla. City Okla.

MAY - - 1939

Recordings

Knowing that you've been mighty busy putting in the spring garden, polishing up the golf clubs and hunting up Junior's bathing suit we've done a little snooping for you in the phonograph record marts. Not being sure how your taste would run these late spring days we listened to all kinds of records and came up with these recommendations that, cross our heart, we not only heartily endorse, but mean to have for our very own in the near future!

The latest thing in modern music is, without a doubt, "El Salon Mexico," Victor Album M-546. Aaron Copeland, composer of this neat little tid-bit, was born in 1900, and is one of this country's outstanding younger composers. His output is not great, but is uniformly first-rate. This composition is based on Mexican themes and has all the exotic rhythms and langour of this race, but these have been combined with some typically American music that is almost symphonic jazz. The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky give its usual fine performance. What more could you want for a mere $4.50 than a grand performance of a fine new composition?

As an example of the fact that the knack of putting a song over is not the property of torch singers exclusively, try Igor Gorin's record of "Hepak" and "Over the Steppes", two Russian folk songs. If the crooners and their imitators can take mediocre voices and cheap songs and turn out a performance that by artistry and skill makes both the voice and the song more effective, there is no reason why a good voice and good songs cannot be made still better by a little knowledge of what it takes to get a song across. Gorin, a young Russian baritone, shows that it can be done on Victor No. 4414.

There is not much that one can add to what has already been said about Jose Iturbi as a conductor, concert artist, or recording artist. The simple announcement that he has just made a record of "Caprice Arabie" on Victor No. 15366, ought to be enough to make the point that here is another swell record.

•

For the "hep cats", "Alligators" and "jive boys" we dug up these sultry new numbers that will have you kicking back the rugs the minute that you first hear them.

Benny Goodman's "And The Angels Sing" Victor No. 26170. Sizzling hot improvised swing that tops all releases of this popular hit.

"Three Little Fishes" Brunswick No. 8353 by Kay Kyser who introduced this novelty number over the air. Will get you with its sprightly tune if not by the zaney fish trio.

"Beer Barrel Polka" (Roll Out the Bar), a foreign recording by the Gashe Musette orchestra, Victor No. V-710—played at a rapid tempo and featuring sixteen outstanding solo parts. One of the best of the ten inch platters.

"You Taught Me To Love Again" Victor Record No. 26154—Tommy Dorsey's boys really "smooth-sugars" this one. Jack Leonard has the vocal chorus in a super-slick arrangement in sharp contrast to the way this same group swings classic "Old Black Joe" in torrid fashion.

Decca Album No. 43—A collection of Hoagy Carmichael Songs played by Glen Gray and the Casa Loma Orchestra with rhythmic interpolations by the Merry Macs and vocal passages sung in a dramatically emotional fashion by Carmichael himself.

If you like these, tell us and we'll dig out some more next month.

—M. S.

CLASSICAL RECORDS

BEETHOVEN AND BRAHMS—Victor Album M 507, $10. Arturo Toscanini, conducting the Symphony Orchestra of the British Broadcasting Company, has assembled in this album the First Symphony of Beethoven, and Brahms' "Tragic" Overture. The warm, sunshiny qualities of the Symphony, composed when Beethoven was about 30, have been beautifully brought out. The orchestra plays well, and their tone is excellent. In general, the recording is a zestful piece of work, boasting that proverbial Toscanini clearness that makes it possible to hear nearly all the separate instrumental parts at once. Since it is the way of Toscanini to let all music speak for itself, without any kind of "personal interpretation," this performance may also be called truly classic. The first movement takes up two 12-inch sides, the second also occupies a complete record, the menuetto takes but one side and the finale two.

On the remaining three sides in this album of five records, is set the "Tragic" Overture, one of the least familiar of Brahms' orchestral compositions. At Ischl during the Summer of 1880, Brahms wrote a pair of overtures, the first of which he called "Academic Festival." The second was the "Tragic." Ten years before, however, Brahms had jotted down sketches for this overture. Where the "Academic Festival" is entirely bright, almost witty, the "Tragic" is somber, in grandeur, mood and orchestration not unlike the First Symphony.

The popularity enjoyed for years by the "Academic Festival" Overture has for some strange reason been denied the "Tragic." More's the pity, because the "Tragic" is fine music that grows upon one. The present recording is good.

"APPASSIONATA" SONATA — Columbia Masterworks set M 365, $5. Without exaggeration, this recording may literally be called a masterwork. From every point of view its quality is superlative. Beethoven's great piano sonata, a famous battlesteed of the keyboard virtuosi, is here available in a marvelously clear and musicianlike performance by Walter Gieseking, the German pianist. Some artists have seen in the fiery romanticism of the sonata an invitation to turn the piano into an orchestra. But Mr. Gieseking, holding to the right style and his own artistic conscience, has followed the wiser course of making every measure as clear and pianistic as possible, with no sacrifice to Beethoven's ardor or poetry. The recording has also been very sucessful, so the piano tone comes over faithfully without any shrillness at the top of the range, of fuzziness at the bottom. Three 12-inch records, a total of six sides, comprise the set. It may be added that Mr. Gieseking has observed all the repetitions indicated in the score.

"EL SALON MEXICO"—Victor Album M 546, $4.50. Aaron Copland's "El Salon Mexico" was perhaps the very best novelty of the last Boston Symphony season. This reviewer only regretted that it was not subsequently repeated. His regrets no longer exist because Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have done a splendid piece of work in recording it. "El Salon Mexico" was inspired by a popular Mexican hot spot, a dance hall visited by most tourists who go to Mexico City. Mr. Copland built "El Salon Mexico" partly on popular Mexican tunes, not in an academic way but giving his imagination free play. As a result, he turned out a clever and jazzy piece, almost boisterous in spots, which makes you think of gayety, dancing, even of dark-eyed senoritas. The piece takes three sides. The remaining half of the second record is given to "The Song of the Volga Boatmen" in a not very attractive dissonant harmonization by Stravinsky.

SINGLE RECORDS—Arthur Fiedler and the Pops Orchestra are to be credited with another enjoyable contribution to the gallery of single records with "Hora Staccato" (Dinicu-Heifetz, orchestrated by Adolf Schmid) and Lucien Cailliet's orchestral version of the Tchaikovsky song "None but the Lonely Heart." These are available on Victor's red seal 4413.

Glenn Darwin, baritone, sings on Victor's 36224, a standard disk, two modern songs, "When I Bring to You Colour'd Toys," by John Alden Carpenter, and Griffes' lovely "By a Lonely Forest Pathway." On the back the same singer is to be heard in "Pilgrim's Song," by Tchaikovsky.
C. W. D.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CLEVELAND, O.
PLAIN DEALER
MAY 1 4 1939

Right Off the Records

By Stewart Matter

ADMIRERS of Toscanini will be happy to hear that he has made with the B. B. C. Orchestra the First Symphony of Beethoven, coupled with the Tragic Overture of Brahms. We recall the remarkable recording standard of the Sixth of Beethoven which he made with the B. B. C. a year ago; the present set measures up in every way to its earlier companion. The surfaces are unusually smooth.

Here again we are forced to draw comparisons between Toscanini and Weingartner; advantages gained by one in one instance are outweighed in another. Weingartner looks forward more to the mature Beethoven of the later symphonies, while Toscanini conveys the hale "bon homie" of the early Beethoven, whose idiom was yet fettered by the bounds of Haydn and Mozart. Yet Weingartner gets greater cohesion and is more moderate in his tempi.

It is really quite queer that a work so austere, an utterance so personal and so essentially romantic as the Brahms Tragic Overture should be included in the same album with the pure classicism of early Beethoven. Somehow it does not balance; nor may Toscanini's exciting opening of the overture and sentimental treatment of the middle section stand test with Beecham's magnificent reading. But then the recording is supreme, and too, we get another's opinion. Victor set 507. $10.

The only recording of the Haydn "Surprise" Symphony available up to now is sorely dated and certainly none of the Hadyn works were more needed in the catalog. It is his best-known symphony, music of rare charm. The Columbia Broadcasting Symphony under the American conductor, Howard Barlow, gives a reading that could not be bettered. How good to see a few American artists coming into their own. The recording and surfaces are excellent, and since Columbia has come down off her high-horse and listed these records 50 cents each lower than previous C. B. S. records, I recommend the set heartily. Columbia set 363. $5.

Recommended Items

The brilliant Liszt "Hungarian Fantasy" for piano and orchestra played by the wizard technician, Edward Kilenyi, and the Grande Orchestre de Paris under Meyrowitz. Columbia set X-120. $3.25. . . . Aaron Copland's picturesque "El Salon Mexico" and Stravinsky's arrangement of "Song of the Volga Boatman" played by the Boston Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky. Exceptional recording standard. Victor set 546. $4.50 . . . The tenor voice of Gigli singing "Plaisir d'Amour" of Martini and "Santa Lucia" of Cottrau as only he is able; the La Scala Orchestra on the former, and the London under Barbirolli on the latter. Victor 15348. $2.

Popular Records

Though the credit for popularizing "Three Little Fishies" generally goes to Kay Kyser, I am all for Hal Kemp's version which Victor brings out. It would bring a smile from the Sphinx. They couple it with the hit tune "The Chestnut Tree," a swell double.

Decca has done a smart piece of merchandising in choosing the Casa Loma boys to do six doubles of Hoagy Carmichael songs. Such tunes as "Star Dust," "Rockin' Chair," "Washboard Blues" and others will never die out, and the present platters are as authentic as any I have ever heard. Hoagy himself, along with Louis Armstrong, joins the Casa Loma Band in giving us a set which any serious collector cannot be without.

Among the current discs, if I had to choose one for dancing, it would be the Horace Heidt Brunswick of "Strange Enchantment" and "That Sentimental Sandwich."

Joan Crawford makes a first appearance on Victor records with "It's All So New to Me" and "I'm in Love With the Honorable Mr. So and So."

The rest of the list:

SHAW—"If You Ever Change Your Mind" and "You Grow Sweeter."

KRUPA—"My Hands Are Tied" and "Variety Is the Spice of Life."

MARSHARD—"This Is It" and "It's All Yours."

REDMAN—"Class Will Tell" and "Jump Session."

BARRY WOOD—"Our Love" and "It's Never Too Late."

LOMBARDO—"East Side of Heaven" and "That Sly Old Gentleman."

ENNIS—"That Sentimental Sandwich" and "Strange Enchantment."

MARY MARTIN—"Deep Purple" and "Who'll Buy My Violets."

KAYE—"Snug as a Bug in a Rug" and "Red Skies."

LUNCEFORD—"You Set Me on Fire" and "Shoemaker's Holiday."

DICK POWELL—"Mr. and Mrs. America" and "In a Moment of Weakness."

EDDIE DeLANGE—"Beer Barrel Polka" and "Serenade to a Wildcat."

RAY NOBLE—"Friday Night at the Hartys" and "Saturday Night at the Nobles."

67

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
GAZETTE
APR 30 1939

RECORD REVIEWS

Aaron Copeland—El Salon Mexico, played by the Boston Symphony under the direction [illegible], and also included is the Song of the Volga Boatman in an arrangement by Igor Stravinsky. Album of two 12-inch disks. Victor.

The name of Aaron Copeland is one that is well known to music lovers. "El Salon" is said to have been inspired by the composer's visits to a famous bar and dance hall in Mexico City where both tourists and Mexicans congregate nightly for the wildest of music and dancing.

The composer has utilized Mexican folk and jazz tunes, and those who like their music "hot" have something in store for them with this concoction. As for us, the first hearing aroused doubts as to the seaworthiness of our machine. A careful examination revealed that what we had heard were some new orchestral "effects." Incidentally, Mr. Copeland is the author of a book, "What to Listen For in Music," which we recently finished. The book, we like very much.

Time has not impaired the touching eloquence of the Volga Boatman song, but this arrangement by Stravinsky has. The inherent qualities of the melody is poingancy and depth of soul. The Stravinsky arrangement makes us feel the physical anaemia, weakness and starvation of the poor singers. We much prefer the arrangement by Albert Stoessel, an American composer and conductor.

Chopin—Sonata No. 3 in B Minor, played by Alexander Brailowsky, pianist. Album of three 12-inch disks. Victor.

Judging by this recording, Mr. Brailowsky's reputation as a Chopin interpreter is well founded. He has given a series of recitals of the complete Chopin works in a number of music centers with considerable success. To give the sonata such coherence and unity is indeed an achievement for Chopin was not in his element in the sonata form. But despite this fact the sonata has a wealth of exquisite thematic material and is a beautiful and moving work. The four movements cover a wide variety of moods, each a piece in itself. The finale is one of the most proudly defiant and magnificent pieces we know of.

The recording reveals an opulence and beauty of tone that is almost unbelievable. Mr. Brailowsky's future recordings will be awaited with deepest interest.

Saint Saens, Havanaise, Op. 3, played by Jascha Heifetz, violinist, and the London Symphony orchestra, conducted by John Barbirolli. One 12-inch disk. Victor.

A Heifetz recital is always an occasion; no less so, a Heifetz recording, when it is as fine as this one. Spanish color and atmosphere hover over this delightful composition, and the violinist exercises his witchery to create a mood the most casual listener cannot fail to enjoy. How a human being with only four strings and a bow can create such enchanting sounds, almost defies comprehension.

This is a record one will wish to come back to again and again.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
AMERICAN
MAY 1 4 1939

Disc-covering -:-

By T. T. S.

"Salon Mexico," a symphony which Aaron Copland wrote as a composer tourist who wanted "to remember what a country sounds like," has been splendidly recorded in three parts on two 12-inch records by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky for RCA Victor in series M-546, Nos. 15363-15364. Stravinsky's "Volga Boatman" is on the reverse. The music is modern, flavored with Mexican but distinctly American.

Barrere-Salzedo-Britt recorded for May RCA release a jewel on 10 inches of wax; "La Cupis," by Rameau and his "Tambourine," on 1976 A-B. Metropolitan quartet member Frederick Jaegel gives on 1979 A-B, 10-inch, lovely tenor attention to Charles' "The House on the Hill" and "My Parting Gift," the verse by Mrs. Lawrence Tibbett and music by Eleanor Warren, with Edwin MacArthur at the piano. Lauritz Melchior, another Syracuse tenor favorite, ends in a wraith of melody the Strauss "Traum durch die Daemmerung," with the timely "Ideal Lied" on the other side of No. 1980, RCA Victor.

For piano and orchestra lovers Columbia Masterpiece set No. 362, [illegible] by the London Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted by Leslie Heward, a masterful interpretation of Liszt's "A Major Concerto," with Egon Petri as soloist. The balance of orchestra and piano is superb. A Russian pianist, Anatole Kitain, gets [illegible] effects on No. [illegible] [illegible]

F. Minor" and "Prelude in G Sharp, and reverse, a Scriabin "Etude" and "Prelude."

Decca new headliners on the "swing platter" among the choicest are: "Wishing," from "Love Affair," and "Little Genius" on 2436 by Russ Morgan, with vocal; Will Osborne's fox trot, 2442, "Tell Me Pretty Maiden" and "The Gentleman Awaits," his theme song; Mills Brothers, 2441, in "Goodbye Blues" and "Sweet Sue"; Frances Langford singing "Blue Evenings" and "Mr. So and So," 2443.

THIS CLIPPING FROM Tandwaggon
Okla. City-Okla.
MAY -- 1939

Recordings

Knowing that you've been mighty busy putting in the spring garden, polishing up the golf clubs and hunting up Junior's bathing suit we've done a little snooping for you in the phonograph record marts. Not being sure how your taste would run these late spring days we listened to all kinds of records and came up with these recommendations that, cross our heart, we not only heartily endorse, but mean to have for our very own in the near future!

The latest thing in modern music is, without a doubt, "El Salon Mexico," Victor Album M-546. Aaron Copeland, composer of this neat little tid-bit, was born in 1900, and is one of this country's outstanding younger composers. His output is not great, but is uniformly first-rate. This composition is based on Mexican themes and has all the exotic rhythms and langour of this race, but these have been combined with some typically American music that is almost symphonic jazz. The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky give its usual fine performance. What more could you want for a mere $4.50 than a grand performance of a fine new composition?

As an example of the fact that the knack of putting a song over is not the property of torch singers exclusively, try Igor Gorin's record of "Hepak" and "Over the Steppes", two Russian folk songs. If the crooners and their imitators can take mediocre voices and cheap songs and turn out a performance that by artistry and skill makes both the voice and the song more effective, there is no reason why a good voice and good songs cannot be made still better by a little knowledge of what it takes to get a song across. Gorin, a young Russian baritone, shows that it can be done on Victor No. 4414.

There is not much that one can add to what has already been said about Jose Iturbi as a conductor, concert artist, or recording artist. The simple announcement that he has just made a record of "Caprice Arabie" on Victor No. 15366, ought to be enough to make the point that here is another swell record.

•

For the "hep cats", "Alligators" and "jive boys" we dug up these sultry new numbers that will have you kicking back the rugs the minute that you first hear them.

Benny Goodman's "And The Angels Sing" Victor No. 26170. Sizzling hot improvised swing that tops all releases of this popular hit.

"Three Little Fishes" Brunswick No. 8353 by Kay Kyser who introduced this novelty number over the air. Will get you with its sprightly tune if not by the zaney fish trio.

"Beer Barrel Polka" (Roll Out the Bar), a foreign recording by the Gashe Musette orchestra, Victor No. V-710—played at a rapid tempo and featuring sixteen outstanding solo parts. One of the best of the ten inch platters.

"You Taught Me To Love Again" Victor Record No. 26154—Tommy Dorsey's boys really "smooth-sugars" this one. Jack Leonard has the vocal chorus in a super-slick arrangement in sharp contrast to the way this same group swings classic "Old Black Joe" in torrid fashion.

Decca Album No. 43—A collection of Hoagy Carmichael Songs played by Glen Gray and the Casa Loma Orchestra with rhythmic interpolations by the Merry Macs and vocal passages sung in a dramatically emotional fashion by Carmichael himself.

If you like these, tell us and we'll dig out some more next month.

—M. S.

CLASSICAL RECORDS

BEETHOVEN AND BRAHMS—Victor Album M 507, $10. Arturo Toscanini, conducting the Symphony Orchestra of the British Broadcasting Company, has assembled in this album the First Symphony of Beethoven, and Brahms' "Tragic" Overture. The warm, sunshiny qualities of the Symphony, composed when Beethoven was about 30, have been beautifully brought out. The orchestra plays well, and their tone is excellent. In general, the recording is a zestful piece of work, boasting that proverbial Toscanini clearness that makes it possible to hear nearly all the separate instrumental parts at once. Since it is the way of Toscanini to let all music speak for itself, without any kind of "personal interpretation," this performance may also be called truly classic. The first movement takes up two 12-inch sides, the second also occupies a complete record, the menuetto takes but one side and the finale two.

On the remaining three sides in this album of five records, is set the "Tragic" Overture, one of the least familiar of Brahms' orchestral compositions. At Ischl during the Summer of 1880, Brahms wrote a pair of overtures, the first of which he called "Academic Festival." The second was the "Tragic." Ten years before, however, Brahms had jotted down sketches for this overture. Where the "Academic Festival" is entirely bright, almost witty, the "Tragic" is somber, in grandeur, mood and orchestration not unlike the First Symphony.

The popularity enjoyed for years by the "Academic Festival" Overture has for some strange reason been denied the "Tragic." More's the pity, because the "Tragic" is fine music that grows upon one. The present recording is good.

"APPASSIONATA" SONATA—Columbia Masterworks set M 365, $5. Without exaggeration, this recording may literally be called a masterwork. From every point of view its quality is superlative. Beethoven's great piano sonata, a famous battlesteed of the keyboard virtuosi, is here available in a marvelously clear and musicianlike performance by Walter Gieseking, the German pianist. Some artists have seen in the fiery romanticism of the sonata an invitation to turn the piano into an orchestra. But Mr. Gieseking, holding to the right style and his own artistic conscience, has followed the wiser course of making every measure as clear and pianistic as possible, with no sacrifice to Beethoven's ardor or poetry. The recording has also been very sucessful, so the piano tone comes over faithfully without any shrillness at the top of the range, of fuzziness at the bottom. Three 12-inch records, a total of six sides, comprise the set. It may be added that Mr. Gieseking has observed all the repetitions indicated in the score.

"EL SALON MEXICO"—Victor Album M 546, $4.50. Aaron Copland's "El Salon Mexico" was perhaps the very best novelty of the last Boston Symphony season. This reviewer only regretted that it was not subsequently repeated. His regrets no longer exist because Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have done a splendid piece of work in recording it. "El Salon Mexico" was inspired by a popular Mexican hot spot, a dance hall visited by most tourists who go to Mexico City. Mr. Copland built "El Salon Mexico" partly on popular Mexican tunes, not in an academic way but giving his imagination free play. As a result, he turned out a clever and jazzy piece, almost boisterous in spots, which makes you think of gayety, dancing, even of dark-eyed senoritas. The piece takes three sides. The remaining half of the second record is given to "The Song of the Volga Boatmen" in a not very attractive dissonant harmonization by Stravinsky.

SINGLE RECORDS—Arthur Fiedler and the Pops Orchestra are to be credited with another enjoyable contribution to the gallery of single records with "Hora Staccato" (Dinicu-Heifetz, orchestrated by Adolf Schmid) and Lucien Cailliet's orchestral version of the Tchaikovsky song "None but the Lonely Heart." These are available on Victor's red seal 4413.

Glenn Darwin, baritone, sings on Victor's 36224, a standard disk, two modern songs, "When I Bring to You Colour'd Toys," by John Alden Carpenter, and Griffes' lovely "By a Lonely Forest Pathway." On the back the same singer is to be heard in "Pilgrim's Song," by Tchaikovsky.

C. W. D.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CLEVELAND, O.
PLAIN DEALER
MAY 1 4 1939

Right Off the Records

By Stewart Matter

ADMIRERS of Toscanini will be happy to hear that he has made with the B. B. C. Orchestra the First Symphony of Beethoven, coupled with the Tragic Overture of Brahms. We recall the remarkable recording standard of the Sixth of Beethoven which he made with the B. B. C. a year ago; the present set measures up in every way to its earlier companion. The surfaces are unusually smooth.

Here again we are forced to draw comparisons between Toscanini and Weingartner; advantages gained by one in one instance are outweighed in another. Weingartner looks forward more to the mature Beethoven of the later symphonies, while Toscanini conveys the hale "bon homie" of the early Beethoven, whose idiom was yet fettered by the bounds of Haydn and Mozart. Yet Weingartner gets greater cohesion and is more moderate in his tempi.

It is really quite queer that a work so austere, an utterance so personal and so essentially romantic as the Brahms Tragic Overture should be included in the same album with the pure classicism of early Beethoven. Somehow it does not balance; nor may Toscanini's exciting opening of the overture and sentimental treatment of the middle section stand test with Beecham's magnificent reading. But then the recording is supreme, and too, we get another's opinion. Victor set 507. $10.

The only recording of the Haydn "Surprise" Symphony available up to now is sorely dated and certainly none of the Hadyn works were more needed in the catalog. It is his best-known symphony, music of rare charm. The Columbia Broadcasting Symphony under the American conductor, Howard Barlow, gives a reading that could not be bettered. How good to see a few American artists coming into their own. The recording and surfaces are excellent, and since Columbia has come down off her high-horse and listed these records 50 cents each lower than previous C. B. S. records, I recommend the set heartily. Columbia set 363. $5.

Recommended Items

The brilliant Liszt "Hungarian Fantasy" for piano and orchestra played by the wizard technician, Edward Kilenyi, and the Grande Orchestre de Paris under Meyrowitz. Columbia set X-120. $3.25. . . . Aaron Copland's picturesque "El Salon Mexico" and Stravinsky's arrangement of "Song of the Volga Boatman" played by the Boston Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky. Exceptional recording standard. Victor set 546. $4.50 . . . The tenor voice of Gigli singing "Plaisir d'Amour" of Martini and "Santa Lucia" of Cottrau as only he is able; the La Scala Orchestra on the former, and the London under Barbirolli on the latter. Victor 15348. $2.

Popular Records

Though the credit for popularizing "Three Little Fishies" generally goes to Kay Kyser, I am all for Hal Kemp's version which Victor brings out. It would bring a smile from the Sphinx. They couple it with the hit tune "The Chestnut Tree," a swell double.

Decca has done a smart piece of merchandising in choosing the Casa Loma boys to do six doubles of Hoagy Carmichael songs. Such tunes as "Star Dust," "Rockin' Chair," "Washboard Blues" and others will never die out, and the present platters are as authentic as any I have ever heard. Hoagy himself, along with Louis Armstrong, joins the Casa Loma Band in giving us a set which any serious collector cannot be without.

Among the current discs, if I had to choose one for dancing, it would be the Horace Heidt Brunswick of "Strange Enchantment" and "That Sentimental Sandwich."

Joan Crawford makes a first appearance on Victor records with "It's All So New to Me" and "I'm in Love With the Honorable Mr. So and So."

The rest of the list:

SHAW—"If You Ever Change Your Mind" and "You Grow Sweeter."

KRUPA—"My Hands Are Tied" and "Variety Is the Spice of Life."

MARSHARD—"This Is It" and "It's All Yours."

REDMAN—"Class Will Tell" and "Jump Session."

BARRY WOOD—"Our Love" and "It's Never Too Late."

LOMBARDO—"East Side of Heaven" and "That Sly Old Gentleman."

ENNIS—"That Sentimental Sandwich" and "Strange Enchantment."

MARY MARTIN—"Deep Purple" and "Who'll Buy My Violets."

KAYE—"Snug as a Bug in a Rug" and "Red Skies."

LUNCEFORD—"You Set Me on Fire" and "Shepherd's Holiday."

DICK POWELL—"Mr. and Mrs. America" [illegible]

[illegible] Polka" and [illegible]

68

THIS CLIPPING FROM NATION
NEW YORK, N. Y.

MAY 20 1939

RECORDS

IF WE want a just and satisfying performance of Beethoven's First Symphony there is Weingartner's in the recent Columbia set; if we want such a performance with, in addition, the unique and exciting qualities of tone, texture, and phrasing that are Toscanini's, there is now the one that he has recorded with the B. B. C. Symphony. It occupies seven sides, to which Victor, with complete lack of sense of fitness, has added the three sides of his performance of Brahms's Tragic Overture to make a five-record set ($10).

The beautiful voice and phrasing of the Metropolitan's new German baritone, Herbert Janssen, are heard on a Victor record ($2) in Schubert's "Serenade" and Schumann's "Two Grenadiers." They were heard recently in Strauss's "Traum durch die Dämmerung," which Melchior now sings with less beauty of voice but with more variety and subtlety of inflection and with a dramatic climax; and on the reverse side of this record ($1.50) he sings Lembcke's less consequential "Mailied." The pieces by Rameau on two records ($1.50 each) are charming and well played by the flute-harp-'cello combination of Barrère-Salzedo-Britt, but the other two instruments are often heard through a haze of carelessly recorded harp. Menotti's fluent and engaging little Overture to "Amelia Goes to the Ball" is brilliantly played by the Philadelphia Orchestra under Ormandy on one side of a single ($2); on the other side is the hugely symphonic Cakewalk from Harl McDonald's Third Symphony.

For the rest there are works that one might care to hear once but not repeatedly. On a single ($2) is Handel's Sonata No. 6 for oboe—well played by Mitchell Miller, with an unbelievably subdued accompaniment by Yella Pessl—which offers little but the external style of Handel. Schumann's Sonata Opus 105 for violin and piano, excellently played by Busch and Serkin in a two-record set ($4.50), is briefer than Opus 121, but as feeble and, despite its brevity, as diffuse. And in the volume of French piano music (five ten-inch records, $5.50) the only composer who claims and holds attention is Chabrier—not so much with the "Bourrée fantasque" as with the fascinating "Idylle" from the "Dix pièces pittoresques," for which Balanchine composed his equally fascinating pas de deux in "Cotillon"; and even this piece Emma Boynet spoils for me by her nervous, mannered performance.

From Columbia we get a new recording ($1.50) of the Overture to Beethoven's "Fidelio" made by Weingartner with the London Philharmonic—one that has structural clarity and power to compensate for the greater warmth of sound in the older Bruno Walter version. On the other hand, in the old Koussevitzky set of Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony one hears at once the superiority of the Boston Symphony over the Columbia Broadcasting Symphony Orchestra with which Howard Barlow has recorded the work for Columbia (three records, $5); one hears also the superiority of Koussevitzky's performance—particularly of the finale; and these points of superiority are not outweighed by the coarse recording in the new set.

In a two-record set ($3.25) is Dvorak's Sonatina Opus 100, melodious in his American style (Kreisler's "Indian Lament" is an arrangement of the second movement), but a work of minor stature. It is excellently performed by Ossy Renardy. Liszt's Piano Concerto No. 2 (three records, $5) is, for my ears, a characteristic mixture of the pretty-pretty, the pianistically showy, and the pretentious, on which is wasted superb playing by Egon Petri with the London Philharmonic under Leslie Heward. And fine playing by the Pasquier Trio is wasted on Jean Françaix's Trio (two records, $3.25).

Though the first playing of some of these Columbia records with a steel needle was unsatisfactory, the second gave clear reproduction—which indicates an improvement in the surfaces. There was no such improvement, however, in the records of the Columbia History of Music, which I will review next week.

B. H. HAGGIN

THIS CLIPPING FROM

Cress–
Menasha Wis
[illegible]-39

Recent Recordings

Orchestral

FRANZ JOSEPH HAYDN. Symphony No. 80, in D Minor, and Symphony No. 67, in F Major. The Orchestra of the New Friends of Music under Fritz Stiedry.—It is seldom that one hears orchestral playing of such limpid beauty as has been engraved on the five discs comprising this album. We are deeply indebted to the eminent musicologist, Dr. Alfred Einstein, for bringing the two long-hidden symphonies to the light of day. Victor Album M-536.

ANDRE ERNEST MODESTE GRETRY. Danses Villagoises. The Orchestre Symphonique of Paris under F. Ruhlmann.—These tidbits are delightfully melodious, even though the leanness of the famous Belgian's harmonies once led a facetiously inclined critic to write that one could drive a coach-and-four between the bass and the first fiddle. Benjamin Godard's orchestration of a lively Saltarelle, by the noted Belgian violinist, Henri Vieuxtemps, is included in the set. Columbia Album X-126.

AARON COPLAND. El Salon Mexico. The Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky.—This ingenious and modernistically constructed potpourri of a number of popular Mexican folk tunes is superbly played by the Bostonians. Sincere students of modern trends in music as well as enthusiastic jitterbugs will be interested in the composition. Igor Stravinsky's pungent orchestral version of the Song of the Volga Boatmen is given as an encore. Victor Album M-546.

JOHANNES BRAHMS. Variations on a Theme by Hadyn. The London Philharmonic Orchestra under Felix Weingartner.—Here we have a work which is great, not only because of the St. Antoni Chorale on which it is based, but also because of the uncanny skill and the rich poetry of the mighty Brahms. Weingartner's reading goes to the very core of the music. Columbia Album X-125.

WOLFGANG AMADEUS MOZART. Symphony No. 31, in D Major ("Paris"). The London Philharmonic Orchestra under Sir Thomas Beecham.—Again the redoubtable Sir Thomas proves to the hilt that he is an unusually competent exponent of the works of Mozart. Columbia Album 360

THIS CLIPPING FROM YORK, PA.
DISPATCH

MAY 27 1939

Fritz Kreisler To Open Season At Syria Mosque

The seventeenth season of May Beegle de luxe series of concerts will open at Syria Mosque, Pittsburgh, on Friday evening, October 13, with a concert by the beloved violinist, Fritz Kreisler. The highlights in this series exceed all former years, for in addition to the world's greatest vocal and instrumental artists, grand opera, ballet, and a celebrated choir from over the seas, are also included. The San Carlo Opera on October 27 will feature the celebrated Japanese prima donna, Hizi Koyke in "Madam Butterfly." Devi-Dja and her Bali and Java dancers will be a glamorous new attraction on November 11. Lily Pons comes on December 5, followed by Marian Anderson on January 9. The exquisite Mozart Boys Choir from Vienna will give a program of folk songs followed by the operetta "Tales of the Vienna Woods" on February 6. Vladimir Horowitz, celebrated Russian pianist, will be welcomed on March 26th, and Nelson Eddy, baritone will close the series on April 19th. An extra attraction offered subscribers is Argentinita and her company of Spanish dancers on February 17.

Celebrated Orchestra Coming

For its twenty-fourth season, the Pittsburgh Orchestra Association announces five concerts by visiting orchestras. The Philadelphia Orchestra opens the series on Saturday evening, November 4, with Eugene Ormandy conducting. The New York Philharmonic, with John Barbirolli conducting, will appear for the first time in Pittsburgh in ten years, on Thursday evening, November 23. The annual visit of the Boston Symphony, under Koussevitzky, will be on Saturday evening, December 16, and Sunday afternoon, December 17. The Philadelphia Orchestra returns for a spring concert on May 4.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

The New Records

Introducing Aitken—Concerto by K. P. E. Bach—The Lighter Side.

By IRVING KOLODIN.

Apparently there are virtues in a limited budget which have not yet been analyzed, artistically. Consider the example of Gamut, whose sparse releases have nevertheless been of high average interest, both in music and performers. Probably if its financial resources were greater, its care would been much less.

The company sustains its precedents in both respects this month with an album issue of the Schubert C minor sonata, played by Webster Aitken. Both are phonographic "firsts," the privilege of recording this work perhaps a reward to Aitken for his arduous services on behalf of Schubert during the last several years.

Though I am not yet convinced that Aitken has precisely the flair of spirit to revitalize Schubert's curiously personal and individualized music, he has attained a very fine intellectual appreciation of its qualities. In such movements as the dramatic first allegro and the racing finale, his qualities of mind and hand give the music the flow and impact of life. However, the lightness of the scherzo is rather too seriously stated, and the lyric adagio, for all of Aitken's sensitized phrasing, is not quite relaxed and expansive. It is, in short, that kind of many-virtued playing whose quality leads one to demand perfection.

As a companion piece, on a single record, Gamut offers Aitken's playing of the C minor fantasia of Mozart (Koechel No. 475) read with crisp detail and a steady concentration on its musical sense. The recording of both works is admirably clear, the tonal range well balanced, though there might be more piano resonance. With the sonata is a splendid essay on the work by William Glock.

Concerto by C. P. E. Bach.

One of the choice items in the Boston Symphony's repertory, certain to reappear from season to season, is the D major concerto for orchestra by the universally admired and universally neglected C. P. E. Bach. Thanks to Victor, it is now available in the permanent form of a beautiful recording by the Koussevitzky orchestra, which meets every test of playing, conducting and recording.

It cannot be argued too strongly, for those who might pass this work by on the basis of its abstract name and unenticing classification, that the music in its three movements is inseparably vital, poetic and satisfying. The slow movement is a heartwarming soliloquy that indicates anew how arbitrary any classification of great composers is that omits this Bach. The work is played, of course, in the Maximilian Steinberg version, and it is superbly recorded.

Singles.

Rondo in A minor (Mozart). A recording by Ignace Jan Paderewski that is more than a sentimental memento for those who were denied his personal appearance last week. It is infinitely better played than anything on his recent broadcast, finely controlled and shaped. There is perhaps an overwash of Chopin in his tone, but the plaintive Mozart is admirably revealed. (Victor No. 15421).

Fidelio Overture (Beethoven.) A robust and well-paced performance by Felix Weingartner of the work generally used now as a curtain-raiser for the opera. Both in vigor and technical detail the performance by the London Philharmonic is first-rate. The recording is good. (Columbia No. 69545.)

The Lighter Side.

The producers of Blue Note records, who made their entry with several esoteric specimens of "boogie-woogie" some weeks ago, have extended their interest to band performances, but produced under the same informal, uncommercial circumstances as the first sides. With Albert Ammons as pianist, J. C. Higginbotham on trombone, Frank Newton on trumpet, and Teddy Bunn playing some remarkable guitar they offer a twelve and ten inch disk that should be in every collection of improvised jazz. The hero of this session was plainly Higginbotham (of the Armstrong orchestra) whose solos on "Mighty Blues," a twelve-inch face, must be heard to be believed. Newton is also excellent on this side, with some fine work by John Williams, bass, and Sidney Catlett, drums. The ten-inch sides are by the same men, with Newton omitted on one and Higginbotham on the other. The "Weary Land Blues," which Higginbotham leads, is remarkably sober in mood and atmosphere, also genuinely eloquent.

Recommended: The latest in the cycle of rhythm-patter songs seems to be "Well All Right," borrowed, if that is the word, from a characteristic Negro blues, and put together in Andrews Sisters' style by, of all people, the Andrew Sisters, on Decca 2462. With it is the "Beer Barrel Polka" which is no more than the other side. For an uncommonly pleasant sweet tune try "Stairway to the Skies" (extracted from Matt Malneck's "Park Avenue Suite") on Brunswick 8381. The orchestra is Kay Kayser's, and the singer Harry Babitt.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NATION
NEW YORK, N. Y.

MAY 20 1939

RECORDS

IF WE want a just and satisfying performance of Beethoven's First Symphony there is Weingartner's in the recent Columbia set; if we want such a performance with, in addition, the unique and exciting qualities of tone, texture, and phrasing that are Toscanini's, there is ~~now~~ the one that he has recorded with the B. B. C. Symphony. It occupies seven sides, to which Victor, with complete lack of sense of fitness, has added the three sides of his performance of Brahms's Tragic Overture to make a five-record set ($10).

The beautiful voice and phrasing of the Metropolitan's new German baritone, Herbert Janssen, are heard on a Victor record ($2) in Schubert's "Serenade" and Schumann's "Two Grenadiers." They were heard recently in Strauss's "Traum durch die Dämmerung," which Melchior now sings with less beauty of voice but with more variety and subtlety of inflection and with a dramatic climax; and on the reverse side of this record ($1.50) he sings Lembcke's less consequential "Mailied." The pieces by Rameau on two records ($1.50 each) are charming and well played by the flute-harp-'cello combination of Barrère-Salzedo-Britt, but the other two instruments are often heard through a haze of carelessly recorded harp. Menotti's fluent and engaging little Overture to "Amelia Goes to the Ball" is brilliantly played by the Philadelphia Orchestra under Ormandy on one side of a single ($2); on the other side is the hugely symphonic Cakewalk from Harl McDonald's Third Symphony.

For the rest there are works that one might care to hear once but not repeatedly. On a single ($2) is Handel's Sonata No. 6 for oboe—well played by Mitchell Miller, with an unbelievably subdued accompaniment by Yella Pessl—which offers little but the external style of Handel. Schumann's Sonata Opus 105 for violin and piano, excellently played by Busch and Serkin in a two-record set ($4.50), is briefer than Opus 121, but as feeble and, despite its brevity, as diffuse. And in the volume of French piano music (five ten-inch records, $5.50) the only composer who claims and holds attention is Chabrier—not so much with the "Bourrée fantasque" as with the fascinating "Idylle" from the "Dix pièces pittoresques," for which Balanchine composed his equally fascinating pas de deux in "Cotillon"; and even this piece Emma Boynet spoils for me by her nervous, mannered performance.

From Columbia we get a new recording ($1.50) of the Overture to Beethoven's "Fidelio" made by Weingartner with the London Philharmonic—one that has structural clarity and power to compensate for the greater warmth of sound in the older Bruno Walter version. On the other hand, in the old Koussevitzky set of Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony one hears at once the superiority of the Boston Symphony over the Columbia Broadcasting Symphony Orchestra with which Howard Barlow has recorded the work for Columbia (three records, $5); one hears also the superiority of Koussevitzky's performance—particularly of the finale; and these points of superiority are not outweighed by the coarse recording in the new set.

In a two-record set ($3.25) is Dvorak's Sonatina Opus 100, melodious in his American style (Kreisler's "Indian Lament" is an arrangement of the second movement), but a work of minor stature. It is excellently performed by Ossy Renardy. Liszt's Piano Concerto No. 2 (three records, $5) is, for my ears, a characteristic mixture of the pretty-pretty, the pianistically showy, and the pretentious, on which is wasted superb playing by Egon Petri with the London Philharmonic under Leslie Heward. And fine playing by the Pasquier Trio is wasted on Jean Françaix's Trio (two records, $3.25).

Though the first playing of some of these Columbia records with a steel needle was unsatisfactory, the second gave clear reproduction—which indicates an improvement in the surfaces. There was no such improvement, however, in the records of the Columbia History of Music, which I will review next week.

B. H. HAGGIN

THIS CLIPPING FROM Cresset
Menasha Wis
June-39

Recent Recordings

Orchestral

FRANZ JOSEPH HAYDN. Symphony No. 80, in D Minor, and Symphony No. 67, in F Major. The Orchestra of the New Friends of Music under Fritz Stiedry.—It is seldom that one hears orchestral playing of such limpid beauty as has been engraved on the five discs comprising this album. We are deeply indebted to the eminent musicologist, Dr. Alfred Einstein, for bringing the two long-hidden symphonies to the light of day. Victor Album M-536.

ANDRE ERNEST MODESTE GRETRY. Danses Villagoises. The Orchestre Symphonique of Paris under F. Ruhlmann.—These tidbits are delightfully melodious, even though the leanness of the famous Belgian's harmonies once led a facetiously inclined critic to write that one could drive a coach-and-four between the bass and the first fiddle. Benjamin Godard's orchestration of a lively Saltarelle, by the noted Belgian violinist, Henri Vieuxtemps, is included in the set. Columbia Album X-126.

AARON COPLAND. El Salon Mexico. The Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky.—This ingenious and modernistically constructed potpourri of a number of popular Mexican folk tunes is superbly played by the Bostonians. Sincere students of modern trends in music as well as enthusiastic jitterbugs will be interested in the composition. Igor Stravinsky's pungent orchestral version of the Song of the Volga Boatmen is given as an encore. Victor Album M-546.

JOHANNES BRAHMS. Variations on a Theme by Hadyn. The London Philharmonic Orchestra under Felix Weingartner.—Here we have a work which is great, not only because of the St. Antoni Chorale on which it is based, but also because of the uncanny skill and the rich poetry of the mighty Brahms. Weingartner's reading goes to the very core of the music. Columbia Album X-125.

WOLFGANG AMADEUS MOZART. Symphony No. 31, in D Major ("Paris"). The London Philharmonic Orchestra under Sir Thomas Beecham. —Again the redoubtable Sir Thomas proves to the hilt that he is an unusually competent exponent of the works of Mozart. Columbia Album 360

THIS CLIPPING FROM YORK, PA.
DISPATCH

MAY 27 1939

Fritz Kreisler To Open Season At Syria Mosque

The seventeenth season of May Beegle de luxe series of concerts will open at Syria Mosque, Pittsburgh, on Friday evening, October 13, with a concert by the beloved violinist, Fritz Kreisler. The highlights in this series exceed all former years, for in addition to the world's greatest vocal and instrumental artists, grand opera, ballet, and a celebrated choir from over the seas, are also included. The San Carlo Opera on October 27 will feature the celebrated Japanese prima donna, Hizi Koyke in "Madam Butterfly." Devi-Dja and her Bali and Java dancers will be a glamorous new attraction on November 11. Lily Pons comes on December 5, followed by Marian Anderson on January 8. The exquisite Mozart Boys Choir from Vienna will give a program of folk songs followed by the operetta "Tales of the Vienna Woods" on February 6. Vladimir Horowitz, celebrated Russian pianist, will be welcomed on March 26th, and Nelson Eddy, baritone will close the series on April 19th. An extra attraction offered subscribers is Argentinita and her company of Spanish dancers on February 17.

Celebrated Orchestra Coming

For its twenty-fourth season, the Pittsburgh Orchestra Association announces five concerts by visiting orchestras. The Philadelphia Orchestra opens the series on Saturday evening, November 4, with Eugene Ormandy conducting. The New York Philharmonic, with John Barbirolli conducting, will appear for the first time in Pittsburgh in ten years, on Thursday evening, November 23. The annual visit of the Boston Symphony, under Koussevitzky, will be on Saturday evening, December 16, and Sunday afternoon, December 17. The Philadelphia Orchestra returns for a spring concert on May 4.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

JUN 3 - 1939

The New Records

Introducing Aitken—Concerto by K. P. E. Bach—The Lighter Side.

By IRVING KOLODIN.

Apparently there are virtues in a limited budget which have not yet been analyzed, artistically. Consider the example of Gamut, whose sparse releases have nevertheless been of high average interest, both in music and performers. Probably if its financial resources were greater, its care would been much less.

The company sustains its precedents in both respects this month with an album issue of the Schubert G minor sonata, played by Webster Aitken. Both are phonographic "firsts," the privilege of recording this work perhaps a reward to Aitken for his arduous services on behalf of Schubert during the last several years.

Though I am not yet convinced that Aitken has precisely the flair of spirit to revitalize Schubert's curiously personal and individualized music, he has attained a very fine intellectual appreciation of its qualities. In such movements as the dramatic first allegro and the racing finale, his qualities of mind and hand give the music the flow and impact of life. However, the lightness of the scherzo is rather too seriously stated, and the lyric adagio, for all of Aitken's sensitized phrasing, is not quite relaxed and expansive. It is, in short, that kind of many-virtued playing whose quality leads one to demand perfection.

As a companion piece, on a single record, Gamut offers Aitken's playing of the C minor fantasia of Mozart (Koechel No. 475) read with crisp detail and a steady concentration on its musical sense. The recording of both works is admirably clear, the tonal range well balanced, though there might be more piano resonance. With the sonata is a splendid essay on the work by William Glock.

Concerto by C. P. E. Bach.

One of the choice items in the Boston Symphony's repertory, certain to reappear from season to season, is the D major concerto for orchestra by the universally admired and universally neglected C. P. E. Bach. Thanks to Victor, it is now available in the permanent form of a beautiful recording by the Koussevitzky orchestra, which meets every test of playing, conducting and recording.

It cannot be argued too strongly, for those who might pass this work by on the basis of its abstract name and unenticing classification, that the music in its three movements is inseparably vital, poetic and satisfying. The slow movement is a heartwarming soliloquy that indicates anew how arbitrary any classification of great composers is that omits this Bach. The work is played, of course, in the Maximilian Steinberg version, and it is superbly recorded.

Singles.

Rondo in A minor (Mozart). A recording by Ignace Jan Paderewski that is more than a sentimental memento for those who were denied his personal appearance last week. It is infinitely better played than anything on his recent broadcast, finely controlled and shaped. There is perhaps an overwash of Chopin in his tone, but the plaintive Mozart is admirably revealed. (Victor No. 15421).

Fidelio Overture (Beethoven.) A robust and well-paced performance by Felix Weingartner of the work generally used now as a curtain-raiser for the opera. Both in vigor and technical detail the performance by the London Philharmonic is first-rate. The recording is good. (Columbia No. 69545.)

The Lighter Side.

The producers of Blue Note records, who made their entry with several esoteric specimens of "boogie-woogie" some weeks ago, have extended their interest to band performances, but produced under the same informal, uncommercial circumstances as the first sides. With Albert Ammons as pianist, J. C. Higginbotham on trombone, Frank Newton on trumpet, and Teddy Bunn playing some remarkable guitar they offer a twelve and ten inch disk that should be in every collection of improvised jazz. The hero of this session was plainly Higginbotham (of the Armstrong orchestra) whose solos on "Mighty Blues," a twelve-inch face, must be heard to be believed. Newton is also excellent on this side, with some fine work by John Williams, bass, and Sidney Catlett, drums. The ten-inch sides are by the same men, with Newton omitted on one and Higginbotham on the other. The "Weary Land Blues," which Higginbotham leads, is remarkably sober in mood and atmosphere, also genuinely eloquent.

Recommended: The latest in the cycle of rhythm-patter songs seems to be "Well All Right," borrowed, if that is the word, from a characteristic Negro blues, and put together in Andrews Sisters' style by, of all people, the Andrew Sisters, on Decca 2462. With it is the "Beer Barrel Polka" which is no more than the other side. For an uncommonly pleasant sweet tune try "Stairway to the Skies" (extracted from Matt Malneck's "Park Avenue Suite") on Brunswick 8331. The orchestra is Kay Kayser's, and the singer Harry Babitt.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST-DISPATCH

JUN 4 - 1939

89

Off The Records

By Thomas B. Sherman

THE Columbia recording of the Schubert B Flat Major Symphony by the London Philharmonic Orchestra under the direction of Sir Thomas Beecham is a prize item in every respect. The symphony itself is a continuous delight and though it does not aspire to the importance of the C Major Symphony its length is much better suited to its content. The unlabored lyricism of all four movements give it all the impetus and interest sustaining quality that it needs.

All of the director's efforts have been directed toward conserving its lyricism and enhancing its grace, and his success in these respects makes the performance as nearly perfect as one could expect if one is willing to concede the correctness of this approach. Tempos are deliberate but the pulse is so steady and the inward propulsion so unremitting and so effortless that it never seems to drag.

Compared to Beecham's recording, the earlier Victor record made by Leo Blech and the Berlin Philharmonic seems rough and overbold. A closer comparison, however, shows that there is much to be said for Blech's interpretation and indicates that a choice between the two would have to be a matter of personal taste. Beecham is more subtle in his shading, more songlike in his rhythms and his orchestral texture is smoother; Blech presents the music with more contrast and more animal spirits. Collectors who can afford it would do well to possess both volumes. The Beecham volume includes part of the Entr'acte music from Schubert's "Rosamunde."

—o-o—

COLUMBIA ALSO presents another major recording in Walter Gieseking's performance of Beethoven's "Appassionata" Sonata. This is the first recording made by Gieseking in the United States, and it is significant both as a tour de force of demoniac virtuosity and unchallengable musicianship. The storm and strife of the last movement should meet the approval of the most uncompromising Beethoven addicts.

There are two other recordings of the "Appassionata" that come to mind, one by Schnabel and one by Harold Bauer, and there are probably others. But the only one which can stand comparison with that of Gieseking is the forceful performance by Schnabel.

Hearing the Brahms Alto Rhapsody as performed by Marian Anderson with the assistance of the Philadelphia Orchestra and the University of Pennsylvania Choral Society is an affecting musical experience and one that shouldn't be avoided arbitrarily. But whether this may be attributed to Brahms or Miss Anderson is an open question. The dark and joyless music is probably a faithful reflection of Goethe's poem "Hartzreise im Winter," but it is music that few persons could like for its own sake.

Those who do like it, however, will rejoice in the present interpretation, for Miss Anderson not only has the appropriate vocal quality but also the emotional intensity that the music must have. The accompaniment offered by the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy is no more than ordinary.

The volume of three records also includes three Brahms songs sung by Miss Anderson: "Dein Blaues Auge," "Der Schmied" and "Immer Leiser Mein Schlummer."

—o-o—

THE PRIZE single record of the month is that of Weber's "Invitation to the Waltz" made by Arturo Toscanini and the London B. B. C. orchestra. If Toscanini could force the "William Tell" overture to sound as if it were being performed for the first time it is not surprising that he could make something startlingly fresh out of Weber's well-worn but more grateful masterpiece. The exhilaration of the more animated passages makes dance theme—further stressed by a subtle attenuation of the first notes of each measure—even more haunting.

It is not unusual to regard the various sons of Sebastian Bach as young men with a poor understanding of their father's genius. This may have been so, but the Concerto for Orchestra in D Major by Karl Philip Emanuel Bach can rightly be regarded as a continuation of a style made significant by the elder Bach and by Vivaldi. Musical sharks can undoubtedly point out that the composer was more the harmonist than the contrapuntalist. Even so the music of this concerto has more in common with its antecedents than its successors. And more important still, it is music rich in content and skillfully scored.

The excellent recording made by Koussevitzky and the Boston orchestra (Victor, two records) was done by a small orchestra from the transcription by Maximilian Steinberg.

—o-o—

A NOVELTY in the July releases which may be described as more arresting than important is the Concerto for Two Pianos by Harl McDonald, the Philadelphia composer (Victor, three records). The music is performed impressively by Jeanne Behrends, Alexander Kelberine and the Philadelphia orchestra under the direction of Leopold Stokowski. In general, the piece is overscored. It is too rich in color, too lavish in orchestration and makes too much of commonplace material.

Felix Weingartner, the dependable stand-by of the Columbia staff of artists, makes an interesting contribution to the July discs with an authoritative recording of Beethoven's "Viennese Dances." The album also includes the Entr'acte music from Beethoven's "Egmont."

THIS CLIPPING FROM DAYTON, OHIO
JOURNAL

JUN 4 - 1939

Emanuel-Bach Concerto Among June Recordings

Griffes and Chadwick Works Interpreted by Quartet

By Merab Eberle.

The eighteenth century public believed that not John Sebastian Bach but his son, Karl Phillipp Emanuel Bach, was the time's great composer. However, a couple of centuries has so established the father as the favorite that most of us are bewildered at the mention of Emanuel Bach's name. Therefore, Victor's recording of Emanuel Bach's Concerto for Orchestra in D Major will have its interest. The music will come as a surprise to many, since it is extraordinarily good. The Boston Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, interprets the work faultlessly.

THIS CLIPPING FROM LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
GAZETTE

JUN [illegible]

RECORD REVIEWS

K. P. E. Bach: "Concerto for Orchestra in D Major," played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the Direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Album of two twelve inch disks, Victor.

The renowned and prolific Johann Sebastian Bach was not limited in his activities to the field of music alone. He was the father of twenty children all of whom he educated musically, several of them becoming musicians of marked ability. This Concerto is the work of Karl Philipp Emanuel, his second son, a composer of considerable renown during his lifetime, and rather unjustly neglected since. The "Concert in D" is one of the most extraordinarily beautiful works that has come to light in recent times, especially the second movement which so touches ones inmost being as to bring moisture to the eyes. A worthy son of a great father! We accord Mr. Koussevitzky warmest thanks for this unique and rare performance.

Mozart: "Rondo in A Minor" played by Ignace Jan Paderewski, one twelve inch disk, Victor.

Enduringly beautiful is this Rondo by Mozart, with its lovely recurring melody, exquisite ornamentation, and the inner significance of its development.

Mr. Paderewski invests it with a twilight coloring of tone, and a beautiful lyricism that produces a meditative and reflective mood of haunting beauty. This is music that is close to the master's heart, and brings forth that quality in his art which merits for him the title of "the sweetest singer ever to play the piano."

Beethoven: "Concerto in D Major, op 61 for Violin and Orchestra," played by Joseph Szigeti, with Symphony Orchestra conducted by Bruno Walter. Album of five twelve inch disks, Columbia.

The tremendous significance of Beethoven's music and its hold over the listener is due both to a compelling quality of spirituality as well as the "earthy" tang of many of his finales, with their folk flavour. All that is finest in Beethoven is summed up in this magnificent Concerto which is a challenge to the highest qualities of artistry of every violin virtuoso. Mr. Szigeti performs it in monumental fashion, bringing out its varied moods of transfigured resignation, soaring faith and aspiration. The energetic folk dance quality of the finale, and the thrilling cadenzas are all played with incredible ease and lustrous tone.

The Orchestra under Bruno Walter plays in complete sympathy with the soloist and provides an accompaniment of singular beauty.

B. Trans.

MUSIC

June 8/39

Phonograph Records

Orchestral Music, Symphonic and Otherwise, By Top-Ranking Conductors and Orchestras

By ARTHUR W. HEPNER

Trends toward program building in the issuance of records are not always fortuitous, since the mating of specific works is as likely as not to produce a morganatic marriage. Victor's combination of performances of Beethoven's First Symphony and Brahms' "Tragic" Overture by Toscanini and the B. B. C. Symphony Orchestra (M 507) is a telling example of this kind of a procedure. The recordings of both works are indeed excellent and the performances under Toscanini's baton are sparkling and bouyant. To some extent the British Orchestra may lack the flexibility of the native orchestras that have performed under the Maestro. But for those who like the electrifying Toscanini mannerisms more than the earthiness of Weingartner this performance of the First Symphony will prove wholly satisfying. In the face of Toscanini's polished, trim rendition of the Symphony, the presence of the "Tragic" Overture becomes more absurd. The coherent, sprightly First Symphony is too much competition for the bombastic, rambling Overture.

More Bostonia

Last winter Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra introduced Aaron Copland's "El Salon Mexico," a brilliantly expressive orchestral work, to audiences here and in New York. Victor seized the opportunity to record the piece (M 546) and accorded it the high powered recording seemingly reserved for the Boston Symphony. The music itself is probably Copland's most ornamented and virile score. It contrives to recreate the spirit of Mexico City's leading dance hall and does a rather faithful job. The orchestration is lush and the rhythms are provoking. Melodically the piece has its sources in Mexican folk lore which the composer has employed to achieve the authentic flavor. Save for an incongruous odd side containing an arrangement of the "Song of the Volga Boatmen" for brass orchestra, made by Stravinsky, this set is one of the finest in the already splendid Boston Symphony Series.

From Columbia

The "Surprise" Symphony of Haydn has been in need of an up-to-date recording for some time and Columbia has taken the initiative by issuing a performance of the Symphony by Howard Barlow and the CBS Symphony Orchsetra (Set 363). It would be pleasing to report that this set completely satisfies the need, but the trouble is that Mr. Barlow's interpretation does not quite fill the bill. The playing of the orchestra is competent, as those who listen to it over the CBS network will agree, but the performance seems to lack much of the character of Haydn, the twists and turns, stresses and accents. Still the set is the best of those available. It is more even than the Koussevitzky set made several years ago and of course it has the advantage of having been recorded in Liederkranz Hall, New York City, where the acoustics are matchless. Beyond this the spaciousness of the recording is something to be envied.

Also under the Columbia auspices is another set of much distinction: a new recording of the Brahms' Third Symphony by Weingartner and the London Philharmonic Orchestra (Set 353). In endeavoring to provide posterity with a complete Weingartner series of the Beethoven and Brahms Symphonies (curiously he has recorded all but the Second Symphonies of each) Columbia is winning many friends. For Weingartner is a conductor who, without fanfare or legend, turns out a performance that compares with the best of them. He may, it is true, neglect certain details, but the conception of line, the sweep and the honesty of his interpretation greatly overshadow his deficits. In this set he is presiding over the splendid London Philharmonic whose wind section is excellent and whose oboist is the incomparable Leon Goosens. The surface is quiet and the set is rather resonant.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUN 10 1939

The genial D major Concerto of K. P. E. Bach should come into popularity with such a recording as Dr. Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have made of it for Victor (Musical Masterpiece Series M-559). In the scoring for small orchestra by Maximilian Steinberg wind and strings come through with luminous transparency.

The two allegros have many of the qualities for which Johann Sebastian was respected and in the adagio the son looks forward to fresh fields which may have seemed greener but which the parent had no need to covet. K. P. E. Bach was an artist rather than a milepost in history as this set ought to prove and besides the Concerto is friendly music to have around.

* * *

Charles M. Courboin plays for Victor on two sides (15420) the chorale prelude Christ lag in Todesbanden and the Sonatina from the cantata "God's Time Is the Best Time." Both of these organ numbers are on the subdued side, partly due to the sombre coloring of the music itself.

* * *

Victor also offers a new recording of the ever-popular Roman Carnival Overture of Berlioz as done by a symphony orchestra conducted by Eugene Bigot. Its melodies and brilliant effects are reproduced with a reasonable fidelity.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
EVENING POST

JUN 10 1939

Records: News and Reviews

Gieseking vs. Larry Clinton, a Toscanini Favorite and a "Pops" Program

By SAMUEL CHOTZINOFF

Walter Gieseking restores one popular piece to its original form and makes his own arrangement of another on a short Columbia record; the first is Debussy's "Reverie," of Larry Clinton fame, and the second is Gieseking's transcription for piano solo of Richard Strauss' song "Serenade," one might almost add "of Elizabeth Schumann fame."

This brief record, however, is only the modest beginning of a group of recordings which are the first made by Gieseking in this country. He goes on with another ten-inch record of the "Alborado del Gracioso" of Ravel. The piece de resistance, a logical successor to his recent "Waldstein" Sonata, is a three-record album of Beethoven's "Apassionata" Sonata.

These are all records to warm the cockles of a discriminating record collector's heart and are graded in merit only as you prefer Debussy to Beethoven, or Beethoven to Ravel, for both the pianist and the Columbia engineers were in splendid shape when they took time off from more routine labors to record these select items.

* * *

Carl Maria von Weber's "Invitation to the Waltz," in the Berlioz version for orchestra, has always been a favorite of Toscanini's, and a favorite, of course, of Toscanini audiences. Recorded by Victor on a twelve-inch record, it is another presentation of Toscanini and the BBC Symphony Orchestra.

This recording is ingratiating as only Toscanini can be. To hear it is to buy it, so, if your budget doesn't include $2 for a record, steer clear of this one.

* * *

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston "Pops" Orchestra are heard on records this month in a real "pops" program. An album of three short and two long records contain the following items: Glinka's "Ruslan and Ludmilla" Overture; two Negro spirituals ("Deep River" and "Nobody Knows de Trouble I've Seen"), "Five Miniatures," by Paul White ("By the Lake," "Caravan Song," "Waltz of a Teenie Doll," "Hippopotamus Dance" and "Mosquito Dance"), "Doctrinen Waltz" by Eduard Strauss, Intermezzo from Granados' "Goyescas" and the Polonaise from Tchaikovsky's "Eugen Onegin."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WASHINGTON, D. C.
NEWS

JUN 10 1939

RECORDED MUSIC

By DISCOPHILE

Why poor old Tschaikowsky's last three symphonies get done to death while there is a perfectly fresh and beautiful "Serenade" for orchestras to play is just one of those mysteries of the concert hall on which the record companies capitalize.

You can get his "Serenade in C" (Victor M-556) for strings in an excellent performance by the B. B. C. Orchestra conducted by Sir Adrian Boult. Few of Tschaikowsky's compositions come as close as this to the Russian composer's idol, Mozart, in its economy of workmanship, its clean-cut contrapuntal texture. Even the last movement, with its native Russian theme and spirit, reflects the spirit of relaxed restraint which is seldom associated with the turbulent Slav. The performance is really superior, full of life yet not too rambunctious, and the recording is excellent.

The great Bach of the 18th Century was not Johann Sebastian but his son Karl Philip Emanuel. Most of his contemporaries, as a matter of fact, thought the son had it all over the stuffy old-fashioned father. While no one is likely to agree with this judgment today, you will find much to back up the appreciative music-lovers of that day in the K. P. E. Bach in "Concerto for Orchestra in D major" (Victor M-559) which is brilliantly played by the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky. The music has been arranged for small orchestra but the spirit and the fabric of the original have been retained.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WASHINGTON, D. C.
Times HERALD

JUN 11 1939

Included in the list of June releases may be found two works of major size that might be termed summer music; music that is not too exciting, but is colorful, warm, sentimental and just entirely beautiful. Reference is made to Tschaikowsky's Serenade in C Major recorded by the B. B. C. Symphony Orchestra, Sir Adrian Boult conducting, and K. P. E. Bach's Concerto for Orchestra in D Major recorded by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. These works are offered by Victor in albums M-556 and M-559, respectively.

The Tschaikowsky Serenade is one of those works by the great Russian composer that have been overshadowed by his more dramatic works and has not appeared on concert programs as often as the work deserves. To get an all-inclusive appraisal of his ability as a composer, such lesser known works should not be neglected by the music lover. The superb string section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are heard to advantage in the charming music of Bach's Concerto. The exquisite taste imposed by the noted conductor brings out the beauty of the old classic in exquisite form.

The rising star of the American baritone, Igor Gorin, is heralded by a steady and welcome flow of recordings by him. This month he sings Largo al Factotum from Barber of Seville and Mattei's Non S Ver

---

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR

JUN 11 1939

Review of Recordings

By Alice Eversman.

Harl McDonald, the newly appointed manager of the Philadelphia Orchestra, has one of his compositions among the releases this month by the Victor Co. It is a concerto for two pianos and orchestra played by Jeanne Behrend and Alexander Kelberine together with the Philadelphia Orchestra with Leopold Stokowski directing.

The concerto was written in 1936 and in it Mr. McDonald has attempted a few innovations which give a distinct color to the work. As the composer says, "My purpose—was to create a work for orchestra with decoration in the solo instruments rather than to use the orchestra as a background for the soloists." The rich orchestral material is what strikes one immediately with the corresponding thought that it is not an especially grateful work for the soloists with the exception of a few passages. These can be found in some measures of the first movement, in all of the second and to a great extent in the third.

The latter is a Jaurezca, a dance of Northern Mexico, and full of Mexican rhythm and certain tonal colorings of the characteristic music of that nation, with a plentiful use of percussion instruments. Outside of these points, the concerto is the work of a fine craftsman who thinks in broad and sonorous terms. The two young artists, who have already been heard with the orchestra in Washington, give a brilliant performance making their part stand out as much as is possible.

Side by side with this work of a living composer is a "Concerto for Orchestra in D Major" by K. P. E. Bach, played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitsky conducting. In listening to these two concertos, one wonders why the intense vitality of the older composer finds so little counterpart in the modern writers, for one is impressed at once by the abundant and spontaneous vigor of Karl Phillip Emanuel in every measure. Sandwiched in between the lively first and third movements is a lovely slower movement full of poetry that also has strength in it.

The concerto is for strings alone and is scored by Maximilian Steinberg. The very human qualities of the music of this popular son of Johann Sebastian will undoubtedly appeal to the present-day listener to the same remarkable degree that it did during the composer's lifetime. In fact, the popularity which the music of Karl Phillip Emanuel achieved far exceeded that of his more gifted father and one can understand this superficial appreciation when hearing this example of his type of writing.

Seventeen years before Harl McDonald was born, Tschiakowsky knew a rare bit of success when his "Serenade in C Major" was performed in Moscow. It is given out this month as played by the B. B. C. Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Sir Adrian Boult. This fine work by the Russian composer carries very little mark of the melancholy and passionate questings that can be found in other of his writings but holds to a superlative degree the many earmarks of his talent when operating in a serenely inspired mood. He has tried his hand at various forms in this serenade, beginning with the first movement, a "Pezzo in Forma di Sonatina," to the lovely and familiar waltz of the second movement, the noble elegie and lastly the fiery little "Tema Russo" with which the composition ends.

For the singers there is a single disc with a beautiful recording by Kirsten Flagstad of the "Du Bist der Lenz" aria from "Die Walkuere" and "Euch Lueften die Mein Klagen," from "Lohengrin," and an album of Brahms' songs by Marian Anderson. Two records of this album are given over to the "Alto Rhapsodie," in which the soloist is assisted by the male chorus of the University of Pennsylvania Choral Society. All the songs are accompanied by the Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy conducting. The other numbers are "Dein Blaues Auge," "Der Schmied" and "Immer Leiser Wird Mein Schlummer."

The "Alto Rhapsody" is a setting of three stanzas of Goethe's poem, "Harzreise im Winter," which form one movement. This work, of which Brahms was extremely fond and which he told Clara Schumann was "his bridal song," is an intensely moving vocal work which Miss Anderson sings superbly.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
DAYTON, O.
NEWS WEEK

JUN 12 1939

RECORD WEEK

BACH (KARL P.E.)—Orchestral Concerto, D Major. (Serge Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony. Two 12-inch Victor records, $4.50.) A delightful work by the third and most distinguished of J. S. Bach's sons is presented in a sympathetic orchestral arrangement by the Russian composer Maximilian Steinberg.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NATION
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUN 17 1939

RECORDS

THE fine Concerto in D by K. P. E. Bach, with its particularly lovely slow movement, is played with superb phrasing and color, if also with occasional overemphasis, by the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky; and the performance is recorded by Victor (two records, $4.50) with no less superb clarity and fidelity, if also with brilliance in the violins that is occasionally excessive. Toscanini's performance of Weber's "Invitation to the Waltz" with the New York Philharmonic was enchanting; what Victor now offers ($2) is a performance with the less sensitive and subtle B. B. C. Symphony, and one that is so reverberantly and coarsely recorded that one cannot hear what is usually unmistakable—the sharpness of contour that is in a Toscanini performance with no matter what orchestra. A better job by the B. B. C. Symphony's strings under Boult and by the H. M. V. recording staff is the set (three records, $5) of Tchaikovsky's charming Serenade Opus 48. And a fine performance of Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" Overture by an unnamed orchestra under Bigot ($1.50) is less dynamic in phrasing and orchestral coloring than Beecham's, but gains by being less deliberate in pace.

Under Stokowski the Philadelphia Orchestra, assisted by Jeanne Behrend and Alexander Kelberine, contributes a gorgeous-sounding performance of Harl McDonald's Concerto for two pianos (three records, $6.50), which is fluent, agreeable to the ear, effective, and in fact everything but important. Under Ormandy the orchestra ably supports Flagstad in "Du bist der Lenz" from "Die Walküre" and "Euch Lüften" from "Lohengrin" ($1.50), and collaborates with Marian Anderson in Brahms's Alto Rhapsody, which is one of his least enticing works, and in three songs—"Dein blaues Auge," "Der Schmied," and "Immer leiser wird mein Schlummer"—which suffer from a metallic quality in Miss Anderson's voice and a lack of emotional warmth in her singing. If, moreover, there is one song that will take nothing but the percussive accompaniment of the piano, it is "Der Schmied"; and I don't like the lush orchestral accompaniments for the others any better (three records, $6).

In a two-record set ($4.50) Griffes's Two Sketches based on Indian themes, well played by the Coolidge Quartet, reveal skill in a type of manipulation for which other material would be better suited. And on a single record ($2) is Mozart's exquisite Rondo in A minor K. 511, in a performance by Paderewski that has some sensitiveness and grace but nothing commensurate with the glamor of his name.

All things considered, the most noteworthy releases of the month are the first recordings of the pianist Webster Aitken, issued by Gamut. The qualities that set this extraordinary young artist apart are to be heard at their best, their most effective in the legitimate sense of the word, on the single record ($1.50) of the powerfully phrased and integrated performance of Mozart's Fantasia in C minor K. 475—a performance which triumphs over dull recording and poor surfaces. In Schubert's great posthumous Sonata in C minor (three records, $5) one hears the same artist, but playing without the same inner repose, and failing therefore to achieve the same power. Where the first movement should be imposingly dramatic, the playing makes it feverish and distorted; where it should, by contrast, be relaxed, the playing continues to make it restless; and other things of the sort occur in subsequent movements, but not in the last.

B. H. HAGGIN

70

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
EVENING POST
JUN 10 1939

Records: News and Reviews

Gieseking vs. Larry Clinton, a Toscanini Favorite and a "Pops" Program

By SAMUEL CHOTZINOFF

Walter Gieseking restores one popular piece to its original form and makes his own arrangement of another on a short Columbia record; the first is Debussy's "Reverie," of Larry Clinton fame, and the second is Gieseking's transcription for piano solo of Richard Strauss' song "Serenade," one might almost add "of Elizabeth Schumann fame."

This brief record, however, is only the modest beginning of a group of recordings which are the first made by Gieseking in this country. He goes on with another ten-inch record of the "Alborado del Gracioso" of Ravel. The piece de resistance, a logical successor to his recent "Waldstein" Sonata, is a three-record album of Beethoven's "Apassionata" Sonata.

These are all records to warm the cockles of a discriminating record collector's heart and are graded in merit only as you prefer Debussy to Beethoven, or Beethoven to Ravel, for both the pianist and the Columbia engineers were in splendid shape when they took time off from more routine labors to record these select items.

* * *

Carl Maria von Weber's "Invitation to the Waltz," in the Berlioz version for orchestra, has always been a favorite of Toscanini's, and a favorite, of course, of Toscanini audiences. Recorded by Victor on a twelve-inch record, it is another presentation of Toscanini and the BBC Symphony Orchestra.

This recording is ingratiating as only Toscanini can be. To hear it is to buy it, so, if your budget doesn't include $2 for a record, steer clear of this one.

* * *

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston "Pops" Orchestra are heard on records this month in a real "pops" program. An album of three short and two long records contain the following items: Glinka's "Ruslan and Ludmilla" Overture; two Negro spirituals ("Deep River" and "Nobody Knows de Trouble I've Seen"), "Five Miniatures," by Paul White ("By the Lake," "Caravan Song," "Waltz of a Teenie Doll," "Hippopotamus Dance" and "Mosquito Dance"), "Doctrinen Waltz" by Eduard Strauss, Intermezzo from Granados' "Goyescas" and the Polonaise from Tchaikovsky's "Eugen Onegin."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WASHINGTON, D. C.
NEWS
JUN 10 1939

RECORDED MUSIC

By DISCOPHILE

Why poor old Tschaikowsky's last three symphonies get done to death while there is a perfectly fresh and beautiful "Serenade" for orchestras to play is just one of those mysteries of the concert hall on which the record companies capitalize.

You can get his "Serenade in C" (Victor M-556) for strings in an excellent performance by the B. B. C. Orchestra conducted by Sir Adrian Boult. Few of Tschaikowsky's compositions come as close as this to the Russian composer's idol, Mozart, in its economy of workmanship, its clean-cut contrapuntal texture. Even the last movement, with its native Russian theme and spirit, reflects the spirit of relaxed restraint which is seldom associated with the turbulent Slav. The performance is really superior, full of life yet not too rambunctious, and the recording is excellent.

The great Bach of the 18th Century was not Johann Sebastian but his son Karl Philip Emanuel. Most of his contemporaries, as a matter of fact, thought the son had it all over the stuffy old-fashioned father. While no one is likely to agree with this judgment today, you will find much to back up the appreciative music-lovers of that day in the K. P. E. Bach in "Concerto for Orchestra in D major" (Victor M-559) which is brilliantly played by the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky. The music has been arranged for small orchestra but the spirit and the fabric of the original have been retained.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WASHINGTON, D. C.
Times HERALD
JUN 11 1939

Included in the list of June releases may be found two works of major size that might be termed summer music; music that is not too exciting, but is colorful, warm, sentimental and just entirely beautiful. Reference is made to Tschaikowsky's Serenade in C Major recorded by the B. B. C. Symphony Orchestra, Sir Adrian Boult conducting, and K. P. E. Bach's Concerto for Orchestra in D Major recorded by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. These works are offered by Victor in albums M-556 and M-559, respectively.

The Tschaikowsky Serenade is one of those works by the great Russian composer that have been overshadowed by his more dramatic works and has not appeared on concert programs as often as the work deserves. To get an all-inclusive appraisal of his ability as a composer, such lesser known works should not be neglected by the music lover. The superb string section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are heard to advantage in the charming music of Bach's Concerto. The exquisite taste imposed by the noted conductor brings out the beauty of the old classic in exquisite form.

The rising star of the American baritone, Igor Gorin, is heralded by a steady and welcome flow of recordings by him. This month he sings Largo al Factotum from Barber of Seville and Mattei's Non S Ver

---

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
JUN 11 1939

Review of Recordings

By Alice Eversman.

Harl McDonald, the newly appointed manager of the Philadelphia Orchestra, has one of his compositions among the releases this month by the Victor Co. It is a concerto for two pianos and orchestra played by Jeanne Behrend and Alexander Kelberine together with the Philadelphia Orchestra with Leopold Stokowski directing.

The concerto was written in 1936 and in it Mr. McDonald has attempted a few innovations which give a distinct color to the work. As the composer says, "My purpose—was to create a work for orchestra with decoration in the solo instruments rather than to use the orchestra as a background for the soloists." The rich orchestral material is what strikes one immediately with the corresponding thought that it is not an especially grateful work for the soloists with the exception of a few passages. These can be found in some measures of the first movement, in all of the second and to a great extent in the third.

The latter is a Jaurezca, a dance of Northern Mexico, and full of Mexican rhythm and certain tonal colorings of the characteristic music of that nation, with a plentiful use of percussion instruments. Outside of these points, the concerto is the work of a fine craftsman who thinks in broad and sonorous terms. The two young artists, who have already been heard with the orchestra in Washington, give a brilliant performance making their part stand out as much as is possible.

Side by side with this work of a living composer is a "Concerto for Orchestra in D Major" by K. P. E. Bach, played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitsky conducting. In listening to these two concertos, one wonders why the intense vitality of the older composer finds so little counterpart in the modern writers, for one is impressed at once by the abundant and spontaneous vigor of Karl Phillip Emanuel in every measure. Sandwiched in between the lively first and third movements is a lovely slower movement full of poetry that also has strength in it.

The concerto is for strings alone and is scored by Maximilian Steinberg. The very human qualities of the music of this popular son of Johann Sebastian will undoubtedly appeal to the present-day listener to the same remarkable degree that it did during the composer's lifetime. In fact, the popularity which the music of Karl Phillip Emanuel achieved far exceeded that of his more gifted father and one can understand this superficial appreciation when hearing this example of his type of writing.

Seventeen years before Harl McDonald was born, Tschiakowsky knew a rare bit of success when his "Serenade in C Major" was performed in Moscow. It is given out this month as played by the B. B. C. Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Sir Adrian Boult. This fine work by the Russian composer carries very little mark of the melancholy and passionate questings that can be found in other of his writings but holds to a superlative degree the many earmarks of his talent when operating in a serenely inspired mood. He has tried his hand at various forms in this serenade, beginning with the first movement, a "Pezzo in Forma di Sonatina," to the lovely and familiar waltz of the second movement, the noble elegie and lastly the fiery little "Tema Russo" with which the composition ends.

For the singers there is a single disc with a beautiful recording by Kirsten Flagstad of the "Du Bist der Lenz" aria from "Die Walkuere" and "Euch Lueften die Mein Klagen," from "Lohengrin," and an album of Brahms' songs by Marian Anderson. Two records of this album are given over to the "Alto Rhapsodie," in which the soloist is assisted by the male chorus of the University of Pennsylvania Choral Society. All the songs are accompanied by the Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy conducting. The other numbers are "Dein Blaues Auge," "Der Schmied" and "Immer Leiser Wird Mein Schlummer."

The "Alto Rhapsody" is a setting of three stanzas of Goethe's poem, "Harzreise im Winter," which form one movement. This work, of which Brahms was extremely fond and which he told Clara Schumann was "his bridal song," is an intensely moving vocal work which Miss Anderson sings superbly.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
DAYTON, O.
NEWS WEEK
JUN 12 1939

RECORD WEEK

BACH (KARL P.E.)—Orchestral Concerto, D Major. (Serge Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony. Two 12-inch Victor records, $4.50.) A delightful work by the third and most distinguished of J. S. Bach's sons is presented in a sympathetic orchestral arrangement by the Russian composer Maximilian Steinberg.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NATION
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JUN 17 1939

RECORDS

THE fine Concerto in D by K. P. E. Bach, with its particularly lovely slow movement, is played with superb phrasing and color, if also with occasional overemphasis, by the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky; and the performance is recorded by Victor (two records, $4.50) with no less superb clarity and fidelity, if also with brilliance in the violins that is occasionally excessive. Toscanini's performance of Weber's "Invitation to the Waltz" with the New York Philharmonic was enchanting; what Victor now offers ($2) is a performance with the less sensitive and subtle B. B. C. Symphony, and one that is so reverberantly and coarsely recorded that one cannot hear what is usually unmistakable—the sharpness of contour that is in a Toscanini performance with no matter what orchestra. A better job by the B. B. C. Symphony's strings under Boult and by the H. M. V. recording staff is the set (three records, $5) of Tchaikovsky's charming Serenade Opus 48. And a fine performance of Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" Overture by an unnamed orchestra under Bigot ($1.50) is less dynamic in phrasing and orchestral coloring than Beecham's, but gains by being less deliberate in pace.

Under Stokowski the Philadelphia Orchestra, assisted by Jeanne Behrend and Alexander Kelberine, contributes a gorgeous-sounding performance of Harl McDonald's Concerto for two pianos (three records, $6.50), which is fluent, agreeable to the ear, effective, and in fact everything but important. Under Ormandy the orchestra ably supports Flagstad in "Du bist der Lenz" from "Die Walküre" and "Euch Lüften" from "Lohengrin" ($1.50), and collaborates with Marian Anderson in Brahms's Alto Rhapsody, which is one of his least enticing works, and in three songs—"Dein blaues Auge," "Der Schmied," and "Immer leiser wird mein Schlummer"—which suffer from a metallic quality in Miss Anderson's voice and a lack of emotional warmth in her singing. If, moreover, there is one song that will take nothing but the percussive accompaniment of the piano, it is "Der Schmied"; and I don't like the lush orchestral accompaniments for the others any better (three records, $6).

In a two-record set ($4.50) Griffes's Two Sketches based on Indian themes, well played by the Coolidge Quartet, reveal skill in a type of manipulation for which other material would be better suited. And on a single record ($2) is Mozart's exquisite Rondo in A minor K. 511, in a performance by Paderewski that has some sensitiveness and grace but nothing commensurate with the glamor of his name.

All things considered, the most noteworthy releases of the month are the first recordings of the pianist Webster Aitken, issued by Gamut. The qualities that set this extraordinary young artist apart are to be heard at their best, their most effective in the legitimate sense of the word, on the single record ($1.50) of the powerfully phrased and integrated performance of Mozart's Fantasia in C minor K. 475—a performance which triumphs over dull recording and poor surfaces. In Schubert's great posthumous Sonata in C minor (three records, $5) one hears the same artist, but playing without the same inner repose, and failing therefore to achieve the same power. Where the first movement should be imposingly dramatic, the playing makes it feverish and distorted; where it should, by contrast, be relaxed, the playing continues to make it restless; and other things of the sort occur in subsequent movements, but not in the last.

B. H. HAGGIN

71

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
EVENING POST

JUN 17 1939

Records: News and Reviews

Beecham, Harty Collaborate in an Album of Schubert—Native Quartet Music

Although the fact that Schubert's famous C Major Symphony is marked "No. 7" implies that he wrote no less than six others, few music hall habitues can boast of even a casual familiarity with any of the others, with the exception, of course, of the equally or more famous "Unfinished."

The "Tragic" (No. 4, in C minor) and the Fifth, in B-flat major, enjoy occasional performances. Sir Thomas Beecham, the London Philharmonic Orchestra and Columbia have filled a long and conspicuously empty niche in the symphonic section of the record cabinet with a splendid recording of the second of these, the Fifth Symphony, in B flat.

Sir Thomas is joined in the album by Sir Hamilton Harty, who conducts the Halle Orchestra in the "Rosamunde" Entr'acte No. 2 and "Shepherd's Melody." Sir Hamilton's contribution is considerably shorter than that of Sir Thomas', the "Rosamunde" pieces being confined to the last of eight record sides.

The symphony is played with the precision and tone quality which are expected of an orchestra as renowned as the London Philharmonic, and Sir Thomas handles it with the care, artistry and grace which are characteristic of him.

Sir Hamilton's selections with the Halle Orchestra bring an attractive album to an ingratiating close.

* * *

America's own Coolidge Quartet fittingly turns to native music in a two-record Victor album. The first three sides contain "Two Sketches" (based on Indian themes) by Charles T. Griffes and the final side is devoted to the second movement (Andante Semplice) of the Fourth Quartet in E minor by George Whitefield Chadwick. The Chadwick movement is apparently based on Negro folk music, although no specific Negro melodies are used.

Only the fact that they are both American justifies coupling Griffes and Chadwick in a record album. These are two pieces as far apart as the poles and certainly not designed to appeal to the same musical taste. They meet on common American ground, however, and the album's strongest selling point is the internationally expert and tonally brilliant performance by the Coolidge ensemble. Indeed, if the rumor that the Coolidge group is recording all of the Beethoven quartets is true, record stocks should rise considerably.

* * *

Magda Tagliafero, pianist, and Denise Soriano, violinist, placed chips on their shoulders when they undertook to record the Mozart Sonata in B flat, K. 454, which has already been recorded by Heifetz and Emanuel Bey.

Placed one against the other, the score is about tied. There were certain acoustical shortcomings about the older recording but in other matters it still has an edge on the present one. However, if you're looking for an up-to-date recording of the sonata, this one will bear looking into.

* * *

After Bach's death, it was his son Karl Philipp Emanuel who was considered the stellar light of the large and considerably musical Bach family. Even the estimable English musicologist Sir Charles Burney considered him more learned than his father and "far before him in variety of modulation."

Contemporary critics can decide for themselves simply by turning to the current recording by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky of Karl Philipp Emanuel Bach's Concerto in D major for Orchestra.

This is a recording that can speak for itself. The concerto is largely string work, so the reason for the choice of the Boston orchestra to record it, or the Boston orchestra's choice of it to record, is no mystery. It takes no musical erudition to recognize the concerto as Bach, but takes lots of it to put your finger on the right Bach.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUN 18 1939

RECENT RECORDINGS

By COMPTON PAKENHAM

LAST week's piece in this department brought home something that on first inspection seemed merely amusing. A correspondent feelingly inquired whether we had heard Marian Anderson's album of Brahms before remarking that the Boston Symphony set of K. P. E. Bach's concerto was the most attractive album of the month. "Though I have not had an opportunity to enjoy it myself . . . it strikes me as unfair to list Miss Anderson's set below any others." Beneath the signature, however, a touch of irony appeared: "A Member of the D. A. R."

We realize that Miss Anderson scored heavily when the organization to which the letter writer belongs put out its neck and that since then the contralto has sung at the Lincoln Memorial and in the White House. Far better, we understand that Toscanini hailed hers as a voice occurring but once in a century. Furthermore, we remember tendering the singer several bouquets of superlatives in this place before any of this happened—in fact, prior to her name appearing on domestic lists. Almost consistently we have hailed her records with delight, but we happened to be disappointed in her album of Brahms.

* * *

These are the details of the recital: Accompanied by the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy, Miss Anderson sings the "Alto Rhapsody" (assisted by the male chorus of the University of Pennsylvania Choral Society) and the songs "Dein blaues Auge," "Der Schmied" and "Immer leiser wird mein Schlummer." Naturally, interest centers on the Rhapsody, of which we know of only one previous recording—by Sigrid Onégin, made in Berlin these many years ago. On the score of age alone the present version would be bound to supersede it.

Goethe's "Harzreise im Winter," inspired by the tortured introvert Plessing, may be pessimistic, but there is no gainsaying its magnificence. Extending three of its verses into the realm of tone, Brahms clothed the lines in music of understanding and experience—though he was only 36 at the time. It is in these respects that Miss Anderson's superb singing falls short. Her voice, projecting the words beautifully, may be primus inter pares, but it seems to be just another perfectly blended instrument in the ensemble. It may be merely prejudice that causes us to imagine we would have preferred the three songs without these rather top-heavy orchestral accompaniments.

* * *

Kirsten Flagstad's latest is a ten-inch devoted to Sieglinde's "Du bist der Lenz" ("Die Walkuere") and Elsa's "Euch Lueften, die mein Klagen" ("Lohengrin"), in which she also is supported by the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy. Miss Flagstad's successive records have caught more and more of an elusive quality that is the essential Flagstad. Confusing sight and sound—as Tristan did at a certain point—there is a luminosity to the tone that defied the reproductive mechanism for a long time.

* * *

It is present here more brightly than we have heard it on records hitherto. The two passages are, of course, widely contrasted in nature. Sieglinde's response to Siegmund's Spring Song is part of the dramatic progression toward the climax of the first act. Elsa's Song to the Breezes is the comparatively lyric Wagner of twenty years earlier. One of the features of Miss Flagstad's art is an intuition as to when drama is inherent in music and when it requires accenting. Any one who has heard and seen her hurl Isolde's curse in the first act cannot accuse her of relying entirely upon her voice.

Sieglinde's is an ecstatic utterance urged forward by the orchestra—in chromatic upward string passages. It is in these that the dramatic movement lies. Ormandy is a trifle on the deferential side, and in addition the singer seems too forward of the orchestra. Further, to go the whole hog over a recording we thoroughly enjoyed, is not this passage well enough known now for the orchestra to end as in the score, in the air, instead of bringing it to an artificial full close on Sieglinde's last word?

* * *

Frederick Jagel seems to have recorded [illegible] before the Siegfried of the sadly mutilated final duet in the Stokowski pot-pourri. Then he made the most creditable individual contribution to an unfortunate set. He now reappears with much less ambitious fare, "The House on the Hill," by Ernest Charles, and "My Parting Gift," by Eleanor Warren. Piano accompaniments are the rather angular ones Edwin McArthur is wont to supply. Such simple songs require equal simplicity in presentation, and Jagel rises to demands more exacting than they may seem. There is a fine polish to his work and the words reproduce perfectly.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CLEVELAND, O.
PLAIN DEALER

JUN 18 1939

Right Off the Records

A Review of Suggested Music for the Home

By Stewart Matter

ONE of the most refreshing orchestral recordings for many a day is the K. P. E. Bach "Concerto in D" arranged for modern orchestra by Maximilian Steinberg.

Though originally written for four strings, the work loses none of its grace and charm by the addition of the wind instruments. The only thing that seems the least foreign is the use of the English horn, an instrument not favored in the classic orchestra. In the adagio it is given a melody of rare beauty, so perfectly proportioned that we think no longer of any technical angle. The adagio is the heart of the work, to be sure, but the vigor and exhuberance of the first and last movements commend them heartily. K. P. E. Bach, one of the illustrious sons of the great J. S. Bach, was one of the leading lights of the Mannheim School, from which Haydn and Mozart both stemmed.

The recording has been done by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitsky. Such a body of strings exists nowhere else; their tone and ensemble are perfection itself. The recording and surfaces are all that can be asked. Victor set 559. $4.50.

Kilenyi Appears Again

We have had several releases of the young Edward Kilenyi in the last half year and have found them all done with excellent taste and technical accomplishment. This month we have the entire opus 10 of the Chopin "Etudes," and after hearing them we look forward eagerly to the opus 25, which it seems is to follow in another set.

We are led to compare Kilenyi's efforts with the standard set by Cortot, whose eminence in the interpretation of Chopin has become to a great extent legendary. Even the keenest admirers of Cortot, and I am one of them, will admit readily that his technique is far from impeccable; but what does so thoroughly satisfy us is the personality he injects into his playing. It is the soul in music most of us seek, and if an artist succeeds in penetrating to the very heart, he has attained his object, and technique is but a means to an end. Cortot is vital but so is Kilenyi, but not to such an extent as the older master. But Kilenyi will satisfy the sticklers who demand technical competence, though he lets you know that several are "pretty hard." Add the mellowing influence of years to Kilenyi's already fine technique, and I wonder if he will not step into Cortot's shoes.

The recording is brilliantly done, with amazing clarity, and the surfaces smooth as glass. Columbia 368. $5.

Shorter Mention

We have had three domestic recordings of the orchestra transcription of Ravel's "Alborado del Gracioso" but to date none of the original piano version. All of a sudden along come two, one by Walter Gieseking (Columbia 17138D) and one by Jesus Maria Sanroma (Victor 4425), each $1. The one by Sanroma can be characterized only as a brilliant technical display, entirely too objective. But it is with Gieseking that we find the ideal subjective feeling, the subtle touches of humor and pathos and the gloriously colored nuances.

Popular Records

In these days we are subjected to all sorts of propaganda, advertising, "will-yous and won't-yous" in every conceivable form. Long have we understood the close tie-up between the motion picture and popular music industries, but the literal deluge of plugging for both the east and west coast fairs has been amazing, all most cleverly camouflaged and sweetened. Here is one of the choice bits, two Decca discs by Tony Martin, with Abe Lyman's Californians giving us the oldsters, "California, Here I Come" and "Home in Pasadena," coupling them with "Avalon" and "Rose Room," two tunes the rage nowadays. A swell job.

From the New York Aquacade comes two tunes, "Blue Evening" and "Yours for a Song," done by Hal Kemp for Victor. On the same list is a glorious conga, "Belen," and a fox with unique instrumental effects, "Adios, Mariquita Linda" by Xavier Cugat.

Several weeks ago Herbert Elwell dealt in this newspaper at some length with the Novachord, a new organ-like instrument with amazingly lifelike reproduction of orchestral tone. The first recording to use this is by Horace Heidt, and no better choice of tunes could have been made, "Sunrise Serenade" and "How Warm It Is the Weather." Brunswick.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST

JUN 18 1939

'Serenade,' Which Pleased Even Chaikovski, Gets New Audience

Piece That Was 'Favorite' With Composer Appears on Records; So Does Concerto By K. P. E. Bach and Sketches by Griffes

By Jay Walz.

One day in October, 1880, Peter Ilitch Chaikovski, the up and coming Russian composer, wrote in a letter to his friend, Nadeja von Meck, as follows:

"You can imagine, dear friend, that recently my muse has been very benevolent, when I tell you that I have written two long works very rapidly; a Festival Overture for the Exhibition and a serenade in four movements for string orchestra. The overture will be very noisy. I wrote it without much warmth of enthusiasm; therefore it has no artistic value. The serenade on the contrary, I wrote from an inward impulse; I felt it, and venture to hope that this work is not without artistic qualities."

The overture to which the composer attributed "no artistic value," was, mark you, the famous Overture 1812, which, written for an occasion (the consecration of the Cathedral of the Saviour in Moscow and has been played everywhere ever since.

The serenade, which Chaikovski "hoped" might have artistic merit because he "wrote from an inward impulse," many will hear for the first time through a new Victor album (M-566, three large discs). Although it became a favorite with the composer, it's not well known today. Which is unfortunate, since Chaikovski's appraisal of the two works is altogether right.

The serenade, it is apparent from the performance given by Sir Adrian Boult and the B. B. C. Symphony, is a heartwarming number, full of those soulful tunes that poured from Tschiakowsky when he was in good form. One of the most popular of Tschaikowsky waltzes forms the second movement of the serenade. (it was a surprise to find it in its original setting); it's genuine charm has been long recognized. Equally genuine, and equally deserving, is the charm of "The Piece in Sonata Form" (first movement), and the "Elegie" (third movement) and the "Tema Russo" (finale).

The B. B. C. Symphony isn't quite up to said charm, but it still makes breezy music, and the album on the whole is satisfactory.

The Bach "Concerto for Orchestra in D Major" in Victor's two-record set M-559 is by son K. P. E., not old J. S. But what with the orchestrating done by Maximilian Steinberg and the performance turned in by Serge Koussevitzky's Boston Symphony nothing by the patriarch, himself, could be more regal, or at times more musical. The structure of the work, written originally for four strings, is sturdy enough for the instrumental build-up given here. In fact, I'd say it gains considerable strength through the Steinberg streatment without losing any of the Bachian touch. This view must be shared by Koussevitzky, because he plays the "Concerto" often enough, and his performance here is executed with a real flourish; certainly it's not routine matter with him. The album is about the best symphony orchestra recording of 72

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

JUN 18 1939

RECENT RECORDS

By JEROME D. BOHM

AMONG Victor's latest releases is K. P. E. Bach's Concerto for Orchestra in D major in Maximilian Steinberg's arrangement, performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction. This is a superb work and not inferior in ideational content to many a more frequently played work by the great Johann Sebastian himself. The poignantly affecting slow movement testifies to the depths of sentiment which its composer was capable of plumbing. Mr. Koussevitzky's conveyances of the energetic end movements and of the profound central movement are consistently telling and the recording as such is excellent.

Other Victor Records

Tchaikovsky's attractive Serenade in C major, Op. 48, received a tastefully convincing interpretation at the hands of the B. B. C. Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Sir Adrian Boult. From the mechanical aspect, the recording is admirable.

With the assistance of Jeanne Behrend and Alexander Kelberine, the Philadelphia Orchestra, with Leopold Stokowski directing, has recorded Harl McDonald's Concerto for Two Pianos. The work is in three movements, of which the third, a Jauerzca, a North Mexican dance, is the most arresting. Least absorbing is the second movement, a set of variations on an original theme, for here the influence of Tchaikovsky, apparent also in the opening movement, becomes too obvious. The concerto is, however, an expert bit of craftsmanship. The writing for the two pianos is highly effective and the scoring, while full, is held within bounds so that the soloists are not overweighted. The performance is an exhilarating one and the transference to the disks has been satisfactorily accomplished.

Griffes's tedious "Two Sketches on Indian Themes" and the second movement from Chadwick's fourth string quartet in E minor, with its conventionally treated Negro themes, have been well played by the Coolidge Quartet and smoothly recorded. But there is better American music than this which is still not available in disk form.

A Boston "Pops" concert conducted by Arthur Fiedler, which consists of Glinka's "Russlan and Ludmilla Overture," two Negro spirituals, "Deep River" and "Nobody Knows de Trouble I've Seen," in Agide Jacchia's versions; Paul White's "Five Miniatures," Eduard Strauss's "Doctrinen" waltz, the intermezzo from Granados's "Goyescas" and the polonaise from Tchaikovsky's "Eugen Onegin," has been assembled in an album. The recordings are good.

Kirsten Flagstad's magnificent voicing of "Du bist der Lenz," from Wagner's "Walküre," only serves to whet the appetite for fuller disk disclosures of the incomparable Norwegian soprano's artistry. When are we to have a complete recording of one of Wagner's music dramas with Mme. Flagstad's participation therein? It seems incredible that Victor has not yet seen fit to preserve for posterity at least one of Mme. Flagstad's matchless interpretations of the Wagnerian heroines while her voice is at its zenith. The reverse side of this record bears "Euch Lüften die mein Klagen," from "Lohengrin." The accompaniments have been provided by the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy's direction.

Toscanini Offers Berlioz

Arturo Toscanini continues to record the less important items in his repertory. Now it is Berlioz's transcription of Weber's "Invitation to the Dance" which he has chosen to interpret with the assistance of the B. B. C. Orchestra. Are we never to have any of the works in permanent form for which the Italian conductor is famous, such as Debussy's "La Mer," or Schubert's C major Symphony?

Ignace Jan Paderewski plays Mozart's Rondo in A minor with less apparent fatigue than in his other more recent recordings, so that those who do not yet own one of the illustrious Polish pianist's disks and wish to do so for sentimental reasons, rather than for musical ones, will find this record relatively satisfying.

Excellent examples of Feodor Chaliapin's interpretational art are his recordings of Glinka's "Doubt" and of "Night" by an unnamed composer. The Russian basso's voice sounds astonishingly youthful in both of these. The piano accompaniments are by Jean Bazilevsky and the Glinka song also has a violin obbligato by Lucien Schwartz. Another Russian singer, the barytone Igor Gorin, has recorded "Largo Al Factotum" from Rossini's "Barbiere di Siviglia," with considerable success and Mattei's trite "Non e ver," with orchestral accompaniments conducted by Wilfred Pelletier.

Yehudi Menuhin sets forth Wieniawski's "Legende" expressively and with tonal loveliness, accompanied by the Orchestra of the Concerts Colonne under Georges Enesco's capable direction. To the already existing dozen or so recordings of Berlioz's "Carnaval Romain" Overture has been added another played by an anonymous orchestra directed by Eugene Bigot.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MADISON, WIS.
CAPITAL TIMES

JUN 25 1939

Recorded Music

✣ ✣ ✣

Brilliant Facets

By Harry Sheer

CLASSICAL

CHOPIN: Twelve Etudes for Piano (Columbia, six 12-in. sides). Edward Kilenyi, pianist. Chopin's all-important studies as presented by this Hungarian artist are ultra-sympathetic with the charm of the composer's "staircases of notes" . . . Each etude, incidentally, contains brilliant facets of the Polish esprit, gaiety or moodiness—and the cumulative effect is breath-taking. . . Kilenyi's approach is bold and plastic. . . . The album, uniformly good, is highlighted by the arpeggios (Etude No. 1), the No. 4 in C Sharp Minor, the "Black Key" etude and the crashing "Revolutionary" etude. . . The recording is excellent.

✣ ✣ ✣

K.P.E. BACH: Concerto for Orchestra in D Major (RCA-Victor, four 12-in. sides). Serge Koussevitzky directing Boston Symphony. The work of the least-known and youngest of the Bachs, a grand arrangement by Maximilien Steinberg and the unerring direction of Koussevitzky brings a challenge—torn, stunning music—to interpreters of the elder Bach family. . . It is a poignant reminder that Karl Philip Emmanuel Bach must take his place with his illustrious forbears. . . Orchestra is splendid. . . Recording excellent.

✣ ✣ ✣

GEORGE COPELAND, pianist: Canto I Dansa IV; Tango Espagnole (RCA-Victor, two 12-in. sides). A liquid translation of three Spanish numbers. . . Copeland possesses an exceptional clarity and plays with a deliberate langour. . . Excellent composition and execution. . . Recording excellent.

✣ ✣ ✣

DON COSSACK CHOIR: We sing to You; The Nightingale (Columbia, two 10-in. sides). A prayer and a comparatively spritely descriptive piece offered in Russian and another instance of sensitivity and choral precision. . . This disc will not disappoint Don Cossack admirers. . . Recording good.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CINCINNATI, O.
POST

JUN 19 1939

Music on the Disc

Full "Pops" Concert Offered In New Album Released by Victor

A "pops" concert in a package is the thing that caught our eye first, and intrigued our ear the most, in reviewing the list of classical records released for June.

The idea of putting up in one album a group of recordings of different compositions arranged like a well-balanced program which an orchestra and soloists might present on a concert stage, is one which has appealed to us from its inception. This month the idea has blossomed forth in the form of a delightful Boston "Pops" Concert which the record makers have wrapped up and delivered to us, thereby adding another leaf to their laurels, in our estimation.

BOSTON "POPS" CONCERT, played by the Boston "Pops" Orchestra conducted by Arthur Fiedler. (A Victor Musical Masterpiece album of three 10-inch and two 12-inch records.) Compositions included are Glinka's "Russlan and Ludmilla" overture, two Negro spirituals "Deep River" and "Nobody Knows De Trouble I've Seen," Eduard Strauss' "Doctrinen Waltz," Granados' "Goyescas" intermezzo, and the Polonaise from Tschaikowsky's opera "Eugen Onegin." These form a complete, if condensed, program that gives a perfect cross-section of the marvelous performances and cleverly chosen repertoire that have made the Boston "Pops" the most successful summer concerts in the world for nearly 55 years. Everything is here except the popping of champagne corks and the cheers for Fiedler!

SONGS OF BRAHMS, sung by Marian Anderson, contralto, with The Philadelphia Orchestra conducted by Eugene Ormandy, assisted by the male chorus of The Choral Society of the University of Pennsylvania. (A Victor Musical Masterpiece album of two 12-inch and one 10-inch records.) Millions of people have come to know Marian Anderson recently because of the publicity attendant upon her recital on the steps of the Lincoln Memorial a few weeks ago, and her appearance at the White House to sing for the King and Queen of England. But she was a great artist long before these events occurred, keenly appreciated by music lovers from Toscanini down, who had heard her in person or on records. In this album, she sings four of Brahms' best works for voice, "Alto Rhapsody," "Dein Blaues Auge," "Der Schmied" and "Immer Leiser Wird Mein Schlummer."

SERENADE IN C MAJOR, by Tschaikowsky (Op. 48), played by the B. B. C. Symphony Orchestra conducted by Sir Adrian Boult. (A Victor Musical Masterpiece album of three 12-inch records.) This "Serenade" has long been popular with concert-goers, who find it colorful, warm, sentimental, and not too exacting. It is fine music for a summer night, and the way in which England's greatest orchestra plays it on these records is very enjoyable.

CONCERTO FOR ORCHESTRA IN D MAJOR, by K. P. E. Bach, played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitsky. (A Victor Musical Masterpiece album of two 12-inch records.) This recording will appeal to music-lovers generally, and to collectors of unusual records particularly. It is classical music of the first order, and is a composition which enables the superb strings of the Boston Symphony to display their marvelous tone and technique to best advantage.

The list of individual recordings is, as usual, full of many interesting and enjoyable items, among which are these:

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

JUN 18 1939

Records in Review

Bostonians Play Concerto by Emanuel Bach—Sir Adrian Boult Conducts Tschaikovsky and Bigot Leads 'Roman Carnival' Overture

By RODERICK O. WILLIAMS

That Bach was musically prolific is well known. That he was prolific in raising a family can be assumed as a manifestation of the period in which he lived. In the course of his long career Bach married twice, had 20 children. Of his 11 sons four were sufficiently musical to be remembered. And of these the most illustrious are Karl Philipp Emanuel and Johann Christian.

◆

Although the latter is revered in England, where he spent most of his life, the music of Emanuel Bach to our ears seems to stand the test of time more successfully. His life (1714-1788) and work proved a sort of connecting link in great German music between his famous father and Mozart and Haydn. This transitional period makes the music of Emanuel Bach tremendously interesting historically. But no knowledge of its historical significance is necessary to make interesting to the music lover the Concerto in D major for orchestra, just recorded for Victor by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky.

Emanuel Bach's Concerto is a sort of forerunner of the symphony. It is a strictly symphonic piece in three movements. Although he shows some advance harmonically over the work of his predecessors, Emanuel Bach did not yet apply the sonata form symphonically as Haydn did, who thereby earned for himself the title of the father of the symphony. This work is based on the Concerti Grossi of Corelli and Handel and the Brandenburg Concerti of Sebastian Bach. The style is still essentially that of contrapuntal development of thematic material, but Emanuel's music has a much lighter touch than that of his father.

The beautifully moving and poignant adagio (recalling the "Lament" from Purcell's "Dido") and the two allegro movements are superbly played, with intensity of tone and delicacy of nuance.

• • •

Sir Adrian Boult, who appeared here last week as conductor of the Philharmonic's British concerts, reaffirms the favorable impression he made on those occasions in his conducting of the BBC Symphony Orchestra in the Victor recording of Tschaikovsky's Serenade in C major. Boult is an authoritative leader whose interpretations are full of spirit and carried by momentum born of unusually strong rhythm. This performance of Tschaikovsky's Serenade is no exception. The lyric Elegie is given an appropriately romantic touch of intensity while the Waltz is played with the necessary lilt but also with fine precision. The Russian theme and development which constitute the finale are worked up in lively fashion.

Except for the last few bars the bombastic, noisy Tschaikovsky is almost entirely absent in this charming example of his more truly artistic vein.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CHICAGO, ILL.
HERALD-EXAMINER

JUN 25 1939

Recordings by Boston Orchestra.

A VOLUME OF RECORDINGS by the Boston "Pops" Orchestra, under the direction of Arthur Fieldler, which is included in a recent release in the RCA Victor "Musical Masterpiece Series," is a veritable concert of familiar and exciting works (M-554. The album holds records of Glinka's Overture to Russlan and Ludmilla; two spirituals: "Deep River" and "Nobody Knows de Trouble I've Seen"; Five Miniatures, by Paul White; the Doctrinen Waltz, by Strauss; Granados' Goyescan-Intermezzo, and the Polonaise from Eugene Onegin, by Tschaikowsky.

Arturo Toscanini and the BBC Symphony Orchestra offer a superb recording of the Beethoven Symphony No. 1, in C minor, and the Brahms Tragic Overture, Opus 81 (RCA Victor, M-507). A rare volume of French piano music, set forth with scintillating charm and fine perception by pianiste Emma Boynet, is the RCA Victor release M-549. The album includes compositions of Faure, Pierne, de Severac, Chabrier and Debussy.

THIS CLIPPING FROM YOUNGSTOWN, O.
VINDICATOR
JUL 2 - 1939

73

Sparkling Bach Music In New Record Album

Concerto for Orchestra in D Major Presented in Two-Disk Set by Boston Symphony

By L. R. Boals

Among the most interesting albums recently released by Victor is a two-disk set containing the Concerto for Orchestra in D major by Karl Philipp Emanuel Bach (1714-1788) played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitzky. The work was originally composed for four strings, but in 1911 was scored for flute, two oboes, English horn, bassoon, horn and strings, by Maximilian Steinberg.

K. P. E. Bach was the second son of the famous Johann Sebastian, and was more appreciated during the 18th century than was his father. His influence can be indicated by the following quotation. Haydn declared "whoever knows me well will see how much I owe to Emanuel Bach, and how I have understood and thoroughly studied him."

Just as it was several centuries before Johann Sebastian Bach's proper place in music was appreciated, so it has been only in recent years that the music of Emanuel Bach has begun to sound again in the concert halls, on the radio and on records.

This concerto is great music that will hold its place with the music of the greater Bach; and it is superbly played and recorded. Like all really great music, it is the sort of which one will not soon tire.

Well Coupled

Another two-disk set of 12-inch Red Seal records is one containing Two Sketches by Charles Tomlinson Griffes (1884-1920) which occupies three sides, and the Andante Semplice movement from the fourth string quarter in E minor, by George Whitefield Chadwick (1854-1931), which occupies the fourth side.

These pieces are well coupled, for Griffes' music is based on Indian themes, and Chadwick's reflects the impress of Negro folk melody upon American music.

Both are well played by the Coolidge Quartet (William Kroll and Nicolai Berezowsky, violins, Nicolas Moldavan, viola, and Victor Gottlieb, cello) and the recording is all that could be wished.

Kirsten Flagstad's latest contribution is a 10-inch disk containing Elsa's song to the breeze, which occurs early in Act II of Wagner's "Lohengrin," and "Du bist der Lenz," which immediately follows Siegmund's Spring Song in Act. I of "Die Walkuere." The accompaniments are by the Philadelphia Orchestra, directed by Eugene Ormandy.

Feature Famous Organ

Fortunate are we that recording has been so perfected in time to preserve for the future this wonderful singer's voice and art. Anyone who has not heard her recording of "Ocean, Thou Mighty Monster," from Weber's "Oberon," should lose no time in doing so.

Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" Overture is well recorded on a 12-inch Red Seal disk by a symphony orchestra conducted by Eugene Bigot. This overture is an early work of one of the most brilliant of orchestrators.

On the Grand Court Organ at Wanamaker's in Philadelphia, Charles M. Courboin records two Bach numbers for a Victor 12-inch Red Seal disk. On one side is Guilmant's arrangement for organ of "God's Time Is the Best Time," from the 106th cantata, and on the other, the choral-prelude, "Christ Lay in the Bonds of Death."

I heard Guilmant, the greatest organist of the past century, give a recital on this same organ in 1904, when, at the St. Louis World's Fair, it was "the greatest organ in the world." It was later taken to Wanamaker's, enlarged and improved.

Courboin is a master of registration, and his string effects in this record are marvelous. The music is quiet and restful, and indescribably lovely.

In the standard instrumental list are selections from Gilbert and Sullivan's "The Mikado," played by Louis Levy's orchestra; Robert Forsythe and Arthur Young's two-piano record of "Mood Indigo" (Ellington-Biggert-Mills) and "Solitude" (Duke Ellington); and an organ arrangement of Sibelius' "Finlandia," played by Reginald Foort.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH
JUL 2 - 1939

On the RECORDS

By MICHAEL SHAW, JR.

THERE IS HARDLY a person who has not heard, although comparatively few could identify it, the waltz from Tschaikowsky's "Serenade in C Major (Op. 48). Much less well known are the three sister movements. Sir Adrian Boult does them all, getting well-rounded response from the B. B. C. Symphony plus sympathetic reproduction (Victor Set M-556; six sides).

* * *

IT IS A DIFFERENT story for that underestimated genius, K. P. E. Bach. "Concerto in D Major," an arrangement for small orchestra by Maximilian Steinberg, is engraved for the first time by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony (Victor Set M-559; four sides). Another arrangement by Casadesus, called "Suite in D," was disced a few years ago by the American Society of Ancient Instruments and it remains our choice.

The latest version strikes us as considerably overdressed, a failing in which sound engineers have had a hand, but are by no means entirely to blame.

* * *

THIS CLIPPING FROM
DAYTON, O.
NEWS WEEK
JUL 3 - 1939

RECORD WEEK

HAYDN—Symphony No. 98 in B flat. (Howard Barlow and Columbia Broadcasting Symphony. Three 12-inch Columbia records in album, $5.) A first recording of the fourth "Salomon" symphony, not to be confused with the Koussevitzky recording of another B flat symphony last winter (NEWSWEEK, Feb. 13).

THIS CLIPPING FROM CHICAGO, ILL.
ADVOCATE
JUL 21 1939

RCA-VICTOR AUGUST RELEASE

Each year the Boston Symphony Orchestra seems to produce at least one great work which becomes over night a popular sensation. A year ago it was Prokofieff's Lieutenant Kije Suite. This year Prokofieff again produces a sensation, which Serge Koussevitzky played throughout the season just closed and which will be the feature of the great Berkshire Festival at Stockbridge this month.

Prokofieff's new piece is called "Peter and the Wolf," and we assure you that it is unlike anything you have ever heard before. It is called an orchestra fairy tale and the story is told by a narrator as the music proceeds. Individuals in the story are characterized by instruments and instrumental groups in the orchestra, and the whole is woven into a most delightful, witty, entertaining musical texture.

The narration is done by the distinguished American actor, Richard Hale, and the extraordinary virtuoso orchestra has the best opportunity it has ever had to display its unique talents. The music is full of melody, tricky rhythms and humorous effects. Ostensibly a story for children, we think that "Peter and the Wolf" is really a very clever and subtle satire. We assure you that neither at the Boston Symphony concerts nor on these records is Dr. Koussevitzky playing exclusively to children. True, children are completely fascinated by this work, but it makes grown-ups feel like children and they are even more richly entertained. (RCA-Victor. M - 566 (15442-4); Am-566 (15445-7). $6.50).

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE
JUL 20 1939

Local Concern Will Conduct Record Shop at Music Festival

Music House Again Chosen to Conduct Display and Sale for Berkshire Event —Selling Tickets Here

The Music House of this city for the third time has been invited to conduct the display and sale of records on the concert grounds during the concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, which this year will consist of six concerts at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor. The festival opens on Thursday evening, Aug. 3. The other concerts are held on the following Thursday and the two following Saturdays and Sundays. The Thursday and Saturday concerts are held at 8.30 p. m and the Sunday concerts at 3.30 p. m.

The performances are given in the hugh V shaped shed open at the back and sides which was dedicated at the opening night of last year's festival. Miss Dorothy Bement, co-principal of the Northampton School for Girls, is chairman of the local advisory committee. Reservations for each series of three concerts or for single performances of the orchestra may be made at the Music House and will be filled on a priority basis.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 22 1939

Records: Prokofieff's Fairy Tale

By C. E. L.

One of the brightest and most engaging additions to the record lists in many a moon is Prokofieff's orchestral fairy tale "Peter and the Wolf" (Victor Musical Masterpiece Series M-566).

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra offered this piquant fantasy repeatedly to delighted audiences last winter and are introducing it at the Tanglewood concerts in Stockbridge on Sunday, Aug. 6. It has been a novelty hit which promises to have an enduring appeal for it wears exceedingly well. As a record album it is bound to be popular within the best connotations of that word.

Exposed to a diversity of tastes and ages, "Peter and the Wolf" produces undeviating reactions: It charms, amuses, absorbs and elevates happily. You can read almost anything you like into the picture—satire, political or critical, symbolism, human commentaries or simply leave it a blandly literal fairy tale. Children—and that includes almost everybody, doesn't it?—all love it. Musicians in their grown-up moments chuckle over the sheer ingenuity of such moments as the dialogue between the bird and the duck, the cat scuttling up a tree and the amusing step-and-a-half gait of grandpa who, you'll swear, is wearing the Russian equivalent of carpet slippers.

Richard Hale, as usual with the Bostonians, is narrator of the piece. He lays nuance on heavily and takes the melos with an awed and bated expression which quite goes into the heart of the business. Mr. Hale who has claims upon both the fields of acting and singing seems to have made his mark with this unusual role which falls between the two. His performance on these records is much smoother than when this writer last heard him in Symphony Hall.

The orchestral sonorities are well-grooved and the only thing missing from the discs is indescribable and evocative mien of Koussevitzky when he conducts this score. Its reflections are indelibly written into the music, however.

It is suggested that purchasers of this treasurable set save the interesting wrapper picture and paste it on the album cover itself for it is worth saving.

* * *

Meet Antonin Dvorak, the Bohemian. Everyone is acquainted with the composer of the symphony "From the New World", the American Quartet and the popular tune, "Humoresque" and thereupon reckons that is all ye know and all ye need to know. As a matter of fact, that is not Dvorak at all but a foreign composer enjoying a holiday in the United States and plying his vocation in somewhat the same accents that might be heard in naturalization court. The New World Symphony often sounds like a broken-English recitation of "We the people of the United States—"

This is a late date to be propagandizing for the Bohemian Dvorak but Columbia is doing its share by bringing out a new recording of his Quartet in E flat, opus 51. It is performed by the Lener Quartet and is number M-369 in the Masterworks Series.

The work is as old-worldly as can be, mellow, joyous, peasant-flavored and idiomatic. As quartet writing it has no compunctions about departing from pure classical lines, as witness the romantically colored Dumka of the second movement. It is in this movement, too, that the most characteristic bit of Dvorak occurs—the syncopated Furiant in 3-8 time.

The concluding allegro is also wholly typical with its combination of an exuberant vivacity, folk-tune derivations and a masterly technical command. To acquire a greater familiarity with this quartet is to know about Dvorak.

The Leners do the fine job that is to be expected from them and the recording is efficient. The entire work is reproduced except for the omission of the repeat in the first movement.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
DAYTON, O.
NEWS WEEK
JUL 24 1939

RECORD WEEK

CHOPIN—Piano Concerto, F minor. (Alfred Cortot, orchestra under John Barbirolli. Four 12-inch Victor records in album, $8.) Important, not only because of being a major work by the great Pole but because other recordings are curiously few and badly dated—with the breach now filled by a Chopin specialist. (Chopin fanciers were recently offered the contrasting Etudes—opus 10—played by Edward Kilenyi. Three 12-inch Columbia records in album, $5.)

MARKEVITCH (IGOR)—Ballet Suite "L'Envol d'Icare." (Brussels Philharmonic, conducted by the composer. Three 12-inch imported Gramophone records, $7.50.) One of Russia's youngest composers (born July 27, 1912) offers an American première of a daringly iconoclastic early work.

PROKOFIEFF—Peter and the Wolf. (Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky. Three 12-inch Victor records in album, $6.50.) A charmingly whimsical fairy tale in tone (with Richard Hale helping things along as narrator) for all children, growing and grown.

Dance music still flows on—the latest proof being Dance Time played by Hal Kemp and his orchestra (three Victor records in album, $2.75). The two fox trots, waltz, tango, rumba, and conga were chosen by a poll taken in the Waldorf-Astoria; together they represent all types of steps in today's smart ballrooms.

[illegible] FROM [illegible]STOWN, O.
VINDICATOR
JUL 2 - [illegible]

73

Sparkling Bach Music In New Record Album

Concerto for Orchestra in D Major Presented in Two-Disk Set by Boston Symphony

By L. E. Beals

Among the most interesting albums recently released by Victor is a two-disk set containing the Concerto for Orchestra in D major by Karl Philipp Emanuel Bach (1714-1788) played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitzky. The work was originally composed for four strings, but in 1911 was scored for flute, two oboes, English horn, bassoon, horn and strings, by Maximilian Steinberg.

K. P. E. Bach was the second son of the famous Johann Sebastian, and was more appreciated during the 18th century than was his father. His influence can be indicated by the following quotation. Haydn declared "whoever knows me well will see how much I owe to Emanuel Bach, and how I have understood and thoroughly studied him."

Just as it was several centuries before Johann Sebastian Bach's proper place in music was appreciated, so it has been only in recent years that the music of Emanuel Bach has begun to sound again in the concert halls, on the radio and on records.

This concerto is great music that will hold its place with the music of the greater Bach; and it is superbly played and recorded. Like all really great music, it is the sort of which one will not soon tire.

Well Coupled

Another two-disk set of 12-inch Red Seal records is one containing Two Sketches by Charles Tomlinson Griffes (1884-1920) which occupies three sides, and the Andante Semplice movement from the fourth string quartet in E minor, by George Whitefield Chadwick (1854-1931), which occupies the fourth side.

These pieces are well coupled, for Griffes' music is based on Indian themes, and Chadwick's reflects the impress of Negro folk melody upon American music.

Both are well played by the Coolidge Quartet (William Kroll and Nicolai Berezowsky, violins, Nicolas Moldavan, viola, and Victor Gottlieb, cello) and the recording is all that could be wished.

Kirsten Flagstad's latest contribution is a 10-inch disk containing Elsa's song to the breeze, which occurs early in Act II of Wagner's "Lohengrin," and "Du bist der Lenz," which immediately follows Siegmund's Spring Song in Act I of "Die Walkuere." The accompaniments are by the Philadelphia Orchestra directed by Eugene Ormandy.

Feature Famous Organ

Fortunate are we that recording has been so perfected in time to preserve for the future this wonderful singer's voice and art. Anyone who has not heard her recording of "Ocean, Thou Mighty Monster," from Weber's "Oberon," should lose no time in doing so.

Berlioz's "Roman Carnival" Overture is well recorded on a 12-inch Red Seal disk by a symphony orchestra conducted by Eugene Bigot. This overture is an early work of one of the most brilliant of orchestrators.

On the Grand Court Organ at Wanamaker's in Philadelphia, Charles M. Courboin records two Bach numbers for a Victor 12-inch Red Seal disk. On one side is Guilmant's arrangement for organ of "God's Time Is the Best Time," from the 106th cantata, and on the other, the choral-prelude, "Christ Lay in the Bonds of Death."

I heard Guilmant, the greatest organist of the past century, give a recital on this same organ in 1904, when, at the St. Louis World's Fair, it was "the greatest organ in the world." It was later taken to Wanamaker's, enlarged and improved.

Courboin is a master of registration and his string effects in this record are marvelous. The music is quiet and restful, and indescribably lovely.

In the standard instrumental list are selections from Gilbert and Sullivan's "The Mikado," played by Louis Levy's orchestra; Robert Forsythe and Arthur Young's two-piano record of "Mood Indigo" (Ellington-Biggert-Mills) and "Solitude" (Duke Ellington); and an organ arrangement of Sibelius' "Finlandia," played by Reginald Foort.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
DAYTON, O.
NEWS WEEK

JUL 3 - 1939

RECORD WEEK

Haydn—Symphony No. 98 in B flat. (Howard Barlow and Columbia Broadcasting Symphony. Three 12-inch Columbia records in album, $5.) A first recording of the fourth "Salomon" symphony, not to be confused with the Koussevitzky recording of another B flat symphony last winter (Newsweek, Feb. 13).

THIS CLIPPING FROM CHICAGO, ILL.
ADVOCATE

JUL 21 1939

RCA-VICTOR AUGUST RELEASE

Each year the Boston Symphony Orchestra seems to produce at least one great work which becomes over night a popular sensation. A year ago it was Prokofieff's Lieutenant Kije Suite. This year Prokofieff again produces a sensation, which Serge Koussevitzky played throughout the season just closed and which will be the feature of the great Berkshire Festival at Stockbridge this month.

Prokofieff's new piece is called "Peter and the Wolf," and we assure you that it is unlike anything you have ever heard before. It is called an orchestra fairy tale and the story is told by a narrator as the music proceeds. Individuals in the story are characterized by instruments and instrumental groups in the orchestra, and the whole is woven into a most delightful, witty, entertaining musical texture.

The narration is done by the distinguished American actor, Richard Hale, and the extraordinary virtuoso orchestra has the best opportunity it has ever had to display its unique talents. The music is full of melody, tricky rhythms and humorous effects. Ostensibly a story for children, we think that "Peter and the Wolf" is really a very clever and subtle satire. We assure you that neither at the Boston Symphony concerts nor on these records is Dr. Koussevitzky playing exclusively to children. True, children are completely fascinated by this work, but it makes grown-ups feel like children and they are even more richly entertained. (RCA-Victor. M-566 (15442-4); Am-566 (15445-7). $6.50).

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 22 1939

Records: Prokofieff's Fairy Tale

By C. E. L.

One of the brightest and most engaging additions to the record lists in many a moon is Prokofieff's orchestral fairy tale "Peter and the Wolf" (Victor Musical Masterpiece Series M-566).

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra offered this piquant fantasy repeatedly to delighted audiences last winter and are introducing it at the Tanglewood concerts in Stockbridge on Sunday, Aug. 6. It has been a novelty hit which promises to have an enduring appeal for it wears exceedingly well. As a record album it is bound to be popular within the best connotations of that word.

Exposed to a diversity of tastes and ages, "Peter and the Wolf" produces undeviating reactions: It charms, amuses, absorbs and elevates happily. You can read almost anything you like into the picture—satire, political or critical, symbolism, human commentaries or simply leave it a blandly literal fairy tale. Children—and that includes almost everybody, doesn't it?—all love it. Musicians in their grown-up moments chuckle over the sheer ingenuity of such moments as the dialogue between the bird and the duck, the cat scuttling up a tree and the amusing step-and-a-half gait of grandpa who, you'll swear, is wearing the Russian equivalent of carpet slippers.

Richard Hale, as usual with the Bostonians, is narrator of the piece. He lays nuance on heavily and takes the melos with an awed and bated expression which quite goes into the heart of the business. Mr. Hale who has claims upon both the fields of acting and singing seems to have made his mark with this unusual role which falls between the two. His performance on these records is much smoother than when this writer last heard him in Symphony Hall.

The orchestral sonorities are well-grooved and the only thing missing from the discs is indescribable and evocative mien of Koussevitzky when he conducts this score. Its reflections are indelibly written into the music, however.

It is suggested that purchasers of this treasurable set save the interesting wrapper picture and paste it on the album cover itself for it is worth saving.

* * *

Meet Antonin Dvorak, the Bohemian. Everyone is acquainted with the composer of the symphony "From the New World", the American Quartet and the popular tune, "Humoresque" and thereupon reckons that is all ye know and all ye need to know. As a matter of fact, that is not Dvorak at all but a foreign composer enjoying a holiday in the United States and plying his vocation in somewhat the same accents that might be heard in naturalization court. The New World Symphony often sounds like a broken-English recitation of "We the people of the United States—"

This is a late date to be propagandizing for the Bohemian Dvorak but Columbia is doing its share by bringing out a new recording of his Quartet in E flat, opus 51. It is performed by the Lener Quartet and is number M-369 in the Masterworks Series.

The work is as old-worldly as can be, mellow, joyous, peasant-flavored and idiomatic. As quartet writing it has no compunctions about departing from pure classical lines, as witness the romantically colored Dumka of the second movement. It is in this movement, too, that the most characteristic bit of Dvorak occurs—the syncopated Furiant in 3-8 time.

The concluding allegro is also wholly typical with its combination of an exuberant vivacity, folk-tune derivations and a masterly technical command. To acquire a greater familiarity with this quartet is to know about Dvorak.

The Leners do the fine job that is to be expected from them and the recording is efficient. The entire work is reproduced except for the omission of the repeat in the first movement.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH

JUL 2 - 1939

On the RECORDS

By MICHAEL SHAW, JR.

THERE IS HARDLY a person who has not heard, although comparatively few could identify it, the waltz from Tschaikowsky's "Serenade in C Major (Op. 48). Much less well known are the three sister movements. Sir Adrian Boult does them all, getting well-rounded response from the B. B. C. Symphony plus sympathetic reproduction (Victor Set M-556; six sides).

* * *

IT IS A DIFFERENT story for that underestimated genius, K. P. E. Bach. "Concerto in D Major," an arrangement for small orchestra by Maximilian Steinberg, is engraved for the first time by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony (Victor Set M-559; four sides). Another arrangement by Casadesus, called "Suite in D," was disced a few years ago by the American Society of Ancient Instruments and it remains our choice.

The latest version strikes us as considerably overdressed, a failing in which sound engineers have had a hand, but are by no means entirely to blame.

* * *

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

JUL 20 1939

Local Concern Will Conduct Record Shop at Music Festival

Music House Again Chosen to Conduct Display and Sale for Berkshire Event —Selling Tickets Here

The Music House of this city for the third time has been invited to conduct the display and sale of records on the concert grounds during the concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, which this year will consist of six concerts at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor. The festival opens on Thursday evening, Aug. 3. The other concerts are held on the following Thursday and the two following Saturdays and Sundays. The Thursday and Saturday concerts are held at 8.30 p. m and the Sunday concerts at 3.30 p. m.

The performances are given in the hugh V shaped shed open at the back and sides which was dedicated at the opening night of last year's festival. Miss Dorothy Bement, co-principal of the Northampton School for Girls, is chairman of the local advisory committee. Reservations for each series of three concerts or for single performances of the orchestra may be made at the Music House and will be filled on a priority basis.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
DAYTON, O.
NEWS WEEK

JUL 24 1939

RECORD WEEK

Chopin—Piano Concerto, F minor. (Alfred Cortot, orchestra under John Barbirolli. Four 12-inch Victor records in album, $8.) Important, not only because of being a major work by the great Pole but because other recordings are curiously few and badly dated—with the breach now filled by a Chopin specialist. (Chopin fanciers were recently offered the contrasting Etudes—opus 10—played by Edward Kilenyi. Three 12-inch Columbia records in album, $5.)

Markevitch (Igor)—Ballet Suite "L'Envol d'Icare." (Brussels Philharmonic, conducted by the composer. Three 12-inch imported Gramophone records, $7.50.) One of Russia's youngest composers (born July 27, 1912) offers an American première of a daringly iconoclastic early work.

Prokofieff—Peter and the Wolf. (Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky. Three 12-inch Victor records in album, $6.50.) A charmingly whimsical fairy tale in tone (with Richard Hale helping things along as narrator) for all children, growing and grown.

Dance music still flows on—the latest proof being Dance Time played by Hal Kemp and his orchestra (three Victor records in album, $2.75). The two fox trots, waltz, tango, rumba, and conga were chosen by a poll taken in the Waldorf-Astoria; together they represent all types of steps in today's smart ballrooms.

24

THIS CLIPPING FROM DETROIT, MICH.
NEWS
JUL 3 0 1939

'Just as a Matter of Records'

FROM groove to groove: Because there are five Sundays in July, this department's record budget did not come out quite even. Too much enthusiasm earlier in the month leaves nothing for today except marginal notes. . . . However, you will be glad to hear that Lily Pons is back on the discs and it is hinted she is going to do a lot of work for Victor during the coming season. . . . Celebrating her return is a 10-inch record containing no less than four pleasant songs, of which the jolliest is "Marie Antoinette's Song," by Myron Jacobson. It could be a lullaby, but, as you well know, it isn't. Ernest Chausson's "Butterflies" immediately follows. On the other side are two excellent trifles, Pastorale and "Bird Song," which Frank LaForge obviously wrote with coloraturas in mind. Mr. LaForge, by the way, is the accompanist. . . . Best seller in the red seal division, according to Victor, has always been "The Blue Danube," which coupled with "Tales from Vienna Woods" and performed by the Philadelphia Orchestra under the direction of Leopold Stokowski this month makes its nth appearance. It will go well with the recently issued album of Vienna music.

* * *

There is a fine exhibition of both tone and pyrotechnics in Albert Spalding's own "Dragon Fly" which he plays on a 10-inch Victor record. He calls it a study in arpeggios and plays it unaccompanied. The other side is Gaspar Cassado's "Dance of the Green Devil." . . . "The White Peacock," one of Charles Griffes' "Four Roman sketches" makes its Columbia debut with Howard Barlow swinging the baton. The impressionistic tone poem gets a fine performance. . . . Richard Crooks sings Ossip Gabrilowitsch's arrangement of Christina Rosetti's "Goodbye" with pleasant effect on a Victor 10-incher. The companion song is Bach's "If Thou Be Near," with orchestrations by Charles O'Connell. Mr. O'Connell, by the way, just recently made his debut as a conductor. . . . The Boston "Pops" Orchestra and Arthur Fiedler are concerned with ballet music on the July list. There are three excerpts from Rameau and one from Leclair. . . . Maria Antonia De Castro, pianist new to Columbia lists, is introduced playing three pieces by Hector Villa-Lobos, South American composer and pianist. Villa-Lobos collects Brazilian folk tunes on which he bases most of his music. . . . Prices of Victor's black label series have reduced.

* * *

ON THE POPULAR SIDES

RAYMOND SCOTT'S "In an Eighteenth Century Drawing Room" last week was in second place on Brunswick's best-seller list. "Boy Scout in the Alps," on the other side, is good, too. As a matter of fact this department thought that it would be the best seller. Anyway, we still think that it is the combination of the two that makes the customers ask for the platter. Kay Kyser's version of the novelty tune, "Concert in the Park," was second, and "Comes Love," by Harry James, was third.

Glenn Miller had two tunes on Bluebird's bandwagon. They were "Moonlight Serenade," in first place, and "Wanna Hat With Cherries," in third. The week before he had three. Artie Shaw's "Comes Love" was second.

Crooner Crosby's "El Rancho Grande" and "If I Had My Way" were Decca's first and second best discs. Glen Gray's "Sunrise Serenade" was third.

Kenny Baker's "Stairway to the Stars" continued in first place on the Victor list and was followed by "Moon Love," by Sammy Kaye, and "I Poured My Heart Into a Song," by Tommy Dorsey. Vocalion's three best were "My Last Goodbye," by Dick Jurgens, "Concert in the Park," by Jan Garber, and "Moon Love," by Al Donohue.

C. B.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WASHINGTON, D. C.
NEWS
JUL 3 1 1939

RECORDED MUSIC

By DISCOPHILE

Maybe it ought to be listed under The Kiddie's Corner, but the fact that "Peter and the Wolf" (Victor M-566), gives us some fresh music by one of the most original composers of our day, Serge Prokofieff, demands adult attention.

But 10 to 1, if you get this album, the children will claim it for their own. Subtitled "an orchestral fairy-tale," it uses the familiar music-logue technique. A voice, Richard Hale in this instance, recites the story, while the orchestra (Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitsky) interlards the recitation with musical interpretation.

Obviously, "Peter and the Wolf," which was written in 1936 for a children's show in Moscow, will not stand with the greatest of Prokofieff's work. But the nature of his genius can extend from the profundity to the most delightful trivia—or to be specific, from the great slow movement of his violin concerto recently recorded with Heifetz to the sound of Peter's duck quack-quacking inside the stomach of the wolf.

Those who have seen "Alexander Nevsky," now at the Little Theater, will recognize Prokofeiff's striking ability to point up drama via the symphony. In these records he again plays second fiddle to drama, in this case not to an epic but to a fairy tale.

Incidentally some have claimed they spot a political satire in the fairy tale. If they are right, those Russians must be awful subtle. The performance is as fine as you would expect from the orchestra and conductor who are famous for their handling of modern music.

For the piano shelf, there are two new albums, both featuring pleasing if outdated music of the grand style era, played by great pianistic names of our times. One is Chopin's F minor concerto played by Alfred Cortot and the London Philharmonic under Barbirolli (Victor, M-567), the other Liszt's Fantasia on Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens" and Schubert's "Der Lindenbaum," played by Egon Petri and the London Philharmonic under Howard (Columbia, X-136). The recordings in both instances are excellent.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DALLAS, TEX.
TIMES-HERALD
JUL 3 0 1939

Prokofieff Tells Child's Story With Symphony; Pops Orchestra Offers Program

"PETER AND THE WOLF," an orchestral fairy tale by Serge Prokofieff. Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony. Victor Album M-566 (three 12-inch records).

Here is an orchestral novelty, not quite like anything you have ever heard before. Composers have always expressed highly personal intellectual ideas in music, and made delightful musical characterizations. Saint Saens did it in his Carnival of the Animals and Edward Elgar in his Engima Variations—which characterrized his friends—to mention but two conspicuous instances. The novelty of this work of Prokofieff is that he has expanded to what might be termed cosmic proportions the sort of favorite stunt of the piano monologists like Dwight Fiske. You are familiar with one of these witty gentlemen speaking their stories and decorating them with informal pianistic flourishes and little leitmotivs that highlight the characters.

To find this almost spontaneous device of the clever pianist enlarge to the point that while a narrator recounts the most irresponsible of fairy tales, a whole orchestra paints in the musical background of a bird, a duck, a little boy, a big bad wolf and a troup of hunters, is almost startling. But as Prokofieff has a quality of genuine musical genius and thinks orchestrally with effortless ease, the work in spite of its delicate subject expanded to heroic proportions seems to maintain somehow the charm of intimacy.

Koussevitsky has chosen as narrator to assist the Boston Symphony the talented Richard Hale, who is both a sound musician and a skilled actor. The result is the words are blended deftly to the music and the spirit of fun in the whole thing comes plainly through the loud speaker. As for the fairy tale itself, it has that surprising pointlessness which Americans so frequently find in Russian fairy stories. But it is quaint and bizarre and just the sort of unexpected album that the collector who likes a novelty is looking for. It was written in 1936 and first performed at a children's concert in Moscow in May of that year. But its appeal is by no means limited to children.

BEETHOVEN'S SONATA OP. 30, No. 3, for piano and violin. Played by Nathan Milstein. Columbia Masterwork Set X 137 (two 12-inch records).

Though Nathan Milstein played in Dallas a number of seasons ago, in the long list of the greatest artists who have appeared here on Civic Music, he is still remembered for the elegant distinction of his playing. That distinction is again apparent in the playing of this sonata which was written when Beethoven was 32.

It was composed in 1802, the last of three which Beethoven dedicated to Catherine II's grandson, the young Emperor Alexander I, who won the composer's respect for his liberal tendencies. The first of these sonatas is supposed to be pastoral in mood, the second military, and this third to reflect the gaiety that one might find at a peasant fair. There are those who have fancied they saw in its music the sort of Flemish popular scenes, with a touch of Russian peasantry in honor of the Emperor Alexander that the Dutch artist, David Teniers, the younger liked to paint, and it seems certain that some of the rhythms can be traced to the dances of Little Russia. But this writer, having listened carefully with the Flemish carnival idea in mind, failed to find any definite evidence of it. The sonata, however, is charmingly gay and lilting in the manner that Schubert's "Trout" is gay. Played as Milstein plays it, one is made aware of full charm, and the album is a safe bet for Beethoven enthusiasts.

FANTASIA ON BEETHOVEN'S RUINS OF ATHENS, by Liszt. Egon Petri, pianist with the London Philharmonic Orchestra. Columbia Masterworks, Set No. 7 (two 12-inch records).

There is a touch of irony to find the London Philharmonic playing this particular work. For while Beethoven wrote the Ruins of Athens as incidental music to a Viennese dramatic piece in 1811, when five years later in 1816, the London Philharmonic of that day delighted with his Fifth Symphony, sent him something like $400 in money of the day and commissioned three overtures to be written especially for themselves, Beethoven simply looked among his scores, fished out the already old Ruins of Athens and sent it as one of the three, to the Philharmonic's great resentment.

Liszt, of course, after his usual custom, worked over the Ruins of Athens into what may now be termed an old-fashioned show piece. As a pianist and as a composer who had mastered the resources of the piano incomparably, he still ranks high today. Mr. Petri has been one of the most conspicuous performers of Listz's piano music on records, and once more he turns in the sort of virtuoso performance that this florid brand of music needs to set it off.

The fourth side of the second record is taken up with Mr. Petri playing Liszt's bravura arrangement of Schubert's song "Der Lindenbaum.

BOSTON "POPS" CONCERT.

Russian and Ludmill — Overture (Glinka).
Deep River—Nobody Knows the Trouble I've Seen.
Five Miniatures (Paul White).
Doctrinen Waltz (Edward Strauss).
Eugen Onegin—Polonaise (Tschaikowsky).
Boston "Pops" Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler, Conductor.
Victor Album M-554 (Three 10-inch, two 12-inch records).

To persons out of the magnetic range of Boston, those records which have appeared under the stamp of the Boston "Pops," and there have been a good many of them, probably have been underrated as to their artistic merit. For the word "pops" of itself hardly seems impressive. But that name was one which was applied many years ago, and by popular adoption has stuck to what might be termed the summer edition of the Boston Symphony. Many of the players are the same, and if the programs are somewhat deliberately lighter and more informal to go with a summer setting and cold refreshments, the concerts of the "Pops" are certainly born of the musical tradition which is back of the Boston Symphony.

This album, which offers about half an hour of continuous music, is under the conductor who has most happily identified himself with the "Pops" in the public mind in recent years. The chief virtue of such a collection is that you have to your pleasure a series of selections arranged by experienced hands at program building. As you discover if you play it, there is a nice feeling of variation of mood, with music not too heavy and thoroughly appealing. All but the Five Miniatures of Paul White have long been accepted as standard selections. Dallas will remember Mr. White's group, especially his mosquito dance, for the performance that was given them last season by the Dallas Symphony. The album is sold as a unit, but quite probably you can purchase single records, if you impress the dealer with the fact that you are sufficiently eager to obtain any one selection.

◆ ◆ ◆

Single Records.

One "Pops" record released singly that should have more than ordinary appeal is an orchestration of the wild and syncopated Rumanian work, Hora Staccato (Victor 10-inch No. 4413 B). As a violin number for a long time it has been one of the favorites among Heifetz' encores, and was also used with striking success here by Elman in his concert last May. The reverse side offers Tschaikowsky's None but the Lonely Heart in orchestral form.

The Spanish singer, Lucrezia Bori, has retired from the Metropolitan, but she still sings and is held dear by her public. She offers three songs by important modern Spanish composers, sung as she knows so well how to sing Spanish music. They are De Falla's Seguidilla, taken from his suite of seven popular Spanish songs, and Joaquin Nin's Jota Tortosina and Malaqueana. That specialist in Spanish music, George Copeland, who not long ago offered a full album of it as soloist, is her accompanist. (Victor Record, 10-inch No. 1984.)

From Europe, remiding us of how the phonograph makes an artist immortal, comes a little record of two songs sung by the late Chaliapin, accompanied by the Afonsky choir and Balalaika orchestra. The songs are: Song of the Needy Pilgrim and Arise, Red Sun. In feeling they suggest the familiar choral work of the Don Cossack choir with, of course, Chaliapin in the center of things. Victor Record, 10-inch No. 1983.)

Another importation from the great repertory of Italian opera are two lesser known baritone arias, Racconto del Pastore, from Cilea's L'Arlesiana, and Raccogli e Calma, from Ponchielli's Prodigal Son. They are sung with traditional operatic gusto by Mario Basiola. Columbia, 12-inch No. 69602-D.)

THIS CLIPPING FROM NEW ORLEANS, LA.
ITEM
JUL 3 0 1939

Reviews of New Records

Concert Recordings

By CHARLES LAMMOND

Mid-summer brings a light month of Victor classical releases for August. The music is mostly attuned to the weather, with one notable exception of which more a little later. Boston's two orchestras are most prominently represented, which is always good news for record collectors.

Paging Walt Disney

The month's feature album is M-566, "Peter and the Wolf," Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony, with Richard Hale as narrator in a vivid, crisp and yet lyric reading of this modern and thoroughly delightful composition, a quite recent work of Prokofief. It's a fine bit of recording as well as a deft interpretative job by speaker and orchestra.

A certain amount of dubiety as to the wearing qualities of the speech which is interwoven with the musical narration is removed as far as this column is concerned with repeated playings—and we still think it's good. Oh yes, Disney could do wonders with the whole thing—and should.

75

THIS CLIPPING FROM ESQUIRE
CHICAGO, ILL.
AUG - - 1939

Roulades and Cadenzas

No ballyhoo, scalpers nor souvenir hawkers at the Berkshire Festival: just the finest music to be heard

by CARLETON SMITH

▪ MUSIC ▪

At long last, this culturally barren and boorish land has a summer music festival worth bellowing about. It's in the Berkshires, not more than three hours from New York by motor, and offers a brand of music-making superior to that existing elsewhere on the globe in August.

Heretofore, anyone with the interest of music at heart has taken up a post in a boiler factory immediately after—if not before—our famous May Festivals. These ambitious choral feasts that regularly stop up our ears for the summer have done their nickel's worth. In Cincinnati, for example, where the tradition was established early, Theodore Thomas exposed the natives to Beethoven's Ninth and Gluck's Orpheus before the carpetbaggers could get home from the South. In the seventies and eighties he taught them the St. Matthew Passion, the Mozart, Brahms, and Verdi Requiems, Beethoven's and Liszt's Missa Solemnis, Mendelssohn's St. Paul and Walpurgis Night, Handel's Messiah, and a score of lesser works. He introduced all-Wagner evenings to the Middle West and such celebrities as Materna, Christine Nilsson, Lilli Lehman, Nordica, Sembrich, Schumann-Heink, Henschel, Campanini, Bispham. Sir Edward Elgar made his first American appearance in Cincinnati in 1906, coming from England to conduct The Dream of Gerontius and The Apostles. Other spring festivals from Bethlehem, Pennsylvania to Mt. Vernon, Iowa nourished local talent, imported celebrities.

But with the arrival of moths and baseball, concert halls generally are bolted and left until fall. The virtuosi sail to cooler climates, no doubt to use their furs. The more erudite among the guardians of public taste, the lettered men of music, retire to their mountain towers and turn out innumerable tomes on Wagner, Toscanini, the opera, symphony, How to Listen and How to Feel at concerts. What music making survives the heat is unrehearsed, performed in alfresco surroundings with all the intimacy of a lieder recital in Times Square.

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival started in 1934 as a makeshift affair. Sixty-five members of the New York Philharmonic Symphony assembled under Henry Hadley and played three scratch concerts on a hillside near Stockbridge, Massachusetts. The next year a few more players were added and a tent rented to cover three thousand persons. The press was told:

"Beginning perhaps a hundred years ago and continuing up to the last four or five years, there seems to have been a rather definite and regular gravitation of many young New Englanders, and especially those from the Berkshire region, to western frontiers. From the days of the California Gold Rush and the later Klondike Boom, the lure of the West, which Horace Greeley pronounced 'the land of opportunity,' attracted thousands of young people. . . . Now, under changed conditions, with the frontiers gone and the old-time lure faded out, the trek is back to the starting point; back to the Berkshires and historic New England where the ancestors of many thousands in the West, lived and died and founded the present Republic. It is a part of our general plan and purpose to inspire the return of as many descendants of the pioneers of New England as we can reach with bona fide news publicity and attract to the Berkshires with unexcelled Symphonic Concerts."

The natives were startled by the number of visitors and the pretentiousness of the plans. "Gee Whillikins!" said a bus station boy when he read the posters announcing an orchestra of eighty-five. "You don't mean all of them are going to play at once—for only a dollar?"

The skeptics were active: a Festival would ruin the countryside, upset the local gossip, bring undesirables. Heroic tales were retold on winter nights of how indignant citizens had to fight to keep the trolley cars from coming down the main streets and shaking their china from corner cupboards; how Miss Emilia Brewer at the age of seventy hopped in and sat all night in a three-foot hole in front of her house to prevent the New England Telephone Company from placing a pole in it; how the shire's town councillors kept trucks from rumbling up the peaceful streets.

Objectors waxed loud on the disadvantages of a Music Festival. Little did they realize when they invited Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony to play, that they were removing it from the realm of local affairs and giving it international prestige and significance. Five thousand people came, whistled, stomped and cheered. There was no deficit. The next summer six concerts were planned and "Tanglewood"—a 200 acre estate where Hawthorne wrote The House of Seven Gables and The Wonder Book—was given to the Boston Orchestra as a permanent home for the Festival. Music lovers swarmed in from thirty-two states, from Canada, Europe, bringing their friends. Concerts were broadcast. A branch telegraph office was installed to handle the outflow of newspaper copy. Then came the night of nights—and what may prove to be the most momentous thunderstorm in the history of our summer music.

For more than an hour rain drummed on the great expanse of stretched canvas, drowning out completely all but fortissimo passages. With infinite patience, Koussevitzky stopped, waited and began again, finally rearranging his program so that the Ride of the Valkyries and the Overture to Tannhauser were heard while the rain was loudest. The elements finally subsided—and, the concert ended, the audience took off their shoes and stockings and waded to their cars.

Next day, it was decided to house future festivals in a permanent building. Eliel Saarinen, the incomparable Finnish architect, drew tentative plans for a music shed, a Greek Theatre, and an Academy. The first of these buildings, fan-shaped with a forty-foot ceiling and covering an acre and a half, was dedicated last August. With sides open, it gives the illusion of being out-of-doors and yet offers adequate protection from sun and rain and acoustics such as can be had only under a roof.

This shed, as its name indicates, is severe, plain, without frills. When the dedicatory concert began with the audience standing and singing Eine Feste Burg, I thought I was in a New England prayer meeting. It was more like a service than a concert.

The whole atmosphere was unlike anything at continental festivals. There were no yammering truck drivers at the station, no souvenir hawkers on the street corners, no flags flying, no scalpers, no trafficking in tickets by hotel porters. In fact, try as you would, you could not buy anywhere a photograph of Doctor Koussevitzky.

Two hours before the concert the streets were deserted. Six thousand people suddenly sprang out of the bushes and mingled in the crowd: gardeners and gigolos, cooks and chauffeurs, grand dames and students with well-worn copies of scores. They dressed as they pleased. Refreshments were served on the lawn by the women from a local church. External conditions gave no indication of what one was about to hear. But before two

Continued in center of page 108

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARPERS MAGAZINE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

AUG - - 1939

POETS 14

P*aul Engle*, Elford Caughey, and Martha Keller are the poets of the month. Elford Caughey, under his own name, is new with us. A while back we published a poem of his under the pseudonym of Tristram Livingstone. Mr. Caughey is a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Miss Keller lives in Philadelphia. Paul Engle appears here for the first time. A native of Cedar Rapids, he was at Oxford as a Rhodes Scholar when his book of poems, American Song, was published in 1934. His vigorous handling of national themes attracted considerable attention. Before this he had written another volume of poems, Worn Earth, and a third book, Break the Heart's Anger, has appeared since.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 1 - 1939

Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony Arrive Tomorrow

Stockbridge, Aug. 1—Serge Koussevitzky will assemble the Boston Symphony orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's music shed at "Tanglewood" on route 183 between Lenox and Stockbridge, tomorrow for the first rehearsal in anticipation of the opening of the sixth annual festival Thursday evening at 8.30. The orchestra has been rehearsing in Boston.

The specially built shed, seating 5700, is located on the 200-acre estate presented in 1937 to the orchestra by Mrs Gorham Brooks of Brookline, Mass. This will be the fourth successive Berkshire festival at which the orchestra has played and the second in the splendid new acoustical shed which, after its inauguration last summer, was declared to have remarkable properties for hearing and comfortable accommodation.

The advance demand for season and single tickets is greater than it has ever been for a previous festival series. There is every indication of capacity audiences for each of the six concerts. The concerts will be given on Thursday and Saturday evenings, and Sunday afternoon of this week and of next week.

Dr Koussevitzky will open the 1939 festival with Bach's Third Brandenburg Concerto String Orchestra. Rimsky - Korsakov's "Scheherazade" will be on the same program, which will conclude with the First Symphony of Brahms in C minor.

The program for Saturday will open with the orchestral concerto of Walter Piston, the American composer, and will continue with the Fifth Symphony of Sibelius, and end with the Seventh by Beethoven.

The program for Sunday afternoon will feature the Fourth Symphony of Tchaikovsky, and also include Prokofieff's orchestral fairy tale, "Peter and the Wolf," Richard Hale acting as narrator. Emanuel Bach's orchestral concerto in D major will open the program.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL

AUG 1 - 1939

Berkshire Music Festival Opens Aug. 3

Serge Koussevitzky will assemble the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's music shed at "Tanglewood" on Route 183 between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., Wednesday for a rehearsal in anticipation of the opening of the sixth annual Festival Thursday evening at 8:30 o'clock.

The specially built shed, seating 5,700, is located on the 200-acre estate presented in 1937 to the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, Mass. This will be the fourth successive Berkshire festival at which the orchestra has played and the second in the splendid new acoustical shed which, after its inauguration last Summer, was declared to have remarkable properties for hearing and comfortable accommodation.

Dr. Koussevitzky will open the 1939 Festival with Bach's Third Bradenburg Concerto String Orchestra. Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade" will be on the same programme, which will include the First Symphony of Brahms in C minor.

The second program (for Saturday, Aug. 5) will open with the orchestral concerto of Walter Piston, the American composer, and will continue with the Fifth Symphony of Sibelius, and end with the Seventh by Beethoven.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 1 - 1939

TICKETS HERE FOR ORCHETRA EVENT

May be Obtained at Office of Superintendent of Schools by Pupils Who Registered.

. Tickets for pupils of Adams high school and C. T. Plunkett junior high school, who plan to attend the rehearsals of the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood, the home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., between Lenox and Stockbridge, on Saturday morning of this week have arrived in Adams and are now available at the office of Superintendent of Schools J. Franklin Farrell. School pupils who have registered for attendance at the rehearsals are asked to call at the school and secure them as soon as possible.

Attention was called today to the fact that the first rehearsal is Saturday of this week instead of tomorrow as previously announced and the second rehearsal to which school pupils will be admitted free of charge will be on Saturday, August 12.

Automobiles will leave from Adams high school at 9 o'clock Saturday morning in order to arrive at Tanglewood by 10 o'clock the hour at which the rehearsal will start.

Persons who are willing to donate their cars for transportation of pupils to the rehearsal are asked to communicate with Mr. Farrell's office as soon as possible.

Roulades and Cadenzas

Continued from page 77

programs were completed I became aware of the fact that I was participating in a quality of music-making that had not before existed in summer. Here was a finer orchestra than Mr. Toscanini had in Salzburg or London . . . a finer orchestra than Mr. Furtwängler used in Bayreuth. Here was an orchestra with its full personnel and its permanent conductor, and this was an occasion on which he permitted no compromise: each masterpiece had been rehearsed up to a point which enabled him to achieve the exact sounds he wished—and what sounds they were!

I remembered the elderly Bostonian gal who ten or twelve years ago used to tell me in Bayreuth: "You know, our new conductor, Koussevitzky, he plays much too loud. I'll have to speak to Judge Cabot about it." There she was across the aisle pounding her palms and shouting. And well she might! These concerts gave evidence of the culmination of an epoch: symphonic performances without parallel.

This month six more concerts will be given with no galaxy of "wandering" stars, no ballyhoo—simply great music played by the Boston Symphony and Koussevitzky.

The programs are:

August 3, 8:30 p. m.
Bach: Brandenburg Concerto No. 3.
Rimsky-Korsakoff: Scheherazade.
Brahms: Symphony No. 1.

August 5, 8:30 p. m.
Piston: Concerto for Orchestra.
Sibelius: Symphony No. 5.
Beethoven: Symphony No. 7.

August 6, 3:30 p. m.
Mozart: Symphony in E-flat.
Prokofieff: Peter and the Wolf.
Tchaikovsky: Symphony No. 4.

August 10, 8:30 p. m.
Beethoven: Symphony No. 2.
Strauss: Thus Spake Zarathustra.
Moussorgsky-Ravel: Pictures at an Exhibition.

August 12, 8:30 p. m.
Haydn: Symphony in B-flat, Op. 102.
Stravinsky: Le Sacre du Printemps.
Wagner: Overture to The Flying Dutchman; Prelude to Lohengrin; Prelude to The Mastersingers; Siegfried's Rhine Journey.

August 13, 3:30 p. m.
Schumann: Symphony No. 4.
Debussy: L'Après-midi d'un Faune.
Ravel: La Valse.
Sibelius: Symphony No. 2.

This in itself is sufficient: there is no need to wait for the Berkshire Festival to grow. Already, it occupies an eminence by itself. Says Doctor Koussevitzky:

"Yes, the Berkshire Music Festival is started and is rapidly growing. But concerts are only the first step toward the ultimate goal: the establishment of the greatest music and art center in the world. The United States of America can and are destined to have such a center. American freedom is the best soil for it. American financial resources will make it eventually possible. . . .

"The activities of the center will be many and varied. They will consist, first, in a series of symphonic concerts of great music. Second, in a series of immortal operas in a perfect ensemble of the finest singers, artists and choruses. Third, in a series of the most important oratorios presented in action. Fourth, in several outstanding ballet performances.

"In addition, we plan to give the classical tragedy and comedy with foremost living actors. We expect to re-create the antique Greek theatre in its modern form. For that purpose leading playwriters, composers, scholars, and other specialists will be invited. Their collective co-operation promises not only re-creation of the Greek theatre but also a creation of a new and great theatrical art, so persistently yet fruitlessly dreamed of by many visionaries in the nineteenth and present centuries.

"We contemplate further to establish an Academy of Music and Arts as a permanent institution. It has to be a creative musical center, where the greatest living composers will teach the art of composition; the greatest virtuosi, the art of perfect performance and technique; the greatest conductors, the mystery of conducting orchestras and choruses. The most eminent thinkers and scholars of Harvard, Yale and other universities will be teaching there, each in his field, so far as it concerns arts and music. . . .

"So visioned, the center will be one of the foremost educational institutions. It will serve the American nation, the world at large and all those who seek the best in music and related arts; those who want to study the fine arts in their relationship to culture, and those who long for a creative rest in the summer."

* * *

The Academy will be established in the summer of 1940. In addition to the opportunity—and a sadly needed one at that—for mature and talented musicians to practice orchestral and choral conducting, there will be a chance for everyone who enjoys music to associate in an informal and intimate way with professionals, to sing in the festival chorus or play in amateur orchestras, to attend rehearsals of the Boston Symphony and all festival concerts, to observe for themselves how music is made.

The only entrance requirement is an intelligent interest in music. No diploma or credit is given. In other words, The Berkshire Academy is not to be a conservatory or summer school. It will have no library, no research, no academic formalities. The lectures, which deal broadly with the understanding of music and the arts, will not constitute a course of study but will serve as a background for the actual musical experiences of the six-week session, which next summer will begin about July tenth and continue to August fifteenth.

To my mind, no more stimulating opportunity presents itself to the professional musician or the layman. Certainly, the Mozarteum in Salzburg offered no such attractions. As students soon discovered, it was largely a farce, its catalogue glutted with well-advertised names who seldom appeared. Salzburg had been for centuries a meeting place of Latin and Teutonic cultures. It was rich in age and romance.

But our Berkshires are rich in literary associations and have an inheritance and tradition all their own. Before 1800, William Mason was holding a musical convention in the courthouse at Lenox, "which was filled to overflowing." Hawthorne spent the busiest months of his creative life on what now are the Festival grounds. James Russell Lowell stayed in Stockbridge, Oliver Wendell Holmes in Pittsfield. William Cullen Bryant was inspired to write Thanatopsis and had a house near Great Barrington. The countryside was a "jungle of literary lions."

The natural beauty of this landscape influences every creative mind. Though in time they bored Hawthorne, who, incidentally, couldn't tell the difference between Hail, Columbia and Yankee Doodle, the endless nooks and corners along the busy Housatonic, the lights and shadows and clouds over Stockbridge Bowl, the mountains in the distance, have changed little since he lived at Tanglewood and wrote of Bald Head.

From the point of view of atmosphere, the Berkshires offer an ideal home for an American music-center. And, having heard the results of Doctor Koussevitzky's passionate faith and perseverance in his purpose, and knowing the unique combination of imagination and caution which characterizes the outlook of those who support this project, I am confident of its future. If, however, it should halt now and continue to present only symphonic concerts, it would have established a standard of performance second to none and have made it impossible for music in this country ever again to take a summer vacation. ⧺

76

FROM HARPERS MAGAZINE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

AUG - - 1939

POETS 14

Paul Engle, Elford Caughey, and Martha Keller are the poets of the month. Elford Caughey, under his own name, is new with us. A while back we published a poem of his under the pseudonym of Tristram Livingstone. Mr. Caughey is a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Miss Keller lives in Philadelphia. Paul Engle appears here for the first time. A native of Cedar Rapids, he was at Oxford as a Rhodes Scholar when his book of poems, American Song, was published in 1934. His vigorous handling of national themes attracted considerable attention. Before this he had written another volume of poems, Worn Earth, and a third book, Break the Heart's Anger, has appeared since.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 1- 1939

Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony Arrive Tomorrow

Stockbridge, Aug. 1—Serge Koussevitzky will assemble the Boston Symphony orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's music shed at "Tanglewood" on route 183 between Lenox and Stockbridge, tomorrow for the first rehearsal in anticipation of the opening of the sixth annual festival Thursday evening at 8.30. The orchestra has been rehearsing in Boston.

The specially built shed, seating 5700, is located on the 200-acre estate presented in 1937 to the orchestra by Mrs Gorham Brooks of Brookline, Mass. This will be the fourth successive Berkshire festival at which the orchestra has played and the second in the splendid new acoustical shed which, after its inauguration last summer, was declared to have remarkable properties for hearing and comfortable accommodation.

The advance demand for season and single tickets is greater than it has ever been for a previous festival series. There is every indication of capacity audiences for each of the six concerts. The concerts will be given on Thursday and Saturday evenings, and Sunday afternoon of this week and of next week.

Dr Koussevitzky will open the 1939 festival with Bach's Third Brandenburg Concerto String Orchestra. Rimsky - Korsakov's "Scheherazade" will be on the same program, which will conclude with the First Symphony of Brahms in C minor.

The program for Saturday will open with the orchestral concerto of Walter Piston, the American composer, and will continue with the Fifth Symphony of Sibelius, and end with the Seventh by Beethoven.

The program for Sunday afternoon will feature the Fourth Symphony of Tchaikovsky, and also include Prokofieff's orchestral fairy tale, "Peter and the Wolf," Richard Hale acting as narrator. Emanuel Bach's orchestral concerto in D major will open the program.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL

AUG 1 - 1939

Berkshire Music Festival Opens Aug. 3

Serge Koussevitzky will assemble the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's music shed at "Tanglewood" on Route 183 between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., Wednesday for a rehearsal in anticipation of the opening of the sixth annual Festival Thursday evening at 8:30 o'clock.

The specially built shed, seating 5,700, is located on the 200-acre estate presented in 1937 to the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, Mass. This will be the fourth successive Berkshire festival at which the orchestra has played and the second in the splendid new acoustical shed which, after its inauguration last Summer, was declared to have remarkable properties for hearing and comfortable accommodation.

Dr. Koussevitzky will open the 1939 Festival with Bach's Third Bradenburg Concerto String Orchestra. Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade" will be on the same programme, which will include the First Symphony of Brahms in C minor.

The second program (for Saturday, Aug. 5) will open with the orchestral concerto of Walter Piston, the American composer, and will continue with the Fifth Symphony of Sibelius, and end with the Seventh by Beethoven.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 1 - 1939

TICKETS HERE FOR ORCHETRA EVENT

May be Obtained at Office of Superintendent of Schools by Pupils Who Registered.

Tickets for pupils of Adams high school and C. T. Plunkett junior high school, who plan to attend the rehearsals of the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood, the home of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., between Lenox and Stockbridge, on Saturday morning of this week have arrived in Adams and are now available at the office of Superintendent of Schools J. Franklin Farrell. School pupils who have registered for attendance at the rehearsals are asked to call at the school and secure them as soon as possible.

Attention was called today to the fact that the first rehearsal is Saturday of this week instead of tomorrow as previously announced and the second rehearsal to which school pupils will be admitted free of charge will be on Saturday, August 12.

Automobiles will leave from Adams high school at 9 o'clock Saturday morning in order to arrive at Tanglewood by 10 o'clock the hour at which the rehearsal will start.

Persons who are willing to donate their cars for transportation of pupils to the rehearsal are asked to communicate with Mr. Farrell's office as soon as possible.

Roulades and Cadenzas

Continued from page 77

programs were completed I became aware of the fact that I was participating in a quality of music-making that had not before existed in summer. Here was a finer orchestra than Mr. Toscanini had in Salzburg or London . . . a finer orchestra than Mr. Furtwängler used in Bayreuth. Here was an orchestra with its full personnel and its permanent conductor, and this was an occasion on which he permitted no compromise: each masterpiece had been rehearsed up to a point which enabled him to achieve the exact sounds he wished —and what sounds they were!

I remembered the elderly Bostonian gal who ten or twelve years ago used to tell me in Bayreuth: "You know, our new conductor, Koussevitzky, he plays much too loud. I'll have to speak to Judge Cabot about it." There she was across the aisle pounding her palms and shouting. And well she might! These concerts gave evidence of the culmination of an epoch: symphonic performances without parallel.

This month six more concerts will be given with no galaxy of "wandering" stars, no ballyhoo—simply great music played by the Boston Symphony and Koussevitzky.

The programs are:

August 3, 8:30 p. m.
Bach: Brandenburg Concerto No. 3.
Rimsky-Korsakoff: Scheherazade.
Brahms: Symphony No. 1.

August 5, 8:30 p. m.
Piston: Concerto for Orchestra.
Sibelius: Symphony No. 5.
Beethoven: Symphony No. 7.

August 6, 3:30 p. m.
Mozart: Symphony in E-flat.
Prokofieff: Peter and the Wolf.
Tchaikovsky: Symphony No. 4.

August 10, 8:30 p. m.
Beethoven: Symphony No. 2.
Strauss: Thus Spake Zarathustra.
Moussorgsky-Ravel: Pictures at an Exhibition.

August 12, 8:30 p. m.
Haydn: Symphony in B-flat, Op. 102.
Stravinsky: Le Sacre du Printemps.
Wagner: Overture to The Flying Dutchman; Prelude to Lohengrin; Prelude to The Mastersingers; Siegfried's Rhine Journey.

August 13, 3:30 p. m.
Schumann: Symphony No. 4.
Debussy: L'Après-midi d'un Faune.
Ravel: La Valse.
Sibelius: Symphony No. 2.

This in itself is sufficient: there is no need to wait for the Berkshire Festival to grow. Already, it occupies an eminence by itself. Says Doctor Koussevitzky:

"Yes, the Berkshire Music Festival is started and is rapidly growing. But concerts are only the first step toward the ultimate goal: the establishment of the greatest music and art center in the world. The United States of America can and are destined to have such a center. American freedom is the best soil for it. American financial resources will make it eventually possible. . . .

"The activities of the center will be many and varied. They will consist, first, in a series of symphonic concerts of great music. Second, in a series of immortal operas in a perfect ensemble of the finest singers, artists and choruses. Third, in a series of the most important oratorios presented in action. Fourth, in several outstanding ballet performances.

"In addition, we plan to give the classical tragedy and comedy with foremost living actors. We expect to re-create the antique Greek theatre in its modern form. For that purpose leading playwriters, composers, scholars, and other specialists will be invited. Their collective co-operation promises not only re-creation of the Greek theatre but also a creation of a new and great theatrical art, so persistently yet fruitlessly dreamed of by many visionaries in the nineteenth and present centuries.

"We contemplate further to establish an Academy of Music and Arts as a permanent institution. It has to be a creative musical center, where the greatest living composers will teach the art of composition; the greatest virtuosi, the art of perfect performance and technique; the greatest conductors, the mystery of conducting orchestras and choruses. The most eminent thinkers and scholars of Harvard, Yale and other universities will be teaching there, each in his field, so far as it concerns arts and music. . . .

"So visioned, the center will be one of the foremost educational institutions. It will serve the American nation, the world at large and all those who seek the best in music and related arts; those who want to study the fine arts in their relationship to culture, and those who long for a creative rest in the summer."

* * *

The Academy will be established in the summer of 1940. In addition to the opportunity—and a sadly needed one at that—for mature and talented musicians to practice orchestral and choral conducting, there will be a chance for everyone who enjoys music to associate in an informal and intimate way with professionals, to sing in the festival chorus or play in amateur orchestras, to attend rehearsals of the Boston Symphony and all festival concerts, to observe for themselves how music is made.

The only entrance requirement is an intelligent interest in music. No diploma or credit is given. In other words, The Berkshire Academy is not to be a conservatory or summer school. It will have no library, no research, no academic formalities. The lectures, which deal broadly with the understanding of music and the arts, will not constitute a course of study but will serve as a background for the actual musical experiences of the six-week session, which next summer will begin about July tenth and continue to August fifteenth.

To my mind, no more stimulating opportunity presents itself to the professional musician or the layman. Certainly, the Mozarteum in Salzburg offered no such attractions. As students soon discovered, it was largely a farce, its catalogue glutted with well-advertised names who seldom appeared. Salzburg had been for centuries a meeting place of Latin and Teutonic cultures. It was rich in age and romance.

But our Berkshires are rich in literary associations and have an inheritance and tradition all their own. Before 1800, William Mason was holding a musical convention in the courthouse at Lenox, "which was filled to overflowing." Hawthorne spent the busiest months of his creative life on what now are the Festival grounds. James Russell Lowell stayed in Stockbridge, Oliver Wendell Holmes in Pittsfield. William Cullen Bryant was inspired to write Thanatopsis and had a house near Great Barrington. The countryside was a "jungle of literary lions."

The natural beauty of this landscape influences every creative mind. Though in time they bored Hawthorne, who, incidentally, couldn't tell the difference between Hail, Columbia and Yankee Doodle, the endless nooks and corners along the busy Housatonic, the lights and shadows and clouds over Stockbridge Bowl, the mountains in the distance, have changed little since he lived at Tanglewood and wrote of Bald Head.

From the point of view of atmosphere, the Berkshires offer an ideal home for an American music-center. And, having heard the results of Doctor Koussevitzky's passionate faith and perseverance in his purpose, and knowing the unique combination of imagination and caution which characterizes the outlook of those who support this project, I am confident of its future. If, however, it should halt now and continue to present only symphonic concerts, it would have established a standard of performance second to none and have made it impossible for music in this country ever again to take a summer vacation. ⌗

34X

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 1 - 1939

MUSIC FESTIVAL AT TANGLEWOOD OPENS THURSDAY

Boston Symphony Orchestra to Arrive Tomorrow for Rehearsal

PITTSFIELD, July 31—Serge Koussevitzky will assemble the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's music shed at Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge, Wednesday for a rehearsal in anticipation of the opening of the sixth annual festival Thursday at 8.30. The orchestra has been rehearsing in Boston.

Shed Seats 5700

The specially built shed, seating 5700, is on the 200-acre estate presented in 1937 to the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline. This will be the fourth successive Berkshire festival at which the orchestra has played and the second in the new acoustical shed which, after its inauguration last summer, was declared to have remarkable properties for hearing and comfortable accommodation.

The programs are those of winter Symphony concerts. The performances are of a symphonic standard consistent with the famous orchestra here assembled in full personnel under its illustrious conductor.

The advance demand for season and single tickets is greater than it has ever been for a previous festival series. There is every indication of capacity audiences for each of the six concerts. The concerts will be given Thursday and Saturday evenings, and Sunday afternoon of next week and of the week following.

Bach and Brahms

Dr. Koussevitzky will open the 1939 Festival with Bach's Third Brandenburg Concerto String Orchestra. Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade" will be on the same program, which will conclude with the First Symphony of Brahms in C minor.

The program for Saturday will open with the orchestral concerto of Walter Piston, the American composer, and will continue with the Fifth Symphony of Sibelius, and end with the Seventh by Beethoven. The program of the following afternoon will feature the Fourth Symphony of Tchaikovsky, and will include Prokofieff's orchestral fairy tale, "Peter and the Wolf," Richard Hale acting as narrator. Emanuel Bach's orchestral concerto in D major will open the program.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
Phila. Forum
mag
Phila, Pa.

AUG - 1939

THE PHILADELPHIA FORUM MAGAZINE

VOLUME EIGHTEEN AUGUST, 1939 NUMBER TWELVE

ANOTHER GRAND REVIEW

OCCASIONALLY, along about August, this page contains a resume of the bright stars who illumine the Forum year. This August, lest the custom be honored in the breach more than the observance, we beg to call the members' attention to the brilliant winter sky in The Forum.

To begin with music. The two great Wagnerian sopranos of the Metropolitan, Kirsten Flagstad and Marjorie Lawrence, come only to The Forum in recitals, Mme. Flagstad after several years' absence, and Miss Lawrence for her first Philadelphia recital. Alexander Kipnis, appraised by a considerable number of the cognoscenti as the greatest recital artist living, returns at the request of many members. Robert Virovai, the seventeen-year-old Hungarian violinist who last season made "one of the most exciting debuts ever heard in Carnegie Hall," according to Time Magazine, a judgment with which your Editor, who was there, is in full accord, comes for his debut in this city, while that very great musician, Georges Enesco, honors The Forum with his last appearance as a violinist. France is the birthplace of the three great pianists whom The Forum will hear, Walter Gieseking, making his first appearance with us, and Robert and Gaby Casadesus, who have become old favorites with our members. Next season Doctor Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony will give us a program of unusual novelty, modeled on the one which was regarded as the high-light of New York's last musical season. The hilarious but indescribable Comedian Harmonists make their first local appearance and The Philadelphia Opera Company, after golden opinions in its first season, will give a special performance for Forum members.

The Jooss European Ballet, top-ranking ballet ensemble of the world, returns to America, after a year's absence, in new programs and Argentinita and her Spanish Ensemble will repeat their triumph of last season.

As we have said before, The Forum promises the best group of plays that Philadelphia will see.

Foreign and domestic affairs will receive their due share of attention, from that great son of a great father, the half-American Jan Masaryk, for fifteen years Czech minister in London, Ambassadors Hugh Gibson and Bill Bullitt, America's Town Meeting of the Air with George V. Denny, Jr. as Moderator, in their first Philadelphia appearance, "Augur," world-famous London journalist, Stuart Chase, American economist, Doctor George Earle Raiguel, at the present moment collecting new material in the Mediterranean Basin, Palestine and Central Europe, and a series of Town Meetings with varied speakers, on the most pressing questions of the moment.

Long-time Forum favorite Billy Phelps will be with us in three new book talks, and that charming star of stage, screen and radio, Elissa Landi, answers, with amusing illustrations, the question whether "The Play's the Thing, or Is It?" The man who has probably known more intimately than any other American the great and the near-great in literature, politics and the arts, James B. Pond, will tell in his amusing and indiscreet fashion of "Celebrities I Have Known."

For those who like motion pictures, and who doesn't?, there will be a varied array of illustrated talks and demonstrations by a great scientist, Doctor Gerald Wendt, Director of Science and Education of the New York World's Fair, by W. Robert Moore, special representative of the National Geographic Society in Palestine, Earl Schenck, scientist, explorer, actor, artist and motion picture director, Amos Burg, daring explorer of dangerous rivers, Captain C. W. R. Knight, probably the top-ranker of all the picture men, in an amusing new lecture, and Governor Carl E. Milliken with his technicolor motion picture cavalcade of American history. There will of course be the annual Presentation of The Philadelphia Award and other events of first importance, to be announced later.

If the Grand Review in Washington at the end of the Civil War was, as claimed, worth ten years of a man's life, next season's Forum program is surely worth at least forty evenings of anyone's winter.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

AUG 1 - 1939

Music Festival Set Thursday

Berkshire Opening Will Feature Boston Symphony Presentation

Serge Koussevitzky will assemble the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's music shed at "Tanglewood" on route 183 between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., tomorrow for a rehearsal in anticipation of the opening of the sixth annual festival Thursday night at 8:30 o'clock.

The specially built shed, seating 5,700, is located on the 200-acre estate presented in 1937 to the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, Mass. This will be the fourth successive Berkshire festival at which the orchestra has played and the second in the splendid new acoustical shed which, after its inauguration last summer, was declared to have remarkable properties for hearing and comfortable accommodation.

The programs are those of winter symphony concerts. The performances are of a symphonic standard consistent with the famous orchestra here assembled in full personnel under its illustrious conductor. To hear a Boston symphony concert in incomparable midsummer surroundings is a rare and unforgettable experience.

The advance demand for season and single tickets is greater than it has ever been for a previous festival series. There is every indication of capacity audiences for each of the six concerts. The concerts will be given on Thursday and Saturday evenings, and Sunday afternoon of next week and of the week following.

Dr. Koussevitzky will open the 1939 festival with Bach's third Brandenburg concerto string orchestra. Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade" will be on the same program, which will conclude with the first symphony of Brahms in C minor.

The second program, Saturday, will open with the orchestral concerto of Walter Piston, the American composer, and will continue with the fifth symphony of Sibelius, and end with the seventh by Beethoven. The program of the following afternoon will feature the fourth symphony of Tchaikovsky, and also include Prokofieff's orchestral fairy tale, "Peter and the Wolf", Richard Hale acting as narrator. Emanuel Bach's orchestral concerto in D major will open the program.

The programs for the second week will be as follows: Thursday, Aug. 10: Beethoven's second symphony, Strauss' "Thus Spake Zarathustra", and Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition", in Ravel's orchestration. The Saturday program, Aug. 12, will include Haydn's symphony in B flat, No. 102; Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring", and excerpts from Wagner's "The Flying Dutchman", "Meistersinger", "Lohengrin", and "Tannhauser". The final program on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 13, will comprise Schumann's fourth symphony; Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun"; Ravel's "La Valse" and the second symphony of Sibelius.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
GREENWICH, CONN.
TIME

AUG 1 - 1939

Invalids Need Not Stay Away From Berkshire Fete

Invalids or others temporarily incapacitated need not remain away from the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival opening Thursday at 8:30 at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

A fleet of wheel chairs has been assembled from Berkshire County hospitals and will be available for those who wish them. By writing to the Festival office at Stockbridge, a special "invalid's" card may be obtained, permitting automobiles to enter the box parking area and drive to the corner of the music shed.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 1 - 1939

MUSIC FESTIVAL AT TANGLEWOOD OPENS THURSDAY

Boston Symphony Orchestra to Arrive Tomorrow for Rehearsal

PITTSFIELD, July 31—Serge Koussevitzky will assemble the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's music shed at Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge, Wednesday for a rehearsal in anticipation of the opening of the sixth annual festival Thursday at 8.30. The orchestra has been rehearsing in Boston.

Shed Seats 5700

The specially built shed, seating 5700, is on the 200-acre estate presented in 1937 to the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline. This will be the fourth successive Berkshire festival at which the orchestra has played and the second in the new acoustical shed which, after its inauguration last summer, was declared to have remarkable properties for hearing and comfortable accommodation.

The programs are those of winter Symphony concerts. The performances are of a symphonic standard consistent with the famous orchestra here assembled in full personnel under its illustrious conductor.

The advance demand for season and single tickets is greater than it has ever been for a previous festival series. There is every indication of capacity audiences for each of the six concerts. The concerts will be given Thursday and Saturday evenings, and Sunday afternoon of next week and of the week following.

Bach and Brahms

Dr. Koussevitzky will open the 1939 Festival with Bach's Third Brandenburg Concerto String Orchestra. Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade" will be on the same program, which will conclude with the First Symphony of Brahms in C minor.

The program for Saturday will open with the orchestral concerto of Walter Piston, the American composer, and will continue with the Fifth Symphony of Sibelius, and end with the Seventh by Beethoven. The program of the following afternoon will feature the Fourth Symphony of Tchaikovsky, and will include Prokofieff's orchestral fairy tale, "Peter and the Wolf," Richard Hale acting as narrator. Emanuel Bach's orchestral concerto in D major will open the program.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
Phila. Forum
mag.
Phila, Pa.

AUG - 1939

THE PHILADELPHIA FORUM MAGAZINE

VOLUME EIGHTEEN AUGUST, 1939 NUMBER TWELVE

ANOTHER GRAND REVIEW

OCCASIONALLY, along about August, this page contains a resume of the bright stars who illumine the Forum year. This August, lest the custom be honored in the breach more than the observance, we beg to call the members' attention to the brilliant winter sky in The Forum.

To begin with music. The two great Wagnerian sopranos of the Metropolitan, Kirsten Flagstad and Marjorie Lawrence, come only to The Forum in recitals, Mme. Flagstad after several years' absence, and Miss Lawrence for her first Philadelphia recital. Alexander Kipnis, appraised by a considerable number of the cognoscenti as the greatest recital artist living, returns at the request of many members. Robert Virovai, the seventeen-year-old Hungarian violinist who last season made "one of the most exciting debuts ever heard in Carnegie Hall," according to Time Magazine, a judgment with which your Editor, who was there, is in full accord, comes for his debut in this city, while that very great musician, Georges Enesco, honors The Forum with his last appearance as a violinist. France is the birthplace of the three great pianists whom The Forum will hear, Walter Gieseking, making his first appearance with us, and Robert and Gaby Casadesus, who have become old favorites with our members. Next season Doctor Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony will give us a program of unusual novelty, modeled on the one which was regarded as the high-light of New York's last musical season. The hilarious but indescribable Comedian Harmonists make their first local appearance and The Philadelphia Opera Company, after golden opinions in its first season, will give a special performance for Forum members.

The Jooss European Ballet, top-ranking ballet ensemble of the world, returns to America, after a year's absence, in new programs and Argentinita and her Spanish Ensemble will repeat their triumph of last season.

As we have said before, The Forum promises the best group of plays that Philadelphia will see.

Foreign and domestic affairs will receive their due share of attention, from that great son of a great father, the half-American Jan Masaryk, for fifteen years Czech minister in London, Ambassadors Hugh Gibson and Bill Bullitt, America's Town Meeting of the Air with George V. Denny, Jr. as Moderator, in their first Philadelphia appearance, "Augur," world-famous London journalist, Stuart Chase, American economist, Doctor George Earle Raiguel, at the present moment collecting new material in the Mediterranean Basin, Palestine and Central Europe, and a series of Town Meetings with varied speakers, on the most pressing questions of the moment.

Long-time Forum favorite Billy Phelps will be with us in three new book talks, and that charming star of stage, screen and radio, Elissa Landi, answers, with amusing illustrations, the question whether "The Play's the Thing, or Is It?" The man who has probably known more intimately than any other American the great and the near-great in literature, politics and the arts, James B. Pond, will tell in his amusing and indiscreet fashion of "Celebrities I Have Known."

For those who like motion pictures, and who doesn't?, there will be a varied array of illustrated talks and demonstrations by a great scientist, Doctor Gerald Wendt, Director of Science and Education of the New York World's Fair, by W. Robert Moore, special representative of the National Geographic Society in Palestine, Earl Schenck, scientist, explorer, actor, artist and motion picture director, Amos Burg, daring explorer of dangerous rivers, Captain C. W. R. Knight, probably the top-ranker of all the picture men, in an amusing new lecture, and Governor Carl E. Milliken with his technicolor motion picture cavalcade of American history. There will of course be the annual Presentation of The Philadelphia Award and other events of first importance, to be announced later.

If the Grand Review in Washington at the end of the Civil War was, as claimed, worth ten years of a man's life, next season's Forum program is surely worth at least forty evenings of anyone's winter.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

AUG 1 - 1939

Music Festival Set Thursday

Berkshire Opening Will Feature Boston Symphony Presentation

Serge Koussevitzky will assemble the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's music shed at "Tanglewood" on route 183 between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., tomorrow for a rehearsal in anticipation of the opening of the sixth annual festival Thursday night at 8:30 o'clock.

The specially built shed, seating 5,700, is located on the 200-acre estate presented in 1937 to the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, Mass. This will be the fourth successive Berkshire festival at which the orchestra has played and the second in the splendid new acoustical shed which, after its inauguration last summer, was declared to have remarkable properties for hearing and comfortable accommodation.

The programs are those of winter symphony concerts. The performances are of a symphonic standard consistent with the famous orchestra here assembled in full personnel under its illustrious conductor. To hear a Boston symphony concert in incomparable midsummer surroundings is a rare and unforgettable experience.

The advance demand for season and single tickets is greater than it has ever been for a previous festival series. There is every indication of capacity audiences for each of the six concerts. The concerts will be given on Thursday and Saturday evenings, and Sunday afternoon of next week and of the week following.

Dr. Koussevitzky will open the 1939 festival with Bach's third Brandenburg concerto string orchestra. Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade" will be on the same program, which will conclude with the first symphony of Brahms in C minor.

The second program, Saturday, will open with the orchestral concerto of Walter Piston, the American composer, and will continue with the fifth symphony of Sibelius, and end with the seventh by Beethoven. The program of the following afternoon will feature the fourth symphony of Tchaikovsky, and also include Prokofieff's orchestral fairy tale, "Peter and the Wolf", Richard Hale acting as narrator. Emanuel Bach's orchestral concerto in D major will open the program.

The programs for the second week will be as follows: Thursday, Aug. 10: Beethoven's second symphony, Strauss' "Thus Spake Zarathustra", and Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition", in Ravel's orchestration. The Saturday program, Aug. 12, will include Haydn's symphony in B flat, No. 102; Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring", and excerpts from Wagner's "The Flying Dutchman", "Meistersinger", "Lohengrin", and "Tannhauser". The final program on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 13, will comprise Schumann's fourth symphony; Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun"; Ravel's "La Valse" and the second symphony of Sibelius.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
GREENWICH, CONN.
TIME
AUG 1 - 1939

Invalids Need Not Stay Away From Berkshire Fete

Invalids or others temporarily incapacitated need not remain away from the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival opening Thursday at 8:30 at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

A fleet of wheel chairs has been assembled, from Berkshire County hospitals and will be available for those who wish them. By writing to the Festival office at Stockbridge, a special "invalid's" card may be obtained, permitting automobiles to enter the box parking area and drive to the corner of the music shed.

78

THIS CLIPPING FROM BURLINGTON, VT.
NEWS

AUG 1 - 1939

Berkshire Festival Thursday

Local Music Lovers Planning to Attend Tanglewood Events

Many Burlingtonians are planning to attend the first Berkshire Symphonic Festival Concert which will be held at Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge Thursday of this week.

The opening concert will be by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky. Harlie E. Wilson of Burlington is a member of the advisory committee for the festival.

Mr. Charles L. Safford, retired director of music at Williams College, will give his final lecture on the symphonies to be played at the festival at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield this afternoon. These lectures have been sponsored by the Pittsfield Junior League.

The Berkshire Museum has opened three special exhibitions for festival goers.

Miss Estelle Hutchinson, chairman of the Lenox Festival committee, opened the Lenox information booth today and ticket reservations may be made through this booth as well as at the office in Stockbridge. Miss Hutchinson has also arranged a tour of a number of the outstanding estates in Lenox. All persons wishing to go on these tours must register at the Lenox booth.

Other information booths will be found in Great Barrington and Pittsfield. They will be in charge of volunteers.

The festival office in Stockbridge reports that the ticket sales are substantially ahead of 1938 indicating a capacity audience for the opening concert.

The complete program for the festival is as follows:

Series A

Thursday, August 3, at 8:30:
Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G major .... Bach
"Scheherazade," Symphonic Suite .... Rimsky-Korsakos
Symphony No. 1 in C minor, Op. 68 .... Brahms

Saturday, August 5, at 8:30:
Concerto for Orchestra ....Piston
Symphony No. 5 in E flat major .... Sibelius
Symphony No. 7 in A major .... Beethoven

Sunday, August 6, at 3:30:
Symphony in E flat major, Mozart
"Peter and the Wolf" ...Prokofieff
Symphony No. 4 in F minor .... Tschaikowsky

Series B

Thursday, August 10, at 8:30:
Symphony No. 2 in D major .... Beethoven
"Also Sprach Zarathustra," Tone Poem .... Strauss
"Pictures at an Exhibition" .... Moussorgsky-Ravel

Saturday, August 12, at 8:30:
Symphony in B flat, No. 102 .... Haydn
"Le Sacre du Printemps" .... Stravinsky
Overture to "Der Fliegende Hollander" .... Wagner
Prelude to "Lohengrin" ..Wagner
Bacchanale from "Tannhauser" .... Wagner
Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg" .... Wagner

Sunday, August 13, at 3:30:
Symphony No. 4 in D minor .... Schumann
Prelude a "L'Apres-midi 'd'un Faune .... Debussy
"La Valse" .... Ravel
Symphony No. 2, in D major .... Sibelius

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

AUG 1 - 1939

World of Lively Arts

By T. H. PARKER

Giving The Public The Works.

Looking over the six groups of works which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will give the public at Stockbridge this week and next, supports for me at least, my ancient belief that there is no contemporary conductor who can whip up a more savory program than he. You can no more consider one of the Doctor's programs piece by piece, than you can a Lucullan menu. Each number serves the paradoxical turn of gartifying and whetting your appetite.

Nor is there any thing dainty in the way he does it. His programs have the span of the Bear Mountain Bridge and the splendiferous brilliance of World's Fair fireworks. We have had more philosophic more specialized, more scholarly program makers than Dr. Koussevitzky, but none of more superlative showmanship or better able to give an eloquent sound to an entire evening.

What I mean is, take a program like the first—the Third Brandenburg Concerto, the "Scherazade" Suite, and Brahms's First. It's practically three dimensional any way you look at it—periods, temperaments, styles. It touches your head, heart and hearing. One more and Dr. Koussevitzky could join a Four-H Club. Or that roccocco gem, which you'll hear on the first Sunday afternoon—Mozart's Symphony in E Flat, Prokofieff's "Peter And The Wolf" and Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony. As fashionable a get-up as you could find between the covers of Vogue. (OK, Conde Nast, pay up.)

Here is one taken at random from the heap of programs played by the Boston on the home lot this winter: Haydn, Symphony in D Major, No. 86; Pianoforte Concerto, No. 2, Krenek, and Loeffler's "Pagan Poem (After Virgil)," with Jesu Sanroma, and Louis Speyer on the French horn. Um! Um!

As a whole, though there are two novelties and one slightly used work, the stuff of the program is from the good, old vein. The great masters, new and old, and entirely orchestral going. This however, is only proof of how well Dr. Koussevitzky knows his house, the time and the place.

The people who have made these Tanglewood tales what they are today, are, when all is said and done, the conservative-wealthy, the rocks on which the arts world is ever founded. They like the staid and steady, with only a soupcon of tobasco, and since they are paying for it, they are entitled to it. All others can put on their corduroys and thumb their way to Yaddo.

Still, it goes a little farther than that. I do not see how you are going to separate the music and the occasion, and by the occasion I mean the summer night, the romantic estate, the flowered chiffons and the chauffeurs. I mean, setting off some snatch of radicalism at such a time would be like inviting a boogie-woogie pianist to a Carthusian retreat. And I for one, am willing to desert the simon-pures and soak up the sentiment along with the notes, at such a festival as this.

The two novelties, of course are "Peter And The Wolf," Prokofieff's fabliau, and in part, at least Strauss's "Thus Spake Zarathustra" —perhaps I should say "in parts," with definite geographical inferences to Hartford. Slightly used is the "Sacre de Printemps," but still able to list as a musical shilling-shocker.

Still, I wish the symphony boys could get themselves into the mental condition of the jam-sessioners. I wish that after the regular concerts they would all feel moved to sneak off to some bosky dell and uncork a few hours of reeling off those newer things they gave out during the past season in Boston. In case you want to oblige, here are one or two I'd like to listen to:

"El Salon Mexico," by Copland; Handel's "Occasional Oratoria"; "Dedicaces," for piano, orchestra and soprano, by Dukelsky; Langendoen's "Improvisations For Orchestra"; Roy Harris's Third Symphony; Schmitt's "Tragedie of Salome"; Martelli's "Assyrian Bas-Reliefs"; Kodaly's "Ballet Music" and Amfitheatrof's "American Panorama."

After you get those in hand, boys, I'll give you another list.

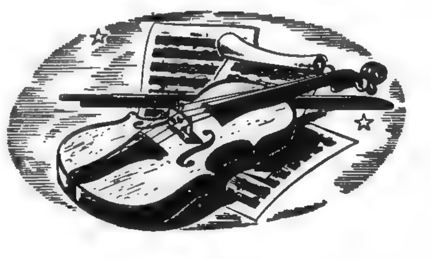
THIS CLIPPING FROM
[illegible]

AUG - 1939

The Berkshire Festival

Beginning of 4th season . . . Performances directed by Koussevitzky . . . Academy planned for next year.

ENTERING upon its fourth season, the Berkshire Music Festival, held annually at Stockbridge, Massachusetts, is already taking on the proportions of a national institution. Installed in the beautiful grounds of Tanglewood, the gift of Mrs. Gorham Brooks, the festival has progressed from the tent stage to the Music Shed, a structure open at the sides but provided with shutters for use in bad weather. Most encouraging is the financial status of this enterprise, which has fully succeeded in paying its way. Last season the expenses were about fifty-nine thousand dollars, and they may be approximately two thousand more this year, owing to improvement of the grounds which is going forward.



* * *

Given by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra, the Festival concerts have in the past attracted overflow audiences, a notable tribute, as the Shed seats 5,726 people.

"They show," writes Mr. Olin Downes in the New York Times, "that it is perfectly possible to institute a series of performances of the highest quality and the most serious purpose, and find for them a public and a method of self-maintenance. In this undertaking there is no element of cheapness, sensationalism or misleading press-agentry. . . . The only thing offered is great orchestral music, greatly performed." This statement is not surprising, in view of the growing popular support of symphony orchestras in many cities throughout the country, the number of these orchestras at present being more than two hundred and seventy.

In the plans of the Berkshire Music Festival is what Dr. Koussevitzky terms an "academy" of music, which, beginning probably next year, will carry on its sessions in the three weeks preceding the Festival proper. A detailed announcement will be made later this season.

The broad outline of the plans contemplates courses to be devoted to the training of young conductors who have talent and some achievement to their credit. The conception of the school also involves "the establishment, from the student body, of a chorus to be trained in sight-singing and interpretation, with a sound theoretical background, and experience in actual performance with the orchestra. There will be lessons for advanced orchestral players by first-desk members of the Boston Symphony. There will be study of repertory, lectures upon these and related subjects, 'laboratory' work under the direct supervision of the leader."

* * *

It is stated that this school will not compete with the work done by established summer schools of music in the United States, but, rather, will center attention on the specialized development of young musicians.

Both the Festival and the plans for the "academy" are the outcome of solid achievement, devoid of any attempt to attract the public by means of special features. Very seldom has a soloist appeared with the orchestra. The greatest soloist, as Mr. Downes puts it, "is the modern orchestra in the hands of a master musician and interpreter."

Surely no other attractions appear to be necessary in this present stage of enlightened appreciation of first-rate symphonies.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 1 - 1939

Distinguished Visitors Arriving for Festival

Mrs. Hadley, Mrs. Brooks, John Garrett, Former Ambassador to Italy Coming—Sellout for Thursday Indicated

Distinguished visitors from many sections of this country, England, Canada and France, will start arriving tomorrow, for the opening of the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood. Hotels in Stockbridge, Lenox, Pittsfield and Great Barrington report capacity or near capacity registrations but the Innkeepers Association has made arrangements to take care of all late comers in surrounding towns.

Sellout Indicated

Advance ticket reservations at the Festival office, substantially ahead of last year, indicate a sellout for the opening concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, and more than 100 members of the orchestra arrive tomorrow and in all probability will have a rehearsal at the shed.

Mrs. Inez Hadley, widow of Dr. Henry Hadley, composer and first conductor of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, will be here for all concerts of the first series and will have a number of guests from the Henry Hadley Foundation in New York.

John W. Garrett of Baltimore, former ambassador to Italy, and Mrs. Barrett will be here for all the concerts. They are well known patrons of music and give a double series of chamber concerts at their Baltimore home in the spring and the fall. They will be guests while in the Berkshires of Mrs. William Penn Cresson of Stockbridge.

Guests of Miss Robinson Smith

Guests of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Festival president, and her mother, Mrs. Charles Robinson Smith, will include Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Garreau-Dombasle. Mr. Dombasle is commercial attache of the French embassy and commissioner of the French Pavilion at the New York World's Fair. Another guest will be Bryn Strandenaes, the Norwegian portrait painter.

Mr. and Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline and Dublin, N. H., and their daughter Violet, will be in attendance. Mrs. Brooks is the donor of Tanglewood, the home of the Festival.

From Northampton will come once more, Mrs. Grace G. Coolidge, widow of President Calvin Coolidge and Mrs. S. B. Adams.

As guests of Dr. William Mather Lewis, president of Lafayette College, and Mrs. Lewis will come Mr. and Mrs. Oswald Garrison Villard of New York.

Other Notables

Others in attendance at the opening concert will include Arthur Bliss, British composer-conductor; Milo Safranek, former Czecho-Slovakian official, now residing in Stockbridge; Mrs. John S. Newberry, president of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra; Miss Alice Clapp, member of the board of directors of the National Symphony Orchestra in Washington, D. C., Sir Shuldham Redfern, secretary to Lord Tweedsmier and Lady Redfern of Canada.

Practically every newspaper in the East, several leading magazines and all musical publications will have representatives at all of the concerts. The Associated Press and United Press will also have representatives present.

As in other years, press headquarters will be set up in the house and Western Union has its instruments already in place. In the house too will be a public telephone and first aid rooms.

The Thursday Morning Club under the direction of the Misses Mary and Margaret Dewey were at Tanglewood today getting their food concession arrangements in order.

Persons who have not yet obtained tickets are urged to communicate with the booths in Pittsfield, Lenox, Great Barrington or directly with the office at Stockbridge. There are still a number of good seats available.

28

THIS CLIPPING FROM BURLINGTON, VT.
NEWS

AUG 1 - 1939

Berkshire Festival Thursday

Local Music Lovers Planning to Attend Tanglewood Events

Many Burlingtonians are planning to attend the first Berkshire Symphonic Festival Concert which will be held at Tanglewood between Lenox and Stockbridge Thursday of this week.

The opening concert will be by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky. Harlie E. Wilson of Burlington is a member of the advisory committee for the festival.

Mr. Charles L. Safford, retired director of music at Williams College, will give his final lecture on the symphonies to be played at the festival at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield this afternoon. These lectures have been sponsored by the Pittsfield Junior League.

The Berkshire Museum has opened three special exhibitions for festival goers.

Miss Estelle Hutchinson, chairman of the Lenox Festival committee, opened the Lenox information booth today and ticket reservations may be made through this booth as well as at the office in Stockbridge. Miss Hutchinson has also arranged a tour of a number of the outstanding estates in Lenox. All persons wishing to go on these tours must register at the Lenox booth.

Other information booths will be found in Great Barrington and Pittsfield. They will be in charge of volunteers.

The festival office in Stockbridge reports that the ticket sales are substantially ahead of 1938 indicating a capacity audience for the opening concert.

The complete program for the festival is as follows:

Series A

Thursday, August 3, at 8:30:
Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G major .... Bach
"Scheherazade," Symphonic Suite
Rimsky-Korsakos
Symphony No. 1 in C minor, Op. 68 .... Brahms

Saturday, August 5, at 8:30:
Concerto for Orchestra .... Piston
Symphony No. 5 in E flat major
Sibelius
Symphony No. 7 in A major
Beethoven

Sunday, August 6, at 3:30:
Symphony in E flat major, Mozart
"Peter and the Wolf" ... Prokofieff
Symphony No. 4 in F minor
Tschaikowsky

Series B

Thursday, August 10, at 8:30:
Symphony No. 2 in D major
Beethoven
"Also Sprach Zarathustra," Tone Poem .... Strauss
"Pictures at an Exhibition"
Moussorgsky-Ravel

Saturday, August 12, at 8:30:
Symphony in B flat, No. 102
Haydn
"Le Sacre du Printemps"
Stravinsky
Overture to "Der Fliegende Hollander" .... Wagner
Prelude to "Lohengrin" .. Wagner
Bacchanale from "Tannhauser"
Wagner
Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg" .... Wagner

Sunday, August 13, at 3:30:
Symphony No. 4 in D minor
Schumann
Prelude a "L'Apres-midi 'd'un Faune .... Debussy
"La Valse" .... Ravel
Symphony No. 2, in D major
Sibelius

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

AUG 1 - 1939

World of Lively Arts

By T. H. PARKER

Giving The Public The Works.

Looking over the six groups of works which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will give the public at Stockbridge this week and next, supports for me at least, my ancient belief that there is no contemporary conductor who can whip up a more savory program than he. You can no more consider one of the Doctor's programs piece by piece, than you can a Lucullan menu. Each number serves the paradoxical turn of gartifying and whetting your appetite.

Nor is there any thing dainty in the way he does it. His programs have the span of the Bear Mountain Bridge and the splendiferous brilliance of World's Fair fireworks. We have had more philosophic more specialized, more scholarly program makers than Dr. Koussevitzky, but none of more superlative showmanship or better able to give an eloquent sound to an entire evening.

What I mean is, take a program like the first—the Third Brandenburg Concerto, the "Scherazade" Suite, and Brahms's First. It's practically three dimensional any way you look at it—periods, temperaments, styles. It touches your head, heart and hearing. One more and Dr. Koussevitzky could join a Four-H Club. Or that roccocco gem, which you'll hear on the first Sunday afternoon—Mozart's Symphony in E Flat, Prokofieff's "Peter And The Wolf" and Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony. As fashionable a get-up as you could find between the covers of Vogue. (OK, Conde Nast, pay up.)

Here is one taken at random from the heap of programs played by the Boston on the home lot this winter: Haydn, Symphony in D Major, No. 86; Pianoforte Concerto, No. 2, Krenek, and Loeffler's "Pagan Poem (After Virgil)," with Jesu Sanroma, and Louis Speyer on the French horn. Um! Um!

As a whole, though there are two novelties and one slightly used work, the stuff of the program is from the good, old vein. The great masters, new and old, and entirely orchestral going. This however, is only proof of how well Dr. Koussevitzky knows his house, the time and the place.

The people who have made these Tanglewood tales what they are today, are, when all is said and done, the conservative-wealthy, the rocks on which the arts world is ever founded. They like the staid and steady, with only a soupcon of tobasco, and since they are paying for it, they are entitled to it. All others can put on their corduroys and thumb their way to Yaddo.

Still, it goes a little farther than that. I do not see how you are going to separate the music and the occasion, and by the occasion I mean the summer night, the romantic estate, the flowered chiffons and the chauffeurs. I mean, setting off some snatch of radicalism at such a time would be like inviting a boogie-woogie pianist to a Carthusian retreat. And I for one, am willing to desert the simon-pures and soak up the sentiment along with the notes, at such a festival as this.

The two novelties, of course are "Peter And The Wolf," Prokofieff's fabliau, and in part, at least Strauss's "Thus Spake Zarathustra" —perhaps I should say "in parts," with definite geographical inferences to Hartford. Slightly used is the "Sacre de Printemps," but still able to list as a musical shilling-shocker.

Still, I wish the symphony boys could get themselves into the mental condition of the jam-sessioners. I wish that after the regular concerts they would all feel moved to sneak off to some bcsky dell and uncork a few hours of reeling off those newer things they gave out during the past season in Boston. In case you want to oblige, here are one or two I'd like to listen to:

"El Salon Mexico," by Copland; Handel's "Occasional Oratoria"; "Dedicaces," for piano, orchestra and soprano, by Dukelsky; Langendoen's "Improvisations For Orchestra"; Roy Harris's Third Symphony; Schmitt's "Tragedie of Salome"; Martelli's "Assyrian Bas-Reliefs"; Kodaly's "Ballet Music" and Amfitheatrof's "American Panorama."

After you get those in hand, boys, I'll give you another list.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
Think Mag
New York, N.Y.

AUG - 1939

The Berkshire Festival

Beginning of 4th season . . . Performances directed by Koussevitzky . . . Academy planned for next year.

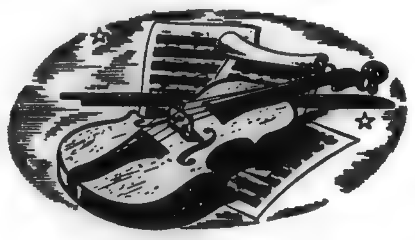
ENTERING upon its fourth season, the Berkshire Music Festival, held annually at Stockbridge, Massachusetts, is already taking on the proportions of a national institution. Installed in the beautiful grounds of Tanglewood, the gift of Mrs. Gorham Brooks, the festival has progressed from the tent stage to the Music Shed, a structure open at the sides but provided with shutters for use in bad weather. Most encouraging is the financial status of this enterprise, which has fully succeeded in paying its way. Last season the expenses were about fifty-nine thousand dollars, and they may be approximately two thousand more this year, owing to improvement of the grounds which is going forward.

* * *

Given by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra, the Festival concerts have in the past attracted overflow audiences, a notable tribute, as the Shed seats 5,726 people.

"They show," writes Mr. Olin Downes in the New York Times, "that it is perfectly possible to institute a series of performances of the highest quality and the most serious purpose, and find for them a public and a method of self-maintenance. In this undertaking there is no element of cheapness, sensationalism or misleading press-agentry. . . . The only thing offered is great orchestral music, greatly performed." This statement is not surprising, in view of the growing popular support of symphony orchestras in many cities throughout the country, the number of these orchestras at present being more than two hundred and seventy.

In the plans of the Berkshire Music Festival is what Dr. Koussevitzky terms an "academy" of music, which, beginning probably next year, will carry on its sessions in the three weeks preceding the Festival proper. A detailed announcement will be made later this season.



The broad outline of the plans contemplates courses to be devoted to the training of young conductors who have talent and some achievement to their credit. The conception of the school also involves "the establishment, from the student body, of a chorus to be trained in sight-singing and interpretation, with a sound theoretical background, and experience in actual performance with the orchestra. There will be lessons for advanced orchestral players by first-desk members of the Boston Symphony. There will be study of repertory, lectures upon these and related subjects, 'laboratory' work under the direct supervision of the leader."

* * *

It is stated that this school will not compete with the work done by established summer schools of music in the United States, but, rather, will center attention on the specialized development of young musicians.

Both the Festival and the plans for the "academy" are the outcome of solid achievement, devoid of any attempt to attract the public by means of special features. Very seldom has a soloist appeared with the orchestra. The greatest soloist, as Mr. Downes puts it, "is the modern orchestra in the hands of a master musician and interpreter."

Surely no other attractions appear to be necessary in this present stage of enlightened appreciation of first-rate symphonies.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 1 - 1939

Distinguished Visitors Arriving for Festival

Mrs. Hadley, Mrs. Brooks, John Garrett, Former Ambassador to Italy Coming—Sellout for Thursday Indicated

Distinguished visitors from many sections of this country, England, Canada and France, will start arriving tomorrow, for the opening of the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood. Hotels in Stockbridge, Lenox, Pittsfield and Great Barrington report capacity or near capacity registrations but the Innkeepers Association has made arrangements to take care of all late comers in surrounding towns.

Sellout Indicated

Advance ticket reservations at the Festival office, substantially ahead of last year, indicate a sellout for the opening concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, and more than 100 members of the orchestra arrive tomorrow and in all probability will have a rehearsal at the shed.

Mrs. Inez Hadley, widow of Dr. Henry Hadley, composer and first conductor of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, will be here for all concerts of the first series and will have a number of guests from the Henry Hadley Foundation in New York.

John W. Garrett of Baltimore, former ambassador to Italy, and Mrs. Barrett will be here for all the concerts. They are well known patrons of music and give a double series of chamber concerts at their Baltimore home in the spring and the fall. They will be guests while in the Berkshires of Mrs. William Penn Cresson of Stockbridge.

Guests of Miss Robinson Smith

Guests of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Festival president, and her mother, Mrs. Charles Robinson Smith, will include Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Garreau-Dombasle. Mr. Dombasle is commercial attache of the French embassy and commissioner of the French Pavilion at the New York World's Fair. Another guest will be Bryn Strendenaes, the Norwegian portrait painter.

Mr. and Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline and Dublin, N. H., and their daughter Violet, will be in attendance. Mrs. Brooks is the donor of Tanglewood, the home of the Festival.

From Northampton will come once more, Mrs. Grace G. Coolidge, widow of President Calvin Coolidge and Mrs. S. B. Adams.

As guests of Dr. William Mather Lewis, president of Lafayette College, and Mrs. Lewis will come Mr. and Mrs. Oswald Garrison Villard of New York.

Other Notables

Others in attendance at the opening concert will include Arthur Bliss, British composer-conductor; Milo Safranek, former Czecho-Slovakian official, now residing in Stockbridge; Mrs. John S. Newberry, president of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra; Miss Alice Clapp, member of the board of directors of the National Symphony Orchestra in Washington, D. C., Sir Shuidham Redfern, secretary to Lord Tweedsmuir and Lady Redfern of Canada.

Practically every newspaper in the East, several leading magazines and all musical publications will have representatives at all of the concerts. The Associated Press and United Press will also have representatives present.

As in other years, press headquarters will be set up in [illegible] house and Western Union has its instruments already in place. In the house too will be a public telephone and first aid rooms.

The Thursday Morning Club under the direction of the Misses Mary and Margaret Dewey were at Tanglewood today getting the food concession arrangements in order.

Persons who have not yet obtained tickets are urged to communicate with [illegible] in Pittsfield, Lenox, [illegible]

THIS CLIPPING FROM TOWN & COUNTRY
NEW YORK CITY
AUG - - 1939

Koussevitzky rehearses for the Berkshire Festival, America's foremost fount of culture

ARTS IN THE HIGHLANDS

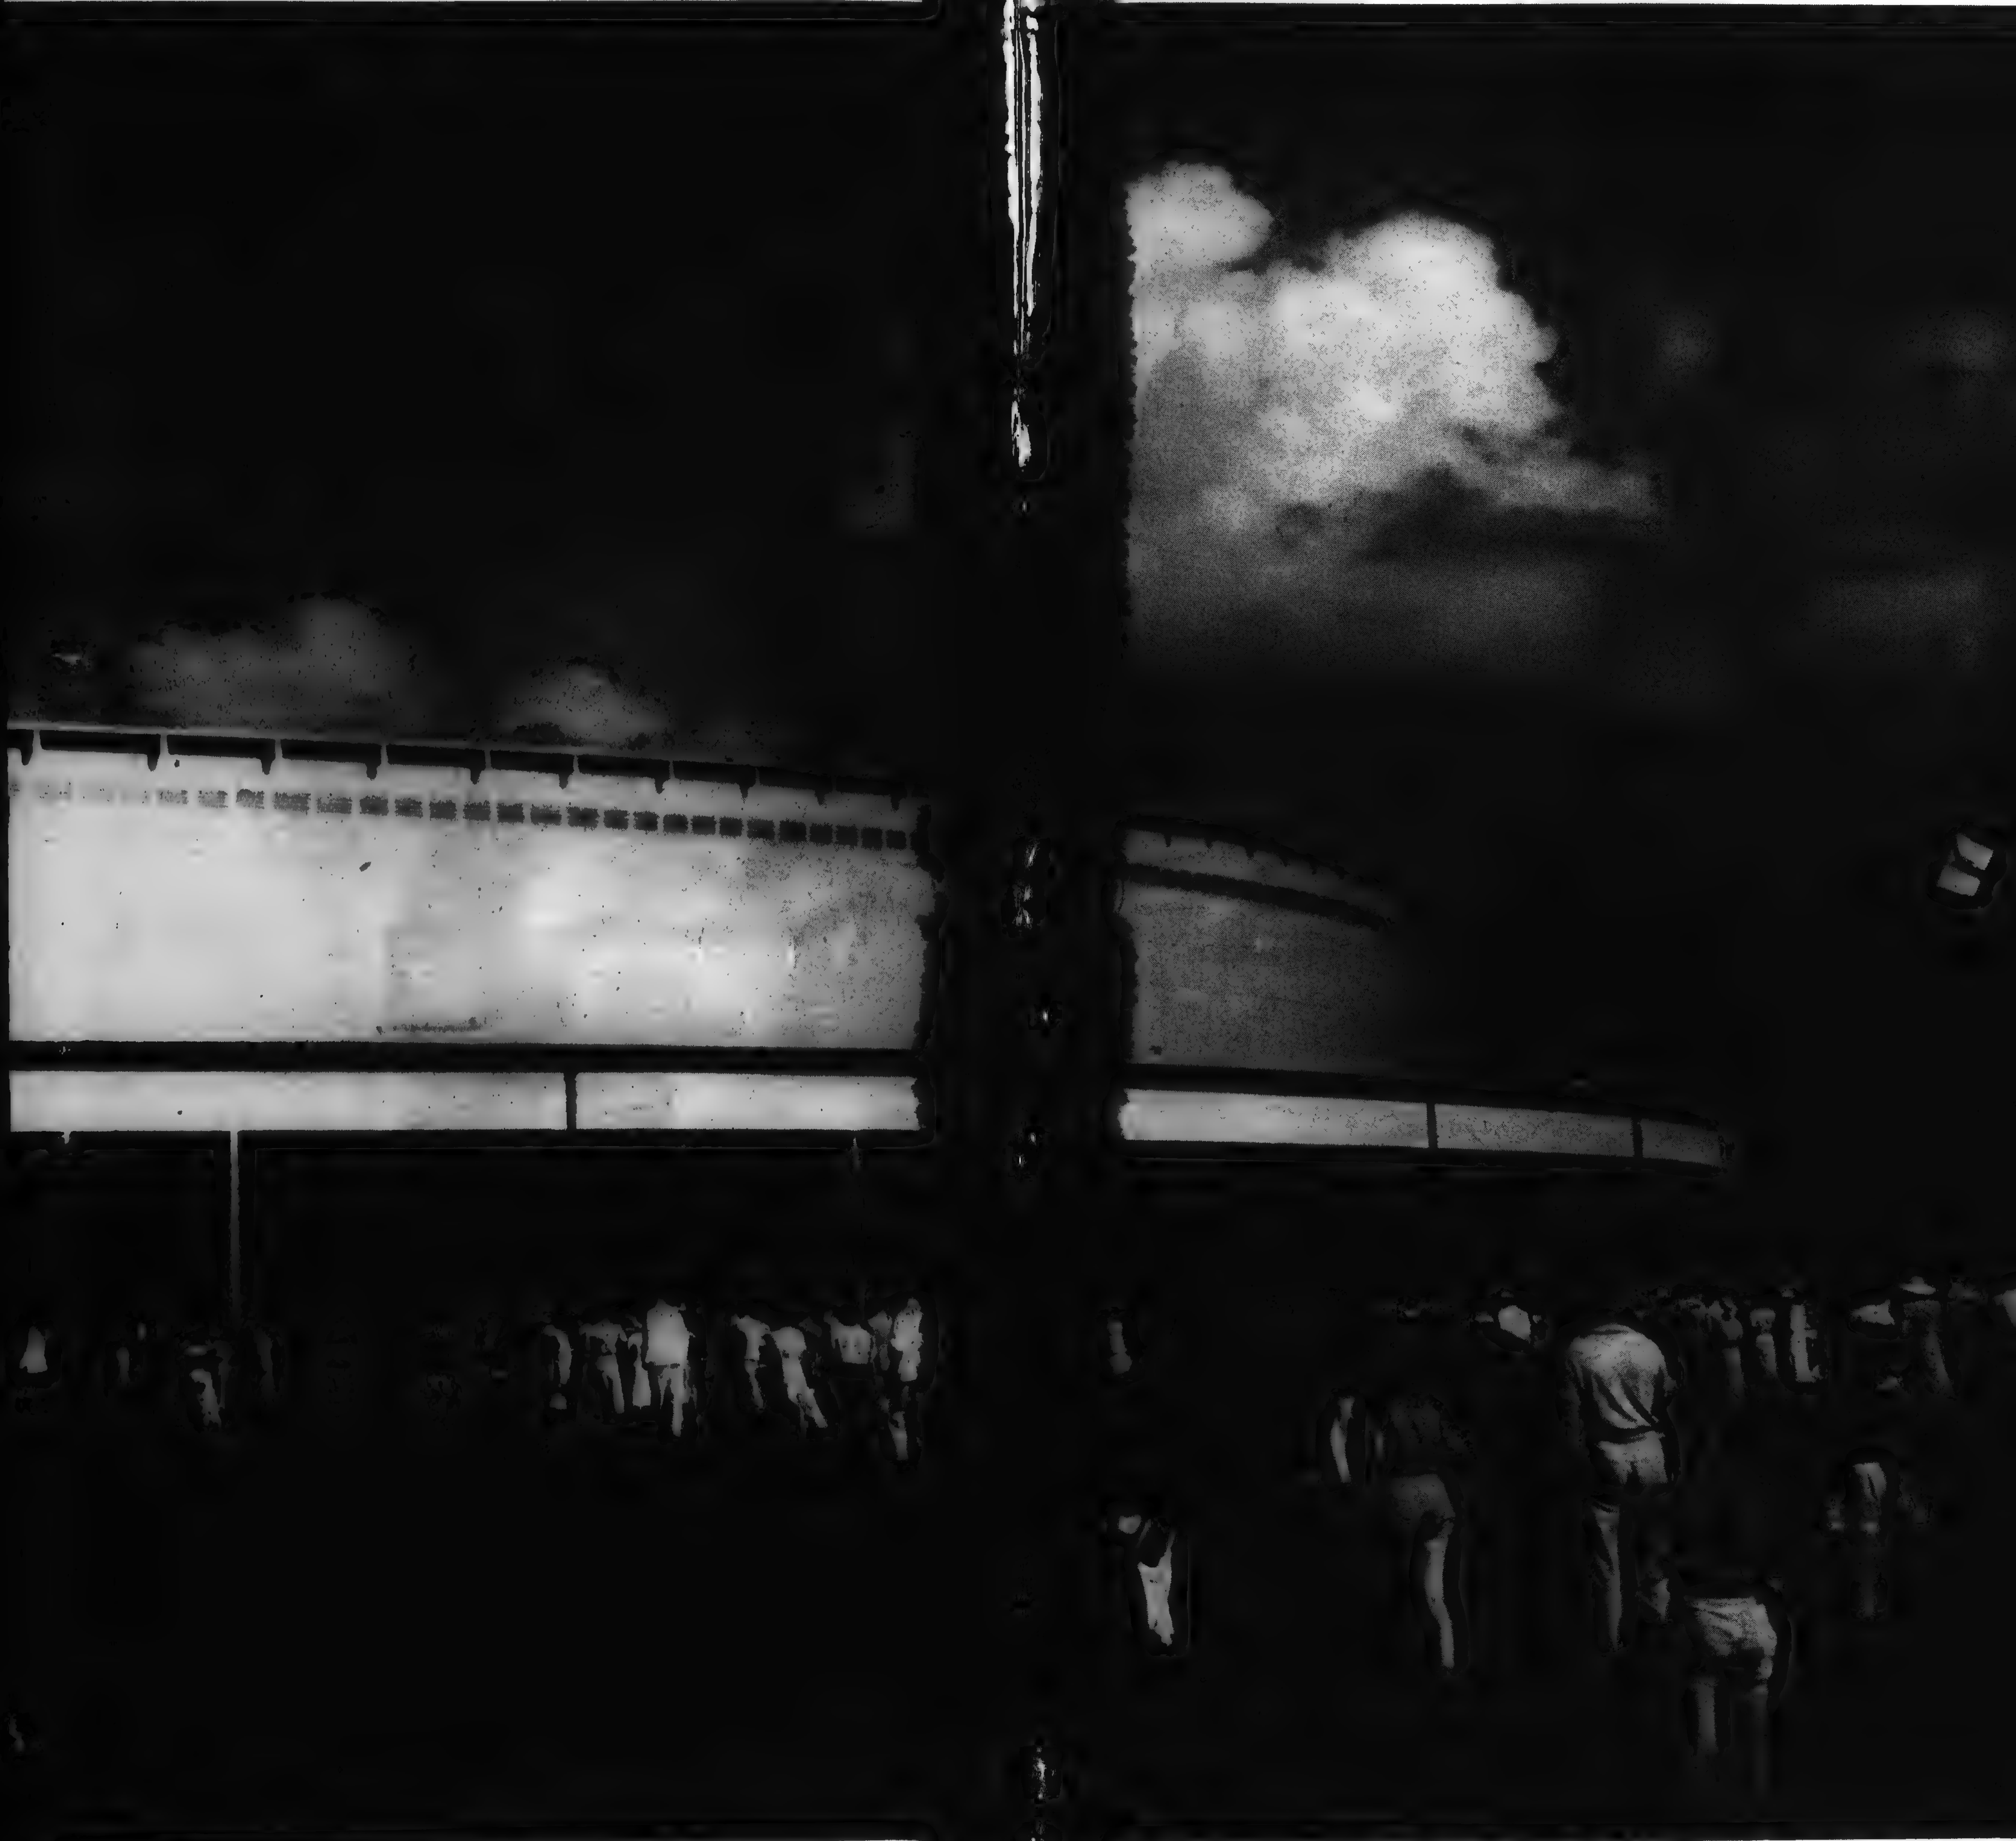
80

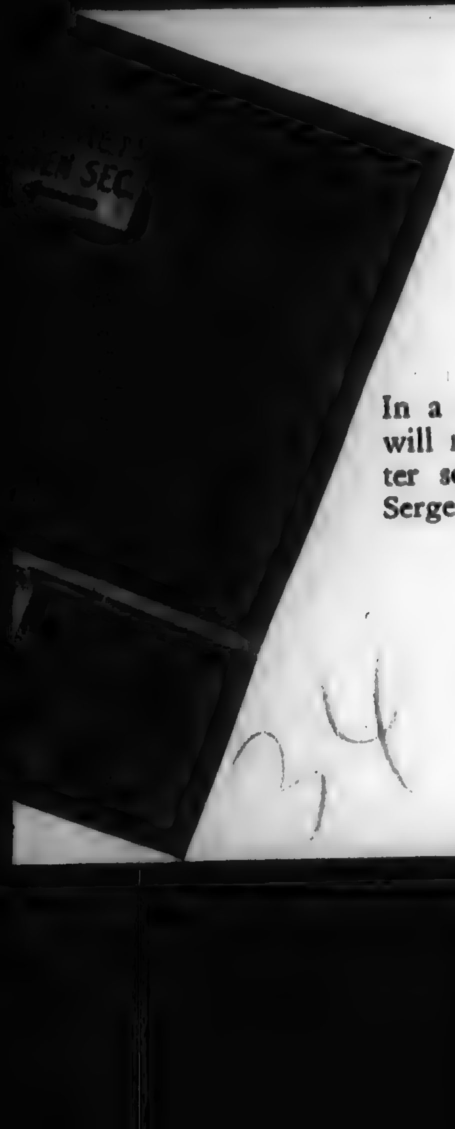
PHOTOS BY MARVIN BRECKINRIDGE

In a few days the sixth Berkshire Symphonic Festival will make itself heard in this new classic-minded shelter seating 5,700 people, tersely called the Shed. Dr. Sergei Koussevitzky and his Boston Symphony Orchestra ill give six concerts in a pastoral setting (Tangle-ood, where Hawthorne lived and wrote the "Tales") hich make a trip to Salzburg entirely supererogatory. t the right is Olin Downes, "Times" music editor, who will give two lectures Festival music; above i The picture left prov ity keeps the cultured

34 ,5X

80





In a few days the sixth Berkshire Symphonic Festival will make itself heard in this new classic-minded shelter seating 5,700 people, tersely called the Shed. Dr. Sergei Koussevitzky and his Boston Symphony Orchestra will give six concerts in a pastoral setting (Tanglewood, where Hawthorne lived and wrote the "Tales") which make a trip to Salzburg entirely supererogatory. At the right is Olin Downes, "Times" music editor, who will give two lectures at the Berkshire Museum on the Festival music; above is Koussy in an informal moment. The picture left proves that neither age nor infirmity keeps the cultured from this strawberryless festival

34 58

34 58

80

CLAUDE DEBUSS

P. TSCHAIKOWSKY

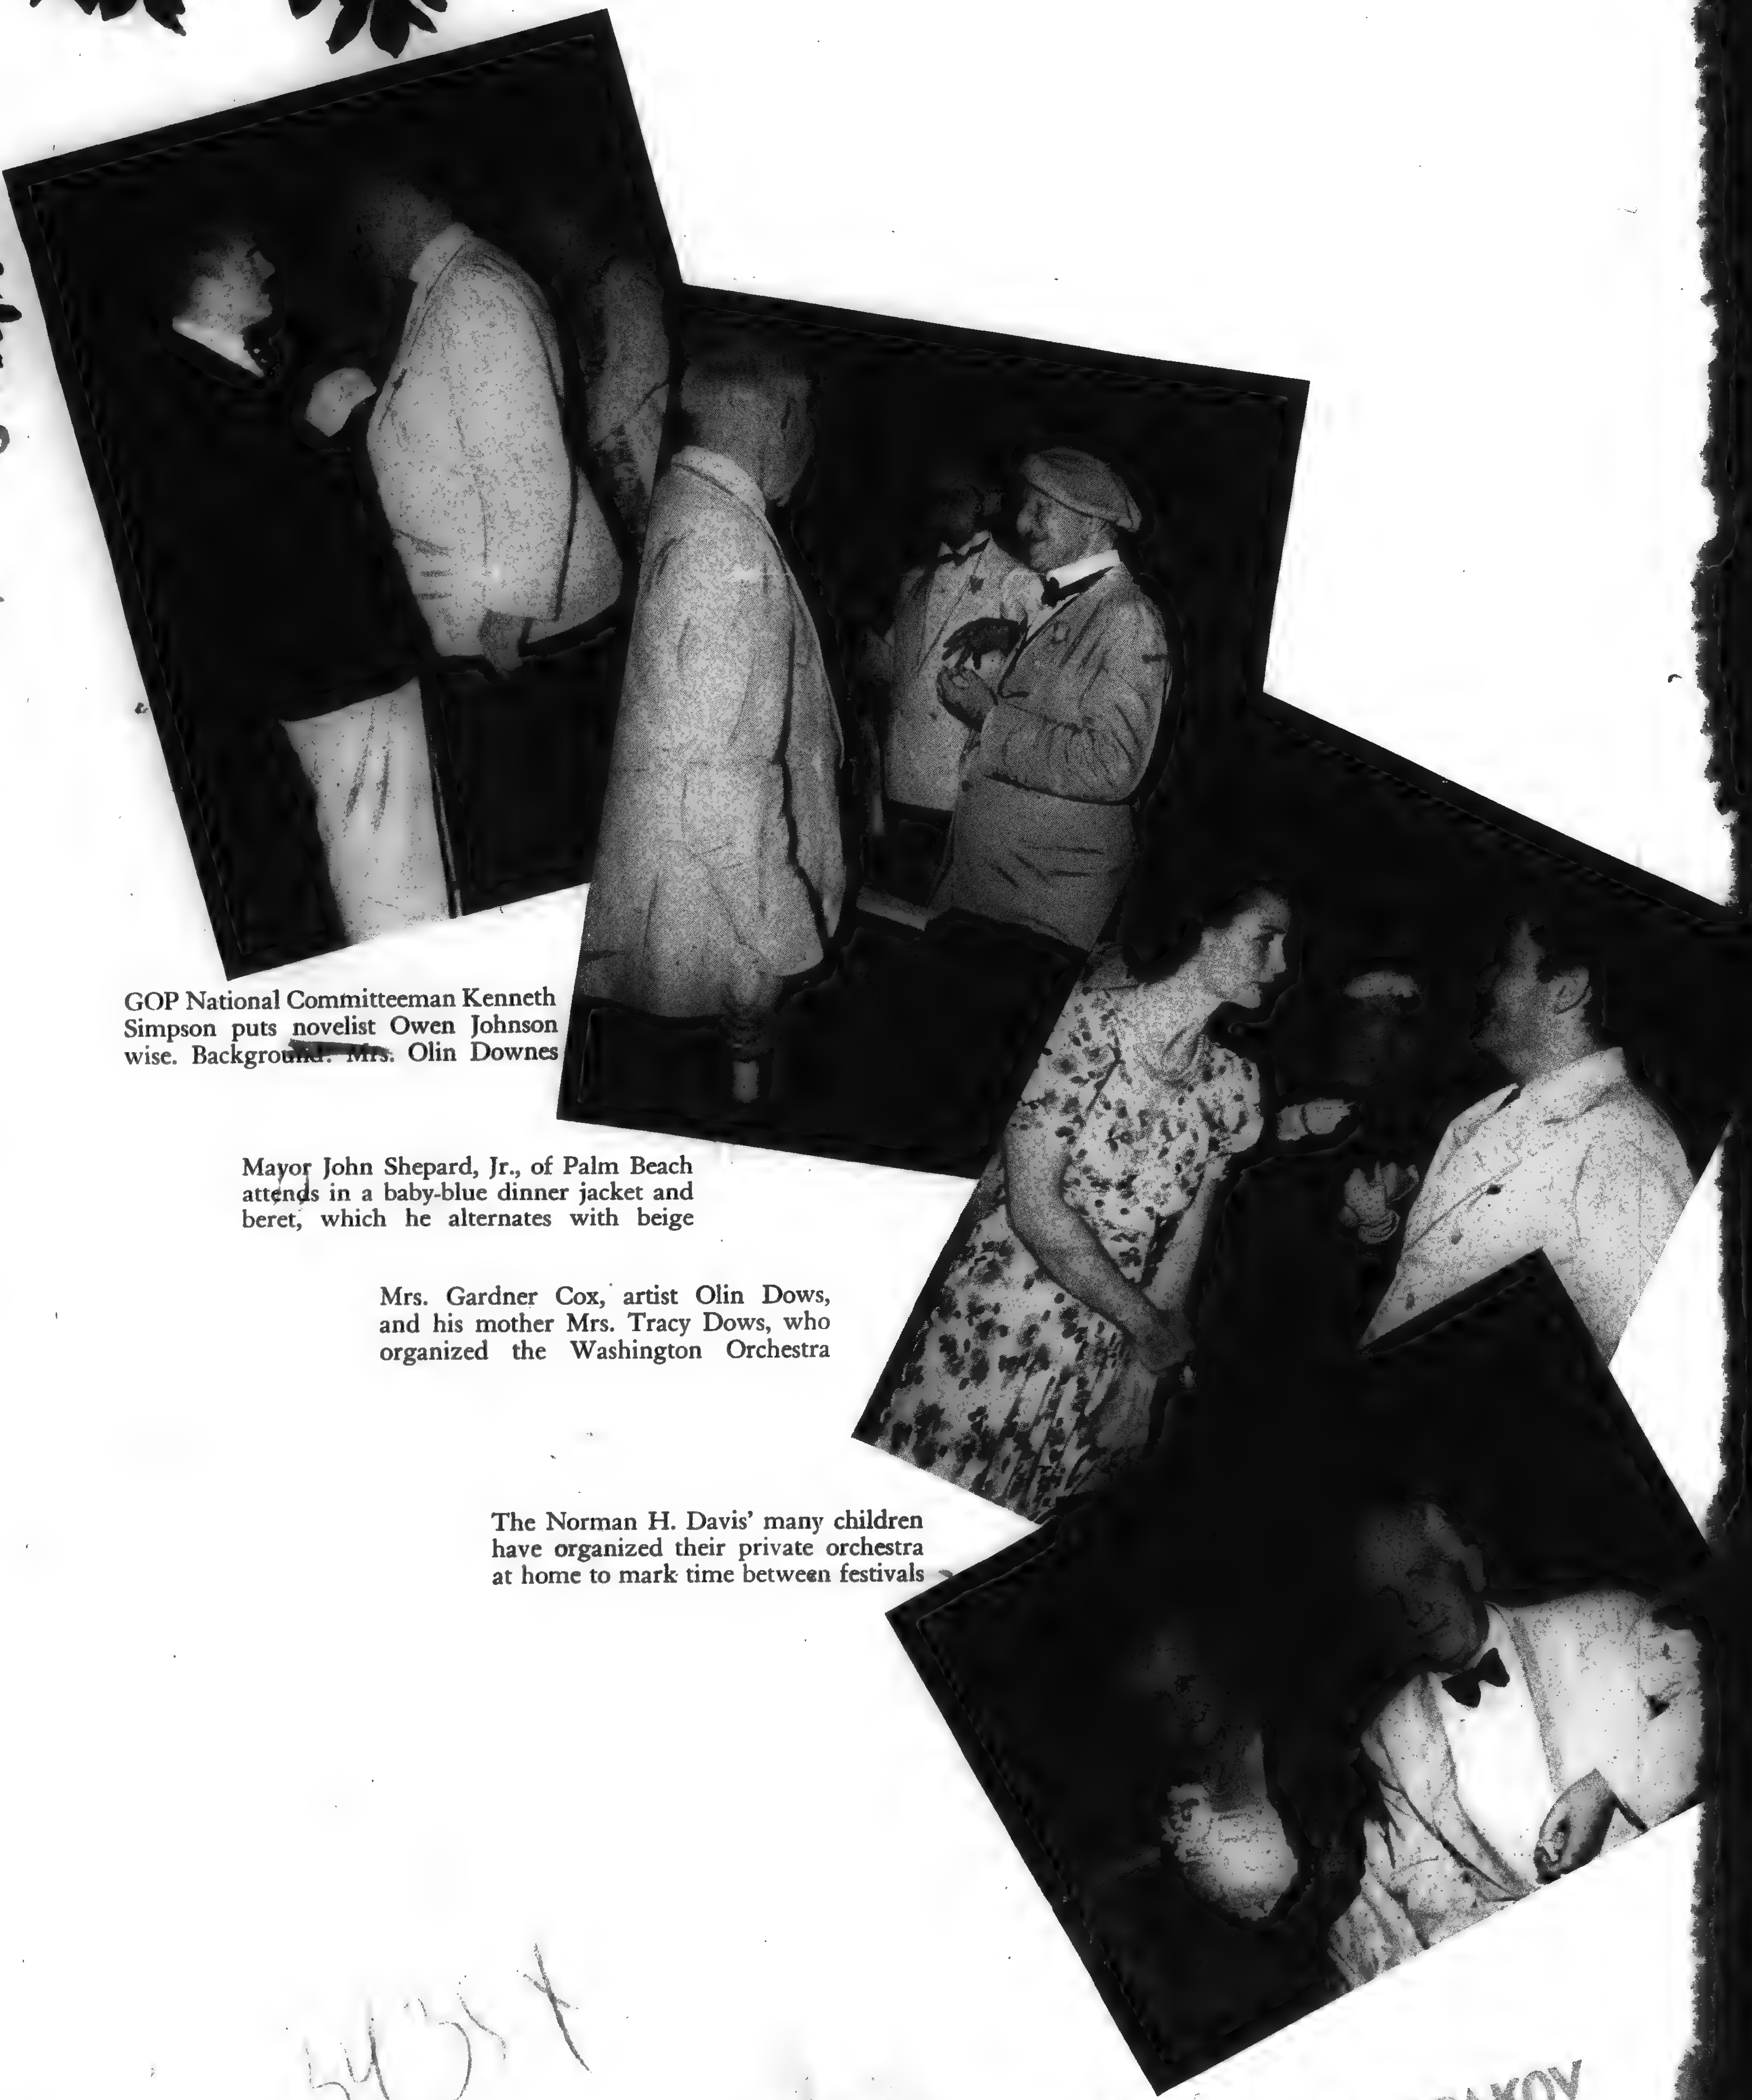
Joh. Seb. Bach

BRAHMS

IBELIUS

CHUMANN

The music can be heard far beyond th confines of the Shed, so the chauffeur have their private loge among the pin



GOP National Committeeman Kenneth Simpson puts novelist Owen Johnson wise. Background: Mrs. Olin Downes

Mayor John Shepard, Jr., of Palm Beach attends in a baby-blue dinner jacket and beret, which he alternates with beige

Mrs. Gardner Cox, artist Olin Dows, and his mother Mrs. Tracy Dows, who organized the Washington Orchestra

The Norman H. Davis' many children have organized their private orchestra at home to mark time between festivals

5435 X

VAN BEETHOVEN

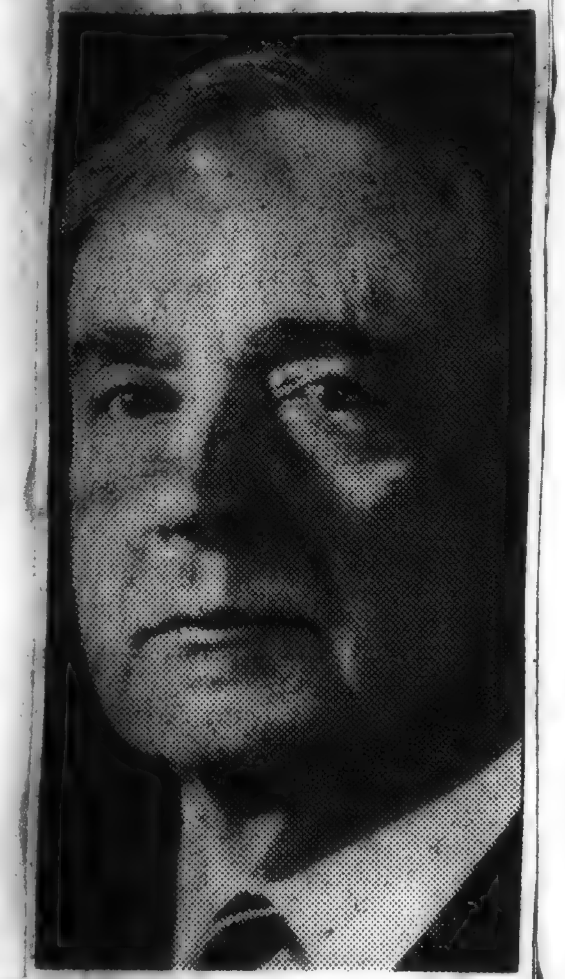
RIMSKY-KORSAKOV

81

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 2 - 1939

Arts Leader



SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

Music Academy To Be Founded At Stockbridge

"Tanglewood," scene of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, is about to become an enlarged arts center with the founding of a Musical Academy to be developed simultaneously with the yearly concerts.

This is a project which has been close to the heart of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky who with the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been drawing increasingly large crowds of music lovers to Stockbridge. The first concert of the present season will be given Thursday night in the specially built shed which seats 5,700 and advance reports indicate a record breaking and perhaps capacity attendance. The program comprises Bach's Third Brandenburg Concerto, Rimsky-Korsakoff's Scheherezade and the C Minor Symphony of Brahms.

From the beginning of the festival Dr. Koussevitzky has talked of a school for the training of conductors and of otherwise broadening the scope of the Berkshire concerts. Now the plan has so far taken shape that its inauguration in 1940 is to be announced at the Thursday night event.

There will be lectures by men prominent in the arts and letters. During the term which will run for six weeks there will be choral training and the preparation of some large work; in 1940 Bach's B Minor Mass will be presented.

The Procedure

The academy will be in two parts; One for advanced instruction to a limited number of students qualified by ability and training; the other a general session for a larger school. A feature of the first will be a special class in orchestral conducting under Dr. Koussevitzky; of the second will be the preparation of the festival chorus in which all will participate.

Each student will belong either to the Festival Chorus or to the School Orchestra, and will attend general sessions. These will be held twice each day except Saturday and Sunday, and will be devoted to lectures and to choral singing under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society.

The lectures will deal broadly with music through the study of its development, form and style, and the underlying aesthetic principles. There will be no attempt to cover in a systematic way the history or the theory of music, but to stimulate the imagination to aid in its comprehension and to set a standard of performance and interpretation. Classes in folk-dancing will be included.

Rare Opportunity

There will be an opportunity for a few promising musicians to study orchestral conducting under Dr. Koussevitzky. Individual instruction will be given in piano, voice and orchestral instruments, the faculty including 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Instruction in solfège, harmony, counterpoint. composition and methods of teaching music in schools will be available.

Students will be required to attend the concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and a certain number of the rehearsals. The concerts are regarded in a real and vital sense as the culmination of the whole work of the academy.

The announcement to be distributed Thursday night will include a blank to be filled out by any interested to be received by George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

AUG 3 - 1939

Stockbridge Lawn Fete Attracts Many Visitors

Berkshire Towns Welcome Guests for Music Festival

Special to the Herald Tribune

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., Aug. 2.—A garden fete on the lawn at St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Stockbridge, this afternoon attracted many visitors. It was arranged by Mrs. Owen Johnson, Mrs. Rodney Procter and Mrs. Phillips Blagden, with Mrs. Margaret Carson Hubbard assisting at a fashion show, at which the mannequins were Mrs. Giraud Van Nest Foster, Mrs. William E. Dodge Stokes, Mrs. James Brawer Karrick and Mrs. Florence A. Drake and the Misses Winifred E. Burden, Natalie Bayard Merrill, Patricia S. Johnson, Barbara Bullitt and Hope Procter. In charge of tea tables were Mrs. Charles C. Griswold and Mrs. Austin W. Ackroyd.

There were many arrivals today in all the Berkshire summer resort towns for the Berkshire music festival, which opens tomorrow night at Tanglewood. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Smphony Orchestra, and Mrs. Koussevitzky are at White Goat Farm, the Stockbridge estate of Dr. Artur Rodzinski, conductor of the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra, and Mrs. Rodzinski.

At Curtis Hotel, Lenox, for the festival are Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Blumenthal and Miss Yvonne Blumenthal, of New York; Miss Alice J. Clapp, of Washington; Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller and Mrs. Franklin W. Hobbs, of Boston; Mrs. Paul R. Ireland, of Cincinnati. Mr. Lester Roberts, manager of the Curtis, and Mrs. Roberts are to have in their box tomorrow night Mrs. Henry White Cannon, of New York; Mrs. S. M. Lehman, of Tarrytown, N. Y., and Mr. Charles Cuno, of Meriden, Conn.

Week-end guests of Mr. and Mrs. Owen Johnson, at Ingleside, Stockbridge, for the festival are Mr. Charles Lanier Lawrance, Mr. Francis C. Lawrance, Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence G. White and Mr. Olin Downes.

Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs is having as guests in her box at the first concert Mr. and Mrs. Harry C. Holloway, Mr. and Mrs. Lambert Heyniger and Mr. David Donald.

Mr. and Mrs. Harris Fahnestock have Mrs. Fahnestock's brother, Mr. Louis G. D. Hyde, of Paris, as a guest at Eastover, Lenox.

Box guests of Mr. and Mrs. John Shipard jr. tomorrow night will be Mr. and Mrs. Jerome D. Gedney, of New York; Mrs. Eben Ellison, of Boston, and Mrs. John H. C. Church, of Great Barrington.

Dr. Robert Peter Tristram Coffin, professor of English at Bowdoin College, addressed the Wednesday Morning Club at Pittsfield on "My Experience With Poetry," and later was an honored luncheon guest at Pittsfield Country Club given by Miss Ethel H. Lyons.

THIS CLIPPING FROM VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

AUG 2 1939

ARRIVALS

Arthur Silverstone, Sam Burger, W. Ray Johnston, Garson Kanin, Mrs. Morton Downey (Barbara Bennett), F. Wachsberger, Sam Levene, Vyvyan Donner, Arthur Tracy, Antoine de Saint Exupery, Lewis Buddy, Jr., Sergei Koussevitzsky, John Royal, Alice Marble, Benoit-Leon Deutsch, Mr. and Mrs. Donald Oenslager.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

AUG 2 - 1939

MUSIC ACADEMY WILL BE OPENED AT TANGLEWOOD

First Session Will Be Held Next Year and Last for Six Weeks

Special to The Springfield Union

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 2 — An academy "for living and working in music" at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Stockbridge, will be announced tomorrow night when the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival commences.

Two Sections

In early July, 1940, the academy will open its first session, the terms to consist of six weeks. The academy will be in two parts, one for advanced instruction to a limited number of students qualified by ability and training; the other for a general session for a larger school.

A feature of the first will be a special class in orchestral conducting under Dr. Sergei Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston orchestra.

The second will be preparation of a festival chorus under direction of Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth of Harvard University, conductor of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society.

The academy has been a plan of Dr. Koussevitzky since the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given Tanglewood three years ago by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston. It will be the only one of its kind in the country. The first work to be prepared by the chorus will be Bach's Mass in B Minor to be sung next year.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 3 - 1939

LOCAL MUSICIAN AT STOCKBRIDGE

Pasquale Cardillo is Engaged by Boston Symphony Orchestra to Fill Temporary Vacancy.

North Adams will be represented among the membership of the famous Boston Symphony orchestra during at least a portion of its program at the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, this year. Following an audition yesterday at Stockbridge, where rehearsals have been in progress for the opening concert tonight, Pasquale Cardillo of 102 Francis street, was accepted as an E flat clarinetist, there being a temporary vacancy in the orchestra membership for that particular instrument. Mr. Cardillo will play in two concerts of the second series of the festival and may take part in other concerts of the festival season.

News of Mr. Cardillo's advancement to such a noted musical organization as the Boston Symphony will be received with great interest among Mr. Cardillo's large circle of friends here. Mr. Cardillo, a graduate of Drury high school, has been a student at the New England Conservatory of Music at Boston for the past four years, graduating from there last June. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Cardillo.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 2 - 1939

OPENING FESTIVAL MUSIC TOMORROW

Dr. Koussevitzky Expected to Arrive Tonight

AT STOCKBRIDGE

Final Rehearsal Held by Symphony Orchestra at Boston This Morning.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, eminent conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is scheduled to arrive in the Berkshires tonight, and he will stay during the concert season at the home of Arturo Rodzinski, conductor of the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra, in Stockbridge. The 100 members of the orchestra will arrive in this section tonight and tomorrow morning in preparation for the rehearsal about 1 o'clock tomorrow afternoon and for the opening concert of the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival which will be given at "Tanglewood," permanent summer home of the orchestra in Stockbridge, tomorrow night at 8:30 o'clock.

Almost every room in inns, hotels and private homes in the section about Stockbridge was reported today as engaged, with the overflow turning to Pittsfield. The orchestra rehearsed this morning in Symphony hall in Boston before their departure to the Berkshires late today.

Included in the programs for tomorrow night's concert will be circulars describing the "Academy for Living and Working In Music" which will open at Tanglewood for six weeks starting in July, 1940, with a class in orchestral conducting by Dr. Koussevitzky and the preparation of a festival chorus as the features.

It is estimated by the festival committee that more than 70 newspapers and magazines throughout the country will be represented by critics, correspondents and cameramen during the six-concert series. Olin Downes, noted music critic of the New York Times, will present two talks on the music and work of the orchestra at two Saturday morning rehearsals which are open to members of the Festival association, high school students who took a course in classical music appreciation offered during the spring, and other ticket holders.

As preludes to the concert series, the Verdi Requiem is being presented tonight at Great Barrington, and the Pittsfield Junior League is sponsoring a recorded program covering the August 12 concert at the Berkshire museum tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock. This phonograph concert will be open to the public and no admission will be charged.

Six concerts will be presented in all in the sixth annual Music Festival, coming tomorow night at 8.30 o'clock, Saturday night at 8.30 o'clock and on Sunday afternoon at 3.30 o'clock for the first series and on the same days next week, for the second series.

The opening concert, tomorrow night, will offer the following program: Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G major for string orchestra (with the Sinfonia from the contata "Christ Lag In Todesbanden") by Bach; "Scheherazade," Symphonic suite, by Rimsky-Korsakov, Opus 35; and, following the 35-minute intermission, Symphony No. 1 in C Minor Opus 68 by Brahms. The evening concerts will start at 8.30 o'clock.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

AUG 2 - 1939

MUSIC NOTES

The sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival begins tomorrow evening. The Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will give six concerts in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

The program for the opening concert, scheduled for 8:30 P. M. tomorrow, includes the Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G major of Bach; Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherazade" Suite and the Brahms First Symphony. The second concert at 8:30 P. M. Saturday, August 5, brings Walter Piston's Concerto for Orchestra, the Sibelius Fifth Symphony and the Beethoven Seventh Symphony. The program of the third concert, which takes place at 3:30 P. M., Sunday, August 6, lists Mozart's E Flat major Symphony; Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" and the Tchaikowsky Fourth Symphony.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BRATTLEBORO, VT.
REFORMER

AUG 2 - 1939

Up At Stockbridge.

(Boston Herald.)

The annual Berkshire Symphonic festival is again upon us. In its sixth season this series of concerts shows no signs of decreasing popularity. Indeed, with the proximity of the Berkshires to New York and the fair, the festival authorities may well hope for better attendance than ever.

When the important steps were taken of, first, securing the Boston Symphony and, second, of building a permanent, semi-out-door auditorium, the festival may be said to have established itself. The summer motorist is apparently only too glad to have a definite object for his tour. He need not be particularly musical; it is sufficient that the festival provides something for him to aim at and something for him to do when he gets there.

Since the festival has been a material success, in that it has attracted such large audiences, it is now fair to urge it to progress in the artistic line, to become more truly a festival. After all, it is somewhat presumptuous to apply that term to a series of six concerts offering the traditional symphonic repertory. The shed is too large for opera, it may be hazarded; but there is no reason why something involving a chorus could not be produced. Dr. Koussevitzky is not one to let the grass grow under his feet, and undoubtedly he has ambitious plans that will eventually come to fruition.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HERALD
Chicopee Mass

AUG 3 - 1939

KOUSSEVITZKY AND BOSTON SYMPHONY ARRIVE FOR BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Serge Koussevitzky assembled the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's music shed at "Tanglewood" on Route 183 between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., yesterday for a rehearsal in anticipation of the opening of the sixth annual Festival this evening at 8:30.

The specially built shed, seating 5700, is located on the 200-acre estate presented in 1937 to the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, Mass. This will be the fourth successive Berkshire festival at which the orchestra has played and the second in the splendid new acoustical shed which, after its inauguration last summer, was declared to have remarkable properties for hearing and comfortable accommodation.

The programs are those of winter Symphony concerts. The performances are of a symphonic standard consistent with the famous orchestra here assembled in full personnel under its illustrious conductor. To hear a Boston Symphony concert in incomparable midsummer surroundings is a rare and unforgettable experience.

The advanced demand for season and single tickets is greater than it has ever been for a previous festival series. There is every indication of capacity audiences for each of the six concerts. The concerts will be given on Thursday and Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon of this week and of the week following.

Dr. Koussevitzky will open the 1939 Festival with Bach's Third Brandenburg Concerto String Orchestra. Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade" will be on the same programme, which will conclude with the First Symphony of Brahms in C minor.

The second program (for Saturday, Aug. 5) will open with the orchestral concerto of Walter Piston, the American composer, and will continue with the Fifth Symphony of Sibelius, and end with the Seventh by Beethoven. The program of the following (Sunday) afternoon will feature the Fourth Symphony of Tschaikovsky, and also include Prokofieff's orchestral fairy tale, "Peter and the Wolf," —Richard Hale acting as narrator. Emanuel Bach's orchestral concerto in D major will open the program.

Second Week's Programs

The programs for the second week will be as follows: Thursday evening, Aug. 10: Beethoven's Second Symphony, Strauss' "Thus Spake Zarathustra," and Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition," in Ravel's orchestration. The Saturday program, Aug. 12, will include Haydn's Symphony in B flat, No. 102, Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring," and excerpts from Wagner's "Flying Dutchman," "Meistersinger," "Lohengrin" and "Tannhauser.' The final program on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 13, will comprise Schumann's Fourth Symphony, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," Ravel's "La Valse." and the Second Symphony of Sibelius.

For information about tickets and accommodations, address the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Stockbridge, Mass.

Brides may pick their own orange blossoms direct from the tree at the New York World's Fair. All the yhave to do is to announce to the orange-coated attendants at the Florida exhibit that they are brides. They are conducted into the tropical garden and led up to an orange tree. There is a tradition that the bride who sleeps with a spray of orange blossoms on her pillow will lead a sweet married life.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 3 - 1939

High School Students To Attend Symphony Orchestra Rehearsal

Several hundred boys and girls from Berkshire county public high schools, plus members and patrons of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, will comprise an audience of 3,000 who will attend the rehearsal of the Boston symphony orchestra at the Tanglewood music shed Saturday morning as the guests of the Festival.

No tickets are sold for this rehearsal nor for the one Aug. 12, for the rehearsals have been planned by Conductor Serge Koussevitzky as a privilege for Festival members and patrons. The school children will attend as the result of music study done under the direction of Miss Harriet Johnson.

Tickets for the Festival concerts Saturday, Sunday, and next week end may be obtained by writing or telephoning to the office at Stockbridge.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 3 - 1939

Plan To Establish Music Academy At Tanglewood

Announcement of a six weeks' course of training for conductors and one in music appreciation, to be held in conjunction with the Berkshire Symphonic Festival next year, will be announced at the opening concert of the festival at Tanglewood tonight, it is believed. It has long been the wish of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, which gives the six festival concerts, to establish a music academy in connection with the festival and create a real arts center at Tanglewood.

Men prominent in the arts and letters will lecture during the course. There will be choral training and the preparation of some major work—Bach's B Minor Mass, in 1940, under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard glee club and the Radcliffe choral society. Classes in folk dancing will also be included.

Dr. Koussevitzky will give training in orchestral conducting to a few promising students, and members of the orchestra will give lessons in the art of various instruments. There will be courses in composition, musical theory and the teaching of music as well.

The academy will be divided into two parts, a section for advanced students, and one for those without particular training. All students will be required to attend festival concerts and rehearsals, and members of the less advanced course will all participate in the festival chorus.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
EAGLE NEWS

AUG 3 - 1939

Rebecca H. Rider Attends Berkshire Music With Guests

Rebecca Hyde Rider, member of the advisory committee of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, will leave today to attend the concerts in the first series, accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Alfred L. Rider, Parker avenue, and several guests. Mrs. Rider and Miss Rider will be at their summer home, Rider's Mills, while attending the festival.

Their house guests will be Mrs. Arthur W. Travis, 70 Oakwood boulevard; Marie Tschudin, 11 South White street; and Alice Tschudin, New York city. The first concert in the series will be presented this evening at Tanglewood, Mass., with Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, conducting the orchestra.

Serving on the advisory committee of the festival this year with Miss Rider, are: Gertrude Robinson Smith, Stockbridge, president; George S. Dickinson, professor of music and music librarian at Vassar college; and Dorothea Wheaton of Millbrook; and others.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DALLAS, TEXAS
NEWS

AUG 3 - 1939

Berkshire Festival Opens Thursday

Special to The News.

BOSTON, Mass., Aug. 2.—The sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival opens Thursday night at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox. As usual, the festival will consist of six concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky. Opening night's program consists of the Bach Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 for string orchestra, Rimsky-Korsakov's Scheherazade and the Brahms Symphony No. 1 in C minor.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

AUG 3 - 1939

44 Injured in Crash of 3 Buses

Arlington, Mass. — (U.P.) — Three buses filled with disabled American veterans of the World War and their families piled up in a triple collision last night, injuring 44 persons.

Three more were injured when a car driven by Paul Cherassky, violinist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra collided with another containing Robert G. Morel and his 2-year-old son, which had stopped beside the wrecked buses.

The buses belonged to a fleet of 19 in which 500 delegates were riding to the veterans' national convention with their families.

One bus, driven by Joseph P. B. Carmody, 24, stopped at an intersection while a woman and dog crossed the street. Another, driven by Robert E. Hollstein, 33, crashed into it. A third, driven by Neil R. Riccardi, 23, piled into the others and jumped a curbing in the center of the four-car highway.

THIS CLIPPING FROM PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS

AUG 3 - 1939

THREE BUSES CRASH, VETERANS, KIN HURT

By The United Press

ARLINGTON, Mass., Aug. 3—Three buses filled with Disabled American Veterans of the World War and their families piled up in a triple collision last night, injuring 44 persons.

Three more were injured when a car driven by Paul Cherassky, violinist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, collided with another containing Robert G. Marel and his two-year-old son, which had stopped beside the wrecked buses.

The buses belonged to a fleet of 19 in which 500 delegates were riding to the veterans' national convention. They had been on a sightseeing trip through Lexington and Concord and were bound for Cambridge.

One bus stopped at an intersection while a woman and dog crossed the street. Another crashed into it. A third piled into the others and jumped a curbing in the center of the four-way highway.

THIS CLIPPING FROM HOUSTON, TEXAS
POST

AUG 3 - 1939

Boston Batonist To Head New Music Center

By JOHN SELBY

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 2.—When Serge Koussevitzky's baton flicks the first notes of Bach's third Brandenburg concerto out of the Boston symphony orchestra here Thursday night the Sixth Berkshire Symphonic festival will have begun, but also a project he has had in mind since 1910 will be finally assured.

This is the school (he had as soon it were called a "music center") which now is definitely scheduled to open in early July, 1940, at Tanglewood, the estate given the Boston symphony two years ago by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston as a permanent home for the Berkshire festival.

Before the World war and the Russian revolution drained away the Koussevitzky fortune, the conductor and his sculptor wife had hoped to found such a school on their Russian estate.

The idea has been in Koussevitzky's mind ever since—but either money or a suitable place was lacking, and sometimes both. Now, however, an admiring board of directors has given word that the plan can be initiated.

There will be two classes of students at Tanglewood for the six weeks of the first term, next summer. One class will give advanced instruction to trained students. The other will be more general, and will concentrate on choral work which is to come to a climax with a performance of Bach's B Minor Mass under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction.

Thirty members of the Boston symphony will spend the six weeks at Tanglewood. As individuals they will teach their respective instruments, and collectively they will form an orchestra which Dr. Koussevitzky will use in his course for conductors. G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard Glee club and the Radcliffe Choral society, will have charge of choral work.

83

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 3 - 1939

Berkshire Festival Opens Tonight

Koussevitzky Assured of Fulfilling Long-Desired Project For School at Tanglewood; Will Start Next Summer

By JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Arts Editor

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 2. — When Serge Koussevitzky's baton flicks the first notes of Bach's third Brandenburg concerto out of the Boston Symphony Orchestra here tonight, the sixth Berkshire Symphonic Festival will have begun, but also a project he has had in mind since 1910 will be finally assured.

This is the school (he'd as soon it were called a "music center") which now is definitely scheduled to open in early July, 1940, at Tanglewood, the estate given the Boston Symphony two years ago by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston as a permanent home for the Berkshire festival.

Planned in Russia

Before the World War and the Russian revolution drained away the Koussevitzky fortune, the conductor and his sculptor wife had hoped to found such a school on their Russian estate.

The idea has been in Koussevitzky's mind ever since—but either money or a suitable place was lacking, and sometimes both. Now, however, an admiring board of directors has given word that the plan can be initiated.

Two Classes

There will be two classes of students at Tanglewood for the six weeks of the first term, next Summer. One class will give advanced instruction to trained students. The other will be more general, and will concentrate on choral work which is to come to a climax with a performance of Bach's B minor mass under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction.

Thirty members of the Boston Symphony will spend the six weeks at Tanglewood. As individuals they will teach their respective instruments, and collectively they will form an orchestra which Dr. Koussevitzky will use in his course for conductors. G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, will have charge of choral work.

No Credit or Diplomas

Each student will belong either to the school chorus or the school orchestra, and also will attend the general sessions of the school. Dr. Koussevitzky is firm about several matters in connection with the school—it is not a "conservatory" or a "Summer school," he insists, nor will credit be given or diplomas issued.

An intelligent interest in music is the only entrance reuirement (except for such work as Dr. Koussevitzky's conducting class.)

Subscribers to the Summer's festival, officials say, are more numerous than ever before, and the six concerts of the festival may mean six capacity audiences in the "Music Shed," which seats 5700 people.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

MILLFRTON, N. Y
NEWS
8/3/39

Koussevitsky Opens Festival Tonight At 8:30

Concert To Be Followed By Others On Saturday, Sunday

Approximately 5,700 music-lovers in the Berkshire area are expected to fill the new music shed at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox tonight, Thursday, as Dr. Serge Koussevitsky raises his baton over the Boston Symphony Orchestra to begin the [illegible] annual Berkship Symphonic Festival. The concert, which is the first of six to be given this season at Tanglewood, will begin at 8:30 p. m.

The two other concerts comprising Series A will be given Saturday evening at 8:30 and Sunday afternoon at 3:30 p. m.

The first concert in Series B will open the second festival week next Thursday night, Aug. 10, at 8:30. The two remaining concerts will be given the following Saturday night at 8:30 and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 13, at 3:30 p. m.

Programs for the series include Symphony No. 2, Beethoven; Prelude a l'Apres-Midi d'un Faune, Debussy; Symphony, Haydn; "Pictures at an Exhibition," Moussorgsky-Ravel; Symphony No. 4, Schumann; Symphony No. 2, Sibelius; "Also sprach Zarathustra," Strauss; "Le Sacre du Printemps," Stravinsky; Overture "The Flying Dutchman," Prelude to "Lohengrin," Prelude to "The Meistersingers," Siegfried's Rhine Journey, Wagner.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 3 - 1939

KOUSSEVITZKY OPENS SIXTH BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL TONIGHT

Opening of Summer Music Season Also Sees Celebrated Conductor's Dream Assured of Becoming Reality

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 2—(AP)—When Serge Koussevitzky's baton flicks the first notes of Bach's Third Brandenburg Concerto out of the Boston Symphony orchestra tonight the sixth Berkshire Symphonic festival will have begun, but also a project he has had in mind since 1910 will be finally assured.

This is the school (he had as soon it were called a "music center") which now is definitely scheduled to open in early July, 1940, at Tanglewood, the estate given the Boston Symphony two years ago by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston as a permanent home for the Berkshire festival.

Before the World war and the Russian revolution drained away the Koussevtisky fortune, the conductor and his sculptor wife had hoped to found such a school on their Russian estate.

The idea has been in Koussevit-

Festival Tonight

(Continued From Page One)

sky's mind ever since—but either money or a suitable place was lacking, and sometimes both. Now, however, an admiring board of directors has given word that the plan can be initiated.

There will be two classes of students at Tanglewood for the six weeks of the first term, next summer. One class will give advanced instruction to trained students. The other will be more general, and will concentrate on choral work which is to come to a climax with a performance of Bach's B minor mass under Dr. Koussvitsky's direction.

Thirty members of the Boston Symphony will spend the six weeks at Tanglewood. As individuals they will teach their respective instruments, and collectively they will form an orchestra which Dr. Koussevitsky will use in his course for conductors. G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard Glee club and the Radcliffe Choral society, will have charge of the choral work.

Each student will belong either to the school chorus or the school orchestra, and also will attend the general sessions of the school. Dr. Koussevitsky is firm about several matters in connection with the school—it is not a "conservatory" or a "summer school," he insists, nor will credit be given or diplomas issued.

An intelligent interest in music is the only entrance requirement (except for such work as Dr. Koussevitsky's conducting class).

Subscribers to this summer's festival, officials say, are more numerous this summer than ever before, and the six concerts of the festival may mean six capacity audiences in the "music shed," which seats 5700 people.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS

AUG 3 - 1939

Mountain Music

Berkshire Festival Begins Sixth Season Tonight

Special to Newark News.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass. — Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Orchestra will open the sixth annua Berkshire Symphonic Festival tonight in the shed at Tanglewood on Route 183 between Lenox and Stockbridge, before an audience which should approximate capacity

The shed, seating 5,700, is locate on the 200-acre estate presented in 1937 to the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline. This will be the fourth festival at which the orchestra has played and the second in the new structure, which is said to have remarkable acousti properties.

The programs of these festivals are geared to the same spirit as motivates the Winter concerts of the orchestra and comprise a symphonic standard consistent with the famous orchestra here assemble under its illustrious conductor. Demand for tickets has risen with each passing season.

The programs are to be given tonight, Saturday night at 8:30 and Sunday afternoon at 3:30 and the following Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon. The works to be performed follow:

Tonight
Third Brandenburg Concerto	Bach
Scheherazade	Rimsky-Korsakof
Symphony No. 1	Brahm
Saturday, August 5
Orchestral Concerto	Walter Piston
Symphony No. 5	Sibeliu
Symphony No. 7	Beethoven
Sunday, August 6
Concerto in D	K. P. E. Bach
Peter and the Wolf	Prokofief
Richard Hale, narrator
ymphony No. 4	Tschaikowsky
Thursday, August 10
ymphony No. 2	Beethoven
hus Spake Zarathustra	Straus
ictures at an Exhibition	Moussorgsky-Rave
Saturday, August 12
ymphony in B Flat, No. 102	Haydn
ites of Spring	Stravinsky
xcerpts from Flying Dutchman, Meistersinger, Lohengrin and Trannhauser	Wagner
Sunday, August 13
ymphony No. 4	Schumann
fternoon of a Faun	Debussy
a Valse	Rave
ymphony No. 2	Sibelius

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 3 - 1939

MUSIC ACADEMY'S FIRST BIG WORK TO BE BACH MASS

Six Weeks' Term at Festival in 1940 to Culminate in Concerts

Definite steps are now being taken toward the realization of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's plan for the establishment of a musical academy at "Tanglewood," summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and site of the famed Berkshire Symphonic Festival which opens tonight.

Begins Next July

In early July, 1940, the new academy will begin its first session. The term will consist of six weeks, culminating with the festival concerts.

The academy will be in two distinct parts; one for advanced instruction to a limited number of students qualified by ability and training; the other a general session for a larger school. A feature of the first will be a special class in orchestral conducting by Dr. Koussevitsky, of the second will be the preparation of a festival chorus in which all will participate.

What is projected is neither a "conservatory" nor a "summer school" in any accepted sense. A large student body will have the opportunity for a life in music, not only by discussion and example, but through participation and in association with a great orchestra and its conductor. The smaller group will devote their time to their particular fields. Dr. Koussevitsky will be active in the direction and conduct of the school.

Each student will belong either to the festival chorus or to the school orchestra and will attend the general sessions of the school. The general sessions, extending through the festival period, will be held twice each day (with no sessions on Saturdays and Sundays). They will be devoted to lectures, and to choral singing under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society.

Will Prepare Large Work

Besides the singing of music drawn widely from the choral repertory, the chorus will prepare a large work—in 1940 Bach's "Mass in B Minor," to be sung under the direction of Dr. Koussevitsky.

The lectures will deal broadly with music through the study of its development, form and style, and the esthetic principles underlying the art. No attempt will be made to cover in a systematic and balanced way the history or the theory of music, but rather, through participation and listening, to stimulate the imagination, to aid in its comprehension, to set a standard of performance and interpretation.

Classes in folk-dancing will be included in the general tuition.

It follows, naturally, that the principal entrance requirement is an intelligent interest in the subject involved, and that no diploma or other credit for attendance will be given.

The tuition for the general session (including choral singing, school orchestra, all lectures and assemblies, admission to certain rehearsals and all concerts) will be $100.

Information as to rates for individual instruction and for classes in conducting, theory and school music will be furnished at a later date, also particulars about the curriculum, faculty, living accommodations, etc.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

AUG 3 - 1939

Music Festival Opens Tonight In Berkshires

Academy To Be Started Next July in Plan to Develop Tanglewood Arts Center

In connection with the opening of the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky's direction tonight in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., the orchestra's management announced yesterday that the Musical Academy, contemplated by Dr. Koussevitzky as the next step in the development of Tanglewood as an artistic center, would begin its first session early in July, 1940. This is intended to continue for six weeks, culminating with the Berkshire Festival concerts of next August.

The Academy, according to leaflets which will be distributed to-night's audience, will be in two parts, one for advanced instruction for a limited number of particularly qualified students, and the other a general session for a larger school. A special class in orchestral conducting will be a feature of the first part, while all students in the second part will take part in a festival chorus. This will sing Bach's Mass in B minor under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction in the 1940 festival.

Plan Announced in '38

Dr. Koussevitzky's plan for the organization of an academy was first announced at the opening concert of the 1938 Berkshire festival. What is projected, according to the official leaflet, is neither a conservatory nor a summer school in the accepted sense. "A large student body will have the opportunity for a life in music, not only by discussion and example, but through participation and in association with a great orchestra and its conductor."

Each student will belong either to the festival chorus or school orchestra and will attend two general sessions each day, except on Saturdays and Sundays. These will be devoted to lectures and choral singing under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society. Classes in folk dancing will be included in the general tuition. Individual instrumental and vocal instruction also will be available, with members of the Boston Symphony among the teachers. All students will be entitled to attend the festival concerts and some of the orchestra's rehearsals.

No Credits to Be Given

The principal entrance requirement, it was announced, is an intelligent interest in the subject involved, and no diploma or other credit attendance will be given.

Tonight's opening program at Tanglewood consists of Bach's third Brandenburg concerta, Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherazade" and Brahms's first symphony. The second and third concerts will be given next Saturday night and Sunday afternoon, and the others on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 10, 12 and 13.

This is the sixth annual festival in this series. The first two, in 1934 and 1935, were held on the Hanna Farm near Stockbridge, with the late Henry Hadley conducting. The association of the Boston Symphony and Dr. Koussevitzky with the Berkshire Festival began in August, 1936, when three concerts were played on the Holmwood estate, near Lenox. In 1937, Tanglewood was presented to the festival committee and the Boston Symphony by its owner, Mrs. Gorham Brooks, of Boston. The Music Shed, built during the first half of 1938, was inaugurated with last summer's festival.

Information about tickets and lodgings may be obtained from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office in Stockbridge, or from information booths in Lenox, Pittsfield and other Berkshire centers.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 3 - 1939

Berkshire Festival Opens Tonight As 1940 Plans Are Announced

Stockbridge, Aug. 3—More specific details of the musical academy planned for next season at the Berkshire Symphonic festival are contained in a leaflet which will be distributed to concert goers tonight at the opening of the sixth annual festival at Tanglewood by Dr Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra.

The academy "for living and working in music" will begin early in July, 1940, according to the announcement, which declared the intention to prepare the Bach B Minor mass for next season A strong possibility exists that the season will be extended over three weeks instead of two weekends as in the past.

Tonight at the opening program at 8.30 D. Koussevitzky will lead his men in the Brandenburg Concerto number 3 in G major. The "Scheherazade" symphonic suite of Rimsky-Korsakov will complete the first half of the program. The second half will be devoted to the Brahms First symphony in C minor.

Academy Plans

The first session of the academy will continue for six weeks, culminating in the festival concerts. The academy is planned in two parts: One for advanced instruction to a limited number of specially qualified students, the other a "general session for a larger school." Featuring the first part will be a class in orchestral conducting under the direction of Dr Koussevitzky, while an important activity of the second part will be the preparation of a festival chorus in which the whole student body will participate.

The academy, which is the conception of Dr Koussevitzky, is described as neither a "conservatory or a summer school, in any accepted sense." "A large student body," according to the leaflet, "will have the opportunity for a life in music, not only by discussion and example, but through participation, and in association with a great orchestra and its conductor. The smaller group will devote their time to particular fields."

Bach B Minor

Each student will belong either to the festival chorus or to the school orchestra. General sessions, compulsory for all, will be held twice a day (except Saturdays and Sundays), and will extend through the festival period. They will be devoted to lectures and also to choral singing under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard Glee club and Radcliffe society. For the season 1940, the chorus will prepare the Bach B minor Mass under Dr Koussevitzky. Lectures will deal with broad phases of musical development, form and style. Classes in folk-dancing will be included in the tuition.

Individual instruction in vocal or instrumental study will be available under a faculty which will include thirty members of the Boston Symphony. There will be instruction in solfege, harmony, counterpoint, composition and methods of teaching music in schools. All students will be admitted to the festival concerts and to a "certain number" of rehearsals. The concerts were described as "in a very real and vital sense the culmination of the whole work of the academy."

The principal entrance requirement is "an intelligent interest in the subject involved." No diploma or other credit for attendance will be given. Further details of curriculum, faculty and living accommodations will be announced later.

THIS CLIPPING FROM RALEIGH, N. C.
NEWS OBSERVER

AUG 3 - 1939

MUSIC FESTIVAL GETS UNDER WAY

Sixth Berkshire Event Opens in Massachusetts with Koussevitzky Baton

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 2.—(AP)—When Serge Koussevitzky's baton flicks the first notes of Bach's Third Brandenburg Concerta out of the Boston Symphony Orchestra here tonight the sixth Berkshire Symphonic Festival will have begun, but also a project he has had in mind since 1910 will be finally assured.

This is the school (he had as soon it were called a "music center") which now is definitely scheduled to open in early July, 1940, at Tanglewood, the estate given the Boston Symphony two years ago by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston as a permanent home for the Berkshire Festival.

Before the World War and the Russian Revolution drained away the Koussevitzky fortune, the conductor and his sculptor wife had hoped to found such a school on their Russian estate.

The idea has been in Koussevitssky's mind ever since — but either money or a suitable place was lacking, and sometimes both. Now, however, an admiring board of directors has given word that the plan can be initiated.

There will be two classes of students at Tanglewood for the six weeks of the first term, next summer. One class will give advanced instruction to trained students. The other will be more general, and will concentrate on choral work which is to come to a climax with a performance of Bach's B Minor mass under Dr. Koussevitzy's direction.

Thirty members of the Boston Symphony will spend the six weeks at Tanglewood. As individuals they will teach their respective instruments, and collectively they will form an orchestra which Dr. Koussevitzky will use in his course for conductors. G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard glee club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, will have charge of choral work.

Each student will belong either to the school chorus or the school orchestra, and also will attend the general sessions of the school. Dr. Koussevitzky is firm about several matters in connection with the school —it is not a "conservatory" or a "summer school," he insists, nor will credit be given or diplomas issued.

An intelligent interest in music is the only entrance requirement(except for such work as Dr. Koussevitzky's conducting class).

Subscribers to this summer's festival, officials say, are more numerous this summer than ever before, and the six concerts of the festival may mean six capacity audiences in the "music shed," which seats 5,700 people.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 3 - 1939

GREATER FESTIVAL IS EXPECTED TO BE ANNOUNCED FOR '40

Three-Week Event of Nine Concerts Likely to Be Revealed During Berkshire Music Affair

Special Dispatch to The Republican

Berkshire Hills, Aug. 2—It is expected that official announcement will be made during the sixth annual Berkshire Music festival which opens tomorrow night at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, that the 1940 festival will run three weeks and nine concerts will be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra. The demand for tickets this year has been unprecedented and capacity audiences are expected for all the six concerts.

Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and Mrs Koussevitzky, motored from Boston today and are with Dr Artur Rodzinski, conductor of the Cleveland Symphony orchestra, and Mrs Rodzinski, at White Goat farm, Stockbridge.

At Curtis Hotel

Curtis hotel arrivals at Lenox for the first concert tomorrow night at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, included Miss Alice J. Clapp of Washington, Mr and Mrs Sidney Blumenthal and Miss Yvonne Blumenthal of New York, Mrs Paul R. Ireland of Cincinnati, Mrs Franklin W. Hobbs and Mrs Alvan T. Fuller of Boston.

Lester Roberts, manager of the Curtis, and Mrs Roberts, are to have in their box tomorrow night Mrs Henry White Cannon of New York, Mrs S. M. Lehman of Tarrytown. With Mrs W. Rockwood Gibbs will be Mr and Mrs Lambert Heyniger, Mr and Mrs Harry C. Holloway and David Donald.

Concert guests of Mr and Mrs Owen Johnson at Ingleside, Stockbridge, for the first series are Mr and Mrs Lawrence G. White, Charles Lanier Lawrance, Francis C. Lawrance and Olin Downes.

In the box with Mr and Mrs John Shepard, Jr., will be Mr and Mrs Jerome D. Gedney of New York, Mrs Eben Ellison of Boston and Mrs John H. C. Church of Great Barrington.

Stockbridge Garden Fete

Many persons motored to Stockbridge this afternoon for the garden fete on the lawn at St Paul's Episcopal church. Visitors admired the fashion show arranged by Mrs Owen Johnson, with Mrs Margaret Carson Hubbard assisting. Mannekins were Misses Patricia S. Johnson, Winifred E. Burden, Natalie Bayard Merrill, Hope Procter, Barbara Bullitt, Mrs William E. Dodge Stokes, Mrs Giraud Van Nest Foster, Mrs James Brewer Karrick and Mrs Florence A. Blake. At the tea tables were Mrs Charles C. Griswold and Mrs Austin W. Ackroyd, with several of the young set assisting.

Miss Ethel H. Lyons was a luncheon hostess at Pittsfield Country club in compliment to Dr Robert Peter Tristram Coffin, professor of English at Bowdoin college, who addressed the Wednesday Morning club on "My experience with poetry."

Louis G. D. Hyde has arrived from Paris and joined his brother-in-law and sister, Mr and Mrs Harris Fahnestock at Eastover, Lenox.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 3 - 1939

FIRST CONCERT SLATED TONIGHT AT TANGLEWOOD

Musicians Arrive For Rehearsals At Bay State Music Shed

Music lovers by the thousands from all parts of the United States and Canada will gather at 8:30 tonight in the Music Shed at Tanglewood between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., for the first concert of the annual Berkshire musical festival given by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky. There will be six concerts during the next two weekends.

Tonight's concert program is expected to include an announcement of great importance to all music lovers. Those who attended the first concert last year when the new music shed, seating 5,800 persons with room for 8,000, was dedicated will recall that announcement was made at that time that plans were under way for the opening in 1940 of a school for conductors and chorus leaders and other advanced students in the music field. These classes are to become a part of the Tanglewood program which will utilize the beautiful estate and the Hawthorne house on it for a school to precede the Berkshire festival during the first two week-ends of August. Under the inspiration and direction of Koussevitzky who has had such a plan in the back of his head for some time, plans for the opening of the school in 1940 have reached such a state that definite announcement concerning it is expected tonight.

Members of the orchestra arrived yesterday for rehearsals in preparation for tonight's concert which is to include Bach's "Brandenburg Concerto No. 3," Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade," and Brahms' "Symphony No. 1." Many of the advance guard of the orchestra arrived some days ago and set up their tents along the shores of beautiful Stockbridge bowl.

Residents from western Connecticut are expected to attend in large numbers as in the past. Interest in the concerts in this section this year is greater than in the past. Persons from this section who are going to the concerts are advised to go up route 183 in Massachusetts as it will take them directly to Tanglewood. This route will take them directly to the parking fields which have been drained and improved with flood lights and are free. Driving time from Waterbury is less than two hours.

The advance sale of tickets has been far ahead of last year partly due to the fact that for the first time all seats are reserved. There has been no advance in the price of the cheaper seats but reservations on them make them more convenient for persons who have long distances to drive. Concerts will be at 8:30 tonight and Saturday and at 3:30 Sunday afternoon. The same schedule will be followed for the three concerts of next week and all concerts begin promptly at the scheduled hour.

S. M.

THIS CLIPPING FROM PATERSON, N. J.
CALL

AUG 3 - 1939

Koussevitzky To Open Summer Music Center

Famous Conductor Will Be Aided By Boston Symphony Players

By JOHN SELBY
(Associated Press Arts Editor)

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 2—When Serge Koussevitzky's baton flicks the first notes of Bach's third Brandenburg concerto out of the Boston Symphony orchestra here tonight the sixth Berkshire symphonic festival will have begun, but also a project he has had in mind since 1910 will be finally assured.

This is the school (he had as soon it be called a "music center") which now is definitely scheduled to open in early July, 1940, at Tanglewood, the estate given the Boston Symphony two years ago by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston as a permanent home for the Berkshire festival.

Before the World War and the Russian revolution drained away the Koussevitzky fortune, the conductor and his sculptor wife had hoped to found such a school on their Russian estate.

The idea has been in Koussexitzky's mind ever since—but either money or a suitable place was lacking, and sometimes both. Now, however, an admiring board of directors has given word that the plan can be initiated.

There will be two classes of students at Tanglewood for the six weeks of the first term, next summer. One class will give advanced instruction to trained students. The other will be more general, and will concentrate on choral work which is to come to a climax with a performance of Bach's B Minor Mass under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction.

Thirty members of the Boston Symphony will spend the six weeks at Tanglewood. As individuals they will teach their respective instruments, and collectively they will form an orchestra which Dr. Koussevitzky will use in his course for conductors. G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard Glee club and the Radcliffe Choral society, will have charge of choral work.

Each student will belong either to the school chorus or the school orchestra, and also will attend the general sessions of the school. Dr. Koussevitzky is firm about several matters in connection with the school—it is not a "conservatory" or a "summer school," he insists, nor will credit be given or diplomas issued.

An intelligent interest in music is the only entrance requirement (except for such work as Dr. Koussevitzky's conducting class).

Subscribers to this summer's festival, officials say, are more numerous than ever before, and the six concerts of the festival may mean six capacity audiences in the "music shed," which seats 5,700 people.

84

THIS CLIPPING FROM BRIMINGHAM, ALA.
AGE HERALD

AUG 3 - 1939

MAESTRO'S WISH IS TRUE AT LAST

Russian Conductor Will Have Long-Desired Music Center

BY JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Arts Editor

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 2—(AP)—When Serge Koussevitzky's baton flicks the first notes of Bach's third Brandenburg concerto out of the Boston Symphony Orchestra here Thursday night, the sixth Berkshire symphonic festival will have begun, but also a project he has had in mind since 1910 will be finally assured.

This is the school (he had as soon it were called a "music center") which now is definitely scheduled to open in early July, 1940, at Tanglewood, the estate given the Boston Symphony two years ago by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, of Boston, as a permanent home for the Berkshire festival.

Wars Ruined Koussevitzkys

Before the World War and the Russian revolution drained away the Koussevitvky fortune, the conductor and his sculptor wife had hoped to found such a school on their Russian estate.

The idea has been in Koussevitzky's mind ever since—but either money or a suitable place was lacking, and sometimes both. Now, however, an admiring board of directors has given word that the plan can be initiated.

There will be two classes of students at Tanglewood for the six weeks of the first term, next Summer. One class will give advanced instruction to trained students. The other will be more general, and will concentrate on choral work which is to come to a climax with a performance of Bach's B minor mass under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction.

Thirty members of the Boston Symphony will spend the six weeks at Tanglewood. As individuals they will teach their respective instruments, and collectively they will form an orchestra which Dr. Koussevitzky will use in his course for conductors. G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, will have charge of choral work.

No Diplomas Offered

Each student will belong either to the school chorus or the school orchestra, and also will attend the general sessions of the school. Dr. Koussevitzky is firm about several matters in connection with the school—it is not a "conservatory" or a "Summer school," he insists, nor will credit be given or diplomas issued.

An intelligent interest in music is the only entrance requirement.

Subscribers to this Summer's festival, officials say, are more numerous this Summer than ever before, and the six concerts of the festival may mean six capacity audiences in the "music shed," which seats 5,700 people.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DAYTON, OHIO
JOURNAL

UG 3 - 1939

CONDUCTOR CREATES "MUSIC CENTER"

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug 2.—When Serge Koussevitzky's baton flicks the first notes of Bach's Third Brandenburg concerto out of the Boston symphony orchestra here Thursday night the sixth Berkshire symphonic festival will have begun, but also a project he has had in mind since 1910 will be finally assured.

This is the school (he would be happier were it called a "music center") which now is definitely scheduled to open in early July, 1940, at Tanglewood, the estate given the Boston symphony two years ago by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston as a permanent home for the Berkshire festival.

Before the World war and the Russian revolution drained away the Koussevitzky fortune, the conductor and his sculptor wife had hoped to found such a school on their Russian estate.

The idea has been in Koussevitzky's mind ever since — but money or a suitable place was lacking. Now, however, an admiring board of directors has given word that the plan can be initiated.

There will be two classes of students at Tanglewood for the six weeks of the first term, next summer. One class will be for advanced instruction to trained students. The other will be more general, and will concentrate on choral work which is to come to a climax with a performance of Bach's B Minor mass under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction.

Thirty members of the Boston symphony will spend the six weeks at Tanglewood. As individuals they will teach their respective instruments, and collectively they will form an orchestra which Dr. Koussevitzky will use in his course for conductors. G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard glee club and the Radcliffe choral society, will have charge of choral work.

Each student will belong either to the school chorus or the school orchestra, and also will attend the general sessions of the school. Dr. Koussevitzky is firm about several matters in connection with the school—it is not a "conservatory" or a "summer school," he insists, nor will credit be given on diplomas issued.

An intelligent interest in music is the only entrance requirement (except for such work as Dr. Koussevitzky's conducting class.)

85

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN

AUG 3 - 1939

Tanglewood to Be Made Significant Art Centre

Broad Program to Be Outlined Tonight When Berkshire Symphonic Festival Opens--Inauguration Next July

By SIDNEY R. FLEET

Advantage is to be taken at the opening of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival tonight to outline to the audience plans for the development of the broader project which has chiefly accounted for the active interest of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky in the enterprise.

Hitherto the possession of the beautiful site at Tanglewood in the Berkshires has given the opportunity to hear symphonic concerts similar to those in the regular season in Symphony Hall in Boston. It has been shown that there is an eager audience for such programs in the summer season. That feature of the plan, seemingly, has become firmly established.

But from the start Dr. Koussevitzky and those working with him have been looking forward to the establishment of a music centre there in the best sense of the words. The aim has been to make Tanglewood a significant centre of the arts in America. This idea is passing out of the tentative stage. It will begin to take shape next season with the founding and opening of a Musical Academy for the benefit of those who want to study the fine arts, and especially that of music, in their relation to culture. Naturally, the hope is that it will give impetus to creative talent.

New Academy.

So there will be the announcement tonight that the new Academy will begin it sessions early in July of next year. They will continue for six weeks, culminating in the festival. The Academy will be in two distinct parts. One will be for advanced instruction to a limited number of qualified students. The other will be general session for a larger school. In the first there will be a special class in orchestral conducting under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction. In the second there will be organized and prepared a festival chorus in which all will participate.

It is perhaps needless to say that what is projected is neither a conservatory nor a summer school in the accepted sense. A large student body will have the opportunity for a life in music, not only by discussion but through participation. The smaller group will devote their time to their particular fields. The chorus will be trained and directed by G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Chorus. Next season it will sing the B Minor Mass of Bach under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton. There will be classes also in choral conducting.

No Diplomas.

Individual instruction in piano, voice and orchestral instruments will be available and the faculty will include 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. There will be frequent lectures and discussions. And all students will be entitled to attend the concerts of the festival. No diploma or other credit for attendance will be given. Entrance requirement will be simply an intelligent interest in the subject involved.

Wisely, the further developments in this interesting experiment in musical culture, will be determined by experience with the modest program outlined here. But with such a stimulus the plan has great possibilities. Certainly it could not have been launched under more favorable auspices. In due time it may help to make the programs of the festival itself even more distinctive.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

AUG 3 - 1939

MUSIC NOTES

Audiences at the concerts of the sixth Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which begins this evening at "Tanglewood," between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., will be given circulars describing a plan advanced by Serge Koussevitzky for the development of a musical academy in conjunction with the annual festival.

The first session of the academy will be held next season. Beginning early in July, it will continue for six weeks, culminating in the series of concerts by the Boston Symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky. Men prominent in other arts as well as music will take part in the sessions.

"What is projected is neither a conservatory nor a summer school in any accepted sense," the circulars state. "A large student body will have the opportunity for a life in music, not only by discussion and example, but through anticipation, and in association with a great orchestra and its conductor. . . . Lectures will deal broadly with music through the study of its development, form and style, and the æsthetic principles underlying the art. No attempt will be made to cover in a systematic and balanced way the history or the theory of music, but rather, through participation and listening, to stimulate the imagination, to aid in its comprehension and to set a standard of performance and interpretation.

"An opportunity will be given for a few mature and talented musicians to study orchestral conducting under Dr. Koussevitzky. Individual instruction in piano, voice and orchestral instruments will be available."

• • •

"La Traviata" will be sung in English by the Steel Pier Opera Company at the Steel Pier, Atlantic City, tonight and tomorrow night. The attraction for next Thursday and Friday evenings, August 10 and 11, will be Offenbach's "Tales of Hoffmann."

John Carter, Metropolitan Opera tenor, will give a recital at the Chase Barn Playhouse, Whitefield, N. H., on Sunday afternoon, August 13, for the benefit of the Whitefield community fund.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BANGOR, ME.
NEWS

AUG 3 - 1939

Koussevitzky to Launch Project

School to Open in July 1940 at Stockbridge, Mass., Estate

By JOHN SLEBY

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 2—When Serge Koussevitzky's baton flicks the first notes of Bach's Third Brandenburg Concerto out of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight the sixth Berkshire Symphonic Festival will have begun, but also a project he has had in mind since 1910 will be finally assured.

This is the school (he had as soon it were called a "music center") which now is definitely scheduled to open in early July, 1940, at Tanglewood, the estate given the Boston Symphony two years ago by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston as a permanent home for the Berkshire Festival.

Before the World war and the Russian revolution drained away the Koussevitzky fortune, the conductor and his sculptor wife had hoped to found such a school on their Russian estate.

The idea has been in Koussevitzky's mind ever since—but either money or a suitable place was lacking, and sometimes both. Now, however, an admiring board of directors has given word that the plan can be initiated.

There will be two classes of students at Tanglewood for the six weeks of the first term, next summer. One class will give advanced instruction to trained students. The other will be more general, and will concentrate on choral work which is to come to a climax with a performance of Bach's B Minor Mass under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction.

Thirty members of the Boston Symphony will spend the six weeks at Tanglewood. As individuals they will teach their respective instruments, and collectively they will form an orchestra which Dr. Koussevitzky will use in his course for conductors. G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard Glee club and the Radcliffe Choral society, will have charge of choral work.

Each student will belong either to the school chorus or the school orchestra, and also will attend the general sessions of the school. Dr. Koussevitzky is firm about several matters in connection with the school—it is not a "conservatory" or a "summer school," he insists, nor will credit be given or diplomas issued.

An intelligent interest in music is the only entrance requirement (except for such work as Dr. Koussevitzky's conducting class).

Subscribers to this summer's festival, officials say, are more numerous this summer than ever before, and the six concerts of the festival may mean six capacity audiences in the "music shed," which seats 5700 people.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 3 - 1939

BERKSHIRES PLAN MUSIC ACADEMY

Institution Will Open Early in July, 1940, in Association With Tanglewood Fete

CONCERTS START TONIGHT

Serge Koussevitzky Will Be in Podium for the Boston Symphony Program

A musical academy "for living and working in music," to be associated with the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and situated at Tanglewood, Mass., the site of the festival, was announced yesterday to begin in early July, 1940. The announcement was made in a leaflet to be distributed to the audiences of the festival, which will begin this evening, Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The first session of the academy will continue for six weeks, culminating in the festival concerts. The academy is planned in two parts: one for advanced instruction to a limited number of specially qualified students, the other a "general session for a larger school." Featuring the first part will be a class in orchestral conducting under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky, while an important activity of the second part will be the preparation of a festival chorus in which the whole student body will participate.

The academy, which is the conception of Dr. Koussevitzky, is described as neither a "conservatory or a Summer school, in any accepted sense." "A large student body," according to the leaflet, "will have the opportunity for a life in music, not only by discussion and example, but through participation, and in association with a great orchestra and its conductor. The smaller group will devote their time to particular fields."

Each student will belong either to the festival chorus or to the school orchestra. General sessions, compulsory for all, will be held twice a day (except Saturdays and Sundays), and will extend through the festival period. They will be devoted to lectures and also to choral singing under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Society. For the season 1940, the chorus will prepare the Bach B minor Mass under Dr. Koussevitzky. Lectures will deal with broad phases of musical development, form and style. Classes in folk-dancing will be included in the tuition.

Individual instruction in vocal or intrumental study will be available under a faculty which will include thirty members of the Boston Symphony. There will be instruction in solfege, harmony, counterpoint, composition and methods of teaching music in schools. All students will be admitted to the festival concerts and to "a certain number" of rehearsals. The concerts were described as "in a very real and vital sense the culmination of the whole work of the academy."

The principal entrance requirement is "an intelligent interest in the subject involved." No diploma or other credit for attendance will be given. Further details of curriculum, faculty and living accommodations will be announced later.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

AUG 3 - 1939

Stockbridge Music Center Takes Shape

Academy to Open in July 1940 Under Direction of Koussevitzky, Purpose Cultural

The vision of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival enlarged into a musical arts center, comes one step nearer realization today with the announcement that an "academy" will be established at Tanglewood, the scene of the annual summer concert by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

While the actual public announcement of the academy to be opened next season, will be made tonight at the first of this season's concerts, news of the plan was released to the press on Wednesday. The general scheme, however, was one long in the mind of Dr. Koussevitzky, and last season it was reported that he planned to establish a school for young conductors, to run in conjunction with the concerts.

A brochure, to be distributed at tonight's concert, says in part:

"Dr. Koussevitzky has visualized 'Tanglewood' as widening its scope to become significant center of the arts in America. The success of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival suggests the next step in this direction: a Musical Academy to be developed simultaneously with the yearly concerts.

"'A center of music,' wrote the conducter in a communication to the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, 'would be a boon for those who want to study the fine arts in their relationship to culture; who are anxious to refresh their minds and personalities through contact with the best in art and the most distinguished in culture; and for those who long for a creative rest in the summer.' Men prominent in the arts and letters as well as in music, would accordingly be invited to lecture. The community of the Berkshires, with its cultural interests, activities and traditions, is an ideal place for such a center."

Opens in July, 1940.

The brochure goes on to say that definite steps are now being taken toward the realization of the conductor's plan. In early July, 1940, the new Academy will begin its first session. The term will consist of six weeks, culminating with the concerts of the Festival.

The academy will be in two distinct parts, one for advanced instruction to a limited number of students qualified by ability and training; the other a general session for a larger school. A feature of the first will be a special class in orchestral conducting under Serge Koussevitsky, of the second will be the preparation of a Festival Chorus in which all will participate.

Singers or Players.

Each student will belong either to the Festival Chorus or the School Orchestra and will attend the general sessions of the school. The general sessions, extending through the Festival period, will be held twice each day. They will be devoted to lectures, and to choral singing under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society.

Besides the singing of music drawn widely from the choral repertory, the chorus will prepare a large work, in 1940 Bach's Mass in B Minor, to be sung under the direction of Dr. Koussevitsky.

The lectures will deal broadly in music. No attempt will be made to cover in a systematic and balanced way the history or the theory of music, but rather, though participation and listening, to stimulate the imagination.

"It follows naturally," the brochure concludes, "that the principal entrance requirement is an intelligent interest in the subject involved, and that no diploma or other credit for attendance will be given."

Individual instruction in piano, voice and orchestral instruments will be available. The faculty will include 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who will act individually as teachers and collectively for purposes of demonstration. There will be instruction in solfege, harmony, counterpoint and composition, and in the principles and methods of teaching music in schools.

THIS CLIPPING FROM HUNTINGTON, W. VA.
HERALD-DISPATCH

AUG 3 - 1939

Serge Koussevitzky Realizes Old Dream Of Music Center

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 2. (AP)—When Serge Koussevitzky's baton flicks the first notes of Bach's third Brandenburg concerto out of the Boston Symphony Orchestra here tonight the sixth Berkshire Symphonic Festival will have begun, but also a project he has had in mind since 1910 will be finally assured.

This is the school (he had as soon it were called a "music center") which now is definitely scheduled to open in early July, 1940, at Tanglewood, the estate given the Boston symphony two years ago by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston as a permanent home for the Berkshire Festival.

Before the World War and the Russian Revolution drained away the Koussevitzky fortune, the conductor and his sculptor wife had hoped to found such a school on their Russian estate.

The idea has been in Koussevitzky's mind ever since — but either money or a suitable place was lacking and sometimes both. Now, however, an admiring board of directors has given word that the plan can be initiated.

There will be two classes of students at Tanglewood for the six weeks of the first term, next summer. One class will give advanced instruction to trained students. The other will be more general, and will concentrate on choral work which is to come to a climax with a performance of Bach's B Minor mass under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction.

Thirty members of the Boston symphony will spend the six weeks at Tanglewood. As individuals they will teach their respective instruments, and collectively they will form an orchestra which Dr. Koussevitzky will use in his course for conductors. G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard glee club and the Radcliffe choral society, will have charge of choral work.

Each student will belong either to the school chorus or the school orchestra, and also will attend the general sessions of the school. Dr. Koussevitzky is firm about several matters in connection with the school—it is not a "conservatory" or a "summer school," he insists, nor will credit be given or diplomas issued.

An intelligent interest in music is the only entrance requirement (except for such work as Dr. Koussevitzky's conducting class).

Subscribers to this summer's festival, officials say, are more numerous this summer than ever before, and the six concerts of the festival may mean six capacity audiences in the "music shed," which seats 5,700 people.

86

THIS CLIPPING FROM HOUSTON, TEX.
CHRONICLE

AUG 3 - 1939

KOUSSEVITZKY PROJECT NOW IS REALITY

Music Center Definitely Scheduled Next Year; 6th Berkshire Symphonic Revival Under Way.

BY JOHN SELBY,
Associated Press Arts Editor.

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 3.—When Serge Koussevitzky's baton flicks the first notes of Bach's Third Brandenburg Concerto out of the Boston Symphony Orchestra here tonight the sixth Berkshire Symphonic Festival will have begun, but also a project he has had in mind since 1910 will be finally assured.

This is the school (he would as soon it were called a "music center") which now is definitely scheduled to open in early July, 1940, at Tanglewood, the estate given the Boston Symphony two years ago by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston as a permanent home for the Berkshire Festival.

Before the world war and the Russian revolution drained away the Koussevitzky fortune, the conductor and his sculptor wife had hoped to found such a school on their Russian estate.

The idea has been in Koussevitzky's mind ever since — but either money or a suitable place was lacking, and sometimes both. Now, however, an admiring board of directors has given word that the plan can be initiated.

° ° °

Two Classes.

There will be two classes of students at Tanglewood for the six weeks of the first term next summer. One class will give advanced instruction to trained students. The other will be more general, and will concentrate on choral work which is to come to a climax with a performance of Bach's B Minor Mass under Doctor Koussevitzky's direction.

Thirty members of the Boston Symphony will spend the six weeks at Tanglewood. As individuals they will teach their respective instruments, and collectively they will form an orchestra which Doctor Koussevitzky will use in his course for conductors. G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, will have charge of choral work.

° ° °

Not a "Conservatory."

Each student will belong either to the school chorus or the school orchestra, and also will attend the general sessions of the school. Doctor Koussevitzky is firm about several matters in connection with the school—it is not a "conservatory" or a "summer school," he insists, nor will credit be given or diplomas issued.

An intelligent interest in music is the only entrance requirement (except for such work as Doctor Koussevitzky's conducting class).

Subscribers to this summer's festival, officials say, are more numerous this summer than ever before, and the six concerts of the festival may mean six capacity audiences in the "music shed," which seats 5700 people.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

AUG 3 1939

Music Academy Planned at Tanglewood

School Will Be Associated With Berkshire Festival

A musical academy for "living and working in music," to be associated with the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and situated at Tanglewood, Mass., the site of the festival, has been announced to begin in early July, 1940. The announcement was made in a leaflet to be distributed to the audiences of the festival, which will begin tonight, Serge Koussevitzky conducting the ~~Boston~~ Symphony Orchestra.

Six-Week Session

The first session of the academy will continue for six weeks, culminating in the festival concerts. The academy is planned in two parts: one for advanced instruction to a limited number of specially qualified students, the other a "general session for a larger school." Featuring the first part will be a class in orchestral conducting under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky, while an important activity of the second part will be the preparation of a festival chorus in which the whole student body will participate.

The academy, which is the conception of Dr. Koussevitzky, is described as neither a "conservatory nor a Summer school, in any accepted sense." "A large student body," according to the leaflet, "will have the opportunity for a life in music, not only by discussion and example, but through participation, and in association with a great orchestra and its conductor. The smaller group will devote their time to particular fields."

Each student will belong either to the festival chorus or to the school orchestra. General sessions, compulsory for all, will be held twice a day (except Saturdays and Sundays) and will extend through the festival period. They will be devoted to lectures and also to choral singing under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Society. For the season 1940, the chorus will prepare the Bach B minor Mass under Dr. Koussevitzky. Lectures will deal with broad phases of musical development, form and style. Classes in folk-dancing will be included in the tuition.

No Diploma Given

Individual instruction in vocal or instrumental study will be available under a faculty which will include 30 members of the Boston Symphony. There will be instruction in solfege, harmony, counterpoint, composition and methods of teaching music in schools. All students will be admitted to the festival concerts and to "a certain number" of rehearsals. The concerts were described as "in a very real and vital sense the culmination of the whole work of the academy."

The principal entrance requirement is "an intelligent interest in the subject involved." No diploma or other credit for attendance will be given. Further details of curriculum, faculty and living accommodations will be announced later.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 3 - 1939

BIG MUSIC PROJECT OF KOUSSEVITZKY'S TO START IN 1940

Plans for School at Tanglewood Now Definitely Made—Berkshire Festival Opens Tonight

Stockbridge, Aug. 2—When Serge Koussevitzky's baton flicks the first notes of Bach's third Brandenburg concerto out of the Boston Symphony orchestra here tomorrow night the sixth Berkshire Symphonic festival will have begun, but also a project he has had in mind since 1910 will be finally assured.

This is the school (he had as soon it were called a "music center") which now is definitely scheduled to open in early July, 1940, at Tanglewood, the estate given the Boston Symphony two years ago by Mrs Gorham Brooks of Boston as a permanent home for the Berkshire festival.

Before the World war and the Russian revolution drained away the Koussevitzky fortune, the conductor and his sculptor wife had hoped to found such a school on their Russian estate. The idea has been in Koussevitzky's mind ever since—but either money or a suitable place was lacking, and sometimes both. Now, however, an admiring board of directors has given word that the plan can be initiated.

Two Classes

There will be two classes of students at Tanglewood for the six weeks of the first term, next summer. One class will give advanced instruction to trained students. The other will be more general, and will concentrate on choral work which is to come to a cimax with a performance of Bach's B Minor Mass under Dr Koussevitzky's direction.

Thirty members of the Boston Symphony will spend the six weeks at Tanglewood. As individuals they will teach their respective instruments, and collectively they will form an orchestra which Dr Koussevitzky will use in his course for conductors. G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard Glee club and the Radcliffe Choral society, will have charge of choral work.

Each student will belong either to the school chorus or the school orchestra, and also will attend the general sessions of the school. Dr Koussevitzky is firm about several matters in connection with the school—it is not a "conservatory" or a "summer school," he insists, nor will credit be given or diplomas issued.

An intelligent interest in music is the only entrance requirement (except for such work as Dr Koussevitzky's conducting class).

Subscribers to this summer's festival, officials say, are more numerous this summer than ever before, and the six concerts of the festival may mean six capacity audiences in the "music shed," which seats 5700 people.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST

AUG 4 - 1939

RAIN MARS OPENING OF MUSIC FESTIVAL

Berkshire Thunder and Lightning Enliven 'Scheherazade'

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 4 (AP).—Unperturbed by a heavy rainstorm two hours earlier, 5,700 music lovers filled every seat last night as the Berkshire Symphonic Festival opened.

Another and heavier downpour between the third and fourth movements of Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherazade" set the audience, the orchestra and Conductor Serge Koussevitzky to laughing. Thunder and lightning was in keeping with the music, but snapping harpstrings and soggy violin strings were a handicap.

Most of the time, however, the audience was treated to orchestral playing of a grade not excelled at any summer festival in this country or abroad.

The program began with Bach's third Brandenburg Concerto and concluded with Brahms' First Symphony.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 4 - 1939

MUSIC FETE DRAWS BERKSHIRE PARTIES

Colonists Entertain at Sixth Annual Opening by Boston Symphony at Tanglewood

MANY HAVE HOUSE GUESTS

Mayor and Mrs. La Guardia to Visit A. Newbold Morrises for Later Concerts

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 3.—Midsummer festivities are at the peak in the Berkshire Hills for the sixth annual festival of music by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which ~~opened tonight~~ at Tanglewood, midway between Lenox and Stockbridge. Visitors are crowding hotels and taverns in all the resort towns, and there are many house parties.

With Mrs. William Penn Cresson at Chesterwood, Stockbridge, for the first series of concerts are Mr. and Mrs. Melzar M. Whittlesey, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Manship, Captain John H. Gibbons, U. S. N., retired, and Mrs. Gibbons, John W. Begg and Sidney Waugh of New York and Lawrence B. Fletcher of Boston.

Lenox Club arrivals include Mr. and Mrs. Pierre Jay of New York, Mr. and Mrs. Frederic B. Pratt of Glen Cove, L. I., and Mr. and Mrs. Ernest B. Dane of Boston. Mrs. George Otis Rockwood had a dinner party at the club tonight in honor of her daughter, Princess Diane R. Eristavi.

Joseph Burdens Hosts

Mr. and Mrs. Lydig Hoyt, Mr. and Mrs. Owen Winston and the Rev. and Mrs. John W. Suter Jr. are with Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Warren Burden at the Drake Cottage, Lenox.

Mrs. Henry Hadley, widow of the composer, who was the founder of the Berkshire Music Festival, is at the Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, with Miss Amelia Gibson of Stamford, Conn., Mrs. Edwin S. Mills of Evanston, Ill., and Miss Jessie King of Melbourne, Australia. Other Red Lion arrivals include Mrs. John H. Janeway of New York, Mrs. Ulysses S. Grant 3d and Mr. and Mrs. Edward W. Root of Clinton, N. Y.

Mrs. Charles C. Griswold has as guests at Hillhome, Stockbridge, Dr. and Mrs. Dixon Ryan Fox, Mr. and Mrs. John B. Hunter and Mrs. Herman A. Kelley.

With Mrs. George Grenville Merrill at La Chaumière, Stockbridge, are Dr. and Mrs. George G. Merrill Jr.

Mr. and Mrs. John D. Kennedy have as guests at Stonover Farm, Lenox, Mr. and Mrs. Edward M. McIlvain and Hans von Herwarth of New York.

Miss Louisa Ludlow Attends

With Miss Louisa Geary Ludlow at the concert were her aunts, Princess Constantin Toumanoff and Mrs. Maximilian F. Bonzano of New York.

Visiting Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett at Great Pine Farm, Great Barrington, for the festival are Mr. and Mrs. Walter S. Kyle and the Misses Margaret and Louise Kyle of Cincinnati. Mrs. Kyle is Mr. Blodgett's sister.

In the box with Miss Mabel Choate were Mrs. John C. Phillips of Boston and daughter, Mrs. W. J. Schuyler Watts of New York.

Mr. and Mrs. John C. Johansen have as guests at Weyborne Hill, Stockbridge, Mrs. Robert Worthington and Miss Edith Van Buskirk of New York.

Mr. and Mrs. D. Percy Morgan are entertaining at Boulder Farm, Stockbridge, Mr. and Mrs. Edward J. Matthews of New York and Miss Constance Bradlee of Boston.

Mayor and Mrs. La Guardia have accepted an invitation from A. Newbold Morris to be the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Morris at Brookhurst, Lenox, for the second series of festival concerts.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

AUG 4 - 1939

Berkshire Festival Opens With Record Crowd Attending

Boston Symphony Orchestra Draws 5,700 as First Concert Is Given

Special to the Herald Tribune

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Aug. 3.—The sixth annual Berkshire Festival of Music by the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened ~~tonight at Tangle~~wood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, with a record-breaking attendance of about 5,700. Numerous entertainments have been arranged for house parties, and hotels are filld. At the Lenox Club are Mr. and Mrs. Frederic B. Pratt, of Glen Cove, L. I.; Mr. and Mrs. Pierre Jay, of New York, and Mr. and Mrs. Ernest B. Dane, of Boston. Mrs. George Otis Rockwood was a dinner hostess at the club tonight for her daughter, Princess Diane R. Eristavi.

Mrs. William Penn Cresson has as guests at Chesterwood, Stockbridge, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Manship, Mr. and Mrs. Melzar M. Whittlesey, Capt. John H. Gibbons, U. S. N. (retired), and Mrs. Gibbons, and the Messrs. Sidney Waugh and John W. Begg, of New York, and Laurence B. Fletcher, of Boston. Mr. and Mrs. John D. Kennedy were accompanied to the concert by Mr. and Mrs. Edward M. McIlvain and Mr. Hans Von Herwarth, of New York. With Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Warren Burden at the Drake Cottage, Lenox, are Mr. and Mrs. Lydig Hoyt, Mr. and Mrs. Owen Winston and the Rev. John W. Suter jr. and Mrs. Suter. Miss Louisa Geary Ludlow of Lenox was accompanied to the concert by her aunts, Princess Constantin Toumanoff and Mrs. Maximilian F. Bonzano, of New York.

Guests of Mrs. Charles C. Griswold at Hillhome, Stockbridge, are Dr. and Mrs. Dixon Ryan Fox, Mrs. Herman A. Kelley and Mr. and Mrs. John B. Hunter. In the concert box with Miss Mabel Choate were Mrs. John C. Phillips, of Boston, and daughter, Mrs. W. J. Schuyler Watts, of New York. With Mr. and Mrs. D. Percy Morgan were Mr. and Mrs. Edward J. Matthews, of New York, and Miss Constance Bradlee, of Boston. Mr. and Mrs. Heaton I. Treadway had as box guests Miss Anne and Royal Treadway and Mr. and Mrs. George E. Horne. Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Gilbert Colt, of Pittsfield, were accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Gilbert Colt jr., Miss Judith Colt and Mrs. Henry K. White, of Boston.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Blodgett have as week-end guests at Great Barrington Mr. and Mrs. Walter S. Kyle and the Misses Margaret and Louise Kyle, of Cincinnati.

Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia of New York and Mrs. LaGuardia have accepted an invitation of Mr. Newbold Morris, president of the New York City Council, to be the guests of Mr. ~~and Mrs.~~ Morris at Brookhurst, Lenox, for the second series of festival concerts. Dr. and Mrs. George Grenville Merrill jr. have joined his mother at La Chaumiere, Stockbridge. Mrs. Robert Worthington and Miss Edith Van Buskirk, of New York, are visiting Mr. and Mrs. John C. Johansen at Weyborne Hill, Stockbridge. Guests of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin T. Rice, at Rood Cottage, Stockbridge, are Mrs. Carl Goldmark and daughter, Mrs. Jaros.

Mrs. William Felton Barrett had a large buffet supper party tonight at Sky Farm, North Egremont. Mrs. Henry Hadley, widow of the composer, who founded the Berkshire Festival, is at Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge. With her are Miss Amelia Gibson, of Stamford, Conn.; Mrs. Edwin S. Mills, of Evanston, Ill., and Miss Jessie King, of Melbourne, Australia. Also at the Red Lion are Mrs. John H. Janeway, of New York; Mrs. Ulysses S. Grant 3d and Mr. and Mrs. Edward W. Root, of Clinton, N. Y. 109-9

87

28 Gratt

16

Berkshire Evening Eagle
City Edition
1 P. M. Quotations

Pittsfield, Massachusetts. Thursday, August 3, 1939. 20 Pages— Price Three Cents

Capacity Audience of 5700 Coming for Festival Tonight

Lovers of Music From Far and Wide To Attend Opening

Program at Tanglewood Will Start at 8.30—Musical America Well Represented

A capacity audience will greet Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the 108 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra when they mount the stage at Tanglewood tonight at 8.30 for the opening of the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Rooming Houses Filled

In the audience that will fill the shed whose seating capacity is 5700, will be music lovers from England, France, Czecho-Slovakia, Norway, Canada and virtually every state in the Union. Hotels and rooming houses in Stockbridge and Lenox are filled and the overflow of visitors is being cared for in surrounding communities.

Musical America will be well represented at the opening. Aaron Copland, Walter Piston, Roy Harris and Arthur Bliss, composers, will be among the composers present. Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth, who will figure prominently in development of the academy at Tanglewood will be there. He is head of the music department at Harvard University. Others from the music world will include Mrs. Inez Hadley, widow of Dr. Henry Hadley, first conductor of the Festival; Jacques Gordon, Kathleen Parlow, Willem Willeke, Edwin Ideler, Conrad Held, the last four of the South Mountain Quartet in Pittsfield; Mrs. John S. Newberry, president of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra; Miss Alice Clapp, a director of the National Symphony Orchestra, Washington, D. C., and a host of others.

Orchestra Trustees Coming

Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will include Ernest B. Dane, president, with Mrs. Dane; Bentley W. Warren, a former president, and Mrs. Warren; Henry B. Sawyer, vice-president, and Mrs. Sawyer; Mark A. DeWolf Howe, who is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. William Ellery Sedgwick, in Stockbridge; Jerome Greene; also Mr. and Mrs. Reginald C. Foster.

In the official box with the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, will be Mrs. Arturo Rodzinski whose husband is conductor of the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra; Maurice Garreau-Dombasle, commercial attache of the French en bassy; Mrs. Herbert Darlingto Miss Sibyl Darlington, Joseph Da lington, Malcolm Vaughan of Ne York; Carleton Smith, music edit of Esquire; Bryn Strandenaes, Nor wegian portrait painter; Miss Alic Riggs of Stockbridge and Mose Stevens of Boston.

From Arlington, Vt., will com Dorothy Canfield Fisher and he husband, John R. Fisher. Amon the guests of Dr. William Mathe Lewis, president of Lafayette College, will be Mr. and Mrs. Oswald Garrison Villard of New York.

Mrs. Brooks To Attend

In the box with Mrs. Henry Hollister Pease of Lenox will be Mr and Mrs. Gorham Brooks and thei daughter Violet. Mrs. Brooks an her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwal Tappan gave Tanglewood to th orchestra as a permanent home fo the Festival.

Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky a rived at the Rodzinski farm i Stockbridge last night while mem bers of the orchestra arrived la night and this morning in time f today's rehearsal. A number the orchestra pitched their ten on the shores of Lake Mahkeena immediately upon arrival.

At Tanglewood, everything is r ported in readiness by Josep Franz, chairman of the Tanglewoo committee. The parking field is excellent condition and will a commodate 2000 cars. A tower floodlights will illuminate the fiel like daylight. The ticket office Tanglewood will be open at 6.3 Until that hour reservations may made at the office in Stockbridg

Refreshment Rush

The Thursday Morning Clu women in charge of the refreshment tent will be at Tanglewoo early to serve sandwiches and col drinks for those wishing to hav their suppers there. They will b prepared for a tremendous rush tonight at the 25-minute intermission.

The Tanglewood gardens will be lighted as usual and the public is invited to enjoy them.

Parking will be in charge of a large crew of volunteers working with Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre while State police will handle the traffic on the highways.

Others Attending

Among others to attend tonight will be John Shepard Jr., of Lenox and Palm Beach, who will have as guests in his box Mr. and Mrs. Jerome D. Gedney of New York and Palm Beach, Fla., Mrs. Eben Ellison of Boston and Palm Beach, and Mrs. John H. C. Church of Great Barrington. Guests of Miss Mary Parsons of Lenox will be Mrs. Montgomery Hare, Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery Hare Jr., Mrs. Walter E. Maynard, and Rt. Rev. DeWolf Perry and Mrs Perry of Providence, R. I.

Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs of Richmond is entertaining as guests in her box tonight Mr. and Mrs. Harry C. Holloway of Tyringham and Chicago, Ill., Mr. and Mrs. C. Lambert Heyniger of Darrow School, Lebanon, N. Y., and David Donald of Richmond.

Guests of Mrs. Hollister

Mrs. Cornelia Colton Hollister of Toledo, Ohio, a summer resident of Lenox for many years, will entertain her sister, Miss Olive A. Colton of Toledo, Mrs. Zorah Bowman of Chappaqua, N. Y., Mrs. Leslie Leland of Concord, Miss Katherine Geddes of Chappaqua, Mrs. Harriet Berry Tyson of Baltimore, Md.

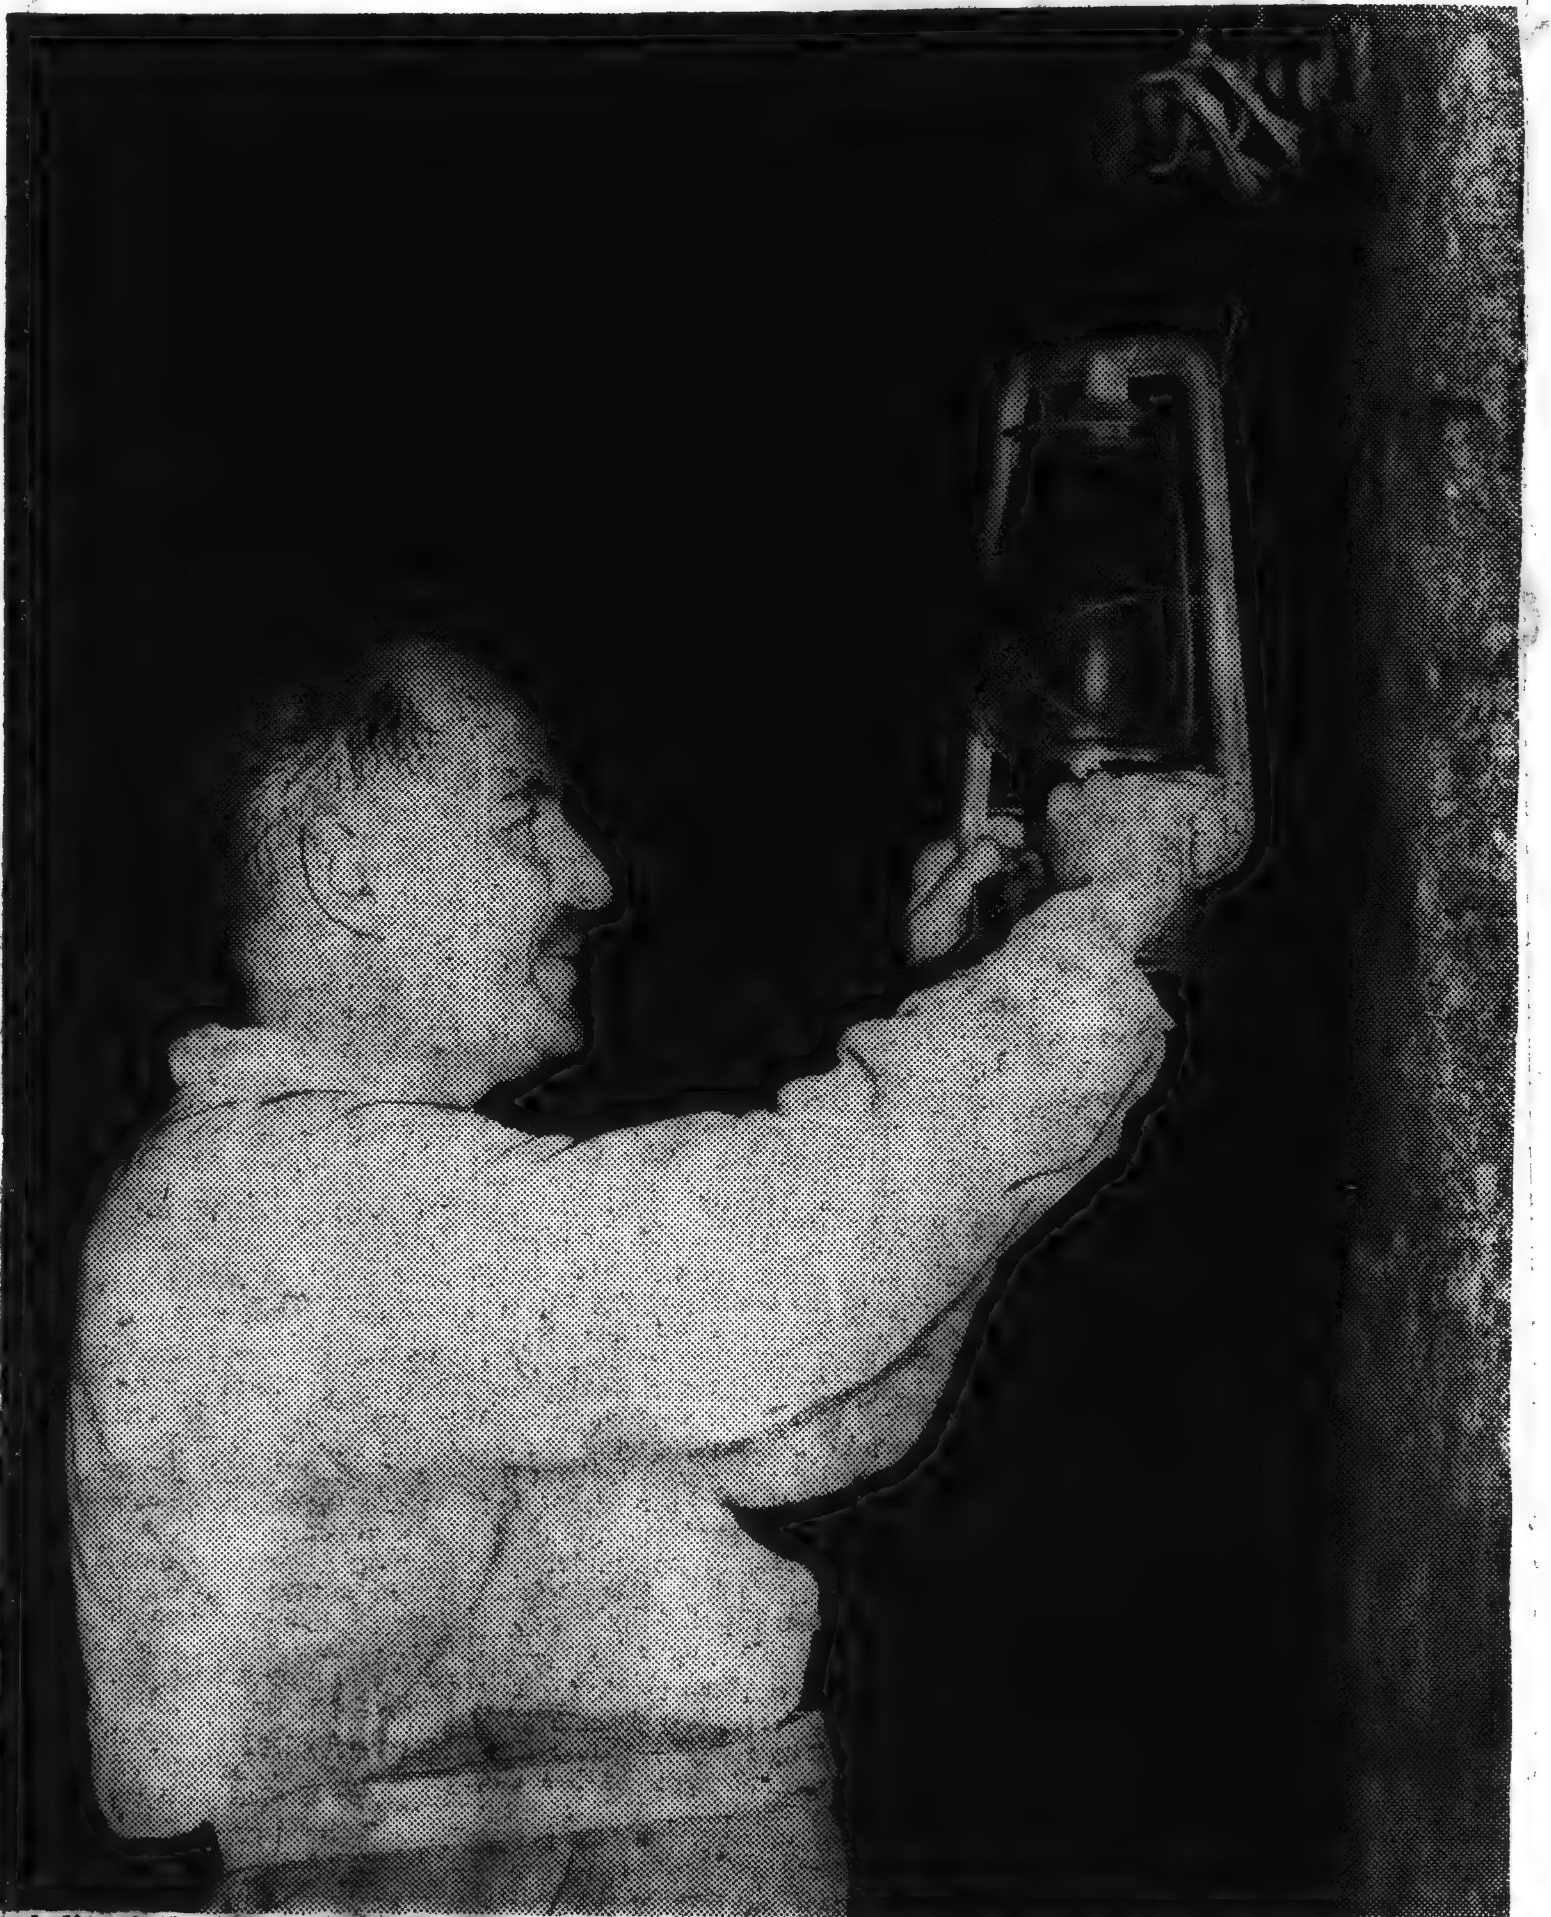
For the first concert Mrs. William Felton Barrett of Sky Farm, North Egremont, and Rye, N. Y., will have as box guests Mr. and Mrs. Henry Vincent of Colebrook, Conn., Mr. and Mrs. Norman Clement of Buffalo, N. Y., Mr. and Mrs. Roswell C. Tripp of Rye, Mr. and Mrs. Julian Street of Lakeville, Conn., Henry Stimson and Mrs. Lufkin Hunsiker of Rye, and Mrs. Ethan Allen Dennison of New York.

Mrs. Wallace Buell of Pittsfield and J. Winthrop Pentner of Cambridge will be guests in the box of Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Sawyer of Boston, and Mr. and Mrs. W. Gordon Cox of Old Chatham, Mr. and Mrs. William McM. Adams of New Lebanon, N. Y., and Mrs. Ludia Griffith Best of Dallas, Tex., will be guests of Mrs. Harry Adams of Canaan, N. Y.

Guests of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Clark Feathers of Lenox will be Mrs. R. Golden Donaldson of Washington, D. C., Mrs. J. Hunter Barton and Alfred I. Barton of Miami Beach, Fla., and William C. Feathers of Troy, N. Y., for the first series of concerts.

Sir Shuldham Redfern, secretary to Lord Tweedsmier of Canada and Lady Redfern, and Miss Mary Marbin Breckinridge of New York will be guests in the box of Mrs. John C. Breckinridge of York Village, Me., and Mrs. Arthur Woolsey Ewell of Rowley. Gordon Mendelssohn of Millbrook, N. Y., will entertain in his box tonight, Mrs David Alvan, Mrs. Lanny Ross and Miss Barbara Kilbey, all of Millbrook.

Mahkeenac Shores Alight



Symbolic of the start of the Berkshire Festival tonight, Rene Voisin, trumpet player of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, touches a match to the wick of the lantern, hanging before his tent.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 3 - 1939

88

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News

AUG 4 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 4 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 4 - 1939

Children To Hear Festival Rehearsal

Olin Downes To Appear With Orchestra Tomorrow

Hundreds of Berkshire County public high school boys and girls will be in the audience of 3000 attending the rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Tanglewood music shed Saturday morning at 10 as guests of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

They will come from practically every community in the county. The balance of the audience will include members and patrons of the Festival. No tickets are sold for this rehearsal nor for the one Aug. 12. The rehearsals were planned by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, as a privilege for Festival members and patrons. Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times will be the commentator.

The children are coming as a result of the work done in the Berkshires during the spring by Miss Harriet Johnson, director of the Layman's Music Course. For 12 weeks she and her assistant, Miss Katherine Philbrick, gave lectures in six schools in the county. These lectures were to familiarize students with instruments, with good music, whether symphonic, operatic or chamber music. Attendance was voluntary and there was a surprisingly small number who did not finish the course. At the end of the series, examinations, also voluntary were given by Miss Johnson with results indicating that the boys and girls of Berkshire County rate high in their knowledge of music. Those placing first, second and third in each school were presented tickets for the Festival concerts. Miss Alice Riggs, of Stockbridge, was chairman of the course for the Festival.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DURHAM, N. C.
HERALD

AUG 4 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY

AUG 4 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORWICH, CONN.
BULLETIN

AUG 4 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM

AUG 4 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM BURLINGTON, VT.
NEWS

AUG 4 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM LEWISTON, ME.
JOURNAL

AUG 4 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM BANGOR, ME.
COMMERCIAL

AUG 4 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN

AUG 4 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
TORRINGTON, CONN.
REGISTER

AUG 4 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

AUG 4 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
KEENE, N. H.
SENTINEL

AUG 4 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
FITCHBURG, MASS.
SENTINEL

AUG 4 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 4 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

AUG 4 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM MERIDEN, CONN.
JOURNAL

AUG 4 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CONCORD, N. H.
Monitor & N. H. Patriot

AUG 4 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
STAMFORD, CONN.
ADVOCATE

AUG 4 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES

AUG 4 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 4 - 1939

Boston Symphony Opens 6th Berkshire Festival

5700 Fill 'Music Shed' on Stockbridge Estate Now Owned by Orchestra; Koussevitzky Announces Academy Project

By JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Arts Editor

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 3. — With the first brisk notes of Bach's Third Brandenburg Concerto, Serge Koussevitzky opened the sixth Berkshire Symphonic Festival tonight before an audience of extraordinary importance musically, socially and financially.

The festival is the third held at Tanglewood, near here, and the fourth at which the orchestra has been the incomparable Boston Symphony under its long-time conductor, Dr. Koussevitzky.

As usual, the festival is again the joy of the audience and the despair of less fortunate organizations of the kind.

For one thing, the 5700 people who filled the huge, acoustically perfect "music shed" found themselves listening to music of Winter caliber, played by an orchestra which contained all its first chairmen, was at full strength and had had plentiful rehearsal.

Insists on Rehearsals

Dr. Koussevitzky steadfastly has refused to play more programs each of the two weeks than he can rehearse properly, which is three. Many Summer festivals have a concert each night, which means that under union rules rehearsals must suffer.

He also has been adamant against "name" soloists. This year, indeed, there are no soloists.

Although many buy standing room and lounge about the lawn outside the huge, pie-shaped shed during concerts, an audience of 20,000 persons such as certain musicians famous in Hollywood draw would be impossible, even if it were wanted.

From the first, Dr. Koussevitzky has demanded that the many acres of Tanglewood, the estate given the Boston Symphony in 1937 by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, shall eventually house something more than a series of concerts. He has won, and beginning next July an "academy" designed to offer training to advanced musicians, and courses of cultural value to others, will open its sessions.

For 1940 Festival

These are to come to a climax with the six concerts of the 1940 festival, and the student body will participate in this as the chorus for the Bach Mass in B Minor, the "big" work of next year's session.

This Summer, advance reservations are more than 15 per cent ahead of last, which had established the record up to then. Tonight's music embraced besides the Bach concerto, performances of Rimsky Korsakoff's "Scheherazade" and Brahms' First Symphony.

Yet these familiar works had been rehearsed and were played as if they were new and fresh and were being heard for the first time. As a result, the audience was raised to the point of cheers and willingly would have sat through another hour of music.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
UTICA, N. Y.
Observer Dispatch

AUG 4 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
GREENFIELD, MASS.
RECORDER - GAZETTE

AUG 4 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ST. ALBANS, VT.
MESSENGER

AUG 4 - 1939

Berkshire Festival Survives Cloudburst

By JOHN SELBY
(Associated Press Arts Editor)

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 4—A cloudburst two hours before the opening concert of the Berkshire Symphonic festival last night failed to frighten the audience which already had bought all the tickets for the program—the 5,700 seats in the huge triangular shed were filled when the music started

DROWNS OUT MUSIC

And then another and still heavier downpour between the third and fourth movements of Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherazado" delayed matters ten minutes or so and set the audience, the orchestra and Conductor Serge Koussevitzky to laughing.

As a matter of fact, some of the thunder and lightning was awesomely appropriate to the music, although snapping harpstrings and soggy violin strings helped less.

Most of the time, however, the audience was treated to orchestral playing of a grade not to be excelled at any summer festival, in this country or abroad. For four years now, the Boston Symphony orchestra has been the backbone of the Berkshire festival, and for much longer than that it has been one of the greatest of the world's orchestras—some would say indisputably the greatest.

WITHSTANDS TEST

Last night's program was chosen to please everybody. It began with the third of Bach's brandenburg concertos, and after the nearly disrupted "Scheherazade" concluded with the first Brahms symphony—one of the works Dr. Kousevitzky likes most—and plays as no other conductor does it.

Altogether the opening concert proved a pretty severe test for the physical features of the festival, which include newly drained and graveled parking lots, new lighting arrangements for the latter, and a different traffic routing system. Although everything is manned by volunteer workers as a community enterprise there was surprisingly small confusion, and an audience of great distinction, from partically every state in the union and a half dozen European countries, got home without much delay.

COMMUNITY EVENT

The entire festival, for that matter, is a community enterprise of unusual scope. Instead of competing, the Berkshire festival and the numerous smaller ventures in the neighborhood arrange schedules so as not to conflict, and do daily Alphonse and Gaston gestures in an effort to share the custom of the thousands of visitors who pour into the Stockbridge-Lenox-Lee neighborhood for the first two weeks of August.

The second concert will be directed Saturday night by Dr. Koussevitzky, and the third Sunday afternoon. The festival then adjourns until next Thursday, when the concluding set of three concerts opens.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

AUG 4 - 1939

Berkshire Audience Laughs Off Downpour at Concert

Koussevitzky and Orchestra Join In as Thunder Outdoes Music at Opening of Symphonic Festival.

By John Selby

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 4.—A cloudburst two hours before the opening concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival last night failed to frighten the audience which already had bought all the tickets for the program—the 5700 seats in the huge triangular shed were filled when the music started.

And then another and still heavier downpour between the third and fourth movements of Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherazade" delayed matters ten minutes or so and set the audience, the orchestra and Conductor Serge Koussevitzky to laughing.

Appropriate to Music

As a matter of fact, some of the thunder and lightning was awesomely appropriate to the music, although snapping harpstrings and soggy violin strings helped less.

Most of the time, however, the audience was treated to orchestral playing of a grade not to be excelled at any summer festival, in this country or abroad. For four years now, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been the backbone of the Berkshire Festival, and for much longer than that, it has been one of the greatest of the world's orchestras—some would say indisputably the greatest.

Last night's program was chosen to please everybody. It began with the third of Bach's Brandenburg concertos, and after the nearly disrupted "Scheherazade," concluded with the first Brahms Symphony—one of the work Dr. Koussevitzky likes most—and plays as no other conductor does.

Traffic Handled Well

Altogether the opening concert proved a pretty severe test for the physical features of the festival. Although traffic is manned by volunteer workers as a community enterprise, there was surprisingly small confusion, and an audience of great distinction, from practically every State in the Union and a half-dozen European countries, got home without much delay.

The second concert will be directed Saturday night by Dr. Koussevitzky, and the third, Sunday afternoon. The festival then adjourns until next Thursday, when the concluding set of three concerts opens.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 4 - 1939

Music in the Berkshires

Thus far in its comparatively brief existence, the Berkshire Symphonic Music Festival held at Tanglewood in the Berkshires each Summer has been merely a series of concerts. They have, it is true, been magnificent concerts by the superb Boston Symphony with Serge Koussevitzky conducting, and no music lover could ask for more than that. Yet a concert, however good it may be, is a limited expression of musical culture. Both the setting and spirit of the Berkshire Festival seemed to call for more.

Under Dr. Koussevitzky's leadership, therefore, the Festival's structure is to be enlarged. At this season's first concert last evening, it was announced that an academy will be established in connection with the Festival next Summer. It will be, according to the conductor, neither a conservatory nor a Summer school, but an "opportunity for living and working in music." There will be no degrees or credits, and no strict requirements for admission, but there will be a chorus, and various classes, with opportunity for individual instruction. The Bach B Minor Mass is scheduled for performance next Summer. Obviously the academy will be no picnic.

Something of this sort has been needed in New England. Many institutions begin humbly in obscurity. This Berkshire Summer academy, however, begins with the prestige of the Festival and the brilliance of accomplishment behind it. Someone once suggested the Berkshire Festival might become the American Salzburg. After a few more years of Hitlerism, and if the Tanglewood progress continues, someone in Europe may proudly point to a continental festival and call it the European Berkshire.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD - TELEGRAM

AUG 4 - 1939

Concerts Open in Berkshires

Rain Fails to Halt Symphonic Festival

By JOHN SELBY,
Associated Press Arts Editor.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 4.—A heavy rainstorm two hours before the opening concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival last night failed to frighten the audience which already had bought all the tickets for the program and the 5700 seats in the huge triangular shed were filled when the music started.

And then another and still heavier downpour between the third and fourth movements of Rimsky-Korsakoff's Scherherazade delayed matters 10 minutes or so and set the audience, the orchestra and conductor Serge Koussevitzky to laughing.

As a matter of fact, some of the thunder and lightning was awesomely appropriate to the music, although snapping harpstrings and soggy violin strings helped less.

Most of the time, however, the audience was treated to orchestral playing of a grade not to be excelled at any summer festival, in this country or abroad. For four years now, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been the backbone of the Berkshire Festival, and for much longer than that it has been one of the greatest of the world's orchestras—some would say indisputably the greatest.

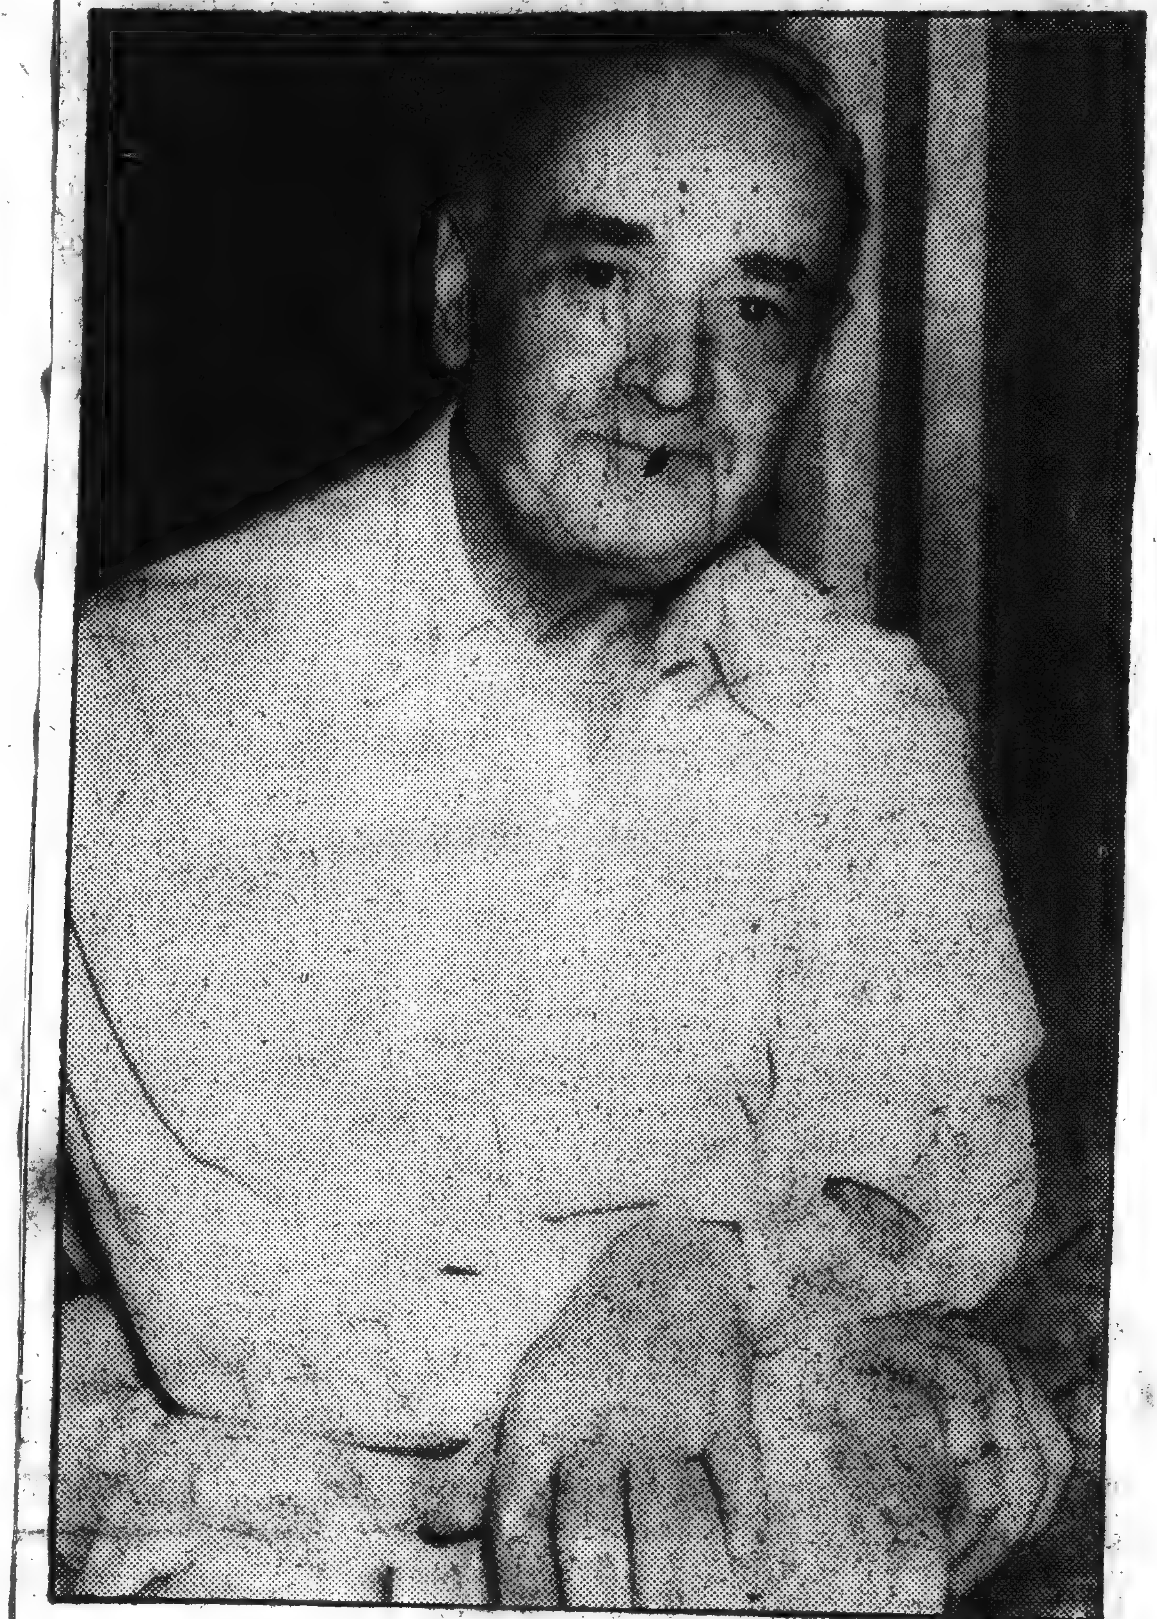
Last night's program was chosen to please everybody. It began with the third of Bach's Brandenburg concertos, and after the nearly disrupted Schererazade concluded with the first Brahms Symphony.

The second concert will be directed Saturday night by Dr. Koussevitzky, and the third Sunday afternoon.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 4 - 1939

Conductor Relaxes



SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orcestra in a moment of relaxation during the afternoon rehearsal which preceded the opening of the 1939 symphonic festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, last night.

Record Crowd Attends Opening Festival Concert

More Than 6000 At Lenox Estate Despite Showers

Traffic Jam Causes More Than 1000 to Miss Large Part of Brandenburg Concerto

Lenox, Aug. 3—A crowd of more than 6000 persons thronged Tanglewood tonight for the first concert of the sixth season of the Berkshire symphonic festival. The number in attendance exceeded that of any other concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra at Lenox.

A traffic jam caused delay of about

(Continued on Fifth Page)

Bach Concerto Opens Program; Acaustics Fine

Music Carries Perfectly to All Parts of Great Hall—Boston Symphony Gives Fine Performance

By FRANCIS REGAL

Lenox, Aug. 3—Conditions were perfect, aside from a thunderstorm, which caused some interruption, for the opening tonight of the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival at the Music shed on the Tanglewood estate between Lenox and Stockbridge. This is the fourth of the festivals

(Continued on Fifth Page)

THIS CLIPPING FROM LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER-JOURNAL

AUG 4 - 1939

Symphony Orchestra Leader's Music Center Opens In July

By JOHN SELBY.
(Associated Press Arts Editor.)

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 3.—When Serge Koussevitzky's baton flicks the first notes of Bach's third Brandenburg concerto out of the Boston Symphony Orchestra here tonight the sixth Berkshire symphonic festival will have begun, but also a project he has had in mind since 1910 will be finally assured.

This is the school (he had as soon it were called a "music center") which now is definitely scheduled to open in early July, 1940, at Tanglewood, the estate given the Boston symphony two years ago by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston as a permanent home for the Berkshire festival.

Two Classes of Students.

Before the World War and the Russian revolution drained away the Koussevitzky fortune, the conductor and his scuptor wife had hoped to found such a school on their Russian estate.

The idea has been in Koussevitzky's mind ever since—but either money or a suitable place was lacking, and sometimes both. Now, however, an admiring board of directors has given word that the plan can be initiated.

There will be two classes of students at Tanglewood for the six weeks of the first term, next summer. One class will give advanced instruction to trained students. The other will be more general, and will concentrate on choral work which is to come to a climax with a performance of Bach's B minor mass under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction.

Staff of 30 Instructors.

Thirty members of the Boston symphony will spend the six weeks at Tanglewood. As individuals they will teach their respective instruments, and collectively they will form an orchestra which Dr. Koussevitzky will use in his course for conductors. G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, will have charge of choral work.

Each student will belong either to the school chorus or the school orchestra, and also will attend the general sessions of the school.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS

AUG 4 - 1939

Storm No Barrier

Berkshire Patrons Attend Festival Regardless

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass. (AP)—A heavy rainstorm two hours before the opening concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival last night failed to frighten the audience which already had bought out the tickets for the program and the 5,700 seats in the huge triangular shed were filled when the music started.

And then another and still heavier downpour between the third and fourth movements of Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherazade" delayed matters 10 minutes or so and set the audience, the orchestra and Conductor Serge Koussevitzky to laughing.

Most of the time, however, the audience was treated to orchestral playing of a grade not to be excelled at any Summer festival, in this country or abroad. For four years now, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been the backbone of the Berkshire Festival, and for much longer than that it has been one of the greatest of the world's orchestras—some would say indisputably the greatest.

Last night's program was chosen to please everybody. It began with the third of Bach's Brandenburg Concertos, and after the nearly disrupted "Schererazade" concluded with the first Brahms symphony.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
GLEN RIDGE, N. J.
WEEKLY PAPER

AUG 4 - 1939

LOCAL ATTENDANCE FOR SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL

Attending the Berkshire festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Stockbridge, Mass., are Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Wiersma of 455 Franklin street. This annual outdoor music festival started yesterday and continues through Sunday.

Mrs. Wiersma recently returned from Willimantic Camp Grand, a summer camp operated by the Methodist Church at Willimantic, Conn., where she assisted with the music during her week's stay.

Prior to Opening Concert at Tanglewood

(Republican Staff Photo)

Some scenes at Tanglewood at Lenox taken yesterday afternoon as the Boston Symphony orchestra rehearsed for the opening of the festival series of concerts last night. Upper left: Gaston Dufresne, double bass player, standing beside his bull fiddle just before the rehearsal began. Upper right: George Madsen, flutist, returns his instrument to the case as the afternoon workout ended. Lower left: Violinists in action, George Humphrey (left) and William Gerhardt. Lower right: The harp section of the orchestra, Bernard Zighera, first harpist (in right foreground) and Elford Caughey, second harpist.

MORE THAN 6000 AT LENOX ESTATE DESPITE SHOWERS

(Continued from First Page)

half an hour in the arrival of more than 1000 patrons who missed a large part of the first number. This delay was caused by showers early in the evening so that a great many postponed leaving their homes until the last minute.

The early storm, however, was just a trickle compared with a tremendous shower that swept over Tanglewood during the second number on the program, which was the Scheherazade by Rimsky-Korsakoff. In this number Nature and the orchestra were in competition to drown out each other. Brilliant flashes of lightning and sharp crashes of thunder with a deluge of rain caused a delay of about 15 minutes. Veritable cascades of water flowed down from the roof of the music shed but no one in the audience got wet.

The storm cleared during intermission and when the concert ended at 11.20 the stars were shining. During the intermission Miss Gertrude Robertson Smith, president of the festival association, made a plea to the audience for contributions to complete the music shed. She said that she would receive contributions of from $1 up to $10,000. Miss Smith then introduced Norman H. Davis, as a citizen of Stockbridge, the United States and the world. He paid a compliment to Miss Smith for her extraordinary energy and enterprise in making the festival possible and indorsed her plea for additional funds.

Eight state policemen under Sergt Warner F. Eaton of Northampton barracks, with local police, handled the highway traffic, the parking arrangements on the ground were in charge of Sheriff James B. McIntyre with World war veterans assisting. There were 150 ushers of whom the chief was Willard M. Sispare.

BACH CONCERTO OPENS PROGRAM; ACAUSTICS FINE

(Continued from First Page)

given by the Boston Symphony orchestra, and in the opening program its eminent conductor, Dr Serge Koussevitzky, adhered closely to the conservative policy adopted at the outset. Like most of the programs, it was made up of three famous major works, in this case Bach's third Brandenburg concerto, "Scheherazade," by Rimsky-Korsakoff, and the C minor symphony by Brahms. Later there will be a few modern and even contemporary works, but none which have not won favor with the public.

Tonight's concert drew a great audience which nearly filled the hall, and even in the most remote parts the music carried perfectly except during the climax of the storm. The rain held off until even the latecomers were seated and it did not disturb the stately and joyous music by Bach, but a fierce rattle of rain and incessant peals of thunder made it necessary for Dr Koussevitzky to make a slight intermission at the close of one of the sections of "Scheherazade." For compensation in certain grand climaxes the crash of thunder was a dramatic reinforcement of the crash of brass instruments. Rimsky-Korsakoff's arabesques were played with delightful elegance and beauty.

In time the scope of the festivals may be broadened, but for the present the Music shed is to be a powerhouse rather than an experiment station. No one is likely to accuse Dr Koussevitzky of undue conservatism after his efforts to saturate Boston music with modernissimism, but he evidently considers that a great summer festival in the country should be shaped on different lines, and those who have watched the gratifying growth of this Berkshire institution under his direction are likely to feel that his policy has been sound.

Important Annual Steps

Each year has been marked by an important forward step. In 1936 the Boston orchestra gave three concerts in a tent on the estate of Mrs Margaret Emerson, Holmwood. Then Mrs Gorham Brooks gave Tanglewood to the Boston Symphony orchestra and the festival association, and in 1937 the number of concerts was doubled. They were still given under canvas, but the tropical downpour of August 12 proved a blessing in disguise by speeding the construction of a concert hall. The Music shed was rushed to completion just in time for the six concerts of 1938, but there was still much work to be done on details and on supplementary arrangements, and the past year has seen almost as notable progress as its predecessors.

A dry summer has made less essential, for the time being, the hard work done in draining the parking field and surfacing the drives with gravel, but motorists who have been bogged down in past years appreciate this improvement without waiting for a demonstration of its value. Already a demonstration has been given of the value of the improved facilities for handling crowds, and for reducing somewhat congestion of roads as cars leave their parking places after the performance. Even the aged, crippled or infirm need not be deterred from attendance, since wheelchairs are available and special cards permitting a car to be driven to the Music shed can be obtained at the festival office in Stockbridge.

The shed, now perfected in some minor details, has again proved itself to be a worthy home of music, and last year's good-natured controversy as to whether it did not merit a more stately name seems to have subsided. But "shed" seems to express the austerely functional spirit of the building, even apart from the open sides—characteristic of a shed—by which music lovers at the festival are allowed to keep in contact with Nature without detriment to the music. Thanks to the carefully calculated proportions and materials of the building, and to the shaping of the stage to play the part of the shell used in open-air concerts, this large and partly open hall, seating nearly 6000 persons, is an almost perfect auditorium for an orchestra with such ample reserves of tone as Dr Koussevitzky has at his command.

New Music School

More notable than these material improvements, however, has been the announcement, now definitely made, that the plan for a summer music school connected with the festival will be put into effect next year. This is a project which Dr Koussevitzky has long had at heart, and while the plans are still somewhat tentative they show novel features which should make it useful. He himself thinks of it as a music center rather than a school, and certainly it will be in no sense a conservatory of music. Its work will be twofold, or rather, manifold. The germ of the idea is perhaps to be found in the opportunity for highly specialized instruction by members of the orchestra, 30 of whom will be at Tanglewood during the whole session of the school. This opportunity is expected to appeal to many professional musicians and advanced students who can arrange to be in or near Berkshire in July. They can study under experts any of the instruments used in an orchestra, and also the art of conducting, with whatever work in composition, orchestration, theory, etc., they may care to do.

But to give the school wider appeal and also to prepare music lovers for the kind of music to be heard at the festivals, there will be general classes in musical appreciation and related subjects, which will be open to all students and music lovers who show interest, from whom a large chorus will be recruited for the performance of a great choral work at the festival. A school conducted on these broad lines should have much cultural value and also highten popular interest in the Berkshire festivals.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

90

AUG 4 - 1939

SixthBerkshire Festival Opens Before 5,700

CapacityTanglewood Crowd Hears BostonSymphony; Storm Cues With Music

Special to the Herald Tribune

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 3.—The sixth Berkshire symphonic festival opened here tonight before a capacity audience of 5,700 persons, assembled in the shed on the grounds of Tanglewood, the estate presented by Mrs. Gotham Brooks to the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a per- [redacted] the festival.

This is the third year of the festival at Tanglewood. For the first time the full Boston Symphony Orchestra of 108 men, conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, appeared. Last year the orchestra of ninety-three performed under a permanent shed, dedicated with ceremonies.

The management this year has been at some pains to improve physical conditions about the estate. An enlarged parking field has been created, entailing an expenditure of $10,000 for the purchase of 700 tons of tile and gravel and for the labor of filling in a swamp. Last year many cars parked near the shed, while their owners were listening to the orchestra, and became stuck in the mud. The management came to the rescue, providing a free towing service. But this year it was decided to construct adequate parking space, high and dry and easily accessible.

Dr. Koussevitzky and his men presented the following program: Bach's third Brandenburg Concerto, in G; Rimsky-Korsakoff's Symphonic suite, "Scheherazade" and the Brahms first symphony in C minor.

Every hotel and boarding house in near-by Lenox and Stockbridge was filled with music lovers attending the festival. They began to arrive yesterday, by motor and train, and by nightfall not a place could be obtained by those who had neglected to make reservations. The festival office in Stockbridge reported the largest crowd in the history of the festival.

For the first time since the festival began in 1934, all seats this year are reserved. Nearly four hundred additional seats have been added, placed outside the shed yet in full view of the orchestra stand.

Stifling heat early in the day had built up dark and ominous thunderclouds by late afternoon, and a shower about 5 o'clock drenched the grounds, making it necessary to pull in several hundred benches set outside the shed to accommodate an expected overflow.

The skies had cleared by concert time, however, and a long column of automobiles slowly wound into the grounds. The shed was filled completely when Dr. Koussevitzky stepped out to begin the Brandenburg concerto.

During this interlude, thunder and lightning flashes betokened another storm on the way. As the Rimsky-Korsakoff suite began, the deluge swooped down with a roar upon the supposedly soundproof roof, nearly drowning out the orchestra entirely. While Sinbad's ship split and sank, the thunder obligingly entered into the scheme of things, cueing nicely with the Koussevitzky baton. The general effect, over and above a superb performance, was almost cinematic.

By the time Dr. Koussevitzky was ready to begin the Brahms symphony, things had dried out a bit.

During the intermission, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival corporation, asked the audience to contribute "anything from $1 to $10,000" to "put shutters on the shed, so we need not mind thunderstorms." Miss Smith introduced Norman H. Davis, president of the American Red Cross, who seconded the appeal for contributions.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News

AUG 4 - 1939

SYMPHONIC PRELUDE

The Knickerbocker News Photo

Interrupting a rehearsal at Tanglewood, Mrs. W. J. Whittemore of Boston congratulates Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, before the reopening of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival near Lee, Mass.

Storm God's Cymbals Crash As Berkshire Symphony Opens

Downpour Rolls Harmlessly Off New Frame Building, Erected Since Tanglewood Tent Failed

By C. R. ROSEBERRY

An untoward meteorological incident of two years ago was recalled by its survivors when a heavy thunderstorm obtruded upon the opening concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Lenox, Mass.

But this time the elements had no flimsy circus tent on which to wreak their vengeance and were balked by the sturdy music shed which had its initiation last summer; although the downpour and its attendant crashes of thunder were so ferocious for a few minutes as to interrupt the orchestra in the middle of Rimsky - Korsakoff's "Scheherazade Suite."

Two seasons ago, a Wagnerian concert at Tanglewood was completely rained out when a torrential storm made the old tent uninhabitable; and that episode had much to do with hastening of the plans for a permanent shelter. The storm of last night, which beat in the open sides of the music shed, driving listeners on the outer fringe to seek more secure haven, was good-naturedly seized upon by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, festival president, to issue an appeal for further donations (up to some $60,000) with which to complete the Tanglewood development. A brief talk in suppor tof the festival was also made at intermission by Norman Davis, a Berkshire denizen and former United States ambassador-at-large.

Aside from the hindrance of weather, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and his full Boston Symphony Orchestra of more than 100 men initiated the sixth Berkshire Festival most auspiciously, and with one of those variegated and cleverly balanced programs for which Koussevitzky is famous.

The severe classicism of Bach's third Brandenburg Concerto had the honor of launching the festival, being played, as tradition requires, by an abbreviated string choir. As a transitional passage between the two rapid movements of the concerto the conductor chose the slow and short Sinfonia from Bach's sacred cantata, "Christ Lag in Todesbaden," and the contrasting mod and tempo were perfect to the requirement.

Already premonitory rumblings outside were building up a crescendo. Dr. Koussevitzky, demonstrating that he has a sense of humor, now and then cocked his head skyward and smiled over his shoulder.

The celestial kettle-drums really went to work to augment the percussion section when the orchestra was well launched on the Orientally exotic "Scheherazade" suite. The musicians were compelled to suspend operations after the third movement, but retained their places until the uproar subsided enough to go on.

Happily, all was serene again after intermission when the master work of the evening—Brahms' monumental first symphony—was performed. Even though the extreme dampness must have been trying on the strings, the Bostonians applied themselves wholeheartedly to the rigors of Brahms, and it was as superb an interpretation of this great music as one could desire or expect on a rainy evening.

The audience was estimated at more than 6,000, nearly exhausting the seating capacity of the great auditorium. Socialites and celebrities mingled in the brilliant throng, and many Europeans are reported to have crossed the Atlantic especially for these concerts—now that Salzburg has gone the way of all culture under Hitler.

The biggest drawback to these Tanglewood events was more manifest than ever last night—the inadequate facilities for regulating traffic. The jam of getting out is enough to dissipate the inspiration derived from the concert, and cars were still bottled up as midnight approached.

The second concert of the six in the series, tomorrow night, calls for Walter Piston's concerto for orchestra, the Sibelius Fifth Symphony and the Beethoven Seventh

---

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 4 - 1939

The Berkshire Festival

The glorious start to the sixth annual Berkshire Music festival last night serves as another reminder of the charms of Western Massachusetts. Nearly 6000 people flocked to historic Tanglewood despite the threat of bad weather for the opening concert by Dr Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra and the financial success of another season is assured.

The generosity of Mrs Gorham Brooks, donor of the beautiful spot where Hawthorne once wrote, the persistence and vision of the large volunteer committee that has worked on the project and the cooperation of Dr Koussevitzky and his men augur well for the future of the festival.

The shed is now a "must" on the visiting list of any visitors into this section, and only time will tell how the crowds may be accommodated next year when the academy is started. The plans that have been announced further reenforce the conviction that was established last year with the building of the spacious and acoustically perfect shell. This section of the country has much to offer the rest of the world and the festival becomes one of its greatest attractions.

Last night's rain was disturbing to some. To others it was welcome in proving that the shed could "take it." No one was wet by the storm and there was something thrilling about seeing such a storm in such pleasant surroundings. Outdoor enterprises must take their chances with the weather, but the beauty of the Tanglewood setting makes this a welcome hazard.

It is hoped that the desire of the trustees for shutters for the shed will soon be realized. In view of the enthusiasm and attendance, it is safe to predict that the wait will not be long. The festival cannot be praised too highly, nor supported too strongly. We have in our own backyard an insuperable treat.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

AUG 4 - 1939

SIXTH BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL OPENS

Storm Adds Color to Score of 'Scheherezade.'

By IRVING KOLODIN.
Special Dispatch to THE SUN.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 4.—With some unscored celestial thundering to provide a challenge to the orchestral percussion, Serge Koussevitzky last night led the Boston Symphony Orchestra through the first program of the Sixth Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, near here. Thus the audience of more than 5,500 had the opportunity both to assist at the renewal of this annual festivity and to observe in its first severe test the utility of the vast shed built last year.

Though Dr. Koussevitzky paused for a full five minutes between the third and fourth movements of "Scheherezade," it was only because of thunder claps that would have been audible in any concert hall.

The night cleared after the elements had demonstrated how much more vividly than instruments they could portray the terrors that beset Sinbad's ship. Thereafter Dr. Koussevitzky had the rich opportunities of Brahms's C minor Symphony in which to demonstrate the full-throated sonorities of his orchestra, the range and subtlety of its dynamic resources, the splendid exactness of its ensemble. This is a score in which Dr. Koussevitzky has made much progress since he first directed it in America, and if his performance is not yet the most personalized Brahms it is orchestrally magnificent.

With customary astuteness Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival board, chose the intermission interval to remind the audience that a substantial sum was yet necessary to complete the shed, and indicated her willingness to accept any contributions. Her appeal was indorsed by the Hon. Norman H. Davis, a resident of the Berkshires, who characterized the festival as "something of great importance to the whole United States."

The concert began with the Third Brandenburg Concerto of Bach, in which Dr. Koussevitzky inserted the sinfonia from the cantata "Christ Lag in Todesbanden," where Bach merely indicated a long sustained chord.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

AUG 4 - 1939

FIRST SYMPHONY CONCERT ATTENDED BY LARGE CROWD

An audience, which practically filled the great Music Shed at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., greeted Dr. Serge Koussevitzky last evening with tumultuous applause as he mounted the podium to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first concert of the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The Festival, which has come to be one of the great music occasions of the country, came into being, under the fine leadership of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, of Stockbridge, Mass., and New York City, in 1934 with the late Henry Hadley conducting the concerts. The association of Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra with the Festival began in August, 1936, and has continued uninterruptedly, and Dr. Koussevitzky has great plans for the establishment at Tanglewood in 1940, of a Musical Academy. Leaflets describing these plans were distributed to last night's audience.

Last night's program was made up of the Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G Major, by Bach; the Scheherazade Symphonic Suite by Rimsky-Korsakov, and the Symphony No. 1 in C Minor, Opus 68, by Brahms. This glorious music was faultlessly played and called forth enthusiasm of the keenest sort from the thousands of persons in the audience.

Among those from this vicinity, who attended last night's concert, were: Mrs. Harry A. Pattison and Miss Helen Pattison, of Livingston; Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Bloch, of Hillsdale; Mr. and Mrs. J. Sanderson Hand, of Stuyvesant Falls; Mrs. Ernest P. Hoes, of Kinderhook; Mrs. Thomas B. Morrissey, of Valatie; Mr. and Mrs. Charles P. Heermance, Miss Anne Heermance, Mrs. Philip Heermance, of Claverack, and their guest, Mrs. Albert Meyer, of St. Louis, Mo.; and the Rev. and Mrs. Charles B. Thompson, Mrs. Charles B. Benson, Mrs. O. H. Bradley, Dr. and Mrs. Sherwood V. Whitbeck, Miss Mary G. Whitbeck, Mrs. Frank B. Holsapple, Miss Dorothy Holsapple, Mrs. Wendover Neefus, Mrs. Homer B. Armstrong, Miss Lulu Abel, Miss Kathryn Abel, Miss Ethel Tyler, Miss Viola Belcher, Gerald S. Bliss, William E. Kline, and Theodore H. Kline, of this city.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

AUG 4 - 1939

Tanglewood Festival Under Way

Koussevitzky Given Ovation at Opening Performance

An audience of 5,700 rose to pay glowing tribute to Serge Koussevitzky as he took his position before the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the opening of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, last night. The tribute progressed to an ovation as the sharply differentiated numbers of the first program were set forth. At the conclusion of the concert cheers and applause continued for five minutes, bringing Dr. Koussevitzky back to the platform again and again and the orchestra, beaming with appreciation, to its feet to accept the heartfelt approval so rousingly expressed.

The opening Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G Major of Bach, for string orchestra, revealed to the fullest extent the perfection of detail and expressive mastery which has made the orchestra an American institution. The intricate polyphonic development, so clearly set forth, gave an especial sense of the integration and solidity of the work. The infinite diversity and richness in contrapuntal imitation of the first and last movements, impregnated with Bach's joyous spiritual exultation, were magnificent. For last night's presentation, the arrangement included the Sinfonia from the Cantata "Christus Lag in Todesbanden," in place of the two transitional chords originally forming the link between the opening and concluding developments.

The "Scheherazade," of Rimsky-Korsakov, a symphonic suite after "The Thousand Nights and a Night," effected colorful contrast. The composer expressed an aversion for the seeking of a too definite program in these pictures from the Arabian Nights, seeking to give the hearer an impression on an Oriental narrative of numerous and varied fairy-tale wonders. The sub-titles, however, received recognition last night, for "The Sea and Sinbad's Ship" was augmented by flashes of lightning through the dark night outside the music shed and heavy thunder. "The Story of the Kalandar Prince" and "The Young Prince and the Young Princess" proceeded through rain clattering on the roof and deafening thunderclaps. Dr. Koussevitzky was forced to call a halt before he could go on with the finale.

During intermission the weather cleared and the Brahms' Symphony No. 1 in C Minor was presented without interruption. There was a period of 14 years between Brahms' first sketch of this symphony and its completion. The composer approaches the modernists in his independent, formidable harmonic treatment. This rich harmonic development was exquisitely set forth, from the first clashing dissonances to the magnificent climax.

The second program will be given Saturday at 8:30 p. m. and will include Piston's Concerto for Orchestra; Sibelius' Symphony No. 5 in E Flat Major, and Beethoven's Symphony No. 7 in A Major. The Sunday afternoon program, August 7, at 3:30 o'clock is arousing widespread interest in the inclusion of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," an Orchestral fairy tale for children. The score was completed in Moscow in 1936 and the first performance in America was by the Boston Symphony in Symphony Hall, March 25, 1938, Prokofieff conducting. Richard Hale, narrator for the original performance in this country, will again be heard in the role at the Berkshire Festival. The Concerto in D Major for stringed instruments by C. P. E. Bach and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4 in F Minor will also be included on the program.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 4 - 1939

Opening Berkshire Festival

Springfield Union Photo

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, leader of Boston Symphony Orchestra, calls to his musicians to acknowledge applause which greeted the first number of the opening concert of the Sixth Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge last night.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 4 - 1939

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Opens Triumphantly Despite Rain

Stockbridge, Aug. 4—Rain—driving, torrential, Berkshire rain, which made the trustees of the Berkshire Symphonic festival decide to build the huge shell at Tanglewood to replace the leaky tent—gave the structure its first real test last night as the sixth annual festival opened. The rain made Dr Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra halt after one of the movements in the Rimsky-Korsakov "Scheherazade" for about 15 minutes, but no one was wet.

That was more than could be said two years ago when the elements provided a tempestuous background at an all-Wagner concert, and the rain leaked through the huge tent that then furnished the festival with its summer home. A storm which broke and stopped before the concert, kept many away, but virtually all of the 5700 seats in the 40-foot-high shell were filled when Dr Koussevitzky began the Bach "Brandenburg Concert Number 3 in G Major." A traffic jam that made entrance to the grounds exasperatingly slow prevented a large number from hearing the first selection, but those in charge of traffic arrangements promise that this will not happen tomorrow or Sunday when the second and third concerts in this first series are held. The second series will begin next Thursday and will also have concerts on the following Saturday and Sunday.

The thunderstorm which broke sharply with forked lightnings during the Rimsky-Korsakov number spoiled the more delicate passages, but gave to the crashing, brassy, eastern climaxes a barbarity and sonority which the composer himself might have welcomed.

The audience was particularly good natured and took the storm in good part, though there were those who jumped at the proximity of the lightning and a few timorous souls who lifted unneeded umbrellas inside the shed when the rain thundered down on the roof.

The parking grounds have been drained since last year and despite the downpour, those who returned to their parked cars expecting to have their wheels grind deeper into the mud were pleasantly surprised at the good results. The erection of the huge lighting tower also made exit easier.

As for the program itself, it was on the conservative side, with the moderns yet to come. The metronomic measures of the Brandenburg afforded the strings a beautiful opportunity to sing, undisturbed by the elements. It was a welcome and joyous choice to open the series.

The Rimsky-Korsakov, despite interruptions, made an excellent and exotic addition halfway between the Bach and the Brahm First symphony which closed the program. Koussevitzky leaves much, as the composer desired, to the imagination of the listener, but he provided the complete and stunning stuff of which the "Thousand and One Nights" are made.

The Brahms, greatest of the first born symphonies, was given its usual thrilling, intense reading by Dr Koussevitzky. At the end came a great ovation for the orchestra and for the director, and though the hour was late because of the storm, the audience remained to applaud again and again.

During the evening, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival, told the audience of the desire of the trustees for $60,000 more for needed improvements, notably shutters for the side of the shed that those along the edges might not get wet and that the wind might not interfere with the music. Present also for a word was his excellency, Norman H. Davis, ambassador-at-large for many years.

The concert Saturday night at 8.30 will include the Piston "Concerto"; the Sibelius "Symphony number 5," and the Beethoven "Symphony Number 7."

J. D. D.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 4 - 1939

Berkshire Festival

The fact that the Berkshire Festival, now in its sixth year, is an old story to Berkshire residents can in no way dull the inherent brilliance of the performances and the magnitude and importance of the undertaking. Fortunately this can be brought home to Berkshire auditors when they happen to sit next to strangers who are hearing the Tanglewood concerts for the first time. It is then possible to re-assess the Festival's importance and re-capture vicariously the initial thrill which this mighty undertaking is capable of creating among music-lovers.

The wisdom of undertaking a financial campaign and erecting a large shed for the concerts was proved last night when the precipitous downpour drummed on the stout roof almost as noisily as the famous thunderstorm of 1937 beat upon the huge circus tent. Whereas, however, in 1937 the storm of tropical intensity eventually seeped through the canvas and sprayed through the seams, last night's storm of equal intensity left the huge main audience dry and unconcerned for its safety.

It is true that the clatter of the rain last night caused a delay between sections of an orchestral work and to a degree marred the audience's conception of the Rimsky-Korsakoff opus as a whole. However, the likelihood of having a rainfall of such intensity (it seemed a veritable Niagara) except on widely separated occasions is remote. One would have wished that a rainfall of normal or average intensity, whatever that might be, had fallen that the shed could have been tested under such conditions. Undoubtedly, except for the finicky, the music would have sounded as perfect as under ideal conditions.

But even though the finicky should be a minority which needs listening to, (something to be doubted), the average Festival-goer does not buy tickets to the Tanglewood concerts with the impression that the atmosphere and conditions under the roof will be as well ordered as during concerts at Symphony or Carnegie Halls. Obviously, it would be financially impossible to erect a standard concert hall at Tanglewood. But even though the money were available the spirit of the Festival would be largely nullified thereby and the careful blending of beauty of natural surrounding with the beauty of great music would be destroyed.

To drink of the perfect blend achieved at Tanglewood when the stars are alight and the night air is sweet with the essence of the Berkshires and soul-filling music magnificently played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is something for which thousands are willing cheerfully to take their chances—even though Nature, on occasion, chooses to indulge in caprice.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

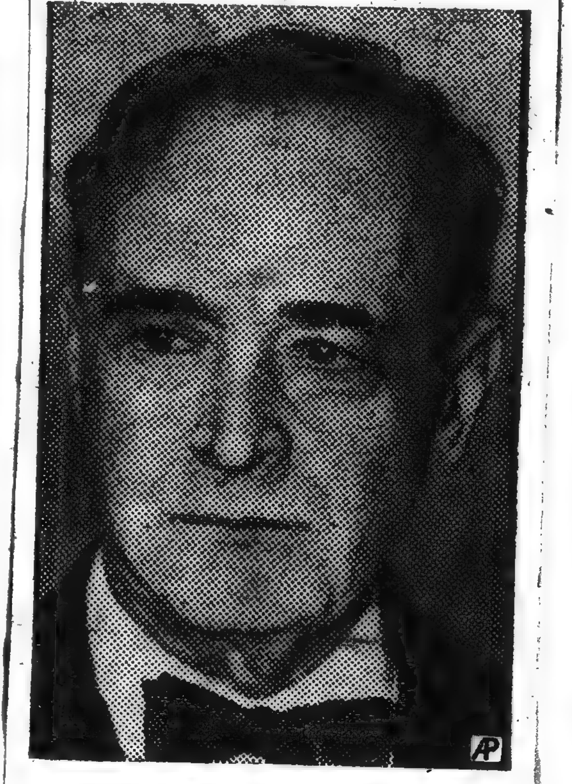
AUG 4 - 1939

Berkshire Festival Opens with a Large Audience Last Night

Thunder and Lightning Vie With Powers of Symphony Orchestra Before Nearly 6000 People

Thunder and lightning vied with the powers of Rimsky-Korsakoff, Brahms and the Boston Symphony orchestra last night as the sixth Berkshire symphonic festival opened before an audience of nearly 6,000 persons, assembled in the huge Tanglewood shed near Stockbridge.

The storm held back its punches until Serge Koussevitzky had conducted his men through Bach's third Brandenburg concerto and 15 minutes of the "Scheherazade" suite. Up to this point, as hundreds of late arrivers poured into the shed, the music had everything its way. Without using its full force, the orchestra had worked smoothly and surely, obviously ready to meet greater tests of its strength.



DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

Suddenly, the storm hit away with both fists. It struck with dominant violence and forced its opponent into retreat. The music's halt was brief, however, and its comeback was certain and measured. After being stopped in its tracks for about 10 minutes, it returned warily to the battle.

The storm had shot its bolt. It was to have moments of advantage thereafter, notably when First Violinist Richard Burgin was the music's sole motivating force, but it did not gain the victory.

In bringing the symphonic suite to a close, the orchestra was magnificent. It took delight in its ascendancy and in the color and vigor of the music. Such vitality, one thought, could not be maintained to the end. Yet even greater achievements were to come.

Brahms' First Symphony was a splendid medium for memorable music making, and the superb group capitalized fully on its opportunities.

It brought its evening of triumph to a glorious climax, in approval of which the audience rose to applaud long and loud and shout "Bravo."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 4 - 1939

RESORTS CROWDED IN BERKSHIRES AS FESTIVAL STARTS

Midsummer Peak Reached While House and Hotel Guests Pour in for First of Symphony Concerts

Special Dispatch to The Republican

Berkshire Hills, Mass., Aug., 3—Midsummer festivities are at the peak in the Berkshire Hills for the sixth annual festival of music by the Boston Symphony orchestra, which opened tonight at Tanglewood midway between Lenox and Stockbridge. Visitors are crowding hotels and taverns in all the resort towns and there are many house parties.

With Mrs William Penn Cresson at Chesterwood, Stockbridge, for the first series of concerts are Mr and Mrs Melzar M. Whittlesey, Mr and Mrs Paul Manship, Capt John H. Gibbons, United States navy, retired, and Mrs Gibbons, John W. Begg and Sidney Waugh of New York, and Laurence B. Fletcher of Boston.

Lenox club arrivals include Mr and Mrs Pierre Jay of New York, Mr and Mrs Frederic B. Pratt of Glen Cove, L. I., and Mr and Mrs Ernest B. Dane of Boston. Mrs George Otis Rockwood had a dinner party at the club tonight in compliment to her daughter, Princess Diane R. Eristavi.

With Miss Louisa G. Ludlow of Ludlow cottage, Lenox, were her aunts, Princess Constantin Toumanoff and Mrs Maximilian F. Bonzano of New York.

Mr and Mrs Lydig Hoyt, Mr and Mrs Owen Winston and Rev and Mrs John W. Suter, Jr., are with Mr and Mrs Joseph Warren Burden at the Drake cottage, Lenox, for the festival.

Mrs Henry Hadley Arrives

Mrs Henry Hadley, widow of the composer, who was the founder of the Berkshire Music festival, is at Red Lion inn, Stockbridge, with Miss Amelia Gibson of Stamford, Ct.; Mrs Edwin S. Mills of Evanston, Ill., and Miss Jessie King of Melbourne, Australia. Other Red Lion arrivals include Mrs John H. Janeway of New York, Mrs Ulysses S. Grant, 3d., and Mr and Mrs Edward W. Root of Clinton, N. Y.

Mrs Charles C. Griswold has as guests at Hillhome, Stockbridge, Dr and Mrs Dixon Ryan Fox, Mr and Mrs John B. Hunter and Mrs Herman A. Kelley.

With Mrs George Grenville Merrill at La Chaumieré, Stockbridge, are Dr and Mrs George G. Merrill, Jr.

Mr and Mrs John D. Kennedy have as guests at Stonecover farm, Lenox, Mr and Mrs Edward M. McIlvain and Hans von Herwarth of New York.

Visiting Mr and Mrs Thomas H. Blodgett at Great Pine farm, Great Barrington, for the festival are Mr and Mrs Walter S. Kyle, Misses Margaret and Louise Kyle of Cincinnati, O. Mrs Kyle is Mr Blodgett's sister.

In the box with Miss Mabel Choate were Mrs John C. Phillips of Boston and daughter, Mrs W. J. Schuyler Watts of New York.

Mr and Mrs John C. Johansen have as guests at Weyborne Hill, Stockbridge, Mrs Robert Worthington and Miss Edith Van Buskirk of New York.

In the box with Mr and Mrs Samuel Gilbert Colt of Pittsfield were their daughters, Mrs K. White of Boston and Miss Judith Colt, and Mr and Mrs Samuel G. Colt, Jr.

Mr and Mrs D. Percy Morgan are entertaining at Boulder farm, Stockbridge, Mr and Mrs Edward J. Matthews of New York and Miss Constance Bradlee of Boston.

Mrs Carl Goldmark and daughter, Mrs Jaros of New York, are with Mr and Mrs Edwin T. Rice at the Rood cottage, Stockbridge.

La Guardia Coming Later

Mayor and Mrs Fiorello H. La Guardia have accepted an invitation from A. Newbold Morris to be the guests of Mr and Mrs Morris at Brookhurst, Lenox, for the second series of festival concerts. Mr Morris is president of the New York city council.

Mr and Mrs William Felton Barrett had a large dinner party at Sky farm, North Egremont, tonight for their festival guests.

Box guests of Mr and Mrs Heaton I. Treadway tonight were Miss Anne and Royal Treadway and Mr and Mrs George E. Horne of Pinehurst, N. C.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 4 - 1939

'BERKSHIRE HILLS,' 360-PAGE VOLUME, RELEASED TOMORROW

"The Berkshire Hills," newest publication of the federal writers' project in Massachusetts, will be officially released tomorrow it was announced today.

A cloth-bound book of some 360 pages, containing 27 maps and many photographic illustrations, the volume describes every city and town in Berkshire county. The lakes, valleys and mountains of the Berkshire region are covered in detail, as well as its folk tales and Indian legends, its sleepy villages where square dances, "Town Meeting Day" and the little red school house still flourish. The informality of this guide permits also the inclusion of numerous anecdotes on its various residents and visitors from John Sergeant, Nathaniel Hawthorne and Herman Melville to Grover Cleveland, Serge Koussevitzky and Norman Davis.

The book is sponsored by the Berkshire Hills Conference, inc., and the national distribution given it by the publishers will undoubtedly lend added impetus to the growth of the Berkshire area as both a summer and winter vacation land for Americans from all parts of the nation.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT 9B

AUG 4 - 1939

Stockbridge Festival Gets Under Way

Bluebloods Come in Jalopies to Hear Storm Help Dr. Koussevitzky and Boston Orchestra

BY T. H. PARKER.

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 3.—You are always sure of your money's worth up here at the Berkshire Festivals. You may be completely impervious to the music of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but still you get your money's worth.

Tonight, for example at the opening of the sixth annual season of these concerts, the Festival had its traditional storm. They come so regularly each year that there is reason to believe that the management orders them along with the programs.

It never got here more appropriately than it did tonight. The orchestra had just gotten to the concluding movement for which the title reads: "The Sea; the Ship Goes To Pieces On The Rocks." The storm let loose. Dr. Koussevitzky never has played the section to more realistic setting. It was the real ticket all right.

As a matter of fact, the storm had played a doubleheader, and an hour before concert-time had rampaged over the hills of Stockbridge. Considerately enough, however it stopped in time not to mar the grand parade around the tent which the thousands of cars provide as they crowd into the grounds of Tanglewood.

Aristocracy In Jalopies.

The customs of the natives however, are somewhat different from those upon the Hartford Parnassus. Those of us who can, rush up to the Bushnell's Portals in our most-Duesenberg equipage. Not so in Stockbridge; here, the aristrocracy travels in the most ancient conveyances it can afford to keep up, marvelous vintage cars of such early date that you suspect their passengers were probably born in them. Not streamlined, but toplofty in the grand manner, able to take a high silk hat with room to spare.

Nor do the tenants of these rolling manses plume themselves over much. They arrive in an aura of elderly venerability. Many hundreds of young lads and lasses stroll along in the grandly relaxing informality of sports clothes.

It's all a part of the festival atmosphere, the storm, the informality the intermission lunge to the refreshments tent. The simon pures do not come here in any great numbers. The patronage is for music plus atmosphere.

Familiar Triad.

Still, the simon pures would have had nothing to complain about tonight, for Dr. Koussevitzky and his orchestra launched the series of six concerts in its customary burst of brilliance. There were three works heard, the familiar Koussevitzkian Triad, this time Bach's Third Brandenburg Concerto, the Rimsky-Korsokov "Scheherazade" suite, and the Brahms First Symphony. The magnificent strings of the Boston made marvelous going of the Bach. Especially the violas, celli and bass fiddles. They kept up a rumbling cascade of sound and I could not but think of water rushing through a rocky gorge. Dr. Koussevitzky's Haydn is pure spun sparkling glass, but his Bach is carved from the flesh, broad, intense and in the adafio section of the third, almost tragic.

'Scheherazade' Fireworks.

But it was in the "Scheherazade" that the renowned virtuosity of this orchestra and its conductor was heard in its greatest flashes. For his playing of the Modern, Dr. Koussevitzky has long been held unrivalled, and tonight's performance of the Rimsky work was just another leaf on the wreath. Every possible kind of musical showmanship to wring the last tantalizing sound out of the suite, he employed last night, subtleties and smashing contrasts fired point black. The fanfares section was read, and performed with such fantastic beauty that you almost wanted the concert to end right there. It almost seemed that any more would have been too much.

There was more, however, and after the intermission allowed the audience to catch its breath, they settled down to one of Dr. Koussevitzky's full blown readings of Brahms. He has given us so much of this composer of late that there is hardly anything really need be said about last night's performance other than it was handsomely played, lush and magnificently resonant.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 4 - 1939

Symphonic Festival Triumph Despite Storm's Interruption

Hartford Is Largly Represented At Splendid Program by Koussevitzky at 'Tanglewood'

By CARL E. LINDSTROM
Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass.—"Some of you remember that two years ago we had a hundred thousand dollar thunder storm. Tonight we have had a sixty thousand dollar one!"

Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, thus addressed 6,000 persons in the "Tanglewood" music shed after the elements had once again interrupted a Boston Symphony concert, this time the opening event of the season.

She asked contributions of any amount "from one dollar to ten thousand to put up the shutters," meaning the projected roll curtains for the new pavilion which was inaugurated last year after a disastrous storm washed out a concert in the huge tent where the festival had previously been sheltered. These two are the only storms during 16 concerts played here by the Boston Orchestra.

Norman H. Davis also spoke, calling attention to the tremendous growth of the festival from a community affair into an attraction of nation-wide interest and significance.

There were Hartford faces on all sides.

Thunder Mars Effects

It was the Scheherezade Suite of Rimsky-Korsakoff this time which was dismembered by a torrential downpour with lightning crackling among the hill-tops. Dr. Koussevitzky had paused after the "Story of the Kalendar Prince" as the portents gathered, but there was no applause, the audience obviously wishing him to go on. He did so, but before the "Young Prince and Princess" was completed the rain was sweeping in sheets from the eaves and the thunder completely marring the musical effects.

The proceedings came to a full stop. Lights were turned on and hundreds of people who had been standing outside crowded down into the aisles. After fully ten minutes during which nature's rumpus was at its height, Koussevitzky went into the flaming finale and hurled his own thunderbolts about like any other Jove. His Scheherezade would have been exciting enough anyway; under the excitement of the situation it made the spine tingle.

There was a long intermission during which the aisles were hopelessly jammed since no one could leave the pavilion. As usual with Stockbridge audiences everyone was good-humored, gay, appreciative. Perhaps some worried a bit about the parking lot which, in spite of a careful going-over with gravel to prevent a recurrence of previous quagmires, had showed signs of softening up in the earlier evening rain.

When Things Were Right

The major part of the program, the Brahms Symphony in C minor and Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G major were unmarred by the storm. The string department of the Boston Orchestra was heard in the latter in all its puissance and perfection. The memorable thing about the music of the evening was individual excellence from practically every section. There were matchless horn solos, oboe tones of such purity that they had more the character of the flute rather than the double reeds, marvelous trombone playing and a word might even be spoken of the virtuosity of the triangle.

It has been said before that this is a virtuoso orchestra. No one knows it better than its conductor and his interpretations are inclined to lean toward display. The songful second theme of the Symphony's last movement was taken at an unusually high tempo, as was indeed the whole movement. No one, however, makes this C minor Symphony more arresting than does Koussevitzky and therein lies his complete justification.

Beauties of Concerto

As evidence that Koussevitzky also has his other style may be cited the chaste and classical beauties of his Brandenburg Concerto. The sinfonia, taken from the cantata, Christ lag in Todesbanden, was a superb expression of attenuated lyricism. Perhaps this too is virtuosity of a kind, but it is chosen here to define virtuosity as mastery of means to an end. Koussevitzky's genius is the recreation of effect rather than of ideas, which may after all be the surest way to arrive at a composer's intentions.

The news of last night's affair was the storm but it was an eloquent commentary on the spirit of the Berkshire Festival to note that at the end of the tremendous ovation which Koussevitzky received at the close, people left the shelter talking about music rather than of getting their feet wet.

Boston Evening Transcript AUGUST 4, 1939 (

With Patter of Rain

Thus the Sixth Berkshire Festival Began, As Koussevitzky Led the Boston Orchestra

By STEPHEN SOMERVELL

TANGLEWOOD, Aug. 3—A thunderstorm accompanied by torrential rain marred slightly the opening concert of the sixth Berkshire Symphonic Festival tonight.

After days of ideal summer weather, their warmth tempered by pleasantly cool breezes, the long-awaited day of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first concert was marked by sultry, humid weather, oppressive to body and mind. In the afternoon, storm clouds gathered threateningly, were dispelled by a stiff breeze, and reassembled. Distant thunder rumbled; lightning flickered. To over 5000 visitors from every part of the United States and even from abroad, and scarcely less to the inhabitants of Lenox, Pittsfield, Stockbridge and other Berkshire towns, to whom the Festival has become a matter of regional pride, no question seemed more important than the weather. At 6 o'clock the storm broke. In less than an hour it ceased, but in the middle of the first half of the concert it returned in full fury.

It was against just such a contingency as this that the new music shed, austerely simple yet harmoniously proportioned, was built. Two years ago a terrific thunderstorm all but made a fiasco of the concerts of the Berkshire Festival and simultaneously the fate of the circus tent that had been thought adequate up to that time. The shed was built in time for the following year's concerts, but never until tonight had it been put to the test. Among other questions that had given rise to some worried speculation was whether or not the patter of rain on the roof would be magnified acoustically to annoying proportions. Well, not only did this fear prove to have been justified, but at the height of the downpour, the roof even admitted a thin spray of rain, and at least one raised umbrella was observed.

No Strolling

The pleasures of strolling, during the intermission, over the magnificent grounds of the house in which Hawthorne once lived (much against his will, for he hated Berkshire), and enjoyment of the splendid view across Makheenac — these were, of course, precluded by the inclement weather. But it is hoped that better fortune may attend the second concert on Saturday.

Dr. Koussevitzky's program tonight opened with Bach's Third Brandenburg Concerto in G major. A clean, invigorating music this, and eminently suitable to the display of the brilliance, precision and warm sonority of the string sections of the orchestra, had the conductor this in mind. The closing and principal work of the evening was Brahms's First Symphony in C minor—music of another order, ardent, impassioned, grandiose, lyrical in the highly personal manner of the great romantics: music of a kind, moreover, on which Dr. Koussevitzky most richly lavishes his own superlative gift of emotional evocation and re-creation.

As for the work which intervened between these of Bach and Brahms — Rimsky - Korsakov's "Scheherazade" — most music lovers of the present generation agree in finding this a rather tiresome piece of theatrical exoticism. But tonight's accompaniment of deafening thunderclaps, the blinding flashes of lightening that penetrated the music shed's open sides and the loud hiss and patter of quasi-tropical rain added immeasurably to the effectiveness of Rimsky-Korsakov's music, if it didn't completely resuscitate it.

Rainy Melodrama

Dr. Koussevitzky was compelled to pause twice during his performance of this work, once when the first flurry of rain drove into the shed those members of the audience who had been listening from without, and again later at the storm's most melodramatic climax. But he finally carried it to an almost inaudible conclusion despite the elemental uproar with which he and his orchestra were forced to compete. His admiring audience rewarded him with an ovation that paralleled the one with which he had been greeted at the outset of this unusual concert. The quality of the performance throughout the concert was, under the circumstances, remarkable. Such flaws of tone as were audible were no more than the natural rebellion of string and woodwind instruments against climatic conditions that have always roused them to protest, and always will.

It was, curiously enough, solely against "Scheherazade" that the storm spent its force. It was in the ensuing calm and the fragrance of wet grass and trees that Brahms's C minor Symphony was played and played with an exquisite balance, a delicate lyricism, a heroic and noble grandeur, which have never before seemed so completely achieved. Such judgments are inescapably subjective; due credit must be given to the fragrance of grass and trees after rain, and the emotional appeasement that followed the storm.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

AUG 4 - 1939

THE BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Blest if this Musical Academy which Dr. Koussevitzky proposes to start in connection with the Berkshire Music Festival at Lenox, Massachusetts, next year doesn't sound like the real thing!

Students at the Academy are not to get a degree or a medal or even a diploma. All they get is music. They soak it in through practice and daily contact with the best talent in the field. They can join—with proper qualifications, of course—either the choral or the orchestral groups. Twice a day for six weeks they sing or play. Their instructors will be members of the Boston Symphony—incidentally a pleasantly remunerative six weeks for a member of the Boston Symphony.

They will have the privilege of attending some of that great orchestra's rehearsals, and seeing how big conductors rebuke delinquents and get their effects. "Tempo! tempo!" shouts Koussevitsky. (We've read). "Cantare!" cries Toscanini. "If the violinist who keeps playing B for B flat does it once more," remarked Victor Herbert, "I shall point him out." All this is most illuminating.

There will be a minimum of lectures on Sundays and Saturdays, but for the most part the academicians will soak in their music along with the heady Berkshire air and sunshine, which is the best way in the world to "get" music. Unless, of course, you're a genius. Then you have to work like the devil.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
GLEN RIDGE, N. J.
WEEKLY PAPER

AUG 4 -1939

LOCAL ATTENDANCE FOR SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL

Attending the Berkshire festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Stockbridge, Mass., are Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Wiersma of 455 Franklin street. This annual outdoor music festival started yesterday and continues through Sunday.

Mrs. Wiersma recently returned from Willimantic Camp Grand, a summer camp operated by the Methodist Church at Willimantic, Conn., where she assisted with the music during her week's stay.

94

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HERALD
[illegible]
AUG - 1939

Berkshire Music Festival Opened At "Tanglewood"

Serge Koussevitzky assembled the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's music shed at "Tanglewood" on Route 183 between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., Wednesday for a rehearsal in anticipation of the opening of the sixth annual Festival, which took place last night night at 8:30 o'clock.

The specially built shed, seating 5700, is located on the 200-acre estate presented in 1937 to the orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, Mass. This will be the fourth successive Berkshire festival at which the orchestra has played and the second in the splendid new acoustical shed which, after its inauguration last Summer, was declared to have remarkable properties for hearing and comfortable accommodation.

The programs are those of Winter symphony concerts. The performances are of a symphonic standard consistant with the famous orchestra here assembled in full personnel under its illustrious conductor. To hear a Boston Symphony concert in incomparable midsummer surroundings is a rare and unforgettable experience.

The advance demand for season and single tickets is greater than it has ever been for a previous festival series. There is every indication of capacity audiences for each of the six concerts. The concerts will be continued tomorrow night and Sunday afternoon of next week.

Dr. Koussevitzky opened the 1939 Festival with Bach's Third Brandenburg Concerto String Orchestra. Rimsky-Korsakov5s "Scheherazade" was on the same program, which concluded with the Frst Symphony of Brahms in C minor.

The second program, tomorrow night, will open with the orchestral concerto of Walter Piston, the American composer, and will continue with tht Fifth Sypmhony of Sibeliuc, and end with the Seventh by Beethoven. The program on Sunday afternoon will feature the Fourth Symphony of Tohaiq ovsky, and also include Prokofieff's orchestral fairy tale, "Peter and the Wolf" — Richard Hale acting as narrator. Emanuel Bach's orchestral concerto in D major will open the program.

Second Week's Programs

The programs for the second week will be as follows: Thursday evening, August 10: Beethoven's Second Symphony, Strauss' "Thus Spake Zarathustra," and Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition," in Ravel's orchestration. The Saturday program, August 12, will include Haydn's Symphony in B flat, No. 102, Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring," and excerpts from Wagner's "Flying Dutchman," "Meistersinger," "Lohengrin" and "Tanhauser." The final program on Sunday afternoon, August 13, will comprise Schumann's Fourth Symphony, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," Ravel's "La Valse," and the Second Symphony of Sibelius.

For information about tickets and accommodations, address the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Stockbridge, Mass.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE
AUG 4 - 1939

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Was Opened Last Evening.

The sixth annual Berkshire music festival was opened last evening at "Tanglewood," between Lenox and Stockbridge by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the leadership of its famous conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The program last evening began with Bach's Third Brandenburg Concerto for string orchestra. Other works performed were Rimsky-Korsakoff's fantastic "Scheherazade" suite and the sturdy Brahms Symphony in C-Minor..

The second program for Saturday, Aug. 5, will open with the orchestral concerto of Walter Piston, the American composer, and will continue with the Fifth Symphony of Sibelius, and end with the Seventh by Beethoven. The program of the following Sunday afternoon, Aug. 6, will feature the Fourth Symphony of Tschaikowsky, and also include Prokofieff's orchestral fairy tale, "Peter and the Wolf,"—Richard Hale acting as narrator. Emanuel Bach's orchestral concerto in D major will open the program.

The programs for the second week will be as follows: Thursday evening, Aug. 10: Beethoven's Second Symphony, Strauss' "Thus Spake Zarathrustra," and Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition," in Ravel's orchestration. The Saturday program, Aug. 12, will include Haydn's Symphony in B flat, No. 102, Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring," and excerpts from Wagner's "Flying Dutchman," "Meistersinger," "Lohengrin" and "Tannhauser." The final program on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 13, will comprise Schumann's Fourth Symphony, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," Ravel's "La Valse," and the Second Symphony of Sibelius.,

---

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
AUG 4 - 1939

AUDIENCE OF 5200 APPEARS FOR FESTIVAL

Rumble of Thunder Accompanies Opening of Annual Berkshire Event

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 3—To the accompaniment of brilliant flashes of lightening and the rumble of thunder, the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival opened last night as an audience estimated at 5200 rose to greet Dr. Serge Koussevitzky as he strode onto the stage of the music shed.

There were empty seats in the huge structure, but that was probably due to the terrific downpour which preceded the concert by an hour or more and caused many people to arrive too late for the opening number. The audience one sees at this festival is extremely interesting. They come from every part of the country and voice their approval of the music without restraint. They dress in everything from full evening garb to sports clothes, and one young woman arrived in a riding habit.

They come to hear the music and many of them have attended all the festivals to date, we were told. Officials indicate that practically every seat will be taken for the six concerts. One notes many improvements on the grounds in the shape of drainage and floodlighting and the steel work of the music shed has been painted.

As we write, the rain has started again with renewed fury. Coupled with the lightning and thunder it reminds one of the concert three years ago when a program of music by Wagner could scarcely be heard because of the noise of the rain on the tent roof. The thunder was so heavy it was necessary to pause some minutes before the final movement of the "Scheherazade." A normal rain would not affect the hearing in the shed.

Dr. Koussevitzky provided rich fare for this first concert, including on the program the third Brandenburg concerto for string orchestra by Bach; Rimsky Korsakoff's "Scheherazade" and the First Symphony in C Minor by Brahms.

One hears the Boston Symphony players at their best during this festival. They are rested; their labors at the pops and on the esplanade are over, and the sojourn at Tanglewood is in the nature of a well-earned fortnight of recreation. They have also the inspiration coming from audiences numbering thousands, as well as the leadership of one who is heart and soul in sympathy with the aims of the festival, his dream come to realization.

Thus tonight one heard superlative playing. There are few greater tests for a string ensemble than a Brandenburg concerto. They were the earliest achievements of Bach in the field of music for the larger instrumental bodies. Listening to them, one is not surprised at the heroic stature of the works which came later. In the concerto heard tonight there is strikingly lovely music, buoyant, vigorous and moving. One could only marvel at the precision of the ensemble as these virtuosi of the strings illuminated the tapestry of tone which Bach had woven. No matter how intricate the design, there was no blurring of the noble line.

On Rimsky Korsakoff's "Scheherazade," Dr. Koussevitzky lavished this genius for attaining exotic and thrilling effects. Under the magic of his baton, one lived for a while in the East of mosques and minarets, so graphically related in the tales of the voyage of Sinbad the sailor. Conductor and players appeared to revel in the color and movement of the music.

The four movements of the suite are: Tale of the Two Kalendars, the Prince and the Princess, the Festival of Bagdad, and the Ship That Goes to Pieces on the Rock Surmounted by a Bronze Warrior.

Audience Entranced

With a modern orchestra providing an inexhaustible variety of color, the story moved on and on like a gigantic musical kaleidoscope. The audience was entranced and the conductor and his men were called many times to acknowledge continued applause.

When Schumann, as a critic, discovered Brahms, and revealed him to the world in a famous article, he spoke of him as a creative artist who sprang forth fully armed, like Minerva from the head of Jove. Surely this characterization must fit the man who wrote a first symphony, so monumental, so epical in spirit, so complex in structure, so essentially dramatic.

The opening measures of the first movement provide some of the grandest music ever written for orchestra. There is something hypnotic in that striving phrase heard over the pounding drums, a phrase which is the basic motive of the symphony. The storm and stress of the opening movement was magnificently conveyed with a surge and drive to the performance which we remember hearing on few occasions.

Sheer beauty of tone marked the playing of the second movement with its note of mingled pathos and exaltation. The third movement, an allegretto, a departure original with Brahms from the customary symphonic form, was played with a deft and charming touch. The somber reverie of the opening of the final movement, inaugurated by curious pizzicato passages of the strings and outbursts, of full orchestra, provide some of the finest passages to be heard in the symphony.

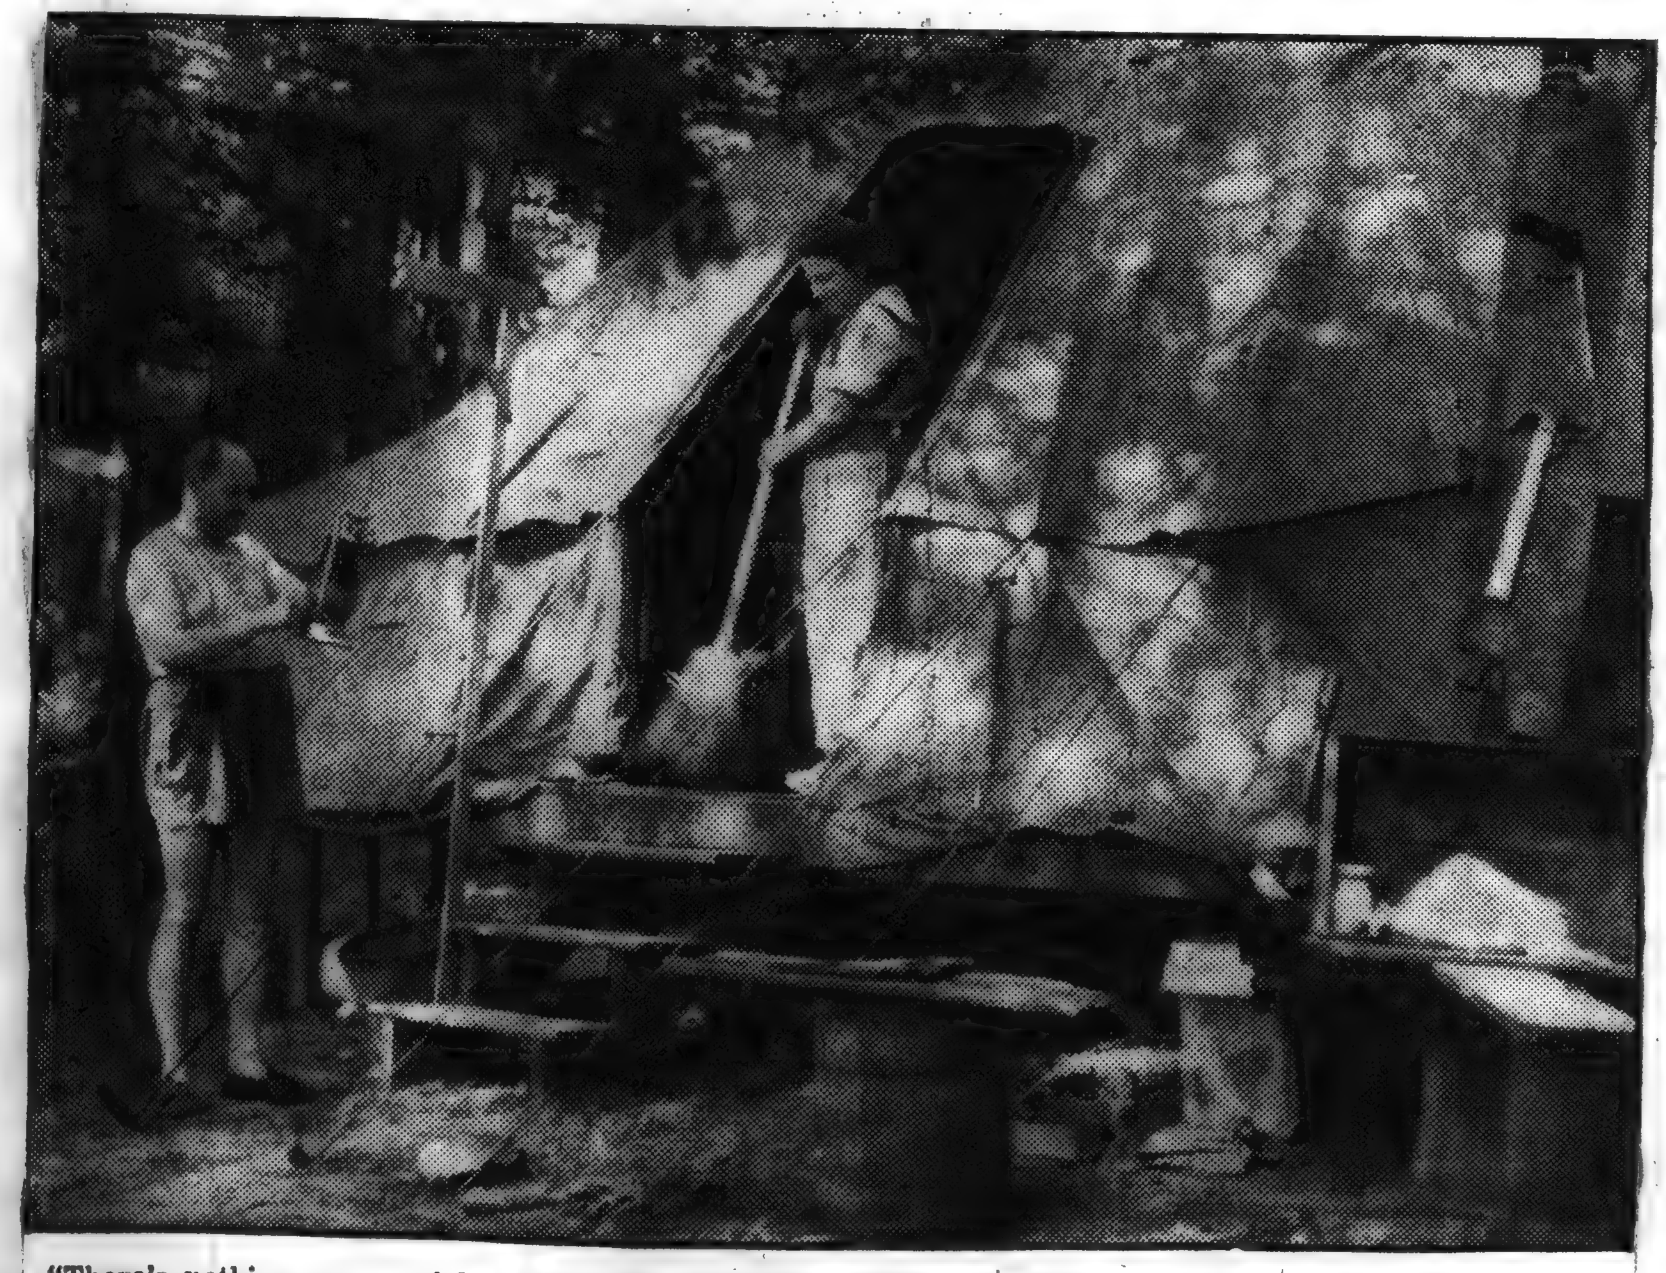
Prelude, they are, to the thrilling call of the French horn. Much has been written concerning the source of the horn theme. The best explanation seems to be found in a letter which Brahms wrote Clara Schumann on her birthday. The letter contains in notation the theme incorporated eight years later in the symphony. Under the theme Brahms wrote: "Thus blew the Alpine horn today."

The finale was a magnificent achievement, one which will remain long in the memorics of those who heard it. For it is not every night that one hears this heroic finale accompanied by thunder and lightning. The audience made known its approval with long applause punctuated with shouts and bravos, all of which Dr. Koussevitzky shared with his men.

The second concert Saturday night will include an orchestral concerto by Walter Piston, American composer, the Fifth Symphony by Sibelius and the Seventh Symphony by Beethoven.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
AUG 4 - 1939

Musicians Camp Out in Berkshires



"There's nothing so peaceful as life in the open," says Rene Voisin, trumpet player with the Boston Symphony Orchestra now playing at Tanglewood, Stockbridge. Mr. Voisin, like several other players, has pitched camp on the shores of Lake Makeenac near-by instead of taking quarters in a hotel during the Symphonic Festival. In the big army tent the Voisins have all the comforts of home, many of these comforts having come all the way from France. Mrs. Voisin has a portable oven of the type used in a rotisserie in which she prepares the family meals. The Voisins are pictured cleaning house. Rene adjusting the lantern for the night, and Anne Marie sweeping.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
AUG 4 - 1939

HUNDREDS OF CHILDREN TO ATTEND SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA REHEARSAL

Hundreds of Berkshire county public high school boys and girls will be in the audience of 3,000 attending the rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Tanglewood music shed Saturday morning as guests of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. They will come from practically every community in the county. The balance of the audience will include members and patrons of the Festival No tickets are sold for this rehearsal nor for the one August 12. The rehearsals were planned by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, as a privilege for Festival members and patrons.

The children are coming as a result of the work done in the Berkshires during the spring by Miss Harriet Johnson, director of the Layman's Music Course. For twelve weeks she and her assistant, Miss Katharine Philbrick, gave lectures in six schools in the county. These lectures were to familiarize students with instruments, with good music, whether symphonic, operatic or chamber music. Attendance was voluntary and there was a surprisingly small number who did not finish the course. At the end of the series, examinations, also voluntary, were given by Miss Johnson, with results indicating that the boys and girls of Berkshire county rate high in their knowledge of music. Those placing first, second and third in each school were presented tickets for the Festival concerts. Miss Alice Riggs, of Stockbridge, was chairman of the course for the Festival.

The program for Saturday night's Festival concert at 8:30 will be as follows:

Concerto for Orchestra .... Piston
Symphony No. 5 in E flat Major .... Sibelius
Symphony No. 7 in A Major, Beethoven

Tickets for the concerts Saturday, Sunday afternoon and next week end may be obtained by writing or telephoning to the office at Stockbridge.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 4 - 1939

95

Storm Fails to Mar Opening of Sixth Berkshire Symphonic Festival

Superb Program Heard By Audience Of 5700

Audience Shows Sympathy With Applause When Thunder Forces Orchestra to Interrupt Playing for 15 Minutes—Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Festival President, Takes Advantage of Occasion to Make Plea for Fund for Shutters for Giant Shed at Tanglewood—Ovation for Koussevitzky—Norman Davis Speaks—Next Concert Tomorrow Night.

Thunder, lightning and a torrential downpour of rain necessitated a brief halt during the opening concert of the sixth Berkshire Symphonic Festival last night in Stockbridge, but failed to dampen the enthusiasm of the audience, orchestra and festival organization.

In fact, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, festival board president, seized the opportunity to make an eloquent plea for funds to install roll curtains to close the shed against storms. She referred to last night's disturbance as a "$60,000 thunder storm," comparing it with the "$100,000 thunder storm" three years ago which led to erection of the vast music shed.

Orchestra at Its Best

The interruption, which occurred during the playing of the "Scheherazade" suite by Rimsky-Korsakov, apparently failed to disturb the equilibrium of the Boston Symphony orchestra or its conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. The orchestra was at its best, and the program, which opened with Bach's Brandenburg Concerto for string orchestra, and concluded with the Symphony No. 1 in C minor by Brahms, delighted the audience.

A storm which occurred about an hour before the concert was to begin apparently failed to deter many people from attending for there were few empty seats. However, the concert got off to a poor start for about one thousand attendants who were delayed by a traffic jam and missed part of the first number. The concert started at 8.45, 15 minutes later than the schedued time.

thunder became more frequent and approached closer. As the movement and the terrific downpour of rain closed the continual roll of thunder drowned out the music.

Water poured in steady streams from the roof, but those seated near the open sides were able to move in and avoid a wetting.

Unscheduled Intermission

Dr. Koussevitzky remained on the podium smilingly waiting for the storm to diminish. The lights were turned up and the audience took the unscheduled intermission in good humor. After a delay of about 15 minutes the storm died down and the orchestra resumed. But again thunder and lightning played an accompaniment to the music. At times, nature gave dramatic support to the stirring ship wreck depicted by Rimsky-Korsakov in his final movement.

As the second part of the program opened, Miss Smith came to the stage and referring to the "$100,000 thunder storm" three years ago, still a vivid memory to many in the audience, said "We've had a "$60,000 storm tonight." It was after the storm three years ago that the festival organization decided a permanent building must be erected to replace the circus tent used previously if the festival was to continue.

Plea for Shutters

"It would be wonderful," Miss Smith said, "if we could secure enough funds tonight to put up the shutters, so those outside wouldn't have the rain and those inside wouldn't have the wind."

She urged contributions of "anything from $1 to $10,000, and said "I will be in the office after the concert to receive any amount you wish to give so we may finish this beautiful shed."

In specifications for the shed, $22,000 is allowed for the shutters, while the total amount required to bring the building to final completion is $60,000.

Ovation for Koussevitzky

The bond which has grown up between the audience, many of whom have attended the festival concerts since their inception, and the orchestra, was demonstrated by the warm applause which

Dr. Kousse

Brahms Symphony

from the Cantata "Christ Lag in Todesbanden."

"Scheherazade"

Those who have heard the Boston orchestra play the "Scheherazade" suite before looked forward to a repetition of this thrilling experience. One cannot help suspecting that the color and exotic flavor of Rimsky-Korsakov's music have a particular appeal to the imagination of Koussevitzky. Despite the interruption between the third and fourth movements, the orchestra immediately recaptured the mood of the music when it resumed playing, and the audience sat enthralled, carried away by the romantic tales of Scheherazade and the inexhaustible color of the orchestra.

Some Of 5700 Who Filled Shed At First Concert

Part of crowd which filled huge music shed at Tanglewood, permanent home of Berkshire Symphonic Festival between Lenox and Stockbridge, at first of series of summer concerts by Boston Symphony orchestra last night. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted organization in glorious program. Five more concerts will be given.

Among Those At Concert

Snapped during intermission at last night's concert were Mr. and Mrs. Frank Mitch of East Main street, who were among a large number of Northern Berkshire people present.

North Adams Clarinetist Takes Part In Festival

Although most North Adams residents who attended the Berkshire festival concert last night were not aware of it, their city was represented in the membership of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Realizing a lifelong ambition, Pasquale Cardillo of 102 Francis street took his place in the clarinet section during the playing of Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade" suite, replacing a member who was unable to appear last night. Although it was announced in the Transcript yesterday that Cardillo would play during several of the concerts, it was not known that he would substitute last night.

In the audience were his mother, Mrs. Anthony Cardillo, and other relatives and friends. Cardillo was graduated last June from the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston, where he had studied four years.

MUSICAL ACADEMY PLANS REVEALED

To be Held at Tanglewood Next Year

AIMS LISTED

Two Distinct Divisions in Classes to be Run by Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Enclosed in the program books distributed at last night's Berkshire Festival concert was a leaflet describing the Musical Academy which will be run under the auspices of the Boston Symphony orchestra at "Tanglewood" next year.

Quoting the desire of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky that "Tanglewood" widen its scope to become a significant center of the arts in America, the leaflet describes the academy as the next step in this direction.

According to present plans, the academy will open its first session, of six weeks, next July, culminating with the festival concerts. Two distinct divisions are envisioned, one for a limited number of advanced students qualified by ability and training, and the other a general session for a larger school.

The advanced school will feature a special class in orchestral conducting by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. A festival chorus will be organized by the other class. Each student will belong either to the chorus or the school orchestra, and will attend the general sessions, which will be held twice a day except Saturdays and Sundays. Classes will be devoted to lectures and to singing under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard Glee club and Radcliffe Chorale society.

Classes in folk dancing will be included in the general tuition, and individual instruction in piano, voice and orchestral instruments will be available. The faculty will include 30 members of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Tuition for the general session will be $100. Further particulars may be secured at the Tanglewood box office or from George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, at Symphony Hall, Boston.

Snapped during intermission at last night's concert were Mr. and Mrs. Frank Mitch of East Main street, who were among a large number of Northern Berkshire people present.

Ovation for Koussevitzky

The bond which has grown up between the audience, many of whom have attended the festival concerts since their inception, and the orchestra, was demonstrated by the warm applause which greeted Dr. Koussevitzky on his first appearance on the stage, and again during the delay in the program when the audience, through its applause, signified its sympathy for the difficult conditions facing the orchestra and its good-humored acceptance of the interruption.

Audience of 5,700

Once again the unique character of the Berkshire festival was fully evidenced. An estimated 5,700 people from every walk of life, attired in everything from colorful full evening garb to the most informal sports clothes, came together to hear superb music amid the unsurpassed surroundings of Tanglewood. True, most of the bright-hued evening gowns were covered by rain garments, and in many cases dainty evening slippers were replaced by footwear more adapted to tramping through mud, but the pleasure of the audience at being back at Tanglewood was apparently undimmed.

Missed, however, was the pleasant promenading through the grounds during the long intermission. Although the rain had diminished to a drizzle, it was enough to keep the audience within the shed, and intermission "smokes" were taken in rather cramped quarters as the crowd milled about the aisles.

During the playing of the opening number, there was hope the rain might be finished for the evening, but as the orchestra progressed with the third movement of the "Scheherazade" suite, the lightning and

Norman Davis Speaks

Miss Smith then introduced Norman H. Davis, referring to him as a citizen of "Stockbridge, the United States and the world at large." Mr. Davis, after praising the "energy and enterprise" of Miss Smith, endorsed her appeal. He said the festival began as a community enterprise but its reputation was now country-wide.

Familiar Selections

The program, which included three works which are familiar to most concert-goers, but which can bear frequent hearings, was played with the precision, balance and power which one has learned to expect from the Boston orchestra. As in past years, the orchestra seems to be in top form when it reaches Stockbridge, perhaps partly because of the nature of the festival, which is a relief for the players from their ordinary routine, but certainly largely because of the enthusiasm of the audience, which at the conclusion of last night's concert gave round after round of applause for Koussevitzky and his men.

Bach Interpretation

The opening selection was a perfect demonstration of the quality of the Boston orchestra's string section, which many consider unsurpassed, and the vitality which Koussevitzky injects into Bach's music. With precision and grace, and perfect tone, the orchestra played Bach's stately measures with a buoyancy which certainly would have delighted the composer. Interpolated between the two allegro movements was the Sinfonia

Brahms Symphony

The Brahms symphony played last night is said to be one of the favorite works of Koussevitzky. Certainly he does full justice to the man who waited many years before he attempted his first symphony, and then produced a work to rank immediately among the foremost works of its type.

With arresting power the somber opening measures were sounded. Deep feeling marked the playing of the first movement, which when the symphony was first introduced, was considered by critics "morbid, depressing and unedifying."

With lightness and delicacy the orchestra enunciated the second movement, one of the beautiful melodies which Brahms seemed unable to keep out of his works. With deft touch, the musicians swung into the allegretto of the third movement, while the full scope of the heroic and triumphant final movement was brought home to the listeners.

Considering the weather conditions, traffic was handled with facility by eight state troopers under Sergt. Warner F. Eaton of the Northampton barracks and war veterans under Sheriff J. Bruce McIntyre of Pittsfield.

For the second concert, Saturday night at 8.30 o'clock, the program includes Piston's Concerto for Orchestra, Sibelius's Symphony No. 5 in E-flat major, and Beethoven's Seventh Symphony. The third concert will be Sunday afternoon at 3.30 o'clock.

The same schedule will be followed for the second series, which will begin next Thursday.

Maestro Shares Applause With Players

Greeted with waves of warm applause, Koussevitzky calls the members of orchestra to their feet to share in ovation.

Also present were Mrs. Anthony Cardillo and Mrs. Carmen Walsh, mother and aunt of Pasquale Cardillo, talented North Adams clarinetist who played with orchestra. Looking over Mrs. Cardillo's shoulder is Miss Mary Underhill, a member of the North Adams State Teachers college faculty.

Snapped During Intermission

Obviously pleased at success of opening concert are, left to right, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of festival board, Norman H. Davis, who addressed audience, and George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Drury Students Among Hundreds To Attend Festival Rehearsal

Hundreds of Berkshire county public high school boys and girls including 12 from Drury high, will be in the audience of 3,000 attending the rehearsal of the Boston Symphony orchestra at the Tanglewood music shed Saturday morning as guests of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. They will come from practically every community in the county. The balance of the audience will include members and patrons of the Festival. No tickets are sold for this rehearsal nor for the one Aug. 12. The rehearsals were planned by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, as a privilege for Festival members and patrons.

The children are coming as a result of the work done in the Berkshires during the spring by Miss Harriet Johnson, director of the layman's music course. For 12 weeks she and her assistant, Miss Katharine Philbrick, gave lectures in six schools in the county.

These lectures were to familiarize students with instruments, with good music, whether symphonic, operatic or chamber music. Attendance was voluntary and there was a surprisingly small number who did not finish the course. At the end of the series, examinations, also voluntary, were given by Miss Johnson with results indicating that the boys and girls of Berkshire county rate high in their knowledge of music. Those placing first, second and third in each school were presented tickets for the Festival concerts. Miss Alice Riggs of Stockbridge was chairman of the course for the Festival.

The program for Saturday night's Festival concert at 8.30 will be as follows:

Concerto for Orchestra .... Piston
Symphony No. 5 in E Flat Major, Sibelius
Symphony No. 7 in A Major, Beethoven

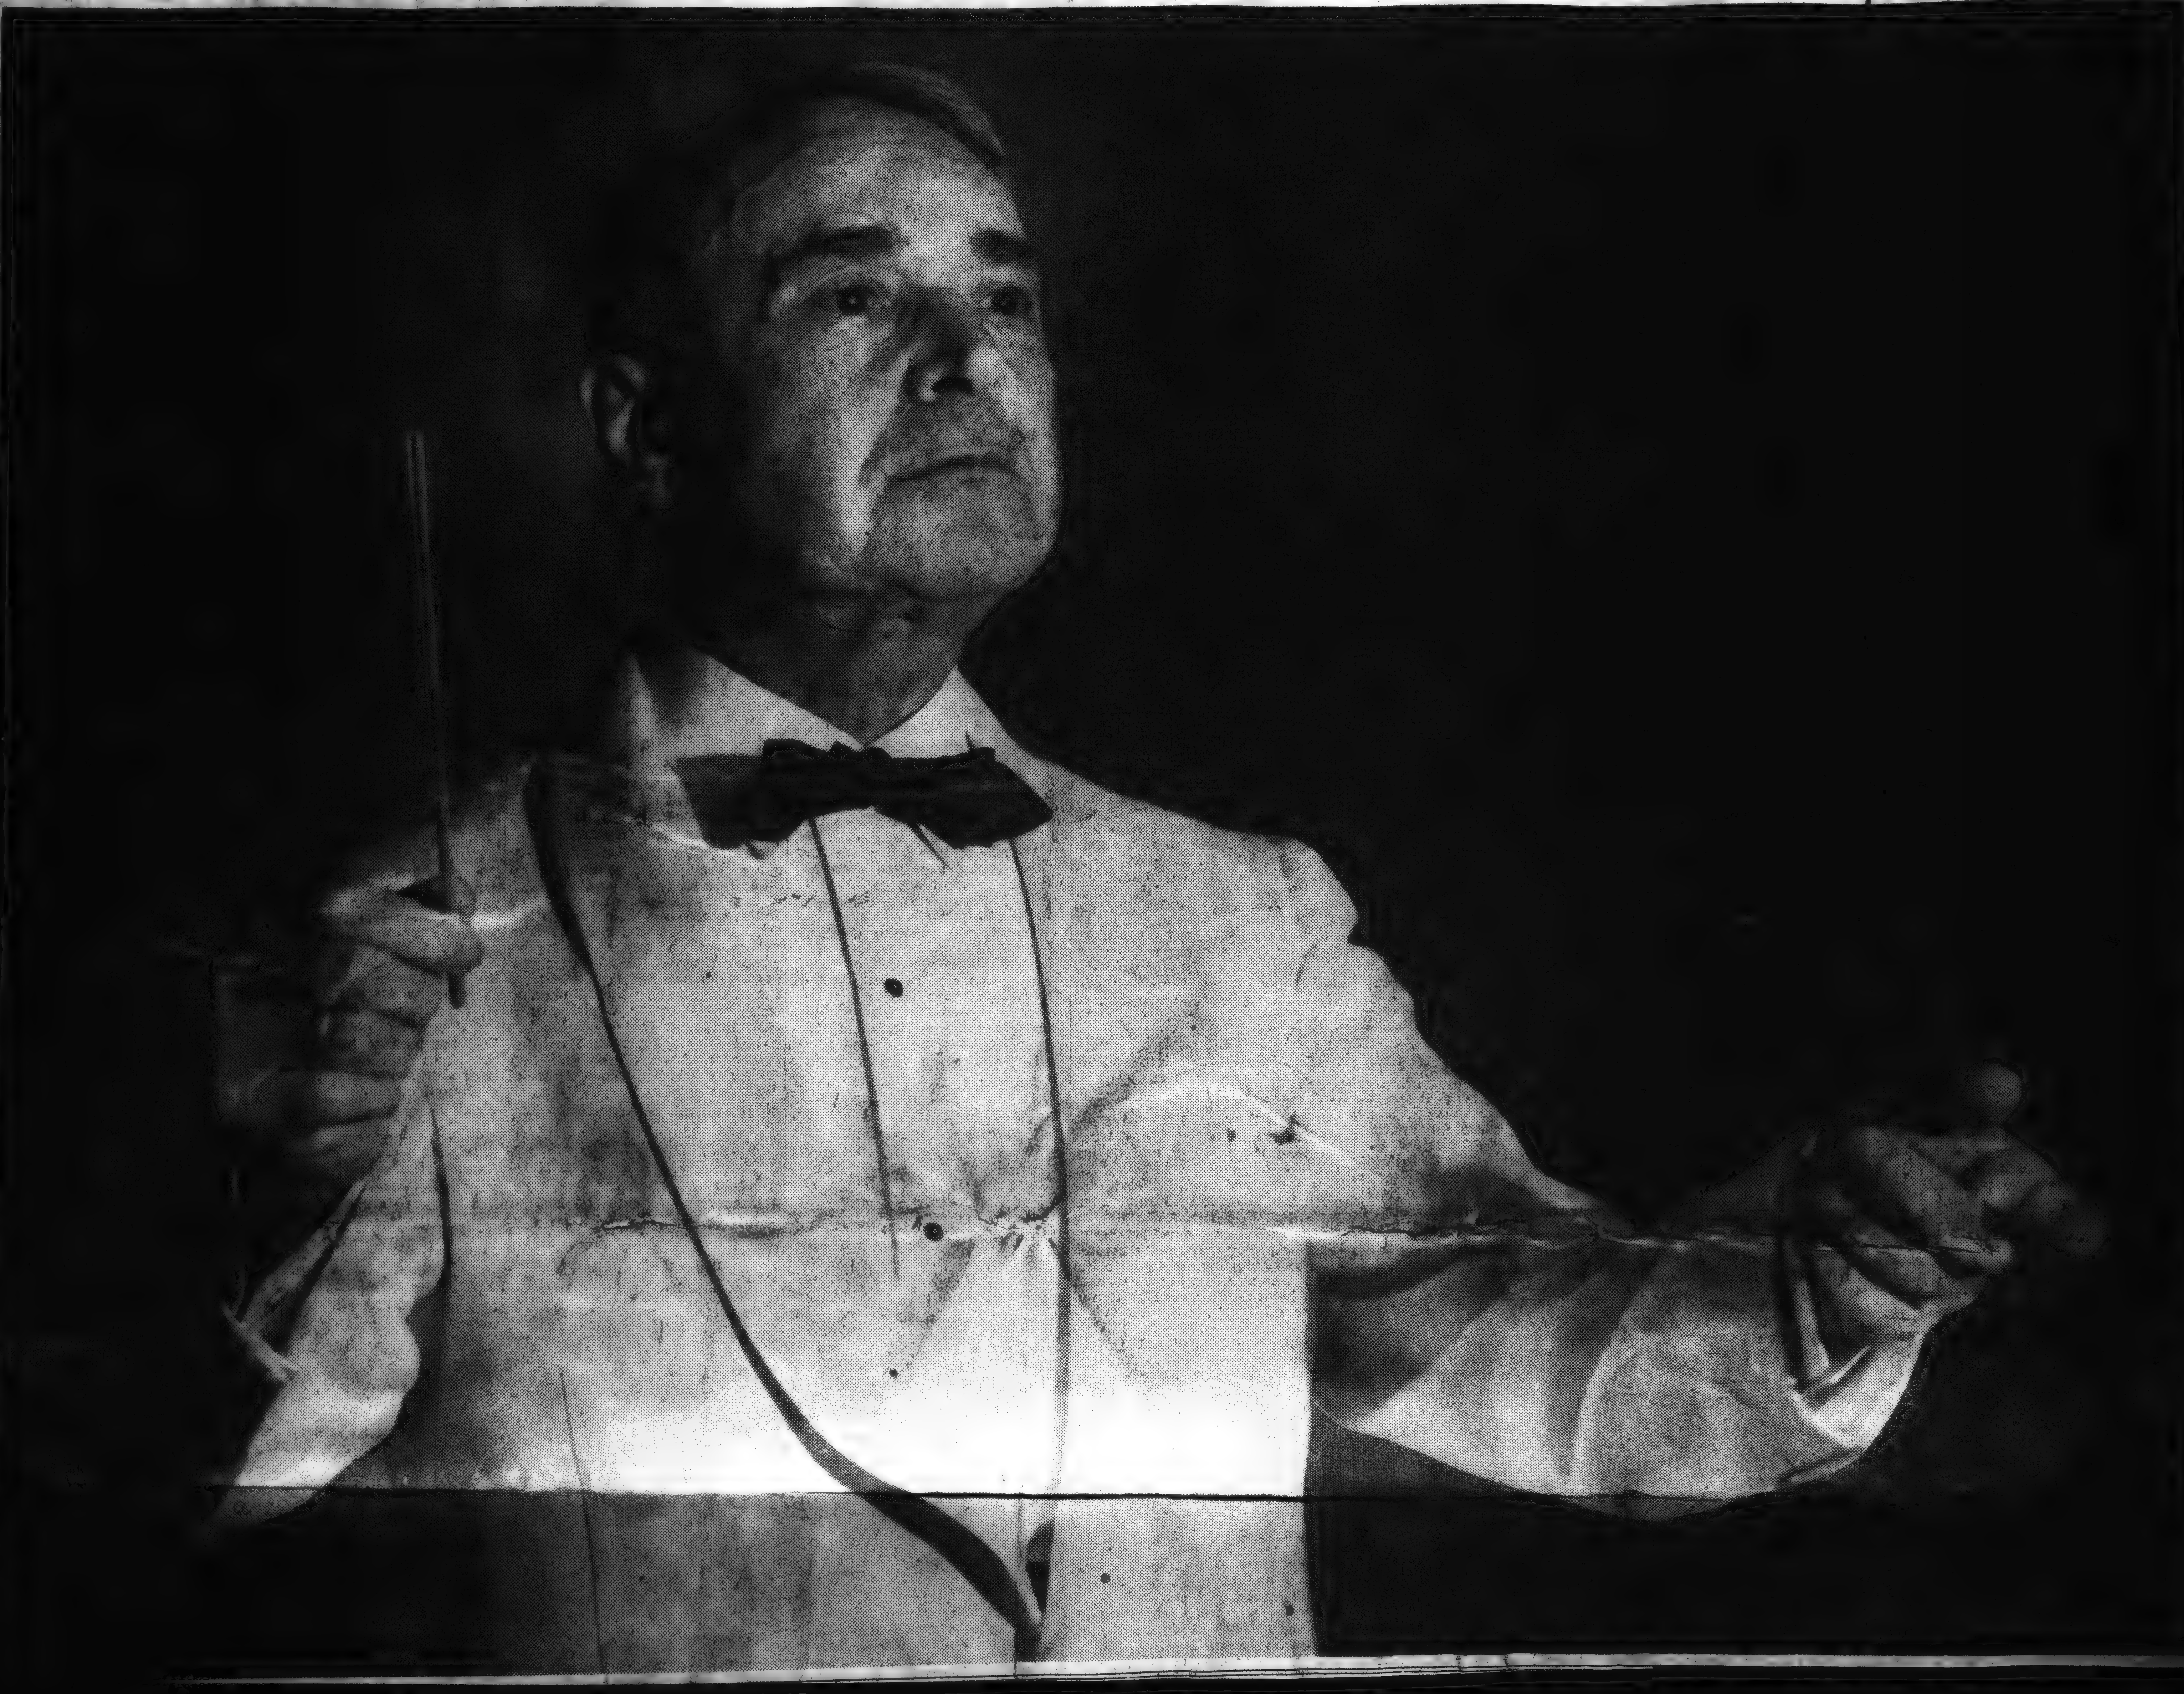
Tickets for the concerts Saturday, Sunday afternoon and next week-end may be obtained by writing or telephoning to the office at Stockbridge.

The Drury students are part of a class, which took the course prepared by the Symphonic committee and given at the school by James M. Chambers, supervisor of music. Another group will attend a rehearsal on Saturday, August 12th.

Tomorrow's group will leave Drury high school at 8.30 o'clock in cars to be driven by Donald E. Fowler, principal of Drury high school, Mr. Chambers, and Albert H. Hardy, Jr. The students who will make the trip are Peter Cardillo, brother of Patsy Cardillo, clarinetist who is filling a temporary position with the orchestra, Viola Sartori, Nellie McConnell, Arlene Marlowe, Vincent Saunders, Ralph Uberti, Earl Parmenter, Anita Smith, Katheryn Bushika, Mary Beaudry, Seymour Gitelson and Bernard Jacobs.

Sixth Berkshire Symphonic Festival Opens Before 6000

20



THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 4 - 1939

Koussevitzky Triumphs Over "$60,000 Storm"

Thunder and Lightning, Traffic Jam Mar Opening of Symphonic Festival

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival experienced its second ordeal by storm last night, and the result may be the subscribing of $60,000 to inclose the music shed with shutters for the 1940 season.

Traffic Delays Crowd

The opening concert of the sixth year and the second in the shed given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra was played under the double handicap of thunder and lightning and a late-arriving, straggling crowd held up by one of the worst traffic jams in Festival history.

Showers and threats of showers early in the evening delayed the departure from home of many of the ticket-holders, and the late start, coupled with none-too-smooth handling of the traffic, prevented many in the near-capacity audience from hearing the opening third Bach Brandenburg concerto.

There has been one similar experience in the short history of the Festival—two years ago when Wagner was interrupted by a downpour falling on the tent which was used at that time as a shelter.

$60,000 Storm

It was to this that Gertrude Robinson Smith, the president of the Festival, alluded when, at the end of the intermission, she came to the front of the stage, and in a clear, trenchant speech posed the question to the audience if they "remembered the hundred thousand dollar storm of two years ago. Tonight there has been a sixty thousand dollar storm." She briefly told of the funds necessary to build shutters and otherwise complete the structure and she concluded by asking "How many of you tonight will contribute from one to ten thousand dollars?" Be-

Festival
~~Continued on Ninth Page~~
Next Page

"Press" Works Overtime as Storm Hits Festival Grounds Destroying "Early Leads"

Press headquarters at Tanglewood was a busy place last night. Shown typewriting stories for their respective newspapers are around the table, left to right, Noel Straus of The New York Times; Cyrus Durgin of the Boston Globe and Musical Advance; Jack Selby, arts editor of The Associated Press and Julian Seamon of The New York Herald-Tribune and Cue Magazine. At the left are shown Edmond Lyon and Samuel Adelson, telegraph operators, sending news dispatches by code.

When thunder clapped, lightning bolted and the rain descended on the shed at Tanglewood last night, out-of-town newspapermen covering the opening of the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, nervously rubbed their hands, some pulled their hair and others chewed on their fingernails because they knew that new leads had to be written hurriedly for first edition stories.

Many of the out-of-town music critics and reporters had filed with the Western Union office on the property first edition stories, making no mention of the interruption that came after the Boston Symphony Orchestra had completed the second movement of Rimsky-Korsakov's "Schererazade," simply because they never anticipated it.

Change "Leads"

Rising from their seats in various sections of the shed the reporters splashed through the open space separating the shed from the Tanglewood house where the press headquarters are located. Their actions indicated a major catastrophe had broken. At least that was the impression the telegraph operators had when they saw the group of newshawks enter the building and rush to their typewriters to bat out a new lead or addition to the first stories filed.

One out-of-town music critic reported in his story the concert began that "many listened to the concert out of doors." He breathed a sigh of relief when he arrived at the shed and found three people lying on raincoats in the center of the spacious lawn in back of the building but was nearly frantic a short time later when the rain chased even those along the colonnade into a safer place under the shed.

Newspapers from all over the East, magazine writers, radio newsmen and feature writers are among the 50-odd men and women covering the Festival.

Operators Busy

Three telegraph operators, Robert W. Tryon, manager of the Pittsfield office of the Western Union, Samuel Adelson and Edmond Lyon, also of Pittsfield, sent by code from the press headquarters last night an estimated 35,000 words to newspapers, press syndicates and radio stations in eastern United States. From New York and Boston The Associated Press and United Press sent the news of the festival to all parts of the country and abroad.

Among those covering the event are Moses Smith of Columbia Recording Corporation, N. Y.; Ambrose L. McLaughlin of the Eagle-Tribune, Lawrence; Jay Bradley of the Greenwich (Conn.) Times; Neal Weibel of Music News; Roger S. Vreeland of Bergen Evening Record, Hackensack, N. J.; Miles Kastendieck of the Brooklyn (N. Y.) Eagle; Nancy Burncoat of the Worcester Telegram; Warren Storey Smith of the Boston Post; Elizabeth Scheffey of the Montclair (N. J.) Times; T. H. Parker of the Hartford (Conn.) Times; Willard M. Clark of the Springfield Union.

Also Julian Seaman, music editor of Cue Magazine and critic for the Herald Tribune, New York; Leo Gaffney of the Boston American-Advertiser; Robert C. Ellis of the Newark (N. J.) Evening News; Harold Schonberg of Musical Advance, New York; Carlton Smith of Esquire; Paul C. Howe of the Bennington (Vt.) Evening Banner; Leonard Liebling, Radio Guide, New York; Noel Strauss of the New York Times; Irving Kolodin of the New York Sun; Bernard Freeman and Jack Selby, Associated Press; Lanning Humphrey, United Press; Paul Elkin, Homer (La.) News; Olin Downes, New York Times; Frances Perkins, New York Herald Tribune; Cyrus Durgin, Boston Globe musical courier; Wanda MacDowell, Christian Science Monitor; Arthur B. Lipkin, Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Tomorrow afternoon at 5 George W. Edman, clerk and publicity director of the Festival, will entertain the newspapermen at his home, 187 Wendell Avenue, Pittsfield.

Few Checks Received for Festival Shed

More Promised To Provide Shutters At Tanglewood

Although no contributions in great amounts had been received by the Berkshire Symphonic Festival by noon today, in response to the appeal made at last night's concert by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, the president, a few checks of small denomination had been brought to the office and expected.

The money is needed to install shutters at the music shed as a protection against wind and rain.

Miss Robinson Smith made her appeal just before the start of the second half of the program.

"Ladies and gentlemen," she said. "You all remember how two years ago at this time we had a $100,000 thunder shower. Tonight, we have just had a $60,000 thunder shower. We need $60,000 in hard, cold cash to put up the shutters. We will accept any amount from one dollar to $10,000. My box is number one, and I will be there the rest of the evening to accept any amount you care to give."

Referring to the modesty of Mr. Koussevitzky Miss Robinson Smith said she felt flattered and honored to be able to persuade a friend of the Festival, Norman H. Davis of Stockbridge, to come to the platform.

"As a resident of the Berkshires," said Mr. Davis, "I am most greatful to Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith for what she has done to establish the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Due to her energy and intellignece we owe more to her than anyone else for this great music festival."

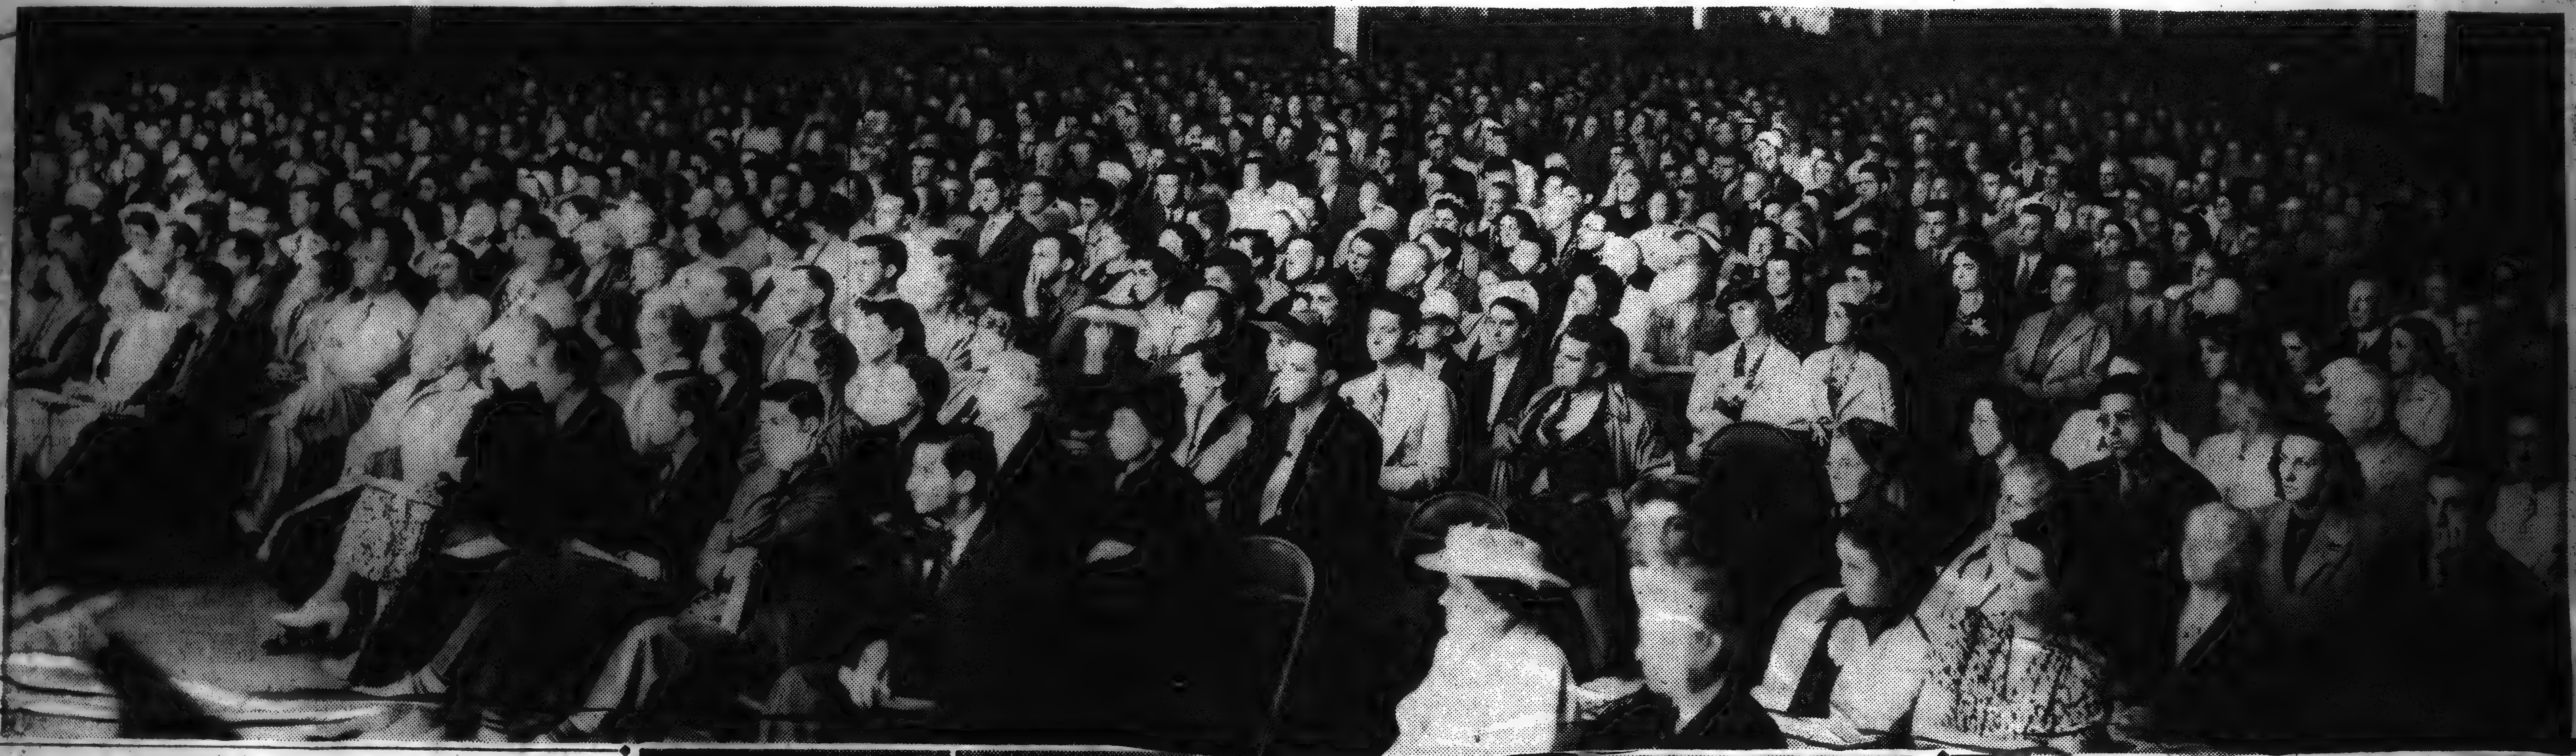
Some people in the shed could not hear Mr. Davis and one asked that he speak louder. The diplomat, smilingly replied, "I am sorry but I haven't an amplifier." Continuing he said, "This Berkshire Symphonic Festival has grown to international fame and those who feel like giving something toward the fund to enclose the shed will be doing a great thing."

Concluding his brief talk, Mr. Davis said "it's a great thing to develop a great musical center of this kind in a great country."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 4 - 1939

Neither Rain Nor Thunder Nor Traffic Jam Bothers Huge Crowd at Festival



Sports Editor Not Sorry Beer Barrel Polka Missing

Enjoys Festival Program but Finds the Going "Heavy" Just As at Saratoga on a Wet Day

By JOHN M. FLYNN
(Sports Editor of The Eagle)

The proposed county fair having been abandoned before a bushel of oats or a pair of sheep had been exhibited, induced us to forget about agriculture and go in for culture in a section where such refinement abounds. Having made quick leaps from Hank Keene's Orchestra, then Kenny Baker in the Mikado, Verdi's Requiem over the radio with interruptions by telephone calls, we decided to take in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Used Pin Method

A perusal of the programs for the six concerts left us very much in the dark, and in order to make a selection we just remained in the dark, being blindfolded and using a pin to designate which program we should attend as a starter. With the Festival Fortnight page appearing in the 150th Anniversary number of The Eagle in front of me, I first stuck the pin in the hand of my assistant, Abe Michaelson, and next tagged the show at the Nell Gwynn Theatre, Malden Bridge, "You Can't Take It With You." Abe laughed and said, "Pass up that show and go there next week to see 'Idiot's Delight.'" After taking him to task for such [illegible] and assuring him [illegible] wanted to get polish quick- [illegible] tended to be one of the [illegible] Tanglewood, I applied the [illegible] more and it touched the [illegible] or last night.

Excellent Tutors

In order to learn as many points as possible in a short time I made the trip with two great [illegible] him to catch the boat. I thought George W. Edman, who has done a great publicity job for the Festival, passed up a chance in not getting the Congressman to announce he was so anxious to attend the Festival he would forego the European trip. Tom Kilduff, chauffeur for our representative to Congress, is chairman of the firemen's ball to be held at Stockbridge tonight. He knows everybody who voted against his employer and some of them may find salt in their ice cream at the party.

Having written a few paragraphs on the Festival last year I was given seats in the white section. That is an improvement over the benches in the Harvard section where I was placed last year and in front of the boxholders. Still, I probably never will get into the blue or Yale sector unless I become an usher.

Until the storm broke, Walter Winchell would have enjoyed being with the group of chauffeurs just outside the shed. Those fellows are posted on blessed events and some devilish ones.

One fine thing about Serge Koussevitzky's programs—one can feel certain one will not have to listen to the Beer Barrel Polka.

Somehow I feel as if I have known Serge a long time as I had a serge suit 25 years ago. That crack is not a good one. Neither was the suit.

The traffic jam on the way to Tanglewood was almost as bad as

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival, makes an appeal for funds.

Even essaying travel on the sidewalk was of little avail in the press of traffic between the center of Lenox and the entrance to Tanglewood half an hour before the concert started.

News Reporter Goes Back Stage With Koussevitzky

Narrates Happenings in Dressing Room Before, During, and After Concert

By KINGSLEY R. FALL

Dr. Koussevitzky, they said, might arrive at the shed as early as 7.45, to give him plenty of time to prepare for the start of the opening concert at 8.30.

To be sure he might not decide to come earlier, I got to the shed at 7.30. The traffic was light at that hour, and the trees were still dripping from the afternoon storm. I left my hat and raincoat in the car and walked around the shed to the musicians' long dressing room which juts off the stage at the rear of the shed. Most of the orchestra members were already there. One of the flute players was practicing in the field to the east of the shed.

On the ramp leading from the dressing room to the stage, I met a man who asked me if I was hunting for someone. I asked him if Mr. Judd was there.

"He hasn't come yet," he said. "My name is Spalding. I'm Mr. Judd's assistant."

I told him I represented The Eagle.

Umbrella Trouble

"Oh yes," he said. He was hunting for a place to hide his umbrella. "I don't think I'll need it again, do you?"

I looked up at the sky. "No, I don't think so," I said.

He said the best place to wait for Mr. Judd, who is manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and buffer between Dr. Koussevitzky and such people as newspapermen, was at the conductor's room just off the stage on the eastern side

Koussevitzky bowed over her hand.

Quick Picture

Mr. Judd explained to the Doctor that The Eagle wanted a picture.

"Yes," the Doctor said, nodding. "But quick. Quick. I must change." The camera was set up and the picture taken. Dr. Koussevitzky disappeared into the dressing room.

A few moments later he came out, followed by the young man who had carried the bags in. He was, I learned, Victor Sakharoff, the conductor's personal valet and masseur. Dr. Koussevitzky stood for a moment before the mirror. He combed his hair in quick, nervous darts of his hand. Behind him, Sakharoff looked him over speculatively from top to toe. Apparently finding nothing amiss, Sakharoff, looking in the mirror

Reporter
Continued on 18th Page

Musicians Mop Up After Storm

Dry Out Te[illegible] Following H[illegible] Downpour

we should attend as a starter. With the Festival Fortnight page appearing in the 150th Anniversary number of The Eagle in front of me, I first stuck the pin in the hand of my assistant, Abe Michaelson, and next tagged the show at the Nell Gwynn Theatre, Malden Bridge, "You Can't Take It With You." Abe laughed and said, "Pass up that show and go there next week to see 'Idiot's Delight.'" After taking him to task for such a suggestion and assuring him [illegible]nted to get polish quick- [illegible]tended to be one of the [illegible]anglewood, I applied the [illegible]more and it touched the [illegible]or last night.

[illegible]xcellent Tutors

In order to learn as many points as possible in a short time I made the trip with two great lovers of symphony who can pronounce concerto with silky smoothness and talk about Bach and Brahms like Frankie Frisch does about the Red Sox—Francis M. Callanan and Edward W. McCormick of The Eagle reportorial staff. So far as the Bach part of the program was concerned they did not have to tell me much because that feature was concluded just as we were entering the gate after having been stymied by the traffic jam in Lenox.

Nature Gets an Assist

The Rimsky-Korsakov numbers were so realistic that we felt as though we had been taking in such programs all our lives. Serge Koussevitzky must credit nature with an assist. The storm broke and persons seated outside the shed or close to the ends rushed to shelter. A Berkshire thunderstorm was in full swing and the roof was given a severe test. Some water reached those 25 feet or more back from the edge of the roof, but possibly that was because of the strong wind that was sweeping the water instead of a leak in the structure. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith quickly investigated to see why it was necessary for some ladies to hold umbrellas and she figured the water came in through the sides instead of through the roof.

Felt Sorry for Sindbad

The conductor delayed the program until the storm abated, but while he was playing "The Sea and Sindbad's Ship" one could feel that Sindbad was having a mighty rough voyage and one could imagine the craft going to pieces against a rock just as the composer intended to depict.

The rain ceased before the regular intermission of 25 minutes but as they would say at Saratoga the track was heavy.

The concluding part of the program was from Brahms and we not only remained to the end but enjoyed it. The selections tomorrow night will be from Piston; Sibelius and Beethoven and Jay C. Rosenfeld will keep you accurately posted about them.

Joe Patti, who has been my barber since long before my hair started to get as thin as the ranks of the Civil War veterans, decided yesterday afternoon that my locks needed a trimming. They had reached the stage where it was impossible to tell at what point the coat collar left off and the hair began. Consequently I felt I did not even look like a student of music when I went to Tanglewood. Joe, however, assured me that long hair is not a requisite to get to town in music and I realized he was right when I looked at members of the orchestra. They had made regular trips to the barber and had not balked at having their hair cut like a lawyer, doctor or the average run of men.

Missed Publicity Chance

Congressman Allen T. Treadway will go with the delegation to Oslo, Norway, to work on international peace if they stop fighting in Washington early enough for an usher.

Until the storm broke, Walter Winchell would have enjoyed being with the group of chauffeurs just outside the shed. Those fellows are posted on blessed events and some devilish ones.

One fine thing about Serge Koussevitzky's programs—one can feel certain one will not have to listen to the Beer Barrel Polka.

Somehow I feel as if I have known Serge a long time as I had a serge suit 25 years ago. That crack is not a good one. Neither was the suit.

The traffic jam on the way to Tanglewood was almost as bad as the one on the Albany road seven years ago when thousands of people desiring to watch ski-jumpers do their stuff, were unable to reach the scene. They all arrived at the festival eventually but many were 30 minutes or more late.

Mrs. Arturo Rodzinski, whose husband is conductor of the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra, passed up a chance to get some advertising in a novel way by appearing with one of her goats.

Kousseitzky made history last year when he took off his coat and directed. That caused a police officer to remark how easy it is for a fellow to make history today as compared to George Washington's time as the father of our country fought through the Revolutionary War and served as President to get recognition in the books for our coming generations to peruse. The late Eugene Scott of Great Barrington used to tell a story about a fellow who was in court on a charge of fighting. He denied the complaint and said that he just took off his coat to shake hands with a friend.

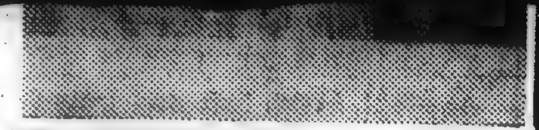
Nobody broke his leg rushing to the box of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith to contribute $10,000 or less toward providing shutters to enclose the shed after she made the appeal. Still, she is a wonder at raising money and as she has decided to get $60,000 for roll curtains to close in the shed against such a storm as broke last night, additional chairs, permanent lighting of parking fields and grounds and other improvements it is a certainty she will see that the money is provided.

John Shepard Jr. was noticed in a box. Do not allow that Junior part of his name fool you. Just about the time Teddy Roosevelt was receiving congratulations for his rough riding in that uneven scrap in Cuba, I was toting golf clubs for Mr. Shepard at the Wyantenuck Country Club, Great Barrington. He was a left-handed golfer but he tipped right. In those days you could count on the fingers of one hand the golfers who paid a caddy more than the regulation fee of 30 cents for 18 holes, even if two digits on that hand had been cut off by a buzz saw. Mr. Shepard still is generous. His wife's birthday will be Sunday and apparently he does not confine his natal day remembrances to trinkets. On her birthday in 1930 Mrs. Shepard received from her husband Belvoir Terrace, the palatial villa in Lenox.

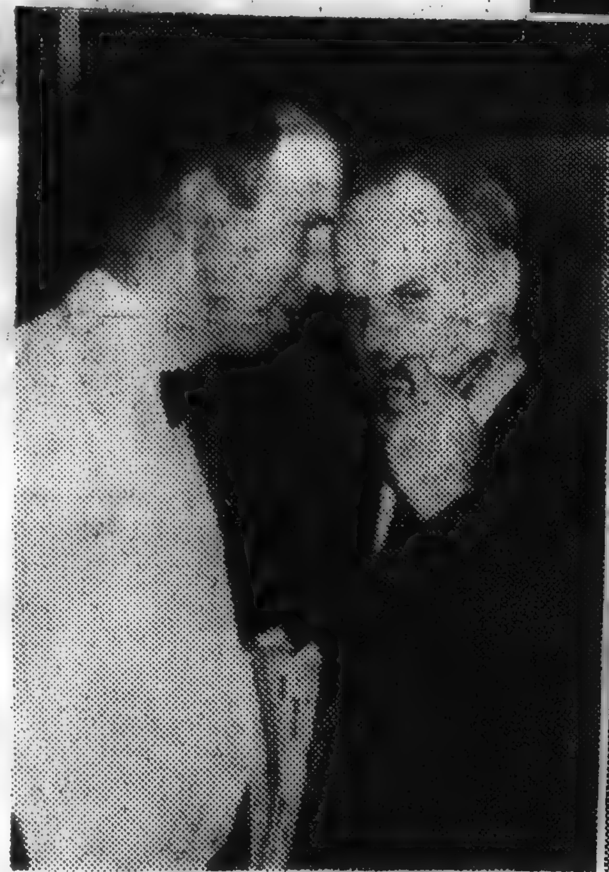
"You can't beat Koussevitzky," enthused one lover of orchestral music as he was leaving Tanglewood. "You can't even pronounce him," commented a police officer who had overheard the remark.

Both Stockbridge and Lenox claim Tanglewood like Ireland and France boast of St. Patrick as their own. The program very tactfully says that Tanglewood is between Stockbridge and Lenox.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith called attention to the fact that one storm during the Festival a few years ago resulted in a $100,000 development at Tanglewood and she figured last night's rain and wind would bring $60,000 for improvements. That beats Bing Crosy's "Pennies From Heaven."



Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival, makes an appeal for funds.



George W. Edman of The Eagle gives a tip to Noel Straus of the New York Times.

Apparently unwilling to put complete faith in the rainproof qualities of the shed, several members of the audience opened umbrellas during the heavy storm which drenched Tanglewood at the opening concert.

Festival

Continued From Page One

fore leaving the stage she introduced a gentleman who had accompanied her to the platform, Mr. Norman H. Davis. Mr. Davis seconded the appeal Miss Smith had made, although it must be said that his voice is no doubt more accustomed and more effective in diplomatic usage, for it was not heard beyond a few of the front rows of the semi-circle.

Tribute to Koussevitzky

The concert had opened with unusual glamour. A storm just before sundown had fortunately gone its way and left the atmosphere clear and pleasantly brisk. When Dr. Koussevitzky made his first appearance of the evening, entering from a door to the audience's right, his entire orchestra, or rather so much of it as was to take part in the opening composition of the evening, the third Bach Brandenburg concerto, rose to its feet to greet him, and the enthusiasm and cordiality with which the huge audience received him caused a great share of the more zealous to rise from their seats, too. It was a tribute to the man and through him, to his magnificent orchestra, with an added pinch of welcome thrown in.

It was during the third part of Rimsky-Korsakov's symphonic suite "Scheherazade" that overwhelming nature overtook the orchestra. There had been faint rumblings far to the northwest, and flashes of lightning visible by reflection seemed to come from all corners of the horizon. Very gradually but very surely they came nearer and the thunder was heard more ominously. It was a pity, too, for the orchestra was giving a most graphic interpretation of the Thousand and One Nights Tale as the famous Russian composer has depicted it. The audience could not but become more and more aware of the advancing menace.. Once even, the thunder made a most accurate entrance with the tympani but at all the other times it paid no attention to the conductor's baton.

A Good Sport

Dr. Koussevitzky made no prima donna demonstration, but took it like a good sport. A shrug of the shoulders, an inquiring glance away from his men to the skies, until it became necessary to desist and wait for the storm to pass. He remained on the podium all the time, and when it became wise to resume, he led his men through the final episode of the music. Even then a slight turnabout on the part of the storm obliterated some of the solos which fall at this point to the lot of the concertmaster, Richard Burgin, who in his previous opportunities had displayed such outstanding artistry.

For the opening of this concert, Koussevitzky had gone, as he did last year when he dedicated the new building, to the works of Johann Sebastian Bach. The G major Brandenburg concerto is one of six the young Margrave had commissioned of Bach.

He was said to have collected manuscripts as some people today collect stamps. Bach wrote each one of the six for a different combination of instruments. This one was originally for strings only and cembalo. In a dedicatory letter written in March 1721, Bach, among other things, stated that he had "noticed how His Royal Highness had taken some pleasure in the little talent for music which the Heavens have granted me" and, he continued, "and so, according to your orders, I have taken the liberty of sending you my humble efforts, and beg that you do not judge their imperfections too severely."

Question Choice

It is pure and absolute music, far removed in spirit from that of a later day when insinuation, suspicion, intrigue and the baser wiles of man became subjects for expression by means of tonal language. The marvelous string sections of the Boston orchestra played it with breadth, vigor and clarity, although we are not convinced its choice for this position on the programs was good judgment. A more sonorous selection might have launched the Festival more auspiciously. Koussevitzky made no attempt to read spurious meanings into the music but allowed it to speak for itself. It normally consists of two allegro movements joined by two restful, long-held chords. Exercising a seldom-employed artistic license last night the chords were omitted but a slow movement by the same composer but from another composition was interpolated, the introductory sinfonia from "Christ lag in Todesbanden." There is an intrinsic beauty to Bach which is further enhanced by a feeling of integrity his music conveys. In a world harried by insecurity and doubts this served as an exemplary prologue of devotion and loyalty.

Once the Bach was disposed of, the program made a mighty leap to the antipodal regions music-wise. The extravagantly colorful and descriptive tonal translation of the ageless story offered the orchestra its chance to show its virtuosity. Koussevitzky at the very outset led his men in a finely delineated and graphic performance. There was intense dramatic style to the detailed phrases as well as to the larger line. The seductive rhythms of the East and the bewildering variety of tonal hues were fertile soil for the orchestra. It would be difficult to conceive of a more fitting subject for exploitation by a composer of Rimsky's gifts. This is one of the first numbers to make a reappearance on Festival programs, which in the five preceding years have covered quite some expanse of the orchestral literature. Incidentally this first concert is the only one of the present series upon which no work of a living composer is listed.

Visited America

As a bit of irrelevant information it might be interesting to note that Rimsky-Korsakov was a visitor to America during the winter of 1863-64 while, as a naval lieutenant, he was on duty with a Russian squadron which had been sent west with the view of harassing English maritime commerce if the dispute over a Polish matter did not resolve itself peacefully. Let us hasten to add that it did. The young officer, among other jaunts, went "down," as he called it, to Niagara, and in passing came to Albany, which is probably as near as he ever got to the spot where his music was played last night.

Intermission Lengthened

The rain continued with moderate force upon the completion of the "Scheherazade" and intermission was lengthened an extra period. It soon became quiet overhead, indeed the air was now even more refreshing, and Koussevitzky returned to play the first symphony of Brahms. We thought the orchestra here made its finest impress. The initial tempo was most happily chosen and the whole symphony was given throbbing vitality by virtue of the responsiveness of the orchestra to its leader's slightest indication.

Greatest First

Hans Von Bulow was responsible for the misleading comment upon this symphony when he called it the "tenth," implying that it was the qualified successor of the Beethoven ninth. True it was, though, that it was the greatest "first" ever written. Brahms was the kind of man who was reluctant to offer the world haphazardly any chance offering of his pen. He was past 40 before his first symphony made its appearance. Its performance last night brought to the program a type of music which complemented the severely classical Bach and the imaginatively romantic Rimsky to round out an evening which for interest, excitement, and musical accomplishment in progressive ratio, has not been surpassed at any Festival concert.

North Adams Man Accepted by Boston Symphony

NORTH ADAMS, Aug. 4—Pasquale Cardillo, 102 Francis Street, has been accepted as E flat clarinetist in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, following an audition at Tanglewood yesterday.

He will fill a temporary vacancy and will play with the orchestra in next week's concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Mr. Cardillo, a graduate of Drury High School, has been a student at the New England Conservatory of Music at Boston for four years, graduating in June. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Cardillo.

hunting for someone. I asked if Mr. Judd was there.

"He hasn't come yet," he said. "My name is Spalding. I'm Mr. Judd's assistant."

I told him I represented The Eagle.

Umbrella Trouble

"Oh yes," he said. He was hunting for a place to hide his umbrella. "I don't think I'll need it again, do you?"

I looked up at the sky. "No, I don't think so," I said.

He said the best place to wait for Mr. Judd, who is manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and buffer between Dr. Koussevitzky and such people as newspapermen, was at the conductor's room just off the stage on the eastern side of the shed.

I went around to the room and knocked on the door. There was no answer. I went in. The room is perhaps a dozen feet each way and lined with wallboard. A square bamboo table stands at the wall opposite the door. On it last night was a vase of red and orange snapdragons. Just below the table is a door separated from the actual stage door by an alley about six feet wide.

In the walls of the alley are peepholes where one may watch both the audience and the orchestra.

On the other side of the bamboo table is a narrow, full-length mirror and beyond that, in the north wall, a door in to a small dressing room, shower and washroom. Along the same wall is a cot, covered with a colorful drape. Four dark oak chairs with black leather upholstery fill in the empty wall space.

Shortly after 8, Mr. Judd came in. He said, "You're from The Eagle, aren't you?"

I said I was. He asked me if I had ever met Dr. Koussevitzky. I said I hadn't.

He said, "I think the rain is over, don't you?"

"Yes," I said. "I think so." Then I added, "I hope I'm not going to be in the way."

He smiled. "Don't worry about that. If he does seem—well, you'll know what to do." He went out.

Koussevitzky Arrives

I went out and stood on the steps. At about 8.15, they moved the benches aside at the boxholders' entrance to let Dr. Koussevitzky's car through. I went back in the room. It seemed a better idea to be inside where you could be ejected rather than outside where you couldn't get in. I was alone in the room.

The car stopped in front of the door. Through one of the transom windows high in the wall, I could see Dr. Koussevitzky get out. He was wearing a gray felt hat and a black chesterfield with velvet collar. He came in and I said "Good evening, sir." He nodded. I wished Mr. Judd was there.

Behind him came Madame Koussevitzky and Miss Olga Naumoff, who is her niece and Dr. Koussevitzky's secretary. They looked at me. I left.

A few minutes later Madame Koussevitzky and Miss Naumoff came out. Shortly after that, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival, came down from the main shed and asked if Dr. Koussevitzky were inside. I said he was. She asked me if I would go inside and tell him she was there, "He might be dressing," she said.

Glad of a legitimate excuse for getting back in, I opened the door. The room was empty, the door to the dressing room closed. Miss Robinson Smith said she would wait outside. In a few minutes the door opened and Miss Robinson Smith went in. A moment later, Irving D. Sisson, The Eagle photographer, and Mr. Judd arrived. We went inside. Dr. Koussevitzky and Miss Robinson Smith were talking animatedly in French. They said "Au revoir" when we came in. Dr.

Reporter
Continued on 18th Page

Musicians Mop Up After Storm

Dry Out Te[illegible] Following H[illegible] Downpour

Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who are camping on the Tanglewood shore of Stockbridge Bowl, were up early this morning drying out their tents following the heaviest downpour of rain this year. It wasn't long after flaps on the fronts of tents were thrown back that the orchestra members had to close them again when shortly after 9 this morning another downpour of rain chased them indoors.

However, most of the men and women campers were up early enough to cook their breakfast out of doors over fireplaces, using wood that was sheltered during the night. Although rain poured into the sides of some of the tents, through openings at the places where tent poles are inserted, little damage was done to the interior because everything was moved toward the center—including the members' valuable instruments, which were covered with towels, blankets and clothing. In some cases the instruments were wrapped and placed under beds.

In all there are 10 tents erected on the shore. They are all on platforms left in the pine grove by campers who occupied the grounds before the estate was given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

One member of the orchestra who had planned to pitch his tent yesterday failed to complete the job because of rehearsals during the day and threatening weather late in the afternoon. He did not lose the atmosphere of camping out, however, for he moved bag and baggage into the recreation room of the Lenox Brotherhood Boat Club, which adjoins the "tent city" and spent a comfortable night sheltered by a well constructed building.

Mountain Concert Today

Overflow Audience Will Hear Quartet And Bauer

Today there is a lull in activities at Tanglewood, where the Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts are given, but South Mountain's music temple will be filled to overflowing with the regular audience augmented by scores of music lovers here for the Festival.

Willem Willeke, director of the South Mountain Quartet, has been flooded with applications for tickets for the concert today. In the audience will be many distinguished musicians and many of the music critics from metropolitan centers.

Following the concert, Mr. and Mrs. Willeke will have a reception for Harold Bauer, pianist, at their home on the summit of the mountain.

The concert begins at 4 o'clock. If there is no rain, many concertgoers will be taken care of on benches outside the temple.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY, AUGUST 5, 1939

Tanglewood 'Academy'

Dr. Koussevitzky Tells of a Music School For the Berkshires—Other News of Music

When another July comes to Tanglewood, in the Berkshires, and the thoughts of musical folk turn to the Berkshire Festival, there will be a music center of amateur as well as professional standing at Tanglewood. For Serge Koussevitzky, with the assistance of 30 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is going to teach aspiring conductors, soloists and musicians; and there will be classes in the appreciation and playing of music for those to whom the art is an avocation.

Dr. Koussevitzky says that the "Purpose of the Academy will be that of a center of music. It would be a boon for those who want to study the fine arts in their relation to culture; who are anxious to refresh their minds and personalities through contact with the best in art and the most distinguished in culture; and for those who long for a creative rest in the summer."

The academy will consist of two schools, one of which will offer advanced instruction to specially qualified students, while the other will offer general instruction to a larger group whose principal entrance requirements will be an intelligent interest in music. Prominent scholars of arts and letters will lecture to the larger group which will also have a part in the Festival chorus. Dr. Koussevitzky and the Symphony musicians will conduct the advanced group. The term will be six weeks, concluding with the Festival. Besides their teaching assignments the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will form a resident orchestra which will serve as a nucleus for the academy orchestra, as a working group for those who study conducting with Dr. Koussevitzky, and as a practice group for the performance of new scores.

Of Local Interest

The Federal Music Project will present Mendlessohn's "Hymn of Praise" on the Tremont Street side of the Common at three tomorrow afternoon, as the fourth in the current series of oratorios. A. Buckingham Simson will conduct and the artists will include the Commonwealth Federal Orchestra and Chorus.

There will be two concerts sponsored by the Longy School of Music, in Cambridge, during the week. The first will be an organ recital by Dr. Everett B. Helm, in Memorial Chapel, Harvard University, Tuesday afternoon, beginning at four. Dr. Helm will play two Chorale Preludes and the "Alla Breve pro Organo Pleno," by Bach, and other pieces by Konrad Paumann, Paul Hofhaymer, Scheidt, Attaignant, Couperin, Andre Raison and Pachelbel.

The second concert will be the last of the current summer series of Open House Concerts at the Longy School, on Thursday evening, beginning at 8.15. The program will include Trio for Violin, 'Cello and Piano, by Walter Piston. Quartet for Oboe and Strings, by Mozart, and Quartet for Clarinet, Violin, 'Cello and Piano, by Hindemith.

Out of Town

The Gordon String Quartet, playing at Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn., will give two programs during the week. Tomorrow afternoon, beginning at four, this group will play three of Beethoven's Quartets, Opus 74, Opus 135 and Opus 18, No. 2. On Saturday afternoon, beginning at 3.30, the quartet, assisted by Ada MacLeish, soprano, will give a program consisting of Beethoven's "The Great Fugue," Schonberg's Quartet No. 2 for Voice and Strings, Poulenc's Suite for Voice and Strings, and Dittersdorf's Quartet in E Flat.

The Festival of Arts, now underway at Bar Harbor, Me., includes again this year several musical events of genuine importance, all of which take place at the Building of Arts. Concerts and recitals which will be given during the concluding three weeks of the Festival include a piano recital, by Moriz Rosenthal, next Tuesday afternoon, beginning at 3.30; three productions by the University Gilbert and Sullivan Opera Company, to be given on Monday and Tuesday evenings and Tuesday afternoon, Aug. 14 and 15, the evening performances to begin at nine and the matinee at 3.30; chamber music by the Stradivarius Quartet, on Wednesday, Aug. 23; recital by Iso Briselli, violinist, Wednesday, Aug. 30; and a program of monologues and recitations by Helen Howe, Saturday, Sept. 2—these programs all beginning at 3.30.

Carole Lombard Better, Gets Pointers for Role

HOLLYWOOD, Aug. 5 (AP)—Carole Lombard, playing the role of a nurse in her new picture "Vigil in the Night," is getting some first hand, if painful, pointers in a hospital.

She was a patient, and convalescing well, at Good Samaritan Hospital today after an appendectomy following a sudden attack at her studio (RKO) Thursday afternoon.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TELEGRAM

AUG 5 - 1939

Culture in the Country

Throngs of music lovers are spending some days in the Berkshire Hills around Lenox, Mass. for the annual concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood. More than 6,000 persons have gathered to hear the series of concerts this summer.

The Berkshire Music Festival is but an example of what is going on in the country particularly in New York state and New England. Originally the country in summer was a scene of agricultural toil and city recreation. Now it has become a center of culture as well.

Summer theatres have contributed to this cultural surge. The one at Westport was among the earlier ones. Now it has imitators by the hundreds. Hardly any popular summer resort town is without its summer theatre today. Anyone who loves the spoken stage for its own sake will rejoice that this is so, for the summer theatre is the nursery and school of dramatic art in this country.

In the old days every sizeable city had its legitimate theatre to which road companies came during the winter and in which a stock company held forth in the summer. The stock companies and in a lesser degree the road companies were the training schools for all who wanted to become proficient on the stage.

With the arrival of the movies and the disappearance of the local theatres there was no school available for ambitious youngsters. Today every actor or actress who wants experience in actual performance can get some sort of a role in one of the innumerable summer theatres. It may not pay much, indeed it may provide no more than a mere subsistence, but it gives the invaluable ingredient of experience.

And of course when we are speaking of culture in the country we should not overlook painting. Every popular summer colony has an art school or a colony of summer artists somewhere in and around it busily engaged in immortalizing the landscape, the tumbledown buildings or the quaint local characters. We have a boom in culture.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD - TELEGRAM

AUG 5 - 1939

Great Musical Future Seen for Tanglewood

Tanglewood, seat of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, is envisaged by Serge Koussevitzky as "a significant center of the arts in America." And steps have already been taken in that direction, according to an announcement from the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Next July an Academy will begin a term of six weeks, culminating with the concerts of the Festival. The Academy will consist of two distinct departments, one for advanced instruction to a limited number of students qualified by ability and training and the other a general session for a larger school. A feature of the first will be a special class in orchestral conducting under Mr. Koussevitzky.

A point that Mr. Koussevitzky wishes to make clear is that the Academy will be neither a "conservatory" nor a "summer school" in the strict sense. A Festival Chorus and a School Orchestra, composed of students, will attend the general sessions, extending through the Festival period.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
TIMES-STAR

AUG 5 - 1939

"The Berkshire Hills"

"The Berkshire Hills" is the newest publication of the Federal Writers' Project in Massachusetts. The publisher, is the Funk and Wagnalls Company.

A cloth bound book of some 360 pages, containing 27 maps and many photographic illustrations, the volume describes every city and town in Berkshire County. The lakes, valleys, mountains of the Berkshire region are covered in detail, as well as its folk tales and Indian legends, its sleepy villages where square dances, "Town Meeting Day" and the little red school house still flourish. The informality of this guide permits also the inclusion of numerous anecdotes on its various residents. and visitors from John Sergeant. Nathaniel Hawthorne and Herman Melville to Grover Cleveland, Serge Koussevitsky and Norman Davis.

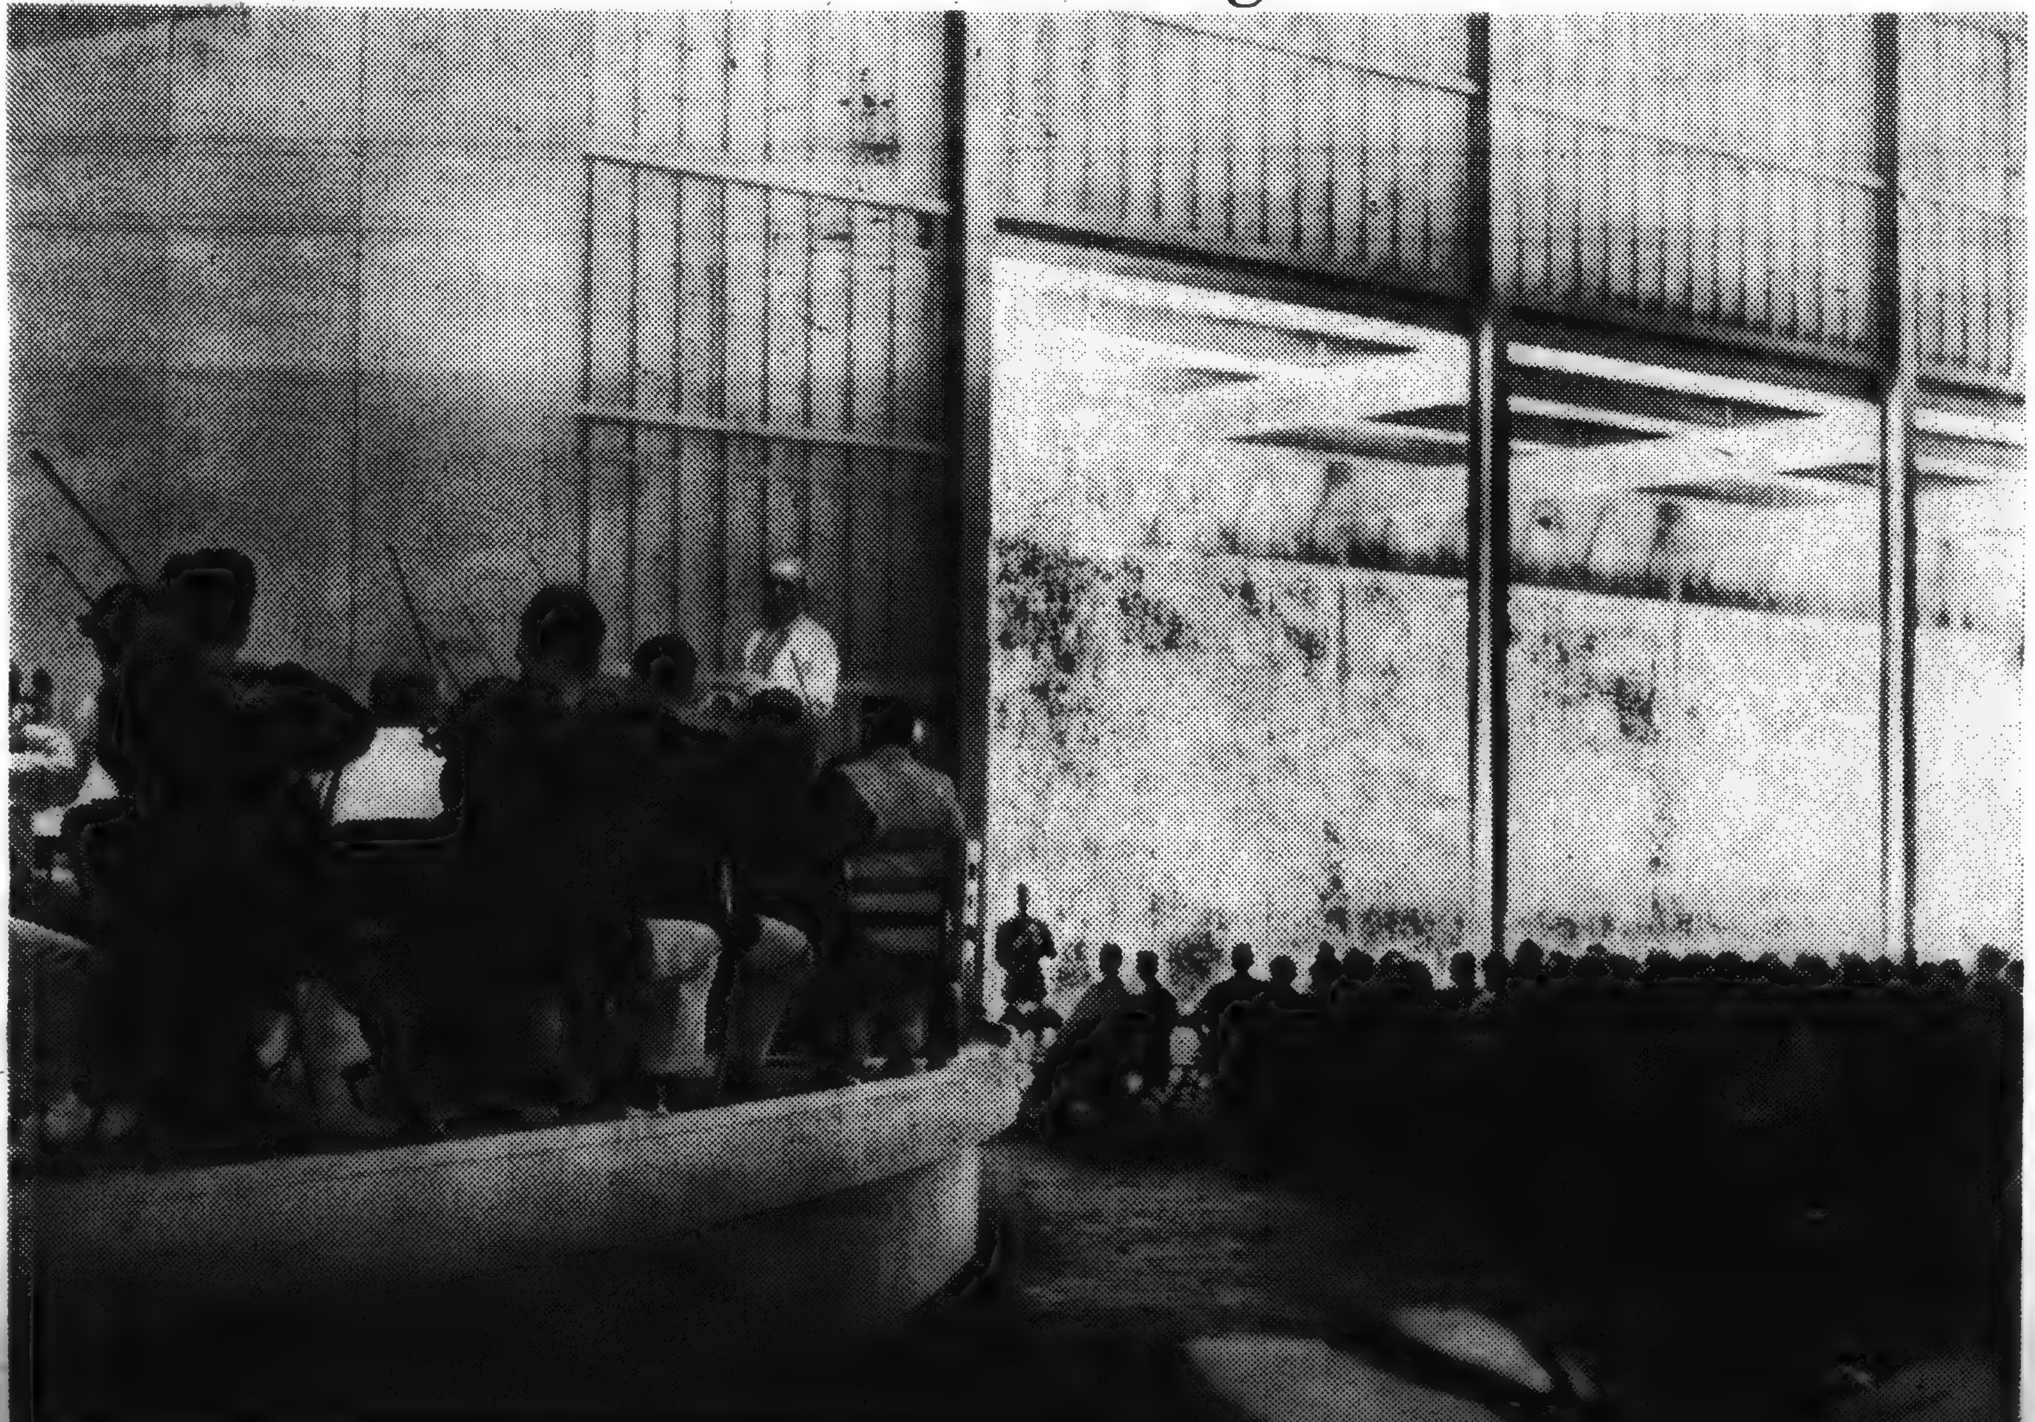
The book is sponsored by the Berkshire Hills Conference, Inc., and the national distribution given it by the publishers will undoubtedly lend added impetus to the growth of the Berkshire area as both a summer and winter vacation land for Americans from all parts of the nation.

It is a book that discriminating New Englanders will relish to the close of the last chapter.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 5 - 1939

Orchestra Rehearsal Attracts Large Crowd



Augmented by more than 1900 Berkshire school children a record rehearsal audience heard Dr. Serge. Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphonic Orchestra play this morning at Tanglewood in preparation for weekend concerts.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HUDSON, N. Y.
REGISTER

AUG 5 - 1939

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL DREW 6,000; CONCERT IS PRESENTED TONIGHT

The sixth Berkshire syphonic festival opened Thursday night at Tanglewood presented by Mrs. Graham Brooks in Lenox Mass.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphonic Orchestra of 108 men before an audience of nearly 6,000 people.

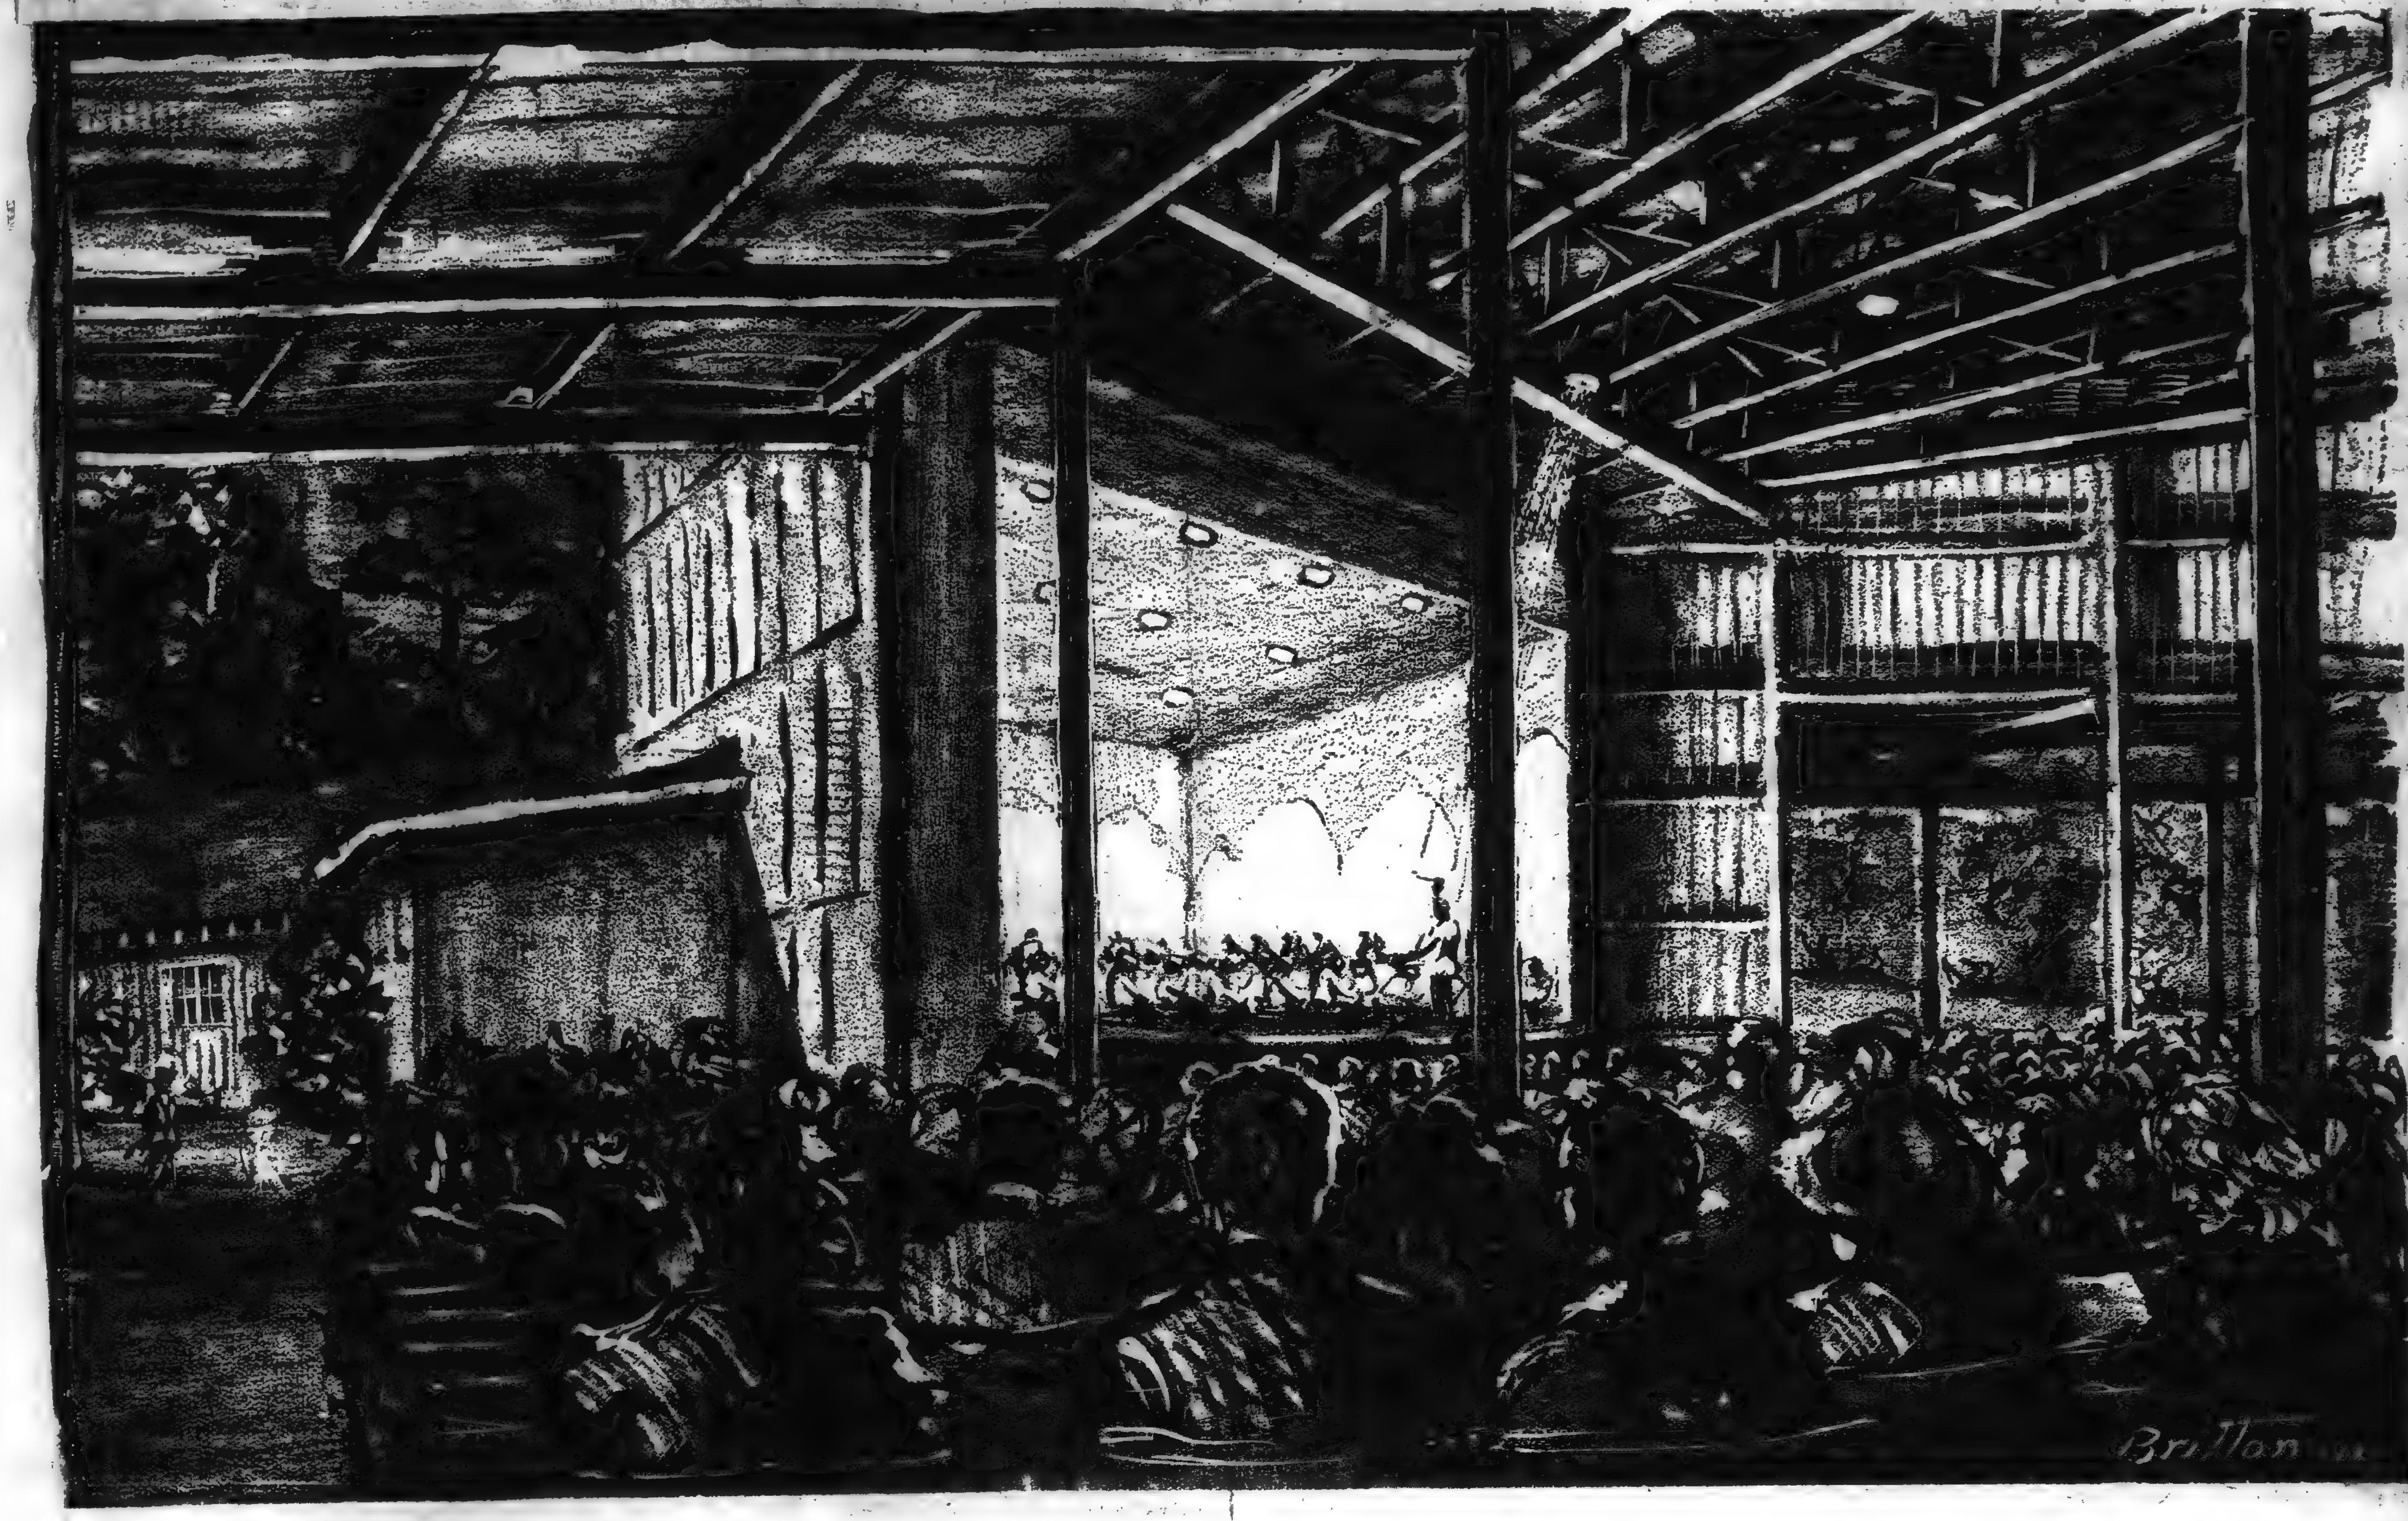
The following program was presented by Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra: Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G. Major; the ever familiar and beautiful "Scheheragade" by Rimsky—Konsakov and Brahms first symphony in C minor.

Tonight at 8:30 o'clock Dr. Koussevitzky will present: Concerto for orchestra by Piston, Symphony No. 6 in E flat major, by Sibelius and Beethoven's

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 5 - 1939

Great Tales of Music Re-Told in Arcadian Setting of Tanglewood



ames Britton captures scene and spirit of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in is sketch of the new shed where Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symhony Orchestra are playing to audiences of 6,000. The first concert was played hursday night. At the second one this evening the program will be Concerto for Orchestra by Piston, Fifth Symphony by Sibelius and Beethoven's Seventh. Sunday will be heard the Mozart E flat Symphony, Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" and Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

AUG 5 - 1939

—MUSIC OF THE DAY—

Berkshire Festival Attracts Thousands

Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony In Six Appearances at 'Tanglewood'

By MILES KASTENDIECK

Almost 150 miles from Borough Hall in an environment far different from that of the Brooklyn Academy of Music or Carnegie Hall, the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Koussevitzky conducting opened the Sixth Berkshire Symphonic Festival held in the music shed on the "Tanglewood" estate last Thursday evening and continues the first grouping of concerts tonight and tomorrow afternoon. Three more concerts scheduled for next Tuesday, Saturday and Sunday will complete the festival program.

While the music played at these concerts is that of the Winter programs of the orchestra, and much of it was heard here in New York and Brooklyn last Winter, still to hear the Boston Symphony in the incomparable setting of Tanglewood is an experience all of its own. There is the air of a special event in the very nature of the festival as now constituted and to have one of the great orchestras of the country as the leading attraction rather crystalizes that experience. It is no wonder that people are coming to Tanglewood from all over the country. Should the geographical distribution increase as it has all the earmarks of doing, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival will become one of the great Summer attractions of the United States just as the music festivals of Europe are an incentive for traveling.

The opening night of this year's festival suggested that this had already come to pass. With the gates open at 6 p.m., people began to arrive early, anticipating a picnic supper on the lawns at Tanglewood or a snack at the refreshment tent on the grounds, though a downpour somewhat altered their plans. Converging from roads in all directions, two files of cars soon began to line Route 183 and meet at the entrance to Tanglewood, one mile west of Lennox, Mass., or six out from Stockbridge. Even after 9, cars were still turning into the parking fields which were said to contain 3,500 cars by the time every one concerned was in the music shed. A capacity audience was present, meaning 5,700 people or more in spite of the fact that there were a few empty seats.

The audience had gathered knowing that this was an event; the orchestra played in a manner that made it an event even beyond expectation. The cleverly planned program opened with Bach's Third Brandenburg Concerto, proceeded to Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade," and then after an intermission of 25 minutes concluded with the Brahms First Symphony. Competing with increasing dampness, the orchestra gave a remarkable performance, but that is hardly news, for the Boston Symphony's worst is so many another orchestra's best.

But in the middle of "Scheherazade" came one of those typical Berkshire thunderstorms accompanied with a drenching downpour. Some 6,000 people blessed the vision that had led to the creation of the music shed. The noise of the storm increased to a point where at the end of the third section of the music, Dr. Koussevitzky thought it best to pause and give Nature a break. When the inevitable lull came, he raised his baton and proceeded into the final section of the Festival of Bagdad, the storm at sea, and the graphic section where the ship goes to pieces against the rock surmounted by a bronze warrior. Then did the thunder god, Thor, and the Boston Symphony's drum department compete for the honors of the moment. Man stood his ground and met each growl of the god with an imminent roll of drums. And then did the god relent, bewitched by the intensity of the noble conductor, conform to his lashing beat, take the right cues, and bring about a smashup of the ship that must have made musical history, for great was the impact thereof. It was worth 150 miles of driving just for that!

Brahms long since vanquished thundergods; when it came time for the symphony there was a rising moon to lend its touch in a setting romantic to begin with. In the sweep of that mighty C Minor Symphony seemed to be the ideal that had made this whole thing possible. For this immense shed, this great orchestra and its leader, this absorbed multitude might well have been a trick of the imagination. That it was a reality only speaks once again of the practical idealism of the American people.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY

AUG 5 - 1939

MORNING GOSSIP

TAKING TOLL

Ten cents on Hendrik Hudson,
A dime on Merritt too,
And soon perhaps the Hutchinson
Will tax the carefree few.

It's twenty-five on Whitestone,
A quarter on the Tri,
Fifty on the Washington
Before they'll let you by.

The Lincoln and the Holland
Just burrow through a purse;
It makes no difference where you go
The tollgate is a curse.

Bear Mountain may present a view
But leaves a gloomy pall:
I think I'll use the Post Road
Or not go out at all!

—Isabel Harriss Barr in New York Herald-Tribune.

The sixth Berkshire symphonic festival opened in Lenox Thursday night before a capacity audience of nearly 6,000 persons, assembled in the shed on the grounds of Tanglewood, the estate presented by Mrs. Gotham Brooks to the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent home for the festival.

This is the third year of the festival at Tanglewood. For the first time the full Boston Symphony Orchestra of 108 men, conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, appeared. Last year the orchestra of 93 performed under a permanent shed, dedicated with ceremonies.

The management this year has been at some pains to improve physical conditions about the estate. An enlarged parking field has been created, entailing an expenditure of $10,000 for the purchase of 700 tons of tile and gravel and for the labor of filling in a swamp. Last year many cars parked near the shed, while their owners were listening to the orchestra, and became stuck in the mud. The management came to the rescue, providing a free towing service. But this year it was decided to construct adequate parking space, high and dry and easily accessible.

Dr. Koussevitzky and his men presented the following program: Bach's third Brandenburg Concerto, in G; Rimsky-Korsakoff's Symphonic suite, "Scheherazade" and the Brahms first symphony in C minor.

Every hotel and boarding house in nearby Lenox and Stockbridge was filled with music lovers attending the festival. They began to arrive Thursday, by motor and train, and by nightfall not a place could be obtained by those who had neglected to make reservations. The festival office in Stockbridge reported the largest crowd in the history of the festival.

For the first time since the festival began in 1934, all seats this year are reserved. Nearly 400 additional seats have been added, placed outside the shed yet in full view of the orchestra stand.

September will see publication of two new books on Thoreau. Houghton Mifflin will publish Henry Seidel Canby's biography, "Thoreau," in an edition uniform with Canby's selection of "The Works of Thoreau," and John Day will issue, for younger readers, Bertha Stevens's "Thoreau: Reporter of the Universe," a selection of his thoughts about nature.

163

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 5 - 1939

FETE IN BERKSHIRES CONTINUES TONIGHT

Koussevitzky to Offer Works by Beethoven, Sibelius and Piston at Tanglewood

3,000 TO HEAR REHEARSAL

Children Who Took Courses in Music Appreciation Will Be in the Audience

By NOEL STRAUS

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 4.—After a period of rest today the Berkshire Symphonic Festival will resume tomorrow night here at Tanglewood when the second concert will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky.

The concert will be preceded in the morning by a rehearsal of the orchestra, which it is anticipated will be attended by 3,000. Olin Downes, music critic of THE NEW YORK TIMES, will lecture on the works to be performed.

The program will consist of Walter Piston's Concerto for Orchestra, the fifth symphony by Sibelius and Beethoven's Seventh symphony.

According to a precedent already established at the annual open rehearsal, only members and patrons of the festival may attend. But this year an exception has been made in favor of children who attended the courses in music appreciation given by Harriet Johnson, director of the layman's music course, and her assistant, Katherine Philbrick, this Spring in the Berkshire County public high schools. At least 500 children will be able to hear the rehearsal and lecture.

Audience Calm in Storm

The rainstorm which interrupted last night's concert brought no complaints from the large number of visitors in the local hotels. They accept the unsettled weather as something to be encountered inevitably from time to time at any outdoor event of the sort. During last night's terrific downpour, with its accompanying violent lightning and thunder, the audience was as quiet and unperturbed as it would have been on the serenest of moonlight nights.

One of the least disturbed of all was Dr. Koussevitzky. Although forced to make a long pause in the middle of an exceptionally inspired interpretation, he took it all calmly and good-naturedly. Dr. Koussevitzky, who is living while here as the guest of Dr. Artur Rodzinski, conductor of the Cleveland orchestra, at the latter's goat farm near Stockbridge, evidently came to the concert in the best of spirits and no freakishness on the part of the elements had power to ruffle him.

He began his program with the most convincing and effective reading of the Third Brandenburg Concerto of Bach yet encountered by this writer. In the past Dr. Koussevitzky has always refrained from using an interpolated slow movement in the composition, but last night he made recourse for the first time to the short sinfonia from Bach's cantata "Christ Lag in Todesbanden" as a central division of the whole.

Steinberg Version Used

The version employed was that of Maximilian Steinberg, Dr. Koussevitzky's compatriot, who is the director of the Leningrad Conservatory. It proved a splendid choice which, one felt, would have met with Bach's own approval.

That this wonderful little sinfonia depicts the death of Christ and the lamentations of the faithful, did not make it unfit for its position between the two hilariously joyous sections of the concerto. Bach himself was exceedingly fond of such sudden extreme changes of mood, and Pirro, the celebrated Bach authority, has taken pains to point out examples of them.

If we dwell on this sinfonia it is because Dr. Koussevitzky's presentation of it was one of the supreme manifestations of his art vouchsafed during an evening of splendid endeavor. It was given with great intensity of feeling and possessed the subtlest possible ductility of melodic line. Although it required but a few moments to play, it became epic in its significance as conceived on this occasion.

Work for Strings Alone

It was a bold stroke on Dr. Koussevitzky's part to begin his opening program with a work for strings alone instead of the usual pompous sort of offering for full orchestra. But with such unsurpassed string players at his disposal the choice was possible. The richness of sonority, satiny smoothness of tone and infinite variety of dynamic and color effects in the two corner divisions of the Bach opus were revelations of a kind one doubtless would seek in vain to find equalled by any other group of orchestral strings today.

A like precision, clarity, rhythmic charm and singing tone were manifested in the four movements of Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherazade," the gorgeous, mellow sounds in the opening unison passage were a worthy introduction to a performance as remarkable for Oriental sensuousness and kaleidoscopic changes of mood as for unrivaled technical virtuosity.

Dr. Koussevitzky's interpretation of the first Brahms Symphony is so well known that there is no need to expatiate upon it. His was once more a heroic and monumental idea of the masterpiece, replete with power. The fact that he doubled the tempo of the chorale in the finale to give it sufficient majesty might be termed the keynote of his broad treatment of the work as an entity.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 5 - 1939

Concert Programs For Weekend At Tanglewood

The programs for the weekend concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival to be given in the music shed at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the [illegible] of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky follow:

Tonight at 8.30

Concerto for Orchestra .... Piston
Symphony No. 5 in E flat major .... Sibelius
Symphony No. 7 in A major .... Beethoven

Tomorrow at 3.30 P. M.

Symphony in E flat major ... Mozart
"Peter and the Wolf" .... Prokofieff
Symphony No. 4 in F minor .... Tschaikowsky

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.
GAZETTE

AUG 5 - 1939

MUSICAL MEANDERS

BY ISABEL WHITMAN

THERE is a legend which surrounds the composer, Georges Bizet. It will probably be years before the tale dies but Bizet did not starve to death because of the failure of his opera "Carmen" to succeed financially. He actually died shortly after the first performance of the opera but it was due to a heart attack. He had overworked for so long he had no vitality and could not fight a throat ailment which indirectly caused his heart trouble. The composer was christened Alexander Cesar Leopold Bizet. It was his grandfather who called him Georges for short and that was the name under which he wrote all his music. He studied under several of the great operatic composers, such as Mozart, Rossini and Cimarosa. He married the daughter of one of his teachers, the master Halvey. One is surprised to learn that the pathetic story of the garret, starvation and the ultimate success of "Carmen," are myths. There was criticism of the opera because of its originality and the French were slow to like the Spanish background. However, within three months of its debut, the opera had been presented 37 times. It is unlikely that Bizet thought this "a failure."

* * *

THE development of Tanglewood, at Lenox, Mass., as a musical center is proceeding apace. Announcement was made Thursday night that the Musical Academy, contemplated by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, will open its first session in July, 1940. The academy, according to present plans, will be six weeks long and will be concluded by the annual Berkshire Festival concerts next August. It will be in two parts, one for advanced instruction, and the other a general session, all students in which will take part in a festival chorus. The school will be designed to give its students "a life in music—through participation and in association with a great orchestra and its conductor." Some 6,000 persons attended the opening of the 1939 festival this week.

THE French conductor, Paul Paray, created a stir among the members of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony orchestra and also among the critics who attended the concert at which he made his American debut the other night. He apparently proved to be an extraordinarily talented musician and an inspired leader. The men in the orchestra and the musicians present at the concert talked of M. Paray in only superlatives, according to a fellow music columnist who was fortunate enough to be in the audience.

* * *

THE Joy Bell Ringers of Columbus, Ohio, are two musicians who play sacred music on 34 glasses. All but seven of these musical goblets are from Belgium. The odd seven were made in the hand-glass factories of old Czechoslovakia. The Fishers, who play, believe that theirs is the only set of glasses which has horizontal resonators which amplify the tones four or five times.

* * *

THIS CLIPPING FROM PITTSBURGH, PA.
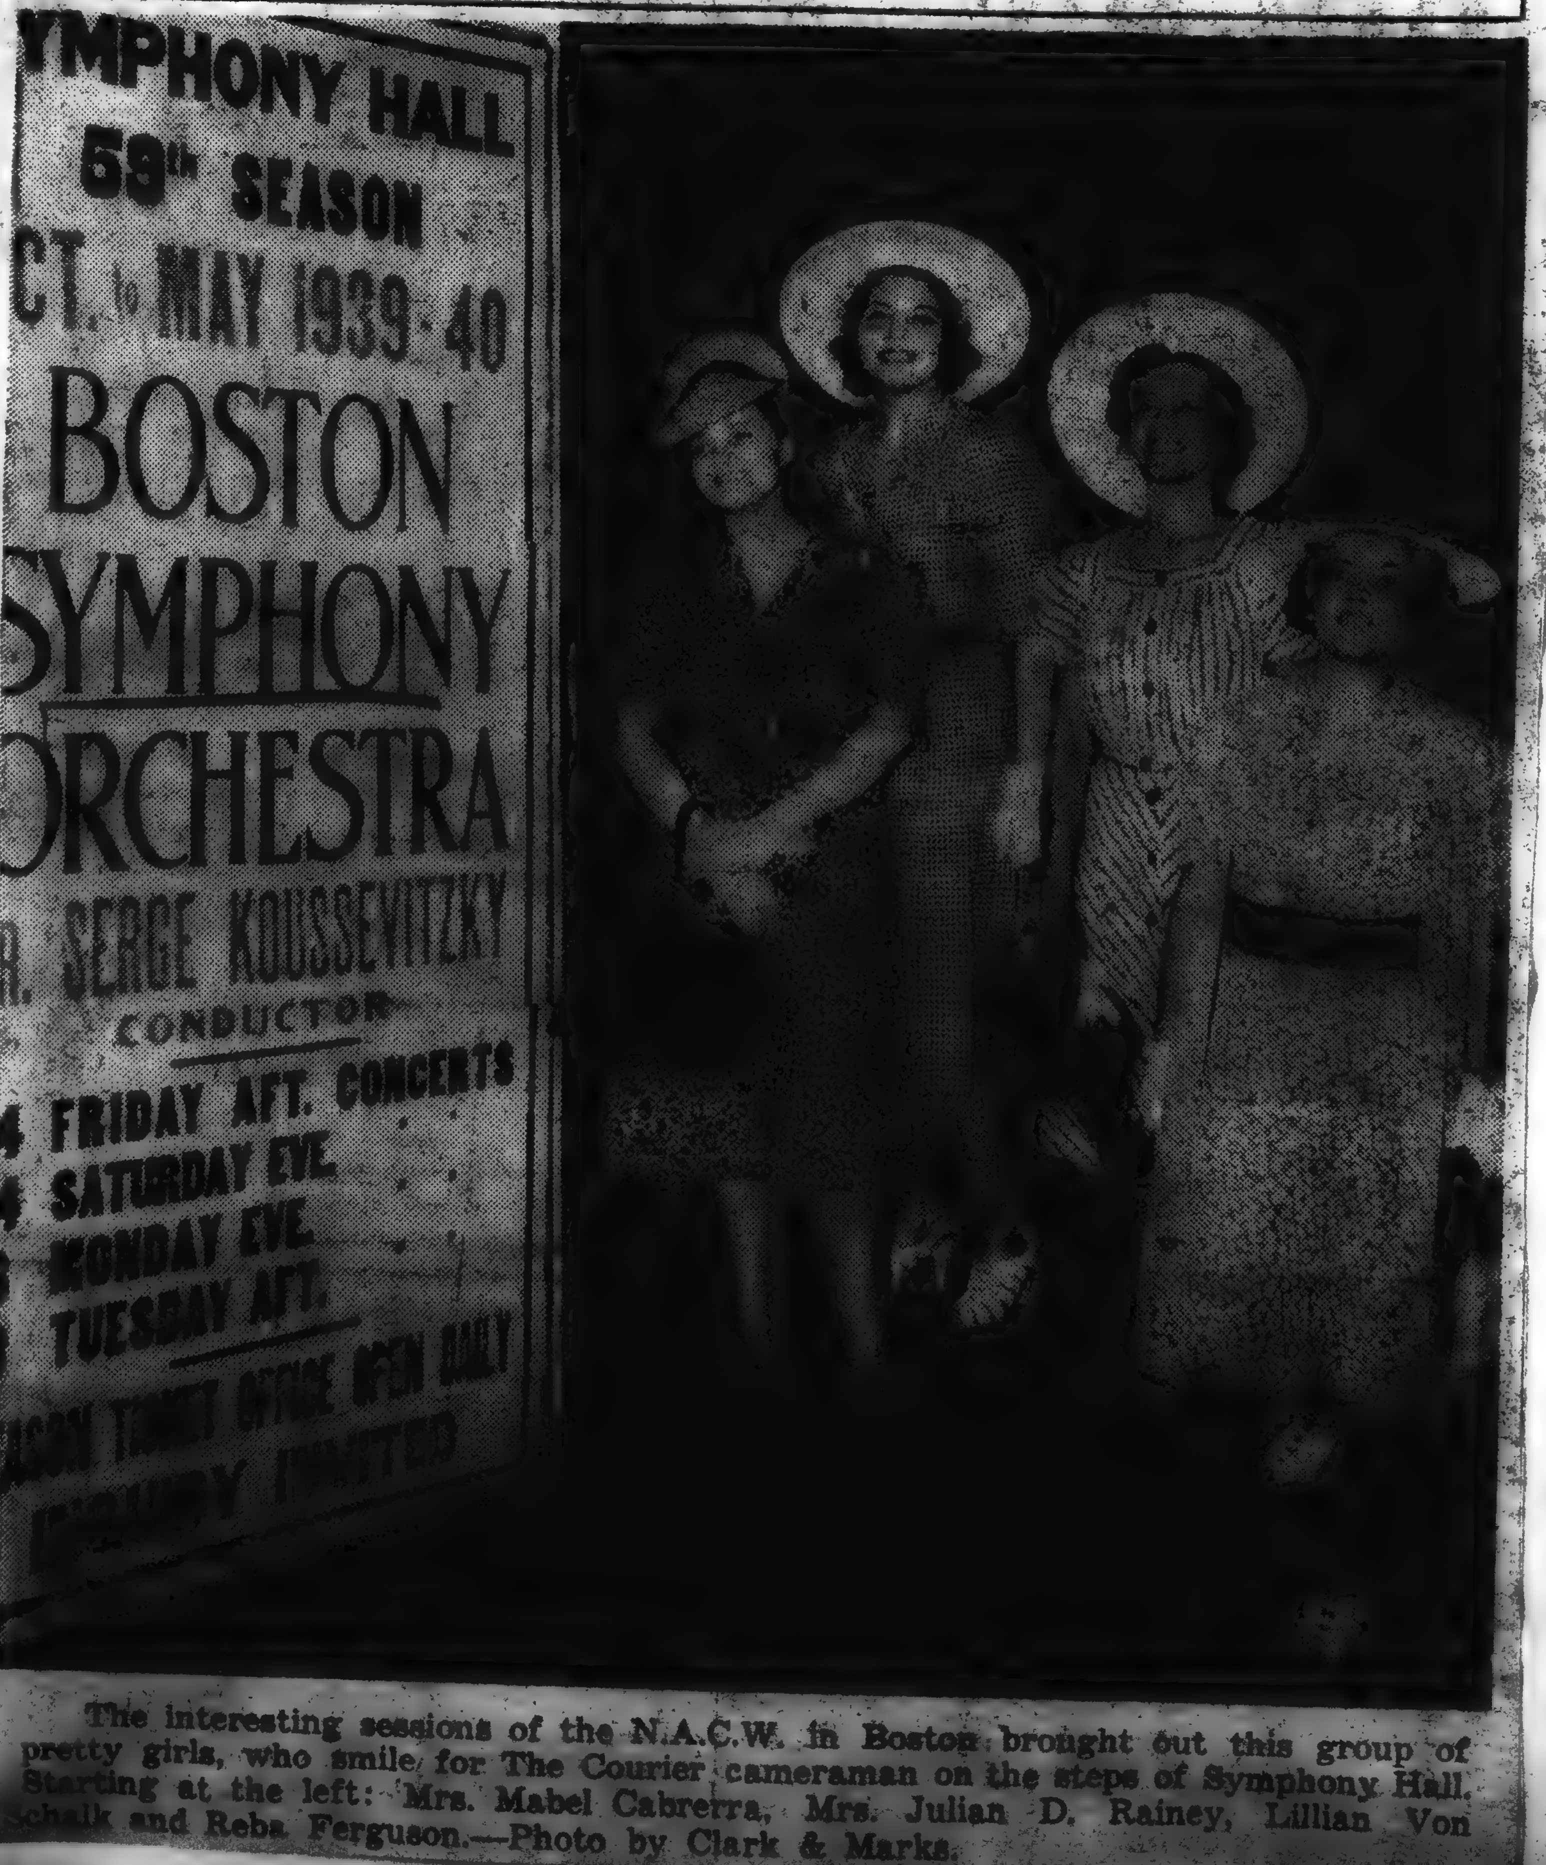
COURIER
AUG. 5, 1939

PRETTY GIRLS OBSERVE AT CONFAB



The interesting sessions of the N.A.C.W. in Boston brought out this group of pretty girls, who smile for The Courier cameraman on the steps of Symphony Hall. Starting at the left: Mrs. Mabel Cabrerra, Mrs. Julian D. Rainey, Lillian Von Schalk and Reba Ferguson.—Photo by Clark & Marks.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN

AUG 5 - 1939

Shower Fails to Put Crimp in Symphony

Stockbridge Musical Festival Concert Plays to Capacity Audience Despite Cloudburst Just Before Curtain.

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 4—Cloudburst two hours before the opening concert of the Berkshire Symphonic festival last night failed to frighten the audience which already had bought all the tickets for the program—the 5700 seats in the huge triangular shed were filled when the music started.

And then another and still heavier downpour between the third and fourth movements of Rimsky - Korsakoff's "Scheherazado" delayed matters ten minutes or so and set the audience, the orchestra and Conductor Serge Koussevitzky to laughing.

As a matter of fact, some of the thunder and lightning was awesomely appropriate to the music, although snapping harpstrings and soggy violin strings helped less.

Most of the time, however, the audience was treated to orchestral playing of a grade not to be excelled at any summer festival, in this country or abroad. For four years now, the Boston Symphony orchestra has been the backbone of the Berkshire festival, and for much longer than that it has been one of the greatest of the world's orchestras—some would say indisputably the greatest.

Last night's program was chosen to please everybody. It began with the third of Bach's Brandenburg Concertos, and after the nearly disrupted "Scheherazade" concluded with the first Brahms symphony—one of the works Dr. Koussevitzky likes most — and plays as no other conductor does it.

Altogether the opening concert proved a pretty severe test for the physical features of the festival, which include newly drained and graveled parking lots, new lighting arrangements for the latter, and a different traffic routing system. Although everything is manned by volunteer workers as a community enterprise there was surprisingly small confusion, and an audience of great distinction, from practically every state in the Union and a half-dozen European countries, got home without much delay.

The second concert will be directed Saturday night by Dr. Koussevitzky, and the third Sunday afternoon. The festival then adjourns until next Thursday, when the concluding set of three concerts opens.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LONG ISLAND CITY, N. Y.
STAR-JOURNAL

AUG 5 - 1939

Motorcade To Leave For Stockbridge

Lyra Nicholas of Douglaston parkway, Douglaston, is leading a motorcade of Queens artists and music lovers who are attending the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonies Festival concerts this weekend at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass.

Mrs. Nicholas, composer and concert pianist, is director of the Douglaston Music Guild, which is the Long Island representative at the festival.

With several faculty members and guild students, Mrs. Nicholas attended the first series of Tanglewood concerts, which opened Thursday night. Other programs in the first group will take place tonight and tomorrow at 3:30 P. M.

The second group, including evening concerts on August 10 and 12, and a Sunday afternoon concert on August 13, also will be attended by a delegation from Queens. A number of reservations already have been made through the Douglaston Music Guild.

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the six concerts.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

AUG 5 - 1939

World of Lively Arts

By T. H. PARKER

Festival Second Thoughts.

The great consolation of a department of this kind is that it permits second thoughts on first nights, a point which I seem to remember having made before, perhaps during last year's Berkshire Festival. First nights, especially those in remote places, definitely incline toward the harassing. You dash out during intermission to a cubicle humourously called the "press room," where eleven other chroniclers have already availed themselves of the only good typewriters, and under circumstances considerably on the feverish side, you plunge into your dispatch without more than one or two ados.

Among the things your thoughts have to cope with are the hammering of a dozen typewriters jammed against yours, the rattling of telegraph keys, a clock racing toward a deadline, and the steady sotto voce imprecations of your comrades in trade, all enfevered by the same things that are bothering you. On the screen with Glenda Farrell, it may seem romantic, but try it sometime.

So today I should like to fill in a few notes to enlarge my dispatch upon the opening Berkshire Festival concert. While the Bach Concerto was another exposition of the marvelous strings of the Boston Symphony, and while Dr. Koussevitzky set out the adagio section with moving pathos and tragedy, I still find the performance of the "Scheherazade" Suite the peak of the evening. In the interpretation and augmenting of showy writing, Dr. Koussevitzky is unrivalled except by the virtuosity of his instrumentalists themselves. The Fanfares sections of the Second Movement, especially the bandying of the theme between the trombone and muted trumpet, were fantastically beautiful and the skill of the players, here embroidering the theme with incredible rapidity, here melting it away with the most golden, vanishing tones, was positively ravishing.

There is no doubt whatever that Dr. Koussevitzky first and foremost makes his orchestra and his music "sound." I would be the last to deny his philosophic and emotional powers, having too often been willing victim to them, yet I am utterly convinced that the foremost and greatest Koussevitzkian effect is upon the ear. I for one, like it, even though today it is modish to turn up the nose at "virtuosity."

Moreover, in second-thinking, I am not so inclined today to overlook as I was in Thursday night's first enthusiasms, a number of unevennesses which appeared in the performance of the Brahms First Symphony. Whether coping with the storm had unnerved the orchestra, or the idle spell between the last concerts in Boston and this at Tanglewood had relaxed the members too much, there is of course no way of telling, but there was definitely ragged playing especially in the final movement of the Brahms, just as there had been at the outset of the Rimsky-Korsakov. Even so great an orchestra as the Boston can, I suppose, "get out of practice." Some of the solo work was pretty handsome, I hasten to say, remembering particularly the dialogue between the French horn and the flute, and the general work of the woodwinds. Yet the Brahms was not the Boston at its best as a whole, it seemed to me.

Storms are certainly a disrupting influence upon these concerts. Dr. Koussevitzky showed his impatience with the thunder and rain at several moments, glancing over his shoulder at the storm, mopping his brow wearily from time to time, and talking volubly with his concert master when the din and clatter finally enforced a long pause between movements of the Suite.

The audience, too, became restless during the downpour. Though many of them were amused at the appropriateness of its appearance exactly at the moment Sinbad's ship was being storm tossed, their mood of listening was interrupted, and at the height of the rumpus, passages of the music were drowned out completely.

In addition, part of the customary hurrah-boys was rained out. Usually the audience enthuses wildly at the close of each concert and Dr. Koussevitzky wears a path from the wings to the podium taking bows. Last night there was a mad rush to get into parked cars before the elements conspired again, and as a result, much less than usual applause.

The ovation which Dr. Koussevitzky received when he first came on however, and which he took with the imperiousness of the Czar Of All The Russias, indicates that had there been no storm of rain, there would have been a far greater one of applause.

Many people were unprepared for the ending of the Bach, which comes so unannounced. The violas, 'cellos and basses are supporting a rapid, running passage for the first violins Suddenly they relinquish their support, and after the first strings have played five more sixteenth notes, they come to a lone eighth. It's all over.

I think you could have easily seen license plates from every state in the Union at the Festival last night, and most of the Canadian provinces. I saw an Ohio marker, "JOY—1." We're not unique here, after all.

There was a chubby youngster of about five years, surrounded by an entourage of governesses and nursemaids, at the inn where I stayed. She was quartered across the hall from me, and at 6 o'clock in the morning, she was awake and exercising her critical faculties on life in the country in general.

"It's a bloody bore," she shouted, "and I want to go home."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 5 - 1939

SECOND CONCERT AT STOCKBRIDGE THIS EVENING

Berkshire Series Draws Music Lovers From All Circles

(Special to The Republican)

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 4—The second of the series of six concerts which the Boston symphony orchestra is presenting at the Berkshire symphonic festival here will be given at 8:30 o'clock tomorrow night with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting Sibelius' "Symphony No. 5," Bethoven's "Symphony No. 7," and Piston's "Concerto for Orchestra."

The opening concert on Thursday evening was one of the greatest triumphs the Boston symphony has scored to date. Superb music was performed with perfection before a standing-room only audience in the music shed which seats 5,800. It was a triumph of man and music over the elements when a down-pour such as only this section can produce on nights of the Berkshire festival tried for a long time to drown out the orchestra. During one part of the first half of the program Dr. Koussevitzky was obliged to stop the concert and wait until the dreadful downpour, coupled with streaks of lightning and loud peals of thunder, had ceased to compete with the music.

Capacity audiences are expected at all concerts of the festival as the advance ticket sale was well ahead of other years and standing-room only has been the order of the day. But the thousands of music lovers who have come here and keep pouring in from all parts of the United States and Canada and many other countries are not fussy. They come to hear the wonderful orchestra and know that regardless of where they are in this huge music shed they can hear without difficulty. Whether they stand is therefore of little moment to them as long as they can manage to secure admission.

This festival with one of the most finished orchestras in the world draws music lovers of all walks of life to it. Side by side with wealthy persons who arrive in beautiful cars are young students, waiters and help from the hotels in town, and others who have hitch-hiked here or come in old automobiles. The writer ran across two young college boys who drove up from Long Island in an old jallopy which they had nursed along all the way in order to hear the concerts with the hope that they would be able to find some farmer with a hay-mow where they might sleep. And still they come. From all parts of the eastern section of the country they keep pouring in here and filling up every available room in this whole section around Lenox, Stockbridge, and Pittsfield.

The audience at the opening concert bore with good humor the musical festival of the elements. There were thousands in the shed who remembered the terrific storm two summers ago which threatened to blow down the tent in which the concerts were then given. But they were also grateful that that storm had brought them the money for the erection of the magnificent shed, dedicated here last year, which kept them dry and unharmed from the sheets of water which poured down the open sides of the shed in close competition with some of the waterfalls at the New York World's Fair.

Heavy storms in other years have resulted in benefits for the whole festival and its equipment. Miss Robinson Smith, president of the festival, in a short speech before the second part of the concert made a plea for funds with which to complete the sides of the building with roll shades. She was seconded by Norman Davis who resides in Stockbridge.

Of the music played at the opening concert one can do nothing but voice one superlative after another. The Boston symphony orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky has one of the finest string sections of any orchestra anywhere and each time one hears it he feels that it is impossible to improve it. It is so good. The numerous solos for many instruments afforded by the Rimsky-Korsakov "Scheherazade" gave many of the others an opportunity to show their excellence. In Bach's "Brandenburg Concerto No. 3" with which the concert opened there was an excellent opportunity to judge the work of the strings. The Bach number was a glorious work and in the second movement one had the feeling of being in the presence of something sacred. The first violinist had a very important role in the opening concert and did a splendid piece of playing.

The Sunday concert at 3:30 o'clock will include works of C. P. E. Bach, Prokofieff, and Tchiakovsky. The second and last series of three concerts will begin next Thursday night. It will be continued the following Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon.

S. M.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 5 - 1939

Youngsters to Be Festival Guests

Will Hear Boston Symphony This Morning

Hundred of Berkshire County public high school boys and girls will be in the audience of 3000 attending the rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Tanglewood music shed this morning as guests of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. They will come from practically every community in the county. No tickets are sold for this rehearsal nor for the one Aug. 12. The rehearsals were planned by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, as a privilege for festival members and patrons.

The program for tonight's festival concert at 8.30 will be as follows: Concerto for Orchestra, Piston; Symphony No. 5 in E flat Major, Sibelius; Symphony No. 7 in A Major, Beethoven.

Tickets for the concerts Saturday, Sunday afternoon and next week end may be obtained by writing or telephoning to the office at Stockbridge.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN

AUG 6 - 1939

Music Festival Opens In Stockbridge, Mass.

Conductor Koussevitzky Honors Walter Piston On First Night Of Symphonic Program

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 5—Serge Koussevitzky, one of the great symphonic conductors of the world, tonight reopened the Berkshire Symphonic Festival with a program honoring, among others, one of his Boston contemporaries, Walter Piston.

Tonight's huge audience overflowed on the wide lawns of Tanglewood from the rim of the music shed.

This morning more than a thousand Berkshire country school children turned up at Tanglewood for the open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 5 - 1939

The Festival

As has become its custom, the Berkshire Symphonic festival overcame all obstacles Thursday night to set the stage for what we anticipate will be another triumphal season.

When nearly six thousand people can go home with as few complaints as were heard Thursday night, despite rain which delayed their arrival, interrupted the concert, and left them hunting for their cars in mud which made walking difficult and soiled their garments, the feeling with which the festival is regarded in the Berkshires becomes apparent.

Six years ago the festival started on a small scale, really as a community undertaking. It immediately "caught on." People were delighted with the idea of listening to good music under the moon in a beautiful Berkshire setting. With the engagement of the Boston symphony under Dr. Koussevitzky four years ago the success of the festival seemed established.

But three years ago the historic "$100,000 thunder storm" referred to Thursday night by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, festival president, made it apparent that some sort of permanent shelter was essential. By that time many people recognized the value of this growing institution and funds were raised to erect the shed.

There are still some inconveniences in connection with the festival. Thursday night furnished an ideal demonstration of the need for protection for the open side of the shed in case of rain. Handling of traffic will be facilitated when roads and parking areas are improved. Grading and landscaping of the grounds remain to be done.

More money is needed to bring the plant to completion. We feel certain that the people of Berkshire, assisted by the many friends of the festival in other parts of the country, will somehow scrape together the necessary funds.

In six short years the festival has brought inestimable returns to this section. We refer less to the financial benefits resulting from the annual influx of several thousand visitors than to the cultural contributions of the festival to the people of the county, from the highest to the lowliest.

Quite definitely, the festival has demonstrated that appreciation and enjoyment of good music is not limited to any particular classes or types of persons. It has opened the way for many residents of this area, who otherwise might never have had opportunity, to feel the stimulating effects of great music played by one of the world's greatest musical organizations.

This morning hundreds of county high school students heard the orchestra rehearse. Last winter there were the laymen's music courses sponsored by the festival organization.

And next year, as another step toward making Tanglewood a unique musical center, there will be the school sponsored by Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston symphony organization.

The Berkshire festival is already one of the county's greatest assets, not only because of its nationwide reputation but—more important to us—because of what it is doing for our own people. We want to see it grow and thrive, and continue to introduce innovations. But always, we feel, it must retain the essential character which has ensured its success thus far.

Between the Boston orchestra and the festival audience, a large percentage of which has returned year after year, has grown a bond somewhat comparable to that between the orchestra and its Boston audience. The latter relationship is one of long standing. But in four years the Berkshires has adopted the Boston symphony. Music lovers here have a great personal interest and pride in the orchestra and the festival which brings it to them annually.

Let us hope that nothing will occur in the future to mar this relationship. The experiment last year of introducing vocalists into the concert was not an overwhelming success, perhaps because the assisting artists were, for the most part, not of the stature of the mighty instrument which accompanied them. The orchestra has set a high standard, and whatever innovations are attempted in the future must conform to this same standard.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

AUG 6 - 1939

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Thousands at Koussevitsky Program

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 5—Serge Koussevitzky, one of the great symphonic conductors of the world, tonight reopened the Berkshire symphonic festival with a program honoring, among others, one of his Boston contemporaries, Walter Piston.

Tonight's huge audience, which overflowed on to the wide lawns of Tanglewood from the rim of the music shed, began gathering from all parts of the East before lunch.

Six years ago the festival was given in a big tent on whatever farm could be had. Today there is not only a permanent shed, seating 5,700 persons for the concert, but accommodations on the 210-acre estate for a school which will be opened under Doctor oussevitzky's direction next July.

This morning more than 1,000 Berkshire country school children turned up at Tanglewood for the open rehearsal of the Boston symphony.

They were joined by 2,000 festival membership holders, who are invited each summer to hear a rehearsal, as Doctor Koussevitzky's guests.

Tonight's music included, besides Piston's Concerto for Orchestra, two great symphonies—Bethoven's Seventh and Sibelius' Fifth.

As many festival goers as Berkshire county can conveniently accommodate will pass tonight in the neighborhood, to be on hand for the matinee which closes the first half of the Festival tomorrow afternoon.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DALLAS, TEXAS
NEWS

AUG 6 - 1939

Prokoviev Fairy Tale On Festival Program

Special to The News.

BOSTON, Mass., Aug. 5.—Third concert in the series of six in the annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will be given at 3:30 p.m. Sunday at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox. Serge Koussevitzky is the conductor for the concerts with the program Sunday including Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4 in F minor; Prokoviev's Peter and the Wolf, an orchestral fairy tale for children for which Richard Hale will be narrator, and C. P. E. Bach's Concerto in D major for stringed instruments.

105

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
Sunday
Union & Republican
AUG 6 - 1939

Second Concert Given Without Sound Effects

Piston's Concerto, Beethoven Seventh and Sibelius Fifth Presented by Boston Orchestra

By FRANCIS REGAL

Tanglewood, Aug. 5—The second concert of the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival was given tonight by the Boston Symphony orchestra, which played as superbly as it did Thursday night but without the Jovial obbligato of thunder, lightning and rain which made the performance of "Scheherazade" memorable. That deluge has not discouraged or even annoyed festival goers, who take it in good part and may even be gratified by a touch of rough weather watched from the snug shelter of the festival's fine new home. The roar of the elements, to be sure, is too fierce a competitor for most music, and parts of an exceptionally beautiful performance of Rimsky-Korsakoff's brilliant oriental music were lost in the din, but that is a seasonal hazard of all summer concerts, and musicians and audiences take such things philosophically.

But why should not the management, which reserves the right to change any program without notice, keep in reserve some special numbers for such very special occasions? Prizes might even be offered to American composers for suitable works which could be slapped on the musicians' desks at a moment's notice. "Festival overture," "August in Berkshire," "Fireworks," "Ajax Defying the Lightning," "Tell Me, Noah!" And so on. A thoroughgoing modernist might enjoy competing with the elements and even bending them to his uses—the score providing that drums and cymbals be got ready with each vivid flash and join heartily in the ensuing peal of thunder. Short of this the best way is to take the interruption with a smile, as Dr Koussevitzky did.

Sharp Contrast Provided

His program tonight, like the opening one, exemplified the policy followed at the festival of giving for the most part symphonies and other major works, but of providing a fairly sharp contrast at each concert. The storm rather obscured the carefully planned contrast between the florid and fantastic elegance of the "Scheherazade" suite and the profound and ultra-German music of Bach and Brahms which preceded and followed.

Tonight there was nothing to disturb the carefully planned effect of a program which opened with Walter Piston's brilliant concerto for orchestra, which has become well established in the favor of concertgoers, and closed with the most brilliant and animated of all the Beethoven symphonies, the seventh, in A major. Between came the fifth symphony by the contemporary Finnish composer Sibelius, whose massive and powerful symphonic works Dr Koussevitzky has done much to make not merely known but familiar to music lovers.

Walter Piston of the Harvard faculty of music, whose concerto for orchestra opened the program, was called to the stage to receive cordial applause for his work.

In such a setting the special qualities which have won so high a place for this composer are perhaps displayed to the best advantage. His symphonies depend in an unusual degree on their cumulative effect, and one of them on one program is enough. His music grips attention closely, but when the end has been reached the listener is quite ready to turn to something quite different. No work could better supply the needed contrast than the Beethoven symphony which has been called "the apotheosis of the dance" and which so magnificently combines the gay and the profound. No conductor is more successful than Dr Koussevitzky in expressing its exhilaration without detraction from its grandeur, and this symphony brought the concert to a thrilling close.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
AUG 6 - 1939

Berkshire Hills

Berkshire Hills, Aug., 5.—The sixth annual Berkshire Festival of Music by the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened ~~Thursday~~ night at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge, with a record-breaking attendance of about 5700. Numerous entertainments have been arranged for house parties, and hotels are filled. At the Lenox Club are Mr. and Mrs. Frederic B. Pratt, of Glen Cove, L. I.; Mr. and Mrs. Pierre Jay, of New York, and Mr. and Mrs. Ernest B. Dane, of Boston. Mrs. George Otis Rockwood was a dinner hostess at the club Thursday night for her daughter, Princess Diane R. Eristavi.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
AUG 6 - 1939

Mrs. Henry B. Joy left Thursday for Southbridge, Mass., to attend the Berkshire Music Festival, which opened Thursday evening under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. She was joined there by her sister-in-law, Mrs. John S. Newberry, of Grosse Pointe Farms, Mich., and both are guests at the Red Lion Inn.

Dr. and Mrs. Thomas A. Claytor of Washington, D. C., arrived Friday to be guests of Mr. and Mrs. George Hewitt Myers.

Mrs. Marshall Williams is entertaining her brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. J. Dwight Dana of New Haven, at Bay Ridge this weekend. Mrs. Williams's father, Mr. Lewis H. English, arrives this weekend to spend August with his family.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter D. Griggs of Hartford are spending this weekend with Mr. Griggs's mother, Mrs. John B. Griggs at Blythebourne. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Pearson of Hartford will also be guests for the weekend.

Mrs. Louis H. Ingraham of New York is visiting at Wildmoor with Mr. and Mrs. J. Frederick Eagle.

Mr. and Mrs. Duer McLanahan and Mr. and Mrs. Ellery Husted are spending this weekend with friends in Winthrop, Me. On the following weekend, Mr. and Mrs. William H. Beers and their daughter will arrive from New York to be the guests of Mr. and Mrs. McLanahan.

Mrs. Glendinning Frazer of Philadelphia is the guest this weekend of Mrs. Sidney Scott on her way to Northeast Harbor, Me. Mrs. Scott has returned from a few day's stay in

---

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 6 - 1939

BERKSHIRES HEAR BEETHOVEN WORK

Boston Orchestra Presents Seventh Symphony—Music of Sibelius, Piston Given

3,000 ATTEND REHEARSAL

Many School Children Listen to Orchestra First Time as Koussevitzky Directs

By NOEL STRAUS
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 5.—The second concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival here in Tanglewood tonight was given before an audience of more than 6,000, drawn by a perfect sunny day to the performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

For tonight's schedule Dr. Koussevitzky long since chose Walter Piston's concerto for orchestra, the Fifth Symphony of Sibelius and Beethoven's Seventh Symphony.

These numbers were received tumultuously by the vast audience, which more than lived up to expectations in size. The crowd, larger than attended either of the biggest two Sunday concerts of last season, was especially fervid in its enthusiasm after the resplendent performance of the Sibelius symphony. There also was a warm reception for the Piston concerto, that brought the composer to the platform for many bows.

This morning came the first of the two Saturday orchestral rehearsals open to members and patrons of the festival. Some 3,000 attended. Fully one-third of those present were students from the high schools and parochial schools of Berkshire County. Originally only 500 pupils had been expected, but the heavy demand for admission made during the last few days swelled the total to twice that number. They sat, still as mice, completely engrossed in the proceedings.

All of these youthful listeners had been prepared for the music rehearsal through an appreciation course given them this Spring. They arrived in buses and in private cars donated for the day by various persons hereabouts. Many of them had never heard a symphony orchestra before, much less an orchestral rehearsal.

After a preliminary lecture by Olin Downes on the music to be performed at this rehearsal, Dr. Koussevitzky came on stage, tossed a gray tweed cape from his shoulders and at once went to work. In his shirtsleeves, according to the custom adopted at rehearsal by many of the directorial confraternity, he led the orchestra—which had occupied their desks and tuned up long before the audience arrived—through the first movement of Carl Philip Emanuel Bach's concerto in D major for strings in the Maximilian Steinberg arrangement.

It was a happy idea on the conductor's part to rehearse two orchestra concertos on this occasion—this masterpiece of the eighteenth century which will figure on tomorrow afternoon's list and Mr. Piston's contemporary example opening tonight's program. The similarities and differences in the method of treatment and approach employed by the composers of today and of two centuries ago could hardly have been more strikingly pointed out than in such juxtaposition of music of today and the past conceived in the same basic form.

Dr. Koussevitzky had few corrections to make in the Bach concerto, with which his men have long been familiar. He stopped once for a whispered bit of comment during the work's slow movement, but otherwise the playing of this concerto went to his satisfaction, with the exception of one part of the finale.

The more difficult concerto by Mr. Piston, who was present in the audience, gave those in attendance a more complete idea of how a conductor gets what he wants from his forces. Pauses were numerous in this difficult music, where many drastic changes were demanded from different sections of the orchestra in their handling of one or another passage. Occasionally the leader would require numerous repetitions of certain measures. Sometimes he sang to give a clearer conception of what he desired, and there were a few places where he lifted his voice above the usual whisper to make such remarks as "Little by little crescendo," or "I don't change the tempo. You are too slow."

Dr. Koussevitzky worked hard and long on the opening pages of the last division of the Piston concerto before relinquishing that composition, which proved to be an addition to the repertoire well worth most serious consideration.

The rest of the time before the intermission was devoted to Prokofieff's irresistibly humorous whimsy, "Peter and the Wolf," to be performed at tomorrow afternoon's concert.

Tomorrow afternoon's program will include Tchaikovsky's Fourth symphony, in addition to the items by Carl Philip Emanuel Bach and Prokofieff already mentioned above.

THIS CLIPPING FROM TOLEDO, O.
TIMES
AUG 6 - 1939

Noted Leader To Have Wish

Dream of Art Center To Be Fulfilled

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 5—When Serge Koussevitzky's baton flicked the first notes of Bach's third Brandenburg concerto out of the Boston Symphony orchestra here Wednesday night, the sixth Berkshire symphonic festival and also a project he has had in mind since 1910 was finally assured.

This is the school (he had as soon it were called a "music center") which now is definitely scheduled to open in early July, 1940, at Tanglewood, the estate given the Boston symphony two years ago by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston as a permanent home for the Berkshire festival.

Fortune Drained

Before the World war and the Russian revolution drained away the Koussevitzky fortune, the conductor and his sculptor wife had hoped to found such a school on their Russian estate.

The idea has been in Koussevitzky's mind ever since—but either money or a suitable place was lacking, and sometimes both. Now however, an admiring board of directors has given word that the plan can be initiated.

There will be two classes of students at Tanglewood for the six weeks of the first term next summer. One class will give advanced instruction to trained students. The other will be more general, and will concentrate on choral work which is to come to a climax with a performance of Bach's minor Mass under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction.

Course for Leaders

Thirty members of the Boston symphony will spend the six weeks at Tanglewood. As individuals they will teach their respective instruments, and collectively they will form an orchestra which Dr. Koussevitzky will use in his course for conductors. G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard Glee club and the Radcliffe Choral society, will have charge of choral work.

Each student will belong either to the school chorus or the school orchestra, and also will attend the general sessions of the school. Dr. Koussevitzky is firm about several matters in connection with the school—it is not a "conservatory" or a "summer school," he insists, nor will credit be given or diplomas issued.

An intelligent interest in music is the only entrance requirement (except for such work as Dr. Koussevitzky's conducting class).

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
AUG 6 - 1939

FESTIVALS' NEW HOME.

Another summer's musical festival series began the other night at Stockbridge. As before, it had the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, both beloved of New Haven, for the festival's fine music. It had the same delightful New England surroundings as before. But it had a reputation to base on that was a little bigger than before. The "first 100 years" that are the hardest seem safely in the past or nearly so, and those most closely associated with it can see only progressively finer things in the future.

The best-laid plans to capture for America some of the old world's music festival fame have run almost invariably into the inferiority feeling caused by the picturesque environment, longer life and more established reputation of the European model. Whether there could be much difference, in an inferior way, in the quality of the artistry, one might well doubt. This country may be short on genuine appreciation, but it is long on supply of the musically gifted. It may not have exactly drained other continents, but it has acquired an at least fairly proportionate share. Its chief frailty has been the old-world fetish.

War or threats thereof, politics and persecutions have played into America's hands in the past several years. There is no reason any longer why the American festivals cannot be the international institutions. Some communities that wanted them still have the idea although not much hope, except perhaps in the feeling that as the experiments like the Bershire Festival prosper and spread their fame, people of other communities, such as New Haven, for one, may exert themselves afresh. At least for a few years, from present appearances, they need worry little about competition from Europe.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
AUG 6 - 1939

Big Audience At Berkshire Music Fete

Koussevitzky Plays Concerto by Boston Contemporary at Second Festival Concert

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 5.—(AP.)—Serge Koussevitzky, one of the great symphonic conductors of the world, tonight reopened the Berkshire Symphonic Festival with a program honoring, among others, one of his Boston contemporaries, Walter Piston, the composer who labors over the river in Cambridge to make Harvard as musical as he can.

Tonight's huge audience, which overflowed onto the wide lawns of Tanglewood from the rim of the music shed, began gathering from all parts of the East before lunch. It was living proof that the festival actually has succeeded in remarking Berkshire County in its own image.

Six years ago the festival was given in a big tent on whatever farm could be had. When it rained, the audience swam home. Today there is not only a permanent shed seating 5700 persons for the concert, but accommodations on the 210-acre estate for a school which will be opened under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction next July.

At the beginning, many of the older families in this very plush summer colony were a little worried about bringing in such hordes of "outsiders." After all, until a very few years ago, some of the original squatters drove from lunch to tea to dinner in barouches powered by shiny bays and conservatism rules still.

Cordial Cooperation.

There is no question now of the value of the festival, and many of the best people are actively entangled in the Tanglewood activities. More important, perhaps, is the fact that every other cultural activity in this section has cordially cooperated with the festival people to avoid conflicts of schedule.

The famous Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge concerts atop South Mountain near Pittsfield gave its usual Sunday program yesterday, when there was no music at Tanglewood. The Alexander Bloch Quartet at Hillsdale played last night instead of today. Ted Shawn and his dancing men also vacate Sunday for the festival. There are half a dozen more examples.

But the best was this morning, when more than a thousand Berkshire County school children checked vacation activities for a while and turned up at Tanglewood for the open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony.

Last spring the festival sponsored a layman's music course whose effects lasted until today. And today school authorities and parents motored a thousand eager children to Tanglewood to see how symphonic music actually is prepared. They were joined by 2000 festival membership holders, who are invited each summer to hear a rehearsal as Dr. Koussevitzky's guests.

Beethoven and Sibelius.

Tonight's music included, besides Piston's concerto for orchestra, two great symphonies, Beethoven's Seventh and Sibelius's fifth. Piston's work is more easily got down than some contemporary specimens. It sounds as if it had been set down fluently and with a certain amount of personal delight, also unlike some of our more astringent modernists. Nothing Piston did exactly dimmed the lights of Sibelius or Beethoven, however.

As many festival-goers as Berkshire County can conveniently accommodate will spend tonight in the neighborhood, to be on hand for the matinee which closes the first half of the festival tomorrow afternoon.

106

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
Sunday
Union & Republican

AUG 6 - 1939

First Half of Music Festival Closes at Tanglewood Today

Crowd of 6200 Tops Records For Festival

Demand for Today's Seats Even Greater — Several Hundred Pay for Use of Standing Room

Tanglewood, Aug. 5—With an attendance estimated by the management at 6200, an all-time record fo the Berkshire Music festival, th second concert of the sixth seaso was given here tonight by the Bosto Symphony orchestra, Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor. The gate re ceipts exceeded those of Thursda night by $400.

All day long a constant stream o prospective festival patrons thronge the office at Stockbridge and when i was closed for the day only a fe scattered higher priced seats wer available. Several hundred person paid $1.50 each for general admissio tickets, which means standing roo outside of the music shed colonnad and with the orchestra hidden fro view.

The requests for seats were unpre edented for any musical event in th history of Western Massachusett The demand for tomorrow, with pleas ant weather forecast, has been eve greater than for today. This was perfect midsummer evening.

No Traffic Delay

Nine members of the state polic under Lieut. John F. McLaughlin an Sergt W[illegible]er F. [illegible]ton of Northampton did a fine job directing traffic. There was no delay in reaching Tanglewood from any direction and the parking arrangements under Sheriff James Bruce McIntyre were excellent in every way. Two additional entrances were opened tonight which helped greatly to expedite the arrival and departure of the throng.

Fashionable gowns were the rule tonight all through the audience. These were in contrast to the subdued tones in evidence during the storm Thursday evening.

After the first number, which was Walter Piston's "Concerto for orchestra," the composer, native of Rockland, Me., 45 years old, was escorted to the front of the stage by Dr Koussevitzky and received a remarkable ovation. At the conclusion of the Sibelius symphony just before intermission Dr Koussevitzky was recalled five times. Never has a Tanglewood audience been more demonstrative.

By 6.30 the crowd began to arrive and for two hours visitors admired the formal gardens which were first laid out by the Tappen family nearly 30 years ago. Showers had freshened the acres of lawn and for many visitors a new enthusiasm was awakened not only by the music but by the entrancing beauty of the place itself.

Berkshire Festival Convinces Old Timers

Tanglewood, Aug. 5—(AP)—Serge Koussevitzky, one of the great symphonic conductors of the world, tonight reopened the Berkshire Symphonic festival with a program honoring, among others, one of his Boston contemporaries, Walter Piston, the composer who labors over the river in Cambridge to make Harvard as musical as he can.

Tonight's huge audience, which overflowed onto the wide lawns of Tanglewood from the rim of the music shed, began gathering from all parts of the East before lunch. It was living proof that the festival actually has succeeded in remaking Berkshire county in its own image.

Six years ago the festival was given in a big tent on whatever farm could be had. When it rained, the audience swam home. Today there is not only a permanent shed seating 5700 persons for the concert, but accommodations on the 210-acre estate for a school which will be opened under Dr Koussevitzky's direction next July.

Families Were Worried

At the beginning, many of the older families in this very plush summer colony were a little worried about bringing in such hordes of "outsiders." After all, until a very few years ago, some of the original squatters drove from lunch to tea to dinner in barouches powered by shiny bays and conservatism rules still.

There is no question now of the value of the festival, and many of the best people are actively entangled in the Tanglewood activities. More important, perhaps, is the fact that every other cultural activity in this section has cordially cooperated with the festival people to avoid conflicts of schedule.

The famous Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge concerts atop South mountain near Pittsfield gave its usual Sunday program yesterday, when there was no music at Tanglewood. The Alexander Bloch quartet at Hillsdale played last night instead of today. Ted Shawn and his dancing men also vacate Sunday for the festival. There are half a dozen more examples.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 6 - 1939

CONCERT AND OPERA ASIDES

THE Berkshire Festival Musical Academy is materializing faster than its best friends have anticipated. Last week came the first official announcement of its definite establishment in July, 1940, together with pertinent details of its purpose, scope and facilities. One hears that long before the announcement the authorities were swamped with applications that were stimulated merely by the advance rumors about the school.

Serge Koussevitzky, who conceived the idea of the school, describes its purpose in the following words:

"A center of music would be a boon for those who want to study the fine arts in their relationship to culture; who are anxious to refresh their minds and personalities through contact with the best in Art and the most distinguished in Culture; and for those who long for a creative rest in the Summer."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 6 - 1939

Big Audience Attends Berkshire Festival

Koussevitzky Honors, Among Others, Walter Piston, Cambridge Composer

By JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Arts Editor

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 5.—Serge Koussevitzky, one of the great symphonic conductors of the world, tonight reopened the Berkshire Symphonic Festival with a program honoring, among others, one of his Boston contemporaries, Walter Piston, the composer who labors over the river in Cambridge to make Harvard as musical as he can.

Tonight's huge audience, which overflowed onto the wide lawns of Tanglewood from the rim of the music shed, began gathering from all parts of the East before lunch. It was living proof that the festival actually has succeeded in remaking Berkshire county in its own image.

Once Given in Tent

Six years ago the festival was given in a big tent on whatever farm could be had. When it rained the audience swam home. Today there is not only a permanent shed seating 5700 persons for the concert, but accommodations on the 210-acre estate for a school which will be opened under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction next July.

At the beginning, many of the older families in this very plush Summer colony were a little worried about bringing in such hordes of "outsiders." After all, until a very few years ago, some of the original squatters drove from lunch to tea to dinner in barouches powered by shiny bays and conservatism rules still.

Co-operation

There is no question now of the value of the festival, and many of the best people are actively entangled in the Tanglewood activities. More important, perhaps, is the fact that every other cultural activity in this section has cordially co-operated with the festival people to avoid conflicts of schedule.

The famous Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge concerts atop South Mountain, near Pittsfield, gave its usual Sunday program yesterday when there was no music at Tanglewood. The Alexander Bloch Quartet at Hillsdale played last night instead of today. Ted Shawn and his dancing men also vacate Sunday for the festival. There are half a dozen more examples.

1000 Children Attend

But the best was this morning, when more than a thousand Berkshire county school children checked vacation activities for a while and turned up at Tanglewood for the open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony.

Last Spring the festival sponsored a layman's music course whose effects lasted until today. And today school authorities and parents motored a thousand eager children to Tanglewood to see how symphonic music actually is prepared. They were joined by two thousand festival membership holders, who are invited each Summer to hear a rehearsal as Dr. Koussevitzky's guests.

Program

Tonight's music included, besides Piston's Concerto for Orchestra, two great symphonies—Bethoven's Seventh and Sibelius' Fifth. Piston's work is more easily got down than some contemporary specimens—it sounds as if it had been set down fluently and with a certain amount of personal delight, also unlike some of our more astringent modernists. Nothing Piston did exactly dimmed the lights of Sibelius or Bethoven, however.

As many festival goers as Berkshire county can conveniently accomodate will spend tonight in the neighborhood, to be on hand for the matinee which closes the first half of the festival tomorrow afternoon.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BOISE, IDAHO
STATESMAN

AUG 6 - 1939

Russian Realizes Symphony Dream

BY JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Arts Editor

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass.—When Serge Koussevitzky's baton flicked the first notes of Bach's third Brandenburg concerto out of the Boston Symphony orchestra here Thursday the sixth Berkshire symphonic festival began, but also a project he has had in mind since 1910 was finally assured.

This is the school (he would as soon it were called a "music center") which is now definitely scheduled to open in early July, 1940, at Tangelwood, the estate given the Boston symphony two years ago by Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Boston as a permanent home for the Berkshire festival.

Before the World war and the Russian revolution drained away the Koussevitzky fortune, the conductor and his sculptor wife had hoped to found such a school on their Russian estate.

The idea has been in Houssevitzky's mind ever since—but either money or a suitable place was lacking, and sometimes both. Now, however, an admiring board of directors has given word that the plan can be initiated.

There will be two classes of students at Tanglewood for the six weeks of the first term, next summer. One class will give advanced instruction to trained students. The other will be more general, and will concentrate on choral work which is to come to a climax with a performance of Bach's B minor mass under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction.

An intelligent interest in music is the only entrance requirement (except for such work as Dr. Koussevitzky's conducting class).

THIS CLIPPING FROM BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

AUG 6 - 1939

Serge Koussevitzky Reopens Berkshire Symphonic Festival

Huge Audience Hears Boston Symphony Play Walter Piston's Music.

BY JOHN SELBY
(Associated Press Arts Editor)

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug 5—Serge Koussevitzky, one of the great symphonic conductors of the world, tonight reopened the Berkshire Symphonic festival with a program honoring, among others, one of his Boston contemporaries, Walter Piston, the composer who labors over the river in Cambridge to make Harvard as musical as he can.

Tonight's huge audience, which overflowed onto the wide lawns of Tanglewood from the rim of the music shed, began gathering from all parts of the East before lunch. It was living proof that the festival actually has succeeded in remaking Berkshire county in its own image.

Six years ago the festival was given in a big tent on whatever farm could be had. When it rained, the audience swam home. Today there is not only a permanent shed seating 5700 persons for the concert, but accommodations on the 219-acre estate for a school which will be opened under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction next July.

Festival Now Institution

At the beginning, many of the older families in this very plush summer colony were a little worried about bringing in such hordes of "outsiders." After all, until a very few years ago, some of the original squatters drove from lunch to tea to dinner in barouches powered by shiny bays and conservatism rules still.

There is no question now of the value of the festival and many of the best people are actively entangled in the Tanglewood activities. More important, perhaps, is the fact that every other cultural activity in this section has cordially cooperated with the festival people to avoid conflicts of schedule.

The famous Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge concerts atop South Mountain near Pittsfield gave its usual Sunday program yesterday, when there was no music at Tanglewood. The Alexander Bloch quartet at Hillsdale played last night instead of today. Ted Shawn and his dancing men also vacate Sunday for the festival. There are half a dozen more examples.

But the best was this morning, when more than a thousand Berkshire county school children checked vacation activities for a while and turned up at Tanglewood for the open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

AUG 6 - 1939

FESTIVAL CONTINUES

Koussevitsky Offers Works of Piston, Beethoven and Sibelius.

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 5.—(AP)—Serge Koussevitzky, one of the great symphonic conductors of the world, tonight continued the Berkshire Symphonic Festival with a program honoring, among others, one of his Boston contemporaries, Walter Piston, the composer who labors over the river in Cambridge to make Harvard as musical as he can.

Tonight's music included, besides Piston's concerto for orchestra, two great symphonies—Beethoven's Seventh and Sibelius's Fifth.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DAVENPORT, IA.
DEMOCRAT-LEADER

AUG 6 - 1939

THE SECOND WEEK

. . . of the Berkshire festival opens Thursday with the Boston Symphony playing concerts on Thursday, Saturday and Sunday. Among the works listed for presentation are Beethoven's Second Symphony, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," Ravel's "La Valse," Moussorsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition," Schumann's Fourth Symphony and Wagner's Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," prelude to "Lohengrin," prelude to "Die Mistersinger" and "Siegfried's Rhine Journey." The Sunday concert will conclude the 1939 season.

A MUSICAL

. . . academy to be associated with the Berkshire Music Festival at Tangelwood, Mass., will begin early in July next year. The first session will continue for six weeks and culminate in the annual festival concerts. There will be two sections in the academy, one will be for advanced instruction to a limited number of special students and the other a general session for a larger number. Dr. Serge Koussevitsky will have a class in orchestral conducting for the special students and there will be a festival chorus. Individual instruction in vocal or instrumental music will be available under a faculty which includes 30 members of the Boston Symphony.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 6 - 1939

BECAUSE OF the interest of a number of music lovers coming from distances who wish to include one or more concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood in their plans to combine a visit to New England with a visit to the New York World's Fair, reservations for single concerts are being accepted by the Festival office at Stockbridge, Mass. They will be filled on or after July 20. Tanglewood, home of the Festival, on Route 183 between Stockbridge and Lenox, is only three hours by motor from the Fair.

The demand for reservations for a second series of concerts to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, continues brisk with a marked increase in the number of reservations from Canada and the Mid-West. The concert dates are Aug. 10, 12 and 13.

In addition there will be many activities of interest to Berkshire visitors. Ted Shawn and his men dancers will hold forth at their Summer headquarters in West Becket; The Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge will present Broadway stars every night and at two matinees; there will be chamber music at the South Mountain in Pittsfield and Music Mountain at Falls Village, Conn.; and art exhibitions at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield. There will be the Berkshire Garden Center at Stockbridge, the Pleasant Valley Bird and Wild Flower Sanctuary at Lenox, and the Mission House at Stockbridge, among the many places of interest to visit.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
AUG 6 - 1939

Berkshire Festival Is Major Musical Event

Boston Symphony Orchestra Is Chief Attraction At Stockbridge, Though The Lovely Countryside, Theater and Art Museum Are Also Incentives To Attend

By H. EARLE JOHNSON

THE VERY handsome doings at Stockbridge, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Koussevitsky on public view, continue this afternoon and resume again on Thursday for another weekend. The music is the major beauty of the immediate occasion, but the new improvements of the estate "Tanglewood" and the loveliness of the country round about give the Berkshire Symphonic Festival a special claim to desirability. In the neighborhood are other attractions, carefully arranged to keep the visitor busy, but not to raise the question of whether one should go 'here' or 'there.'

The Berkshire Playhouse is in session and the South Mountain Quartet gives an extra concert on Friday afternoon; Ted Shawn and his men dancers have special performances; the Pittsfield Art Museum is worth a visit and there are other events within a short drive of the main line. These include the Gordon String Quartet at Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn. (on Route 7) where the players have added an extra Saturday afternoon concert to their regular Sunday performance. Parking facilities are much improved at the 'Shed' and there are seats to be had if one arrives early enough, or is wise enough to make advance orders. The programs for the remaining concerts follow:

This Afternoon

C. P. E. Bach—Concerto in D Major.

Prokofieff—"Peter and the Wolf," an Orchestral Fairy Tale for Children.

Tchaikovsky—Symphony No. 4.

Thursday, at 8:30 P. M.

Beethoven—Symphony No. 2.

Strauss—'Also Sprach Zarathustra," Tone Poem, Op. 30.

Mussorgsky—'Pictures at an Exhibition," arranged by Maurice Ravel.

Saturday, at 8:30 P. M.

Haydn—Symphony in B-flat, No. 102.

Stravinsky—"Le Sacre du Printemps."

Wagner—Overture to "Der Fliegende Hollander," Prelude to "Lohengrin," Bacchanale from "Tannhauser," Prelude to "Die Meistersinger."

Sunday at 3:30 P. M.

Schumann—Symphony No. 4.

Debussy—Prelude a "L'Apre-midi d'un Faune."

Ravel—"La Valse" Choreographic Poem.

Sibelius—Symphony No. 2.

Great Scholar

Dr. Waldo Selden Pratt achieved a wide fame and gave impetus to a field which needed encouragement. That field was American music, and one may justly say that n› writer except Oscar Sonneck did more to investigate and set down facts about our musical beginnings than Dr. Pratt when he was co-editor of the American supplement to the indespensible Grove's "Dictionary of Music and Musicians." He was also the author of a standard "History of Music," works on church music, and other subjects; within the year Columbia University Press published his notes on an early "Ainsworth' Psalter, used in this country in the 17th century.

After serving as assistant director of the Metropolitan Museum, Dr. Pratt joined the faculty of Hartford Theological Seminarv where he remained for 35 years, until his retirement in 1925. The list of his notable connections as editor, teacher, lecturer, writer, and organist is a long one and his good influence has been felt in every phase of music touching the American scene and bearing the mark of scholarship and authority. Of late his interests concentrated on Hymnology and he was writer of many articles on various phases of divine worship.

Of all his works, the additional volume to the English-edited Grove remains a constant source of necessary information for the practical musician. Its tables and biographical articles sum up that which is known about music in America in the 17th and 18th centuries and provide a challenge, as yet largely unmet, for further work to be done in those fields.

Saxaphone

The high-brow musician is inclined to snub the saxaphonist when met outside the dance hall, but the knowing are aware that that instrument has a very presentable history. A news item that Cecil Leeson, concert saxaphonist, is teaching at the National Music Camp, Interlochen, Mich., this summer and performing a concerto by Glazunoff reminds us that no less a composer than Debussy also wrote a concerto for that instrument. Indeed, he wrote it for a lady, resident of Boston, Mass., U. S. A., on commission; the lady in question was an amateur saxaphonist fully 30 years ago, and went about ordering pieces, a quite logical procedure since there wasn't enough pieces already written by reputable composers. Debussy joked about the matter a good deal in his letters, but finally wrote the piece and duly forwarded it. It hasn't been heard much and probably is not top-notch Debussy, but Mr. Leeson likely enough has it in his repertory, and the fairminded must admit that the saxaphone deserves a few good pieces. When handled like a respectable musical instrument, it has a ravishing tone.

Columbia Records

Moses Smith, able critics of the Boston Transcript and successor to the famous "H. T. P." has resigned to become an executive of the Columbia Recording Corporation in New York. Mr. Smith's province concerns the classical department, and he will select the repertory, artists, and actually supervise the recording in a manner similar to that directed by Charles O'Connell of Victor. With the greatly improved reproduction shown of late by Columbia, and the high standard of artistry current in their releases, it may be supposed that the future will bring many works to performance for which the record enthusiast is anxiously waiting.

Modesty's Reward

A modest gentleman who has for several years hesitated to cross the Atlantic is now being talked about in the inner circles. He is Paul Paray, conductor of the Paris Opera and the Concerts Colonne, who made a single appearance at the Stadium in New York last week; not widely heralded, he drew one of the smaller audiences of the season, but one which showed by every means at its disposal that he was welcome. The orchestra personnel likewise gave him a hearty reception, and the solons believe that Mr. Paray will be seen, if not heard, in these parts before long.

Collection

A library of 1,194,697 pieces in anybody's attic would keep one busy for rainy days on end. The Library of Congress, according to its annual report, houses this number on the subject of music, comprising sheet music, scores, and phonograph recordings in the majority, the remainder being literature and theory. In addition to the huge task of cataloguing, referencing, and otherwise maintaining them, the Library manages concerts in Washington and throughout the nation in connection with educational and cultural institutions. Furthermore, the the world is amazing, for it has become the logical place to seek information on all phases of music, and the trained assistants are kept busy answering the vague but simple questions of the general public and the specific inquiries such as only the research specialist can devise; scholars are constantly visiting the library in person to make use of the collections and they, too, must be aided by a trained staff.

The report of the librarian, Dr. Harold Spivacke, lists some of the recent accessions and mentions the outstanding departments. For instance, additional holographs of Moussorgsky and Sibelius have been acquired, and many other contemporary composers, American and foreign are added to the collections. Photostat facsimiles have opened up a new field by which the American library may become comprehensive, and the new Microfilm process whereby works may be placed on tiny film and unrolled for the spectator, has found a wide reception. Further developments with both these mediums will show a more impressive accomplishment. New Beethoven letters are also discovered and now owned by the Nation and a vast number of early imprints and early books have filled out certain gaps in a magnificent library.

From the beginning of the Division of Music, there has been a conscious effort to build up the section on full scores of operas, either by purchase or by copying of manuscript scores in foreign libraries (many operas were never published in full score), and the accomplishments of the past year have added several hundred more. Professor Lomax and his family continue to develop the Archives of American Folk-Song; these are often taken in the field on disks, and then transcribed in Washington; the presence of these materials will probably be of greater importance one or two hundred years from now when succeeding generations will rise up and call them blessed.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES
AUG 6 - 1939

Boston Composer Is Honored By Koussevitsky in Festival

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 5 (AP)—Serge Koussevitzky, one of the great symphonic conductors of the world, tonight reopened the Berkshire Symphonic Festival with a program honoring, among others, one of his Boston contemporaries, Walter Piston, the composer who labors over the river in Cambridge to make Harvard as musical as he can.

Tonight's huge audience, which overflowed on to the wide lawns of Tanglewood from the rim of the music shed, began gathering from all parts of the East before lunch. It was living proof that the festival actually has succeeded in remaking Berkshire County in its own image.

Given in Tent

Six years ago the festival was given in a big tent on whatever farm could be had. When it rained, the audience swam home. Today there is not only a permanent shed seating 5,700 persons for the concert, but accommodations on the 210-acre estate for a school which will be opened under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction next July.

At the beginning, many of the older families in this very plush Summer colony were a little worried about bringing in such hordes of "outsiders." After all, until a very few years ago, some of the original squatters drove from lunch to tea to dinner in barouches powered by shiny bays and conservatism rules still.

There is no question now of the value of the festival, and many of the best people are actively entangled in the Tanglewood activities. More important, perhaps, is the fact that every other cultural activity in this section has cooperated cordially with the festival people to avoid conflicts of schedule.

Symphonies Given

Tonight's music included, besides Piston's concerto for orchestra, two great symphonies—Beethoven's seventh and Sibelius' Fifth. Piston's work is more eeasily got down than some contemporary specimens—it sounds as if it had been set down fluently and with a certain amount of personal delight, also unlike some of our more astringent modernists. Nothing Piston did exactly dimmed the lights of Sibelius of Beethoven, however.

As many festival goers as Berkshire County can conveniently accommodate will spend tonight in the neighborhood, to be on hand for the matinee which closes the first half of the festival tomorrow afternoon.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
Sunday
Union & Republican
AUG 6 - 1939

Informal portrait of Dr Sergei Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, now being heard at the festival in the Berkshires.

107

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

AUG 6 - 1939

Berkshire Festival Is Major Musical Event

Boston Symphony Orchestra Is Chief Attraction At Stockbridge, Though The Lovely Countryside, Theater and Art Museum Are Also Incentives To Attend

By H. EARLE JOHNSON

THE VERY handsome doings at Stockbridge, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Koussevitsky on public view, continue this afternoon and resume again on Thursday for another weekend. The music is the major beauty of the immediate occasion, but the new improvements of the estate "Tanglewood" and the loveliness of the country round about give the Berkshire Symphonic Festival a special claim to desirability. In the neighborhood are other attractions, carefully arranged to keep the visitor busy, but not to raise the question of whether one should go 'here' or 'there.'

The Berkshire Playhouse is in session and the South Mountain Quartet gives an extra concert on Friday afternoon; Ted Shawn and his men dancers have special performances; the Pittsfield Art Museum is worth a visit and there are other events within a short drive of the main line. These include the Gordon String Quartet at Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn. (on Route 7) where the players have added an extra Saturday afternoon concert to their regular Sunday performance. Parking facilities are much improved at the 'Shed' and there are seats to be had if one arrives early enough, or is wise enough to make advance orders. The programs for the remaining concerts follow:

This Afternoon

C. P. E. Bach—Concerto in D Major.

Prokofieff—"Peter and the Wolf," an Orchestral Fairy Tale for Children.

Tchaikovsky—Symphony No. 4.

Thursday, at 8:30 P. M.

Beethoven—Symphony No. 2.

Strauss—'Also Sprach Zarathustra," Tone Poem, Op. 30.

Mussorgsky—'Pictures at an Exhibition," arranged by Maurice Ravel.

Saturday, at 8:30 P. M.

Haydn—Symphony in B-flat, No. 102.

Stravinsky—"Le Sacre du Printemps."

Wagner—Overture to "Der Fliegende Hollander," Prelude to "Lohengrin," Bacchanale from "Tannhauser," Prelude to "Die Meistersinger."

Sunday at 3:30 P. M.

Schumann—Symphony No. 4.

Debussy—Prelude a "L'Apre-midi d'un Faune."

Ravel—"La Valse" Choreographic Poem.

Sibelius—Symphony No. 2.

Great Scholar

Dr. Waldo Selden Pratt achieved a wide fame and gave impetus to a field which needed encouragement. That field was American music, and one may justly say that no writer except Oscar Sonneck did more to investigate and set down facts about our musical beginnings than Dr. Pratt when he was co-editor of the American supplement to the indespensible Grove's "Dictionary of Music and Musicians." He was also the author of a standard "History of Music," works on church music, and other subjects; within the year Columbia University Press published his notes on an early "Ainsworth' Psalter, used in this country in the 17th century.

After serving as assistant director of the Metropolitan Museum, Dr. Pratt joined the faculty of Hartford Theological Seminary where he remained for 35 years, until his retirement in 1925. The list of his notable connections as editor, teacher, lecturer, writer, and organist is a long one and his good influence has been felt in every phase of music touching the American scene and bearing the mark of scholarship and authority. Of late his interests concentrated on Hymnology and he was writer of many articles on various phases of divine worship.

Of all his works, the additional volume to the English-edited Grove remains a constant source of necessary information for the practical musician. Its tables and biographical articles sum up that which is known about music in America in the 17th and 18th centuries and provide a challenge, as yet largely unmet, for further work to be done in those fields.

Saxaphone

The high-brow musician is inclined to snub the saxaphonist when met outside the dance hall, but the knowing are aware that that instrument has a very presentable history. A news item that Cecil Leeson, concert saxaphonist, is teaching at the National Music Camp, Interlochen, Mich., this summer and performing a concerto by Glazunoff reminds us that no less a composer than Debussy also wrote a concerto for that instrument. Indeed, he wrote it for a lady, resident of Boston, Mass., U. S. A., on commission; the lady in question was an amateur saxaphonist fully 30 years ago, and went about ordering pieces, a quite logical procedure since there wasn't enough pieces already written by reputable composers. Debussy joked about the matter a good deal in his letters, but finally wrote the piece and duly forwarded it. It hasn't been heard much and probably is not top-notch Debussy, but Mr. Leeson likely enough has it in his repertory, and the fairminded must admit that the saxaphone deserves a few good pieces. When handled like a respectable musical instrument, it has a ravishing tone.

Columbia Records

Moses Smith, able critics of the Boston Transcript and successor to the famous "H. T. P." has resigned to become an executive of the Columbia Recording Corporation in New York. Mr. Smith's province concerns the classical department, and he will select the repertory, artists, and actually supervise the recording in a manner similar to that directed by Charles O'Connell of Victor. With the greatly improved reproduction shown of late by Columbia, and the high standard of artistry current in their releases, it may be supposed that the future will bring many works to performance for which the record enthusiast is anxiously waiting.

Modesty's Reward

A modest gentleman who has for several years hesitated to cross the Atlantic is now being talked about in the inner circles. He is Paul Paray, conductor of the Paris Opera and the Concerts Colonne, who made a single appearance at the Stadium in New York last week; not widely heralded, he drew one of the smaller audiences of the season, but one which showed by every means at its disposal that he was welcome. The orchestra personnel likewise gave him a hearty reception, and the solons believe that Mr. Paray will be seen, if not heard, in these parts before long.

Collection

A library of 1,194,697 pieces in anybody's attic would keep one busy for rainy days on end. The Library of Congress, according to its annual report, houses this number on the subject of music, comprising sheet music, scores, and phonograph recordings in the majority, the remainder being literature and theory. In addition to the huge task of cataloguing, referencing, and otherwise maintaining them, the Library manages concerts in Washington and throughout the nation in connection with educational and cultural institutions. Furthermore, the service which this library renders to the world is amazing, for it has become the logical place to seek information on all phases of music, and the trained assistants are kept busy answering the vague but simple questions of the general public and the specific inquiries such as only the research specialist can devise; scholars are constantly visiting the library in person to make use of the collections and they, too, must be aided by a trained staff.

The report of the librarian, Dr. Harold Spivacke, lists some of the recent accessions and mentions the outstanding departments. For instance, additional holographs of Moussorgsky and Sibelius have been acquired, and many other contemporary composers, American and foreign are added to the collections. Photostat facsimiles have opened up a new field by which the American library may become comprehensive, and the new Microfilm process whereby works may be placed on tiny film and unrolled for the spectator, has found a wide reception. Further developments with both these mediums will show a more impressive accomplishment. New Beethoven letters are also discovered and now owned by the Nation and a vast number of early imprints and early books have filled out certain gaps in a magnificent library.

From the beginning of the Division of Music, there has been a conscious effort to build up the section on full scores of operas, either by purchase or by copying of manuscript scores in foreign libraries (many operas were never published in full score), and the accomplishments of the past year have added several hundred more. Professor Lomax and his family continue to develop the Archives of American Folk-Song; these are often taken in the field on disks, and then transcribed in Washington; the presence of these materials will probably be of greater importance one or two hundred years from now when succeeding generations will rise up and call them blessed.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

AUG 6 - 1939

Boston Composer Is Honored By Koussevitsky in Festival

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 5 (AP)—Serge Koussevitzky, one of the great symphonic conductors of the world, tonight reopened the Berkshire Symphonic Festival with a program honoring, among others, one of his Boston contemporaries, Walter Piston, the composer who labors over the river in Cambridge to make Harvard as musical as he can.

Tonight's huge audience, which overflowed on to the wide lawns of Tanglewood from the rim of the music shed, began gathering from all parts of the East before lunch. It was living proof that the festival actually has succeeded in remaking Berkshire County in its own image.

Given in Tent

Six years ago the festival was given in a big tent on whatever farm could be had. When it rained, the audience swam home. Today there is not only a permanent shed seating 5,700 persons for the concert, but accommodations on the 210-acre estate for a school which will be opened under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction next July.

At the beginning, many of the older families in this very plush Summer colony were a little worried about bringing in such hordes of "outsiders." After all, until a very few years ago, some of the original squatters drove from lunch to tea to dinner in barouches powered by shiny bays and conservatism rules still.

There is no question now of the value of the festival, and many of the best people are actively entangled in the Tanglewood activities. More important, perhaps, is the fact that every other cultural activity in this section has cooperated cordially with the festival people to avoid conflicts of schedule.

Symphonies Given

Tonight's music included, besides Piston's concerto for orchestra, two great symphonies—Beethoven's seventh and Sibelius' Fifth. Piston's work is more eeasily got down than some contemporary specimens—it sounds as if it had been set down fluently and with a certain amount of personal delight, also unlike some of our more astringent modernists. Nothing Piston did exactly dimmed the lights of Sibelius of Beethoven, however.

As many festival goers as Berkshire County can conveniently accommodate will spend tonight in the neighborhood, to be on hand for the matinee which closes the first half of the festival tomorrow afternoon.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
Sunday
Union & Republican

AUG 6 - 1939

Informal portrait of Dr Sergei Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, now being heard at the festival in the Berkshires.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 6 - 1939

KOUSSEVITZKY HONORS WORK OF BOSTONIAN

Walter Piston's Concerto Included In Tanglewood Program

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 5—Serge Koussevitzky, one of the great symphonic conductors of the world, tonight reopened the Berkshire symphonic festival with a program honoring, among others, one of his Boston contemporaries, Walter Piston the composer who labors over the river in Cambridge to make Harvard as musical as he can.

Tonight's huge audience, which overflowed on to the wide lawns of Tanglewood from the rim of the music shed, began gathering from all parts of the East before lunch. It was living proof that the festival actually has succeeded in remaking Berkshire county in its own image.

Six years ago the festival was given in a big tent on whatever farm could be had. When it rained, the audience swam home. Today there is not only a permanent shed seating 5,700 persons for the concert, but accommodations on the 210-acre estate for a school which will be opened under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction next July.

At the beginning, many of the older families in this very plush summer colony were a little worried about bringing in such hordes of "outsiders." After all, until a very few years ago, some of the original squatters drove from lunch to tea to dinner in barouchers powered by shiny bays and conservatism rules still.

There is no question now of the value of the festival, and many of the best people are actively entangled in the Tanglewood activities. More important, perhaps, is the fact that every other cultural activity in this section has cordially cooperated with the festival people to avoid conflicts of schedule.

The famous Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge concerts atop South Mountain near Pittsfield gave its usual Sunday program yesterday, when there was no music at Tanglewood. The Alexander Bloch quartet at Hillsdale played last night instead of today. Ted Shawn and his dancing men also vacate Sunday for the festival. There are half a dozen more examples.

But the best was this morning, when more than a thusand Berkshire county school children checked vacation activities for a while and turned up at Tanglewood for the open rehearsal of the Boston symphony.

Last spring the festival sponsored a layman's music course whose effects lasted until today. And today school authorities and parents motored a thousand eager children to Tanglewood to see how symphonic music actually is prepared. They were joined by 2,000 festival membership holders, who are invited each summer to hear a rehearsal as Dr. Koussevitzky's guests.

Tonight's music included , besides Piston's concerto for orchestra, two great symphonies—Bethoven's seventh and Sibelius' fifth. Piston's work is more easily got down than some contemporary specimens—it sounds as if it had been set down fluently and with a certain amount of personal delight, also unlike some of our more astringent modernists. Nothing Piston did exactly dimmed the lights of Sibelius or Bethoven, however.

As many festival goers as Berkshire county can conveniently accommodate will spend tonight in the neighborhood, to be on hand for the matinee which closes the first half of the festival tomorrow afternoon.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

AUG 6 - 1939

Second Concert Of Berkshire Festival Given

Koussevitzky Offers Piston Concerto; 3,000 Attend Rehearsal in Morning

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 5.—After the customary one-day intermission following the opening program, the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave the second concert of the sixth Berkshire Symphonic Festival under Serge Koussevitzky's direction tonight in the music shed on the Tanglewood Estate.

Following his custom of including a work by a living American composer in the festival repertoire, the conductor began his program with a concerto for orchestra by Walter Piston, of Harvard University's music faculty, which was followed by two symphonies, the fifth of Sibelius and the seventh of Beethoven.

The ideal weather which prevailed during the day assured the presence of an audience not limited to the music shed's generous seating capacity, since the good acoustic conditions of the music shed, now housing its second festival, make it possible to hear the music over a wide radius outside it.

The attendance tonight was estimated at more than 6,000, tying the record set at one of the Sunday concerts last summer, while the crowd for the first matinee of this year's festival tomorrow, judging by advance sales, is expected to be even larger.

Both in the Piston concerto and in the Sibelius symphony, the noted orchestra observed the high standards which marked its work in Boston and in New York in the winter season, and Dr. Koussevitzky's readings told of his understanding of the differing styles of the two composers. Mr. Piston was called to the platform by the conductor to share the applause after his work, and there was a long ovation for Dr. Koussevitzky and his musicians after the Finnish symphony.

In the morning, Dr. Koussevitzky conducted the orchestra in a rehearsal heard by an attentive invited audience estimated at about 3,000, composed of members of the festival sponsoring committees and more than 1,000 students at public and parochial high schools of Berkshire County.

The players presented in full Emanuel Bach's Concerto in D in Steinberg's arrangement, the Piston concerto, and Serge Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," which, with the Bach work, will be played tomorrow afternoon, and then ran through parts of the Sibelius symphony.

Richard Hale, as in last winter's New York performance, was the narrator in "Peter and the Wolf," and with the large proportion of school pupils in the audience, his opening invocation to "My Dear Children" had a much more literal application than usual.

Despite the presence of an audience, it was a regular working rehearsal, Dr. Koussevitzky making occasional halts in the Piston concerto and one or two in the Bach work, when he wanted to make sure of the realization of certain interpretive details.

The opportunity to hear the two works consecutively was particularly interesting. Mr. Piston's music can be determined as a concerto grosso in the classic sense although, instead of using one particular group or choir of the orchestra in a solo role, he assigns the solos to various instruments or divisions in turn.

It was gratifying to note that Dr. Koussevitzky was placing particular emphasis upon a thorough preparation of this American work and that he had decided to give an opportunity for rehearsing to an American composition which had been regarded as of superior merit when first performed three years ago.

Six concerts have already been announced for the 1940 festival, presumably at the usual time in the first half of August. The figure is the same as in all festivals since 1933, but it was said that extra concerts were probable. Meanwhile, the festival committee has asked for $80,742 in contributions for finishing touches, including curtains to close in the auditorium during storms such as on Thursday, and for further improvements on the grounds and parking areas.

George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said today that he and the festival committee had already received many inquiries about the music academy to be opened next July under Dr. Koussevitzky's superintendence, and that much interest had also been shown by students at Harvard and Radcliffe College. The academy will be housed in existing buildings on the Tanglewood Estate.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

AUG 6 - 1939

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

THE third concert of the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction this afternoon at 3:30 in the Music Shed on the Tanglewood estate at Lenox, Mass. The program includes C. P. E. Bach's concerto in D major, Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with Richard Hale as the narrator, and Tchaikovsky's fourth sympnony.

The dates and programs for the four remaining concerts are:

Thursday, Aug. 10, 8:30

Symphony No. 2, in D major	Beethoven
Also sprach Zarathustra	R. Strauss
Pictures at an Exhibition	Moussorgsky-Ravel

Saturday, Aug. 12, 8:30

Symphony No. 102, in B flat	Haydn
Le Sacre du Printemps	Stravinsky
Overture to "The Flying Dutchman"; Prelude to "Lohengrin," Bacchanale from "Tannhaeuser"; Prelude to "Die Meistersinger"	Wagner

Sunday, Aug. 13, 3:30

Symphony No. 4, in D minor	Schumann
Afternoon of a Faun	Debussy
La Valse	Ravel
Symphony No. 2, in D major	Sibelius

Information about tickets and lodgings is obtainable from the Berkshire Symphonic Festival office at Stockbridge, Mass.

Chamber Music

Several other musical events will be held this week elsewhere in the Berkshire and neighboring regions. The South Mountain Quartet will give the sixth concert of its chamber music series at South Mountain, Pittsfield, Mass., next Friday at 4 o'clock. Harvey Shapiro, 'cellist, will be the assisting artist with Kathleen Parlow and Edwin Ideler, violinists; Conrad Held, violist, and Willem Willeke, cellist, in a program including Glazounoff's string quintet in A major and Schubert's string quintet in C major and three short works for string quartet. The seventh concert of the series will be held Sunday afternoon, Aug. 20. Tickets are available without charge by application, inclosing a self-addressed stamped envelope, to Mr. Willeke at South Mountain.

At Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn., the Gordon String Quartet will play Beethoven's quartets, Op. 74, Op. 135 and Op. 18, No. 2 today at 4 o'clock. Ada MacLeish, soprano, will be the assisting artist in Schonberg's second quartet and Poulenc's suite for voice and strings next Saturday at 3:30 in a program including Beethoven's Great Fugue and Dittersdorf's quartet in E flat. The program for next Sunday, Aug. 13, at 4, includes Haydn's quartet, Op. 20, No. 4; three pieces by Ernest Bloch and Dohnanyi's quartet in D flat.

The Alexander Bloch String Quartet will give the fifth concert of its free series at the Bloch Summer School of Music, between Hillsdale and Green River, N. Y., next Friday evening, playing Ravel's quartet and Mendelssohn's quartet in D, Op. 44, No. 1. The sixth concert is scheduled for Saturday afternoon, Aug. 19. Further information about other musical and artistic activities during the festival period may be obtained from the festival's office and information booths.

Academy Opens Next Year

Dr. Koussevitzky's plan for a musical academy at Tanglewood as a complement to the festival itself is to go into effect next summer, when the new academy is to hold its first six weeks' session, beginning early in July and culminating with the 1940 festival concerts. There are to be two main divisions, one for a limited number of specially qualified students, and the other, according to the official announcement, "a general session for a larger school." All students in the latter division will take part in the preparation of a festival chorus which will sing in Bach's Mass in B minor under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction in the 1940 festival.

Each student will belong either to the chorus or the school orchestra and will attend two general sessions each day, except Saturdays and Sundays. The general sessions, extending through the festival period, will be devoted to lectures and choral singing under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society.

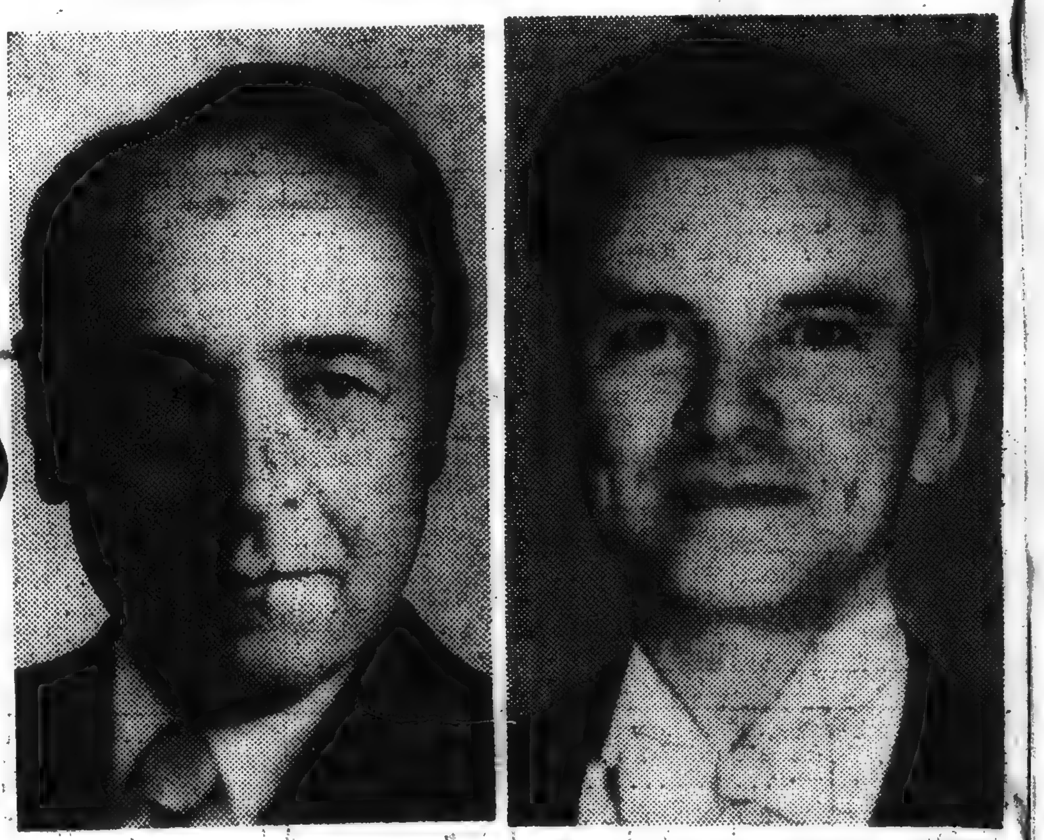
"The lectures," it is announced, "will deal broadly with music through the study of its development, form and style and the esthetic principles underlying the art. No attempt will be made to cover in a systematic and balanced way the history or the theory of music, but rather, through participation and listening, to stimulate the imagination, to aid in its comprehension, to set a standard of performance and interpretation." Classes in folk dancing will be included in the general tuition; the fee of $100 includes attendance at the festival concerts and a certain number of the Boston Symphony's rehearsals.

Dr. Koussevitzky, who will be active in the school's direction and conduct, will hold a class in orchestral conducting for a few mature and talented musicians. There will also be classes in choral conducting, and opportunity for individual instruction in singing, piano and orchestral instruments, with thirty members of the Boston Symphony as instructors and demonstrators. Theoretical subjects and school music teaching will also be subjects of instruction.

"What is projected," according to the announcement, "is neither a conservatory nor a summer school in any accepted sense. A large student body will have the opportunity for a life in music, not only by discussion and example, but through participation, and in association with a great orchestra and its conductor. . . . It follows, naturally, that the principal entrance requirement is an intelligent interest in the subject involved, and that no diploma or other credit for attendance will be given."

Requests for further information should be sent to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass.

Appearing With Two Major Orchestras



Left: Serge Koussevitzky, conducting the Boston Symphony this week at Lenox, Mass. Right: Zlatko Balakovic, who will play Dvorak's violin concerto Saturday with the Philharmonic at the Lewisohn Stadium

Tos

Magazine Section

Books - Music - Art

THE SPRINGFIELD UNION
Springfield Sunday Republican

Special Features
DRESSES FILM STARS
KENNEBUNKPORT FETE
NOBILE SPEAKS

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.: AUGUST 6, 1939

E

Koussevitzky Leads His Orchestra With Persuasive Gentleness

Boston Symphony Now in Berkshires Rehearses in Rigorous Schedule For Year-Round Concerts

By WILLIAM HENRY WRIGHT

BOSTON—"The accent, gentlemen, the accent!" . . . "No! A short chord—the chord must be short. Otherwise you will cover him." . . . "Not so dry, the pizzicato. They are too dry—softer, softer." . . . "Stop. Stop. I have not every voice. Again, please. Four bars from S." . . . "Now I have every voice, but they do not all agree. More together, please." . . . "Gentlemen, we need the quietness. It is too nervous. We need the quietness."

The scene is Symphony hall and the speaker Serge Koussevitzky. It is Tuesday morning and he is conducting a rehearsal of the first Saturday evening program of the Berkshire festival. The mercury is bubbling in the nineties in the street outside, trying weather for exacting work. But his manner is one of infinite patience. His voice is gentle, coaxing, almost wheedling at times as he pleads with his master musicians for the phrasing he wants.

The Stage Fills Up

The rehearsal has started almost on the dot of the appointed hour.

asks the first two players to run through the passage. "Further," he says, indicating the next pair. They repeat the phrase until he is satisfied. "Further," [illegible] motions to the third pair. It is like an electrician running down a leak in the circuit. Finally he comes to the last pair. The run is unevenly rendered—with the entire orchestra listening.

Reproof—and Satisfaction

"Ah," he says. "That is bad. That is very bad."

It is the extent of his reproof. And it is given more in sorrow than in anger.

The end draws near. He stops.

"The most beautiful—the most strong sonority. From here," he points to his waist line to signify the deep chest notes.

The crashing chords of the finish issue raggedly. The orchestra laughs at the surprising denouement.

He drops disconsolately back in his chair.

"That is not a rehearsal," he says in reproach. "We play for ourselves. Something like that makes us all feel painful."

He tries again. This time all is well, the symphony comes to a brilliant blazing end. He is satisfied.

Continuous Rehearsals

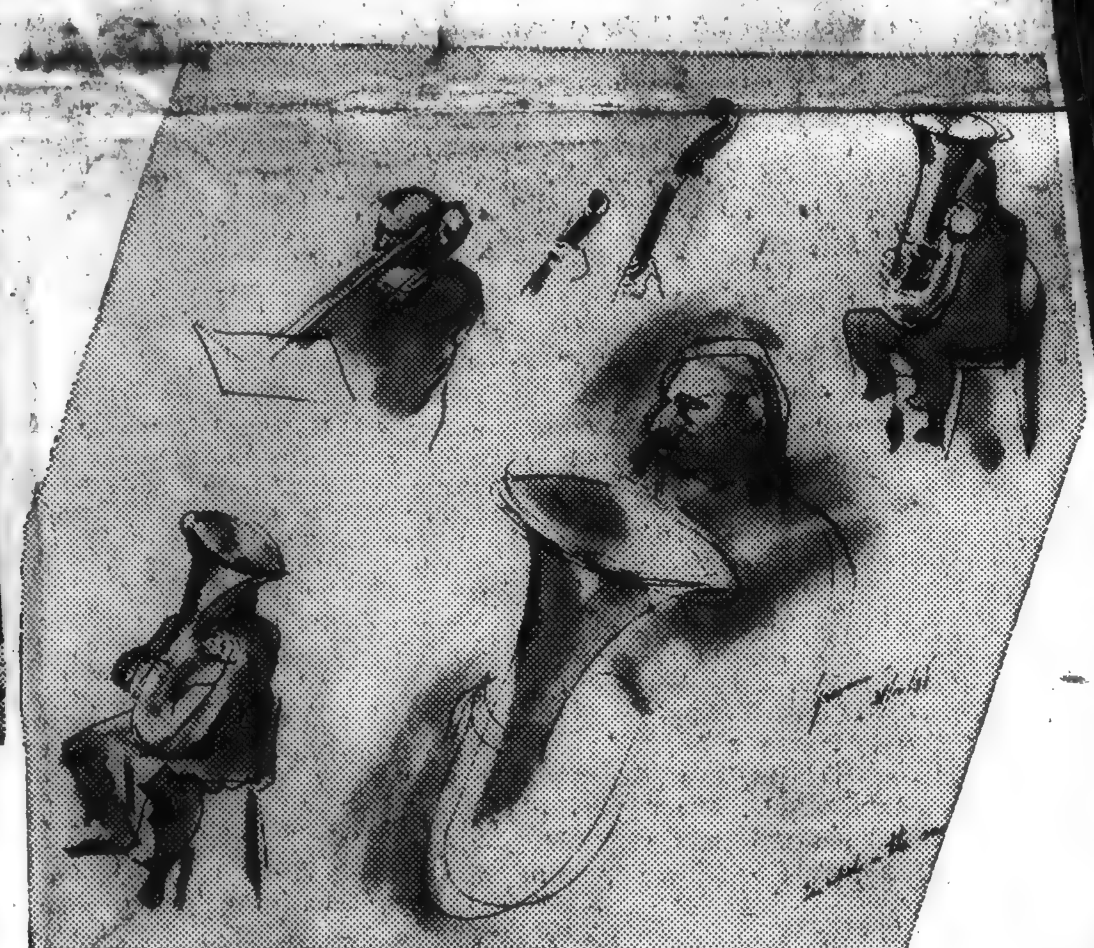
There is never a program given by the Boston Symphony orchestra, though it includes the most familiar Beethoven and Brahms, that is not diligently rehearsed before a public performance. Symphonies, every note of which is as well known to the players as a cradle song to a child, are polished and refined before each concert, generally in at least two rehearsals. Newer works will be run through with full orchestra as many as eight times, even after the players have mastered their individual parts. With a company of accomplished musicians, each equal to any technical demand on the instrument played, rehearsals are confined to bringing out those subtleties of interpretation which distinguish one conductor from another.

During the regular concert season in Boston, which runs from October to May, rehearsals are held every morning on the first four days of the week. The program that is given every Friday afternoon and repeated Saturday evening goes into rehearsal Monday morning and is worked over in four three-hour sessions, usually from 10 a. m. to 1 p. m., with a brief intermission. In addition, attention has to be given to a short series of six Mon-

Tanglewood, Berkshire home of Boston Symphony orchestra.

Nine-thirty has seen the members of the orchestra gathered in the rooms below the concert stage. A hum of conversation issues forth as they discuss plans and preparations for the move to Tanglewood which they regard as a major event of the concert year. The great stage is empty save for a single violinist running through a difficult passage and the players of the percussion instruments uncovering their drums. A great curtain of dark cloth hangs limply from the ceiling of the concert hall to the first rows of floor seats, cutting off the vacuity of the bleak balconies and muffling the reverberations of the empty hall. In the foyer out front a French horn player walks up and down smoothing long golden notes.

One by one the musicians take their places on the stage. They are a full half-nour drifting in. Dressed for the heat in slacks and sport shirts, short-sleeved and open at the throat, they tune their instruments and limber fingers and lips. It is like the bird chorus at dawn when the first robin wakes at the signal of the graying east, and begins a lone carol, to be followed soon by the thrushes and larks, the sparrows and finches until the woodland is athrob with a confusion of melody. The hall is filled with growing sound as bows flutter over violins and cellos, as bassoons and flutes go their separate ways in trills and runs. It is bedlam let loose by the time that Richard Burgin, the concertmaster, enters and takes his place.



"The whole is the sum of the parts" notes Donald Greason on one of his wash drawings of the orchestra now on exhibition at the Berkshire museum, Pittsfield.

There is a climactic moment when the whole hall seems about to explode with sound. Then a sibilant "Sh" from the rearmost violas. Silence creeps across the banks of players, bows drop and oboes cease their wailing. A short, slightly stooped figure is picking his way with shuffling step around the harps and along the edge of the platform to the podium. It is Koussevitzky. He, too, is in white flannels and open-neck sport shirt, but he carries under his arm a cape of gray tweed.

The hush is now profound. He mounts the podium, equipped with a stout long-legged, short-backed chair, softly cushioned. He faces his company of 108 musicians.

"Good morning, gentlemen," he says in a soft, persuasive tone.

"Good morning," comes the rumbling response from the orchestra.

"Sibelius," he announces crisply.

While the players are shuffling the sheets of music already in place on the racks and finding their parts, he removes his half-lens glasses and wipes them deliberatively while he turns and glances up curiously at the five or six listeners clustered at the end of the balcony overhanging the stage.

He turns back, adjusts his glasses, raises his wisp of a baton and in another moment the French horns are setting forth the first luscious phrase of the Fifth symphony. It is scarcely a minute past 10 o'clock, and an intense three-hour session has begun with a business-like promptitude.

The opening theme has scarcely been announced when the baton clicks sharply against the score and the music fades out.

"The eighths, gentlemen, the eighths," he cautions gently. "Shorter. Shorter. Then they will be light. Again—10 bars from C," referring to the alphabetical designations which serve as place marks through the mazes of the voluminous work.

(Photos by Richard Tucker)

Character photographs made as Koussevitzky wields the baton.

Again the baton begins its weaving motion and he slumps back in a half-sitting posture in the podium chair. But it is not for long. His hands drop and he rises to his feet.

"Pianissimo! Pianissimo! We are too strong in the strings!"

Glory of Sound

The passage is repeated. He drops back in his chair until the mounting crescendo brings him to his feet. The baton sweeps the air in wide swings, his acutely sentient left hand which has seemed to smooth the sable rhythms as if by touch, is extended straight before him, palm up in a gesture that appears to say: "Now give!" The mighty chords roll forth in eloquent sonority and his face lights with a seraphic smile as he turns from side to side, lost in the glory of sound.

But the mood soon passes. The music changes. His hands move agitatedly, in short quick gestures, he hunches over the score. He is like a witch doctor conjuring up the imps from some nocturnal brew. The orchestra groans and shrieks. Then his hands drop and all is suddenly still.

"That is good," he says suavely. "But it is not right. It goes, thump ta-ta, ta-ta, ta-tee-ta-ta." His foot comes down on the podium with the beat and his voice simulates the rhythm of the passage in husky tones.

They start again. The passage is finished.

"There. You see?" he says in pleased gratification.

His voice is raised in praise, bu never in reproof. His manner is that of a college professor patiently endeavoring to convey to a group of earnest students something of the golden beauty of Ovid in the original Latin. Like a poet polishing a fine phrase, he works over the delicate passages, consulting now with the violins, now with the violas to make certain they catch his meaning. And, master musicians that they are, it is seldom that they have to repeat more than once or twice before they have captured his interpretation and rendered to his satisfaction.

He Pleads

"Listen to me, gentlemen," he pleads, "listen to me!"

"I beg of you. I beg of you. It is not the way. Again, please."

Something goes awry among the oboes. He stops and peers at them over the tops of his glasses.

"No! I cannot play for you," he says gently. "I can only show you. I cannot play for you."

He brushes a handkerchief across his moist brow and starts again.

"The piccolos are a little too thin. We would like a little more substance." He rubs his thumb and forefinger together as if feeling some fine texture.

Then: "More light. It is too heavy—the second violins."

"I would like the flutes and bassoons more together. Now—14 bars from S."

The symphony moves on.

"Noise! Noise! Noise!" comes his gentle plaint. "Everything is noise. Listen to me."

As he leads the players through the passage again, coaxing and cajoling, his face works furiously with intensity of feeling.

Somewhere among the violas there is raggedness. He stops and He drops disconsolately back in his chair.

"That is not a rehearsal," he says in reproach. "We play for ourselves. Something like that makes us all feel painful."

He tries again. This time all is well, the symphony comes to a brilliant, blazing end. He is satisfied. He looks at his wrist watch. It is 11.30. Time for intermission. He drops the baton, throws the tweed cape around his moist shoulders and picks his way around chairs and music racks to the exit at the side of the platform. It has been an exhausting hour and a half in the midsummer heat.

The players take the cue and with a shuffle of chairs disperse to the retiring rooms below.

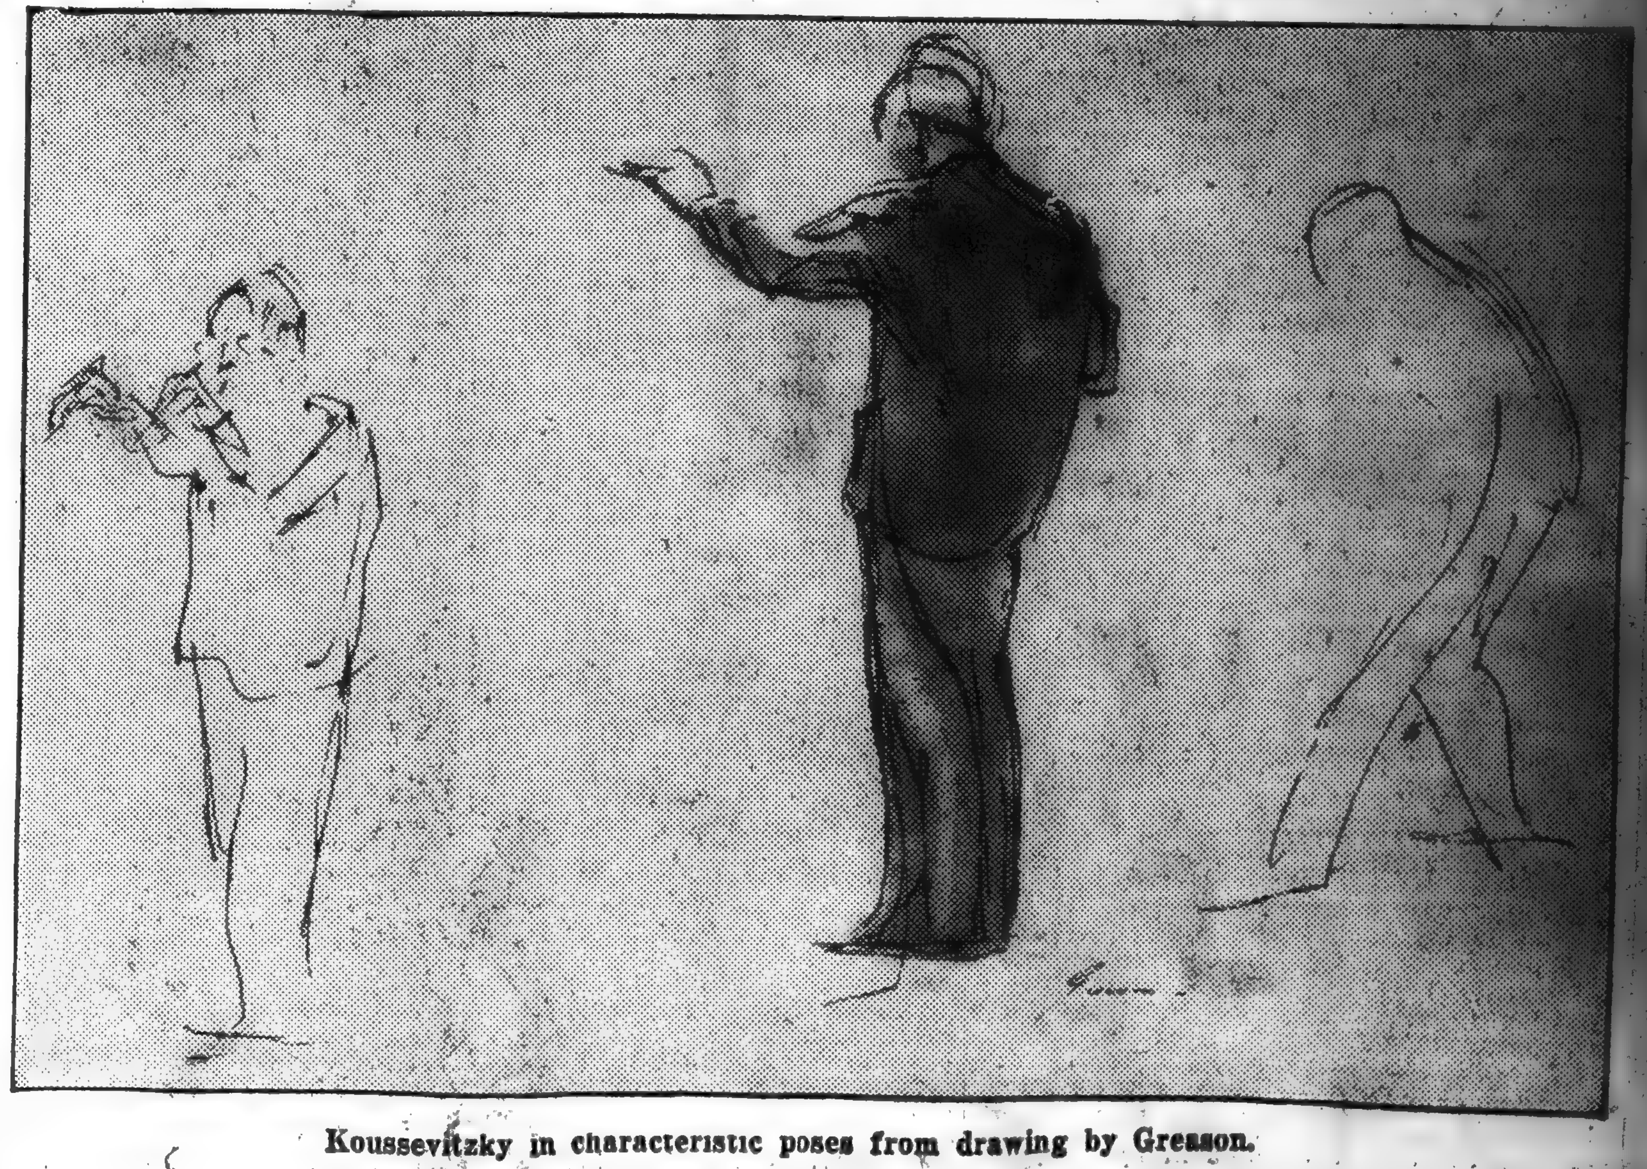
In 25 minutes they are back again. Now it is the Piston concerto, a more modern piece with intricate rhythms from the pen of Harvard's department of music chairman. Though played before, it is perhaps not so familiar as the Sibelius symphony and, while a shorter work, makes the most exacting demands in the fusion of some of its complicated passages. But through it all, rehearsing phrases over and over again until the diamonds of harmony flash with their full brilliancy, Koussevitzky has ever the manner of the patient teacher, grown mellow with vast experience, endeavoring by minutest steps to lead his adherents to the lofty hights of inspiration.

every morning on the first four days of the week. The program that is given every Friday afternoon and repeated Saturday evening goes into rehearsal Monday morning and is worked over in four three-hour sessions, usually from 10 a. m. to 1 p. m., with a brief intermission. In addition, attention has to be given to a short series of six Monday evening and Tuesday afternoon programs in Boston, besides the out-of-town concerts in Providence, New York and other places.

Some orchestras reach the hights in a half dozen fine performances during a season, but incline to slump to a certain perfunctoriness at other times. But not so under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky. For every performance, no matter where, there is earnest endeavor for a uniform standard of excellence.

The Berkshire Symphonic festival with six different programs packed into two weeks naturally presents a rehearsal problem. The series is physically possible only because of the tremendous backlog of work that is put in on symphonic pieces in Boston during the concert season. Seventy-eight different orchestral numbers went last winter to make up the 24 programs arranged for the regular weekend series. The cream of these selections, and those perhaps of the preceding year, have been chosen for the Berkshire festival. In all, 19 will be given in the six Tanglewood concerts.

(Continued on Page 8-E)



Koussevitzky in characteristic poses from drawing by Greason.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

AUG 7 - 1939

OVATION IS GIVEN TO ORCHESTRA BY RECORD AUDIENCE

Boston Symphony Presents Superb Performance at Tanglewood

By Willard M. Clark

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 7—The first series of the current Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts came to a close yesterday with a superb performance of Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony. Dr. Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony players were at their ~~superlative~~ best and an audience of record breaking proportions paid them the tribute of rapt attention and a heart-warming ovation.

Attendance Sets Record

According to George W. Edman, clerk of the Association, the audience was the largest ever to attend a concert here. He estimated it at 6500. It was thought that the audience of 6200 Saturday night was breaking all records, and so it had to date, but the Festival now knows no limitations as far as audiences are concerned. The music shed was filled to capacity. Several hundred extra seats were placed on the sides and fully a thousand persons sat on the lawns, for one can hear clearly, even far away from the shed.

This first series of concerts has been notable for programs, performances and audiences. It proves without doubt that given the best of music, magnificently performed, audiences will gather from far and near. Dr. Koussevitzky's programs have followed conservative paths, but he has provided such contemporary works as Walter Piston's Orchestral Concerto and Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" to giv evariety. Mr. Piston's work, heard Saturday night, is one of the most interesting from the pen of an American. It is virtuoso writing by one who has ideas and knows how to express them briefly and dramatically.

It was about a year ago that Dr. Koussevitzky introduced to Festival audiences Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kieje," a delightful bit of writing for the film of the same name. Last winter, in Northampton, he played the same composer's delectable work, "Peter and the Wolf," with Richard Hale as the narrator of the story. This afternoon it was repeated and it bids fair to be remembered as one of the high lights of the Festival. The Russian composer is at his best in works of fantasy.

Many Provocative Rhythms

The score teems with provocative rhythms and pretty tunes. Each character in the work is played by some instrument and Mr. Hale introduces each character and then commences the tale. It is easy to follow and as clever and sophisticated as one could wish. The bird is sung by the flute; the clarinet in the low register makes a grand cat and the basso a grumpy old grandfather. Three horns announce the wolf and Peter has a string quartet. Kettle and bass drums depict the shooting. It is an utterly charming work well worth hearing a couple of times.

The program opened with a fine interpretation of a concerto for strings by K. P. E. Bach, arranged by Steinberg for strings, flute, two oboes and English horn. It is a crisp vigorous work, full of melody and not unlike the concertos for strings by his distinguished father. One marveled again at the cirtuosity of the players and perfection on the ensemble.

For sheer drive and display of dramatics we have never heard anything to equal the performance of Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony. It was overwhelming in its intensity. The opening movement was played with tremendous power, brasses soaring as one seldom hears them. The lovely andante was played with the smoothest of legatos, while the unusual and delightful pizzicato scherzo was full of freshness and charm. It was in the finale that an already hard driven orchestra was driven to unexpected lengths. It was almost too much for the acoustics of the music shed. Music turned to noise, as it were. It fairly brought the audience to its feet and the bravos and cheers could be heard all over the estate. It was not until it was worn out by its own enthusiasm that the audience would leave.

The first concert of the second series will be given Thursday night when the program will include the second symphony by Beethoven; the tone poem, "Thus Spake Zarathustra," by Strauss and "Pictures at an Exhibition" by Moussorgsky.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News

AUG 7 - 1939

TANGLEWOOD FACES A NEW ARTISTIC DESTINY...

By ROBERT C. McCAIN

AMERICA, the land of freedom and great fortunes, is becoming the cultural center of the world. From the dictator-controlled countries, artists of all kinds are escaping as rapidly as they can—and are finding patrons, either directly or indirectly, among America's wealthy families. In turn, America is having a profound effect upon the arts—lending to them her love of bigness. As a result, never before in the history of the world have artists had as large audiences as they have in America of 1939. Tqpical of this trend is the way in which Tanglewood, an historic Berkshire estate, has been made a center of fine music. Above is a model of the Tanglewood music shed and the engineer who built it, Joseph Franz.

TANGLEWOOD once was the estate of a famous and wealthy Boston banker, the late William Tappan. He founded it about 1850 so the estate was in its heyday when this section of the Berkshires was the home of the then intelligensia. Nathaniel Hawthorne lived at Tanglewood for a while and frequent guests included Henry Wadsworth Longefellow, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Bret Harte, Edward Channing, the historian; Henry Ward Beecher and Fanny Kemble, actress and author. Several years ago, Tappan's sister and daughter gave the estate to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, thus creating a family memorial and a music center of distinction. Typical of the orchestra's gifted young men is Norbert Lauga, first violinist.

THE directors of Tanglewood, with rare perception, have done more than provide six top symphonic concerts a season They have made a conscious effort to keep all surroundings in perfect harmony with the music and tradition of Tanglewood. An example is the formal garden in which this bench stands. People who attend the concerts are invited to come early and stroll through the gardens. Those who do will find in this bench the only mention of the two wealthy women who gave away their family home so a music center could be established. The legend on the back of the bench says: "Given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra by Mary Aspinwall Tappan and Rosamond Sturgis Brooks in memory of William Aspinwall Tappan, Caroline Sturgis Tappan, Richard Cowell Dixey, Ellen Sturgis Dixey and Arthur Sturgis Dixey, who lived here for many years. MCMXXXVII." For those who know, this 12-foot hemlock hedge also tells its story of the Tappan family. It was started by Mrs. Brook's grandfather and grandmother when they founded the estate. It forms the motif of the gardens and is so highly regarded by Festival directors they have provided a special truck from which it can be clipped.

MUSIC BLOOMS IN TANGLEWOOD

Koussevitzky Leads Orchestra in Flawless Performance at Festival

By C. R. ROSEBERRY

Sublime music, fine weather and heavy attedance combined to make the Tanglewood weekend a festival in the fullest sense of the word.

One has only to enjoy a brilliant Sunday afternoon like yesterday among the giant pines and elms, where the flower of the New England literati bloomed, to be convinced American culture has come into its own—if, indeed, it has not inherited the mantle of those European music centers which have fallen upon sad days.

Koussevitzky's musicians have never seemed more flawless—from the utter felicity of the violins to the unsullied tones that came out of those most erratic of all symphonic instruments, the brasses.

For the conventional music lover the weekend was memorable for magnificent performances of Beethoven's "Dance" Symphony (the Seventh), and Tschaikowsky's "Fate" Symphony (the Fourth) besides a modern instrumental arrangement of the Concerto in D Major for Strings by one of the Bach boys, Carl Philipp Emanuel.

A Bit of Nonsense

For those who consider anything pre-Debussy distinctly old-fashioned, or who are at least trying to give the modern idiom a fair trial, there was the Sibelius Fifth Symphony, a contemporary American concerto for orchestra by Walter Piston and a bit of musical nonsense (dignify it with the term "satire" if you will) by the Russian, Prokofieff.

Dr. Koussevitzky is never so at home nor so manifestly inspired in his direction as when treating the music of his native heath, whether it be representative of Czarist Russia or the Soviet regime. His Tschaikowsky is incomparable. While the composer was reticent about describing a program for his Fourth Symphony yesterday's interpretation at the hands of the Boston Symphony Orchestra made program a superfluous quantity — drawing with bold strokes the essential contrast between inexorable fate and the happy reveries in which Tschaikowsky sought relief from its unhappy contemplation.

Players Doff Coats

The tumultuous ovacation which followed this ecastatic rendition—with bravos echoing to the iron rafters of the Tanglewood music shed—was reminiscent of that given the Tschaikowsky "Pathetique" a year ago.

The orchestra and its physical vigorous conductor discarded costs in deference to the August heat yesterday and playe din their shirt sleeves, adding to the atmosphere of delightful informality. The bell which calls the flock to musical worship sounded across the velvet greens of the estate and a crowd estimated at 7,000—overflowing the regular seating capacity—fell under the enchantment of Emanuel Bach. The arrangement, which adds woodwinds and horn to the original string instrumentation, was done by Maxmilian Steinberg at the behest of Dr. Koussevitzky and was first performed in this country by the Boston Symphony in 1925. The quiet andante movement, sandwiched between the the two allegros, was extraordinarily effective, with its beautiful solo themes for oboe.

We come now to the above-mentioned musical drollery, Prokofieff's orchestral fairy tale for children, "Peter and the Wolf." The inclusion of so unimportant a divertissement in a serious symphony program may be debated by some; and, indeed, it is more adaptable to a Mickey Mouse cartoon. But there was quite a sprinkling of children in yesterday's audience to whom it was a concession and if anyone thinks a staid concert audience is above enjoying downright nonsensicality he should have heard the ripples of laughter which greeted "Peter and the Wolf."

Richard Hale, actor, who has been seen at the Stockbridge Playhouse, gave a delightfully whimsical narration of the story to which the music was an accompaniment. No doubt there were grownups in the audience to whom it was not harmful to learn something about symphony instruments through having the oboe imitate a duck and the bassoon a grumpy grandfather.

To get back to Saturday night's concert, the two major symphonies—Sibelius and Beethoven—were done to the complete satisfaction of their respective admirers. The news event of the evening was Mr. Piston's concerto and the composer's presence to share the plaudits.

The dissonances of the work may have fallen harshly on some ears, but they were secondary to the composer's regard for classical form and the concerto is deserving of the deeper consideration that a rehearing would afford. Mr. Piston, born New Englander, who is a member of the Harvard music faculty. was given his American debut as a composer by the Boston Symphony in 1928, when his "Symphonic Piece" was introduced, and his first symphony was launched under the same auspices during the 1937-38 season.

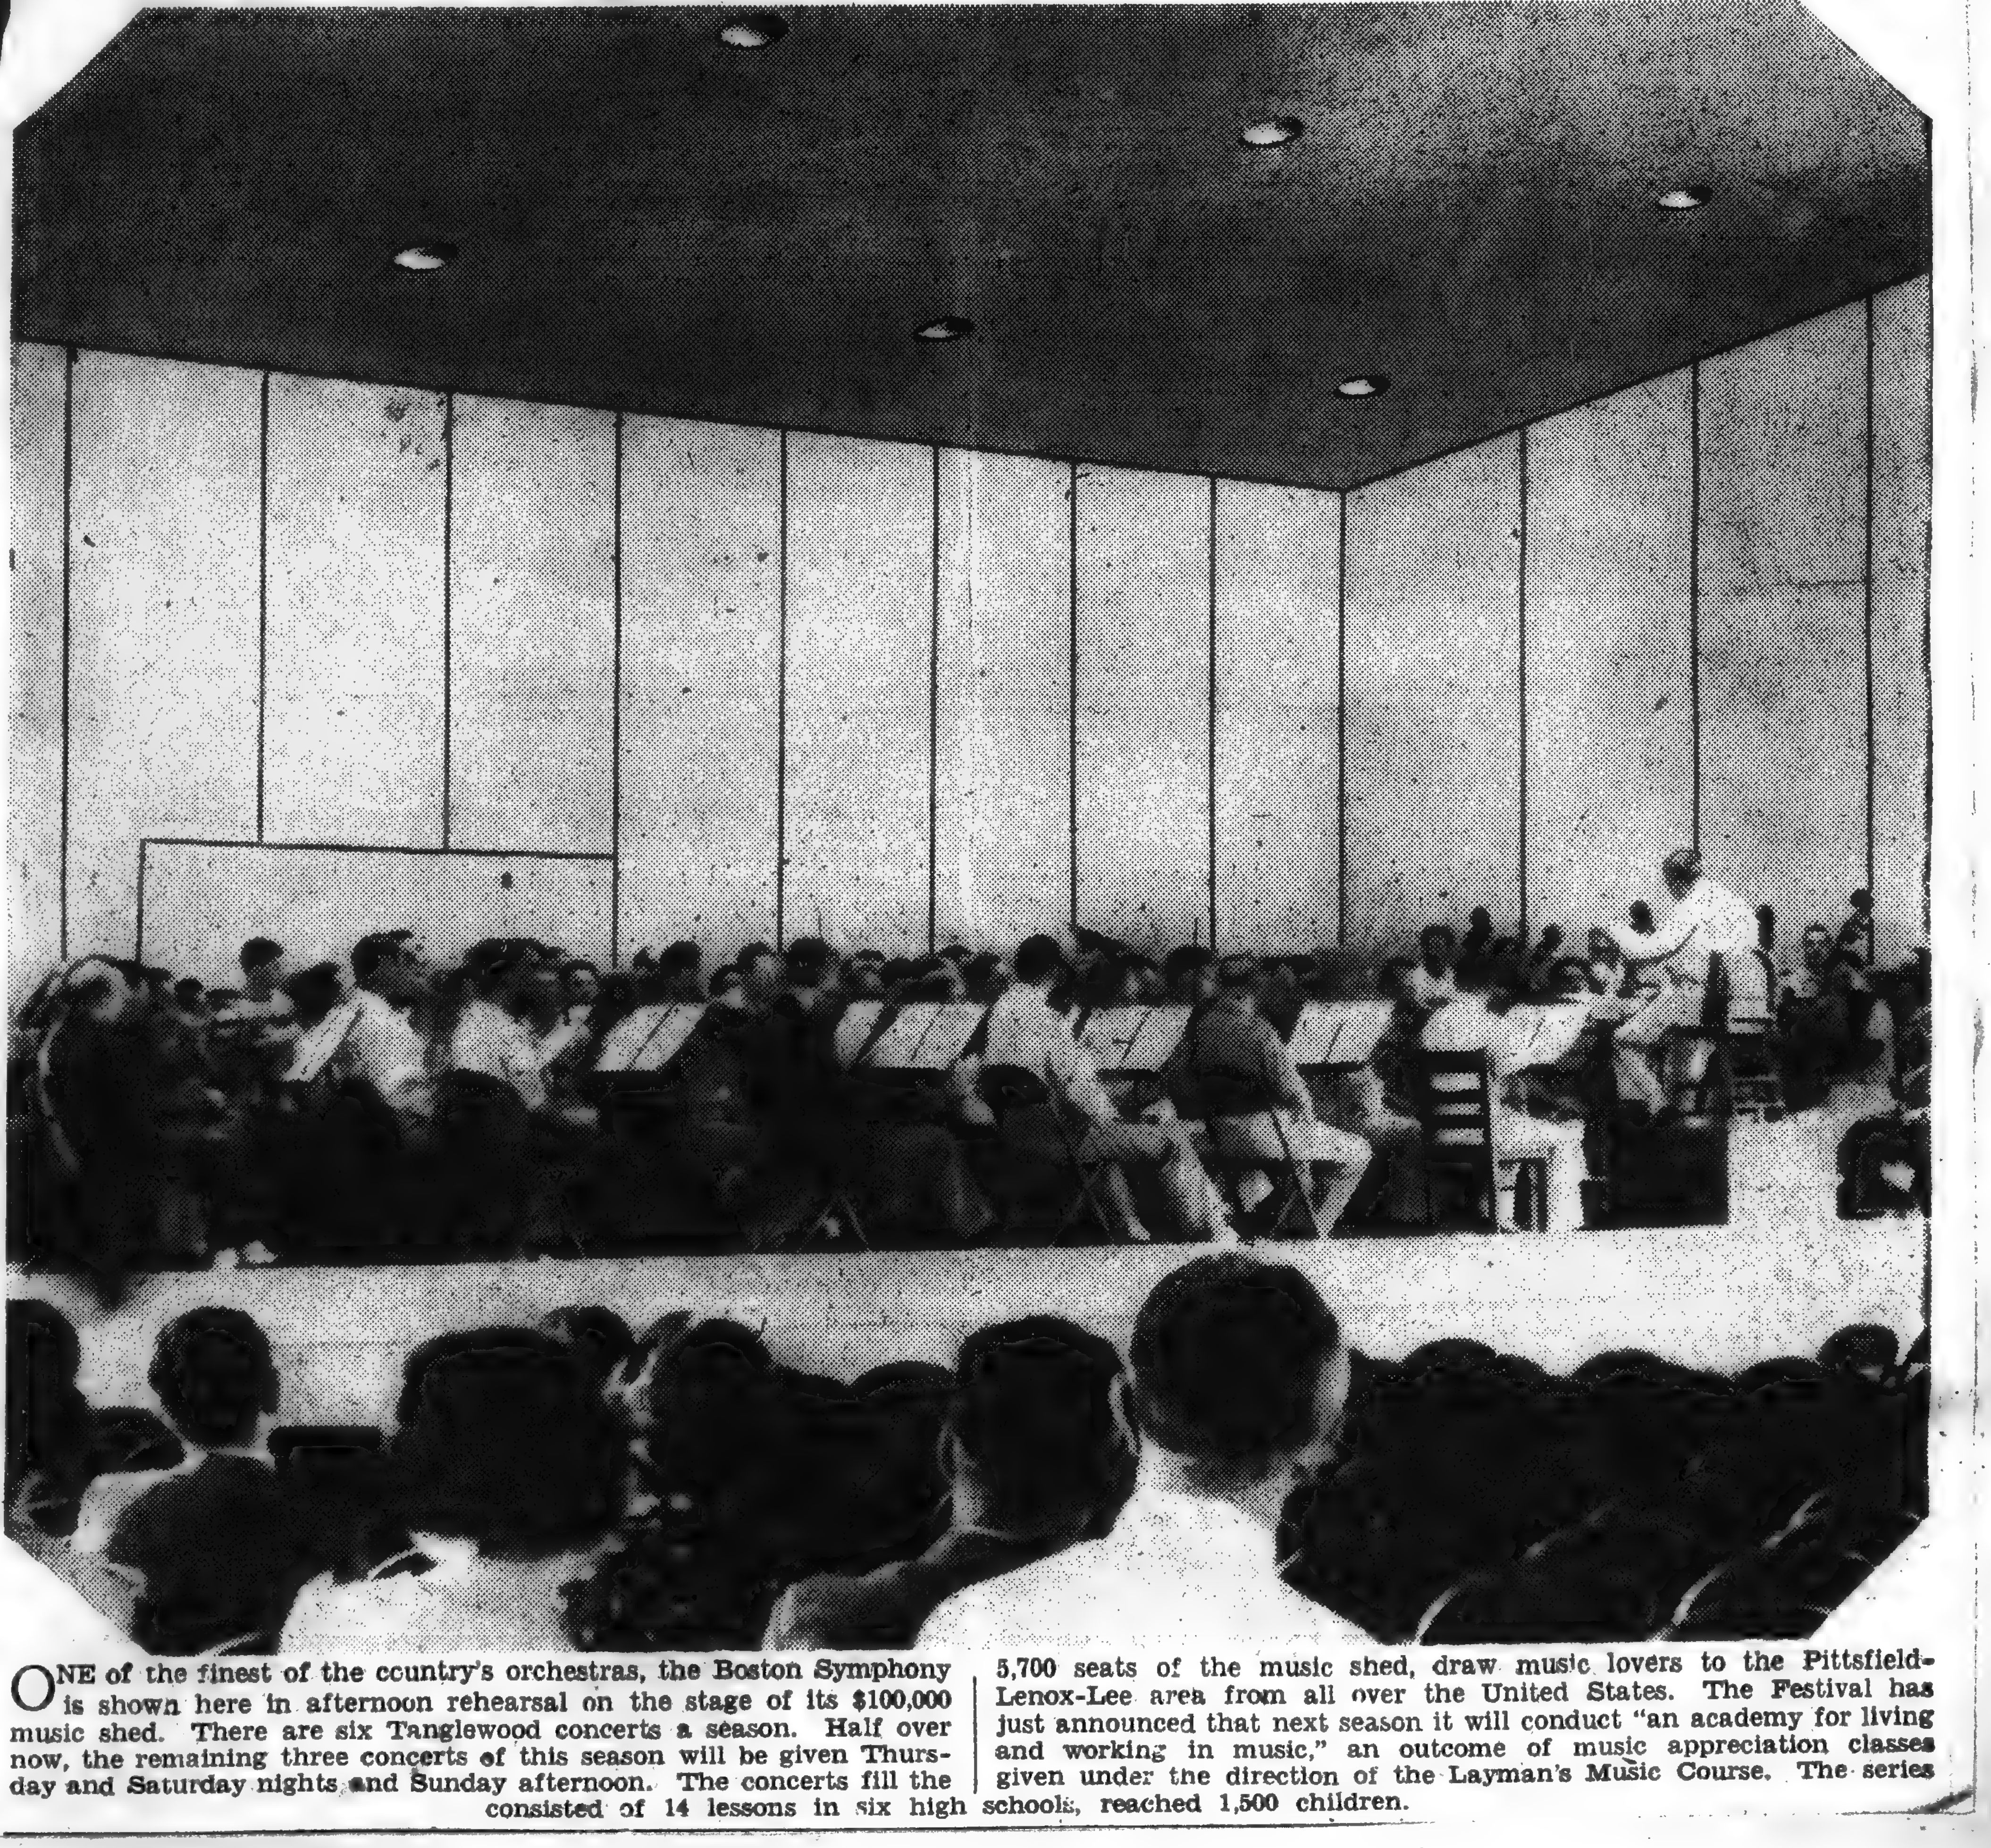
LIKE many cultured rich men, William Tappan sought the company of artists. He built a special cottage, overlooking the lake, for Nathaniel Hawthorne. It was here that Hawthorne wrote "The Wonder Book" and "The House of Seven Gables." He also planned "Tanglewood Tales" here. The cottage burned in 1893 but this stone marks the spot.

THIS is Serge Koussevitzky conductor of the Boston Symphony. He is a personification of the trend by which America is becoming the cultural center of the world. Native of Russia, he achieved such fame Czar Nicholas decorated him twice. In the chaos after the war, when the Bolsheviki came into power, Koussevitzky fled to France. He found a music publishing house in Paris (which he still owns) and made money. He also gave concerts in Germany, Italy and Spain — before the days of the dictators — but America, the land of freedom and great fortunes, called: He became conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1924.

(TOMORROW: The Music Shed and Its Musicians.)

The Knickerbocker News Staff Photos— Wilson

..HISTORIC BERKSHIRE ESTATE NOW A UNIQUE MUSIC CENTER



ONE of the finest of the country's orchestras, the Boston Symphony is shown here in afternoon rehearsal on the stage of its $100,000 music shed. There are six Tanglewood concerts a season. Half over now, the remaining three concerts of this season will be given Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon. The concerts fill the 5,700 seats of the music shed, draw music lovers to the Pittsfield-Lenox-Lee area from all over the United States. The Festival has just announced that next season it will conduct "an academy for living and working in music," an outcome of music appreciation classes given under the direction of the Layman's Music Course. The series consisted of 14 lessons in six high schools, reached 1,500 children.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

AUG 7 - 1939

Boston Symphony Plays To 6000 At Tanglewood

Audiences of about 6000 people again filled the music shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Saturday night and yesterday afternoon to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the second and third concerts of the Berkshire symphonic festival. The three concerts of the second series will be held Thursday and Saturday nights of this week and Sunday afternoon, Aug. 13.

A pleasant evening free from the rain which interrupted the opening concert Thursday night favored Dr. Koussevitzy, conductor of the orchestra, Saturday night. The concert opened with the only work of an American composer included in this year's festival, Walter Piston's Concerto for Orchestra, and continued with another 20th century work, Sibelius' Fifth Symphony, and then with Beethoven's Seventh Symphony.

The Piston concerto, first presented by the Boston symphony in 1934, is based on a traditional form but composed of modern tone material. Light and delicate thruout, it has a piquant and entertaining character. Like other modern composers, Piston uses dissonance and angular melodies, but without the stridency which makes some of his colleagues so unpopular with conservative concert-goers.

In contrast to the bright Piston work was the much more sombre and traditional work of Sibelius. This symphony, poignant and darkly colorful, like much of the Finnish composer's work, was played with an understanding which won thunderous applause from the audience. Although this symphony is not intended to be delineative in any way, there was something particularly appropriate in hearing it in an outdoor setting, with tall evergreens outlined against the sky.

The same might be said for Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, written, we are told, in a summer sojourn in the country. Visiting orchestras have played this symphony in this neighborhood several times during the past year, but none of the winter performances quite match the combination of the Boston symphony and Tanglewood. The excitement of the last movement was a thrilling conclusion to an impressive concert.

The Sunday afternoon program comprised C. P. E. Bach's Concerto in D Major with stringed instruments; Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf", with Richard Hale as narrator, and Tchaikovsky's Fourth symphony. Next week's programs will include Beethoven's Second symphony, "Also Sprach Zarathustra", by Strauss, and Moussorgsky's "Picture At An Exhibition"; Haydn's Symphony in B Flat, "Le Sacre du Printemps" by Stravinsky, and four Wagnerian selections; and Schumann's Symphony No. 4, Debussy's "L'Apres Midi d'un Faune", "La Valse" by Ravel, and Sibelius' Second symphony.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 7 - 1939

Berkshire Festival Audience Is Largest Since Event Started

Some 6500 Reported Present Yesterday Afternoon. Second Half Opens Thursday

An estimated audience of 6500, largest in the history of the Berkshire symphonic festival, heard some of the most thrilling music that had ever fallen upon their ears when Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston symphony orchestra brought the first series of this season's concerts to a close yesterday afternoon with a superlative performance of Tschaikowsky's fourth symphony.

This work is custom-made for whipping up audience emotions. But with the added qualities of Dr. Koussevitsky and his men at their best, the results were extraordinary. On a warm afternoon, it was hot music making; indeed, it seemed that the musicians absorbed the heat in the air only to release it in their music.

Also heard in this Sunday concert were a concerto for strings by C. P. E. Bach, arranged by Maximilian Steinberg, and Prokofieff's orchestral fairy tale, "Peter and the Wolf." The former was revealed with the rare clarity of detail and singing tone which is characteristic of the orchestra in classic designs. The neat humor of Prokofieff's musical children's story delighted the festival audience just as it did those who heard it here last winter.

The second half of the festival at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, will open Thursday night with Beethoven, Strauss and Moussorgsky as the contributing composers.

Saturday night's program was made up of Piston's concerto for orchestra, Sibelius' fifth symphony and Beethoven's seventh symphony. Preceding this concert, George Edman, festival clerk, and Mrs. Edman entertained members of the press with a cocktail party at their home in Pittsfield.

113

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 7 - 1939

Record Audience of 6500 At Berkshire Festival

Koussevitzky Takes Guests to Russian 'Never-Never-Land'; Symphony to Resume Program Next Thursday

By JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Arts Editor

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 6 (AP)—Serge Koussevitzky closed the first half of the current Berkshire Symphonic Festival today by taking the largest audience which ever attended any concert of the six festivals on a tour of a Russian "never-never-land." There were 6500 persons in and around the big "music shed" at Tanglewood, possibly the largest audience which ever heard a straight symphonic concert in Western Massachusetts.

"Never-never-Land" is the fantastic land which Serge Prokofieff created in a unique orchestral fairy tale called "Peter and the Wolf," played today for the first time at a Berkshire festival. The music is witty and is full of broad laughs as well as some typical Russian subtleties.

Richard Hale Narrates

As always when the Boston Symphony does this work Richard Hale was the narrator. It is one of the best bits of "recitation" to be heard anywhere, and, with the orchestra and Dr. Koussevitzky cooperating, it brought about one of the most wholehearted ovations of the festival.

For that matter, Dr. Koussevitzky used eloquently every resource of one of the world's great orchestras throughout the program, which opened with C. P. E. Bach's D major concerto in the orchestral arrangement by Maximilian Steinberg and closed with one of the most moving performances of the familiar F. minor Tschaikovsky symphony in the experience of the thousands who heard it.

Perked Up Business

The festival has not only been a musical success of the first rank, it has served to raise the whole of Berkshire county out of a slump in its chief summer industry, the tourist crop. The drought, the World's Fair or the financial status of the East has been reflected on the hotel registers of the district, and, for the first time this summer, these institutions have overflowed. The allied industries have prospered as well.

The Berkshire Festival has created, incidentally, one of the most loyal summer musical audiences in the world. This was startingly proved by the fact that extra tickets sold at the gate were only $400 more on Saturday night than on Thursday, when two deluges failed to frighten away even the dowagers.

From All Over U. S.

The audience represented nearly every state, most Canadian provinces and most European countries. Although it is the product of a local organization headed by Gertrude Robinson Smith in large part, it also is partly provided by a tightly knit group of sponsors who cover 10 states and two Canadian provinces, Louisiana and California being the farthest outposts.

After a three-day recess, concerts will be resumed next Thursday with a program containing Beethoven's Second Symphony; Strauss' "Also Sprach Zarathustra," and the Ravel orchestral version of Moussorgsky's "Pictures on Exhibition."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 7 - 1939

Last Festival Lecture To Be Tomorrow

Safford To Talk On Saturday, Sunday Programs

Charles L. Safford of Williamstown, former director of music at Williams College, will give the last of his series of lectures on the Berkshire Symphonic Festival programs at the Berkshire Museum tomorrow afternoon at 4.30. The public is invited. There is no charge.

These lectures have been sponsored by the Pittsfield Junior League under the chairmanship of Mrs. Zenas Crane Colt of Dalton and have drawn sizeable and appreciative audiences every week.

Tomorrow Mr. Safford's lecture will deal with the last two programs to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, conductor.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 7 - 1939

Symphony Heard By 6500 Persons

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 7 (AP)—The second half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, near here, will open Thursday night with Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony in a Beethoven, Strauss, Moussorgsky program in the huge music shed on the 210-acre estate bordering the "Stockbridge Bowl."

Yesterday set the all time record with sixty-five hundred persons from most sections of the Western World in attendance. So far about eighteen thousand music lovers have heard the music of the first three concerts, according to George Edman, one of the festival officials.

Yesterday's music included the fourth Tchaikovsky Symphony, a C. P. E. Bach Concerto in an arrangement by Maximilian Steinberg, and one of the most successful attempts at musical humor in history, "Peter and the Wolf," Serge Prokofieff's "Orchestral Fair Tale."

For this last, Richard Hale was the narrator, one of the things he does best. The audience, excited by the beauty of the playing and perhaps also by the beauty of the Tanglewood setting, gave everybody concerned in retailing Peter's adventures an arousing reception.

Three concerts remain to be heard this Summer. After Thursday, the next will be Saturday night. The sixth festival closes Sunday afternoon. When it reopens in 1940 there will be a school of music at Tanglewood as well as a unique series of concerts.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 7 - 1939

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Sets Records Over Weekend

Stockbridge, Aug. 7—Records went tumbling again as the first series of the sixth annual Berkshire Music festival came to a close yesterday. Approximately 6500 people crowded and overflowed from the beautiful shell at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Saturday night, about 6200 music lovers attended the program, setting a record up to that time, and yesterday another new record went up. Perfect weather, missing las Thursday night, when the series opened in competition with a thunder shower, predominated at both the Saturday evening and the yesterday afternoon concerts. The colonnades at the edge of the shell were crowded, and many brought deck chairs to enjoy the music on the lawn outside.

Dr Koussevitzky and his men received at the conclusion of the concert yesterday a prolonged and almost hysterical ovation. Driving the orchestra like fury in the final thunderous measures of the Tschaikowsky Fourth, he produced a tumult of sound and an intensity of emotion which sent many of his listeners nearly into ecstasy. For others the pace and the volume was too great, even though the movement is marked "Allegro con fuoco."

The program yesterday had opened with the Concerto in D major of Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach, as arranged by Maximilian Steinberg. Despite the humid air which compeled the orchestra to shed its coats during the afternoon, the tone from the strings was crisp, clear and lovely. Dr Koussevitzky doffed his coat before tackling the Tschaikowsky, although it was donned again when he appeared to acknowledge the applause.

The novelty on the program was the long-awaited "Peter and the Wolf," the orchestral fairy tale, by Prokofieff, whose "Lieutenant Kije" was the hit of last year's festival. With Richard Hale as an excellent narrator, both from the standpoint of diction and humor, the orchestra told the story with each of the various instruments taking the part of the different characters. The puckish fun of the Russian composer, who has been a great favorite with Koussevitzky, was admirably captured by the orchestra and thoroughly enjoyed by the audience. How well it would wear is another question. One doubts from a first hearing if it has the stuff that will make "Lieutenant Kije" a perennial favorite."

Saturday night, festival goers had the treat of hearing two symphonies; the Seventh in E major of Beethoven, which concluded the program, and the Fifth in E flat major of Sibelius, another contemporary who gets his due from the Bostonians. The program opened with the Concerto for orchestra by Walter Piston, next-door Bostonian. Head of the music department at Harvard, he has produced a forceful piece which has been on the books of the orchestra since 1934. The composer was present to take a portion of the applause.

Symphony lovers could have no quarrel with the interpretations of such standard favorites as the Sibelius and the Beethoven, for the Finnish composer is being brought into his true light by Dr Koussevitzky. Two symphonies on a single program might seem a pretty stiff dose, except that the nature of the Beethoven, aptly termed the "dance symphony," keeps interest from lagging. The Gallic influence found elsewhere in Beethoven shows in the different themes throughout the lively movements; even the allegretto trots along briskly.

Thursday, the second series will start at 8.30 with the program including the Beethoven Second in D major; the Strauss "Also Sprach Zarathustra" and the Moussorgsky "Pictures At An Exhibition." The final concerts will be held Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

J. D. D.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN-RECORD

AUG 7 - 1939

Music News And Views

By ROGER S. VREELAND

FIRST HALF OF BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL IS COMPLETED

The first series of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival was completed yesterday afternoon at Tanglewood with an arrangement of Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach's Concerto in D minor for Strings the outstanding performance. The festival will continue Thursday.

Capacity audiences attended both Saturday and yesterday. The fairest of fair weather prevailed, and the tremendous influx of cars was handled with less delay than had been the first night.

Needless to say, the musical interpreters are the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, as from the beginning 6 years ago. Tanglewood, historical estate near Lenox, with great literary memories, besides being a mecca for music lovers from every section of the United States is the fashionable place-to-go center for New England, and the box lists predominate with those from Register A.

From the music lover's standpoint, the most interesting matter is the carrying quality of the music in the fan-shaped shed. Acoustically there is nothing like it. The tone quality of solo instruments and ensembles alike, whether a small group of instruments or the whole orchestra, and the balance of parts is so fine as to be incomparable with any other outdoor concert heard by the writer, and more favorable than many indoor concerts. The Berkshire concerts differ from other outdoor concerts (besides being given in the unique shed) in having no artificial amplification. Yet the music is heard from the surrounding grounds—where many listeners recline on blankets—with good audibility and fine clarity.

The novelty of yesterday's program was an orchestra fairy-tale by Serge Prokofieff, "Peter and the Wolf," with narration by Richard Hale. This was interesting for children, perhaps more interesting to adults. It was interesting chiefly because it was a novelty.

From the musical standpoint it fell short of the imagination, lacking the realism it could have had. One might argue against too much realism in a musical, program composition, yet here was a case where direct imitation seemed intended.

Various characters of the story were represented by solo instruments. The cat, for example, by clarinet in low register. But the theme was not suggestive enough of a cat!

The story was pointless. Mr. Hale's elocution was excellent.

The C. P. E. Bach concerto (not a concerto in the usual sense, for it did not feature one solo instrument), brought out some of the afternoon's finest interpretation. The second half was given to Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony, a splendid performance, but hardly outstanding. The andantino and scherzo did not have the fine shadings one occasionally hears. The first movement and finale received their full measure of punctuation and emphasis.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 7 - 1939

SECOND SERIES OF CONCERTS

Berkshire Festival Draws Large Audiences

There will be a second weekend of the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival in the Music Shed on the grounds of Tanglewood on the road between Stockbridge and Lenox. For those who go from this vicinity to augment audiences of more than six thousand from all over this country, Canada and abroad, a few impressions of the first series of concerts just ended, is offered to guide them.

Each concert is a gala affair, with its sartorial key set by the boxholders from New York, Boston, or the continent, and Summer colonists from the nearby East, and all points North, South and West who are spending the season in the Berkshires.

Thursday night's concert will bring an audience in full Summer evening dress, men in white coats. It is not as formal as the Saturday assembly. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting, the mainstay of this festival tournout, pays it own tribute to the formality. On Sunday afternoon, if the thermometer registers a sufficiently high mark, off come the coats and the musicians play in their shirt sleeves.

Concerts begin in this closing week at 8.30 o'clock on Thursday and Saturday nights, and at 3.30 o'clock on Sunday afternoon. It is well to arrive and be seated by that time, for no one is admitted after Mr. Koussevitsky raises his baton until the end of the first movement of the piece that opens the program. This rule is followed by the orchestra at home in Symphony Hall, Boston, and has been brought to the Berkshires since the series started six years ago.

There is an intermission of 29 minutes at each concert, with time out to visit the Mansion at Tanglewood, in sight from the Music Shed which was built last year. The house was on the grounds at the time the festival was first held there, and will be used for an academy for students of symphonic music next Winter, according to an announcement made at the beginning of this series of concerts. Gardens around the house have a sweeping outlook of three quarters of the mountainous horizon.

Well known critics have given would-be patrons of the three closing concerts an inkling of the fine symphonic music they may expect, its inspired performance and the ideal acoustics in every part of the huge shed. This is intended to enlighten visitors to the festival's concluding three programs on the setting and gradually built up traditions that go with an annual event that corresponds musically with the Salzberg and other European festivals.

Observed at the festival yesterday were Mrs. Frank C. Smith, Jr., a box-holder, and in her box, Mrs. Everett Carlton, Mrs. Charles Baker, Mrs. Frederick R. Williams, Mrs. Smith's sister-in-law, and Mrs. Williams' daughter, Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller of Pittsfield, a member of the festival association.

Others there from Worcester included Mrs. Arthur W. Ewell, Mrs. Clarence S. Brigham, Mrs. Leslie P. Leland and Miss Rachel G. Little.

THIS CLIPPING FROM WILMINGTON, DEL.
EVENING JOURNAL

AUG 7 - 1939

Second Part of Music Fete Opens Thursday

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 7 (AP).—The second half of the Berkshire symphonic festival at Tanglewood, near here, will open Thursday night with Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Smyphony in a Beethoven, Strauss, Moussorgsky program in the huge music shed on the 210-acre estate bordering the "Stockbridge Bowl."

Yesterday set the all time record with 6,500 persons from most sections of the western world in attendance. So far about 18,000 music lovers have heard the music of the first three concerts, George Edman, one of the festival officials, said.

Yesterday's music included the fourth Tschaikovsky symphony, a C. P. E. Bach concerto in an arrangement by Maximilian Steinberg, and one of the most successful attempts at musical humor in history, "Peter and the Wolf," Serge Prokofieff's "Orchestral Fairy Tale."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
UTICA, N. Y.
Observer Dispatch

AUG 7 - 1939

THRONG TOURS RUSSIAN 'LAND' IN BERKSHIRES

Stockbridge, Mass. —(AP)— Serge Koussevitzky closed the first half ~~of the~~ current Berkshire Symphonic Festival yesterday by taking the largest audience which ever attended on a tour of a Russian "Never-Never-Land." There were 6,500 persons in and around the big music shed at Tanglewood.

"Never-Never-Land" is the fantastic land which Serge Prokofieff created in a unique orchestral fairy tale called "Peter and the Wolf," played yesterday for the first time. The music is witty as well as funny, and is full of broad laughs as well as some typical Russian subtleties.

Hale Is Narrator

As always, when the Boston Symphony does this work Richard Hale was the narrator. It is one of the best bits or recitation to be heard anywhere, and, with the orchestra and Dr. Koussevitzky co-operating, it brought about one of the most wholehearted ovations of the festival.

For that matter, Dr. Koussevitzky used eloquently every resource of one of the world's great orchestras throughout the program, which opened with Bach's D Major Concerto in the orchestra arrangement by Maximilian Steinberg and closed with one of the most moving performances of the familiar F Minor Tchaikovsky symphony in the experience of the thousands who heard it.

The festival has not only been a musical success of the first rank, it has served to raise the whole of Berkshire County out of a slump in its chief summer industry, the tourist crop. The drouth, the World's Fair or the financial status of the East has been reflected on the hotel registers of the district, and, for the first time this summer, these institutions have overflowed. The allied industries have prospered as well.

Audience Overflows Shed

The Berkshire Festival has created, incidentally, one of the most loyal summer musical audiences in the world. This was startlingly proved by the fact that extra tickets sold at the gate were only $400 more on Saturday night than on Thursday, when two deluges failed to frighten away even the dowgers.

Yesterday, it was necessary for late comers to be satisfied with places outside the music shed. The shady side of the shed was packed solidly with humanity; many more sat stoically in the bright Berkshire sun through the program, though they were able to see nothing but the back rows of the audience and without standing on tiptoe could not even see the top of Koussevitzky's head.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER

AUG 7 - 1939

Record Attendance at Berkshire Festival

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 7.—(A.P.)—The second half of the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood, near here, will open Thursday night with Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony in a Beethoven, Strauss, Moussorgsky program in the huge music shed on the 210-acre estate bordering the "Stockbridge bowl."

Yesterday set the all time record with 6,500 persons in attendance. So far about 18,000 music lovers have heard the music of the first three concerts, according to George Edman, one of the festival officials.

Yesterday's music included the fourth Tchaikovsky symphony, a C. P. E. Bach Concerto in an arrangement by Maximilian Steinberg, and one of the most successful attempts at musical humor in history, "Peter and the Wolf," Serge Prokofieff's "orchestral fair tale."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

AUG 7 - 1939

Tanglewood First Series Is Concluded

Dr. Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony Bravoed; Richard Hale Delights in Fairy Tale

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 6.—(Special.)—With weather of the kind that our unromantic meteorologists laconically call "fair and warmer," the first of the two series of concerts comprising the sixth annual Berkshire Festival, came to a close at Tanglewood near here this afternoon.

It was not the elegant sunshine, however, but the rousing performance of Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra which ~~kept everybody~~ bravo-ing round the place and shouting "Speech!" long after the concert was over and the conductor was probably happily enough splashing in his shower and directing himself through a bathing-aria. It was one of those days when this imperious Roman was in tip-top form, singing and smiling away at his orchestra and moulding every phrase by hand. And when it was over and the audience was burning incense in front of him, there was something very much like a grin of satisfaction on his face every time he took a bow.

The program offered Steinberg's augmented instrumentation of C. P. E. Bach's Concerto For Strings, now pointed up by a sprinkling of woodwinds and horn, Prokofieff's "Peter And The Wolf" and Tchaikowsky's Fourth Symphony.

Bach Work Moving.

I am inclined to believe that Dr. Koussevitzky programed the Bach Concerto pretty much for the sake of its middle section, andante lento molto. The two enclosing allegro sections are pleasant but not notable, and while the conductor certainly did not slight them, it was in the middle movement tha the was ostensibly working with more than ordinary care and tenderness. It is music marked, it seemed to me, with much grief, rising and falling with surges of intense passion and reminding in its mood and waves of sadness somewhat of the "Liebestod" music. Its emotions were always more uinversal than the sorrowing passages of Johann Sebastian Bach, more classical and less personal, but still, I think, exceedingly moving.

The Steinberg orchestration of this movement, centered around an English horn, inclined at points to give the effect of organ, which personally I am not too fond of, believing that to set an orchestra imitating or paralleling organ, is more "trick" than persuasive or legitimate.

Hale Huge Success.

It was Richard Hale, known both as an actor and singer, who declaimed the Prokofieff fairy tale, and the gusto of his telling, together with the keen humors of the composer, made it charming indeed. As you probably know, each character, human and animal, is represented by some instrument. Despite the feeling I had in advance, that it would turn out to be a parable for grown-ups, with more than meets the eye—or ear—it is not. It is simply a typical Russian story for children, it does not pull your little boy's leg, and I for one like it better because it does not make gulls of the youngsters.

I would not deny that it has some of the modish wit which makes Prokofieff our shrewdest and most fashionable musical humorist, but this is more in the music itself, the ingenious orchestration touched with fantasy so well exemplified by "Lieutenant Kije," which conductor and orchestra gave us just a year ago. Prokofieff can do some pretty smart, piquant writing when he sets about it, and the fact that it can incline toward drawing-room sophistication, need not, I think, cause us to pass him off as of less consequence for his urbanity.

Mr. Hale, who told the story of the little boy who defied his grandfather and lassoed a wolf by its tail, threw himself in the part with every zest and a fine humour. He succeeded in warming the hearts of old and young alike, and received tremendous applause for his gay ferocity. Incidentally, even with an orchestra to compete with, his voice easily filled the great, open shell, a feat in itself.

Lesson In Tschaikowsky.

I have always held that we belittle Tschaikowsky very unfairly these days. To all who condemn him out of hand, or because of the mawkish performances often given him, I recommend a course under Dr. Kousevitzky, who manages to avoid all implications of teariness and to set him out as a composer of gigantic dramatics. Dr. Koussevitzky's reading of the Fourth today treated the andantino with becoming reserve, burnished to brilliance the utterly characteristic writing of the scherzo, and simply overwhelmed the house with the violent drama of the final section. It was a finish that brought the audience up standing. As a performance it was a festival of brass and woodwinds—and I say an orchestra that can make real music out of pizzicato, as the Boston always does, gets my vote for virtuosity.

As a matter of fact, orchestra like the conductor seemed in extra fettle today and gave special luster to all they touched. By the way, have I ever said that I'll take the Doctor and the Boston, to any other symphony we have?

T. H. P.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

AUG 7 - 1939

RECORD CROWD HAILS CONCERT BY SYMPHONY

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

The two greatest audiences of the Berkshire symphonic festival at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, since its inception—it is estimated that between 7,000 and 8,000 attended both the Saturday night and Sunday afternoon performances—greeted the Boston Symphony orchestra and wildly acclaimed its virile conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The weather was ideal and every facility was strained to the utmost to accommodate the tremendous throng of music lovers.

Saturday night's program was devoted to a contrasting group of symphonic fare; the hors d'ouvre of Walter Piston's Concerto, the entree of Sibelius' Fifth symphony and the substantial, well done roast of Beethoven's Seventh symphony. Mr. Piston, who was behind the scenes during the playing of his number was called out by the conductor to receive the enthusiastic applause of the audience. Written in the modern idiom, its dissonances are streamlined and do not assault the ear by violent infractions of the established rules of permissable intervals. The work is melodious, the themes being clother in ingenious harmonizations, and, as a whole highly diverting, if used primarily as an appetizer.

SIBELIUS' SYMPHONY

The contemporary conductor, Jean Sibelius was represented by his symphony No. 5, which he completed in 1914. This is Sibelius in his gayest mood and he knows the excitement of Oriental repitition in phrase and rhythms in rearing imposing musical structures. Strangely enough, this work received the greatest ovation of the evening, due possibly to the desire of the audience to get the parking stations after the Betehoven Seventh, which after all, was the supreme even of the evening. The beautiful "Dance" symphony received the insight by the conductor and the meticulous performance by the orchestra that the immortal music so richly deserved.

Sunday afternoon brought out a coatless orchestra which played with refreshing freedom. After the classical Bach, the orchestra played the first novelty of the series, a sort of Boston Silly Symphony, called "Peter and the Wolf." It was a fascinating orchestral fairy tale by Prokofieff with Wagnerian leit motifs a la Russee. The distinguished singing-actor, Richard Hale told the story as the orchestra illustrated musically, the tale of the "Big Bad Wolf," and was accorded a great big hand.

ACCLAIM CONDUCTOR

The monumental Fourth symphony, by Tchaikovsky, was the final offering. Dr. Koussevitzky can take the music of any school and make it sound better than most; give the distinguished Russian some of his countryman's exciting music and he directs as one inspired.

The performance of the symphony received the greatest ovation of anything played so far during the series of concerts, the staid New Englanders with a certain sprinkling of listeners from every state in the union, actually stood up on their chairs and called time and again for the conductor. Tired as he must have been and wet as he most certainly was, the smiling conductor bowed time and again and motioned the orchestra to rise in appreciation of the deafening applause. The second series will be resumed Thursday night.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 7 - 1939

OVATION IS GIVEN TO ORCHESTRA BY RECORD AUDIENCE

Boston Symphony Presents Superb Performance at Tanglewood

By Willard M. Clark

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 6—The first series of the current Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts came to a close this afternoon with a superb performance of Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony players were at ~~their superlative best~~ and an audience of record breaking proportions paid them the tribute of rapt attention and a heart-warming ovation.

Attendance Sets Record

According to George W. Edman, clerk of the Association, the audience was the largest ever to attend a concert here. He estimated it at 6500. It was thought that the audience of 6200 Saturday night was breaking all records, and so it had to date, but the Festival now knows no limitations as far as audiences are concerned. The music shed was filled to capacity. Several hundred extra seats were placed on the sides and fully a thousand persons sat on the lawns, for one can hear clearly, even far away from the shed.

This first series of concerts has been notable for programs, performances and audiences. It proves without doubt that given the best of music, magnificently performed, audiences will gather from far and near. Dr. Koussevitzky's programs have followed conservative paths, but he has provided such contemporary works as Walter Piston's Orchestral Concerto and Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" to giv evariety. Mr. Piston's work, heard Saturday night, is one of the most interesting from the pen of an American. It is virtuoso writing by one who has ideas and knows how to express them briefly and dramatically.

It was about a year ago that Dr. Koussevitzky introduced to Festival audiences Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kieje," a delightful bit of writing for the film of the same name. Last winter, in Northampton, he played the same composer's delectable work, "Peter and the Wolf," with Richard Hale as the narrator of the story. This afternoon it was repeated and it bids fair to be remembered as one of the high lights of the Festival. The Russian composer is at his best in works of fantasy.

Many Provocative Rhythms

The score teems with provocative rhythms and pretty tunes. Each character in the work is played by some instrument and Mr. Hale introduces each character and then commences the tale. It is easy to follow and as clever and sophisticated as one could wish. The bird is sung by the flute; the clarinet in the low register makes a grand cat and the basso a grumpy old grandfather. Three horns announce the wolf and Peter has a string quartet. Kettle and bass drums depict the shooting. It is an utterly charming work well worth hearing a couple of times.

The program opened with a fine interpretation of a concerto for strings by K. P. E. Bach, arranged by Steinberg for strings, flute, two oboes and English horn. It is a crisp vigorous work, full of melody and not unlike the concertos for strings by his distinguished father. One marveled again at the cirtuosity of the players and perfection on the ensemble.

For sheer drive and display of dramatics we have never heard anything to equal the performance of Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony. It was overwhelming in its intensity. The opening movement was played with tremendous power, brasses soaring as one seldom hears them. The lovely andante was played with the smoothest of legatos, while the unusual and delightful pizzicato scherzo was full of freshness and charm. It was in the finale that an already hard driven orchestra was driven to unexpected lengths. It was almost too much for the acoustics of the music shed. Music turned to noise, as it were. It fairly brought the audience to its feet and the bravos and cheers could be heard all over the estate. It was not until it was worn out by its own enthusiasm that the audience would leave.

The first concert of the second series will be given Thursday night when the program will include the second symphony by Beethoven; the tone poem, "Thus Spake Zarathustra," by Strauss and "Pictures at an Exhibition" by Moussorgsky.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

AUG 7 - 1939

PROKOFIEFF WORK GIVEN AT FESTIVAL

Walter Piston's Concerto Also Heard.

By IRVING KOLODIN.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 6.—The solicitude of Serge Koussevitzky for the living ~~pulse of music~~ was exemplified by the concerts of the week end at Tanglewood, where the Berkshire Symphonic Festival reached the half-way point. Beginning with Saturday night's concert, Dr. Koussevitzky entered on a series of programs which will see at least one work by a living composer on each. Considering that these concerts regularly attract more than 5,000 listeners (yesterday's matinee was heard by more than 6,000) this is a gesture of no small significance.

It is not improbable, indeed, that a listener who followed the series through from its beginning would carry away, as his brightest memory, yesterday afternoon's performance of Serge Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf." The American history of this work dates only from last March (when this same Boston Symphony Orchestra performed the inaugural rites) but there are already those who do not hesitate to class it with Saint-Saens's "Carnival des Animaux," Dukas's "L'Apprenti Sorcier" and Tchaikowsky's "Nutcracker" suite, as an example both of sprightly humor and musical craftsmanship. It is difficult to conceive of the fanciful text delivered with a slyer emphasis than Richard Hale summoned for it. As for the music, the honored traditions of the orchestra apparently do not exclude an aptitude for the satirical.

American Work Heard.

As a proper contrast for this light-handed score, Dr. Koussevitzky began the Saturday night concert with the five-year-old "Concerto" of Walter Piston. Whether it was the brilliance of the playing or the natural "seasoning" that will enhance the virtues of almost any score, the work made a considerably more substantial impression than it had at earlier performances. There is unusual solidity in the thematic material of this work and though the method is that of Hindemith, there is a sufficient filtration of Piston's personality into its patterns to establish its qualities as his own. There is the precision, the neatness of detail, that are the essence of Piston's manner. They emerge with particular clarity under Dr. Koussevitzky's deft baton.

Perhaps with an archeological intent, the conductor opened yesterday's program with the D major Concerto of K. P. E. Bach (in the Steinberg version), thus permitting the audience to draw its own analogies with the American work of the previous day. There was the intervening hand of Steinberg to consider in appraising the qualities of the young Bach's score; but there could be little doubt that the serenity of the slow movement was owing to Bach rather than Steinberg. Each program was completed by a symphony, yesterday's by the fourth of Tchaikowsky, Saturday evening's by the fifth of Sibelius. Both are legendary accomplishments of conductor and orchestra, indoors and out. The series will be resumed on Thursday evening.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

AUG 7 - 1939

Music Festival In Berkshires Ends First Half

6,500 Hear Third Concert; Works by Tchaikovsky and Prokofieff Played

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 6.—Completing the first half of the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the third concert of this series this afternoon in the music shed on the Tanglewood Estate here. The program began with Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach's Concerto in D, replacing the originally announced Mozart Symphony in E Flat. Richard Hale was the narrator in Serge Prokofieff's entertaining Peter and the Wolf and Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony followed the intermission.

With continued propitious weather, the concert drew an audience estimated at 6,500, exceeding last night's figure by 300 and marking a new record in this festival's career. Many persons listened on the grass in the neighborhood of the music shed, taking advantage of the opportunity to hear the music effectively within a wide radius outside of the resonant semi-outdoor auditorium. A fairly powerful sun made places under convenient trees especially favored spots.

The program was amply diversified, but, although Peter and the Wolf was composed only three years ago, it offered no problems for the more conservative-minded members of the audience. This orchestral fairy tale for children, to quote its official designation, was made known by this orchestra both to Boston and New York last winter and here received another admirable performance, the humor of the music and the story being convincingly set forth both by the musicians and by Mr. Hale, whose ideally clear enunciation and expressive vocal inflection merited high praise. The work has an immediate appeal; its power for entertainment is undeniable, although it is quite possible that it might wear out its welcome with too frequent performances.

The concerto by Johann Sebastian Bach's second son was originally scored for strings, but was presented in Maximilian Steinberg's arrangement for full orchestra which, while adding to the range of color, preserves the style and atmosphere of the eighteenth century. The Boston Symphony has long been noted for its interpretations of music of this character and period, and the performance was praiseworthy both for vigor, delicacy and clarity of detail.

Tchaikovsky also provides a grateful interpretative medium for Dr. Koussevitzky and the fourth symphony received a performance of vivid and memorable instrumental hues and full realization of the emotional power of the music whose popularity may have led on occasion to underrating of the fundamental musical value of much of the work. There was ardent applause.

Consisting of a concerto for orchestra by Walter Piston, professor of music at Harvard University, and two symphonies, the fifth of Sibelius and the seventh of Beethoven, the program played last night was, like today's, thoroughly diversified in character. The Piston work was introduced by the Boston Symphony to Boston and New York in the winter of 1936, but cannot yet be styled familiar music. As John N. Burk's program notes pointed out, it is a concerto in the eighteenth century sense of the work, although the impression of eighteenth century form is prominent only in the vigorous, short first movement.

Harmonies and instrumentalization are, however, distinctly up to date. The second movement, with its buoyantly whirling strings, sometimes gives a discreet hint of jazz in the scoring for the wind choirs. The third is based upon the passacaglia form, while here again the treatment is indubitably modern. There are a few reminders of Stravinsky and a few post-romantic touches, and the finale occasionally suggests experiment for its own sake in an interesting manner, but in general the concerto can be regarded as a significant production by one of our best versed composers.

In the Beethoven symphony Dr. Koussevitzky set forth the allegretto with persuasive eloquence. The first movement was taken at a relatively deliberate tempo, while not lacking a massive vigor and momentum, and a swifter pace might have been advantageous in the finale. The Sibelius Symphony which, under more leisurely conditions, would deserve extensive and appreciative comment, is now generally acknowledged as one of the Finnish master's foremost compositions and received a performance worthy of its musical stature by a conductor and orchestra who have long been known as devoted Sibelians.

The second half of the festival begins Thursday night with a program including Beethoven's Second Symphony, Straus's Zarathustra and Moussorgsky's Pictures at an Exhibition. Haydn's 102d Symphony, Stravinsky's Sacre du Printemps and Wagner excerpts will be played Saturday night and Schumann's Fourth Symphony, Debussey's Afternoon of a Faun, Ravel's La Valse and Sibelius's Second Symphony in the last concert next Sunday afternoon.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 7 - 1939

SOCIETY ATTENDS MUSIC FESTIVAL

Many Notables in Boxes for Afternoon Concert — Luncheon for Mrs R. E. Paine at Lebanon

Tanglewood, Aug. 6—As a society event the third concert at Tanglewood this afternoon took first rank and boxholders had many guests.

With Mrs George Otis Rockwood and daughter, Princess Diane R. Eristavi, were Mr and Mrs William E. Dodge Stokes, Mr and Mrs Carr V. Van Anda, Lawrence Smith Butler and George Jarvis Geer. Earlier in the day Mrs Rockwood and the princess gave a luncheon at Rosemary lodge, Lebanon Springs, N. Y., in honor of Mrs Renee E. Paine of Brookline. The other guests were Mrs W. Henry Harrison, Mrs Townsend Phillips, Mr and Mrs Harris Fahnestock, Mr and Mrs R. Jay Flick, Giraud Foster, John P. S. Harrison and Louis Gerard Paine.

In the box with Mr and Mrs Walter Atherton of Boston were Mr and Mrs George E. Parkinson, Mrs Harry K. Knapp, Edward P. Botsford of New York, Mr and Mrs George J. Putnam of Boston.

With Bentley Wirt Warren, president of the Boston Symphony orchestra, were Mr and Mrs Danforth Geer, Jr., of Short Hills, N. J., and Dr and Mrs Herschel C. Walker of Philadelphia.

Mr and Mrs Donald F. McPherson had in their box Mrs John P. Hazen Perry of New Canaan, Ct., and Mrs Mahlon Ogden West of Lake Forest, Ill. With Mr and Mrs Robert K. Wheeler were Mr and Mrs Frederick A. Pearson, Misses Peggy Wheeler and Cynthia Chase.

Mr and Mrs R. Jay Flick were accompanied by Mrs Flick's sister, Mrs Edward T. Stuart of Ardmore, Pa., and Mrs Margot Flick Hoffmann.

With Mr and Mrs Norman H. Davis, were members of their family, including Mr and Mrs Maclin P. Davis, Mrs Robert W. Whiton Stuart and Mrs John Fennelly.

In the box with Mrs W. Rockford Gibbs were Mr and Mrs George B. de Gersdorff and Mr and Mrs Milo Safranek.

Guests of Miss Mary Parsons were Mrs Walter Maynard, Mrs Montgomery Hare, Mr and Mrs Montgomery Hare, Jr.

Mr and Mrs David T. Dana have Mr and Mrs Pierre L. Barbey of New York as guests at Birchwood, Lenox, and Mrs Dana had a luncheon party for them today.

Visiting Mrs Edgar C. Leonard at Strawberry hill, Stockbridge, is Dr Mary L. Leonard, founder and manager of the Winter Park (Fla.) Symphony orchestra.

Mrs Harold Godwin and Miss Elizabeth L. Godwin of Roslyn, L. I., gave a tea at the Lenox academy, Lenox, yesterday afternoon in connection with the opening of an exhibition of 46 water color sketches and seven in oil by Mr Godwin, who died in 1931. Mrs Albert Sterner and Miss Godwin poured.

Mrs Zenas Crane Colt was a luncheon hostess today at Longacre, Dalton, for Mr and Mrs Henry Lewis, 3d, of New York, weekend guests of Mr and Mrs Colt, who last night had a dinner party of 16 at the Lenox club in compliment to the Myopia Hunt club polo team, recently defeated by the Pittsfield team, Mr Colt manager, for the W. Cameron Forbes cup.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD

AUG 7 - 1939

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL SUCCESS

18,000 Music Lovers Have Heard Program

BY JOHN SELBY
(Associated Press Arts Editor)

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 7—The second half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, near here, will open Thursday night with Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony in a Beethoven, Strauss, Moussorgsky program in the huge music shed on the 210 acre estate bordering the "Stockbridge Bowl."

Yesterday set the all time record with 6,500 persons from most sections of the western world in attendance. So far about 18,000 music lovers have heard the music of the first three concerts, according to George Edman, one of the festival officials.

Yesterday's music included the fourth Tchaikovsky Symphony, a C. P. E. Bach concerto in an arrangement by Maximilian Steinberg and one of the most successful attempts at musical humor in history, "Peter and the Wolf," Serge Prokofieff's orchestral fairy tale.

For this last, Richard Hale was the narrator, one of the things he does best. The audience, excited by the beauty of the playing and perhaps also by the beauty of the tanglewood setting, gave everybody concerned in retailing Peter's adventures a rousing reception.

Three concerts remain to be heard this summer. After Thursday, the next will be Saturday night. The sixth festival closes next Sunday afternoon. When it reopens in 1940 there will be a school of music at Tanglewood as well as a unique series of concerts

---

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
DEMOCRAT

AUG 7 - 1939

A correspondent writes that thunder blended with the tympani at the opening of the sixth annual Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. However, weather regardless, over five thousand attended the first concert directed by Serge Koussevitzky who, through experience with August weather for some seasons now, seems impervious to natural tonal effects as accompaniments to Rimsky-Korsakoff, Brahms and other well knowns in musical composition. It seems when the orchestra reached that section of the "Scheherazade" called "The Sea — The Ship Goes to Pieces on the Rock," the drums and cymbals were running a close second to thunder in the Berkshire Hills. Quiet was moderately restored when the band arrived at Brahms First Symphony. Most of the spectators were willing to take their rain and their music together since the former was a Godsend to the parched earth.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 7 - 1939

Audience of 6,500 Breaks Record for Tanglewood Events

Dr. Koussevitzky Acclaimed at Weekend Performances

By CARL E. LINDSTROM
Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass.—A crowd of 6,500 broke all attendance records for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival on Sunday afternoon.

At the monument green in Lenox stood a line of native youth noting car markers as the thousands of motorists dispersed and from any random point of less advantage could be observed plates from British Columbia and Florida, Iowa, Kansas, Ontario, Texas, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Delaware, and California. This stream of musical interest—and it was certainly that—flooded the always famous and now so illustriously dedicated grounds of "Tanglewood."

There could be no disappointment because the Boston Orchestra from its brilliant mean can rise to any expectation and here does it consistently.

Varied Program

The Sunday program comprised a venerable classic, a popular novelty and an imposing favorite of universal appeal. Dr. Koussevitzky worked his magic with Bach, the elder, on Thursday night. This time it was son Karl Phillip Emanuel whose Concerto in D major for Stringed Instruments received the benediction of a lofty musicianship.

There was an air of expectancy for Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf." Those who had chuckled before over its witty innocence chuckled again. The beguiling work has been discussed thrice before in these columns and there is no space for reiteration. Those who have not heard it surely will, for it is bound to become popular—more so perhaps than Ravel's Bolero. The sophisticates will then drop it because it will belong to so many people but it already has signs of perennial existence.

Suffice this time that Richard Hale as narrator scored a personal triumph, a notable result in view of the auditorium's vastness and his ability in spite of it to invoke a sense of confidence and intimacy.

Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony was a popular hit. After each movement the audience, of exemplary restraint in this respect, was sorely tempted to applaud and there was a scattering of hands which came near to interrupting the succession of Tchaikowsky's purple and gold episodes. The players quite outdid themselves, in the breathless pizzicato ostinato as well as the first and last movements.

At the conclusion there was a crashing ovation which kept Dr. Koussevitzky responding endlessly and in turn sharing his laurels with an orchestra which has no peer.

Saturday Night

The Saturday night program was a reversal of convention—opening, that is, with contemporary Walter Piston's Concerto for Orchestra, continuing with the still contemporary E flat Symphony of Sibelius and closing upon the plain and noble speech of Beethoven's Seventh Symphony.

It was a novel procedure but not without its hazards. For an orchestra of such incredibly dextrous powers as the Boston Symphony to shake out all its pyrotechnical resources on involved scores of turbulent, prismatic sonorities and then come warm-fingered and tingling to the inviolable gospel of Beethoven is to invite certain excesses which, truth to tell, were not wholly resisted.

Three movements were unimpeachably modeled; the finale for all its dionysiac beauty was fairly unrecognizable. Dr. Koussevitzky delivered it body and soul to his horns and trumpets and whether their parts lay in the tenor or soprano positions it became their concerto, the rushing string figures being completely covered. As a further excitant the brass designedly played sharp most of the time. The effect was electrifying and brought 6,000 persons to their feet to release an instigated frenzy in tumultuous applause. Dr. Koussevitzky knows where to find the nerves of his audience but it is to be feared that his treatment of the Seventh Symphony's finale savored a bit of the sensational.

There is no wish to emphasize this lapse from the rarefied tone of these concerts, but the spirit of the "Tanglewood" Festival is so unique and so treasurable a quantity that it should be jealously preserved. The music has been of a criterion order, restorative, renewing; it must not be merely astonishing.

One of the Festival's higher purposes was also exemplified Saturday night with the introduction of a work by a living American.

Ovation for Piston

Walter Piston took the stage to acknowledge an ovation as Aaron Copland and Edward Burlingame Hill have done before him. His Concerto for Orchestra was tremendously received after a resoundingly fine performance. Built on a ground plan resembling classical models, it employs without inhibition polytonality and modern rhythmic idioms. It was highly comestible and obviously intelligible over a wide denomination of taste. Polytonality need not be forbidding; listeners, it is plain, can think in two tonalities at once provided your orchestra, too, can think that way. For all its piquancy, this Concerto is wholly reasonable and extraordinarily ingenious in such spots as the opening of the Adagio where tuba and trombones deal in some magnificently rich textures.

The high mark of the Festival so far was the Sibelius Symphony. To stake a reputation on the statement that this is the greatest of all Fifth symphonies is scarcely a wager. There is no space here to prove the point anyway even if it were provable.

The E flat Symphony was greeted with considerable reserve when the Boston Orchestra played it at Bushnell Memorial last winter, even by people who wanted to like it. That is understandable for its full appreciation requires more familiarity than has been afforded so far.

Richly Developed

For richness of development and thematic economy, particularly in the slow movement, it equals Beethoven. As a personal expression, this epic of Sibelius conveys more by saying less than does Tschaikowsky. Some of the grandest pages in symphony comprise the finale. Written 25 years ago it is essentially of today and becomes more vital as the years pass. Its universality and sanity are such that even Bach would have been moved by it could it have been made available to him by retro-migration.

Dr. Koussevitzky plays it practically without pause, even between the last two movements, thereby emphasizing its splendid unity. He has made this symphony very much his own.

116

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 7 - 1939

6500 Give Koussevitzky Ovation at Tanglewood

Sunday Program 'Light,' 'Popular'

Three Major Works Include Symphony—'Peter and the Wolf' Pleases

By FRANCIS REGAL

Lenox, Aug. 6—The Berkshire Symphonic festival went tropical today, but only by a narrow margin, since the musicians did not shed their subfusc coats until they had taken their places on the stage and tested the atmosphere. Dr Koussevitzky, in whites, retained his coat for C. P. E. Bach, but got rid of it for Peter Ilitsch Tschaikowsky. This truly rural freedom is one of the attractive features of these roofed-over but not boxed-in concerts, and it is most fully appreciated at the Sunday afternoon performances, when the sun may be hot; but rustling breezes among green foliage is refreshing, and the 25-minute interval is pleasantly filled in with cooling drinks and strolls through the lawns and glades of Tanglewood.

The Sunday afternoon atmosphere, however, involves no relaxation of serious interest, and no differentiation is made in the programs. It was merely by accident that the program for today was relatively "light" and "popular," using both words in a good sense. It was of the normal type—three major works including a symphony. But the symphony which gave an imposing climax was by Tschaikowsky, one of the least austere of symphonists, and one-third of the time was given to a flagrantly popular contemporary work, Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," which bids fair to rival "Snowwhite and the Seven Dwarfs."

Back Work Pleasing

Yet it should be recorded that neither of these sure-fire features held attention more closely, or gave more general pleasure, than the charming but ultra-classical "concerto in D-major for strings" by Emanuel Bach, with which the concert opened. It was composed in the 18th century for the fretted viols which even then were going out of use, and while it delighted select audiences when revived in Paris by the Society of Ancient Instruments it might never have reached the general public if Dr Koussevitzky had not suggested its transcription to the Russian composer, Maxmilian Steinberg. This orchestral arrangement, first played by the Boston orchestra in 1925, is masterly, and the poignant voices of the few wood winds used add amazingly to the effect. Even with a routine performance the clarity of the music and the beauty and vitality of its tone-pattern could hardly fail to please, but the warmth and intensity given to it by the conductor and the virtuosi of the orchestra made it one of the memorable features of the festival.

Certainly, no one will forget the big bad wolf of which Peter was not afraid, and today's performance was not less brilliant and fascinating than the one given last year at Northampton with the same performers, including the marvelous narrator, Richard Hale, who shared in the great success of the first American performance, Boston 1938, which the composer conducted. A few years ago such a work might have been thought too frivolous for a distinguished composer to pen or for a great symphony orchestra to play except at a "pop," but music seems to be going popular, and even the gloomy Russians are giving vent to their genuine if deeply buried sense of humor.

This is as it should be, for music ought to be many-sided, and really good musical comedy is rare and precious. Listeners too ought to be on the alert for the musical jokes, sometimes subtle, in which some of the greatest composers indulge, and it is well that the public is learning to relax even at a symphony concert. The impish Prokofieff has disarmed the most serious-minded by the witty text, which begins by introducing to the listeners (supposed to be from the nursery) the various themes and instrumental groups which are to depict the characters of the fairy tale—the brave hero Peter, his friend the little bird in the tree, Mrs Donald Duck, the treacherous cat, the grumpy grandfather, and of course the big bad wolf. But funniest of all is the party of hunters who have picked up the trail of the wolf and are following it through the woods, shooting as they come."

Both the burlesque and the excitement of the nursery tale were deliciously brought out by Mr Hale, who made even the most delicate nuances of the narrative appear to reach all parts of an audience of more than 6000 people. What with his vivid narrative and the audacious cleverness of Prokofieff's score, listeners in recalling their impressions may wonder if they did not actually see the little bird distracting the attention of the snapping wolf while Peter from the tree slipped his lasso over the wolf's tail. "Peter and the Wolf" is in for a run that may rival Ravel's "Bolero," and with new generations coming on it may have a long life.

Another Koussevitzky Facet

The many-sidedness of Dr Koussevitzky was shown today in the equal success of his conducting of a C. P. E. Bach concerto for ancient viols, a rollicking nursery burlesque, and—Tschaikowsky's fourth symphony. In interpreting this great Russian composer he is unexcelled by any living conductor, and it was to a changed and electric atmosphere that this audience returned after the intermission. This is perhaps not the most successful of Tschaikowsky's symphonies, but he put a great deal of himself into it, and when greatly played, as was the case today, it does not fail to thrill.

One difficulty in bringing out his music lies in the juxta-position of small, naive and intimate revelations—little tunes which sound as old as time yet never heard before—with crass brazen pomp to split the ears of the groundlings. In dealing with such unreticent music reticenes is out of place, and Koussevitzky goes the whole way, but he is miraculously successful in achieving a harmonious whole.

Incidentally, the treatment of the powerful and high-colored music of Tschaikowsky seems to gain from the conditions under which music is given at these festivals. In so ample an auditorium, open to all the winds that blow, the winds of the orchestra can blow too without restraint, and there was little shushing in this afternoon's performance.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 7 - 1939

THE FESTIVAL

(North Adams Transcript)

In six short years the Festival has brought inestimable returns to this section. We refer less to the financial benefits resulting from the annual influx of several thousand visitors than to the cultural contributions of the Festival to the people of the county, from the highest to the lowliest

Quite definitely, the Festival has demonstrated that appreciation and enjoyment of good music is not limited to any particular classes or types of persons. It has opened the way for many residents of this area, who otherwise might never have had opportunity, to feel the stimulating effects of great music played by one of the world's greatest musical organizations.

This morning hundreds of county high school students heard the orchestra rehearse. Last winter there were the laymen's music courses sponsored by the Festival organization.

And next year as another step toward making Tanglewood a unique musical center, there will be the school sponsored by Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston symphony organization.

The Berkshire Festival is already one of the county's greatest assets, not only because of its nationwide reputation but—more important to us—because of what it is doing for our own people. We want to see it grow and thrive, and continue to introduce innovations. But always, we feel, it must retain the essential character which has ensured its success thus far.

Between the Boston Orchestra and the Festival audience, a large percentage of which has returned year after year, has grown a bond somewhat comparable to that between the orchestra and its Boston audience. The latter relationship is one of long standing. But in four years the Berkshires has adopted the Boston Symphony. Music lovers here have a great personal interest and pride in the Festival.

Let us hope that nothing will occur in the future to mar this relationship. The experiment last year of introducing vocalists into the concert was not an overwhelming success, perhaps because the assisting artists were, for the most part, not of the stature of the mighty instrument which accompanied them. The orchestra has set a high standard, and whatever innovations are attempted in the future must conform to this same standard.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 7 - 1939

C. P. E. BACH MUSIC GIVEN AT FESTIVAL

Koussevitzky Has Concerto in D Major Open the Third Concert in Berkshires

PROKOFIEFF WORK HEARD

'Peter and Wolf,' With Hale as Narrator, and Symphony of Tchaikovsky Presented

By NOEL STRAUS

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 6.—The first half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival reached its close with this afternoon's concert here at Tanglewood, which was attended by an enthusiastic crowd even larger than the record-breaking audience of last night. Almost 7,000 persons were present, including a large number of children from Berkshire County and the adjoining sections of Connecticut and New York.

In contradistinction to the contemporary American orchestral concerto by Walter Piston, which opened last night's program, Dr. Koussevitzky had placed the concerto in D major for strings by the eighteenth century Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach at the head of today's list.

Thereafter came Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," with Richard Hale as narrator, and following the intermission, the Fourth symphony by Tchaikovsky.

The version of the Bach concerto employed by Dr. Koussevitzky was that made at his behest in the early Twenties by Maximilian Steinberg, director of the Leningrad Conservatory. In this arrangement Steinberg added flute, oboes, English horn, bassoon and French horn to the strings that sufficed Bach, thus bringing the orchestration more in line with that of the complex modern scoring of the Piston work than otherwise would have been the case.

Bach Concerto Applauded

Dr. Koussevitzky and his men of the Boston Symphony Orchestra performed the Bach masterpiece in bravura fashion with the same warmth, fascination of rhythm and unsurpassed color contrasts that marked the unforgettable presentation of the elder Bach's third Brandenburg suite earlier in the week. Like the Prokofieff and Tchaikovsky offering that rounded out the schedule, the fervid and spontaneous response of the huge throng in the Music Shed and on the grounds without must have been heartening even to a leader so accustomed to unusual demonstrations of approval.

"Peter and the Wolf," Prokofieff's adorable orchestral fairy tale for children, made a pronounced hit with the audience and especially with the hundreds of youngsters, many of whom had traveled long miles particularly for this number. Dr. Koussevitzky and his musicians outdid themselves in bringing out the almost unequaled humor of the music, and Mr. Hale abetted their efforts with an inimitable reading of the text of this excruciatingly funny satire on program music, fairy stories, elocutionists, and so on. If the music is witty the text provided by the composer himself is even more mirth-provoking, becoming uncommonly provocative under Mr. Hale's knowing treatment.

Dr. Koussevitsky's reading of Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony has long been greeted with encomiums for its almost unrivaled vigor, tonal splendor and wealth of imaginative detail. It was never more magnificently set forth by him than at this concert, and fully earned the hectic tribute of appreciation it evoked.

Saturday Night Concert

At last night's concert the climax was reached with an extraordinarily compelling and intense unfoldment of the manifold beauties of Sibelius' Fifth symphony, which was rewarded by the season's biggest ovation to date. One never ceases to wonder at the skill displayed by the composer in the development of the two short motives from which the entire symphony is constructed, as though by magic and without a trace of pedantry. There were many moments in Dr. Koussevitzky's amazingly transparent presentation that brought the full meaning of Sibelius' procedure home with a new clarity and eloquence.

This was accomplished by a rare sense of balance in the various strands of melody in such places as the long transitional passage of the first movement, and in the following allegro, which, on account of its structure and content, probably should not be considered as a separate division, but as the development section of the movement, unconventionally enough added at the end as a peroration, like the second development in the opening division of Beethoven's Fifth symphony, from which Sibelius may have gotten the idea.

One would like to go into many a detail concerning the conductor's interpretation of this great composition, but must be content to mention solely the "largamente" close of the finale. The extreme grandeur of the performance there, as the climatic measures were approached and the tremendous effect of the gigantic chords so sharply whipped out after them, will linger long in the memory.

Mr. Piston's concerto for orchestra, in which the old form was freely handled in a modern guise, proved the able work of a composer deeply versed in the contrapuntal music of the eighteenth century masters and capable of putting this knowledge to new and brilliant use. This writer was more impressed by those parts of the clever composition which adhered most nearly to the old models on which it was based, than by such completely modern pages as the jazzy second half of the slow movement, where one begins to feel too great a mixture of styles. All three of the movements, however, were so finely scored, skillfully made and rife with interest that only praise should be meted out to them.

The conclusion of the final variations with its triumphal swing went with electrical effect and proved a real inspiration. More than in most modernist contributions to the literature, this opus showed conviction and vitality in its measures.

As at the rehearsal yesterday afternoon, Mr. Piston was called to the stage after the concerto ended. Beethoven's Seventh symphony was accorded a rendition almost military in its precision. A more deliberate tempo was set for the first movement and the scherzo than usual, but all of it went with splendid élan and was the last word in technical address.

THIS CLIPPING FROM PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER

AUG 7 - 1939

6500 at Fete In Berkshires

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 6 (A. P.).—Serge Koussevitzky closed the first half of the current Berkshire Symphonic Festival today by taking the largest audience which ever attended on a tour of a Russian "Never-Never-Land." There were 6500 persons at Tanglewood.

"Never-Never-Land" is created by Serge Prokofieff in an orchestral fairy tale called "Peter and The Wolf." The music is witty and full of broad laughs and some Russian subtleties.

OVATION WON

Richard Hale was the narrator, and the "recitation" with the Boston Symphony and Koussevitzky cooperating, won one of the festival's most wholehearted ovations.

The program opened with C. P. E. Bach's D Major Concerto in the orchestral arrangement by Mabimilian Steinberg and closed with one of the most moving performances of Tchaikobsky's F Minor Symphony in the experience of the thousands who heard it.

TOURIST SLUMP BANISHED

The festival has been not only a musical success of the first rank, but has served to raise Berkshire county out of a slump in its summer tourist industry. For the first time this summer the hotels have overflowed. The allied industries have prospered as well.

The Berkshire festival has created, incidentally, one of the most loyal summer musical audiences in the world. Extra tickets sold at the gate were only $400 more on Saturday night than on Thursday, when there were two deluges. Today it was necessary for late comers to be satisfied with places outside the music shed.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 7 - 1939

Festival Proves Big Boon To Other Berkshire Events

Large Crowds Flock to Various Centers of County's Cultural and Social Life

Music is not the sole interest of the thousands of visitors who are in the Berkshire Hills for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Scores of people have arranged their schedules so that they are taking in practically every other cultural event in the county as well as visits to other places of interest in this section.

While 6500 persons listened yesterday afternoon to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood a crowd of about 1000 attended the polo match at the Pittsfield Riding and Polo Club and among them were many out of town residents who are here for the Festival.

Other Centers Attract

When the concerts aren't being held hundreds of visitors are availing themselves of the opportunity to visit places like the Pleasant Valley Bird and Wild Flower Sanctuary in Lenox, the Berkshire Garden Center in Stockbridge, the G-Bar-S Ranch in Great Barrington, Crane Museum in Dalton, the Memorial Beacon atop Greylock, the sites of the former homes of Nathaniel Hawthorne and Fanny Kemble in Stockbridge and Lenox, the Mission House in Stockbridge, the Berkshire Museum of Natural History and Art in Pittsfield, Williams College in Williamstown, the homes of the Shakers in Hancock and Mount Lebanon, N. Y., as well as other places which fit in with the development of Berkshire County.

The Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge turned away nearly 100 persons Friday night, the off-night of the first series of concerts, and the attendance on Thursday and Saturday nights, the nights of the concerts, was not affected by the attraction at Tanglewood.

The Friday afternoon concert by the South Mountain String Quartet at the Temple of Chamber Music was attended by an overflow crowd, one of the largest ever to attend a concert in the Temple. The Alexander Bloch quartet in Hillsdale, N. Y., played before the largest audience ever to attend a concert in that town on Saturday.

Tours of Estates Popular

The tours of the beautiful estates in the town of Lenox are proving popular with the Festival visitors. It is estimated that 250 persons last week made trips through the following estates: Grenville L. Winthrop's Groton Place; Mrs. Henry White's Elm Court; Harris Fahnestock's Eastover; Giraud Foster's Bellefontaine; Shadowbrook, the Jesuit Novitiate, former home of Andrew Carnegie; Cranwell Preparatory School, the former Berkshires Hunt and Country Club; the Pleasant Valley Bird and Wild Flower Sanctuary.

Miss Estelle Hutchinson, Lenox chairman of the committee for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, is in charge of making arrangements for the tours. Any one wishing to take part in one or all of the inspection trips is asked to notify an attendant at the Lenox Festival information booth located on the Brotherhood property at the intersection of Routes 7 and 20 or by telephoning the booth, Lenox 68. No trips will be made today or tomorrow but the schedule for the remainder of the week follows:—

Wednesday morning, 10.30, Cranwell School; Wednesday afternoon, 3, Bellefontaine; Thursday, 10.30 A. M., Eastover; 3, Elm Court; Friday, 10.30 A. M., Pleasant Valley Bird and Wild Flower Sanctuary; 3, Bellefontaine; Saturday, 10.30 A. M., Shadowbrook; 3, Groton Place.

Big Crowds at Shawn's

Attendance records at Ted Shawn's lecture demonstrations Friday and Saturday afternoons smashed all previous records at Jacob's Pillow in Becket and other large crowds are expected for the tea, lecture and dance demonstrations scheduled for Friday and Saturday afternoons at 5 this week.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 7 - 1939

Lenox

Business Hits New High In Lenox

Hotels, Inns and Restaurants Jammed With Festival Visitors

LENOX, Aug. 7—Businessmen of this town report that business here hit a new high over the weekend with Festival visitors from all over the country filling practically every hotel, inn and rooming house for the sixth annual concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood.

They agree that the weekend business was greater than at any time before 1929 and of particular interest to the townspeople is the fact that real estate agents here have been kept on the hop showing homes for sale or rent to visitors. One real estate man said yesterday that he showed more places during the past five days than he has in the past eight years.

Following Saturday night's concert Lester Roberts, manager of the Curtiss Hotel, opened the main dining room to take care of the overflow crowd in the grill. The Log Cabin on the Lenox-Pittsfield Road was another busy spot in town. In fact after the concert there was a long line of people waiting at the entrance to the Cabin to get tables before closing time. Ben Karp, and Tod Burke, the properietors report that it was the busiest weekend they have experienced since the Cabin was opened several years ago. Other places filled with people were the St. Lawrence Inn, Village, Mahanna Hotel, Stonewall Lodge, Heathercroft and several rooming houses about town.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

AUG 7 - 1939

Berkshire Society Has Many Guests At Third Concert

Festival at Tanglewood Draws Colonists; the Norman H. Davis Family Attends

Special to the Herald Tribune

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., Aug. 6.—As a society event the third concert at Tanglewood this afternoon took first rank, and box holders had many guests.

With Mr. and Mrs. Norman H. Davis were members of their family, including Mr. and Mrs. Maclin P. Davis, Mrs. Robert W. Whiton Stuart and Mrs. John Fennelly.

With Mrs. George Otis Rockwood and daughter, Princess Diane R. Eristavi, were Mr. and Mrs. William E. Dodge Stokes, Mr. and Mrs. Carr V. Van Anda, Mr. Lawrence Smith Butler and Mr. George Jarvis Geer. Earlier in the day, Mrs. Rockwood and the Princess gave a luncheon at Rosemary Lodge, Lebanon Springs, N. Y., in honor of Mrs. Renee E. Paine, of Brookline. The other guests were Mrs. W. Henry Harrison, Mrs. Townsend Phillips, Mr. and Mrs. Harris Fahnestock, Mr. and Mrs. R. Jay Flick and the Messrs. Giraud Foster. John P. S. Harrison and Louis Gerard Paine.

In the box with Mr. and Mrs. Walter Atherton were Mr. and Mrs. George E. Parkinson, Mrs. Harry K. Knapp, Mr. Edward P. Botsford and Mr. and Mrs. George J. Putnam. With Mr. Bentley Wirt Warren, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, were M[redacted]anforth Geer jr. and Dr. and Mrs. Herschel C. Walker. Mr. and Mrs. Donald F. McPherson had in their box Mrs. John P. Hazen Perry and Mrs. Mahlon Ogden West. Mr. and Mrs. Robert K. Wheeler had Mr. and Mrs. Frederick A. Pearson, Miss Peggey Wheeler and Miss Cynthia Chase. Mr. and Mrs. R. Jay Flick were accompanied by Mrs. Flick's sister, Mrs. Edward T. Stuart, and Mrs. Margot Flick Hoffmann.

In the box with Mrs. W. Rockwood Gibbs were Mr. and Mrs. George B. de Gersdorff and Mr. and Mrs. Milo Safranek. Guests of Miss Mary Parsons were Mrs. Walter Maynard, Mrs. Montgomery Hare and Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery Hare jr.

Mr. and Mrs. David T. Dana have Mr. and Mrs. Pierre L. Barbey, of New York, as guests at Birchwood, Lenox, and Mrs. Dana gave a luncheon for them today. Visiting Mrs. Edgar C. Leonard at Strawberry Hill, Stockbridge, is Dr. Mary L. Leonard, founder and manager of the Winter Park Symphony Orchestra.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
Democrat-Chronicle

AUG 7 - 1939

CROWD CHEERS RUSSIAN MUSIC

By JOHN SELBY

Stockbridge, Mass. — (AP) — Serge Koussevitzky closed the first half of [redacted]erkshire Symphonic Festival yesterday by taking the largest audience which ever attended on a tour of a Russian "Never-Never-Land." There were 6,500 persons in and around the big "music shed" at Tanglewood.

"Never-Never-Land" is the fantastic land which Serge Prokofieff created in a unique orchestral fairy tale called "Peter and the Wolf," played yesterday for the first time at a Berkshire festival. The music is witty as well as funny, and is full of broad laughs as well as some typical Russian subtleties.

As always, when the Boston symphony does this work Richard Hale was the narrator. It is one of the best bits of "recitation" to be heard anywhere, and, with the orchestra and Dr. Koussevitzky co-operating, it brought about one of the most wholehearted ovations of the festival.

For that matter, Dr. Koussevitzky used eloquently every resource of one of the world's great orchestras throughout the program, which opened with Bach's D Major concerto in the orchestral arrangement by Maximilian Steinberg, and closed with one of the most moving performances of the familiar F Minor, Tchaikovsky symphony, in the experience of the thousands who heard it.

The festival has not only been a musical success of the first rank, it has served to raise the whole of Berkshire County out of a slump in its chief summer industry, the tourist crop. The drouth, the World's Fair, or the financial status of the East has been reflected on the hotel registers of the district, and, for the first time this summer, these institutions have overflowed. The allied industries have prospered as well.

The Berkshire festival has created, incidentally, one of the most loyal summer musical audiences in the world. This was startingly proved by the fact that extra tickets sold at the gate were only $400 more on Saturday night than on Thursday, when two deluges failed to frighten away even the dowagers.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
STAMFORD, CONN.
ADVOCATE

AUG 7 - 1939

BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL DRAWS 6,500

BY JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Arts Editor.

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 7.—The second half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, near here, will open Thursday night with Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony in a Beethoven, Strauss, Moussorgsky program in the huge music shed on the 210 acre estate bordering the "Stockbridge Bowl."

Yesterday set the all time record with 6,500 persons from most sections of the Western world in attendance. So far about 18,000 music lovers have heard the music of the first three concerts, according to George Edman, one of the festival officials.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

AUG 7 - 1939

Berkshire Fete Is Attended by Record Throng

Koussevitzky Takes 6,500 Persons on Tour of Russian 'Never-Never Land'; Hale Is Narrator

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 6 (AP).—Serge Koussevitzky closed the first half of the Bershire symphonic festival today by taking the largest audience which ever attended on a tour of a Russian "Never-Never-Land." There were 6,500 persons in and around the big "music shed" at Tanglewood.

"Never-Never-Land" is the fantastic land which Serge Prokofieff created in a unique orchestral fairy tale called "Peter and the Wolf," played today for the first time at a Berkshire festival. The music is witty as well as funny and is full of broad laughs as well as some typical Russian subtleties.

As always, when the Boston symphony does this work Richard Hale was the narrator. It is one of the best bits of "recitation" to be heard anywhere and with the orchestra and Dr. Koussevitzky cooperating, it brought about one of the most wholehearted ovations of the festival.

For that matter, Dr. Koussevitzky used eloquently every resource of one of the world's great orchestras throughout the program, which opened with C. P. E. Bach's D Major Concerto in the orchestral arrangement by Maximilian Steinberg and closed with one of the most moving performances of the familiar F Minor Tchaikovsky Symphony in the experience of the thousands who heard it.

The festival has not only been a musical success of the first rank, it has served to raise the whole of Berkshire county out of a slump in its chief summer industry, the tourist crop. The drought, the world's fair or the financial status of the East has been reflected on the hotel registers of the district and for the first time this summer, these institutions have overflowed. The allied industries have prospered as well.

The Berkshire festival has created, incidentally, one of the most loyal summer musical audiences in the world. This was startingly proved by the fact that extra tickets sold at the gate were only $400 more on Saturday night than on Thursday, when two deluges failed to frighten away even the dowagers.

Today, it was necessary for late comers to be satisfied with places outside the music shed. The shady side of the shed was packed solidly with humanity; many more sat stoically in the bright Berkshire sun through the program although they were able to see nothing but the back rows of the audience and without standing on tiptoe could not even see the top of Koussevitzky's head.

THIS CLIPPING FROM PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES

AUG 7 - 1939

MUSIC FESTIVAL RESUMES THURSDAY

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 7—The second half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, near here, will open Thursday night with Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony in a Beethoven, Strauss, Moussorgsky program in the huge music shed on the 210-acre estate bordering the "Stockbridge Bowl."

Yesterday set the all-time record with 6500 persons from most sections of the western world in attendance. So far about 18,000 music lovers have heard the music of the first three concerts, according to George Edman, one of the festival officials.

Boston Evening Transcript AUGUST 7, 1939

CLEAR AND COOL

Thus the Weather, and the Festival At Tanglewood Has Record Audiences

By STEPHEN SOMERVELL

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 6—Among the most encouraging features of the Berkshire Festival, which is being celebrated for the sixth consecutive year, is the fact that it is not intended solely for the edification of summer visitors—most of whom, after all, enjoy abundant opportunities to hear first-rate symphonic performances during the winter, though hardly under such idyllic conditions. Of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's audiences at Tanglewood a by no means negligible portion is made up of inhabitants of near-by towns, villages, and rural communities.

Promising further progress in this direction is a recent and important by-product of the festival, a layman's music course instituted by the board of trustees. Under this plan a course of 14 lessons in music appreciation was given during the past school year, in six high schools of Berkshire county. Some 1500 pupils participated. At the end of the year prizes of tickets to the concerts were awarded, and all children were invited to attend the orchestra's Saturday morning rehearsals.

The first of these public rehearsals was held yesterday. Under a sunny sky, washed clean by the preceding day's rain, about a thousand high-school children converged upon Tanglewood. Some 2000 adult subscribers to the series, who also are permitted attendance at these rehearsals, joined them. A striking change, this, from the closely guarded privacy of the rehearsals at Symphony Hall during the winter season.

Down to Business

Some preliminary comments on the works to be rehearsed were offered by Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times. Discussing two of these—concertos by C. P. E. Bach and Walter Piston, he pointed out their essential similarity of style despite the two centuries that separated them, and touched upon the relation of the 18th and 19th century conceptions of the concerto to the social ideas and institutions of their respective eras.

The rehearsal began smoothly. Dr. Koussevitzky, coatless and restrained, stopped his men seldom and exhorted them quietly. So were performed the two concertos, with the audience, young and old, intently interested in both the music and the process whereby details were polished and perfected. Prokofiev's "Peter and the Wolf" went even more smoothly and pleased its hearers mightily.

When, after an intermission, the rehearsal was resumed, the children had vanished, doubtless in quest of their mid-day meal, and only the adults remained. Now Dr. Koussevitzky, embarking upon some troublesome portions of Sibelius's 50th symphony, threw off the restraint that had once or twice cost him visible effort. More than one individual or group of players was to cringe under his slow and biting sarcasm or quail beneath his withering glance. Finally, one unfortunate, nervously sounding his very last note a half second too soon, was rewarded with a chilly glare, infinitely and silently prolonged, that froze even the audience. Then the conductor turned abruptly and strode stiffly from the platform. The rehearsal was over.

Music of Fine Substance

On Saturday evening the second concert of the series was given. The weather, compensating for that which greeted the opening of the festival, was perfect—clear and cool. Now at last the surroundings of the Music Shed took on their traditional aspect; not a few listeners sat under the trees or lay on the grass, where they could hear almost as clearly as could the 5500 or so who occupied the Shed. In the intermission these thousands strolled under a velvet sky in which the stars shone brilliantly, or visited the refreshment tent of the good ladies of the Thursday Morning Club of Great Barrington, where they might buy, among other less exotic cooling drinks, goat milk from the near-by farm of Dr. Artur Rodzinsky.

The program made no concessions to that summer lassitude which is sometimes thought to engender a taste for musical trivialities. It began with Walter Piston's Concerto—an alert and witty modernist's adaptation of the manner of the 18th-century concerto grosso. Its first movement, despite its free use of dissonance, most recognizably pays tribute to its prototype. The shape of its phrases, their succession and alternation, their sprightly pace, their neatness, all betray its debt to the type of instrumental allegro favored by Bach and his immediate successors. The ingenious and charming scherzo, scored with brilliant resourcefulness, is far more original. The finale, a passacaglia with many learned devices, is absorbing, but seems to betray too obviously the cerebration that went into its creation.

More familiar fare were the two symphonies that constituted the rest of the program—Sibelius's Fifth, performed in a manner which accentuated its epic scope, its vivid suggestions of legendary heroism, of pomp and circumstance; and Beethoven's Seventh. Dr. Koussevitzky's reading of the latter masterpiece gains constantly in balance and sensitiveness, but we feel his performance of the finale to be too violent and heavy-footed.

Tchaikovsky's Fourth Glows

This afternoon's brilliant weather assisted an attractive program in bringing a record audience to the last concert of the first series. Carl Philip Emanuel Bach's beautiful concerto in D—originaly for strings but rearranged by Steinberg for an orchestra which includes woodwinds and a horn—with its exquisite, long-drawn-out adagio and the pleasantly fluent counterpoints of its two allegros, was admirably performed. Prokofiev's delightful orchestral fairy tale for children, "Peter and the Wolf," followed it and was rapturously received, both by those to whom it was new and by those who had heard it before, for this is a musical joke that improves upon better acquaintance. For entertainment, for sheer musical charm, and as a means of painlessly familiarizing children with the instruments of the orchestra, "Peter" is a masterpiece. Richard Hale was the superb narrator, and the orchestra performed its part magnificently.

Tchaikovsky's Fourth symphony, under Dr. Koussevitzky's sympathetic baton, encompassed the whole gamut of romantic emotions—gloomy, poetic, melancholy, gay, declamatory, heroic. In its finale the conductor drove his men to miraculous heights of frenzied brilliance. It was an extraordinarily effective performance, marking the end, also of the first half of the Sixth Berkshire Festival. The great audience responded with applause, with shouts, and with the waving of programs and pocket handkerchiefs.

118

THIS CLIPPING FROM
DAYTON, O.
NEWS WEEK

AUG 7 - 1939

Richard Tucker

Serge Koussevitzky's deft baton again guides the Boston Symphony at the Berkshire Festival

---

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 8 - 1939

The People's Forum

Festival Impression

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival Concert of August 6, 1939 was a varied one.

Bach's Concerto in D Major is conservative, technical, symphonic—a fine medium for displaying the skill and artistic attainments of the musicians.

In a lighter vein, Prokofieff's fairy tale "Peter and the Wolf" is an interesting and highly entertaining variation from the usual symphonic style. Richard Hale in the role of narrator was thoroughly enjoyable.

The highest point, however, and by far the most impressive offering, Tchaikovsky's 4th Symphony in F Minor was rendered in a manner which can be best described as a truly great musical achievement. The work begins in a sustained style with a hint of brightness in the form of a valse movement. Each succeeding movement increases in intensity until in one great burst of glorious beauty comes the inspiring finale. Conductor and men in perfect accord outdid themselves in this movement. Although the music is subdued, one detects the soft rolling of drums. Slowly the theme builds up to a great, stirring surge of emotion. Each musician is a study in concentration as he strives for that perfect expression, that delicate shading. As the climax approaches, the enraptured audience leans forward, every eye fixed upon the podium where stands this great leader of this great orchestra. As the last resounding chords are struck, the audience rises, the ovation and cries of "Bravo" are heard.

Koussevitsky, revealing how much of himself he has given that we might enjoy the best in music, wearily, yet happily bows to thundering adulation. Recalled again and again he has the entire orchestra stand to receive that part of the applause to which they are so deservingly entitled. The spontaneous outburst rises to greater heights. This truly has been an inspired and inspiring performance and to all music lovers present has brought a new appreciation of beauty, a kener discrimination between the ordinary and the outstanding worthwhile. This is not a fleeting enjoyment. For long years to come, often will these golden rays of sound flood in to brighten the corridors of memory.

BARBARA E. BARRETT.
Pittsfield.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

AUG 8 - 1939

In the Bolton Landing Colony

Special to the Herald Tribune

BOLTON LANDING, N. Y., Aug. 7.—Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Homer (Mme. Louise Homer) motored to Breadloaf, Vt., today to attend a concert by the Boston Symphony Trio, which played Mr. Homer's trio for violin cello and piano. They were accompanied by the Rev. Ernest Van R. Stires and Mrs. Stires and Miss Louise Stires, and the Misses Marion McMann, Mariette Corbo, Sarah Barber and Thorwold Croasdale, who sang a group of Mr. Homer's compositions at the concert.

Mrs. Elmer Coulter, of New York, has arrived at the Sagamore from Stockbridge, Mass., where she attended the Berkshire Music Festival. Mr. Coulter will be here later in the month. Mr. and Mrs. William S. Speed, of Louisville, have arrived for August.

Mrs. Lucy Butler, of St. Louis, is visiting her daughter, Mrs. Ralph Bixby. Mrs. R. Russell Brown, of Staten Island, and daughter, Miss Nancy Brown, are visiting Mrs. Lewis de Jonge at Up Yonda Farm. Mr. and Mrs. Harold J. Brown, of Staten Island, are at the Sagamore.

Visitors at the Sagamore had a speed-boat ride and picnic at Paradise Bay this evening.

Mr. and Mrs. James E. M. McDonald entertained at luncheon today at the Sagamore Golf Club for Mrs. W. L. Horn and Mr. John W. Smith, of London, Ont. Mr. McDonald arrived Saturday by plane from Nassau, B. W. I., to pass two weeks at his home here.

Mr. T. Guilford Smith, of Larchmont, has arrived to participate in the Sagamore amateur tennis tournament, beginning tomorrow. Miss Carol Lewis, of Fayetteville, N. Y., will defend her title in the women's singles.

Mrs. Grace Emily Edwards, of New York, has joined her son, Mr. Duke Edwards, at the Sagamore for a week.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HUDSON, N. Y.
REGISTER

AUG 8 - 1939

HUDSONIANS ATTEND SYMPHONY CONCERT; 3 OTHERS SCHEDULED

A number of Hudson people attended the third concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, held Sunday afternoon on the "Tanglewood" estate at Lenox, Mass. The program consisted of Bach's concerts in D Major; Propofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," and Tchkaikovsky's Symphony No. 4 in F. Minor.

The largest crowd on record attended Sunday's concert with all reserved seats sold and general admission tickets being the only ones available.

On Thursday night at 8:30, there will be another concert. Another will be held on Saturday, August 12, at 8:30 p. m. and a third on Sunday afternoon, August 13, at 3:30.

Hudsonians who enjoyed the concert were the Rev. and Mrs. Charles B. Thompson, Mrs. Charles P. Hermance and daughter, Annah, Mrs. Otis H. Bradley, Mrs. Charles B. Benson, Mrs. Wendover Neefus, Clayton L. Carhart, Gerald S. Bliss and Theodore H. Kline.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 9 - 1939

The Voice of Symphonic Festival Audience Is the Product of Ten Thousand Remarks

As much a part of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival as the music is the subdued roar which vibrates through the shed at Tanglewood when the orchestra is not playing. It is the accumulation of thousands of little conversations, the aggregate of small talk.

Every greeting of friends; every inquiry for location of seats; every comment on the Festival, the orchestra and the weather, adds its minicule of sound to the whole. It starts perhaps half an hour before the concert and gains steadily in volume until Dr. Koussevitzky comes on the stage, when it drops to silence like a dying phonograph record. It comes again between numbers and rises to other peaks at intermission and at the end of the concert.

Before the Concert

It is the quiet voice of the crowd, an elusive tone, steady in its volume and varying only subtly in its pitch. It is a monotone, and yet its component sounds change with the time. Half an hour before the concert, the remarks and conversations that make it up have no haste in them. Then there is time to talk of the last concert, of the Tanglewood gardens, of the impressiveness of the shed, of how beautifully Mrs. Phelps-Phelps dresses, of how badly Mrs. Phelps-Phelps dresses.

"Have you ever gone from English garden to English garden?"

"Wasn't that Brahms a wonderful reading?"

"Do you ever get a vacation on that job?"

"Good Lord, I haven't seen him for 15 years!"

"If I had the right screen, I could put on a real show in here."

"Do you suppose the chauffeurs really listen to the music!"

"For Heaven's sake, where did she get that hat?"

Five minutes before the concert, the talk is hurried, its topics confined to the immediate and the practical—with, of course, some exceptions.

"We'd better decide on a place to meet. How about the refreshment tent?"

"Have you got a ride home?"

"Where the hell is Section 16?"

"Yes, I have a program. Somebody said they were going to give out single sheets today."

"Don't worry, you can hear everything out on the lawn."

"I'd like to get some place where I can see the orchestra. You might as well be listening to the radio out here."

"For heaven's sake, where did she get that hat?"

Intermission

Intermission brings a return to casual matters, with searching-party remarks and comments on the first-half program predominating.

"But nobody lives at Newport any more!"

"No thanks. I haven't had a cigarette in three weeks."

"Do you mean he's got to live on that strained spinach and stuff they give to kids?"

"I heard somebody say Dorothy Lamour is here. Sounds silly. What would she be doing at a symphony concert?"

"They're supposed to be in the blue section, but I can't see them."

"Don't tell me that Piston thing is music."

"For heaven's sake, where did she get that hat?"

At the end of the concert there is more seaching, more comment on the last half of the concert, on the whole concert, and on the concert as it compared with the previous night or with the same night last year or with last winter in Symphony Hall.

"Two and a half hours in one of those seats and I'm crippled."

"I wonder how many handkerchiefs Dr. Koussevitzky uses up in a concert."

"They said they'd meet us here. We'll give 'em five minutes more."

"They take the glasses off the tables at midnight."

"For heaven's sake, where did she get that hat?"

THIS CLIPPING FROM
DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES

AUG 8 - 1939

Many at Music Festival

Stockbridge, Mass.—The second half of the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood, near here, will open Thursday night with Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony in a Beethove, Strauss and Moussorgsky program in the huge music shed on the 210-acre estate bordering the "Stockbridge bowl." Sunday set the all-time record with 6,500 persons in attendance. So far about 18,000 music lovers have heard the music of the first three concerts, according to George Edman, one of the festival officials.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
STAR - ENTERPRISE

AUG 9 - 1939

Berkshire Festival Enters Second Half

The second half of the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will open tomorrow, at 8:30 o'clock when Serge Koussevitsky leads the Boston Symphony orchestra in a program including Beethoven's Symphony No. 2, in D. Major, Strauss, also "Sprach Zarathustra," and Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition," pianoforte pieces arranged for orchestra by Maurice Ravel.

The first half of the festival closed Sunday night with all time record attendance for one performance estimated at 6,500. The total attendance to date is estimated at 18.500.

The fifth program Saturday night at 8:30 will include Haydn's Symphony in B Flat, Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," and several compositions by Wagner. The festival will close with Sunday afternoon's concert at 3:30 o'clock. The final program will include Schumann's Symphony No. 4 in D. Minor; Debussy's "Prelude a l'Apres-midi d'un Faune; Ravel's "La Valse," and the Second Symphony by Sibelius.

118

THIS CLIPPING FROM
DAYTON, O.
NEWS WEEK

AUG 7 - 1939

Richard Tucker

Serge Koussevitzky's deft baton again guides the Boston Symphony at the Berkshire Festival

---

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 8 - 1939

The People's Forum

Festival Impression

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival Concert of August 6, 1939 was a varied one.

Bach's Concerto in D Major is conservative, technical, symphonic—a fine medium for displaying the skill and artistic attainments of the musicians.

In a lighter vein, Prokofieff's fairy tale "Peter and the Wolf" is an interesting and highly entertaining variation from the usual symphonic style. Richard Hale in the role of narrator was thoroughly enjoyable.

The highest point, however, and by far the most impressive offering, Tchaikovsky's 4th Symphony in F Minor was rendered in a manner which can be best described as a truly great musical achievement. The work begins in a sustained style with a hint of brightness in the form of a valse movement. Each succeeding movement increases in intensity until in one great burst of glorious beauty comes the inspiring finale. Conductor and men in perfect accord outdid themselves in this movement. Although the music is subdued, one detects the soft rolling of drums. Slowly the theme builds up to a great, stirring surge of emotion. Each musician is a study in concentration as he strives for that perfect expression, that delicate shading. As the climax approaches, the enraptured audience leans forward, every eye fixed upon the podium where stands this great leader of this great orchestra. As the last resounding chords are struck, the audience rises, the ovation and cries of "Bravo" are heard.

Koussevitsky, revealing how much of himself he has given that we might enjoy the best in music, wearily, yet happily bows to thundering adulation. Recalled again and again he has the entire orchestra stand to receive that part of the applause to which they are so deservingly entitled. The spontaneous outburst rises to greater heights. This truly has been an inspired and inspiring performance and to all music lovers present has brought a new appreciation of beauty, a kener discrimination between the ordinary and the outstanding worthwhile. This is not a fleeting enjoyment. For long years to come, often will these golden rays of sound flood in to brighten the corridors of memory.

BARBARA E. BARRETT.
Pittsfield.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

AUG 8 - 1939

In the Bolton Landing Colony

Special to the Herald Tribune

BOLTON LANDING, N. Y., Aug. 7.—Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Homer (Mme. Louise Homer) motored to Breadloaf, Vt., today to attend a concert by the Boston Symphony Trio, which played Mr. Homer's trio for violin cello and piano. They were accompanied by the Rev. Ernest Van R. Stires and Mrs. Stires and Miss Louise Stires, and the Misses Marion McMann, Mariette Corbo, Sarah Barber and Thorwold Croasdale, who sang a group of Mr. Homer's compositions at the concert.

Mrs. Elmer Coulter, of New York, has arrived at the Sagamore from Stockbridge, Mass., where she attended the Berkshire Music Festival. Mr. Coulter will be here later in the month. Mr. and Mrs. William S. Speed, of Louisville, have arrived for August.

Mrs. Lucy Butler, of St. Louis, is visiting her daughter, Mrs. Ralph Bixby. Mrs. R. Russell Brown, of Staten Island, and daughter, Miss Nancy Brown, are visiting Mrs. Lewis de Jonge at Up Yonda Farm. Mr. and Mrs. Harold J. Brown, of Staten Island, are at the Sagamore.

Visitors at the Sagamore had a speed-boat ride and picnic at Paradise Bay this evening.

Mr. and Mrs. James E. M. McDonald entertained at luncheon today at the Sagamore Golf Club for Mrs. W. L. Horn and Mr. John W. Smith, of London, Ont. Mr. McDonald arrived Saturday by plane from Nassau, B. W. I., to pass two weeks at his home here.

Mr. T. Guilford Smith, of Larchmont, has arrived to participate in the Sagamore amateur tennis tournament, beginning tomorrow. Miss Carol Lewis, of Fayetteville, N. Y., will defend her title in the women's singles.

Mrs. Grace Emily Edwards, of New York, has joined her son, Mr. Duke Edwards, at the Sagamore for a week.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 9 - 1939

The Voice of Symphonic Festival Audience Is the Product of Ten Thousand Remarks

As much a part of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival as the music is the subdued roar which vibrates through the shed at Tanglewood when the orchestra is not playing. It is the accumulation of thousands of little conversations, the aggregate of small talk.

Every greeting of friends; every inquiry for location of seats; every comment on the Festival, the orchestra and the weather, adds its minicule of sound to the whole. It starts perhaps half an hour before the concert and gains steadily in volume until Dr. Koussevitzky comes on the stage, when it drops to silence like a dying phonograph record. It comes again between numbers and rises to other peaks at intermission and at the end of the concert.

Before the Concert

It is the quiet voice of the crowd, an elusive tone, steady in its volume and varying only subtly in its pitch. It is a monotone, and yet its component sounds change with the time. Half an hour before the concert, the remarks and conversations that make it up have no haste in them. Then there is time to talk of the last concert, of the Tanglewood gardens, of the impressiveness of the shed, of how beautifully Mrs. Phelps-Phelps dresses, of how badly Mrs. Phelps-Phelps dresses.

"Have you ever gone from English garden to English garden?"

"Wasn't that Brahms a wonderful reading?"

"Do you ever get a vacation on that job?"

"Good Lord, I haven't seen him for 15 years!"

"If I had the right screen, I could put on a real show in here."

"Do you suppose the chauffeurs really listen to the music!"

"For Heaven's sake, where did she get that hat?"

Five minutes before the concert, the talk is hurried, its topics confined to the immediate and the practical—with, of course, some exceptions.

"We'd better decide on a place to meet. How about the refreshment tent?"

"Have you got a ride home?"

"Where the hell is Section 16?"

"Yes, I have a program. Somebody said they were going to give out single sheets today."

"Don't worry, you can hear everything out on the lawn."

"I'd like to get some place where I can see the orchestra. You might as well be listening to the radio out here."

"For heaven's sake, where did she get that hat?"

Intermission

Intermission brings a return to casual matters, with searching-party remarks and comments on the first-half program predominating.

"But nobody lives at Newport any more!"

"No thanks, I haven't had a cigarette in three weeks."

"Do you mean he's got to live on that strained spinach and stuff they give to kids?"

"I heard somebody say Dorothy Lamour is here. Sounds silly. What would she be doing at a symphony concert?"

"They're supposed to be in the blue section, but I can't see them."

"Don't tell me that Piston thing is music."

"For heaven's sake, where did she get that hat?"

At the end of the concert there is more seaching, more comment on the last half of the concert, on the whole concert, and on the concert as it compared with the previous night or with the same night last year or with last winter in Symphony Hall.

"Two and a half hours in one of those seats and I'm crippled."

"I wonder how many handkerchiefs Dr. Koussevitzky uses up in a concert."

"They said they'd meet us here. We'll give 'em five minutes more."

"They take the glasses off the tables at midnight."

"For heaven's sake, where did she get that hat?"

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HUDSON, N. Y.
REGISTER

AUG 8 - 1939

HUDSONIANS ATTEND SYMPHONY CONCERT; 3 OTHERS SCHEDULED

A number of Hudson people attended the third concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, held Sunday afternoon on the "Tanglewood" estate at Lenox, Mass. The program consisted of Bach's concerts in D Major; Propofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," and Tchkaikovsky's Symphony No. 4 in F. Minor.

The largest crowd on record attended Sunday's concert with all reserved seats sold and general admission tickets being the only ones available.

On Thursday night at 8:30, there will be another concert. Another will be held on Saturday, August 12, at 8:30 p. m. and a third on Sunday afternoon, August 13, at 3:30.

Hudsonians who enjoyed the concert were the Rev. and Mrs. Charles B. Thompson, Mrs. Charles P. Hermance and daughter, Annah, Mrs. Otis H. Bradley, Mrs. Charles B. Benson, Mrs. Wendover Neefus, Clayton L. Carhart, Gerald S. Bliss and Theodore H. Kline.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DANBURY, CONN.
NEWS-TIMES

AUG 8 - 1939

Many at Music Festival

Stockbridge, Mass.—The second half of the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood, near here, will open Thursday night with Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony in a Beethove, Strauss and Moussorgsky program in the huge music shed on the 210-acre estate bordering the "Stockbridge bowl." Sunday set the all-time record with 6,500 persons in attendance. So far about 18,000 music lovers have heard the music of the first three concerts, according to George Edman, one of the festival officials.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
STAR - ENTERPRISE

AUG 9 - 1939

Berkshire Festival Enters Second Half

The second half of the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will open tomorrow, at 8:30 o'clock when Serge Koussevitsky leads the Boston Symphony orchestra in a program including Beethoven's Symphony No. 2, in D. Major, Strauss' also "Sprach Zarathustra," and Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition," pianoforte pieces arranged for orchestra by Maurice Ravel.

The first half of the festival closed Sunday night with all time record attendance for one performance estimated at 6,500. The total attendance to date is estimated at 18,500.

The fifth program Saturday night at 8:30 will include Haydn's Symphony in B Flat, Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," and several compositions by Wagner. The festival will close with Sunday afternoon's concert at 3:30 o'clock. The final program will include Schumann's Symphony No. 4 in D Minor; Debussy's "Prelude a l'Apres-midi d'un Faune; Ravel's "La Valse," and the Second Symphony by Sibelius.

119

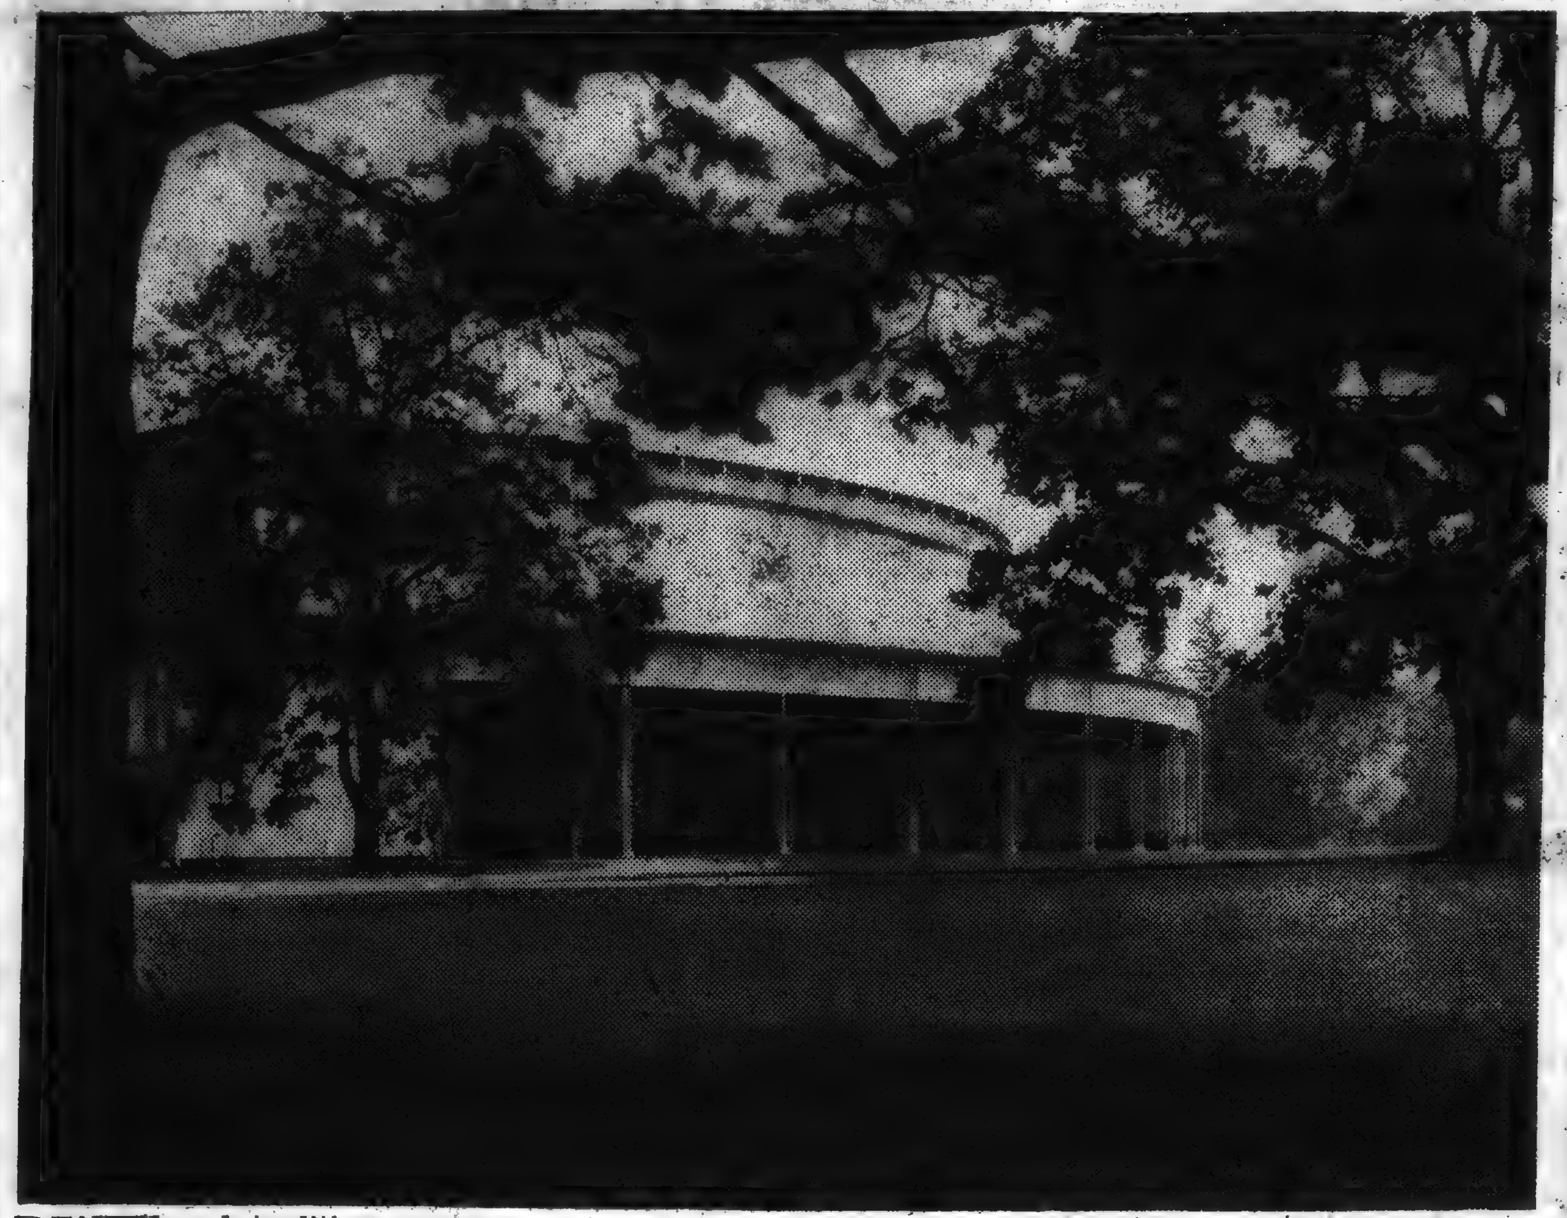
THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News

AUG 8 - 1939

MEN, STEEL AND PINE PLANKS MAKE TANGLEWOOD GREAT . . .

By ROBERT C. McCAIN

WHEN you run across the member of a symphony orchestra wearing a checked shirt at rehearsal, you ought to know you have found something. And you have as it concerns the Boston Symphony at summer quarters in Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass. One of the great symphony orchestras of the world, the Boston's string section is acknowledged by many critics as without equal—yet here is Celloist Alfred Zighera, in a checked shirt, wiping the strings of his instrument in the tuning room back of the Music Shed stage. About such an orchestra there is nothing fusty. It is alive!

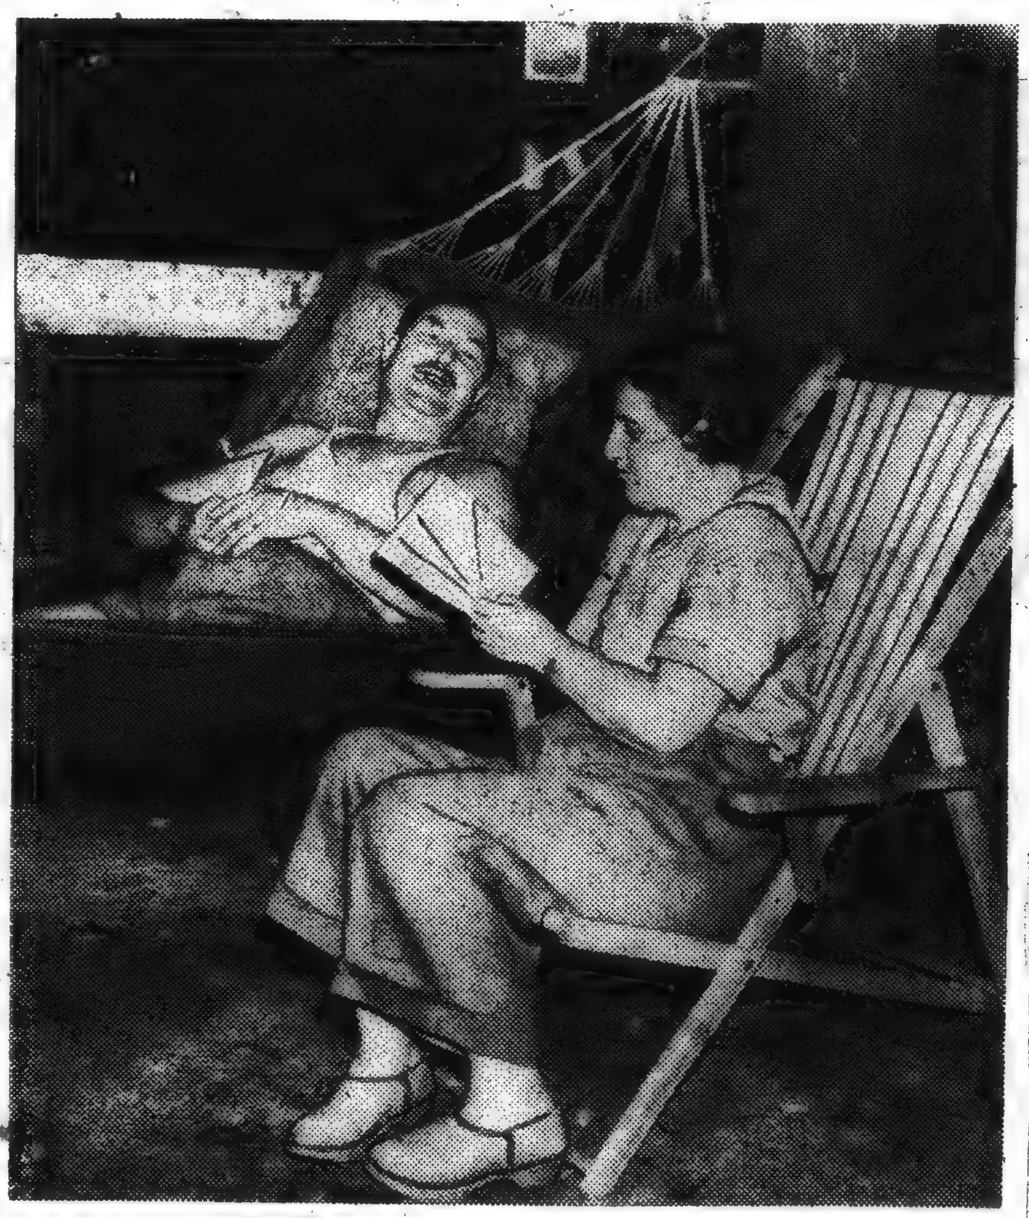


BEAUTY and tradition are as much a part of Tanglewood as its remarkable, $100,000 music shed. Sweeping down in this picture are branches of the Hawthorne pines, a row of stately trees which recall the author's life at Tanglewood in 1850-51. (In the summer he loved it, but he couldn't stand the Berkshire winters.) The Music Shed resembles an enormous piece of pie in which there is no filling—a piece of pie whose round edge is 404 feet long. Due largely to a one and one-half acre ceiling of North Carolina fir—each plank 8 inches wide and 2 inches thick—the shed has an amazing ability to accurately convey sound. From the full-sized stage, in a sound box, to the outer edge of the arcade, the shed is 203 feet long yet the most pianissimo passages are heard perfectly at the rear. Under certain conditions, a pin dropped on the stage can be heard 200 feet away. Shed statistics: 300 tons of steel, including a 16-ton main girder which is 96½ feet long; height of more than 40 feet; 78 columns over 20 feet high, each set in a 14-ton chunk of concrete; 66,000 square feet of roof, covered by three layers of felt and asphalt; built with gifts of from $1 to $10,000. (There was only one of the latter.)

Knickerbocker News Photos-Wilson

PROF. RICHARD FAY, Massachusetts Institute of Technology acoustics expert, worked with delicate sound detectors to measure shed acoustics. He found a slight loss of sound in the rear quarter which he remedied by erection of this plasterboard reflector. The open sides of the shed give you the impression of sitting outdoors to hear the orchestra.

THE people of the Pittsfield-Lenox-Lee area—even the "summer people"—go out of their way to be nice to members of the orchestra and that is more a mark of appreciation than of formal politeness. At any other lake you would expect to find such a pretty girl in tow of some husky thick-head who was a fast swimmer but a slow thinker. At Stockbridge Bowl, though, the talented musicians "rate." Proof is the prize Jean M. Cauhape, second viola player, has. Her name is Jean Gundacker.



SEVERAL members of the orchestra are living at the lake on the 200-acre Tanglewood estate in tents. This is Mr. and Mrs. Rene Voisin. He is a trumpet player in the orchestra and his idea of relaxation after a stiff rehearsal is to have Mrs. Voisin read to him while he lolls in a hammock in shorts.

120

...AN ARTISTIC AND SCIENTIFIC TRIUMPH

DIRECTOR SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY turns and listens intently to a soloist at rehearsal but does not seem to be a too-temperamental conductor—not the kind who tears his hair and storms. The music shed is his pride both because it is a perfect place in which to give a concert and because his close friend, Eliel Saarinen, a famous Finnish architect, brought to the U. S. in 1923 by Marshall Field, designed it. To Joseph Franz, Stockbridge engineer and Festival director, however, goes most credit for the building because he adapted Saarinen's designs, saving thousands of dollars, and supervised construction. (He was shown in the first picture of yesterday's strip.) The Festival is a non-profit making organization which will be limited to 3,000 members. Single membership costs $5, full membership $10 a patronship (you'll see them sitting in the boxes) from $75 to $150. For the most part, concert audiences are composed of upper-middle class folks who love good music. There also is a liberal sprinkling of rather stuffy aristocrats who speak Bostonese.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 9 - 1939

Symphonic Festival Second Half Will Start Tomorrow

Special to The Hartford Times

Stockbridge, Mass.—The second half of the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will open Thursday at 8:30 when Serge Koussevitzky leads the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This program will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 in D Major, Strauss "Also Sprach Zarathustra," and Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition," pianoforte pieces arranged for orchestra by Maurice Ravel.

The first half of the Festival closed Sunday night with an all-time record attendance for one performance estimated at 6,500. The total attendance to date is estimated at 18,500. Every indication points to equally as great an attendance at the second series of three concerts.

Saturday, Sunday Programs

The fifth program Saturday night at 8:30 will include Haydn's Symphony in B-flat, Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," and several compositions by Wagner. The Festival will close with Sunday afternoon's concert at 3:30. The final program will include Schumann's Symphony No. 4 in D Minor, Debussy's "Prelude a l'Apres-midi d'un Faune," Ravel's "La Valse," and the second symphony by Sibelius.

All reserved seats in the rear section of the music shed at Tanglewood have been sold, but there are good seats left in the front section and, as during the first series, admission tickets will be sold admitting holders to the concert grounds. Reservations may be made by writing or telephoning to the Festival office at Stockbridge.

The Berkshire Innkeepers' Association reports practically every available room in Stockbridge and Lenox taken but rooms are available in neighboring towns. Room reservations may be made through the Festival office, the Berkshire Hills Conference at Pittsfield or through hotels in the county.

Many Other Events

Tickets for the chamber music concert at South Mountain in Pittsfield may be obtained by writing to William Willeke, director.

There will be performances at Ted Shawn's summer studio in West Becket, Friday and Saturday afternoons, at the Berkshire Playhouse in Stockbridge daily. The Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield, the Berkshire Garden Center in Stockbridge, the Pleasant Valley Bird and Wild Flower Sanctuary in Lenox, Alexander Bloch's (chamber music) at Hillsdale, N. Y., Music Mountain at Falls Village, Conn., and the Playhouse-in-the-Hills at Cummington, invite Festival visitors to partake of their hospitality.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

AUG 10 1939

Tanglewood Final Series Opens Tonight

Another Concert on Saturday and Last One Sunday

The second half of the sixth annual Berkshire Symphony Festival at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, will open tonight at 8:30 when Serge Koussevitzky leads the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program including Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 in D Major, Strauss's "Also Sprach Zarathustra," and Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition," pianoforte pieces arranged for orchestra by Maurice Ravel.

The fifth program Saturday night at 8:30 will include Haydn's Symphony in B-flat, Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps" and several compositions by Wagner. The Festival will close with Sunday afternoon's concert at 3:30. The final program will include Schumann's Symphony No. 4 in D Minor, Debussy's "Prelude a l'Apres-midi d'un Faune," Ravel's "La Valse," and the second symphony by Sibelius.

All reserved seats in the rear section of the music shed at Tanglewood have been sold, but there are good seats left in the front section. In anticipation of an overflow crowd the Festival management is prepared to take care of all who come. It may not be possible to seat everyone within the spacious music shed but admission tickets will be available for emergency use. They will entitle holder to sit on the grass or stand near the edges of the shed.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 10 1939

Students To Attend Rehearsal At Tanglewood

LEE, Aug. 10.—All local school students interested in attending the Saturday morning rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood are requested to contact Principal Walter A. Potter or Superintendent of Schools Charles A. Miller.

The group will meet at the high school Saturday morning at 9.30 when cars will be provided for transportation. Attendance at the rehearsal is made possible, free, to the students through the courtesy of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

AUG 10 1939

Resume Berkshire Festival Tonight

George Koussevitzky will lead the Boston Symphony orchestra for the second half of the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival, which opens tonight at Stockbridge, Mass. The first half of the festival closed Sunday, with an all-time record attendance, estimated at 18,500.

Tonight's program, starting at 8:30 o'clock, will include Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 in D. Major, Strauss, "Also Sprach Zarathustra," and Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition." The pianoforte pieces are arranged for the orchestra by Maurice Ravel.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN

AUG 10 1939

Boston Symphony At Music Shed

The second series of concerts in the Berkshire symphonic festival by the Boston Symphony orchestra under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, will open this evening at 8:30 o'clock at the music shed in Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass.

The program tonight will consist of Beethoven's Second symphony, Strauss's tone poem, "Also Sprach Zarathustra," and Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition," arranged for orchestra by Maurice Ravel.

The Saturday evening concert will include works of Haydn, Stravinsky and Wagner. Sunday afternoon the audience will hear Schumann's Fourth symphony, the Second symphony of Sibelius and works by Debussy and Ravel. When the festival comes to a close on Sunday afternoon it will have been heard by the largest number of music lovers yet to attend these annual concerts here. Close to 19,000 persons heard the first series of three concerts and there is every indication that an even greater number will try to gain admission to the grounds for the second series.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
AUG 10 1939

12

World of Lively Arts

By T. H. PARKER

The Brothers Serge.

The programing of "Peter And The Wolf" at the Berkshire Festival is another example of the brotherly love shared by the two Serges, Koussevitzky and Prokofieff. In the last few years, the Doctor and Boston orchestra have played nearly 20 different works by the Soviet composer, while he in turn composed a special symphony upon the occasion of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the orchestra.

The basis for this pronounced musical alliance is not entirely clear to me at the moment. Obviously it is founded upon an admiration on the part of Dr. Koussevitzky for the kind of writing Prokofieff does but the particular nature of the attraction is harder to put a finger upon. I am inclined to believe, perhaps a little too offhand and a little too prone to ride my pet theory about Dr. Koussevitzky, that it is because Prokofieff's music primarily "sounds" well upon an orchestra, and has distinct touches of showmanship, rather than "thinking" and "feeling" well.

But in any event, you might like to know something about this Soviet Serge, and I here deliver up Calvocaressi's little essay "Serge Prokofieff Today," as it appeared last year in a BBC program note and subsequently in the Boston Symphony program:

"As early as 1922, Boris de Schloezer, a Russian critic settled in Paris, remarked: 'Russian music, be it that of the romantic composers or that of the nationalists who came after Glinka, is never devoid of certain non-purely musical elements, psychological, social or simply picturesque and descriptive. This tendency sinks to zero with Prokofieff, who is a musician and nothnig else, finding his inspiration exclusively in the materials of music.'

"And later, another Russian critic (but one writing in Russia for the Russians), while enthusiastically praising the merits of Prokofieff's music, concluding by pointing out that there are 'no traces in it of the "significant idea-content" which we regard as a necessary condition of the greatest art of our time."

"This, it is true, was at a moment when the Russian musical world was greatly concerned with the moral and social aspects of music and its immediate practical value from the point of view of Soviet aspirations. Since then Prokofieff has returned to Russia and found unqualified appreciation there. He became a Soviet citizen in 1935, and settled in Moscow, when the second violin concerto and the ballet 'Romeo and Juliet' were composed.

"The Russian critics were unanimous in extolling the fundamental simplicity and buoyancy of both new works. But, even at the period when Prokofieff had been experimenting, rather ruthlessly at times, in the noval and bizarre, which led certain critics to denounce him as an enfant terrible and musical cubist, these very qualities had been apparent enough. His art was spontaneous and carefree from the first. It was exuberance, not calculation, that prompted him to revel in the most daring, and also most carefully calculated, experiments. All his interest went not to the objective abstractions of form, volumes and systematizations, but to the plain, tangible realities of tone, color and design.

"It is not superfluous to emphasize this last point, for he has been described, too, as one of the champions of objectivity at all cost of those who believe that music should express neither feelings nor emotions. Stravinsky, in his Memoirs, protested against being blamed for avoiding expressiveness. Shortly after having completed 'Romeo and Juliet,' Prokofieff, who hardly even comes forth with declarations about his music or replies to his critics, protested in emphatic terms against being accused of doing the same.

"'I steadfastly believe,' he wrote, 'in aiming at beauty and expression in music, and I devote my utmost and most especial care to melody. It is true that in my youth, 20 or 25 years ago, I aimed first and foremost at being original and novel. But long since, in fact immediately after composing my first and second symphonies, I renounced complexity, the first signs of my new orientation being my first three piano sonatinas. Ever since, I have aimed at being utterly simple. Every now and then, somebody or other starts urging me to put more feeling, more emotion, more melody into my music. My own conviction is that there is plenty of all that in it. I have never shunned the expression of feelings, and always been intent on creating melody.

"'But what I have sought was new melody, which maybe certain listeners do not recognize as such simply because it does not resemble closely enough the kind of melody to which they are accustomed. In "Romeo and Juliet" I have taken special pains to achieve a simplicity which will, I hope, reach the heart of all listeners. If people find no melody and no emotion in this work of mine, I shall be very sorry; but I feel sure that sooner or later they will.'

"He might have added that in his 'Symphonie Classique,' composed during the war, when circumstances did not favor carefree music, and when the return to classicism was not yet in fashion, he had given ample proof of simplicity and straightforwardness. Many other works of his, earlier or later, testified too to his rare sense of melody."

Abe Lincoln In Hartford.

Two road companies will tour Robert Sherwood's play "Abe Lincoln In Illinois" this fall, so now is the time to write the Bushnell, pals, and ask them to put it on their list.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 10 1939

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO STAY 3 WEEKS

Possibility of Nine Concerts Next Year

AT TANGLEWOOD

First Concert of Second Series Will be Presented Tonight With Electric Organ Added.

Disclosure yesterday that the full Boston Symphony orchestra of 104 men has arranged to spend three weeks next summer at Tanglewood and that 32 members will be there for six weeks gives credence to reports that the Berkshire festival may last for three weeks and that nine concerts may be given next summer. The fact that the new musical academy proposed by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will be inaugurated by the orchestra next year as a part of the plan to increase the scope to the Festival also indicates that the festival will be extended next season.

The first concert in the second series of the current program will be given this evening and for the first time in the history of the festival an electronic organ will be used in part of the evening's program. E. Power Biggs of Cambridge will be at the organ in the Strauss number. He rehearsed with the orchestra yesterday morning in the shed at Tanglewood and the volume and tone of the instrument met with the approval of Dr. Koussevitzky. Tonight's program will consist of Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 in D Major, Strauss's "Also Sprach Zarathustra," and Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition," pianoforte pieces arranged for orchestra by Maurice Ravel.

A number of Drury high schoo students will be among the high school students of the country who will attend the orchestra's rehearsa at 10 o'clock Saturday morning Holders of season tickets for the festival are also entitled to attend the rehearsals.

The total attendance at the firs half of the festival is estimated a 18,500 and every indication points to equally as great an attendance a the second series of three concerts.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
AUG 10 1939

Berkshire Hills Plans For Festival Renewal

Mrs. C. R. Smith, Miss Gertrude Smith to Have Guests

Special to the Herald Tribune

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Mass., Aug. 9.—Mrs. Charles Robinson Smith and Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival Corporation, are having a week-end house party at the Dugway, Stockbridge, for the second series of concerts starting tomorrow. Their guests will be Count Charles Fontnouvelle, Consul General of France in New York; Col. Peter Malvesky-Malevitch and Mrs. Malvesky-Malevitch, Madam Eugenie Leontovitch, Miss Helen Knox, Miss Miriam K. Oliver, and Messrs. Malcolm Vaughn, Stewart Montgomery and King Wu.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky was a picnic ho[redacted]estra and their wives this afternoon at Tanglewood. "Unrecorded Music of the World" was the subject of a lecture by Mr. Carleton Sprague Smith.

Curtis Hotel arrivals include Mr. Henry Edward Voegeli, manager of Chicago Symphony Orchestra, and Mrs. Voegeli, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest G. Vietor, Mr. and Mrs. Southwick Vietor, the Rev. Langtry Williams, Mr. and Mrs. Melville E. Regensbury, New York; Mr. and Mrs. Ira Jewell Williams, Philadelphia.

At Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, are Associate Justice James Clark McReynolds, of the United States Supreme Court, who called today on Associate Justice George Sutherland and Mrs. Sutherland at the Millett Cottage; Mrs. A. G. Stoddard and Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Weil, of New York.

Mr. John Shepard jr., president of the Stockbridge Golf and Tennis Club, and Mrs. Shepard had a buffet supper party for fifty tonight at Belvoir Terrace, Lenox, comprising entrants in the women's golf tournament at Stockbridge. Registered at the clubhouse were Mr. and Mrs. Sydney L. W. Mellen, New York; Miss Julia Townsend, St. James, L. I., who is with Mrs. Arthur Murray Sherwood, and Mrs. J. Sellers Bancroft, of Wilmington, Del.

Mr. and Mrs. William Arthur Berridge have as guests at Fenmoor, South Egremont, Mr. and Mrs. John L. Angel, New York, and Dr. Theodore Sohler, Boston. At Berkshire Inn, Great Barrington, for August are Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Hassler, New York.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 10 1939

Festival Resumes Tonight, Crowd of 6000 Anticipated

H. E. Vogeli, Manager of Chicago Symphony, Attends Morning Rehearsal

The opening of the second half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival tonight at 8.30 at Tanglewood is expected to attract a crowd of nearly 6000 persons with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conducting, playing the works of Beethoven, Strauss and Moussorgsky.

The orchestra rehearsed in the shed at Tanglewood this morning when Dr. Koussevitzky led the band of musicians in numbers that will be heard tonight, Saturday and Sunday. Present at the rehearsal this morning was H. E. Vogeli, manager of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, who is attending the Festival here for the first time.

Praises Setting

Mr. Vogelai arrived at the Curtis Hotel this morning for the weekend concerts. Following his arrival at Tanglewood he said "my first sight of the beautiful location took my breath away for a second or two. An artistic endeavor should have an artistic setting and the Berkshire Symphonic Festival has it here."

He said "the auditorium," and then pardoned himself and continued "the shed is a marvelous piece of construction and the accoustics gave me a delightful surprise. The people who have made this possible for the Boston Symphony Orchestra have done a great thing for music and a great thing for New England."

Sir Ernest and Lady MacMillan of Toronto, Canada, will be in attendance at the weekend concerts, starting tonight. Sir Ernest MacMillan is conductor of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra and has frequently appeared as guest conductor of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra on the Ford Motor Company program.

John Garrett, former U. S. Ambassador to Italy, who is the house guest of Mrs. Margaret (French) Cresson of Stockbridge, will also be in attendance tonight as well as other notable men and women from all parts of the country.

Gives Lecture

Last night Dr. Hugo Leichtentritt of Harvard University's music department lectured before an audience of 50 in the Curtis Hotel in Lenox on the subject "The Art of Instrumentation." He spoke of the importance and different ways of listening to music and pointed out that unless a person knew the work of art he couldn't fully appreciate music because, he said, it requires an intimate knowledge of the score and art that comes from studying the work. He illustrated his lecture using the different pages from Beethoven's "Symphony No. 2 in D Major," and concluded his lecture by playing records of the entire symphony.

Mrs. Gorham Brooks, who with her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, of Brookline, gave Tanglewood to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, attended rehearsals this morning.

Chairs and benches under the roof of the shed were cleaned by workmen today and the grounds were picked up in preparation for tonight's opening concert of the second series.

La Guardia Expected

Although no definite word has been received in Lenox as yet, Mayor Fiorello La Guardia of New York is expected to be in attendance over the weekend at one of the concerts as the guest of Newbold Morris, Lenox summer resident, who is president of the Council of the City of New York.

The Thursday Morning Club members are preparing to accommodate many more people at their refreshment tent on the grounds. With the assistance of Justin Aubry of Pittsfield, they have devised a cafeteria system which will speed service and be more convenient for the public.

Scores of persons are taking advantage of the Festival invitation to come early and enjoy picnics at Tanglewood. The evergreen gardens, lighted at night, are proving as popular as ever, attracting hundreds of visitors at intermission as well as before the concerts.

Ruth Posselt of Medford, a child violin prodigy, who has appeared on several occasions with Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is in the Berkshires for the final series of concerts. She was at the picnic given at Tanglewood yesterday by the conductor.

Program for Fourth Festival Concert Tonight

The program for the opening concert of the second half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood tonight with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra follows:

Symphony No. 2 in D Major, Opus 36 Beethoven
Adagio molto: Allegro con brio
Larghetto
Scherzo
Allegro molto
"Also Sprach Zarathustra," Tone Poem, Opus 30 (Freely after Friedrich Neitzsche) .... Strauss
INTERMISSION OF 25 MINUTES
"Pictures at an Exhibition," Pianoforte Pieces arranged for orchestra by Maurice Ravel .... .Moussorgsky
Promenade—Gnomus—Il Vecchio Castello — Tuileries — Bydlo — Ballet of Chicks in Their Shells—Samuel Goldenburg and Schmuyle—Limoges: The Marketplace—Catacombs (Con mortuis in lingua mortua)—The Hut on Fowls' Legs—The Great Gate at Kiev.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
AUG 10 1939

TO ATTEND FOURTH CONCERT BY BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The fourth concert in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, the first concert in the second series, will be held tonight in the Music Shed at Tanglewood, between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., and all indications point to a record crowd. Many of those in the know believe that last Sunday afternoon's record of an attendance of 6,500, the largest in the history of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, will be smashed to bits tonight, Saturday night and Sunday afternoon. The weather will make little or no difference in the attendance, for those who have "taken their music" out on the broad lawns, will, in the event of rain, simply crowd in at the back under the shelter of the huge Shed.

More than ever this year have Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra taken their audiences by storm, and the like of the applause which has greeted their efforts has never been equalled in the quiet Berkshires.

The program which will be presented at tonight's concert is as follows: Beethoven, Symphony No. 2 in D-major, Opus No. 36, Richard Strauss, "Also Sprach Zarathustra," Tone Poem, Opus 30, and Moussorgsky, "Pictures at an Exhibition," Pianoforte Pieces, arranged for orchestra by Maurice Ravel.

Among those from this vicinity who will attend this evening's concert are: Mrs. Sherwood V. Whitbeck, Miss Mary G. Whitbeck, Mr and Mrs Ellis White and Gerald S. Bliss of this city, Mrs. Azro Miller of Claverack, Mrs. Lincoln Scott of Bell's Pond, and James Edward Leath of Kinderhook, who will have as guests in his box Mr and Mrs Walter S. Crandell of Chatham and Bronxville, Mr and Mrs Lawrence Howard and Mrs. Henry J. Mills of Kinderhook.

122

THIS CLIPPING FROM CHATHAM, N. Y
COURIER
8/10/39

Huge Festival Gathering Thrills to First Concert

Rain Interrupts Program Thursday But Fails To Dampen Enthusiasm of Music Lovers; Courier Critic Reviews "A" Series

The third annual Boston Symphonic Festival held at "Tanglewood" between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass., opened Thursday evening with a record crowd, a slight deluge and an unforgettable reading of the Brahms Symphony in C Minor, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

The programme opened with the Third Bach Brandenburg Concerto presenting the string section of the Orchestra, which should, by now, be acknowledged the finest in the country. It is interesting to observe that Dr. Koussevitzky chose as opening numbers for Series A of the Festival those which "show off" the strings to their best and most brilliant ability. The familiar "Scheherazade" of "Rimsky-Korsakov followed with its enchanting oriental melodies, only to be interrupted in the beautifully tender third movement by a downpour of rain causing Dr. Koussevitzky to lay down his baton for some ten or fifteen minutes. The rain let up slightly and the fourth movement was completed without an interruption. During the intermission the weather, which threatened to become quite a problem, cleared and the evening closed with the Brahms First Symphony.

Anyone who has had the fortune to hear Dr. Koussevitzky play this work, and he did so the first year at Tanglewood, will understand what an occasion this first night of the Festival became. It seems impossible that this great conductor's interpretation of a work so well-loved and well-known could remain year after year so much finer than any other reading of this C Minor Symphony. One will remember for many a month those beautifully powerful strains in the fourth movement, and the dramatic treatment in the scherzo.

Thus closed the first concert of the first series which we know fulfilled the enthusiastic anticipation on the part of those listeners who make this annual pilgrimage to Tanglewood.

Saturday evening's programme opened with an amusing though relatively unfamiliar concerto for orchestra by Walter Piston, professor of music at Harvard. The work is extremely modern, though mentioned to be written "in the eighteenth century sense" and with the first movement in the old concerto grosso style.

The work is interesting and melodic and one is vaguely reminded of the symphonic treatment of the late George Gershwin in the second movement. An outstanding event that the annual Festival Pilgrim looks forward to are the Sibelius symphonies. It has been said that Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra are the finest interpreters of this great Finnish contemporary composer, and one is becoming more and more convinced that they are just that. If there is any one section of the symphony which is more beautiful and dramatic than another it is that part of the fourth movement where the broad, majestic melody is accompanied by the delicate muted strings. Here is sheer beauty of form and composition.

The Seventh Symphony of Beethoven, sometimes known as the "Dance" symphony completed the evening's programme. This, the lightest and gayest of the Beethoven symphonies was completely satisfying.

Series "A" of the Festival opened Sunday afternoon with a Concerto for strings by Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach which replaced the previously announced Mozart Symphony in E flat. The most outstanding feature of the concert was the thoroughly charming fairy tale for children, "Peter and the Wolf," by the Russian contemporary, Serge Prokofieff. Being slightly apprehensive of such a choice to be played by the orchestra on such an occasion as a Festival afternoon, the number proved a delightful and happy experience. One became increasingly interested in Peter's brave escapade as well as his wise "Grandpapa" and his friend the bird and the tragic experience of the duck so humourously represented by the oboe. Unreserved praise and credit is due Richard Hale, the narrator of the tale, whose flawless inflection and diction were so important to the presentation of this delightful work.

The series closed with the Fourth Symphony of Tchaikovsky which epitomizes the composer's passionate nature. The entire work was masterfully handled and justified the tremendous applause which followed.

Series B of the 1939 Festival opens this evening with the Second Symphony of Beethoven, followed by Richard Strauss' tone poem, "Also Sprach Zarathustra" and Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition."

H. E. A.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 10 1939

Young Negro Soprano Wins High Praise by Koussevitzky

Dorothy Maynor, Hailed as "Native Kirsten Flagstad," Is Presented at Stockbridge

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 9 (AP)—A young Negro soprano, born in Norfolk, Va., was hailed today as a "native Kirsten Flagstad" by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, now playing at the Berkshire music festival.

Koussevitzky presented Miss Dorothy Maynor in a recital at the Festival music shed, where he and Mrs. Koussevitzky entertained members of the orchestra at a picnic.

After the young woman, who has not yet appeared on the concert stage, sang a program which included arias sung by dramatic and mezzo-sopranos and coloraturas, the famous conductor was heard to comment with equally enthusiastic members about Miss Maynor's varied style, clarity of voice and "wonderful musicality."

Koussevitzky said Miss Maynor was brought to his attention by a Festival enthusiast and he heard her in a private recital before presenting her to the orchestra. The young woman obtained her first musical education at Hampton Institute, later studied at the Westminster Choir School at Princeton, N. J., and now is studying in New York.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 10 1939

SECOND SERIES OF CONCERTS TO RESUME TONIGHT

Koussevitzky To Offer Beethoven's Second Symphony

The Berkshire symphonic festival will resume this evening a 8:30 o'clock at the music shed i Tanglewood near Stockbridge Mass., for the second series o three concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra under its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

The program tonight will consis of Beethoven's Second symphony Strauss's tone poem, "Also Sprac Zarathustra," and Moussorgsky' "Pictures at an Exhibition," arranged for orchestra by Mauric Ravel.

The Saturday evening concer will include works of Haydn, Stravinsky and Wagner. Sunday afternoon the audience will hear Schumann's Fourth symphony, the Second symphony of Sibelius an works by Debussy and Ravel When the festival comes to a clos on Sunday afternoon it will hav been heard by the largest numbe of music lovers yet to attend thes annual concerts here. Close t 19,000 persons heard the first series of three concerts and ther is every indication that an eve greater number will try to gai admission to the grounds for th second series.

Last Sunday hundreds wer pleased if they were able to secur standing room tickets and able t sit down on a blanket or pillow spread on the grass at the rear o the shed where they could no see the orchestra or conductor bu could hear the music as well a though they were down front in th music shed.

During the mornings and day when there have been no concert hundreds of persons have been visiting the Pittsfield museum where there is an excellent collection o some 40 oil paintings and wash drawings of the Boston Symphony orchestra by Donald Greason on exhibition. Most of these have been finished during the past year and were exhibited in Boston during the winter. They are receiving a great deal of merited approval. These paintings and drawings show the orchestra in rehearsal in Symphony hall, Boston. They are all distinguished by their softness of tone, their definite suggestion of motion and instruments being played, and by the fact that they are striking in their power of suggestion instead of having details of faces and instruments portrayed.

The second annual Berkshire National Photographic exhibit in the same museum has attracted much attention, also. It will remain until Sunday. In it are many extremely interesting camera shots of unusual subjects which are worthy of careful study.

Other activities in the vicinity have been receiving much attention from the festival visitors. The Berkshre Playhouse this week is presenting Dennis King in Mark Reed's "Petticoat • Fever," Ted Shawn and his men dancers are giving special lecture demonstrations tomorrow and Saturday at Jacob's Pillow, and the South Mountain string quartet on South Mountain, Pittsfield, is giving a free concert tomorrow afternoon. At Falls Village, the Gordon String quartet is presenting a program on Saturday afternoon. For those who are interested there have been and are delightful places for hikes and picnics in the vicinity, swimming in the Stockbridge bowl, and numerous free garden tours to the estates which are everywhere in this section.

S. M.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

AUG 10 1939

Koussevitzky Presents Negro as 'Native Flagstad'

Sponsors Recital by Dorothy Maynor at Berkshire Shed

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9 (AP).—A young Negro soprano, born in Norfolk, Va., was hailed today as a "native Kirsten Flagstad" by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, now playing at the Berkshire Music Festival.

Koussevitzky presented Miss Dorothy Maynor in a recital at the festival music shed, where he and Mrs. Koussevitzky entertained members of the orchestra at a picnic.

Koussevitzky said that Miss Maynor was brought to his attention by a festival enthusiast and that he had heard her in a private recital before presenting her to the orchestra. The young woman obtained her first musical education at Hampton Institute, later studied at the Westminster Choir School at Princeton, N. J., and now is studying in New York.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
MILLERTON, N. Y
NEWS
8/10/39

Koussevitsky Opens Second Festival Week

First Concert In Series B To Begin At 8:30 Tonight

The second Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood opens tonight with the first of the second series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky. This fourth concert of the Festival will begin at 8:30 p. m.

Dr. Koussevitsky's first number on the program will be Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 in D Major, Opus 36. His second number will be "Also Sprach Zarathustra," Tone Poem, Opus 30 (freely after Friedrich Nietzsche).

Following the intermission, the orchestra will play Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition," pianoforte pieces arranged for orchestra by Maurice Ravel.

The second concert of this series will be presented Saturday night at 8:30. The orchestra will open with Haydn's Symphony in B flat, No. 102, followed by Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," Pictures of Pagan Russia. The first part will be The Adoration of the Earth, the second, The Sacrifice.

The final offering of the evening will be four selections from Wagner; Overture to "Der Fliegende Hollander"; Prelude to "Lohengrin"; Bacchanale from "Tannhauser"; and Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg."

The final concert of the series and of the Festival will be presented Sunday afternoon at 3:30. Opening with Symphony No. 4 in D Minor, Opus 120, the orchestra will play Debussy's "Prelude a L'Apres-midi d'un Faune" (Eclogue of Stephane Mallarme); and Ravel's "La Valse," Choreographic Poem.

The entire second half of the program will be devoted to Sibelius' Symphony No. 2 in D Major, Opus

---

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
DAILY NEWS

AUG 10 1939

Colored Soprano Hailed as Genius

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 9 (AP).—A young colored soprano, born in Norfolk, Va., was hailed today as a "native Kirsten Flagstad" by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, now playing at the Berkshire Music Festival.

Koussevitzky presented Miss Dorothy Maynor in a recital at the festival music shed, where he and Mrs. Koussevitzky entertained members of the orchestra at a picnic.

Koussevitzky said Miss Maynor was brought to his attention by a festival enthusiast and he heard her in a private recital before presenting her to the orchestra.

123

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
Evening Public Ledger
AUG 10 1939

MUSIC IN SUMMER

By Samuel L. Laciar

THE development and extension of Summer music, especially in the larger cities of the United States, is one of the most remarkable features of the phenomenal growth of the art in this country. Despite the difficult economic situation which has hampered this growth to a certain extent and for a time even caused it to be abandoned in some communities, in virtually every case as at Ravinia Park in Chicago, for example, it has returned.

The origin of the Summer concerts in this country grew out of the feeling that it was a good deal better for the musicians of the larger orchestras to be kept more or less intact during the "off" season than to allow them to scatter and play wherever they could find engagements for the Summer, usually in hotel orchestras at Summer resorts. Of course, some musicians like to spend their Summers in this way, but the great majority prefer to remain associated with their own Winter group, which fact has rendered the Summer concerts easier to organize. One of the great disadvantages of professional orchestral playing has always been the long layoff during the Summer months, which is disadvantageous both from the financial and the artistic angles, the latter because of the careless habits contracted, perhaps unconsciously, when playing with smaller and often almost extemporaneous groups, frequently with incompetent leadership or none at all.

—o—

Probably the oldest of established Summer concerts in the United States are the "Pops" of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which have been ~~maintained~~ for a good many years. But these are not played out of doors as is the case with those in Philadelphia, New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, Washington, St. Louis and Cincinnati. The Boston plan has its advantages and its disadvantages, the former being the possibility of giving the entire series without postponement because of the weather and the latter the absence of that sylvan character which is the greatest charm of out-of-door music.

St. Louis and Cincinnati Summer music consists of operas, chiefly the lighter ones, Victor Herbert, Friml, et cetera, and both have been very successful, especially in St. Louis, where the venture has made money from its first season. All of the cities in which Summer music is now given have the inestimable advantage of having their own symphonic organizations as the basis of their concerts or operas—and how much that means in the case of opera is readily appreciated after hearing an opera at the Dell with the accompaniments played by Philadelphia Orchestra members and then hearing one of the lesser traveling companies give the same work in the Winter season with an orchestra inadequate in size and none too competent in personnel.

—o—

The seasons at Robin Hood Dell during the last ten Summers has been very successful artistically, although, as in the case of most other cities, outside financial assistance has been necessary to pay the orchestra members a fair salary during the eight weeks of the season and meet the other expenses. And at that, the salary paid is considerably below the Winter "minimum" called for by the Musicians Union. At the time the Dell concerts were inaugurated the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra (then the Philharmonic alone) had been playing in Lewisohn Stadium for a good many years, although substantially assisted financially by a wealthy New York family.

The Hollywood Bowl concerts had also been inaugurated at that time and attracted much attention throughout the country. Incidentally, it was the Hollywood group that coined the phrase, "symphonies under the stars," which was adopted by many other organizations as the Summer concert idea progressed. The natural acoustical properties of Hollywood Bowl were discovered by accident at an Easter sunrise service in 1921 and in the same Summer the first concerts were given there by the Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra. Later the property was purchased by popular subscription and presented to Los Angeles County. A nonprofit organization, the Hollywood Bowl Association, was then formed and has since had charge of operations.

—o—

One effect of these earlier groups has been the influence which they exerted on this type of entertainment in other cities which maintain organizations capable of presenting the best orchestral and operatic works. In 1935, Washington started a unique project which it termed "symphonies on the river" and which are being given also this Summer. The orchestra plays from a large barge anchored in the Potomac, while the audience listens from the expanse of the Lincoln Memorial to the so-called "Sunset Concerts."

Within the last few years other municipalities have taken up the plan of Summer concerts with their own orchestral organizations, and the free concerts of the WPA Music Project have undoubtedly stimulated the idea. Several years ago the Newark Stadium concerts were projected, the musicians being members of the Essex County Symphony, a permanent orchestra playing under guest conductors. At about the same time, Kansas City, then one of the newcomers in the symphony orchestral field, financed a series of Summer concerts given for the first time in Swope Park, the musicians being about forty members of the Kansas City Philharmonic Orchestra and the programs favoring the lighter numbers of the best music, of which there is an immense literature.

—o—

Still further west, Portland, Ore., organized a series of concerts in Multnomah Park with concerts by the Stadium Philharmonic Society, sponsored by the Portland City Council, the Parent-Teachers Association and the Portland Federation of Women's Organizations. It is a remarkable fact that the further west the plan extends the more financial assistance is given by the municipalities, whereas in the East this help seemingly must come from private individuals. City Council here financed a few seasons at Lemon Hill, antedating the Dell, but soon stopped them.

Each succeeding season has witnessed an extension of these Summer activities, and it would appear that, within a few years, especially if there be a reasonable economic recovery, virtually every city in the country which maintains a permanent orchestra of fifty or more members will have its own Summer music.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN
AUG 11 1939

Hails Negro Singer As "U. S. Flagstad"

Koussevitzky Presents Dorothy Maynor In Recital At Stockbridge (Mass.) Festival Shed

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 11 (AP)—A young Negro soprano, born in Norfolk. Va., was hailed as a "native Kirsten Flagstad" by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, now playing at the Berkshire music festival.

Koussevitzky presented Dorothy Maynor in a recital at the festival music shed, where he and Mrs. Koussevitzky entertained members of the orchestra at a picnic.

Koussevitzky said the singer was brought to his attention by a festival enthusiast and he heard her in a private recital before presenting her to the orchestra. The young woman obtained her first musical education at Hampton Institute, later studied at the Westminster Choir School at Princeton, N. J., and now is studying in New York.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
AUG 11 1939

Koussevitzky Presents Negro as 'Native Flagstad'

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 9 (AP).—A young Negro soprano, born in Norfolk, Va., was hailed Wednesday as a "native Kirsten Flagstad" by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, now ~~playing at the~~ Berkshire Music Festival.

Koussevitzky presented Miss Dorothy Maynor in a recital at the festival music shed, where he and Mrs. Koussevitzky entertained members of the orchestra at a picnic.

Koussevitzky said that Miss Maynor was brought to his attention by a festival enthusiast and that he had heard her in a private recital before presenting her to the orchestra. The young woman obtained her first musical education at Hampton Institute, later studied at the Westminster Choir School at Princeton, N. J., and now is studying in New York.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR
AUG 10 1939

Discovery of Negro Soprano Hailed at Symphony Picnic

Dorothy Maynor, Presented Before Musicians At Lenox by Koussevitzky, Wins High Praise

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 10—One of the outstanding voices of the day was brought to light here yesterday when Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano, appeared as soloist at the annual picnic given by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky for the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the music shed at Tanglewood.

Her First Audience

Miss Maynor in a difficult group of songs and arias of highly contrasted types roused an audience of 200 to extreme enthusiasm, not alone by the exceptional vocal powers she disclosed, but by her innate expressiveness and her splendid musicianship.

Except for a tour of Europe in 1929 with the Hampton Quartet of the Hampton Institute of Virginia, Miss Maynor has had no experience as a public artist. She came to the picnic today as the result of an audition accorded her by Dr. Koussevitzky at the request of Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, Mass., donor of the Tanglewood estate to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Koussevitzky was so impressed by Miss Maynor's singing that he asked her to appear as soloist at yesterday's picnic.

Before a highly critical audience composed almost entirely of skilled musicians, Miss Maynor sang with a poise worthy of a veteran of the concert stage—the modest and self-effacing self-confidence that comes of the knowledge that one is sure of one's mastery of the task in hand.

In all numbers, Miss Maynor made known a grasp of style, a control of tone and unusual gifts as interpreter.

Miss Maynor, who is 28 years of age and a native of Norfolk, Va., began her studies at Hampton Institute, making the trip abroad with the Hampton Quartet when 18. After being graduated from the institute she became a pupil of Dr. John Findley Williamson of the Westminster Choir School in Princeton, N. J., and then studied with Wilfred Klanroth in New York before going to her present teacher, Alan Haughton, also of New York.

Miss Maynor, who is here attending the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, expects to make her debut early in November in Town Hall, New York.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 10 1939

DOROTHY MAYNOR BERKSHIRE SOLOIST

Negro Soprano, Discovered by Koussevitzky, Sings at His Picnic at Tanglewood

OFFERS DIFFICULT SONGS

Stirs Audience of Musicians to Enthusiasm Despite Her Lack of Experience

By NOEL STRAUS
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 9.—One of the outstanding voices of the day was brought to light here late this afternoon when Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano, appeared as soloist at the annual picnic given by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky for the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the music shed at Tanglewood.

Miss Maynor in a difficult group of songs and arias of highly contrasted types roused an audience of 200 to extreme enthusiasm, not alone by the exceptional vocal powers she disclosed, but by her innate expressiveness and her splendid musicianship.

Except for a tour of Europe in 1929 with the Hampton Quartet of the Hampton Institute of Virginia, Miss Maynor has had no experience as a public artist. She came to the picnic today as the result of an audition accorded her yesterday by Dr. Koussevitzky at the request of Mrs. Gorham Brooks of Brookline, Mass., donor of the Tanglewood estate to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Koussevitzky was so exceedingly impressed by Miss Maynor's singing that he asked her to appear as soloist at today's picnic.

Before a highly critical audience composed almost entirely of skilled musicians, Miss Maynor sang with a poise worthy of a veteran of the concert stage—the modest and self-effacing self-confidence that comes of the knowledge that one is sure of one's mastery of the task in hand.

She had but to sing the opening cadenza of her first offering, the aria, "O, Sleep, Why Dost Thou Leave Me," from Handel's "Semele," to assure all those conversant with the vocal art that a new songstress of startling powers had been discovered. In the Handel number the voice had the true lyric quality, the sweetness of timbre and purity of tone required for this particular type of aria. The feeling for phrase, for melodic outline, for a just interpretation of text and music, was that of the mature and fully equipped artist of prime rank.

Then came Pamina's aria, "Ach, Ich Fuehl's" from Mozart's "The Magic Flute," sung with equal understanding and with vocal resources in every way capable of conquering the exacting coloratura passages of the selection. At the same time Miss Maynor proved herself able to invest this exacting number with the full depth of pathos demanded.

Turning again to Mozart, Miss Maynor gave as her third offering the aria "Non Mi Dir," from "Don Giovanni." Here in the realm of dramatic coloratura, Miss Maynor found herself as much at home as in the florid lyric field. Her tones took on all the needed volume and richness, tones that if lyric before in character, now became surprising in their dramatic urge and fire.

A superb delivery of the "Depuis Le Jour" from Charpentier's "Louise," gave further evidence of Miss Maynor's positive grasp of the dramatic in song. But this was not all. For she followed this with an extraordinarily sure and electrifying account of the "Ho-Yo-To-Ho," from Wagner's "Die Walkuere," before passing on to a final sheaf of spirituals.

In all of these numbers, Miss Maynor made known a grasp of style, a control of tone and unusual gifts as interpreter.

Miss Maynor, who is 28 years of age and a native of Norfolk, Va., began her studies at Hampton Institute, making the trip abroad with the Hampton Quartet when 18. After being graduated from the institute she became a pupil of Dr. John Findley Williamson of the Westminster Choir School in Princeton, N. J., and then studied with Wilfred Klanroth in New York before going to her present teacher, Alan Haughton, also of New York.

/24

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 10 1939

Artist Pays No Attention To Signs

NO
STANDING IN COLONNADE

Donald Grleason, whose wash drawings of the orchestra are on display at the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield, was "caught" in the Tanglewood music shed today, painting the orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky at rehearsal.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 10 1939

Koussevitzky Hails Negro Singer As a 'Native Kirsten Flagstad'

Boston Symphony Conductor Presents Dorothy Maynor, Soprano, at Stockbridge Picnic

Stockbridge, Aug. 9—(AP)—A young Negro soprano, born in Norfolk, Va., was hailed today as a "native Kirsten Flagstad" by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, now playing at the Berkshire Music festival.

Koussevitzky presented Miss Dorothy Maynor in a recital at the festival music shed, where he and Mrs Koussevitzky entertained members of the orchestra at a picnic.

After the young woman, who has not yet appeared on the concert stage, sang a program which included arias sung by dramatic and mezzo-sopranos and coloraturas, the famous conductor was heard to comment with equally enthusiastic orchestra members about Miss Maynor's varied style, clarity of voice and "wonderful musicality."

Koussevitzky said Miss Maynor was brought to his attention by a festival enthusiast and he heard her in a private recital before presenting her to the orchestra. The young woman obtained her first musical education at Hampton institute, later studied at Westminster Choir school at Princeton, N. J., and now is studying in New York.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 11 1939

WHY A MUSIC "SHED"

To the Editor of The Republican:—

At long last it becomes apparent why the architectural shell which houses the Berkshire Symphonic festival is termed a "shed." The public erred in confounding its name with the unsightly outbuilding of unpleasant memories. It seems the name is the verb and not the noun, and is derived from the action of the participants rather than the architectural structure. With perfect propriety and good sense, Dr Koussevitzky and his symphonic band "shed" their outer garments at each performance and even the lovely ladies "shed" as much of their diaphanous raiment as propriety permits—even a bit more than some old-fashioned people think proper. So we must admit that there is some justification for calling the temple of music a shed.

E. H. M.

Springfield, August 9, 1939.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LAWRENCE, MASS.
TRIBUNE

AUG 11 1939

RECORD ATTENDANCE AT BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Attendance records were broken at all of the concerts given last week at the annual Berkshire Music festival. Last night another large audience assembled at Tanglewood where the Boston Symphony orchestra began the second half of the series.

On Saturday night and Sunday afternoon the final concerts will be presented and another interesting chapter will have been added to this unique phase of American cultural development. The Saturday program will include Haydn's Symphony in B-Flat, Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps" and several excerpts from the Wagnerian operas. The final program on Sunday will include Schumann's Symphony No. 4 in D-Minor, Debussy's "Prelude a l'Apres-midi d'un Faune," Ravel's "La Valse" and Sibelius' Second Symphony.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

AUG 11 1939

Don't Neglect the Strings

To the New York Herald Tribune:

With the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra playing at Lewisohn Stadium, and the Boston Symphony at the Berkshire Festival in Massachusetts, and with other equally renowned organizations appearing in special summer concerts, attention of young people, it is hoped, is being drawn to orchestral instruments, especially the piano, violin and cello.

Although it is fun to grab a horn and after five lessons play in a jazz band, there is much culture and refinement derived from a long study of the stringed instruments.

LESTER M. DIEHL.

Roscoe, N. Y., Aug. 9, 1939.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 11 1939

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Opens Second Half of Program

Stockbridge, Aug. 11—Perfect weather, the best yet, prevailed last night as Dr Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra opened the second series of the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood. The weather had its effects on the audience which was a large one, on the orchestra which seemed in particularly fine fettle, but primarily on the tone itself which was the loveliest yet. The strings were heard to excellent advantage in the almost brisk evening air.

Not all the seats were full in the shed itself which seats 5700 but hundreds were seated either along the colonnades at the edge of the huge shell or resting on cushions, chairs or blankets outside on the grassy lawn where audibility was exceptionally fine.

The program, as have its predecessors, aroused the audience to the high pitch of enthusiasm which augurs well for the future of the festival and maintains the standard from which Dr Koussevitzky has never deviated. It consisted of the Second symphony of Beethoven, the Strauss tone poem, "Thus Spake Zarathustra," and the Moussorgsky suite of piano pieces, "Pictures at an Exhibition," as arranged for orchestra by Maurice Ravel.

The serenity of the Beethoven made it an ideal opening. Its simple themes, carefully developed, hinting at greater things to come, were given a loving performance by the orchestra. Twice was the orchestra interrupted during its performance; once when thoughtless management put on the lights at the conclusion of the first movement to allow late comers to be seated; and again, at the end of the second movement. The second interruption was a welcome one, however, for it was the rustling clamor of an enraptured audience, many of whom could not refrain from a light pattering of applause for the larghetto movement, taken at a confidently slow tempo.

About as sharp a contrast as could be found followed in the Strauss, the opening bars of which are barbaric and arrogant in their intensity. Other sections lapse into softer rhythms, more reminiscent of Johann, rather than Richard Strauss, but the introduction and the impressive climax of the conclusion linger long in the memory, though other sections of the setting of the Nietsche have a passing appeal, just as the hero Zarathustra went on from experience to experience.

For the second half of the program, the variety of the Moussorgsky "Pictures" made the concert one of the most welcome in this year's series. Much of the effect is due to the careful and imaginative coloring given by the Ravel orchestration. Those who have heard the orchestration can never be satisfied again with the bare piano interpretation.

The stunning Koussevitzky reading had humor in the lighter passages, as in the caricature, 'Samuel Goldenburg and Schmuyle," and ponderosity as in the final "Kiev Gate." So intense was the maestro during this last "piece" that he lost his baton, the stick flying away as he made a particularly vigorous gesture.

Saturday night at 8.30 the second concert in the second series will be held. The program will include the Haydn Symphony 102, in B flat; the Stravinsky "Sacre du Printempts" and four Wagnerian selections. The series closes Sunday.

Last night, through the courtesy of John Shepard, Jr, 516 new armchairs made their appearance in the boxes. These replace the steel chairs which were placed along the colonnade. It was obvious that the generosity of Mr Shepard, who had made other benefactions to the music shell, was quite appreciated.

J. D. D.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News

AUG 11 1939

Rich Musical Qualities Shown At New Tanglewood Program

Instrumentation and Tonal Coloring Distinguish Opening of Second Series in Berkshire Symphonic Festival

By C. R. ROSEBERRY

Rich instrumentation and tonal coloring distinguished the opening of the second series of concerts in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood last night.

Serge Koussevitzky, the paradoxically dependable and unpredictable conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra had provided another miracle of program building. Beginning with the early and simpler Beethoven (the second symphony), he progressed to the vivid musical abstraction of a Richard Strauss symphonic poem, and thence to the outright realism of Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition."

This made for a remarkably balanced evening, and the usual capacity audience in the airy music shed gave strenuos vent to its approval.

Only two concerts remain in the sixth annual festival: Saturday night's which programs Haydn's Symphony No. 102, Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring," and four Wagnerian excerpts, and that of Sunday afternoon, which Schumann's fourth symphony and Sibelius Second, and tid-bits of Debussy and Ravel.

The zenith of last night's performing was the Strauss tone poem, "Thus Spake Zarathustra," inspired by but not programmed after the philosophical prose poem of Friedrich Nietzsche. The leading exponent of the modern German music has found a comprehending interpreter in Koussevitzky, and the seemingly unlimited scope of the conductor's catholicity, as well as the flexibility of that great orchestra which bends to his slightest whim, have not been so manifest before in this Tanglewood season.

Strauss may challenge the understanding of those not thoroughly acquainted with him, but ever the neophyte must marvel at the orchestration in which his ideas are clothed. There were no detectable deficiencies in the various instrumental choirs at Koussevitzky's beck and call, and the addition of the electronic organ gave the requisite weight to that first smashing climax of the poem.

Tanglewood has long intermissions —25 minutes—during which the massive audience mills about inside the music shed or disperses across the lawn for soft drinks at the refreshment tent.

Returning to their seats last night, listeners were wafted into that hazy borderland between the auditory and the graphic arts which was conjured up by the nerve-wrecked Russian, Moussorgsky, in the set of 10 descriptive pianoforte pieces entitled "Pictures at an Exhibition." Last year, you will recall, Koussevitzky chose "A Night on Bald Mountain" from his fellow-countryman.

Of the several orchestral transcroptions of the "Pictures," Maestro Koussevitzky clings naturally to the one he requested the late Maurice Ravel to do for him and the Boston Symphony. Its instrumental descriptive powers are frequently amazing, employing many unconventional sounds—even to the saxophone.

Occupants of the 86 boxes, reserved for patrons and patronesses across the mid-section of the auditorium, had a surprise in store for them when they arrived last night. The boxes had been equipped with new comfortable armchairs—the gift of John Shepard Jr., a summer resident of Lenox, Mass., one time Boston merchant prince and former mayor of Palm Beach, Fla. With six chairs to a box the total of the gift was 516. It released the steel chairs hitherto used in the boxes to augment seating accommodations in the rear section of the shed which up to now had been supplied only with wooden benches.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 11 1939

SECOND FESTIVAL SERIES HAS FINE OPENING CONCERT

Richard Strauss's Tone Poem, 'Thus Spake Zarathrustra' Has Commanding Spot On Program

By FRANCIS REGAL

Lenox, Aug. 10—The second series of concerts in the Berkshire Symphonic festival opened tonight as notably as the first half did a week ago and with more cooperation from the weather bureau. The air was dry, crisp and pleasantly cool and gave an added touch of brilliancy to the stringed instruments besides contributing to the energy of the performers; the tone was of marvelous beauty.

In the quality of the programs presented subscribers to the first and the second series have been treated with scrupulous fairness, so that subscribers unable to attend both may have had some difficulty in deciding which to choose.

Tonight's concert followed the general rule of three major works, but this time only one symphony was presented—Beethoven's No 2, which opened the performance. This gave the central position to the exciting tone poem by Richard Strauss, "Thus Spake Zarathustra," and after the intermission came those delectable sketches by Moussorgsky, "Pictures at an Exposition" in the orchestral version by Maurice Ravel.

At these festivals due attention has been paid to the even-numbered symphonies by Beethoven, which have been overshadowed by the grandeur of the third, the fifth, the seventh and the ninth. At an earlier festival Dr Koussevitzky gave an inspired in~~terpretation~~ of the "Pastoral," No 6, which convinced the most skeptical that this work is not unworthy of the master even if it does not rise to the sublime.

Tonight he brought out no less perfectly the serene beauty of the D major, No 2, which is all the more remarkable for having been written in the year of extreme depression in which Beethoven learned that his deafness was incurable and progressive. But he was too great a genius to allow his personal misfortunes to blight his creative power, and from this lovely music no listener could guess that for the composer it was a tragic year.

The beauty of the less strenuous symphonies with which Beethoven punctuated his heroic works is more generally appreciated nowadays than it used to be, and they perhaps stand in even greater need of skill and unfailing taste in the performance. Tonight every bar of music was a delight to the ear.

While the programs in general are limited to three major standard works, variety and even contrast have been sought, and tonight's audience found both contrast and variety. If "Also Sprach Zarathustra" was poles apart from the gracious beauty of the D major symphony, it was in most respects equally different from the subtle metaphysical magic with which Moussorgsky converted into tone the impressions received in walking through an art gallery. Even one such translation would be a remarkable stunt; the unfailing accuracy of the tone pictures is nothing short of a miracle.

(Continued from First Page)

Richard Strauss undertook a more conventional task in turning into brilliant orchestral music the rhapsodic prose poem by Nietzsche, the emotional content of which gives a reasonable program. This work used to be criticized as a translation of philosophy into music, but Nietzsche was writing poetry rather than philosophy, and Strauss was specially concerned with the account of how the ancient Persian philosopher, after meditating for 10 years in the mountains, decided to come down from the hights and give his message to his fellow men.

In his later years under reluctantly accepted Nazi rule the famous composer may perhaps think at times of the warning given to the philosopher as he descended from his solitary hilltop abode: "Then thou carried thy ashes to the mountains. Wilt thou now carry thy fire to the valleys? Dost thou not fear the incendiary's doom?" Nietzsche, whose revolutionary teaching had excited the youthful Richard Strauss, has in fact been an incendiary, much as his rugged individualism would have revolted from Nazi regimentation.

It is a wonder that the censors tolerate a book in which the author says: "The state is the coldest of all cold monsters. Coldly it lieth and this lie creepeth out of its mouth: 'I, the state, am the people.'" It is a strange paradox that this aristocratic anarchist should have lent Zoroaster's eagle and serpent to the mass tyranny of the Aryan swastika. Both the prose poem and the tone poem are historical documents. This is not the most fully successful of Richard Strauss's grandiose orchestral interpretations of literary themes, but it contains beautiful and thrilling passages, and the unfailing skill and ingenuity of the instrumentation fascinate when the performance is on so high a level as that of tonight. The ending of the "Song of the Night Wanderer," after the 12 strokes of the midnight bell, is perhaps the most sheerly beautiful passage in the works of this great master of the modern orchestra, and seldom does one see a vast audience so completely spellbound.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

AUG 11 1939

Fourth Concert In Berkshires Is Heard by 6,000

Koussevitzky Directs 'Also Sprach Zarathustra' for First Time at Tanglewood

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 10.—After the usual three-day intermission, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival began its second half tonight when Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the [redacted] shed on the Tanglewood estate before an audience which, as in the three previous concerts of this summer's series, was estimated at more than 6,000 All the 5,700 seats seemed to be occupied and, as before, many chose to listen from the lawn within the wide radius of effective hearing.

Occupants of the boxes found a surprise in the supply of new and comfortable armchairs, 516 in all. These were the gift of John Shepard jr., of Boston, a summer resident of Lenox, who presented the chairs to the Berkshire Festival through its president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith. This donation, the first gift of equipment for the music shed, permitted the steel chairs hitherto placed in the boxes to be used in the rear section of the auditorium.

Dr. Koussevitzky's program, the fourth of the festival, consisted of three major works—Beethoven's Second Symphony, Richard Strauss's "Also Sprach Zarathustra" and Ravel's Transcription of Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition."

The performance observed the high standard which marks the playing of the Boston Symphony under its noted conductor, both in the Berkshires and in its regular concerts in Symphony and Carnegie Halls.

Again there was reason for warm admiration for the clarity of detail, the instant responsiveness to the conductor's interpretive wishes, the general impression of a single, seldom-rivaled musical entity composed of musicians who are masters of their instruments. The interpretation of the Beethoven Symphony merited much praise, even if some might have desired a slightly longer lingering over the larghetto with its pervasive lyric charm.

"Zarathustra" was the first work of Strauss which has appeared in a Berkshire Festival program during the festival's association with the Boston Symphony, but Dr. Koussevitzky's intent and sympathetic interpretation of this music is well known to metropolitan music lovers and was convincingly set forth in this concert. Little can be said here about "Zarathustra" and its strong points and occasional drawbacks. Its assets, including the resplendent opening and the vertiginous climax before the quiet and questioning closing notes, were emphasized in a memorable performance, and there was ardent applause for the conductor and the orchestra.

The last two concerts of this festival, which is the sixth to be held in the region, will take place Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

Another Big Crowd Flocks to Symphony

Lenox, Aug. 10—Tonight's audience at the fourth concert of the Berkshire musical festival starting the second series was officially given at 6000. More than 400 general admission tickets were sold and there were said to be 100 scattered vacant seats. With a seating capacity of 5700 this would make the official estimate about accurate.

Secretary Warner F. Eaton of Northampton was again in command of the state police, having a force of eight men strategically located. There was no delay at any time in the arrival of cars and the parking areas were quickly cleared after the concert, the force of 40 deputy sheriffs and Legion men now being well trained by Sheriff James Bruce McIntyre.

Clear and warm, this was a perfect August evening and as it was at all the preceding concerts, the closely cropped lawns and gardens with the hemlock hedges provided delightful strolls. Tonight's highly enthusiastic audience was one of the most fashionable so far and many women were in evening clothes. Dr Koussevitzky was recalled four times following the Strauss composition, just before intermission. Advance sale of tickets indicates record-smashing audiences Saturday night at 8.30 and Sunday at 3.30 p. m.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

AUG 11 1939

HUGE AUDIENCE HEARS CONCERT IN STOCKBRIDGE

Beethoven, Strauss and Moussorgsky on Second Series Opening Program

By Willard M. Clark

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 11—Another huge audience greeted Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony players last night, ~~as the Berkshire~~ Symphonic Festival launched into its second series of three concerts. Ideal weather conditions brought out many hundreds of persons who sat outside the music shed and the shed itself was practically filled.

Opens With Beethoven

The program opened with an enchanting performance of Symphony No. 2 in D Major by Beethoven. While this work of the youthful Beethoven lacks the color and breadth of the later symphonies, it also lacks the Mozartian qualities of the first symphony and gives glimpses of the developments to come. One can only sit and marvel at the way the finest effects succeed one another so smoothly and unexpectedly.

The second movement, a lovely larghetto, provided opportunity for some of the most effective playing of the evening. Listening to the beauty and solemnity of the opening bars, it seemed the natural thing that eventually they should be used by Sir John Goss as a setting to Keble's "Sun of my Soul, Thou Saviour Dear," the hymn known as the "Bonn" hymn. These bars are poignant utterances of pure, lyric beauty.

Refreshing Lightness

The scherzo was played with refreshing lightness, yet vigor and rhythmic incisiveness were not lacking. The final movement with its lighthearted song and its brisk changes of mood was finely realized by the players and the performance as a whole may be regarded as one of the high lights of the four performances heard.

There could hardly be any greater contrast to the symphony than the Strauss tone poem, "Thus Spake Zarathustra." The music pays homage to Nietzsche, great German philosopher, by adopting as the basis for certain more or less illustrative musical development, passages from the philosophical poem of the same name. However, the utter impossibility of the majority of persons being able to associate it with the philosophy of Nietzsche, has perhaps been its salvation, for listeners have abandoned themselves to the music as such, without thought as to meaning.

It was evident that Dr. Koussevitzky has a distinct liking for this work. He read it with zealotlike intensity, drawing from the players that magnificence of tone which he alone seems able to evoke. It was an amazing display of virtuosity and whether or not the audience knew what Strauss intended, they reacted to the brilliance of the music and seemed to forget these arid pages which appeared every so often.

Stunning Performance

The program closed with a stunning performance of Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition." It was a distinct relief after the thunderous philosophy of Strauss. Dr. Koussevitzky used the Ravel setting of these piano works, rather than the latest settings by Lucien Cailliet of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra.

Much might be written of the means used to orchestrate these pictures, but let it suffice that each gains in color and vitality during the process. Many a musical joke is perpetrated, yet there is solid fare in such pictures as "Il Vecchio Castello," "Catacombs" and "The gate of the Bogatirs at Kiev," this last a majestic tone picture.

The audience was enchanted with the work and there were numerous calls for conductor and players at its close. The next concert will be Saturday night. The program will include Symphony in B Fat, No. 102, Haydn; Stravinsky's "Sacre du Printemps," and a group of Wagner selections.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HERALD
Elmira N.Y.

AUG 11 1939

Annual Berkshire Music Festival Again Makes Many New Friends

(By ANDREW MABLEY)

It is too bad that the word Festival has become to have such a trite connotation: we have music festivals where four or five half-baked choruses struggle for a couple of nights in effort to give birth to some hackneyed choral music; we have festivals of instrumental music of the same calibre. Any organization that has a repertoire for two evenings work in the Spring will give a Festival of music, plays or what have you.

The Birkshire Symphonic Festival appears to have overcome the stigma of the name. It is because during the last four years since Serge Keupssevitski and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have played, the music has been so consistently fine that this vears festival, which is the sixth, has been practically a sell-out, at least the attendance for the first half of the concerts show this. The word festival has no terrors now up at Stockbridge.

The first concert was given last Thursday. The program consisted of well-tried numbers, although the opening number, Bach's Third Brandenburk Concerte in G-Major might have been new to many of the audience which numbred over 6,000. The popular Rimski-Korsakoff "Scheherazade" was played before the twenty-five minute intermission Brahms' First Symphony concluded the concert.

Unusual Accounts of Hall

In this day of microphones and synthetic human sounds, any sizeable place not using amplification is unusual. The music shed at Stockbridge is a marvel in this respect. This reviewer heard the Bach music from the back of the hall which seats 5,700. Every nuance was audible. The music from the symphonic suite of Rimski-Korsakoff with its delicate instrumentation was very distinct, enabling Dr. Koussevitski to get a larger dynamic range that would have been out of the question in such a place as Carnegie Hall or Symphony Hall. This music was not too ~~romantic,~~ and so those of us who have heard it for the thousandth time ware able to enjoy it. On the other hand, a little warmth in the Brahms work would have been welcomed. We have never especially cared for the Bostonian's playing of the favorite: we can appreciae it, but not necessarily enjoy it.

Saturday evening again brought out packed auditorium. There was no rain this time, as there was on Thursday night, and several hundred listeners sat out on the lawns.

There has been a marked improvement in the programs this year. The standard Fifths and Sixths and of Beethoven and Tschaikowski have been set aside; we are now hearing more Sibelius, Prokofieff, Strauss, a little Stravinski and Pisten. Saturday evening Pisten's splendid Concerte for Orchestra opened the program. That after long last many people are willing to admit new sounds into their vocabulary was evident by the applause after this number. The music is quite good. Modeled on the concerte grosse, where there is no sole instrument but groups of instruments taking the solo, the first movement is conservatively classical, and any one fighting the modern idiem had no cause for complaint. The other two movements have their worth in skillful treatment of themes, fine taste in instrumentation, careful selection of modern harmony. That rarity, a tuba solo, was very effective in the opening of the third movement.

Sibelius Work Impressive

The Sibelius Fifth Symphony followed. Koussevitski is probably the outstanding interperter of Sibelius in America, and I wonder if this work is not the greatest symphony of our time! Certainly it sounded so Saturday night on the Tappan estate at Stockbridge where the Boston Symphony somehow or other manages to always play well.

In spite of the twenty-five minute intermission which followed the Sibelius, the Beethoven Seventh Symphony was not a welcome contrast. Not until the final pages were we able to get into the mood of the great music. The brooding depths of the Finn's music seemed to permeate the evening, and we unable to forget the massive chords, the dark intentsity of the Sibelius work.

This Week's Program

This week's programs include, for Thursday evening, Beethoven's Second Symphony, the Strauss tone poem, "Alse Sprach Zarathustra," the Moussorgsky, "Pictures at an Exhibition." Saturday night there will be a Wagner group with the Haydn B flat Symphony and the Stravinski "Sacre du Printemps." The final program, Sunday afternoon has the Sibelius Second Symphony and the Schumann D minor Symphony for principle numbers.

Shawns New Dance

Ted Shawn and his men dancers are again giving lecture demonstrations on the Shawn farm at Jacob's Pillow which is near West Beckett, Mass. Every Friday and Saturday afternoon during August and thru the ninth of September from four to five you may drink tea and eat delicious sandwiches in the garden. At five you go into the spacious barn to hear the lecture-demonstration. Mr. Shawn lectures while his company illustrates his theories. These intimate affairs are sort of previews for what the rest of the United States sees later in the preparatory school as well as the college auditorium and the concert hall.

This year, Shawn, with the aid of Madame Eve Sikelianou, are working on the experiment of danced singing. As Mr. Shawn himself admitted, previous attempts in this medium have been unsuccessful, although music and singing originated with the dance but later became separated into the instrumental and the choral. Now Shawn and Madame Sikelianou, who is an authority on Greek drama, and is teaching the dancers the music she has composed to certain poems, while Mr. Shawn does the choreography, are working something out that gives promise of perfect fusion of words, music and the dance.

Fusion of Music, Dance And Words

What the collaborators are working for appears to be that none of the three elements shall be outstanding: poetry, music and dance shall be one. It was not until the final number on the program, the first chorus from Aeschylus's "Persians," that this reviewer got the intended effect. But here was drama that should be, with more finesse, overwhelming. There was power of motion; the English words blended with the movement (and there is no reason why the English should not suit the Greek since so much is a derivative from it), the singing was adequate and did not get in the way of the words nor the action. I am not so sure whether the "Excursions into Visible Song" as it was called, was so ~~successful~~ in the shorter numbers—which were passages from the prophet Isaiah, three pyrrhic dances from a comedy of Aristephenes, and two short poems on death by Walt Whitman. They seemed to lack the sustained surge of power and depth that the final number possessed. The Whitman poem does not need motion, neither does the Liebested, Electra's lament over the ashes of Orestes, or any of the great moments in drama.

As to Madame Sikelianou's music: she has worked on the few fragments we have of Greek music, and has taken the ancient Greek modes as her basis. The result is a narrow range of intervals as well as a narrow range of dynamics. The singers of course the music is in unison, are perfectly up to the demands of the music, and the diction is cleanest cut that this critic has heard from a body of adults. In a larger hall I am not sure whether this would hold true. But certainly there was no painful straining after words last Saturday.

More will be written when I have the opportunity later on in the month to make another visit to the interesting place.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 11 1939

BEETHOVEN PLAYED AT BERKSHIRE FETE

6,000 Attend Opening of the Second Half of Series Under Baton of Koussevitzky

STRAUSS MUSIC IS HEARD

'Thus Spake Zarathustra' Is Given With Mussorgsky's 'Pictures at Exhibition'

By NOEL STRAUS

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 10.—The second half of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival began here tonight at Tanglewood with the fourth of the six concerts being presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky. An audience numbering a little less than 6,000 persons attended. From all indications the crowds present at the concerts this week will fully equal those of last week in the aggregate.

Tonight's program began with Beethoven's second symphony, following which Dr. Koussevitzky directed two examples of the type of more modern composition that afford his unsurpassed abilities as a colorist full sway.

This brace of selections, which rounded out the list, comprised Richard Strauss's tone poem "Thus Spake Zarathustra" and Mussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition," in the orchestral arrangement by Ravel. The response awakened by the superior interpretation granted the works under consideration rose to a feverish pitch after the Strauss and Mussorgsky offerings, which were given with memorable tonal glamour.

New Chairs in Boxes

When the boxholders arrived at the music shed tonight a surprise awaited them, for all of the boxes were equipped with attractive new armchairs with their metal framework painted a glowing orange hue, gayly set off by green canvas seats and backs. The chairs had been kept a secret by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival organization. They came as a result of her appeal for funds at the opening concert last week. They were the gift of John Shepard Jr. of Boston, Lenox Summer resident and former Mayor of Palm Beach.

Miss Smith said today that the answer to her appeal had been encouraging, but that the sum specified was far from being reached to date. As she stated in her recent speech referred to above, the festival association will be glad to accept any amount from $1 to $10,000, but is not after huge donations from one or a few persons.

"We want to keep the festival the public's festival and make each and every person who attends the concerts feel that it belongs to him or her," said Miss Smith. "It is not our desire to have the festival subsidized by a few wealthy sponsors, but we want to keep it at all times a purely democratic undertaking, which the public may rightly consider its own.

"If every one coming to each of the concerts were to donate $1 toward the $60,000 fund we would be well on our way toward the goal set. As soon as we have the fund completed we can purchase the rolling shutters so badly needed in case of storms. With the money we also will be able to provide an even, hardwood floor for the stage in the music shed to replace the present rough boards and buy chairs to take the place of the long benches in the large section of the auditorium behind the boxes. These are the main objectives in view and will virtually bring the music shed to full completion."

The idea of extending the duration of the festival to three weeks, first brought up last year as a result of the increased attendance, still remains a moot point, it was learned from authoritative sources. But though the question is still under consideration, it has not as yet been passed upon by either the trustees of the festival corporation or of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The success scored by Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano, at the picnic for the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra given by Dr. Koussevitzky in the music shed yesterday is the subject of much conversation here. For her songs and arias Miss Maynor was efficiently accompanied at the piano by Bernard Zighera, regular harpist of the orchestra.

Carleton Smith Talks

Early in the picnic program came a highly informative and finely delivered talk by Carleton Smith, lecturer and writer, and some practically unknown Russian and Finnish folk music. The interesting records employed to illustrate the lecture were made during a 40,000-mile air trip from Moscow to Mongolia and back, which Mr. Smith made with Reinhold Gliere, the Russian composer, who had been commissioned by the Soviet Government to search out unknown Russian folk music for use in propaganda films. The records had greatly intrigued Dr. Koussevitzky and he was anxious for his musicians to hear them. All of the recordings were of music of ancient origin. They proved to have qualities not usually associated with the Russian folk music.

Last night at the Curtis Hotel here in Lenox, Dr. Hugo Leichtentritt, the celebrated German musicologist now of Harvard University, gave an illustrated lecture on "The Orchestra Score and Its Use for the Music Lover." Dr. Leichtentritt voiced his conviction that only from the work of art itself can much of real value be acquired by the student and listener. He developed his thesis by detailed consideration of the score of Beethoven's second symphony.

Among those in the audience at tonight's concert were John Garrett, former United States Ambassador to Italy and Sir Ernest MacMillan, conductor of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

AUG 11 1939

Berkshire Festival Continues Tomorrow

The second half of the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival began last night in Stockbridge, Mass., with Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony orchestra.

There will be no concert tonight, but the festival continues Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

The program Saturday night at 8:30 will include Haydn's Symphony in B-flat, Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps" and several compositions by Wagner. The Festival will close with Sunday afternoon's concert at 3:30. The final program will include Schumann's Symphony No. 4 in D Minor, Debussy's "Prelude a l'Apres-midi d'un Faune," Ravel's "La Valse", and the Second symphony, by Sibelius.

All reserved seats in the rear section of the music shed at Tanglewood have been sold, but there are seats left in the front section and, as during the first series, admission tickets will be sold admitting holders to the concert grounds. Reservations may be made by writing or telephoning to the Festival office at Stockbridge.

The Berkshire Inn Keepers association reports virtually every available room in Stockbridge and Lenox taken, but rooms are available in neighboring towns. Room reservations may be made through the Festival office, the Berkshire Hills Conference, at Pittsfield, or through hotels in the county.

Tickets for the chamber music concert at South Mountain in Pittsfield may be obtained by writing to Willem Willeke, director.

THIS CLIPPING FROM HAVERHILL, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 11 1939

MUSIC

NEW MUSIC SCHOOL

At "Tanglewood" in Stockbridge, where the Boston Symphony orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is holding its annual festival, there will be a music school or "academy" for amateurs and professionals, conducted during the summer of 1940.

The "purpose of the Academy will be that of a center of music," stated Dr. Koussevitzky, according to one journal. This school of music in the Berkshires at the festival home of the Boston Symphony orchestra will be the realization of a long cherished dream of Dr. Koussevitzky, who with 30 members of the Boston Symphony orchestra will teach aspiring conductors, soloists and musicians at the "academy" another summer season.

There will be classes in music appreciation and playing of music for those to whom the art is an avocation. "It would be a boon for those who want to study the fine arts in their relation to culture; who are anxious to refresh their minds and personalities through contact with the best in art and the most distinguished in culture; and for those who long for a creative rest in the summer," Dr. Koussevitzky has stated.

This academy will comprise two schools. One will offer advanced instruction to especially qualified students. Another will offer general instruction to that larger group, whose entrance requirements will be an intelligent interest in music. Scholars of prominence in the arts and letters will lecture to the larger group which will also have a part in the festival chorus.

Dr. Koussevitzky and musicians of the Boston Symphony orchestra will conduct the classes of the advanced group. The term will be for six weeks concluding with the festival. Besides their teaching assignments the members of the Boston Symphony orchestra will form a resident orchestra to serve as a nucleus for the academy orchestra, as a working group for those who study conducting with Dr. Koussevitzky, and as a practice group for the performance of new scores.

FROM "THE LISTENER"

According to "The Listener", journal of the British Broadcasting Corp., there is no art in which the lack of knowledge and need for it is so great as in music.

Relative to education in music by a more widespread dissemination of musical doctrine by radio "the Listener" claims that music can drive men to "the most nonsensical excesses" and stresses the fact that music acts more directly than any other art upon the emotion when it states, "this primarily emotional reception of music is stronger than anything experienced from indulging in any other art." Further it is stated: "Music alone is considered as so much raw emotional material, lying around for the use of any one needing quick stimulation of the sympathetic nervous system."

The Listener advocates that the young begin lessons in the understanding of music by being taught notes when they learn their ABCs. Those of teen age are more difficult to teach as they are distressed at beginning with what the "kids" are doing.

On the matter of broadcast teaching "The Listener" stated, it "can begin to form taste." Continuing the journal stated: "Education being the technic of persuading a possibly recalcitrant pupil to a given point of view, there is no medium more conducive to that state than music. But music is itself a point of view. It is not only a magnifying glass through which one looks at life, but it is life itself. On the one hand it can be ancillary to the many forms of activity with which our life is crowded; that is music as the servant. But it has this strange habit of becoming the master. Then it is that those who know it only as a medium for stilling pain or exciting pleasure find themselves with no means of understanding this immense force that has taken them in hand."

COTTON COUNTRY SINGERS

With the cotton crop laid by, the Carolinaians will now engage in "singings" with more than 60 singing festivals to be given in the foothill counties of South Carolina.

These farmers and cotton-mill workers have spent the Sundays of August at singing conventions during their whole lives, as their parents and grandparents did before them.

C. F. Adams, a 'tombstone-laundry" man of Seneca, S. C., president of the South Carolina Singing Convention, says on his visits to local congregations, "I was born a poor boy on a farm and I know what singing means to the folks."

E. B. F.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 11 1939

Second Series Of Concerts Begun At 'Tanglewood'

By CARL E. LINDSTROM

Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass.—When the history of the Stockbridge Symphonic Festival is written, 1939 will go down as the year when success, having looked interestedly around, decided to settle permanently at "Tanglewood."

Everybody knows about it now. This season, for the first time, all seats are reserved, and if there are any empty ones, even on a Thursday night, you have to look for them. At almost any concert you are likely to hear about a new gift to the Festival. Last night box holders took their places in new, comfortable-looking armchairs of three different colors for each of the three tiers of boxes—blue, green and orange—the donation at a cost in four figures of John Shepard Jr., Boston merchant and former mayor of Palm Beach. Response to the Academy plans for next year has been quick and enthusiastic. On all sides is the feeling of prestige and security. "Tanglewood" has arrived.

Care in Program

Koussevitzky knows this. That he is fully cognizant of the special problem which arises when great popularity and great art travel together is evidenced by the care with which he has chosen his programs, for all of them this season have been unusual.

Thursday night he companioned Beethoven's Second Symphony with Strauss' "Thus Spake Zarathustra" before the intermission and finished with Ravel's vivid orchestration of Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition." That Beethoven's relatively uneventful, bucolic Symphony was a foil for Strauss' incandescent philosophy goes without saying.

It is easy to think that the revered Doctor one day last February looked out upon the wintry bleakness of Huntington Ave. and, remembering his idyll in the Berkshires, said to himself: "Having already given the Pastoral Symphony up there twice, next summer I shall play the Second." Thereupon, humming to himself perhaps a bar or two of the songful Larghetto, "And because man's search for the ideal is realized only in music—and in 'Tanglewood,' next shall come Zarathustra. Then because people must not forget that Boston's is the most brilliant orchestra in the world—the Moussorgsky Pictures will do very well."

Pure fantasy; but the Festival is all an incredible fantasy . . . the ever restoring walk by the hemlock hedges, the peace of thousands of people with purged and sweetened minds, motors without horns, star-points overhead and Thursday night a crystalline atmosphere.

Honest Beethoven

Dr. Koussevitzky performed the Beethoven Symphony in a spirit of self-communion. It was finished, and warmed through with a fine affection, but in no degree pointed up with the startling details which Koussevitzky finds and loves to underscore so unexpectedly. The slow movement was a calm, dispassionate song and the rest of it voiced with the honest attitude that the listener must take it as it was. There was no special pleading.

"Thus Spake Zarathustra" seemed to seize hold of Koussevitzky at the very opening and he conducted as though he were being crucified with beauty. The complete mobilization of the orchestral resources touched the very limits of grandeur. The players were attuned to the taxing score and rose to it in such a way that one never wanted to hear the work again in lesser hands. The horns wavered a bit under unmerciful demands but rallied to achieve some beautiful moments. Strauss acquires great stature by such a performance as this.

Pictures Improvisatory

The Moussorgsky "Pictures" were last heard at Bushnell Memorial in the orchestration of Lucien Caillet. The writer prefers Ravel's, although Moussorgskyites will some day say that he did much the same thing that Rimsky-Korsakoff did to other Moussorgsky works and for which they were never willing to thank him.

Koussevitzky allowed himself great liberty as to tempo changes and in general gave the sketches an improvisatory character but that is the spirit of the Exhibition suite. The Catacombs episode as done last night will be long remembered and indeed the whole interpretation left indelible marks.

There is again prospect of capacity attendance for the week-end concerts to conclude the second series begun last night. Saturday night the program comprises: Haydn's Symphony in B flat, No. 102, Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps" and a Wagner group. On Sunday afternoon the series will close with Schumann's D minor Symphony, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," Ravel's "La Valse" and the D major Symphony of Sibelius.

516 Chairs Presented For Festival Shed

Lenox, Mass.—When patrons of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival arrived at the Tanglewood shed Thursday night for the fourth concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, they found every box furnished with new, substantial armchairs, the gift of John Shepard Jr., summer resident of Lenox, former Boston merchant and former mayor of Palm Beach, Fla.

There are 86 boxes with six chairs in a box, a total of 516 chairs.

Mr. Shepard's gift follows a substantial one made by him last year to the building fund. It is the first gift of equipment for the new music shed and Festival trustees hope that Mr. Shepard's example will be followed by others so that another year will see the much needed shutters and chairs to replace the benches in the rear section. The steel chairs in the boxes, released because of Mr. Shepard's gift, will be placed in the rear section of the shed.

Contributions in any amount toward the building fund will be welcome and may be sent to the president, Berkshire Symphonic Festival Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

127

Second Half of Festival Brings Many Familiar and New Faces to Tanglewood

Eugenie Leontovitch, well known actress, who has appeared at Berkshire Playhouse, converses with Mrs. Charles Robinson Smith, mother of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith.

Mr. and Mrs. John Shepard Jr., of Lenox entertained two of the women participating in the Stockbridge Golf Club Ladies' Tournament last night. Left to right, front row, are Mr. Shepard, Miss Mary Jane Wilson, who was in the tournament, and Mrs. Frederick Davis, who was Berkshire County champion at the tournament four years ago. In rear, is Mr. Davis and Mrs. Shepard.

Miss Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano hailed by Dr. Koussevitzky as "a native Flagstad" following her informal concert Wednesday, reads program notes during intermission.

Under the Music Shed

Miss Ruth Posselt (right), former child violin prodigy, who has just returned from a concert tour of Europe, poses with a friend. Miss Posselt has played with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the New York Phil[illegible]

Hitch-Hikes to Festival and Sleeps in Jail

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 11.—A music lover from Ohio without an automobile, hitch-hiked to the Berkshires for the second series of Berkshire Symphonic Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra which opened last night at Tanglewood.

He arrived at the Red Lion Inn Wednesday night and all rooms were long since taken and there were no other rooms in town available. So Wednesday night, the Ohio man slept in a friendly hay field. Last night though it was cool, so back to the inn he went. But again he found everything at the hotel and every other room in town taken.

Finally, Police Officer Joseph Malumphy's aid was sought. He tried in vain to place the man but then found the solution. He gave the man free quarters in the town's lockup.

Festival

Continued From First Page

employing extra-full wood wind sections and the complete battery of percussion instruments, in addition to the usual entire brass and string choirs, and also an organ.

Scope Gigantic

The scope of this music is gigantic, and upon his tremendous canvas appear kaleidoscopic shades and hues of tone color. The majestic broad introduction is relieved soon by a group of solo instruments playing almost as in chamber music. There is exceptional opportunity for the principals of every section to be heard. Richard [illegible]

Cigarette Girls Get More Music Than They Do Coins

Tips This Year Lower Than During Previous Seasons— Chewing Gum Demanded

The girls who sell cigarettes at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood don't make much money, but they hear a lot of good music. Their primary purpose in getting the cigarette-vending jobs before the concerts and during intermissions is to attend the concerts.

This was brought out when several interviews with the girls last night produced the general opinion that the tips they are receiving this year are less than they received in the past two seasons. "Don't get us wrong, though," warned one of them, "we didn't come up here for the tips. We came for the music."

12 Girls on Job

The 12 girls who are regularly selling cigarettes at the concerts are all from Great Barrington, working for the benefit of the Thursday Morning Club of that town. They are headed by Miss Dorothy Giddings, who is a vendor herself during the six concerts.

Though the girls make no money on what they sell except for the small tips they receive, they all enjoy donning their evening dresses and hearing the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The highest amount of tips received by any one girl at any concert this year is 70 cents, it was learned in a canvass last night at the Shed. That was last Saturday night, and all the girls agree that Saturday night audiences are the most generous. The least selling is done during the Sunday afternoon concerts, as almost everyone moves out of the Shed to view the grounds or buy food and drinks at the refreshment tent.

Sell at Regular Prices

The cigarettes sold are the four most popular brands plus two or three other 15-cent varieties. Many people are surprised that they don't cost more than the regular price, the girls said, some buyers expected to have to pay as much town[illegible] cents a package. Out-of-prised t[illegible] often pleasantly suron the cig[illegible] there is no state tax year Governor although next have them paying two [illegible] will The lack of higher-priced [illegible] was explained by the girls as due to the fact there is little demand for them, despite the glitter and show of wealth of part of the audiences.

Chewing Gum Returns

Much more plebeian is the demand for chewing gum, which the Thursday Morning Club was going to give up this year. Requests for it last Thursday and Saturday evenings convinced the group that they had to sell it, however, and last Sunday it was among the wares in the tray again.

"I guess they like to chew it in time with the music," remarked one vendor. "We tried to give it up this year, but we didn't get away with it."

Dorothy Maynor To Sing Sunday At First Church

First Church of Christ, Congregational, invites all visitors here for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the general public to attend the Sunday morning service at 11 when Miss Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro soprano from Norfolk, Va., will sing. Miss Maynor has caused a sensation in the music world by her appearance at the picnic given by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood to members of the orchestra and friends Wednesday. In the pulpit Sunday will be Rev. Dr. James E. Gregg, former pastor, who was president of Hampton Institute when Miss Maynor was a student there. Arrangements for Miss Maynor's appearance were made by James C. Morton, First Church music director.

John Shepard Jr., Praised For Gift of 516 Armchairs

Prominent Lenox Summer Resident's Surprise Donation Pleases Festival Boxholders

John Shepard Jr., retired Boston merchant, Lenox summer resident and former Mayor of Palm Beach was today receiving from patrons in the box section at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival letters, telegrams and telephone messages of appreciation for his gift of 516 attractive armchairs in the 86 boxes, which came as a complete surprise to the audience at the opening of last night's concert.

Chairs in Three Colors

The chairs with their metal framework are painted in three colors, orange, blue and green. The gift had been kept a secret by Festival officials. Because of Mr. Shepard's gift it is possible to place the 516 steel chairs from the boxes in the rear section to replace some of the benches built when the Festival was established in 1934. It is the hope of the Festival trustees that the gift, the first in equipment made to the music shed at Tanglewood will be but a forerunner of others.

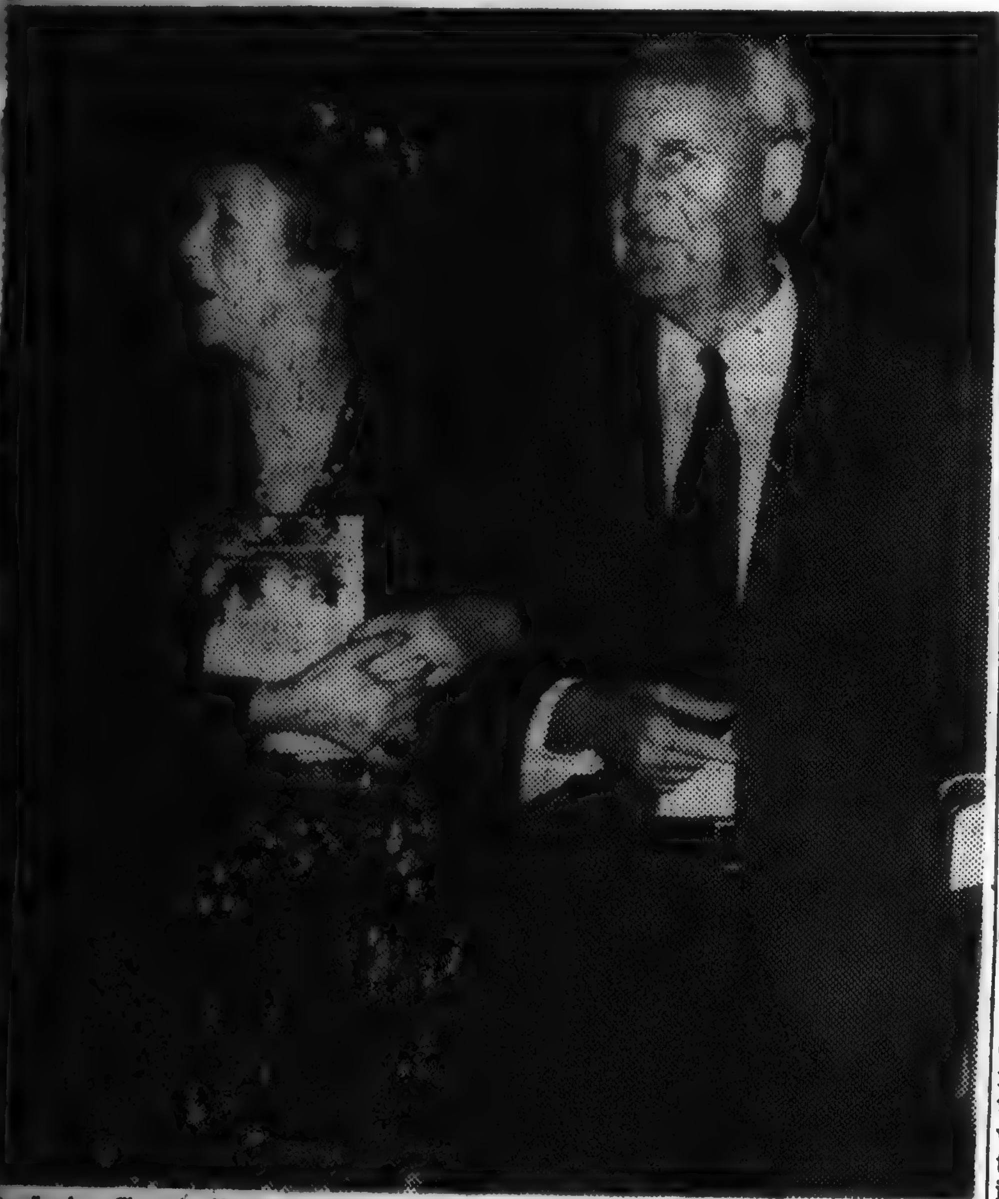
Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, who has extended the gratitude of the Board of Trustees to Mr. Shepard for his generosity, reports that the answer to her appeal had been encouraging but that the sum specified was far from being reached to date.

"Public's Festival"

"We want to keep the Festival the public's Festival and make each person who attends the concerts feel that it belongs to him," said Miss Smith. "It is not our desire to have the Festival subsidized by a few wealthy sponsors, but we want to keep it at all times a purely democratic undertaking which the public may rightly consider its own."

The idea of extending the duration of the Festival to three weeks, first brought up last year as a result of increased attendance, still remains a moot point. Though the question is still under consideration, it has not yet been passed upon by either the trustees of the Festival corporation or of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In fact it was learned today that the matter may not be officially discussed until the annual meeting of the Festival trustees in September.

Miss Ruth Posselt (right), former child violin prodigy, who has just returned from a concert tour of Europe, poses with a friend. Miss Posselt has played with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the New York Philharmonic.



Probate Court Judge Arthur M. Robinson and Mrs. Robinson of South Williamstown, take a stroll during intermission.

John Shepard Jr., of Lenox and Palm Beach, Fla., greets Rt. Rev. Togo Tyson of Palm Beach, Fla.

Festival

Continued From First Page

employing extra-full wood wind sections and the complete battery of percussion instruments, in addition to the usual entire brass and string choirs, and also an organ.

Scope Gigantic

The scope of this music is gigantic, and upon his tremendous canvas appear kaleidoscopic shades and hues of tone color. [illegible] iestic broad introduction is relieved [illegible] by a group of solo instrum[illegible] playing almost as in chamber m[illegible] There is exceptional opportunity for the principals of every section to be heard. Richard Burgin, the concertmaster, acquitted himself of the many solos which fall to his lot with unusual distinction, especially in the "Dance-song," a rythm of entrancing grace, with a theme reminiscent of those of the composer's namesake (but no relation) who lived in Vienna in the preceding generation.

Koussevitzky kept the intricacies of the music completely under control and the orchestra responded with unsurpassed discipline. The weather may have had some influence, for the orchestra never played with greater precision. Indeed the opening symphony seemed almost too precisely measured. The opening introduction of the Beethoven second in D major, was played with perfection of detail, and without exaggeration of dynamics. The sudden changes which Beethoven calls for were executed faithfully. Koussevitzky brings a perfection of detail to his Beethoven which establishes it as that to which all others may be compared. He works on it as a jeweler might work on precious stones, which, in fact they become in his hands.

The artistic sympathy which exists between the Boston orchestra and Dr. Koussevitzky is a continuing source of marvel.

Chose Rigid Tempo

This second symphony is still so-called "early" Beethoven. He had not entirely shaken off traces of the music of Mozart and Haydn which existed when he appeared on the scene, and yet the prophecy of immortality is already clearly discernible. Dr. Koussevitzky chose a rigid tempo for the second movement, larghetto, and the scherzo was quite like a minuet, but if he was attempting to establish a classic point of departure for the ensuing numbers, he was totally successful.

No music has a more interesting background and one so vital to the understanding of the music, as the Moussorgsky "Pictures". Victor Hartman, a painter and one of the artists of the famous Russian 60s, was an intimate friend of Moussorgsky. Hartman died in 1873 at the age of 39. His friends arranged an exposition of his work and this music, which Moussorgsky wrote for piano originally, depicts the impressions of a man entering the gallery and going from one picture to another. It is almost imperative that a listener have memorized or have visual recourse to the list of 10 sub-titles which indicate the name of the painting which is being depicted are all from Great Barrington, working for the benefit of the Thursday Morning Club of that town. They are headed by Miss Dorothy Giddings, who is a vendor herself during the six concerts.

---

Though the girls make no money on what they sell except for the small tips they receive, they all enjoy donning their evening dresses and hearing the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The highest amount of tips received by any one girl at any concert this year is 70 cents, it was learned in a canvass last night at the Shed. That was last Saturday night, and all the girls agree that Saturday night audiences are the most generous. The least selling is to the fact for them, despite the glitter and show of wealth of part of the audiences.

Chewing Gum Returns

Much more plebeian is the demand for chewing gum, which the Thursday Morning Club was going to give up this year. Requests for it last Thursday and Saturday evenings convinced the group that they had to sell it, however, and last Sunday it was among the wares in the tray again.

"I guess they like to chew it in time with the music," remarked one vendor. "We tried to give it up this year, but we didn't get away with it."

---

in the rear section to replace some of the benches built when the Festival was established in 1934. It is the hope of the Festival trustees that the gift, the first in equipment made to the music shed at Tanglewood will be but a forerunner of others.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, who has extended the gratitude of the Board of Trus-tion of the Festival to three weeks, first brought up last year as a result of increased attendance, still remains a moot point. Though the question is still under consideration, it has not yet been passed upon by either the trustees of the Festival corporation or of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In fact it was learned today that the matter may not be officially discussed until the annual meeting of the Festival trustees in September.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 11 1939

Strauss Tone-poem Tops Fourth Festival Concert

Second Half of Tanglewood Series Greeted by Large and Enthusiastic Audience

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

Tanglewood was the scene of a series of ovations again last night, experiences which by now are no longer unusual, but which never lose their novelty, and which always reveal the pitch of excitement to which the huge Berkshire Symphonic Festival audiences are roused by the performances taking place at this sixth annual event. Last night was the fourth program and the first of the final trio for this year.

Strauss Tops Program

The immediate cause of the vociferous tributes was the rendition by the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under their renowned leader, Serge Koussevitzky, of the Richard Strauss tone-poem "Also sprach Zarathustra" and the "Pictures at an Exhibition" of Moussorgsky-Ravel.

The audience, taking advantage of the crystal-clear evening, had arrived on the Festival grounds early. It was a typical Berkshire twilight and descending sun in all its glory; the colorful costumes and the vivid greens of the enclosing trees provided a background for an evening where glamour was in the air. The flare of flash-bulbs marked the spots where personages of prominence and interest were scattered among the crowds; the eager curiosity on the faces of the leisurely-milling promenaders revealed the expectant mood of the vast assembly.

The Strauss tone-poem was the high point of the evening. The audience was transported to ecstatic enthusiasm by the superb virtuosity of the performance. In "Of Joys and Passions" the orchestra mounted to unprecedented heights of thrilling abandon. The galvanic stimulation of Strauss' wonderful score was conveyed with an elemental surge by the orchestra. What a mighty invention is the modern ensemble as exemplified by the Boston men and their leader during this piece last night. Incidentally this was the first Strauss to be heard on a Festival program.

The title of this composition was taken from Friedrich Nietzsche, but Strauss admonishes, "freely." The composer once stated that he tried "to convey by means of music an idea of the development of the human race from its origin, through the various phases, religious as well as scientific, up to Nietzsche's idea of the superman."

Strauss is the greatest living German composer. There are many who grant him that honor over a much wider expanse of territory. His life divides itself into clear-cut sections so far as his creative work is concerned. In his youth he produced some chamber music, the decade before the turn of the century saw the birth of most of his orchestral works, and after that came his operas. He uses an immense orchestra in "Zarathustra,"

Festival
Continued on Page 14

129

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
AUG 12 1939

Program for Final Concerts At Tanglewood

The Boston Symphony Orchestra with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting will play the following programs for the weekend concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, between Lenox and Stockbridge.

Tonight at 8.30

Haydn
  Symphony in B-flat, No. 102
    I. Largo: Allegro vivace
    II. Adagio:
    III. Menuetto: Allegro: Trio
    IV. Finale: Presto
Stravinsky
  "Le Sacre du Printemps" ("The Rite of Spring") Pictures of Pagan Russia
    I. The Adoration of the Earth
      Introduction — Harbingers of Spring—Dance of the Adolescents — Abduction — Spring Rounds—Games of the Rival Towns—The Procession of the Wise Men—The Adoration of the Earth (The Wise Man)—Dance of the Earth.
    II. The Sacrifice.
      Introduction — Mysterious Circles of the Adolescents —Glorification of the Chosen One—Evocation of the Ancestors — Ritual of the Ancestors — The Sacrificial Dance of the Chosen One.

Intermission of Twenty-Five Minutes

Wagner
  Overture to "Der Fliegende Hollander"
  Prelude to "Lohengrin"
  Bacchanale from "Tannhauser"
  Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg"

Tomorrow at 3.30 P. M.

Schumann
  Symphony No. 4 in D minor, Op. 120
    I. Andante; Allegro
    II. Romanza
    III. Scherzo
    IV. Largo; Finale
  (III. and IV. played without pause)
Debussy
  Prelude a "L'Apres-midi d'un Faune" (Eclogue of Stephane Mallarme)
Ravel
  "La Valse," Choreographic Poem

Intermission of Twenty-Five Minutes

Sibelius
  Symphony No. 2 in D major Op. 43
    I. Allegretto
    II. Tempo andante ma rubato
    III. Vivacissimo; Lento suave
    IV. Finale: Allegro moderato

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS
AUG 12 1939

Armchair Music

Berkshire Festival Gets Gift for Boxes in Shed

Special to Newark News.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass.—Patrons of boxes in the music shed of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival will sit in arm-chairs for this, the closing week of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, festival president, has announced the gift of 516 chairs for the 86 boxes from John Shepard Jr., Summer resident of Lenox and former mayor of Palm Beach, Fla.

Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the orchestra, tried out one of the chairs before Thursday night's concert, and announced his pleasure. The steel chairs released from the boxes because of the gift will be placed in the rear section of the shed.

Fiercely Debated Music of Past on Festival Program by Boston Symphony Tonight

Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring" Raised Controversy

By LANING HUMPHREY

The most fiercely debated piece of music of the past 25 years—or perhaps of the last 125 years—is to be played tonight by Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the music shed at Tanglewood.

It is "The Rite of Spring," by Igor Stravinsky.

To Some—Atrocity

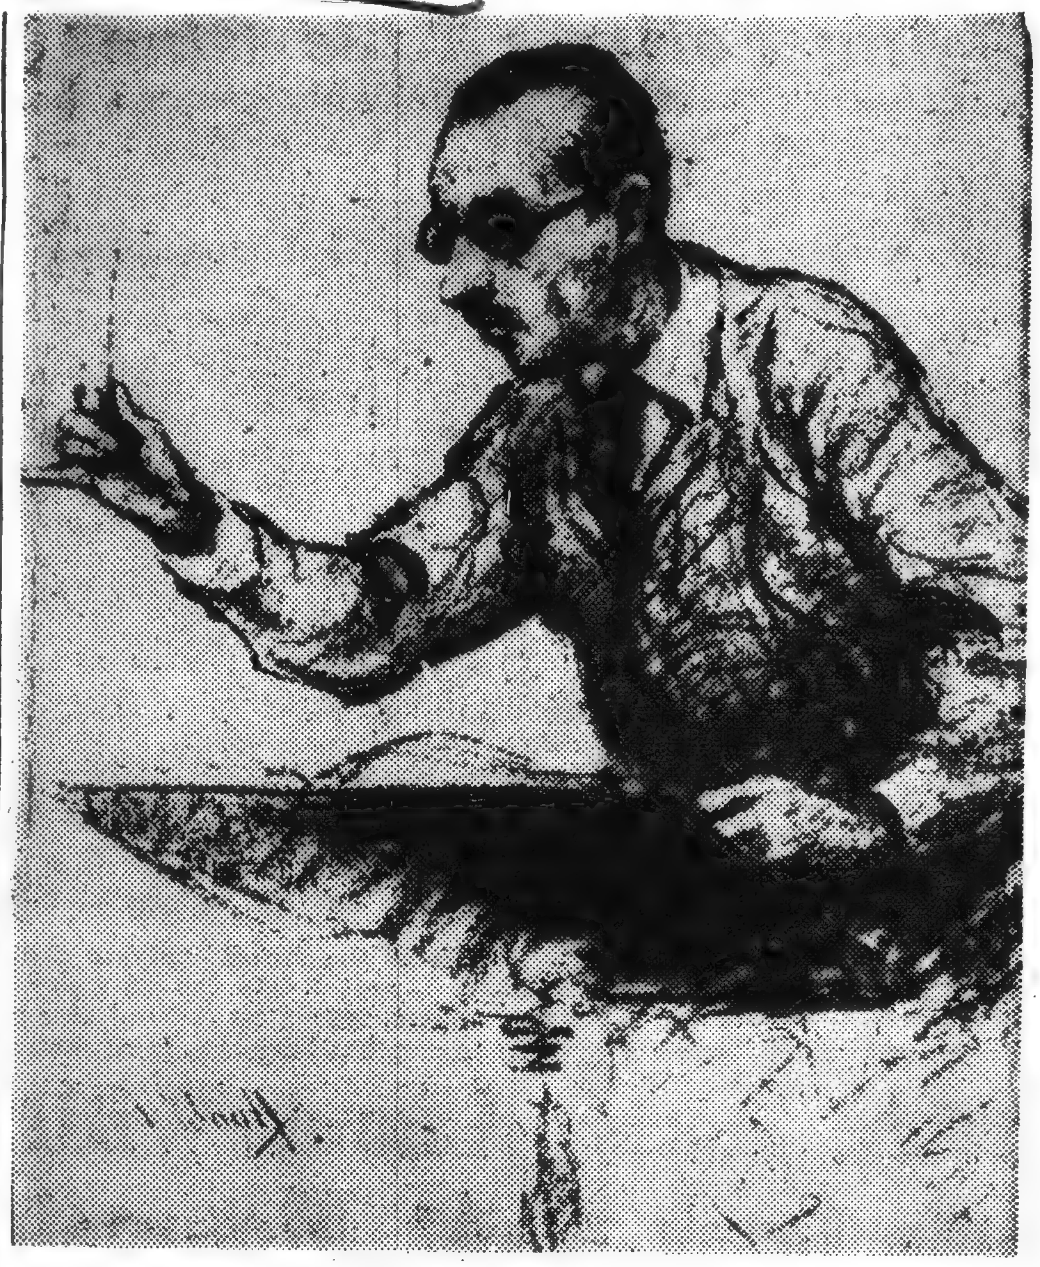
To some ears it has been an atrocity, the negation of music. To others it has been a triumph of discovery in orchestral expression, the first absolutely new musical development in generations, the most significant orchestral score of the pre-World War era, exerting a widespread influence on composition long afterward.

The subject matter is glimpsed in the complete title, "The Rite of Spring: Pictures of Pagan Russia." Among the pictures are: Dance of the Adolescents, Abduction, The Adoration of the Earth, Mysterious Circles of the Adolescents, Glorification of the Chosen One, Evocation of the Ancestors, The Sacrificial Dance of the Chosen one.

The climax is described by the critic, Edwin Evans, in these words: "Now the elected victim, who has thus far remained motionless throughout these activities, begins her sacrifice; for the final act of propitiation has been demanded, and she must dance herself to death. The music expresses the mystical rapture of this invocation of vernal fertility in rhythms of paroxysmal frenzy, reaching a delirious culmination as the victim falls dead."

Introduced in 1913

As may be imagined readily, when the music was enacted by Diaghilev's Ballet Russe in Paris in 1913, the first performance of the score anywhere, it was a sensation. Introduced in concert form a year later by Pierre Monteux, who had conducted the ballet performance, it still filled the Parisians with amazement and rage mingled with admiration.



STRAVINSKY AT REHEARSAL

This drawing by Woolf appeared in the New York Times 15 years ago, when Stravinsky visited this country to be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the invitation of Serge Koussevitzky. The production was made by the aid of one of the most modern adjuncts to newspaper technique, microfilm. The film is being used today to keep newspaper records instead of bound copies.

After the war, a new conductor made his mark in Paris with symphonic programs which introduced new music, and new interpretations of familiar scores. Among the latter was "Rite of Spring." Among the new music were other compositions of Stravinsky, which enhanced his reputation outside Russia. By the time Koussevitzky arrived in America in 1924 to assume the conductorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, "The Rite" had preceded him. But his performances in Boston and New York aroused new discussions.

Koussevitzky Comments

Following a rehearsal of "The Rite" in the Tanglewood shed, for tonight's performance, Koussevitzky was asked for a comment.

"Once, the technique of 'The Rite of Spring' was so new that it was difficult to prepare an orchestra to play it. Now, those difficulties no longer exist. The technique that was so new was so much imitated that we no longer are taken by surprise. We find it all familiar. But this composition does not depend on its technique. If it did, it would be dead, like its imitations. They had nothing besides technique. This composition had what they had not—a great spirit. Because of the spirit within it, 'The Rite of Spring' still lives, and will live. It has joined the classics."

That this controversial composition would become that rarity, a classic before the death of its composer, would have been a great surprise to some of the reviewers of early performances by Koussevitzky and Monteux. Other critics showed some prophetic prescience. What were the critics writing about the piece before it became a classic? The question is easily answered with the aid of a recent development in musical research—the microfilm reference system.

Acting on the idea that "today's news is history," the officials of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have preserved in large, thick scrapbooks thousands of columns of critical and news items about the orchestra, which have been published in newspapers and magazines.

A microfilm print dated April, 1924, reveals the following comment in "The Independent," by Pitts Sanborn:

"Only a few short months ago Igor Stravinsky was still the musical terror that walketh by night. At least in so far as we of America are concerned, he was the anti-composer, the headsman and likewise the grave-digger of music. Under his ultimate sentence, one of the seven arts, and not the oldest, had wound up its affairs and ceased to be a going concern. . . .

"If while the rites of Russian spring were raging through the Boston band, (under Monteux) a few gentle souls resolutely walked out of Carnegie Hall, their indignation was at least silent, whereas the majority of an audience that packed the hall to bursting could not refrain from cheers. And the cheers were the verdict."

The name of the late William J. Henderson, music critic of the New York Sun, appears on a microfilm print to this effect:

"Without doubt Stravinsky's tumultuous and savage delineation of pagan rites in ancient Russia amazed some of the conservative subscribers to the Boston Symphony afternoons. One was heard to remark: 'All that, and they killed only one girl!' For the scenes painted by the composer end with a dance of death by a maiden marked for sacrifice. Up to this day Stravinsky's 'Sacre du Printemps' is the supreme achievement of the modern realistic school. It beats aesthetic opposition to the ground by the sheer power of its brutal shrieking of elemental things."

A Newman Prophecy

London's famous Ernest Newman makes this prophecy on Stravinsky in a quotation printed by "H. T. P." in the Boston Transcript in January, 1925:

"Who can doubt that to posterity —supposing his career to end now —he will simply be the composer of two charming little ballets, 'The Fire-Bird' and 'Petruchka,' plus some couple of dozen great pages in 'The Rite of Spring?'"

In the first place, Stravinsky's career did not end in 1925, as attested by the new works written after that time and introduced with success by Koussevitzky—for example, "Oedipus Rex," and "The Symphony of Psalms." As for Mr. Newman's question about "who can doubt," Mr. Koussevitzky certainly doubts. When he returned from Europe two weeks ago to begin rehearsals in Symphony Hall for the Berkshire Festival, he announced that he had brought back a new and important score by Stravinsky—his first real symphony since a youthful attempt.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR
AUG 12 1939

THE BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL—

Miss Louise Schaefer left this week to attend the final concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, near Stockridge, Mass., which will be brought to a close on Sunday, Aug. 13, following a series of six concerts. This famous festival with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky's baton, always attracts music lovers from all parts of the country. Mrs. Howard B. Luther, who has been at Stockbridge for several weeks this summer, and the Misses Eleanor and Louise Wilby were among other Cincinnatians who enjoyed the festival.

Biddeford Pool—

Following the festival Miss Schaefer will go to Biddeford Pool, where she will join her mother, Mrs. Fred H. Schaefer, who is leaving Monday for this easern haven, accompanied by her daughter, Miss Mary. Messers. Fred H. Jr. and Wilby Schaefer have been at the pool for several weeks, the former having journeyed there from the Boston Tech at the close of his studies in July. They have enjoyed several cruises aboard their yawl, and while at Biddeford were guests of their aunt, Miss Mary Wilby.

Mrs. Schaefer and her family will be established at their cottage for the remainder of the season. It is a matter of disappointment to the family that Mr. Schaefer, owing to the illness of his mother, Mrs. Ella Schaefer, is not planning at present to go on to the Pool.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
AUG 12 1939

Fourth Concert In Berkshires Is Heard by 6,000

Koussevitzky Directs 'Also Sprach Zarathustra' for First Time at Tanglewood

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 10.—After the usual three-day intermission, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival began its second half Thursday when Serge Koussevitzky conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the music shed on the Tanglewood estate before an audience which, as in the three previous concerts of this summer's series, was estimated at more than 6,000. All the 5,700 seats seemed to be occupied and, as before, many chose to listen from the lawn within the wide radius of effective hearing.

Occupants of the boxes found a surprise in the supply of new and comfortable armchairs, 516 in all. These were the gift of John Shepard jr., of Boston, a summer resident of Lenox, who presented the chairs to the Berkshire Festival through its president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith. This donation, the first gift of equipment for the music shed, permitted the steel chairs hitherto placed in the boxes to be used in the rear section of the auditorium.

Dr. Koussevitzky's program, the fourth of the festival, consisted of three major works—Beethoven's Second Symphony, Richard Strauss's "Also Sprach Zarathustra" and Ravel's Transcription of Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition."

The performance observed the high standard which marks the playing of the Boston Symphony under its noted conductor, both in the Berkshires and in its regular concerts in Symphony and Carnegie Halls.

Again there was reason for warm admiration for the clarity of detail, the instant responsiveness to the conductor's interpretive wishes, the general impression of a single, seldom-rivaled musical entity composed of musicians who are masters of their instruments. The interpretation of the Beethoven Symphony merited much praise, even if some might have desired a slightly longer lingering over the larghetto with its pervasive lyric charm.

"Zarathustra" was the first work of Strauss which has appeared in a Berkshire Festival program during the festival's association with the Boston Symphony, but Dr. Koussevitzky's intent and sympathetic interpretation of this music is well known to metropolitan music lovers and was convincingly set forth in this concert. Little can be said here about "Zarathustra" and its strong points and occasional drawbacks. Its assets, including the resplendent opening and the vertiginous climax before the quiet and questioning closing notes, were emphasized in a memorable performance, and there was ardent applause for the conductor and the orchestra.

The last two concerts of this festival, which is the sixth to be held in the region, will take place Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

Bauer Is Soloist At Stadium

Harold Bauer was the pianist Thursday night in the "Emperor" concerto at the Lewisohn Stadium, the chief attraction of Fritz Reiner's fifth concert of the Beethoven series with the Philharmonic. Approximately 10,000 persons heard a performance notable in some respects for its clarity and unhurried grace, for a melodic charm and poetry and a perfect balance between piano and orchestra.

But there were also moments for temperate praise, when Mr. Bauer seemed almost uncertain of his way, when his technique thickened and he seemed unable to summon the full eloquence of Beethoven's musical speech. The opening movement, with its strangely moving lento and capricious dialogues of piano and orchestra, was by far the most successful as far as Mr. Bauer was concerned.

Mr. Bauer played one encore. He explained to the audience that as he had brought "no short piece by Beethoven with me," he would play a Novelette by Schumann, a substitution which the audience welcomed cordially. Just before the intermission ended, Mrs. Charles S. Guggenheimer, chairman of the Stadium Concerts Committee, told the audience that the management had decided to continue the season another week, completing the ten weeks originally announced.

J. S.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

AUG 12 1939

JOHN SHEPARD, JR., IN GIFT OF CHAIRS TO BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

When patrons of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival arrived at the Tanglewood shed for the fourth concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, they were surprised to find every box furnished with new, substantial armchairs, the gift of John Shepard, Jr., summer resident of Lenox, former Boston merchant prince and former mayor of Palm Beach, Fla.

The magnitude of the gift is appreciated when it is realized that there are 86 boxes with six chairs in a box, a total of 516 chairs. The gift was made through the Festival president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, who expressed the deep appreciation of the trustees to Mr. Shepard. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, tried the chairs before the concert and was immensely pleased.

Mr. Shepard's gift follows a substantial one made by him last year to the building fund. It is the first gift of equipment for the new music shed, and Festival trustees hope that Mr. Shepard's example will be followed by others so that another year will see the much needed shutters and chairs to replace the benches in the rear section. The steel chairs in the boxes, released because of Mr. Shepard's gift, will be placed in the rear section of the shed.

Contributions in any amount toward the building fund will be welcome and may be sent to the president, Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

AUG 12 1939

Final Concert Series Opens at Tanglewood

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

The final series of concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky and sponsored by the Berkshire Symphonic festival was inaugurated auspiciously Thursday night at Tanglewood and while the audience was not quite so large as that of last Sunday afternoon, the enthusiasm was just as genuinely enthusiastic.

Thursday night's program was built up chronogically; Beethoven's Second symphony, the Richard Strauss tone-poem "Also Sprach Zarathustra" and Pictures at an Exhibition," an orchestration by Ravel of the piano numbers of Moussorgsky. The two latter works are an attempt to combine two cultural arts, that of Strauss, philosophy and music, and in the case of Moussorgsky, painting and music.

The Second symphony of Beethoven, while showing the influence of Mozart and Haydn, is all the more remarkable since it was written in the period when Beethoven was most wretched physically and mentally, his deafness just beginning to manifest itself. There is nothing to indicate any unhappiness in the music .and the second movement is familiar to many as incorporated in the hymn "Berlin." Dr. Koussevitzky gave an unconventionally brilliant performance of a conventional piece of music.

"Also Sprach Zarathustra," according to the composer, is not his attempt to write Philosophical music but to convey by means of music an idea of tthe development of the human race as expressed by Strauss' inspiration of his music, the theories of Frederick Nietzche. When it is considered solely as great music and not the extension of a philosophical theory, the true greatness of the work is apparent. The conductor and his orchestra seemed to have a similar idea in mind and the resulting exposition was one of tremendous power and beauty.

"Pictures at an Exhibition" received the greatest respect and admiration of the evening. It is program music in its strictest sense. Perhaps its appeal to the masses is its ever changing musical patterns and ideas, easier to assimilate than the more complicated development of themes as expressed in the symphonic form. Certain it is that the fascinating musical tribute of Moussorgsky to his friend, the painter-architect, Victor Hartman is one of the finest examples of pictorial art in music, and Ravel has realized every possibility in his mixing of the primary colors in music on the palet of his imaginative mind, and this coupled with the understanding reading by Dr. Koussevitzky and the superb realization by the orchestra, fully justified the almost unbridled enthusiasm at the end. Added to the colorful evening of music was the first appearance of the gift-chairs for the boxes, presented to the association by the Mayor of Palm Beach, John Shepherd, Jr. The penultimate concert of the series will take place tonight.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 12 1939

BERKSHIRE FETE TO OFFER WAGNER

Koussevitzky Also Will Give Compositions of Stravinsky and Haydn Tonight

FOURTH BILL IS REVIEWED

Beethoven Symphony, Strauss Tone Poem and Mussorgsky Work Are Considered

By NOEL STRAUS

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 11.—After an interim for rest today the Berkshire Symphonic Festival here at Tanglewood will resume tomorrow night with the fifth concert of the series being presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky. The program will be composed of Haydn's symphony in B flat major, No. 102; Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps" and a Wagner group comprising the overture to "The Flying Dutchman," the prelude to "Lohengrin," the bacchanale from "Tannhaeuser" and the prelude to "Die Meistersinger."

The mild, balmy weather prevailing here yesterday put the audience at last night's concert in a truly festal mood. Dr. Koussevitzky and his men also fell under the spell of the serene starlit evening, giving a round of performances that in its entirety made this fourth event in the series uncommonly impressive.

Dr. Koussevitzky's approach to the Second symphony of Beethoven, which opened the program, was completely different from that adopted for the same master's Seventh symphony earlier in the festival. Instead of the almost relentlessly firm outlines favored in the latter opus, a tenderer and more pliable treatment of the melodic patterning reigned throughout the earlier composition.

Two Works Contrasted

The sharp contrast in the attitude toward the two works was even officially evident. In the Seventh symphony Dr. Koussevitzky's gestures with the baton were purposely short and angular. In the Second symphony, on the contrary, the motions of the stick were always expansive and free, describing curves that had a world of tenderness and sympathy behind them.

Except in the boldest contrasting passages, a suavely caressing tone was evoked from the instruments that turned the phrases into full-throated song. Every measure throbbed with life and was filled with a meaning in a reading of the score which ranked as one of the festival's major orchestral achievements thus far.

The freshness and spontaneity of the presentation, combined with the technical brilliance that informed it, succeeded in making the work seem much less remote from the present time than usual. Especially original and striking in the opening allegro was the handling of the transitional section leading to the second theme, which sounded exceptionally vital and thrilling.

The finale went at an exceedingly rapid pace, which was justified by the effect. Never has the writer heard it sound quite so scintillating or so ecstatically joyous.

Play "Thus Spake Zarathustra"

To follow up this splendid interpretation by a reading of Strauss's "Thus Spake Zarathustra" on the same high plane of excellence was an accomplishment well worth stressing here. The gigantic tone poem received a stupendous unfoldment, seldom matched in grandeur and emotional scope.

In this offering an electric organ, known as an orgatron, was employed, with E. Power Biggs, Boston organist, at the console. The sound produced by this instrument was not quite penetrating enough to do full justice to the sustained tones of the low C pedal in the great introductory depiction of the "Sunrise," but elsewhere served its purpose satisfactorily.

Dr. Koussevitzky brought the sunrise episode to a towering climax, the first of several immense peaks of sound and feeling that reached an overwhelming intensity and magnitude in the final outburst just before the gradual descent to the B major closing division. As effective in their way were the mysterious, brooding passages such as those preceding the fugato and preparing for the start of the music leading to the "Dance Song."

After the intermission Mussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition" in the Ravel version brought on almost as pronounced an ovation as was accorded the Strauss masterpiece.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MONTREAL, CAN.
GAZETTE

AUG 12 1939

Masterpieces of Symphony Given At Boston Orchestra Concerts

Serge Koussevitzky Offers Model Performances of Sibelius Fifth and Tschaikowsky Fourth

?

should this be "Miss."?

By THOMAS ARCHER.
(Gazette Drama and Music Critic.)

Lennoxville, Mass., August 11.—Programs at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival which comprises six concerts given on the Tanglewood Estate at Stockbridge, Mass., by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, are on an even higher level than previous years so far as the choice of music is concerned. People who attend these summer concerts in the wealthy resort in Eastern Massachusetts, are expected to concentrate without surcease upon exclusive masterpieces of symphony

The mental exercise for the earnest lover of music is a gymnastic he willingly courts. Naturally, he is only too glad of the opportunity to hear works like the Second and Fifth Symphonies of Sibelius, Ravel's orchestral transscription of Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition," Richard Strauss's "Thus Spake Zarathustra" and Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," all of which there is little chance of hearing in Montreal.

Then there is Dr. Koussevitzky's interpretation of Russian and near-Russian music in which, to say he is a specialist, would be putting it mildly. The distinguished conductor of the Boston Symphony is still a Kalmuck notwithstanding his long residence in the United States and his equally long incumbency as leader of the great orchestra whose history is so closely woven into the mesh of New England culture.

In respect of this the performance of Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony must be described. It took place at the concert last Sunday afternoon. Dr. Koussevitzky gave it to us neat, so to speak. He threw aside all restraint except to observe meticulously Tschaikowsky's musical form. He bared the intensely nervous progression of Tschaikowsky's music, its temperamental melody, its almost reckless emphasis. It was three quarters of an hour of music that no man who loves the art could easily forget.

Another highlight was the performance of the Sibelius Fifth Symphony on Saturday evening. Here the thought of Sibelius is exactly opposite from that of Tschaikowsky. The music is stark and self contained, direct, positive, grave but cheerful in the deeper sense of the latter word. It is music hewn, as it were, out of rock. It exhibited the superb tonal qualities of the Boston Symphony because Sibelius has a way of differentiating the various choirs of instruments. Dr. Koussevitzky drove the sound exactly along the straight, uncompromising line that Sibelius set for himself. The great climax furnished by the leaping theme in the last movement was perorated with uncommon magnificence.

There were blind spots in the concerts of Saturday and Sunday, as there were bound to be. Beethoven's Seventh Symphony on Saturday was so labored that it hardly reflected the genial, luminous conception which we have always read into it. The music moved too slowly, deliberately and self-consciously to be convincing.

Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," listed as an orchestral fairy tale, was described on this page last Saturday. Here, at the Berkshire Festival, it afforded summer residents, to whom music is rather less than an avocation, a relief from prolonged concentration required for Beethoven, Sibelius and Tschaikowsky

The Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood takes the visitor, tourist or musical pilgrim about 45 miles southeast of Albany. The concerts take place in what is called a music shed, open at the sides to the trees and well-kept lawns of New England. Inside this so-called shed, six thousand people, an average audience, hear symphony under acoustical conditions as good as those to be found in any winter concert hall. For off moments there is the charm of the New England landscape, the exclusively good living of the colony and leisure and quiet to rest or to study the scores of the music that is to be heard.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

AUG 12 1939

Acme Photo

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is now waving his baton under the trees of the Berkshire Festival at "Tanglewood," outside Stockbridge, Mass.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 12 1939

Violet Brooks To Attend Academy At Tanglewood

One of the early applicants for the academy to be opened next July by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood is Miss Violet Brooks of Brookline. Miss Brooks's mother, Mrs. Gorham Brooks and the latter's aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, gave Tanglewood to the orchestra as a permanent home for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. As a child, Miss Brooks romped about the Tanglewood fields, woods and along the shore of Lake Mahkeenac.

130

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

AUG 12 1939

JOHN SHEPARD, JR., IN GIFT OF CHAIRS TO BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

When patrons of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival arrived at the Tanglewood shed for the fourth concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, they were surprised to find every box furnished with new, substantial armchairs, the gift of John Shepard, Jr., summer resident of Lenox, former Boston merchant prince and former mayor of Palm Beach, Fla.

The magnitude of the gift is appreciated when it is realized that there are 86 boxes with six chairs in a box, a total of 516 chairs. The gift was made through the Festival president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, who expressed the deep appreciation of the trustees to Mr. Shepard. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, tried the chairs before the concert and was immensely pleased.

Mr. Shepard's gift follows a substantial one made by him last year to the building fund. It is the first gift of equipment for the new music shed, and Festival trustees hope that Mr. Shepard's example will be followed by others so that another year will see the much needed shutters and chairs to replace the benches in the rear section. The steel chairs in the boxes, released because of Mr. Shepard's gift, will be placed in the rear section of the shed.

Contributions in any amount toward the building fund will be welcome and may be sent to the president, Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

AUG 12 1939

Final Concert Series Opens at Tanglewood

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

The final series of concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky and sponsored by the Berkshire Symphonic festival was inaugurated auspiciously Thursday night at Tanglewood and while the audience was not quite so large as that of last Sunday afternoon, the enthusiasm was just as genuinely enthusiastic.

Thursday night's program was built up chronogically; Beethoven's Second symphony, the Richard Strauss tone-poem "Also Sprach Zarathustra" and Pictures at an Exhibition," an orchestration by Ravel of the piano numbers of Moussorgsky. The two latter works are an attempt to combine two cultural arts, that of Strauss, philosophy and music, and in the case of Moussorgsky, painting and music.

The Second symphony of Beethoven, while showing the influence of Mozart and Haydn, is all the more remarkable since it was written in the period when Beethoven was most wretched physically and mentally, his deafness just beginning to manifest itself. There is nothing to indicate any unhappiness in the music and the second movement is familiar to many as incorporated in the hymn "Berlin." Dr. Koussevitzky gave an unconventionally brilliant performance of a conventional piece of music.

"Also Sprach Zarathustra," according to the composer, is not his attempt to write Philosophical music but to convey by means of music an idea of tthe development of the human race as expressed by Strauss' inspiration of his music, the theories of Frederick Nietzche. When it is considered solely as great music and not the extension of a philosophical theory, the true greatness of the work is apparent. The conductor and his orchestra seemed to have a similar idea in mind and the resulting exposition was one of tremendous power and beauty.

"Pictures at an Exhibition" received the greatest respect and admiration of the evening. It is program music in its strictest sense. Perhaps its appeal to the masses is its ever changing musical patterns and ideas, easier to assimilate than the more complicated development of themes as expressed in the symphonic form. Certain it is that the fascinating musical tribute of Moussorgsky to his friend, the painter-architect, Victor Hartman is one of the finest examples of pictorial art in music, and Ravel has realized every possibility in his mixing of the primary colors in music on the palet of his imaginative mind, and this coupled with the understanding reading by Dr. Koussevitzky and the superb realization by the orchestra, fully justified the almost unbridled enthusiasm at the end. Added to the colorful evening of music was the first appearance of the gift-chairs for the boxes, presented to the association by the Mayor of Palm Beach, John Shepherd, Jr. The penultimate concert of the series will take place tonight.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 12 1939

BERKSHIRE FETE TO OFFER WAGNER

Koussevitzky Also Will Give Compositions of Stravinsky and Haydn Tonight

FOURTH BILL IS REVIEWED

Beethoven Symphony, Strauss Tone Poem and Mussorgsky Work Are Considered

By NOEL STRAUS

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 11.—After an interim for rest today the Berkshire Symphonic Festival here at Tanglewood will resume tomorrow night with the fifth concert of the series being presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky. The program will be composed of Haydn's symphony in B flat major, No. 102; Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps" and a Wagner group comprising the overture to "The Flying Dutchman," the prelude to "Lohengrin," the bacchanale from "Tannhaeuser" and the prelude to "Die Meistersinger."

The mild, balmy weather prevailing here yesterday put the audience at last night's concert in a truly festal mood. Dr. Koussevitzky and his men also fell under the spell of the serene starlit evening, giving a round of performances that in its entirety made this fourth event in the series uncommonly impressive.

Dr. Koussevitzky's approach to the Second symphony of Beethoven, which opened the program, was completely different from that adopted for the same master's Seventh symphony earlier in the festival. Instead of the almost relentlessly firm outlines favored in the latter opus, a tenderer and more pliable treatment of the melodic patterning reigned throughout the earlier composition.

Two Works Contrasted

The sharp contrast in the attitude toward the two works was even officially evident. In the Seventh symphony Dr. Koussevitzky's gestures with the baton were purposely short and angular. In the Second symphony, on the contrary, the motions of the stick were always expansive and free, describing curves that had a world of tenderness and sympathy behind them.

Except in the boldest contrasting passages, a suavely caressing tone was evoked from the instruments that turned the phrases into full-throated song. Every measure throbbed with life and was filled with a meaning in a reading of the score which ranked as one of the festival's major orchestral achievements thus far.

The freshness and spontaneity of the presentation, combined with the technical brilliance that informed it, succeeded in making the work seem much less remote from the present time than usual. Especially original and striking in the opening allegro was the handling of the transitional section leading to the second theme, which sounded exceptionally vital and thrilling.

The finale went at an exceedingly rapid pace, which was justified by the effect. Never has the writer heard it sound quite so scintillating or so ecstatically joyous.

Play "Thus Spake Zarathustra"

To follow up this splendid interpretation by a reading of Strauss's "Thus Spake Zarathustra" on the same high plane of excellence was an accomplishment well worth stressing here. The gigantic tone poem received a stupendous unfoldment, seldom matched in grandeur and emotional scope.

In this offering an electric organ, known as an orgatron, was employed, with E. Power Biggs, Boston organist, at the console. The sound produced by this instrument was not quite penetrating enough to do full justice to the sustained tones of the low C pedal in the great introductory depiction of the "Sunrise," but elsewhere served its purpose satisfactorily.

Dr. Koussevitzky brought the sunrise episode to a towering climax, the first of several immense peaks of sound and feeling that reached an overwhelming intensity and magnitude in the final outburst just before the gradual descent to the B major closing division. As effective in their way were the mysterious, brooding passages [illegible] those preceding the fugue [illegible] preparing for the start of the [illegible] leading to the "Dance Song."

After the intermission Mussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition" in the Ravel version brought on almost as pronounced an ovation as was accorded the Strauss masterpiece.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MONTREAL, CAN.
GAZETTE

AUG 12 1939

Masterpieces of Symphony Given At Boston Orchestra Concerts

Serge Koussevitzky Offers Model Performances of Sibelius Fifth and Tschaikowsky Fourth

? should this be "Miss."?

By THOMAS ARCHER.
(Gazette Drama and Music Critic.)

Lennoxville, Mass., August 11.—Programs at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival which comprises six concerts given on the Tanglewood Estate at Stockbridge, Mass., by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, are on an even higher level than previous years so far as the choice of music is concerned. People who attend these summer concerts in the wealthy resort in Eastern Massachusetts, are expected to concentrate without surcease upon exclusive masterpieces of symphony.

The mental exercise for the earnest lover of music is a gymnastic he willingly courts. Naturally, he is only too glad of the opportunity to hear works like the Second and Fifth Symphonies of Sibelius, Ravel's orchestral transcription of Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition," Richard Strauss's "Thus Spake Zarathustra" and Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," all of which there is little chance of hearing in Montreal.

Then there is Dr. Koussevitzky's interpretation of Russian and near-Russian music in which, to say he is a specialist, would be putting it mildly. The distinguished conductor of the Boston Symphony is still a Kalmuck notwithstanding his long residence in the United States and his equally long incumbency as leader of the great orchestra whose history is so closely woven into the mesh of New England culture.

In respect of this the performance of Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony must be described. It took place at the concert last Sunday afternoon. Dr. Koussevitzky gave it to us neat, so to speak. He threw aside all restraint except to observe meticulously Tschaikowsky's musical form. He bared the intensely nervous progression of Tschaikowaky's music, its temperamental melody, its almost reckless emphasis. It was three quarters of an hour of music that no man who loves the art could easily forget.

Another highlight was the performance of the Sibelius Fifth Symphony on Saturday evening. Here the thought of Sibelius is exactly opposite from that of Tschaikowsky. The music is stark and self contained, direct, positive, grave but cheerful in the deeper sense of the latter word. It is music hewn, as it were, out of rock. It exhibited the superb tonal qualities of the Boston Symphony because Sibelius has a way of differentiating the various choirs of instruments. Dr. Koussevitzky drove the sound exactly along the straight, uncompromising line that Sibelius set for himself. The great climax furnished by the leaping theme in the last movement was perorated with uncommon magnificence.

There were blind spots in the concerts of Saturday and Sunday, as there were bound to be. Beethoven's Seventh Symphony on Saturday was so labored that it hardly reflected the genial, luminous conception which we have always read into it. The music moved too slowly, deliberately and self-consciously to be convincing.

Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," listed as an orchestral fairy tale, was described on this page last Saturday. Here, at the Berkshire Festival, it afforded summer residents, to whom music is rather less than an avocation, a relief from prolonged concentration required for Beethoven, Sibelius and Tschaikowsky.

The Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood takes the visitor, tourist or musical pilgrim about 46 miles southeast of Albany. The concerts take place in what is called a music shed, open at the sides to the trees and well-kept lawns of New England. Inside this so-called shed, six thousand people, an average audience, hear symphony under acoustical conditions as good as those to be found in any winter concert hall. For off moments there is the charm of the New England landscape, the exclusively good living of the colony and leisure and quiet to rest or to study the scores of the music that is to be heard.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

AUG 12 1939

Acme Photo

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is now waving his baton under the trees of the Berkshire Festival at "Tanglewood," outside Stockbridge, Mass.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 12 1939

Violet Brooks To Attend Academy At Tanglewood

One of the early applicants for the academy to be opened next July by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood is Miss Violet Brooks of Brookline. Miss Brooks's mother, Mrs. Gorham Brooks and the latter's aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, gave Tanglewood to the orchestra as a permanent home for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. As a child, Miss Brooks romped about the Tanglewood fields, woods and along the shore of Lake Mahkeenac.

131

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
Sunday
Union & Republican

AUG 13 1939

Record Crowd of 6800 Gladdens Sponsors of Berkshire 'Salzburg'

Tanglewood, Aug. 12 — Another Berkshire Music festival attendance record was made tonight when 6800 persons assembled for the fifth concert of the season. Every seat in the great music shed was disposed of and the gate sale tonight was 800, exceeding that of any previous festival concert. Hundreds occupied settees and camp chairs or sat upon the lawn, for the weather was superb in every way, clear, warm with a slight breeze from the south.

Eight state policemen under Sergt Warner F. Eaton of Northampton handled the great crowd with dispatch on the road and the parking areas were cared for by Sheriff D. Bruce McIntyre. With pleasant weather forecast, it was predicted by the festival management tonight that 7000 will be here tomorrow as only a few scattering seats remain unsold.

Accommodations Overtaxed

Hotels and tavern keepers report an even greater demand for accommodations than a week ago during the first series. Unable to get rooms in this immediate vicinity a number of parties from the Midwest who had expected to remain here tonight motored on to Springfield after the concert.

The public response to the Berkshire Music festival idea in this sixth season has surpassed all expectations and the officers are jubilant over the prospects of making Tanglewood an important musical center for America.

Audience Cheers Repeatedly

Tonight's assemblage again was highly demonstrative, and Dr Koussevitzky responded repeatedly to salvos of applause and cheers. Many in the fashionable audience who were present for the first time literally "went wild" with enthusiasm. J. Olcutt Sandrews called at press headquarters to say that he had hitchhiked here from Fort Worth, Tex., to attend the festival. He is a graduate of the University of Texas and was a music critic while in college.

It was reported tonight that Joseph Franz of Stockbridge, the engineer and architect who supervised the construction of Tanglewood music shed, has been asked by a group of leading musicians and businessmen of Cincinnati, O., to design a shed for that city.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DETROIT, MICH.
NEWS

AUG 13 1939

'Just as a Ma

EMIL SAUER, pianist, and Felix Weingartner, conductor, are teamed in one of Columbia's August albums to prove that a couple of oldsters still have plenty of the stuff that makes good musicians. Playing Liszt's celebrated Concerto No. 1 in E Flat Major, Mr. Sauer cleaves to a flowing melodic line and a breathtaking technic that many a younger artist might well be proud of. Mr. Weingartner and the Paris Conservatory Orchestra provide a perfect background. There are three 12-inch records in the album.

Prokofieff's charming fairy tale, "Peter and the Wolf," is featured prominently on Victor's August list. To the telling of the tale the combined talents of Serge Koussevitsky, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Richard Hale, as the narrator, are devoted. The Boston Symphony has had great success with the composition, and the album is likely to share the honors. It's great for the kinder. The album contains three 12-inch records.

Jascha Heifetz, violinist, and Emmanuel Bay, pianst, turn in an exceedingly fine performance of Beethoven virile Sonata in G Major for Victor. This album also contains three 12-inch records.

* * *

On the Popular Sides

A FEW new platters made their appearance last week on the best-seller lists. And without more ado, they are as follows:

Bluebird: "Moonlight Serenade," "Stairway to the Stars" and "Oh, You Crazy Moon," all by Glenn Miller.

Brunswick: "In an Eighteenth Century Drawing Room," Raymond Scott; "Moon Love," Horace Heidt, and "Comes Love," Eddie Duchin.

Decca: "El Rancho Grande," Bing Crosby; "Moon Love," Paul Whiteman, and "Its Funny to Everyone but Me," the Ink Spots.

Victor: "Too You," Tommy Dorsey; "In a Persian Market," Larry Clinton, an "Go Fly a Kite," also by Dorsey.

Vocalion: "My Last Goodby," Dick

THIS CLIPPING FROM DAVENPORT, IA.
DEMOCRAT-LEADER

AUG 13 1939

NORTHWESTERN

. . . University has announced its plans for the entire 39-40 season, its fifth in the series of history and enjoyment of music. The season opens with a concert by the Philadelphia Symphony on Oct. 31. The Catherine Littlefield Ballet performs on Nov. 19; Heifetz plays on Dec. 3; Rachmaninoff on Jan. 14; Marion Anderson in her fifth consecutive appearance on the course Jan. 28; Platoff Cossack choir Feb. 4 and Helen Jepson soprano closes the series on Feb. 18. A special number on the series will be the Boston Symphony orchestra directed by Serge Koussevitsky on Dec. 13.

THIS CLIPPING FROM PEORIA, ILL.
Morning Journal Transcript

AUG 13 1939

Music As You Desire It

H. G. DEWEES

NOTE: The purpose of this and subsequent articles shall be to give the reader up to the minute news on new recordings of interest to the lover of good music, and as occasion demands, to review outstanding recordings not so recently released. H. G. DEWEES.

PETER AND THE WOLF (Orchestral Fairy Tale) (Prokofieff, Op. 67) Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky directing. Victor album number M-566.

This "Orchestral Fairy Tale" is as unique, different, and as absorbingly interesting for all ages of people and degrees of musical training, as anything that has ever come to the writer's attention. As the sub-title suggests, it is a fairy tale, but the unique feature of it is that it is unfolded to us by both a full symphony orchestra and a narrator. The narrator is Richard Hale. To quote from the opening portion of the first record, we hear,

"My dear children—Each character of this tale is represented by a corresponding instrument in the orchestra: the bird by the flute, the duck by an oboe, the cat by a clarinet staccato in a low register, the grandfather by a bassoon, the wolf by three horns, Peter by the string quartet."

As each is named, the theme of the character is played by its particular instrument, or group of instruments. After this introduction, narrator and orchestra launch out on a most absorbing story involving the characters thus introduced. To sight a few unusually interesting scenes, there is the quarrel between the duck and the bird over the respective merits of swimming without flying, or flying without swimming. Then there is the stealth of the cat in its unsuccessful attempt to catch the bird while it is engaged in the argument with the duck. Later the stupid but loveable duck is swallowed alive by the wolf, when in a moment of tense excitement he leaves the safety of the pond. Space will not permit more detail. Suffice it to say that aside from the sheer pleasure that this symphony will give to all ages of listeners, it has decided possibilities from the music appreciation standpoint.

"I Love Life," (Irwin M. Cassel-Manna-Zucca); "My Homeland," (Oley Speaks-Dana Burnett) John Charles Thomas, Baritone with piano. Carroll Hollister, accompanist. Victor record number 1986.

The song titles and the artist should be enough to mention regarding this record. Both numbers are popular concert numbers, and Mr. Thomas sings and records both numbers just the way we like most to hear them.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 13 1939

NEW SINGER INTERVIEWED

LENOX, Mass.

AS a result of her extraordinary acclaim as soloist at the picnic given by Dr. Koussevitzky for his musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last Wednesday in the music shed at Tanglewood, Dorothy Maynor, the youthful Negro soprano, might have been pardoned a certain amount of self-congratulation. Nothing was further removed from her reaction to a sudden success that could easily have turned the head of a less sensitive and serious person.

"I suppose your ambition is to make an even greater success with your New York recital this Fall," said her questioner. The surmise was a total mistake.

"My work has nothing to do with that kind of success," was Miss Maynor's rejoinder. "I hope to represent this art of song as well as I can. That's about all I can say. To accomplish that, to be a worthy representative of the best music"—tears filled her eyes as she finished the sentence—"one feels so very small when one thinks of it."

A few words with Miss Maynor make it clear that music is her entire life. She was born in Norfolk twenty-eight years ago and from the start there was always music in her home.

"My father, John J. Maynor, was a minister," she said, "was very fond of music, though he wasn't a trained musician. My sister played the piano. It was a rare day when we weren't singing in the house to her accompaniment. But it was just the sort of thing you might find in almost any home anywhere.

"I always sang in my father's church. But it was while in a public grammar school that I was first encouraged in my singing. That was by the school's woman principal. I was 14 when I went to Hampton Institute, near Norfolk. Two years later I sang with the Hampton Choir in Carnegie Hall in New York as a member of the soprano section. While I was in the high school of the institute I was one of the choir on a European tour, again in the soprano section."

The next year Miss Maynor entered the Music Department of Hampton as a student of R. Nathaniel Dett. She planned to become a teacher of public school music at that time. Then John Finley Williamson encouraged her to become a choir director. Several persons had advised her to make a career as a soloist, but as she explained, "there were no means for study."

"My benefactress has been Miss Harriet S. Curtis of Boston, who was dean of women at Hampton when I was there and had followed my work with some interest," Miss Maynor said. "For the last three years she had made studying in New York possible for me. When I first went to that city I went to Wilfred Klamroth. I am particularly interested in German Lieder—Brahms, those of Schubert and Wolf—and I devoted all my time to them while with him. Then I was sent to Alan Haughton this last year to train in the operatic repertoire. I learned the entire part of Aïda from him and it has been under his guidance that I have acquired my knowledge of the Mozart operas, of which I am so fond."

Miss Maynor declared that she was equally interested in coloratur, lyric and dramatic singing, and hoped to be able to conquer each of these fields of the art. She had proved the preceding day that she already had done so to an exceptional degree.

"I would like to master all colors of tone and give each type of work what it demands. I am working hard for that," she said, in the simple, direct way possible only to the fundamentally innocent of heart.

N. S.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

AUG 13 1939

Music Festival In Berkshires To Close Today

Koussevitzky Uses Ballet by Ivor Stravinsky for Last Evening Program

Special to the Herald Tribune

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 12.—The final evening concert in the Sixth Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood drew a capacity audience to the Music Shed tonight. Dr. Serge Koussevitzy will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the [redacted] tomorrow afternoon.

The festival this year has been notable for its programs, which have yielded not a jot to the supposed demand of outdoor audiences for lighter and more rhythmic items in the repertoire than are usually supplied during the indoor season.

Dr. Koussevitzky's program tonight was built around the music from Igor Stravinsky's ballet, "Le Sacre du Printemps" (The Rite of Spring), further described as "Pictures of Pagan Russia." It is a score of vast complexity, of savage and bizarre intensity and tremendous force, an expression of elemental and barbaric strength.

Although the performance of this work by the Boston orchestra long has been celebrated as one of peculiar authenticity, it is scarcely to be wondered that most of the orchestra rehearsal this morning was devoted to "Le Sacre." And the Shed itself is set in what might be likened to a forest glade, thus supplying an appropriate background for these endeavors.

"Le Sacre," commissioned by Diaghilev for the Ballet Russe, was first performed at the Theatre Des Champs-Elysees in Paris on May 29, 1913, and was greeted with riotous disorder. The incident still is famous in the history of the ballet.

The present concert version, first conducted by Pierre Monteux at the Casino in Paris on May 29, 1914, was introduced to the United States by the Philadelphia Orchestra, in Philadelphia, on March 3, 1922.

Dr. Koussevitzky began his program with the Haydn symphony in B flat (No. 102), one of the six composed for Haydn's second visit to London in 1794 and 1795. The final half of the program was devoted entirely to Wagner—the overture to "The Flying Dutchman," the prelude to "Lohengrin," the Bacchanale from "Tannhaeuser" and the prelude to "Die Meistersinger."

It was revealed today that Violet Brooks, daughter of Mrs. Gorham Brooks, of Brookline, Mass., who donated Tanglewood to the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the festival, had enrolled in the Musical Academy, which will begin its first session at Tanglewood in July, 1940.

J. S.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
Sunday
Union & Republican

AUG 13 1939

Berkshire's Festival

An English poet, resentfully surveying the wild flowers and fresh vegetables on sale in London, wrote: "They have taken the spring from 'the country to the town!" The country, at any rate, is getting back the summer, and the sixth Berkshire Symphonic festival, which closes today, marks a culminating point in an amazing transformation. Much courage was needed to project a series of concerts by a great orchestra at a point deep in the country and remote from urban conveniences and facilities—previously the only comparable enterprise had been the traveling circus, and it was not easy to think of Beethoven symphonies as a tent show.

The popular response, however, showed that support would not be lacking, and, when the concert-giving four years ago was turned over to the Boston Symphony orchestra, the festival soon began to take on a solid and permanent aspect. The beautiful and historic Tanglewood estate was given to it as a summer home for the orchestra, the big tent was replaced by a substantial roofed building holding nearly 6000 people. and now the overflow is raising the question whether the festival ought not to be expanded by a third of the elongated weekends, taking in Thursdays, in which the festival timetable has been cast.

Even more striking evidence of the evolution of the festival as a Berkshire institution is given by the creation of a school of music in connection with it which will hold its first session next summer. It is not just another music school, because it has been carefully planned to meet almost unique conditions. On the one hand, the personnel of the Boston Symphony orchestra will be available for highly expert instruction in the use of instruments, in conducting, in orchestrating and arranging music, and so on. This should appeal to many professional musicians and advanced students who can arrange to be in or near Berkshire in July and August.

Parallel with this specialized technical instruction will be courses for music lovers who desire to know music better and to appreciate it more fully. For admission to these courses no technical skill or theoretical knowledge is required, the one requirement being sufficient sustained interest to make such study worth while. From these students a chorus will be recruited which will prepare an important choral work for presentation with the orchestra at the festival.

The intense interest with which the concerts of the past two weeks have been followed by the great audience is a vindication of Dr Koussevitzky's considered policy of constructing the festival programs in the main out of symphonies and other major works by the greatest masters of the orchestra. Contemporary music is not excluded, and a place is left for music of a lighter sort like "Peter and the Wolf." But the main concern of the symphonic festival is the production in the grand style of the greatest music composed for the orchestra, and this is as it should be. At Tanglewood the conditions are such as to give to old symphonies a new thrill.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

AUG 13 1939

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

THE closing concert of the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will be held in the Music Shed on the Tanglewood estate at Lenox, Mass., this afternoon at 3:30, when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Schumann's fourth symphony, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," Ravel's "La Valse" and the second symphony of Sibelius.

Judging by its first three concerts, the 1939 Berkshire Festival has continued the notable record of success made by its recent predecessors, both in its artistic standards and in constantly increasing public interest, and, so far as anything can be predicted in an unpredictable age, can be regarded as an institution of assured permanence. It has developed to an extent which its founders might well have considered unduly optimistic to hope for in five years when they held their first three concerts in 1934. The first important step in converting a hopeful experiment into one of the major summer musical events of the northeastern United States was the engagement of the Boston Symphony under its regular conductor. The second was the donation of Tanglewood for these concerts by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, and the third was the construction of the Music Shed, which housed its first audiences last summer. A prudent but far-sighted economic policy has been an important factor in maintaining and expanding this festival during its formative years.

* * *

A Record Attendance

WITH crowds ranging between 5,700 and 6,500, the average attendance this summer has been the highest so far in the festival's history. This includes, as before, both permanent and summer residents in the neighborhood and visitors, many of these traveling for considerable distances, who have come especially for these concerts. The schedule was similar in extent and character to that of 1938, but this summer the Boston Symphony brought its full complement of 108 men, as compared with a contingent of ninety-three last summer. A valuable innovation was the opening of the two Saturday morning rehearsals not only to festival members, but also to public and parochial high school pupils of Berkshire County who had attended the Layman's Music Course presented in six Berkshire schools last spring by Miss Harriet Johnson and her assistant, Miss Katharine Philbrick.

Festival visitors profited substantially by marked improvement in the arrangements for arrival, parking and departure, which were no longer handicapped by the mud which proved a drawback last year. After the opening night, considering the large number of cars involved, these were accomplished with notable speed and smoothness. Getting away, indeed, still called for a certain amount of waiting, but, since both main exits open on Route 183, between Lenox and Stockbridge, a swift departure for all will probably be unfeasible until it proves possible to effect a connection with other roads.

* * *

The Music Shed and Improvement Program

FURTHER improvements in the parking fields and grounds are included in the general program for which the festival trustees are inviting contributions from their patrons and music lovers in general, to meet an estimated cost of slightly over $60,000. In the Music Shed the program calls for the provision of roll curtains to close in the building in the case of storms, such as the one which attended the opening concerts on Aug. 3; for new chairs, for further work upon the stage and orchestra shell, and for covering, paneling and painting the inside walls. Acoustic conditions in the Shed, in the two concerts heard by this reviewer, confirmed the excellent initial impression made last summer. The only time when the instrumental tone seemed to be imperfectly balanced was in Beethoven's seventh symphony, in which the sound of the brass instruments was slightly overemphasized and set apart from the general sonorous medium. But this was an exception in an impression of general satisfaction, and the advantageous acoustic conditions of the building also prevailed for a considerable radius outside it.

In regard to the planning and construction of the Music Shed, whose dimensions are hardly suggested by its unassuming title, the part played by Joseph Franz, engineer for the festival and a member of its board of trustees, has been inadvertently underrated in previous announcements and comments in these columns. Eliel Saarinen, who drew up preliminary plans for the Shed in 1937, resigned in November of that year. The work of designing the building within the limits of a budget considerably lower than the figure required for the original plans and of supervising its construction was then taken over by Mr. Franz, who, while he incorporated some of Mr. Saarinen's ideas in the new design, had to make substantial changes in the original scheme for the financial reasons cited above. The revised design increased the seating capacity from 4,300 to the present figure of 5,700. With the new seats called for by the improvement program, this figure can be raised to nearly 6,000, while probably at least one or two thousand more can be accommodated within effective earshot outside.

* * *

Academy Opens Next Summer

THE musical academy suggested by Dr. Koussevitzky last summer as the next step in a plan for the further development of Tanglewood as a significant artistic center is to begin its first session next July. This is to be six weeks long, culminating with the festival concerts next August. The general features have already been made public, including a school orchestra and a festival chorus which will prepare Bach's B minor Mass for one of the 1940 concerts, general sessions including choral singing and lectures dealing broadly with music through the study of its development, form and style and underlying esthetic principles, individual vocal and instrumental instruction with Boston Symphony musicians among the teachers, and a special class in conducting under Dr. Koussevitzky. What is projected, it has been announced, is neither a conservatory nor summer school in the accepted sense; a large student body is to have "the opportunity for a life in music."

The importance of the cultural contribution to be made by such an academy will depend particularly on what it can offer in atmosphere and inspiration, as well as in opportunity for musical participation, beyond what is possible in a first-class music school or conservatory, that is, as a complement to existing music schools rather than as an addition to their number. Meanwhile the 1940 festival itself is to consist of six concerts, as before, but it has been said that the addition of extra concerts to the regular subscription series is quite probable.

* * *

Conservative Programs

THUS far Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire programs have not been of what might be called an extracurricular character, but have usually constituted a cross-section of the standard classic, romantic and modern repertoire presented in Boston. In the fifteen concerts of the last four festivals, including this summer's, sixty-six works or excerpts have been presented by twenty-five composers. Wagner has been represented by thirteen works or excerpts, Beethoven by seven, Brahms by five, Sibelius by four and Bach, Haydn, Ravel and Tchaikovsky by three. The orchestra has played two works apiece by Debussy, Moussorgsky, Mozart, Prokofieff, Rimsky-Korsakoff, Schubert, Schumann and Stravinsky. The list of composers represented by single works includes four Americans: Henry Hadley, the first conductor of these festivals; Aaron Copland, Edward Burlingame Hill and Walter Piston, in addition to C. P. E. Bach, Franck, Handel, Mendelssohn and Richard Strauss.

Although works which most of us would consider modern in character rather than in actual date of composition form a very small proportion of these programs, which have included no absolute novelties or imported works new to this country, Dr. Koussevitzky has presented one or more American compositions in each festival. Eleven works, the sixth and seventh symphonies of Beethoven, the first two symphonies of Brahms, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," Ravel's second Daphnis et Chloe" suite, Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherazade," Sibelius's second symphony, Tchaikovsky's fourth symphony and Wagner's preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger" have figured in two festivals since the beginning of the Boston Symphony's association with the Berkshires.

* * *

Possibilities for Expansion

THERE has been occasional criticism of the prevalence of familiar music in the programs, but no doubt many festival patrons, both those who hear much orchestral music in the winter and those who hear little of it outside of this series, would be pleased with a continuance of such a policy, which could be carried on for several further summers without the risk of undue repetition. Still, especially if the number of performances should be increased, expansion of their scope in regard to repertoire should be in order, both in the tactful and discreet inclusion of new or seldom-heard music and in ventures into fields beyond that of the strictly symphonic list.

One already announced step in this direction is the annual inclusion of a major choral work, beginning next summer. At some later date—probably a fairly late one, owing to physical requirements—we may hope for opera performances of a standard corresponding to that which is associated with the festival symphony concerts. Meanwhile Miss Robinson Smith, president of this festival, and her colleagues in its direction, along with the Boston Symphony's conductor, management and trustees, merit congratulations on what has been accomplished in the festival's relatively short history. It has reached a position in which it is regarded not as a substitute for one of the noted European summer festivals, but as an institution which is important on its own account.

THIS CLIPPING FROM TOLEDO, O.
TIMES

AUG 13 1939

Music Series Is Announced

Noted Artists To Appear In Ann Arbor

SERGEI RACHMANINOFF, pianist, will give a concert in Hill auditorium, Ann Arbor, Oct. 24, when he will inaugurate the 60th annual series of Choral Union concerts.

Other artists to be heard include Fritz Kreisler, violinist, Nov. 6; Jussi Bjorreling, Norwegian tenor, Nov. 16; the New York Philharmonic Symphony orchestra, John Barbirolli, conductor, Nov. 27; Alexander Kipnis, Russian bass, Dec. 7; Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, Dec. 14.

After the Christmas holidays, there will be Kirsten Flagstad, soprano, Jan. 15; Robert Virovai, sensational Hungarian violinist, Jan. 25; Bartlett and Robertson, two-pianists, Feb. 14, and Artur Rubinstein, pianist, March 6.

The University Musical society also announces that the Philadelphia orchestra, Eugene Ormandy, conductor, has been engaged for the 47th annual May festival of six concerts, May 8, 9, 10 and 11.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

AUG 13 1939

New York, Aug. 12.—Pretentious enterprises often grow out of modest beginnings. The Berkshire Festival is one in music which promises achievements other than of a concert-giving character. For now comes word of plans to establish an "academy" wherein the teaching of orchestra-instruments playing and choral singing is to be attended by the teaaching of singing as applied to solo endeavors.

The first concerts of the Festival, in the Tanglewood Massachusetts setting got off to a fine start last week. There was an enlarged space adjoining the "shed" auditorium for the audience, and a parking-space for visitors from distances; and with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and ~~Conductor Serge~~ Koussevitzky in excellent fettle the programs started in the presence of the largest possible to accommodate, in which some personalities (musical, social, and otherwise) were conspicuous.

It will be interesting to observe the outcome of the Berkshire "Academy" undertaking . . . which can scarcely be forthcoming short of several years. Superior teaching, I have discovered, demands for its utmost effectiveness superior pupil-material with which to work . . . a fact that is too often overlooked in the estimation of Mr. Z's teaching ability or the efficiency of Miss X.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 13 1939

BERKSHIRES HEAR HAYDN SYMPHONY

Koussevitzky Conducts Boston Orchestra Before Audience of 7,000 at Fifth Concert

WAGNERIAN GROUP GIVEN

Stravinsky Music Is Played—Schumann and Sibelius Are on Today's Program

By NOEL STRAUS

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 12.—The fifth concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, given here tonight at Tanglewood, attracted the largest audience of this year's series to date, those in attendance numbering nearly 7,000. An even larger crowd is expected at the final concert tomorrow afternoon. Every seat in the music shed already has been sold for the closing event.

Tonight's program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under ~~Serge~~ Koussevitzky, was received with unbounded enthusiasm. Dr. Koussevitzky and his forces were in a particularly inspired mood with results in consequence difficult to appraise without piling up superlatives.

The first half of the program was given over to the Hadyn Symphony in B flat major, No. 102, and Stravinsky's "Le Sacré du Printemps." After the intermission a Wagnerian group completed the offerings. These Wagnerian selections comprised the overture to "The Flying Dutchman," the prelude to "Lohengrin," the Bacchanale from "Tannhaeuser" and the prelude to "Die Meistersinger."

Morning Rehearsal Held

This morning the orchestra gave the second of its open rehearsals, which as a rule only members and patrons of the festival organization are privileged to attend. As last Saturday, however, an exception again was made, in favor of pupils of the Berkshire County public and parochial high schools, who had taken the music appreciation course offered this Spring by the layman's music course, under the auspices of the festival organization. More than 1,000 of these eager young music lovers were in the audience.

Before the conductor began his activities Olin Downes gave a lecture on works about to undergo finishing touches on the part of the orchestra, namely the Haydn and Stravinsky compositions mentioned above and also Schumann's Fourth Symphony, figuring on tomorrow's list. Thereafter the musicians began their morning's duties with a detailed consideration of the Stravinsky "Sacre du Printemps." Because the provocative and revolutionary work was given practically in its entirety, those fortunate enough to be present virtually heard an extra performance of it, played in an incomparable manner.

Following an intermission the rehearsal continued with a brief refurbishing of parts of Schumann's Fourth Symphony, including the introduction of the first movement, most of the romanza, and various passages of the scherzo and the finale.

The rest of the rehearsal was devoted to Sibelius's Second symphony.

Final Concert Today

Now that the festival is nearing its close and a sold-out house is assured for the final concert tomorrow, the great success of the venture this year is beyond question. Naturally Dr. Koussevitzky, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, the festival organization's president, and all the other festival authorities are elated. Miss Smith said today that even larger audiences are expected next Summer. She reported that already 100 reservations have been made for the 1940 festival. It is the first time in the festival's history that membership tickets have been taken and paid for so far in advance. At present the festival office is busy preparing 10,000 circulars, which will be sent out to prospective members for next season within a few days.

At the closing concert tomorrow a program will be given containing Schumann's Fourth symphony, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," Ravel's "La Valse" and the Second symphony of Sibelius.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DAYTON, OHIO
JOURNAL
AUG 13 1939

133

Koussevitzky Plans School of Music

By PIERRE KEY

NEW YORK, Aug. 12.—Pretentious enterprises often grow out of modest beginnings. The Berkshire festival is one in music which promises achievements other than of a concert-giving character. For now comes word of plans to establish an "academy" wherein the teaching of orchestra-instruments playing and choral singing is to be attended by the teaching of singing as applied to solo endeavors.

The first concerts of the festival in the Tanglewood, Massachusetts, setting got off to a fine start last week. There was an enlarged space adjoining the "shed" auditorium for the audience, and a parking-space for visitors from distances; and with the Boston Symphony orchestra and Conductor Serge Koussevitzky in excellent fettle, the programs started in the presence of the largest possible to accommodate, in which some personalities (musical, social and otherwise) were conspicuous.

It will be interesting to observe the outcome of the Berkshire "academy" undertaking . . . which can scarcely be forthcoming short of several years. Superior teaching, I have discovered, demands for its utmost effectiveness superior pupil-material with which to work . . . a fact that is too often overlooked in the estimation of Mr. Z's teaching ability or the efficiency of Miss X.

Chicago Opera's Loss

The Chicago City Opera company has just experienced a loss in the death of its artistic director, Paul Longone, who succumbed in Cannes last week of an ailment of long standing. President Jason Whitney states that the plans for the eight weeks of performances scheduled to begin next October will be carried out—but the selection of the artistic director has not, naturally, yet been made.

Mr. Longone, a native of Naples, has been an active figure in operatic doings for a quarter of a century. Stepping from the role of a pianoforte accompanist to opera singers, he negotiated the contract with Paramount which gave Caruso his only motion-picture engagement, and went on, from there, to giving opera performances in European cities . . . finally settling down in Chicago when Samuel Insull's Chicago Civic opera expired for lack of funds.

Mr. Longone fired an interest among a group of opera-minded Chicagoans in 1935 again in giving their city some performances. The result has been a gradual improvement of the general level of accomplishment and, for the past two seasons, a lengthening of the number of performances. Mr. Longone's death will be regarded as a loss to the organization of which he was artistic head; for even though a competent successor will be found, Mr. Longone had progressed operatically in his most recent activities, as his record in Chicago shows.

Summer Music Studies

We hear very little nowadays about the music "master class." It still thrives, though use of that appellation seems to have worn out. I think it began as a sort of slogan to instill in prospective students the feeling that they were offered something extraordinary. Sometimes, in those earlier years which began some 30 years ago, a "master" class turned out to be that. During more recent summers the number of such endeavors has multiplied. Now they are to be found in all parts of the land, with opportunities so numerous for the student that the term "master" has outgrown its original connotation.

New York, which used to disgorge its large music student population with the advent of June (partly, it is believed, because several of its most widely known teachers hied to their far-distant master classes) now has undergone a change. Highly desirable instruction in every branch of the music arts is available for from six to eight weeks every summer . . . which is attracting plenty of out-of-town teachers, bent on brushing up or adding to their resources.

With summer music study pursued this year by more persons [illegible] we have an indication of the nation's progress in approaching the need, as well as the many values, which music provides in our lives.

Lines-o'-News

Radio's broadcasting station owners are chafing under the millions of dollars they must pay A. S. C. A. P. for using the music composed by A. S. C. A. P. members. So they suggest finding new tunes elsewhere. Looks like a difficult task. So much so that we may anticipate an adjustment which will continue to give us the necessary "standbys."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD
AUG 13 1939

Berkshire Festival and All That Goes With It Is Stupendous, Writes Syracuse Music Authority

Music School Settlement Director Turns Attention to Concerts in East

Each August there is an increased number of Central New York musicians and music lovers in attendance at the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, where the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

Mrs. Harry L. Vibbard, director of Syracuse Music School Settlement, organist of the Fourth Presbyterian Church, and president of the Syracuse Home Garden Club, in the Berkshires for a fortnight, is combining visits to notable gardens and attendance at several music events in the vicinity of the Housatonic River Valley.

Following a fortnight's stay at the Wendell Hotel, Pittsfield, Mass., Mrs. Vibbard will motor to Vermont. She will return to Syracuse early in September with her impressions of events at Tanglewood, at South Mountain, and at Music Mountain Falls Village, Conn.

Aside from the scheduled six concerts by the Symphony, I have attended so far, three of the three-hour rehearsals when Dr. Koussevitzky puts into shape (I think to suit him) his marvelous group of 100 highly trained technicians. This morning for instance, he spent one hour and 15 minutes on the Stravinsky "Sacre" to be played Saturday evening.

I've never seen such rehearsing—it is rehearsing. He himself, however, gives what he demands. He slaves for perfection, and he dramatizes conducting. Surely he and Toscaninni are alone—just my opinion. Dr. Koussevitzky is staying here, as guest of Dr. Arthur Rodzinski, who has a place south of Stockbridge—named "White Goat Farm;" and for diversion I assume Dr. Rodzinski raises white goats. I've seen lots of them elsewhere. I watched some in an enclosure and they were playful as puppies.

Then there is my trip down to Music Mountain in Falls Village, Connecticut, to hear the Gordon String Quartet. They played very beautifully and it was so restful—the cool Berkshire air blowing through the Music Hall—while listening to them play the Ravel Quartet. There are long screen doors of Music Hall (other side the same—it's really a made over barn). I may go again on Saturday afternoon. Olin Downes gives a short lecture before the Saturday morning rehearsal. The Festival so far is bringing audiences of about 6,500 each concert and the whole thing is a tremendous education. Many very young people are at all the concerts and for the special public rehearsals, arrangements are made for groups of school children.

Overhead on Sunday afternoon before the concert was a pompous gentleman, who told everybody within possible ear shot of his having flown in from somewhere, and he asked his immediate circle "Now this Tschaikowsky Symphony No. 4—is it any good?" Believe it or not, I heard that. Far more hope musically was a group of five little colored girls—hair in pigtails tied with white ribbons, and how their little heads bobbed with the rhythms which they heard.

'Busy All I Have to Be'

Mrs. Harry L. Vibbard, 204 Comstock Avenue.

An all time record audience was at Mrs. Coolidges Quartet concert on South Mountain when Harold Bauer played piano with them in the Brahms quartet. Bauer still is the master. Such reverential attention to music is very impressive. The audience flowed over the small hall and under the trees all benches filled outside, etc. My place was on the steps (where I heard perfectly and was grateful). Maybe I can get inside next Friday, but I'm satisfied with the back steps.

Music is going on in America, surely. Even to the settlement orchestra in San Francisco, which gave a splendid supporting accompainment to Heifetz in the last movement of the Mendelssohn Concerto. In some spare time I drove to Great Barrington, where the Heifetz film, "They Shall Have Music," was being shown. It's true, "They shall have music."

I went also to Williamstown, Mass., to the Flower Show put on by their Garden Club. It was a good show and the women in charge most happy to have me there as I was a president of a garden club. We talked just as spiritedly as the music groups. I learned several excellent new tricks and as for marvelous speciments of lilies and gladioli, I've never seen anything to equal those from Mrs. Parmelee Prentice's gardens—but then, a Rockefeller daughter should have perfection.

Also, I am seeing some of these Estate Gardens. Today went with a group of 10 through the modeled after Versailles gardens of Giraud Foster, at Lenox. I expect to see two other famous estates and hope to see the one-time Andrew Carnegie estate "Shadow Brook," now the property of the Jesuit Novitiate. "Shadow

President of Home Garden Club Visits Several Notable Estate Gardens

Brook" was the country home of Mrs. Margaret Emerson when she was married to the late Raymond Baker, who was Director of the Mint. Their daughter is Mrs. Henry J. Topping, Jr. ("Mimi" Baker), a so-called glamor girl in New York and Palm Beach last year.

On Sunday evening as soon as the last concert is over, I am going to the estate of Mrs. Carlos M. de Heredia, "Wheatleigh," to hear the full service of evening prayer of the Trinity Episcopal Church, given on the lawn, which runs down to the water's edge. Full service vested choir and all. Should it rain, the service will be on the porches. This has been a yearly custom, so I am told.

In order for me to be at the prayer service on time Officer 3 made arrangements for me to ask for him that he may place my car first in the line for that exit. I'm not forgetting that, for that is a favor capitalized, when one thinks of the thousands of cars in that parking field. Maybe this all sounds "busy." "Busy" is all I have to be. I'm also reading, between times, "Reaching for the Stars." And, incidentally, finding marvelous places for food served superbly and oh! so good. Really, the Berkshire Festival and all that goes under that title simply is stupendous.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
AUG 13 1939

Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky has given fine programs. This year for a second time a great Music Shed has sheltered them in inclement weather, of which there has been singularly little. Acoustics are marvelous. To many the different choirs of strings and the various instrumental sections have a carrying power and timbre equal to or even greater than in Boston's Symphony Hall, their Winter home.

Colorful and unlike any other music festival in the country, with its own traditons growing up with a Boston background, but reaching out to the internationalism of music and musicians everywhere, the festival throng produced a thousand and one types, in infinite variety and changing moods. In every inn and restaurant fascinating scraps of conversation were overheard, in any one of America's manifold dialects and the piquant European tongues. Intent on the concerts during the all too brief hours that the great shed re-echoed with celestial harmonies, these people wholeheartedly played with carefree enjoyment that gave a sharper pleasure in the concerts. This year flowers were an additional aesthetic touch, jars of yellow and apricot gladiolus on either end of the stage.

Reunions of old friends and the making of new was a constant process and while one might not see a neighbor who attended all concerts, it was no surprise to run into many from distant places, necessarily out of touch through the years and the barrier of distance.

Informal entertaining goes on through the concert weekends. One of the largest of these affairs was the Saturday afternoon cocktail party of the George Edmans on Wendell street in Pittsfield, at 5 o'clock. Here I found, as I expected to, Mrs. Lawrence K. Miller) (Amy Bess Williams) with her publisher-husband of the Berkshire Eagle, looking exceedingly unlike the mother of two! They live in Pittsfield and are active members of the Festival since its earlier days. There too was Scribe Wells, relative of the Rufus S. Frosts, being entertaining in the midst of repertorial responsibilities for his Northampton paper. Many of the critics were at the home of the festival clerk whose gracious wife reminds one of a diplomatic circle hostess with her remarkable memory for names.

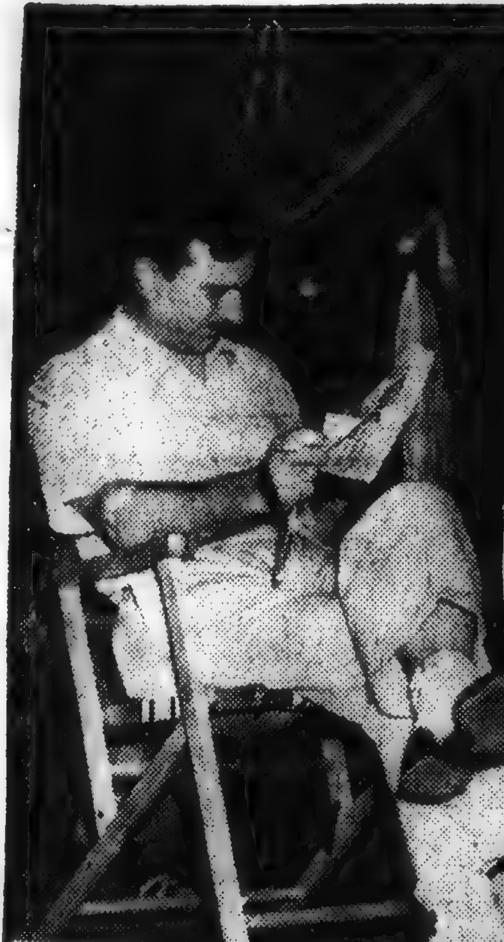
There is a big bronze bell at the left of the shed entrance from the back that can be heard over in the Tanglewood gardens where many stroll during the long intermission. It also clangs the warning that concert time is at hand, an innovation appreciated by festival goers this year. Program making is a more or less personal thing, but there was unanimous agreement by everyone in hearing at all concerts of last week that Mr. Koussevitsky had outdone himself. The Saturday evening formal program had this formal content, the exciting Walter Piston concerto for orchestra, and the beautiful Sibelius Symphony No. 5 in E flat, major op. 32 before the intermission, then the Beethoven Symphony No. 7 in A major to end an evening of rare enjoyment.

Sunday afternoon with its diversity in audience and music brought the Bach concerto in D major for stringed instruments, and Prokolieff's droll and typically Russian "Peter and the Wolf," with its vivid narrator Richard Hale who seems to keep a pristine interest in the whimsical tale no matter how many times he reads it. This, like Mr. Koussevitzky's conducting on Saturday night, was hailed with shouts of "bravo" and "bis" and prolonged applause. An ovation was given orchestra and conductor at simultaneous close of concert and first festival weekend when the final staccato notes of Tchaikowsky's Symphony No. 4 in F Minor, op. 36 brought the audience to its feet in a wave of enthusiasm.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Members Get Back to Nature in the Berkshires

Musicians "Rough It" Between Rehearsals and Concerts With Pit-Cooked Meals and Primitive Camp Equipment—Some, Who Don't Dare Risk Their Precious Fingers, Live in Hotels, But Visit Tents



TAKING IT EASY. JEAN CAUHAPE OF THE SYMPHONY READING ON THE "PIAZZA" OF HIS TENT

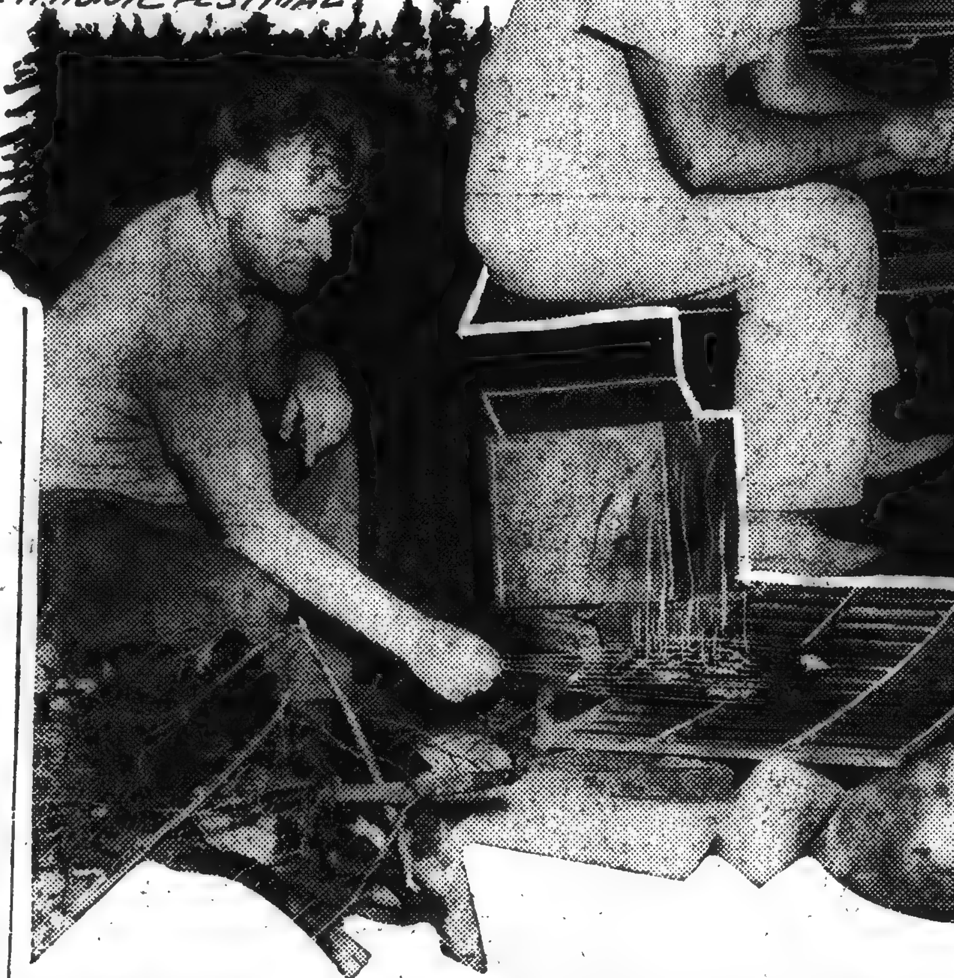
TUNING UP FOR THE REHEARSAL IN THE "MUSIC SHED" AT TANGLEWOOD

RENE VOISIN OF THE ORCHESTRA WASHES UP FOR LUNCH WHILE THE FAMILY DOG TRUMPETER LOOKS ON

SUMMERTIME FINDS DR SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA READY TO LEAD THE MUSICIANS IN REHEARSAL FOR THE BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL

THREE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA PLAYERS LUNCH IN THE WOODS AT LAKE MAKHEENAC L TO R HIPPOLYTE DROEGHMANS, ROGER VOISIN RENE VOISIN AND MRS RENE VOISIN

A LITTLE WOODLAND CARPENTRY GEORGE HUMPHREY, VINCENT MARIOTTI, PASQUALE CARDILLO OF BOSTON SYMPHONY DOING SOME TINKERING



COOKING A LA DEEP WOODS SIEGFRIED GERHARDT OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA IS A VETERAN CAMPER AND KNOWS ALL THE TRICKS

By K. S. BARTLETT

Under the great trees which rimmed the cloud-dulled waters of Lake Makheenac stood a row of canvas tents kept from the damp ground by ancient wooden platforms. Outside were the familiar devices of fairly primitive camp economy, an improvised work bench, a wash stand with "running" water and a mirror nailed to a tree, a woodland fireplace with an iron grate, a few camp chairs. Here a drawn-back tent flap showed low cots or a little gasoline stove set on a folding table. There was disclosed an ingenious cabinet made from discarded apple crates.

Instruments Out of Sight

Tucked carefully away in some of the tents could be seen heavy black leather cases of odd shapes. Out of sight in the cases were instruments, trumpets, a viola, a violin, for these were the tents of a little group of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who have chosen to rough it a bit while playing with the rest of the world-famous orchestra in Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Only an hour before the full orchestra had been rehearsing in the huge "Music Shed" at Tanglewood for the last half of the annual festival.

Most of the orchestra members choose hotels, or cottages for the 12 to 14 days' stay up here in the heart of the Berkshires. A few prefer tents and a bit of that "back to nature" which is often popular with people who live most of the year in cities. So the green or khaki-colored tents are set up in a band of trees on the lake shore of the great Tanglewood estate which was presented to the Boston Symphony in 1937 by Mrs. Gorman Brooks and Miss Mary A. Toppan as a permanent site for the festival.

Here during mid-afternoon a Globe reporter and photographer found a dozen members of the orchestra, getting ready for lunch. By the first of the tents a sturdily-built man with a mass of gray-white hair was kneeling over an outdoor fire cooking steaks. On one side was a small patent broiler and on the other a deep pit dug in the ground and walled with stones.

"Pit Best for Real Feed"

The pit, explained Siegfried Gerhardt, who has played the viola with the Symphony for years, was the best for cooking a real feed with a wood fire going at just the right height in the pit and a great iron grill laid across the stones. He was, he said, planning a big dinner for that night.

Beside the tent with hammers and other tools three other members of the orchestra were doing a repair job on a battered automobile seat. They agreed that the springs looked dubious. One of them was Vincent Mariotti, violinist, Mr. Gerhardt's tent mate, and George Humphrey, viola, and Pasquale Cardillo, clarinet. The last two aren't tenting this year, but like a good camp dinner.

Mr. Gerhardt is a veteran of many camping trips in the woods of Maine and Canada.

"I like outdoor life," he told the reporter, "and down here by the lake it's always cool, even when it's hot uptown."

At first a bit reluctantly, but later with a touch of pride, he showed the reporter the inside setup. The clean, green canvas, newly painted with some moisture-resisting paint, was drying off in drops from the morning's downpour, and inside was the almost incredible neatness and order which sometimes characterizes the "housekeeping" of woodsmen, circus people, yachtsmen and others who live in cramped quarters.

In front of the tent under a fly was the indoor "dining room" with a folding table, two folding chairs, a folding gasoline stove, cooking utensils, shelves, and a large gasoline lantern and other articles. Inside was the same spic and span order. Between the two neatly-made low beds was a cabinet improvised from an empty peach crate with each article laid out meticulously in its place. An electric lantern hung from the tent pole, its metal sides polished to the semblance of silver.

Too Much Work to Cook

Next door to the Gerhardt-Mariotti camp was another small green tent placed in the middle of the platform so that the wood formed a sort of piazza. Seated in a camp chair with a newspaper and cigarette was Jean Cauhape, another Symphony viola player. Like his neighbors he is "batching it," but he explained he was only furnishing himself with lodgings. He preferred to eat in town or with friends.

He admitted that he thought it was altogether too much work to come down after a long rehearsal and get your own meals. He'd tried it. If your wife was in camp to have your lunch or dinner hot and waiting for you, now that was different. Still he liked living in a tent and had decided to compromise this Summer, by sleeping in the tent and eating elsewhere of food cooked by others.

That seemed to be the opinion of most of the orchestra members except those like Mr. Gerhardt who had learned on deep woods camping trips to cook and like it.

Farther down the line was the most ambitious of the camping outfits, three tents belonging to a single family, with a big wooden table and benches out in front. Here lived the Voisins, Mr. and Mrs. Rene Voisin and their son, Roger. Both the Voison men are trumpeters with the orchestra. One of the tents, a huge affair, like an old-fashioned army wall tent, was for Rene Voisin and his wife, one of the smaller ones for Roger and the third for guests.

When the Globe reporter reached the Voisin encampment, Mrs. Voisin was cooking vegetables on a gasoline stove inside the large tent, and her son was setting the outdoor table. On one bench sat a visiting orchestra member, Hippolyte Droeghmans, who smoked and watched with interest.

Yes, he thought camping must be pleasant, but he didn't think a 'cellist should risk his fingers in any sort of rough work. The smallest injury, which the ordinary person would hardly notice and which wouldn't, for instance, bother a trumpeter, might end a 'cellist's career, he pointed out.

Roger Voison on his way down to the lake for a couple of buckets of water grinned cheerfully and remarked that a trumpeter who cut a finger could use a bit of sticking plaster and manage pretty well if he had to. Still, he conceded, there were drawbacks about trumpets, too. You simply couldn't eat salted peanuts.

Nearby a small and highly reserved Scottie wandered about eyeing the visitors with canny Scottish doubt. No good, he seemed to say, could come of having strangers about. This was Trumpeter, who, Roger Voisin explained, likes camping, too, but doesn't approve of having his picture taken.

Later, when Rene Voisin, big, ruddy-faced and smiling, arrived, Trumpeter looked on while his master washed up in the camp "washbasin." This was a rough wooden bowl holding perhaps half a gallon, with a hollow wooden spout at one side. Fill the bowl with water and it runs out slowly through the spout and you can wash your hands and face nicely. It came, Mrs. Voisin said, from France, and would be an asset at many camps. Drinking water at the camp comes from a nearby spring; other water from the lake.

Life at the camp is simple enough during the festival. There are morning rehearsals, three hours or more daily, for the Symphony insists on the same standard of excellence for the Berkshires that it gives Boston. There are six performances, three in each week, coming on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons.

Swim Before Breakfast

Mornings at the camps almost every one goes swimming before breakfast. In the afternoon there may be more swimming, canoeing or just loafing. More of the same in the evening. Visitors come and sometimes the campers themselves go visiting.

It all sounds pretty easy, but before going to the camp the reporter had learned just a little of the strenuousness of a Symphony player's life. The "Music Shed" where rehearsals are held and the concerts given is in itself an extraordinary bit of construction. In 1936 and 1937 the Boston Symphony, which had been unwilling to give concerts with the full orchestra out of doors, played in a large tent. While the acoustics were reasonably satisfactory there were many objections to the canvas hall.

Last year the music shed, on the large and very beautiful Tanglewood estate, then owned by the Symphony, was completed. A huge steel and concrete structure, seating several thousand, with the whole vast auditorium narrowing down to the stage, it has acoustics which are said to be as good as those of Symphony Hall. The sides are open, but it is hoped that next year money will be available for steel shutters which can be lowered in case of storm.

The setting is as picturesque as any festival group could ask for. To one side is the old Tappan house and ground sloping down through trees to Lake Makheenac. Screening the parking place near the main road is an avenue of towering pines and on the other sides are massed walls of many varieties of trees in a thick and inimitable natural backdrop.

Wives Attend Rehearsals

Most of the orchestra members were tuning up on the stage when the reporter and photographer arrived just before 10 o'clock. Down front in one corner was a group, mostly wives of the performers, who are allowed to listen to the rehearsals. In the background of the colonnade a few men were moving some supplies. Joseph Franz, the Pittsfield engineer, who after tentative plans had been drafted worked out the detailed drawings for the shed and supervised its construction, moved about keeping an eye on everything. Mr. Franz is chairman of the Tanglewood committee and responsible for many details, among them seeing that 200 volunteer police and 150 volunteer ushers are on hand to handle crowds which last Sunday totaled 6500.

There was a sound of a car coming around from behind the shed—most cars must be left parked at the entrance—and a moment later Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, was stepping out of his car in front of his dressing room. Conductor of one of the greatest, if not the greatest, of the world's symphony orchestras, considered by many musicians to be the most eminent in his peculiarly exacting field, Dr. Koussevitzky is a man who impresses even the quite unmusical with the charm and force of his personality.

He is a man of intense enthusiasms and Tanglewood is among them. He, as well as others active in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival organization, wants to see more than concerts there. He visualizes Tanglewood as widening its scope to become a significant center of the arts in America and he thinks the success of the festival suggests the next step toward what has been called "an academy for living and working in music" to be developed along with the yearly concerts.

Boon to Fine Arts

"A center of music" he says, "would be a boon for those who want to study the fine arts in their relationship to culture, who are anxious to refresh their minds and personalities through contact with the best in art and the most distinguished in culture and for those who long for a creative rest in the Summer."

Definite steps are being taken to realize his plan for an academy next year. If the hope is realized there will be a six-week term beginning in July and culminating with the concerts of the festival in August. One section will be for advanced instruction to a limited number of students qualified by ability and training, the other will be a general session for a large school. A feature of the first section will be a special class in orchestral conducting under Dr. Koussevitzky.

There have been few men in musical history so well qualified to give that special class as the Boston Symphony leader. To all the other qualifications of a great conductor he adds a remarkable grace of movement, which even for a person to whom such music as the Symphony plays is mostly meaningless, can enjoy the actual physical beauty of his conducting. No highly-trained dancer uses his hands with greater expressiveness than Dr. Koussevitzky. There is drama in the twitch of a shoulder, eloquence in the sudden downward sweep of a lifted arm. If he had not been a musician he might very well have been a dancer of the top rank.

Watching him at the rehearsal, it was amazing to see how those scores of musicians playing most conceivable instruments were welded by his direction into a single music-producing unit, perfectly coordinated. This was the Boston Symphony Orchestra, not merely a huge group of fine individual musicians.

Setting Impressive

And the rehearsal was in a setting which was impressive even to the non-musical. The vast, strangely shaped building, the beauty of the grounds, the informality of Summer-time rehearsals, most of the orchestra in shirt-sleeves, the few privileged spectators, all gave atmosphere. Once or twice even the weather man contributed effects.

During the rehearsal of Strauss' "Zarathustra," of which the music experts seem to speak with reverence, the rain came down as if some apprentice rain-maker up above had decided to end the drought in a single shower. Hissing, falling as if thrown down in great drops which sometimes shimmered like snow, the rain beat down the grass, hammered on the high roof. The heavily-leaved branches of the encircling trees moved softly under the downpour, murmuring and whispering an unarranged accompaniment.

Then, turned off like a shower bath, the rain stopped. Uncertainly the sun came through and in the woods beyond some birds essayed a few tentative notes. Perhaps they also wished to join the festival.

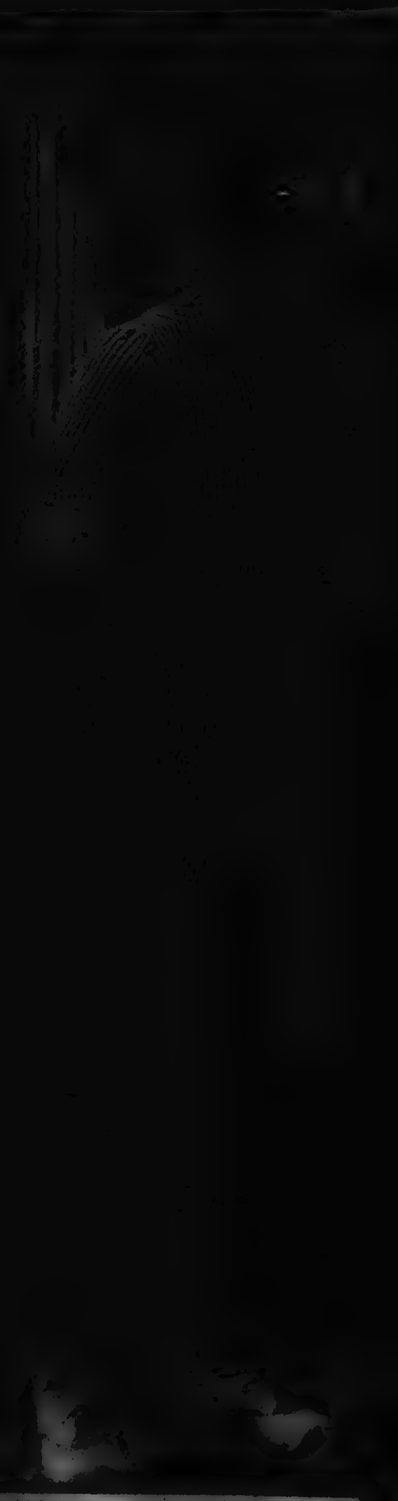
THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
Sunday
Union & Republican
AUG 13 1939

135

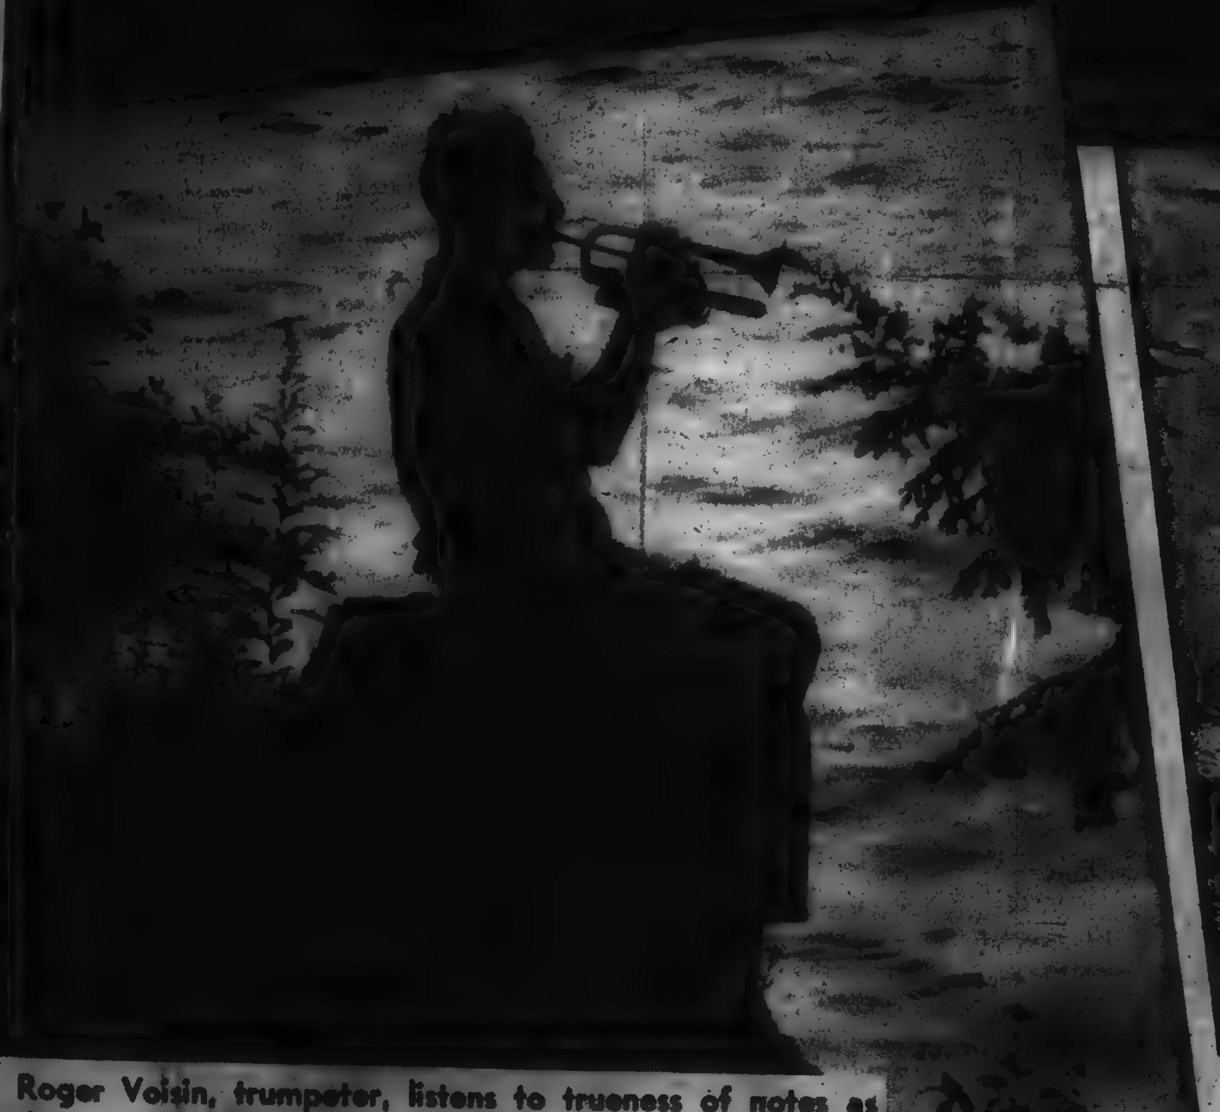
Rotogravure
Section

THE SPRINGFIELD UNION
Springfield Sunday Republican

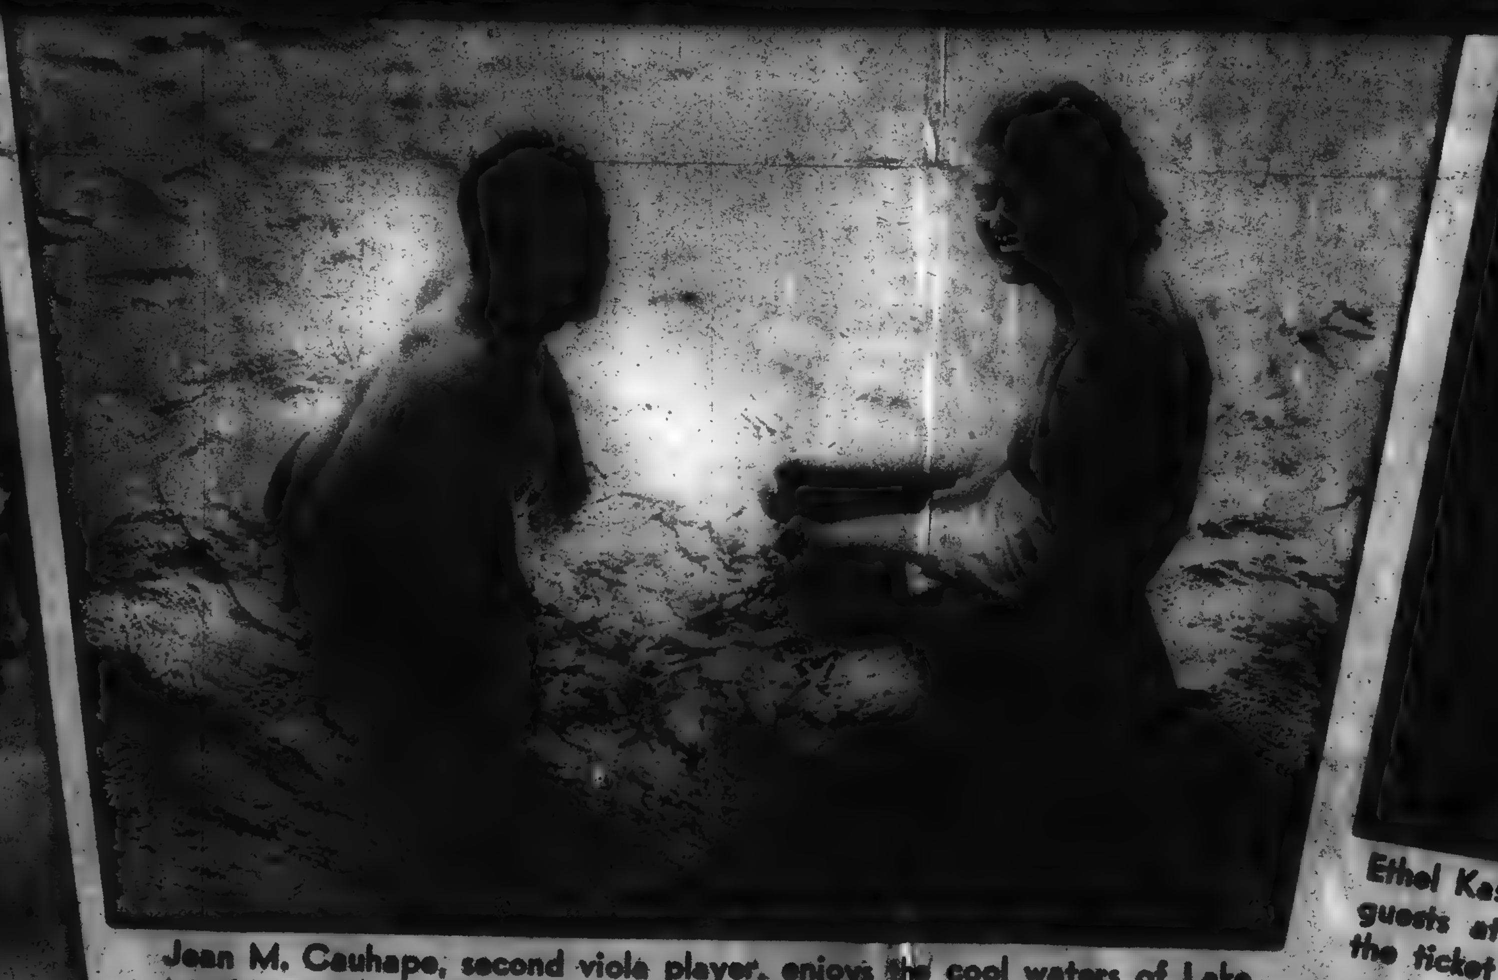
Music Festival



Candid
ch



Roger Voisin, trumpeter, listens to trueness of notes as they reverberate over Lake Mackeenack below Tanglewood.



Jean M. Cauhape, second viola player, enjoys the cool waters of Lake Mackeenack and the company of Jean Gundacker, Berkshire vacationist from Laurelton, L. I., between rehearsal sessions.

Ethel Kaspar and Dorothy Ward, both of guests at this year's opening concert. Ch the ticket taker.

—Browning
Photos

UNION publican

August 13,
1939

Candid cameraman lurks in background as Koussevitsky chats with Mrs Whittemore, Boston socialite.

Boston
sixth

Ethel Kaspar and Dorothy Ward, both of Iowa City, Ia., who were first guests at this year's opening concert. Charles Weeks of Pittsfield is the ticket taker.

—Browning
Photos

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 14 1939

Crowds Establish Two Records For Berkshire Music Festival

By CARL E. LINDSTROM

Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass.—Concerts Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon closed the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at the pinnacle of a musical success which it would be difficult to duplicate in American annals.

The record breaking crowd of the first Sunday was exceeded Saturday night when 1,000 persons beyond seating capacity passed through the gates and heard the concert on benches at the auditorium's rim or found places on the grass beyond. This figure in turn was topped yesterday afternoon with over 7,000 paid admissions. Every seat in the pavilion was sold 24 hours in advance of the concert and the box office is already receiving reservations for next year.

No Program Compromise

But mass attendance is not the whole story. The character of the programs, as has been remarked before, has shown no compromise with popular taste. They have been chosen over a wide base of musical interest, but gallery items have been conspicuously absent. There has been showmanship, yes, but that grows out of the Koussevitzky style; not in a meretricious sense, but because of his keen faculty for dramatic effect.

He glories in his Boston Symphony Orchestra and with good reason. He keeps it at white heat of perfection and its malleability is a challenge to the conductor. Herein lies one of the factors which makes the Festival unique. The regular roster of the orchestra is maintained for the "Tanglewood" series. The Boston Orchestra has no summer time style or personnel, and no interim conductor. It is significant that more than once has been heard a reference not to the Boston Symphony concerts but to the Koussevitzky concerts.

Soloists Unnecessary

A realization of the tremendous appeal of the Festival comes with the reminder that these concerts have been built up without the employment of glamorous soloists. In fact, the nearest approach to solo attractions was last year for the performance of Beethoven's Ninth and a long excerpt from Die Walkure and the result fell considerably short of the purely symphonic events.

These general observations are made at this time because the last two concerts went quite to the heart of the whole matter. Saturday night Haydn and Stravinsky were posed together and both attended by a long Wagner group. Sunday there were symphonies by Schumann and Sibelius, Debussy's Faun and Ravel's La Valse.

La Valse was an intoxicating experience. The mephistofelian craft of the poem, its hectic pulse and enameled sophistication were invoked by Koussevitzky with a relentless mesmerism that pulled its victims up on chair-edge. It was stimulating and exhausting. There was a storm of applause, although the real ovation came at the concert's close and the Festival's close when the cheering crowd kept Koussevitzky returning again and again.

The conductor has chosen a great deal of music with an eye to the lovely natural setting. The Sibelius D major Symphony was one of these. Its beauties are scenic rather than philosophical; it is an outdoor composition in contrast with the conventional romantic contours of Schumann's D minor with which the concert opened and which was considerably less effective although given a graceful performance.

Debussy's Afternoon of a Faun was a shimmering picture, delicately tinted and was made to float upon the atmosphere rather than to sound. It was played to the accompaniment of a sussurrant breeze which sprang up in the heat of the afternoon and began to stir the leaves outside. There was a threat of storm in the air but it held off until most of the thousands were safely off the grounds.

Saturday's Concert

It is difficult to pick favorites, and pointless too perhaps, but no finer playing has been heard this season than in the Haydn B flat symphony No. 102 on Saturday night. The tones of the opening Largo were so exquisitely moulded that one felt here was such a promise as could never be fulfilled.

But Koussevitzky held the composition in the palm of his hand like a connoisseur bending over a rare jewel, as though it were to be his sole concern and pleasure of the evening. To the last bar it was a succession of exquisitely chiselled moments each lovingly matched to the other.

Commands Respect

Le Sacre du Printemps produced a great demonstration, as it always has of one kind or another, for it is music about which one can't be indifferent. Certainly no one has slept through it yet. The work is old enough now so that one can speak frankly without being accused of Philistinism. Mainly an historical document, it is now somewhat out of date, obstreperous, peevish, egotistical and at times dull but of sufficient dynamism to command respect if not affection.

The orchestra performed it so conscientiously that Dr. Koussevitzky seized the hand of his concert master, Richard Burgin, when it was all over and seemed genuinely pleased that a clamorous audience called him back so many times.

Baton Technique

The chief point of interest about the whole affair was the dazzling baton technique of Dr. Koussevitzky. Becoming for the occasion a time beater, as any conductor must who essays it, he kept the most scrupulous account of its labyrinthine rhythms and cross rhythms.

Of the Wagner group, the Lohengrin Prelude was most moving. Done previously at these concerts, its gradual climax and recession as fashioned by the Bostonians is an event that stays with you. The Tannhauser Bacchanale seemed to make more of an impression, however. The Meistersinger Prelude was notable for Koussevitzky's absorption with the inner voices. There are always new ones to be found. The Overture to the Flying Dutchman became a very formidable composition, so built that it could have been imagined as a product of Wagner's maturity rather than of the period when he was just beginning to shape his thought and language.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

AUG 14 1939

MUSIC FESTIVAL IN BERKSHIRES TO BE EXTENDED

Stockbridge Mass., Aug. 14.—(AP)—Persons close to the management said today that the now famous Berkshire symphonic festival, in addition to including an academy of music next summer, probably would be extended to three weeks of concerts instead of the traditional two weeks.

This summer, according to Gertrude Robinson Smith and George Edman, of the festival board, 38,000 persons attended the six programs, although capacity for six concerts is only 34,200.

Yesterday's audience ran over 7,000 persons, making the spacious lawns around the "shed" seem almost as populous, and considerably more colorful, than the "shed" itself. The loungers heard quite as well as those in the seats and, incidentally, were little bothered with insects and other annoyances.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky played two of his favorite symphonies on the concluding program, Schumann's in D Minor, Nor. Four, and the second Sibelius.

At the end he and the redoubtable Boston Symphony were given a fervent demonstration which seemed almost as noisy as the sounds from a football stadium in the fall.

The program included also DeBussy's "L Apres Midi D Un Faun" and Ravel's "La Valse."

THIS CLIPPING FROM NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD

AUG 14 1939

Berkshire Music Festival Proves Very Popular

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP)—Persons close to the management said today the now famous Berkshire Symphonic festival, in addition to including an academy of music next summer, probably would be extended to three weeks of concerts instead of the traditional two weeks.

This summer, according to Gertrude Robinson Smith and George Edman, of the festival board, 38,000 persons attended the six programs, although capacity for six concerts is only 32,200.

Yesterday's audience ran over 7,000 persons, making the spacious lawns around the "Shed" seem almost as populous, and considerably more colorful, than the "Shed" itself. The loungers heard quite as well as those in the seats and, incidentally, were little bothered with insects and other annoyances.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky played two of his favorite symphonies on the concluding program, Schumann's in D minor, No. Four, and the second Sibelius.

At the end he and the redoubtable Boston Symphony were given a fervent demonstration which seemed almost as noisy as the sounds from a football stadium in the fall.

The program included also Debussy's "L Apres Midi D Un Faun" and Ravel's "La Valse."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 14 1939

Three-Week Music Festival May Come As Records Fall

Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass. — The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which closed yesterday with more than 7,000 persons cheering in football stadium fashion for Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, may become a three-weeks' affair next season.

Records were set and broken three times this season when a total of 38,000 persons attended six programs, although the aggregate capacity for the series was only 34,200. Sunday afternoon the ticket supply ran out and officials hurriedly stamped makeshift admission slips and sold them to 1,500 people who knew they wouldn't get seats but were perfectly satisfied to find places on the grass outside the great pavilion, the acoustics of which are so extraordinary that the music can be clearly heard at a distance of hundreds of yards.

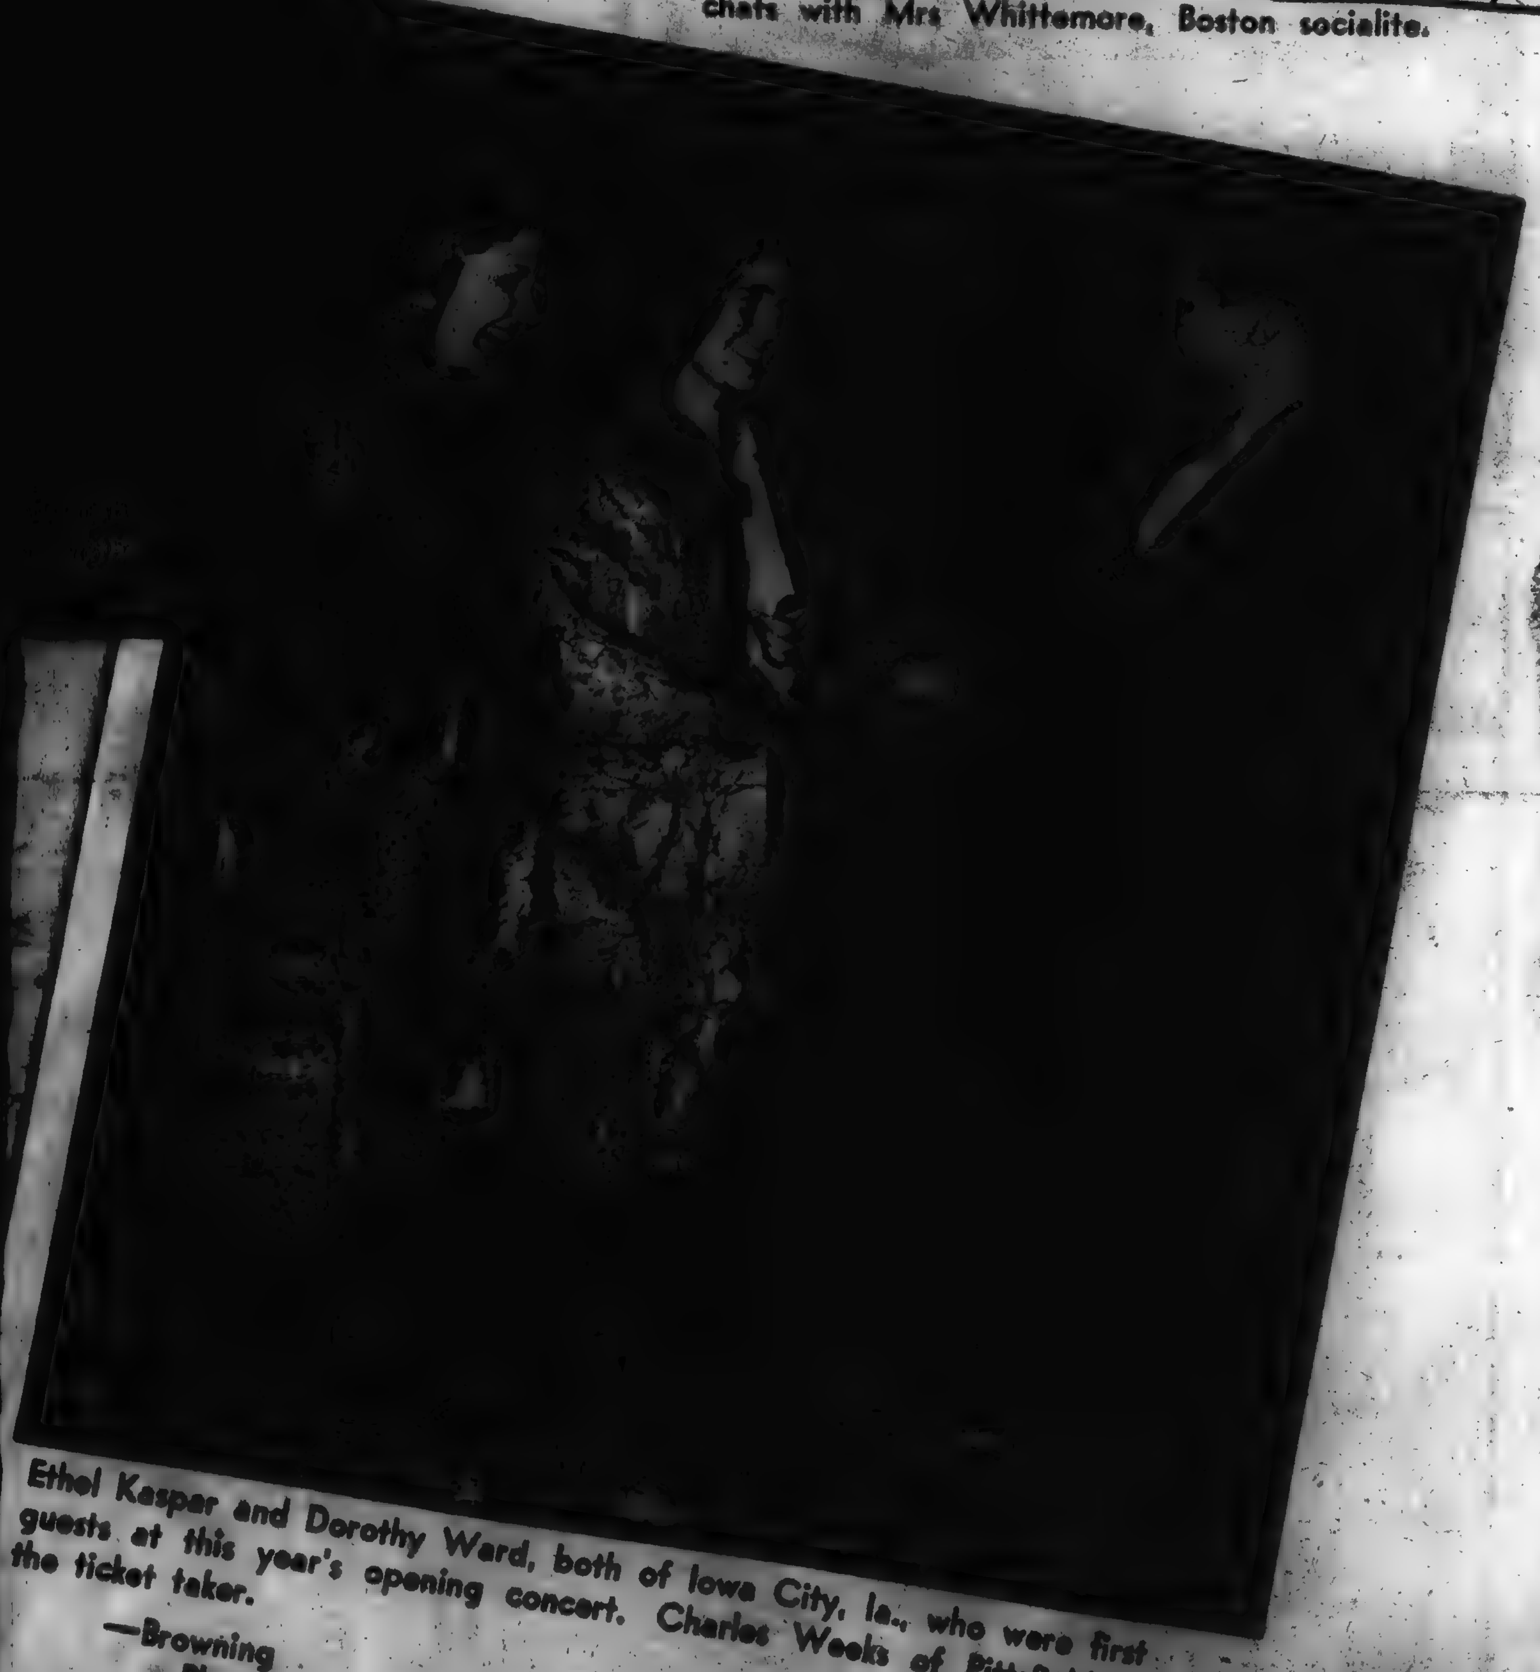
A high mark for attendance was set a week ago Sunday with an audience of 6,500; Saturday night this was broken with paid admissions at 6,700; yesterday's went to 7,200.

The Festival which has always paid its way has operated on a budget in the neighborhood of $50,000. Its success this year has outdistanced the most sanguine hopes of the management and they consequently feel encouraged to consider a three-week season.

UNION
publican

August 13, 1939

Candid cameraman lurks in background as Koussevitsky chats with Mrs Whittemore, Boston socialite.



Ethel Kasper and Dorothy Ward, both of Iowa City, Ia., who were first guests at this year's opening concert. Charles Weeks of Pittsfield is the ticket taker.

—Browning Photos

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 14 1939

Crowds Establish Two Records For Berkshire Music Festival

By CARL E. LINDSTROM
Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass.—Concerts Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon closed the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at the pinnacle of a musical success which it would be difficult to duplicate in American annals.

The record breaking crowd of the first Sunday was exceeded Saturday night when 1,000 persons beyond seating capacity passed through the gates and heard the concert on benches at the auditorium's rim or found places on the grass beyond. This figure in turn was topped yesterday afternoon with over 7,000 paid admissions. Every seat in the pavilion was sold 24 hours in advance of the concert and the box office is already receiving reservations for next year.

No Program Compromise

But mass attendance is not the whole story. The character of the programs, as has been remarked before, has shown no compromise with popular taste. They have been chosen over a wide base of musical interest, but gallery items have been conspicuously absent. There has been showmanship, yes, but that grows out of the Koussevitzky style; not in a meretricious sense, but because of his keen faculty for dramatic effect.

He glories in his Boston Symphony Orchestra and with good reason. He keeps it at white heat of perfection and its malleability is a challenge to the conductor. Herein lies one of the factors which makes the Festival unique. The regular roster of the orchestra is maintained for the "Tanglewood" series. The Boston Orchestra has no summer time style or personnel, and no interim conductor. It is significant that more than once has been heard a reference not to the Boston Symphony concerts but to the Koussevitsky concerts.

Soloists Unnecessary

A realization of the tremendous appeal of the Festival comes with the reminder that these concerts have been built up without the employment of glamorous soloists. In fact, the nearest approach to solo attractions was last year for the performance of Beethoven's Ninth and a long excerpt from Die Walkure and the result fell considerably short of the purely symphonic events.

These general observations are made at this time because the last two concerts went quite to the heart of the whole matter. Saturday night Haydn and Stravinsky were posed together and both attended by a long Wagner group. Sunday there were symphonies by Schumann and Sibelius, Debussy's Faun and Ravel's La Valse.

La Valse was an intoxicating experience. The mephistofelian craft of the poem, its hectic pulse and enameled sophistication were invoked by Koussevitzky with a relentless mesmerism that pulled its victims up on chair-edge. It was stimulating and exhausting. There was a storm of applause, although the real ovation came at the concert's close and the Festival's close when the cheering crowd kept Koussevitzky returning again and again.

The conductor has chosen a great deal of music with an eye to the lovely natural setting. The Sibelius D major Symphony was one of these. Its beauties are scenic rather than philosophical; it is an outdoor composition in contrast with the conventional romantic contours of Schumann's D minor with which the concert opened and which was considerably less effective although given a graceful performance.

Debussy's Afternoon of a Faun was a shimmering picture, delicately tinted and was made to float upon the atmosphere rather than to sound. It was played to the accompaniment of a susurrant breeze which sprang up in the heat of the afternoon and began to stir the leaves outside. There was a threat of storm in the air but it held off until most of the thousands were safely off the grounds.

Saturday's Concert

It is difficult to pick favorites, and pointless too perhaps, but no finer playing has been heard this season than in the Haydn B flat symphony No. 102 on Saturday night. The tones of the opening Largo were so exquisitely moulded that one felt here was such a promise as could never be fulfilled.

But Koussevitzky held the composition in the palm of his hand like a connoisseur bending over a rare jewel, as though it were to be his sole concern and pleasure of the evening. To the last bar it was a succession of exquisitely chiselled moments each lovingly matched to the other.

Commands Respect

Le Sacre du Printemps produced a great demonstration, as it always has of one kind or another, for it is music about which one can't be indifferent. Certainly no one has slept through it yet. The work is old enough now so that one can speak frankly without being accused of Philistinism. Mainly an historical document, it is now somewhat out of date, obstreperous, peevish, egotistical and at times dull but of sufficient dynamism to command respect if not affection.

The orchestra performed it so conscientiously that Dr. Koussevitzky seized the hand of his concert master, Richard Burgin, when it was all over and seemed genuinely pleased that a clamorous audience called him back so many times.

Baton Technique

The chief point of interest about the whole affair was the dazzling baton technique of Dr. Koussevitzky. Becoming for the occasion a time beater, as any conductor must who essays it, he kept the most scrupulous account of its labyrinthine rhythms and cross rhythms.

Of the Wagner group, the Lohengrin Prelude was most moving. Done previously at these concerts, its gradual climax and recession as fashioned by the Bostonians is an event that stays with you. The Tannhauser Bacchanale seemed to make more of an impression, however. The Meistersinger Prelude was notable for Koussevitzky's absorption with the inner voices. There are always new ones to be found. The Overture to the Flying Dutchman became a very formidable composition, so built that it could have been imagined as a product of Wagner's maturity rather than of the period when he was just beginning to shape his thought and language.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

AUG 14 1939

MUSIC FESTIVAL IN BERKSHIRES TO BE EXTENDED

Stockbridge Mass., Aug. 14.—(AP)—Persons close to the management said today that the now famous Berkshire symphonic festival, in addition to including an academy of music next summer, probably would be extended to three weeks of concerts instead of the traditional two weeks.

This summer, according to Gertrude Robinson Smith and Ge[illegible] Edman, of the festival board, 3[illegible] persons attended the six programs, although capacity for six concerts is only 34,200.

Yesterday's audience ran over 7,000 persons, making the spacious lawns around the "shed" seem almost as populous, and considerably more colorful, than the "shed" itself. The loungers heard quite as well as those in the seats and, incidentally, were little bothered with insects and other annoyances.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky played two of his favorite symphonies on the concluding program, Schumann's in D Minor, Nor. Four, and the second Sibelius.

At the end he and the redoubtable Boston Symphony were given a fervent demonstration which seemed almost as noisy as the sounds from a football stadium in the fall.

The program included also Debussy's "L Apres Midi D Un Faun" and Ravel's "La Valse."

THIS CLIPPING FROM NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD

AUG 14 1939

Berkshire Music Festival Proves Very Popular

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 14 (AP)—Persons close to the management said today the now famous Berkshire Symphonic festival, in addition to including an academy of music next summer, probably would be extended to three weeks of concerts instead of the traditional two weeks.

This summer, according to Gertrude Robinson Smith and Georg Edman, of the festival board, 38,000 persons attended the six programs, although capacity for six concerts is only 32,200.

Yesterday's audience ran over 7,000 persons, making the spacious lawns around the "Shed" seem almost as populous and considerably more colorful, than the "Shed" itself. The loungers heard quite as well as those in the seats and, incidentally, were little bothered with insects and other annoyances.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky played two of his favorite symphonies on the concluding program, Schumann's in D minor, No. Four, and the second Sibelius.

At the end he and the redoubtable Boston Symphony were given a fervent demonstration which seemed almost as noisy as the sounds from a football stadium in the fall.

The program included also Debussy's "L Apres Midi D Un Faun" and Ravel's "La Valse."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 14 1939

Three-Week Music Festival May Come As Records Fall

Special to The Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass. — The Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which closed yesterday with more than 7,000 persons cheering in football stadium fashion for Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, may become a three-weeks' affair next season.

Records were set and broken three times this season when a total of 38,000 persons attended six programs, although the aggregate capacity for the series was only 34,200. Sunday afternoon the ticket supply ran out and officials hurriedly stamped makeshift admission slips and sold them to [illegible] who knew they [illegible] seats but were perfectly satisfied to find places on the grass outside the great pavilion, the acoustics of which are so extraordinary that the music can be clearly heard at a distance of hundreds of yards.

A high mark for attendance was set a week ago Sunday with an audience of 6,500; Saturday night this was broken with paid admissions at 6,700; yesterday's went to 7,200.

The Festival which has always paid its way has operated on a budget in the neighborhood of $50,000. Its success this year has outdistanced the most sanguine hopes of the management and they consequently feel encouraged to consider a [illegible] season.

137

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
AUG 14 1939

7000 at Berkshire Concert; Bigger '40 Program Looms

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 14.—(AP)—Persons close to the management said today the famous Berkshire Symphonic Festival, in addition to including an academy of music next summer, probably would be extended to three weeks of concerts instead of the traditional two weeks.

This summer, according to Gertrude Robinson Smith and George Edman, of the festival board, 38,000 persons attended the six programs, although capacity for six concerts is only 34,200.

Yesterday's audience ran over 7000 persons, making the spacious lawns around the "shed" seem almost as populous, and considerably more colorful, than the "shed" itself. The loungers heard quite as well as those in the seats and, incidentally, were little bothered with insects and other annoyances.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky played two of his favorite symphonies on the concluding program, Schumann's in D Minor, Nor. Four, and the Second Sibelius.

At the end he and the Boston Symphony were given a fervent demonstration which seemed almost as noisy as the sounds from a football stadium in the fall.

The program included also Debussy's "L Apres Midi d Un Faun" and Ravel's "La Valse."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 14 1939

RECORD AUDIENCE PRESENT AT LAST FESTIVAL EVENT

Sibelius, Debussy, Ravel on Closing Program at Tanglewood

By Willard M. Clark

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 13—The sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival came to a close this afternoon with an electrifying performance of the Second Symphony of Sibelius. Such performances have marked the current festival and one will not soon forget Dr. Koussevitzky's superb readings of such works as the first symphony of Brahms, the second symphony of Beethoven or Strauss' "Thus Spake Zarathustra." Seven thousand persons heard the program, the largest audience in the history of the festival.

Sure of Appeal

With uncanny skill the conductor of the Boston Symphony has arranged his programs so that they will include something which would be sure to appeal to those who made up the large audiences. It is known that more than 30,000 persons attended the six concerts, by far the largest audiences in the history of the festival. Programs have followed conservative paths, but there have been exciting works, both old and new, to lend variety.

The festival authorities now look forward to next season when the new school will be inaugurated and it is rumored that the season next summer may include additional concerts. Whether an extension of the series is wise or not remains to be seen.

The festival has prospered thus far because it has gone slowly. Every move has been carefully considered with the result that the festival has paid its way, a historic achievement in American music annals. It also remains to be seen whether or not students will flock to the new school. Economic conditions will have much to do with the success or failure of the new enterprise. Tuition costs are quoted as $100 for the season and then there will be the little matter of additional living expenses and such expenses come high in the vicinity of Lenox and Stockbridge.

Dr. Koussevitzky chose today to interpret works with which his name has become closely associated. He has an affinity for the works of Ravel and Debussy and no conductor in America has done more than he has to make the symphonies of Sibelius known here.

Great Performances

This afternoon the Boston Symphony players gave virtuoso performances, with virility, color and expressiveness. Especially was this true of the Ravel "Valse" and Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun." The valse glowed with color and the sweeping, compelling rhythms of the music were a marvelous evocation of the orchestra's powers. To the "Afternoon of a Faun," Dr. Koussevitzky brought a lovely and imaginative reading, rich in exquisite languors and estatic melody.

The Boston conductor's reading of the Second Symphony of Sibelius is legendary. It is terse, powerful and convincing. The music itself is enormously vital. Listening this afternoon one wondered anew at the amazing economy and effectiveness of the orchestration. Dr. Koussevitzky's reading was all that could be desired. There were blazing proclamations with climax piled upon climax in the final movement, played with an intensity that will not soon be forgotten. It was a magnificent achievement for both conductor and players.

The program opened with the fourth symphony of Schumann. It was a clever opening for this type of program. The symphony is the most aggressive of the Schumann symphonies, yet it does not lack the romantic or melodic qualities of the others.

Dr. Koussevitzky read it with great care, yet there was a certain tense quality to the reading which robbed the work of some of its innate charm. The scherzo was played with fine spirit and the romance was lovely in its tenderness. The first and final portions of the work were notable for their virility.

The large audience seemed loth to leave after this final concert. There was prolonged cheering and not until conductor and players had acknowledged applause many times would the people leave the music shed.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN
AUG 14 1939

Boston Symphony Thrills Crowd

Final Berkshire Symphonic Festival Attracts 7,000

Despite the continual threat of rain yesterday a crowd of 7,000 music lovers attended the final concert of the Berkshire Symphonic festival by the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Never before has the crowd been as large, or the applause so tremendous.

The program opened with Robert Schumann's "Symphony No. 4", which seemed colorless in comparison with the very lyrical "Prelude a L'Apres-Midi D'Un Eaune" by Debussy, which followed. Debussy's work stood out in sharp contrast to "La Valse" of Ravel, which brought the first half of the concert to a close. The first part of "La Valse" was reminiscent of the old Viennese waltz, while the conclusion, filled with the clashing of cymbals, was most modernistic in rhythm, although basically still a waltz.

Dr. Koussevitzky proved his ability to interpret Sibelius when he concluded the concert with that composer's second symphony. Before the last fiery notes had died away the crowd rose, and with thunderous applause honored the orchestra and its leaders, all of whom had played in their shirt sleeves to escape the oppressing heat.

The total attendance at the series of six concerts this season was more than 38,000 persons, and it is possible that next year in an effort to accommodate even more music-lovers the festival will be spread over three weekends instead of two.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 14 1939

Miss Maynor Sings At Church Service

Music Lovers Throng to Hear Negro Soprano

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 13—The First Congregational Church was stormed this morning by a great throng of music lovers bent on hearing the Negro sporano, Dorothy Maynor, whose singing at the recent Boston Symphony Orchestra's picnic created something of a national furore. Miss Maynor was invited to sing at the church by James C. Morton, choir director.

Doors of the church were thrown open at 10.30 for the 11 o'clock service, and the auditorium was immediately filled. A large crowd waited outside for the doors to open. Miss Maynor sang Gounod's "Oh Divine Redeemer" and two spirituals. Miss Maynor shared the platform with a former president of Hampton Institute, where she was educated, the Rev. James E. Gregg of Waterbury, former pastor of the First Congregational Church.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 14 1939

NEGRO SOPRANO FILLS FIRST CONGREGATIONAL

Rev Dr J. E. Gregg Preaches as Dorothy Maynor Sings at Morning Service

Pittsfield, Aug. 13—The First Congregational church including galleries was filled to capacity today and many were standing for the morning service at which Rev Dr James E. Gregg of Waterbury, Ct., former principal of Hampton institute, Hampton, Va., was the preacher and Miss Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano, was the soloist. Her selections were Gounod's "O Divine Redeemer" and two spirituals, "By and By" and "Were You There?"

A private audition was given Miss Maynor on Friday at Tanglewood by Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, who praised her voice highly. Miss Maynor is visiting at Stockbridge. In the choir with her today were James C. Morton, leader, and his daughter, Miss Natalie Morton. Herbert C. Dunkley was organist. Miss Maynor was at Hampton institute when Dr Gregg was principal.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
STAMFORD, CONN.
ADVOCATE
AUG 14 1939

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL PLANS EXTENSION OF ACTIVITIES IN 1940

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 14. (AP)—Persons close to the management said today the now famous Berkshire Symphonic Festival, in addition to including an Academy of Music next Summer, probably would be extended to three weeks of concerts instead of the traditional two weeks.

This Summer, according to Gertrude Robinson Smith and George Edman of the festival board, 38,000 persons attended the six programs, although capacity for six concerts is only 34,200.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzsky played two of his favorite symphonies on the concluding program, Schumann's in D minor, No. Four, and the second Sibelius.

At the end he and the redoubtable Boston Symphony were given a fervent demonstration which seemed almost as noisy as the sounds from a football stadium in the fall.

The program included also Debussy's "L'apresmidid D'un Faun" and Ravel's "La Valse."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN
AUG 14 1939

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL ENDED

Dr. Koussevitsky's Concert Is Heard by 7000.

By IRVING KOLODIN
Special Dispatch to THE SUN.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 14—The sixth Berkshire Symphonic festival, and an eminently successful one, ended here yesterday in the presence of the largest audience that has yet heard one of these concerts. From the Berkshires, the surrounding countryside and many more distant points, nearly 7,000 music lovers assembled in the sun-streaked afternoon to hear Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program of Schumann, Debussy, Ravel and Sibelius. This brought the gross attendance to nearly 38,000 for the six concerts, or well in excess of last year's total, which had been the record.

It is hardly remarkable, then, that the sponsors of the festival are listening with interest to the suggestion that next summer's schedule be extended by another week end of three concerts.

If such a plan is adopted it would amplify Tanglewood's music season to nearly two months, inasmuch as the new academy of music for conductors and choral leaders will convene early in July.

Whatever the length of future seasons, however, they are unlikely to offer a more satisfying session of music-making than that Dr. Koussevitzky tendered to his listeners yesterday. One was prepared for familiar miracles in Debussy's "L'Apres-Midi" and Ravel's "La Valse," nor was one disappointed. But the strength and the gentleness of the Schumann Fourth Symphony, a less usual item of the Koussevitzky repertory, were recreated with a felicity that was as stimulating as it was unexpected. The genuine interest in this audience was attested by its absorption in the second symphony of the program (the Sibelius No. 2) which followed a lengthy intermission that saw few defections from the festival grounds. There was an audience of almost equal size at the Saturday evening concert, for which the program was Haydn, Stravinsky and Wagner.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR
AUG 14 1939

Tanglewood's Six Concerts Draw 38,000

7,000 Hear Boston Symphony Sunday In Final Program

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 14—The Boston Symphony Orchestra in shirtsleeves, and even Dr. Serge Koussevitzky himself in that state of informal attire, did not faze an audience of crushing proportions which gathered in the shed of Tanglewood here Sunday afternoon for the closing concert of the sixth Berkshire Musical Festival.

The attendance record seems to have been reached yesterday afternoon. The box office reported that more than 7,000 persons heard this final concert. The rows of unsheltered seats had expanded and the scattered groups reclining on rugs and blankets were so thick that one could scarcely step between them.

The Sunday crowd brought the total attendance for the six concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to 38,000, a gain of 2,000 above those present at last Summer's festival.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
AUG 14 1939

Berkshire Symphonic Series Ends

Six Programs Heard By 38,000 Persons; Koussevitzky and Orchestra Applauded

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 13.—(AP.)—The sixth Berkshire Symphonic Festival closed today at its permanent home, Tanglewood, with two outbursts of applause as noisy and as heartfelt as any heard this summer outside a baseball park.

These came after the "halves" of an especially well chosen program and honored Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, and the unsurpassed Boston Symphony Orchestra, which played all six programs with a brilliance and responsiveness not often associated with summer symphonic music.

On the financial side, some records also were set. At the last minute the crowd, exceeding the 5700 capacity of the new music shed by some 1500 persons, exhausted the printed ticket supply. Officials hurriedly stamped empty envelopes, which served to get the eager crowds past the wicket.

The six programs were heard by 38,000 persons, whereas six capacity "houses" would total only 34,200. The others disposed themselves about the ground, secure in the knowledge that even though they were hundreds of feet from the orchestra they would be able to hear perfectly.

This was in spite of the fact that no amplification is used.

Partly by luck and partly because of shrewd planning, the Tanglewood music shed has proved a modern miracle of acoustics, far better than most enclosed concert halls.

This, the last of the Berkshire festivals to be devoted solely to symphonic music, due to the fact that Dr. Koussevitzky's new academy of music will begin functioning next summer, has turned up two or three wholly unexpected features.

Singer Discovered.

One has been the discovery of Dorothy Maynor, 28-years-old Negro soprano originally from Norfolk, Va. This discovery was made outside the regular programs, when Miss Maynor sang early this week at the annual picnic given by Dr. Koussevitzky for his orchestra and its friends. The new soprano reduced a large share of her audience and several visiting music critics to the verge of incoherence.

A second extra curricular event of importance was the discovery last Thursday night that between halves of the festival each one of the 86 boxes had been furnished with six new and substantial armchairs, replacing the steel chairs with which the rest of the house is supplied.

These turned out to be a surprise gift from John Shepard, Jr., of Lenox. Shepard formerly was a Boston merchant, and has been mayor of Palm Beach, Fla., where he winters. The gift was announced by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival.

In addition to next summer's school of music, it is possible that then there will be a third festival week, inasmuch as two weeks have proved inadequate to care for the thousands who would like to attend.

Musically the festival closed with performances of two of Koussevitzky's "War Horses." These were Schumann's Fourth Symphony, and Sibelius's magnificent Second Symphony in D Major.

138

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 14 1939

Music at Tanglewood Wins Over Meteorology

1939 Festival Made Notable In Several Ways

By JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Arts Editor

Stockbridge, Aug. 13—The sixth Berkshire Symphonic festival closed today at its permanent home, Tanglewood, with two outbursts of applause as noisy and as heartfelt as any heard this summer outside a baseball park.

These came after the "halves" of an especially well chosen program and honored Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor, and ~~the unsurpassed~~ Boston Symphony orchestra, which played all six programs with a brilliance and responsiveness not often associated with summer symphonic music.

On the financial side, some records also were set. At the last minute the crowd, exceeding the 5700 capacity of the new music shed by some 1500 persons, exhausted the printed ticket supply. Officials hurriedly stamped empty envelopes, which served to get the eager crowds past the wicket.

The six programs were heard by 38,000 persons, whereas six capacity "houses" would total only 34,200. The others disposed themselves about the ground, secure in the knowledge that even though they were hundreds of feet from the orchestra they would be able to hear perfectly.

This was in spite of the fact that no amplification is used.

Partly by luck and partly because of shrewd planning, the Tanglewood music shed has proven a modern miracle of acoustics, far better than most inclosed concert halls.

This, the last of the Berkshire festivals to be devoted solely to symphonic music, due to the fact that Dr Koussevitzky's new academy of music will begin functioning next summer, has turned up two or three wholly unexpected features.

One has been the discovery of Dorothy Maynor, 28-year-old Negro ~~soprano originally~~ from Norfolk, Va. This discovery was made outside the regular programs, when Miss Maynor sang early this week at the annual picnic given by Dr Koussevitzky for his orchestra and its friends. The new soprano reduced a large share of her audience and several visiting music critics to the verge of incoherence.

A second extracurricular event of importance was the discovery last Thursday night that between halves of the festival each one of the 86 boxes had been furnished with six new and substantial armchairs, replacing the steel chairs with which the rest of the house is supplied.

These turned out to be a surprise gift from John Shepard, Jr., of Lenox. Shepard formerly was a Boston merchant, and has been mayor of Palm Beach, Fla., where he winters. The gift was announced by Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival.

In addition to next summer's school of music, it is probable that then there will be a third festival week, inasmuch as two weeks have proven inadequate to care for the thousands who would like to attend.

Heavy Shower Comes Soon After Concert

Tanglewood, Aug. 13—Still another Berkshire Music Festival attendance record went to smash this afternoon when 7000 persons, according to official figures, were present for the final concert. It was a complete sellout for the music shed with a general admission "gate" sale of approximately 1000 at $1.50 each. Showers threatened, but not a drop fell during the superb program. It looked so much like rain that settees for holders of special tickets were moved into the colonnade on the north side.

Within half an hour after the final notes of the Sibelius symphony had died out a terrific shower passed over central Berkshire accompanied by a high wind, lightning and thunder.

While no official estimate of aggregate receipts was available it is certain the $62,000 budget of the festival corporation was passed by a wide margin. Henry W. Dwight, president of the Housatonic National bank of Stockbridge and treasurer of the festival, said final figures would not be available for several weeks. The annual meeting of the corporation will be held in October when plans for the 1940 festival will be discussed.

Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival corporation, was kept busy in Box No 1 for some time after the conclusion of the final number receiving congratulations on the unexpected attendance at the six concerts and the great success of the festival from every standpoint. As at the other recent concerts traffic control by state police and parking arrangements today were all that could be desired. The Thursday Morning club of Great Barrington which had the refreshment concession is said to have profited well. On a recent morning following a concert 850 soda bottles were collected from the Tanglewood lawn.

◆

Final Concert's Splendor Leaves Heat Forgotten

By FRANCIS REGAL

Lenox, Aug. 13—"Music and Meteorology" might make a good title when the time comes for a history of the Berkshire Symphonic festival, and the closing concert this afternoon gave another instance of the gamble with the elements which makes each concert a sporting event. This year the festival has won handsomely, for today's storm held off until most of the people at the concert had got safely home, and the downpour during the first concert held off until auditors were safely in their seats.

In general the conditions have been almost perfect, and today's humidity did not dull the splendor of the Boston Symphony orchestra's music nor do any harm beyond a slight discomfort, forgotten when the music began. Incidentally, the invasion of the shed by a few flies merely called attention to the remarkable freedom of the festival this summer from insect pests of all kinds, including the noise-making kinds whose musical offerings are unacceptable at a symphony concert. The audience was the largest in the history of the festival, and the sultry heat did not distract the listening thousands from absorbed attention to every note of the music.

Concert Typical

This festival is fortunate in not having to provide "heavy" and "light" programs, and also in not having to make the last concert a grand finale. The six concerts have been as nearly equal in merit as they could be made, and the favorite symphonies have been fairly divided between the two series for which subscriptions are taken separately. Today's concert was typical in every way except that instead of three works the program offered four, "La Valse" by Ravel compensating for the comparative brevity of Debussy's "The Afternoon of a Faun."

The program conformed to type, however, in containing two important symphonies, opening with Schumann's No 4, in D minor, and closing with the one in D-major, No 2, by Jean Sibelius. It followed pattern also in providing contrast, for the music of Schumann and the music of Sibelius contain few points in common. The Finish composer, whose star is still rising is preeminently a symphonist, which is far from having been the case with Schumann, whose genius was perhaps greater, but who in general lacked ability to convert his inspiration into monumental works.

Sibelius Imposing

Of the two symphonies heard today the one by Sibelius is obviously by far the more imposing, and the music of this composer, in a degree comparable with that of Tschaikowsky and Richard Strauss, lends itself to the grand orchestra led by a conductor of power and personality. In striving to make America familiar with these symphonies written in a new idiom Dr Koussevitzky has won praise for himself as well as for the composer, and today's performance was magnificent.

The power of Sibelius in the symphonic form lies most of all in his architectonic gift—the ability to rear a great and majestic edifice of tone. The materials may not always be first rate, if they are compared with the precious stuff used by Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven and Schubert, but they are always serviceable, and the whole is incomparably greater than the sum of the parts. No performance during the festival has appeared to impress the listeners more deeply than the sustained and tremendous building up of the linked last-two movements of the D major symphony.

Robert Schumann by comparison was hardly a symphonist at all, and he himself had so much doubt of his powers that this beautiful work, composed at the age of 41, immediately after his first symphony, was not published until 12 years later, when it became No 4. He was not fully a master of orchestration, and his musical development, unlike that of Sibelius, had not been mainly in the larger forms. When mood and subject-matter worked together happily, as in the famous quintet in E flat major, the outcome was a great work of ineffable beauty. But in general his symphonies are loved for the beautiful music they contain rather than as masterpieces of the symphonic form.

Schumann's Second Important

Yet in the history of that form Schumann's second symphony holds an important place because of the fuller integration which he gave to that form by the use of material from the first movement in the later parts of the symphony, and by the innovation of marking the movements to be played without pause, thus calling attention to the continuity of the musical ideas. This point need not be overstressed, since the symphonic form was created synthetically, and the division into movements has been no more incompatible with the utmost grandeur than the division of a picture into a triptyon.

But the romantic spirit of the age was running in the direction of increasing flow and intricate interlockings, as in the Wagner music dramas and in the tone poems Berlioz Liszt and Richard Strauss, and this symphony, first projected by Schumann as a symphonic fantasia, had its place in this important 19th century development. The idea of "integration" has so fully prevailed that custom now forbids applause between the movements even of classical symphonies, whose composers would have been astonished at any such interdiction.

Schumann's Symphony was as finely interpreted as the one by Sibelius and in its more intimate way gave no less pleasure, but it may be remembered that the robustness probably needed for impressing an audience of 7000 brought out some of the defects in Schumann's orchestral writing, including excursion dependence on the kettle-drums, which had to be much louder than in Symphony hall. Even so they were not noisy in comparison with the terrific barrage laid down in Stravinsky's "Rites of Spring," last evening.

Of the shorter works played today it is only necessary to say that "The Afternoon of a Faun," at the close of which the flute soloist came in for warm applause, was as delicately and atmospherically beautiful as Ravel's "choreographic poem" was wild, extravagant and even vulgar—if not listened to with reference to the wild and exciting ballet for which it was presumably designed. Sultry heat did not interfere with universal enjoyment of the music, yet it is a pity that "The Afternoon of a Faun" could not have had the background of Tanglewoods trees and glades in such fascinating sunshine as has prevailed on most days during the festival, weather that might well tempt a faun to take an afternoon off.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 14 1939

BOSTON SYMPHONY HAS FINAL CONCERT

Festival Performance Is Given Under Baton of Koussevitzky Before Record Audience

'LE SACRE' WORK PLAYED

Sibelius, Debussy and Ravel Compositions Are Presented in Program at Lenox

By NOEL STRAUS
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 13.—Before a record-breaking audience numbering more than 7,000 persons the Berkshire Symphonic Festival came to a close here this afternoon at Tanglewood. The crowd today brought the total attendance for the six concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, to 38,000, a gain of 2,000 above those present at last Summer's festival.

The final program, which was received with marked enthusiasm, began with Schumann's Fourth Symphony and closed with the Second Symphony by Sibelius. Between these were placed a brace of representative works of the modern French school—Debussy's L'Après-Midi d'un Faune" and Ravel's "La Valse."

A magesterial performance of the Sibelius symphony, and a poetically romantic account of the Schumann opus formed the backbone of the concert. But nowhere was the playing put forth more amazing in its virtuosity than in the Debussy prelude or Ravel's choreographic poem. Dr. Koussevitzky has a special sympathy for these Gallic compositions and an ability to express the uttermost that is in their pages.

Tempo of Debussy Prelude

Never is one likely to encounter a more atmospheric, voluptuous account of the Debussy prelude. Dr. Koussevitzky took all of it at a deliberate pace that increased the lassitude and sensuousness of the music to a striking degree. One might term his tempo the "absolute" one, and after it no other would seem correct. As for the Ravel selection it became the very apotheosis of the waltz.

Last night's concert began with a sparkling and spirited performance of Haydn's splendid symphony in B flat major, the meticulous care expended on every detail of the presentation was immediately evidenced in the introductory largo.

All that followed in the symphony revealed to the core the genial, carefree nature of this music, in which erudition hides itself behind a mask of simplicity. This simplicity of approach was finely caught by Dr. Koussevitzky and never abandoned, even in the most complicated parts of the score.

Give Stravinsky Work

No sharper contrast was possible to this offering than was afforded by the ensuing number, Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps." Each time one listens to this work it seems to make a different impression. More than most compositions, its values change for the hearer according to the particular interpretation granted it by its conductor.

"Le Sacre" was obviously a heroic attempt to attain a new strength of expression by a return to the barbaric and primitive. The composer was led to this goal by the same impulse that caused painters to study and ape the prehistoric depictions made by the cave-men, or that egged on sculptors to follow a similar course in regard to ancient African wood-carvings. It is the same impulse that led the Romans in an age of great sophistication to take a sudden violent interest in archaic Greek sculpture, a phenomenon considered by many to be a sure indication of decadence, not of progress.

The savage, almost static rhythms, the blazing color and the stunning use of oft-repeated scraps of folk-like melody in the tremendously difficult score were never more fully set forth than throughout the bravura reading heard last night. But Dr. Koussevitzky has on occasion endowed the composition as a whole with a more convincing general outline.

That he failed to do so on this occasion was probably the result of the long wait made between the two big divisions. At this point the sudden silence after the hecticly excited termination of the opening half can be supremely effective. But by laying down the baton and not beginning the second half for several minutes, the marvelous spell wrought in the superb performance of the first part was snapped and could not be revived, so that a feeling of anticlimax resulted as the music approached its close. Considering the magnificence of the rendition in all other respects, one wondered whether the real root of the matter did not lie in the music itself.

Wagner Group Presented

